Falst. What, upon compulsion? No: were I at the Strappado, or all the Rackes in the World, I would not tell you on compulsion. Give you a reason on compulsion? If reasons were as plenty as Black-berries, I would give no man a reason upon compulsion, I.

Prin. He be no longer guiltie of this sinne. This sanguine Coward, this Bed-prester, this Hort-back-breaker, this huge Hill of Flesh.

Falst. Away you Starveling, you Elfe-skin, you dried Neats tongue, Bulles-pissell, you stocke-fish: O for breth to vtter. What is like thee? You Tailors yard, you sheath, you bow-case, you vile standing tucke.

Prin. Well, breath a-while, and then to't againe: and when thou hast ty'd thy selfe in base comparisons, heare me speake but thus.

Poin. Marke Iacke.

Prin. We two, saw you foure set on foure and bound them, and were Masters of their Wealth: mark now how a plaine Tale shall put you downe. Then did we two, set on you foure, and with a word, outfac'd you from your prize, and have it: yea, and can shew it you in the House. And Falstiffe, you caried your Guts away as nimbly, with as quicke dexteritie, and roared for mercy, and still ranne and roar'd, as ever I heard Bull-Calf. What a Slave art thou, to hacke thy sword as thou hast done, and then say it was in fight. What trick? what device? what starting hole canst thou now find out, to hide thee from this open and aparant shame?

Poin. Come, let's heare Iacke: What tricke hast thou now?

Fal. I knew ye as well as he that made ye. Why heare ye my Masters, was it for me to kill the Heire apparant? Should I turne upon the true Prince? Why, thou knowest I am as valiant as Hercules: but beware Instinct, the Lyon will not touch the true Prince: Instinct is a great matter. I was a Coward on Instinct: I shall thinke the better of my selfe, and thee, during my life: I, for a valiant Lyon, and thou for a true Prince. But Lads, I am glad you have the Mony. Hostesse, clap to the doores: watch to Night, pray tomorrow. Gallants, Lads, Boyes, Hearts of Gold, all the good Titles of Fellowship come to you. What, shall we be merry? shall we have a Play extempory.

Prin. Content, and the argument shall bee, thy running away.

Fal. A, no more of that Hal, and thou lovest me.

Enter Hostesse.

Host. My Lord, the Prince?

Prin.

Prin. How now my Lady the Hostesse, what say'st thou to me?

Hostesse. Marry, my Lord, there is a Noble man of the Court at doore would speak with you: he sayes, he comes from your Father.

Prin. Give him as much as will make him a Royall man, and send him backe againe to my Mother.

Falst. What manner of man is he?

Hostesse. An old man.

Falst. What doth Gravitie out of his Bed at Midnight? Shall I give him his answer?

Prin. Prethee doe lacke.

Falst. Faith, and Ile send him packing. Exit.

Prince. Now Sirs: you fought faire; so did you Peto, so did you Bardol: you are Lyons too, you ranne away upon instinct: you will not touch the true Prince; no, fie.

Bard. Faith, I ranne when I saw others runne.

Prin. Tell mee now in earnest, how came Falstafes Sword so hackt?

Peto. Why, he hackt it with his Dagger, and said, he would sweare truth out of England: but he would make you beleve it was done in fight, and perswaded us to doe the like.

Bard. Yea, and to tickle our Noses with Spear-grasse, to make them bleed, and then beslobber our garments, with it, and sweare it was the blood of true men. I did that I did not this seven yeares before, I blusht to heare his monstrous devices.

Prin. O Villaine, thou stolest a Cup of Sacke eightene yeeres agoe, and wert taken with the manner, and ever since thou hast blusht extempore: thou hadst fire and sword on thy side, and yet thou rankest away; what instinct hadst thou for it?

Bard. My Lord, doe you see these Meteors? doe you behold these exhalations?

Prin. I doe,

Bard. What thinke you they portend?

Prin. Hot Livers, and cold Purfes.

Bard. Choler, my Lord, if rightly taken.

Prin. No, if rightly taken, Halter.

Enter Falstaf.

Heere comes leane lacke, heere comes bare-bone. How now my sweete Creature of Bombast, how long is't agoe, lacke, since thou saw'st thine owne Knee?

Falst. My owne Knee? When I was about thy yeeres (Hal) I was not an Eagles Talent in the Waste, I could have crept into any Aldermans Thumbe-Ring: a plague of sighing and grieve, it blowes a man up like a Bladder. There's villanous Newes abroad: heere was Sir Iohn Braby from your Father; you must goe to the Court in the Morning. The same mad fellow of the North, Percy; and hee of Wales, that gave Amamon the Bastinado, and made Lucifer Cuckold, and swore the Devill his true Leige-man upon the Crosse of a Welch-hooke; what a Palgue call you him?

Poin. O, Glendower.

Falst. Owen, Owen; the same, and his Sonne in Law Morsimer, and old Northumberland, and the sprightly Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runnes a Horse-backe up a Hill perpendicular.

Prin. Hee that rides at high speede, and with a Pistoll kills a Sparrow flying.

Falst. You haue hit it.

Prin. So did he neuer the Sparrow.

Falst. Well, that Rascall hath good mettall in him; hee will not runne.

Prin. Why, what a Rascall art thou then, to prayse him so for running?

Falst. A Horse-backe (ye Cuckoe) but a foot he will not budge a foot.

Prin. Yes lacke, upon instinct.

Falst. I grant ye, upon instinct: Well, hee is there too, and one Mordake, and a thousand blew-Cappes more, Worcester is stolne away by Night: thy Fathers Beard is turn'd white with the Newes; you may buy Land now as cheape as stinking Mackrell.

Prin. Then 'tis like, if there come a hot Sunne, and this civill buffetting hold, wee shall buy Maiden-heads as they buy hob-nayles, by the hundreds.

Falst. By the Masse Lad, thou say'st true, it is like wee shall have good trading that way. But tell me Hall, are not thou horrible afear'd? thou being Heire apparant, could the World picke thee out three such Enemies againe, as that Fiend Douglas, that Spirit Percy, and that Devill Glendower? Art thou not horrible afraid? Doth not thy blood thrill at it?

Prin. Not a whit: I lacke some of thy instinct.

Falst. Well, thou wilt be horrible chidde to morrow, when thou comest to thy Father: if thou doe love me practice an answer.

Prin. Doe thou stand for my Father, and examine mee upon the particulars of my Life.

Falst. Shall I? content: This Chayre shall bee my State, this Dagger my Scepter, and this Cushion my Crowne.

Prin. Thy State is taken for a Ioyn'd-Stoole, thy Golden Scepter for a Leaden Dagger, and thy precious rich Crowne, for a pittifull bald Crowne.

Prin. Well, and the fire of Grace be not quite out of thee now shalt thou be moved. Give me a Cup of Sacke to make mine eyes looke redde, that it may bee thought I have wept, for I must speake in passion, and I will doe it in King Cambyyses veine.

Prin. Well, heere is my Legge.

Falst. And heere is my speech: stand aside Nobilitie.

Hostesse. This is excellent sport, yfai th.

Fal. Weepe not, sweet Queene, for trickling teares are vaine.

Hostesse. O the Father, how hee holdes his countenance?

Fal. For Gods sake Lords, convey my trustfull Queen, For teares doe stop the foud-gates of her eyes.

Hostesse. O rare, he doth it as like one of these harlotry Players as ever I see.

Fal. Peace good Pint-pot, peace good Tickle-braine. Harry, I doe not onely marvell where thou spendest thy time; but also, how thou art accompanied: For though the Camomile, the more it is troden, the faster it growes; yet Youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it weares. Thou art my sonne: I have partly thy Mothers Word, partly my Opinion; but chiefly, a villanous trick of thine Eye, and a foolish hanging of thy nether Lippe, that doth warrant me. If then thou bee Sonne to mee, heere lyeth the point: why, being Sonne to mee, art thou so pointed at? Shall the blessed Sonne of heaven prove a Micher, and eate Black-berries? a question not to bee askt. Shall the Sonne of England proove a Theefe, and take Purfes? a question to bee askt. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of, and it is knowne to many many in our Land, by the Name of Pitch : this Pitch ( as ancient Writers doe report ) doth defile ; so doth the companie thou keepest : for Harry, now I doe not speake to thee in Drinke, but in Teares ; not in pleasure, but in Passion ; not in Words onely, but in Woes also : and yet there is a vertuous man, whom I have often noted in thy companie, but I know not his Name.

Prin. What manner of man, and it like your Majesty?

Falst. A goodly portly man yfaith, and a corpulent, of a chearefull Looke, a pleasing Eye, and a most noble Carriage, and as I thinke, his age some fiftie, or (byrlady) inclining to threescore ; and now I remember mee, his Name is Falstaffe : if that man should be lewdly given, he deceives mee ; for Harry, I see vertue in his Lookes. If then the Tree may be knowne by the Fruit, as the Fruit by the Tree, then peremptorily I speake it, there is Vertue in that Falstaffe : him keepe with, the rest banish. And tell me now, thou naughtie Varlet, tell me, where hast thou bene this moneth?

Prin. Do'st thou speake like a King? doe thou stand for me, and Ile play my Father.

Falst. Depose me : if thou do'st it halfe so gravely, so majestically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heeles for a Rabber-sucker, or a Poulterers Hare.

Prin. Well, heere I am set.

Falst. And heere I stand : judge my Masters.

Prin. Now Harry, whence come you?

Falst. My Noble Lord, from East-cheape.

Prin. The complaints I heare of thee, are grievous.

Falst. Yfaith, my Lord, they are false : Nay, Ile tickle ye for a young Prince.

Prin. Swarest thou, ungracious Boy? henceforth doe I looke on me : thou art violently carryed away from Grace : there is a Devill haunts thee ; in the likeness of a fat old Man ; a Tunne of Man is thy Companion : Why do'st thou converse with that Trunke of Humors, that Boulting-Hutch of Beaulinesse, that swolne Parcell of Dropsies, that huge Bombard of Sacke, that stufte Cloake-bagge of Guts, that roasted Manning-Tree Oxe with the Puddings in his Belly, that Reverend Vice, that grey Iniquitie, that Father Ruffian, that Vanitie in yeares? wherein is he good, but to taste Sacke and drinke it? wherein neat and cleanly, but to carue a Capon, and eate it? wherein Cunning, but in Craft? wherein Craftie, but in Villanie? wherein Villanous, but in all things? wherein worthy, but in nothing?

Falst. I would your Grace would take me with you : whom meanes your Grace?

Prin. That villanous abominable mis-leader of Youth, Falstaffe, that old white-bearded Sathan.

Falst. My Lord, the man I know.

Prin. I know thou do'st.

Falst. But to say, I know more harme in him then in my selfe, were to say more then I know. That he is olde (the more the pittie) his white haire doe witnesse it : but that hee is (saving your reverence) a Whore-master, that I utterly deny. If Sacke and Sugar be a fault, Heaven helpe the wicked : if to be olde and merry, be a sinne, then many an olde Hoste that I know, is damn'd : if to be fat, be to be hated, then Pharoahs leane Kine are to be loved. No, my good Lord, banish Peto, banish Bardolph, banish Poines : but for sweete Iacke Falstaffe, kinde Iacke Falstaffe, true Iacke Falstaffe, valiant Iacke Falstaffe, and therefore more valiant, being as he is olde Iacke Falstaffe, banish not him thy Harryes companie, banish not him thy Harryes companie ; banish plumpe Iacke, and banish all the World.

Prince. I doe, I will.

Enter Bardolph running.

Bard. O, my Lord, my Lord, the Sherife, with a most monstrous Watch, is at thee doore.

Falst. Out you Rogue, play out the Play : I have mace to say in the behalfe of that Falstaffe.

Enter the Hostesse.

Hostesse. O, my Lord, my Lord.

Falst. Heigh, heigh, the Divell rides upon a Fiddlesticke : what's the matter?

Hostesse. The Sherife and all the Watch are at the doore : they are come to searce the House, shall I let them in?

Falst. Do'st thou heare Hal, never call a true peece of Gold a Counterfeit : thou art essentially made, without seeming so.

Prince. And thou a naturall Coward, without instinct.

Falst. I deny your Majior ; if you will deny the Sherife, so : if not, let him enter. If I become not a Cart as well as anothe man, a plague on my bringing up : I hope I shall as soone be strangled with a Halter, as another.

Prince. Goe hide thee behinde the Arras, the rest walke up above. Now my Masters, for a true Face and good Conscience.

Falst. Both which I have had : but their date is out, and therefore Ile hide me.

Prince. Call in the Sherife.

Enter Sherife and the Carrier.

Prince. Now Master Sherife, what is your will with me?

She. First pardon me, my Lord. A Hue and Cry hath followed certaine men unto this house.

Prince. What men?

She. One of them is well knowne, my gracious Lord, a grosse fat man.

Car. As fat as Butter.

Prince. The man, I doe assure you, is not heere, For I my selfe at this time have imploy'd him : And Sherife, I will engage my word to thee, That I will by to morrow Dinner time, Send him to answer thee, or any man, For any thing he shall be charg'd withall : And so let me entreat you, leave the house.

She. I will, my Lord : there are two Gentlemen Have in this Robbery lost three hundred Markes.

Prince. It may be so : if he have robb'd these men, He shall be answerable : and so farewell.

She. Good Night, my Noble Lord.

Prince. I thinke it is good Morrow, is it not?

She. Indeepe, my Lord, I thinke it be two a Clocke.

Exit.

Prince. This oyle Rascall is knowne as well as Poules : goe call him forth.

Peto. Falstaffe? fast a sleepe behinde the Arras, and snorting like a Horse.

Prince. Harke, how hard he fetches breath : search his Pockets.

He

He searcheth his Pockets and findes certaine Papers.

Prince. What hast thou found?

Peto. Nothing but papers, my Lord.

Prince. Let's see, what be they? reade them.

Peto. Item, a Capon.

ii.s.ii.d.

Item, Sawce.

iiii.d.

Item, Sacke, two Gallons,

v.s.viii.d.

Item, Anchoves and Sacke after supper.

ii.s.vi.d.

Item, Bread.

ob.

Prince. O monstrous, but one halfe penny-worth of Bread to this intollerable deale of Sacke? What there is else, keepe close, wee leade it at more advantage: there let him sleepe till day. Ile to the Court in the Morning: We must all to the Warres, and thy place shall be honorable. Ile procure this fat Rogue a Charge of Foot; and I know his death will be a Match of Twelve-score. The Money shall be pay'd backe againe with advantage. Be with me betimes in the Morning: and so good morrow

Peto. Good morrow, good my Lord.

Exeunt

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Hotspurre, Worcester, Lord Mortimer, Owen Glendower.

Mort. These promises are faire, the parties sure, And our induction full of prosperous hope.

Hotsp. Lord Mortimer, and Cousin Glendower, Will you sit downe?

And Vnckle Worcester; a plague upon it, I have forgot the Mappe.

Glend. No, here it is:

Sit Cousin Percy, sit good Cousin Hotspurre: For by that Name, as oft as Lancaster doth speake of you, His Cheekes looke pale, and with a rising sigh, He wisheth you in Heaven.

Hotsp. And you in Hell, as oft as he heares Owen Glendower spoke of.

Glend. I cannot blame him: At my Nativitie, The front of heaven was full of fierie shapes, Of burning Cressets: and at my Birth, The frame and foundation of the Earth Shak'd like a Coward.

Hotsp. Why so it would have done at the same season if your Mothers Cat had but kitten'd, though your selfe had never bene borne,

Glend. I say the Earth did shake when I was borne.

Hot. And I say the Earth was not of my minde: If you suppose, as fearing you, it shooke.

Glend. The heavens were all on fire, the Earth did tremble.

Hot. Oh, then the Earth shooke To see the Heavens on fire, And not in feare of your Nativitie. Diseased nature oftentimes breakes forth In strange eruptions; and the teeming Earth Is with a kinde of Colicke pincht and vext, By the imprisoning of unruly Winde Within her Wombe: which for enlargement striving, Shakes the old Beldame Earth, and tumbles downe Steeple, and mosse-growne Towers. At your Birth, Our Grandam Earth, having this distemperature, In passion shooke.

Glend. Cousin: of many men

I doe not beare these Crossings: give me leave

To tell you once againe, that at my Birth

The front of Heaven was full of fierie shapes,

The Goates ranne from the Mountaines, and the Heards

Were strangely clamorous to the frighted fields:

These signes have markt me extraordinarie,

And all the courses of my Life doe shew,

I am not in the Roll of common men.

Where is the Living, clipt in with the Sea,

That chides the Bankes of England, Scotland, and Wales,

Which calls me Pupill, or hath read to me?

And bring him out, that is but womans soone,

Can trace me in the tedious wayes of Art,

And hold me pace in deepe experiments.

Hot. I thinke there's no man speakes better Welsh: Ile to Dinner.

Mort. Feace Cousin Percy, you will make him mad.

Glend. I can call Spirits from the vastie Deepe.

Hot. Why so can I, or so can any man:

But will they come, when you doe call for them?

Glend. Why, I can teach thee, Cousin, to command the Devill.

Hot. And I can teach thee, Cousin, to shame the Divell, By telling truth. Tell truth, and shame the Divell.

If thou have power to raise him, bring him hither,

And Ile be sworne, I have power to shame him hence.

Oh, while you live, tell truth, and shame the Divell.

Mort. Come, come, no more of this unprofitable Chat.

Glend. Three times hath Henry Bullingbrooke made head Against my power: thrice from the Banks of Wye, And sandy-bottom'd Severne, have I hent him Bootlesse home, and Weather-beaten backe.

Hot. Home without Bootes, And in foule Weather too, How scapes he Agues in the Divels name?

Glend. Come, heere's the Mappe:

Shall wee devide our Right,

According to our threefold order ta'ne?

Mort. The Arch-Deacon hath devided it Into three Limits, very equally:

England, from Trent, and Severne hitherto,

By South and East, is to my part assign'd:

All Westward, Wales, beyond the Severne shore,

And all the fertile Land within that bound,

To Owen Glendower: And deare Couze, to you

The remnant Northward, lying off from Trent.

And our indentures Tripartite are drawne:

Which being sealed interchangeably,

(A businesse that this Night may execute)

To morrow, Cousin Percy, you and I,

And my good Lord of Worcester will set forth,

To meet your Father, and the Scottish Power,

As is appointed us at Shrewsbury.

My Father Glendower is not readie yet,

Nor shall we neede his helpe these foureteene dayes:

Within that space, you may have drawne together

Your Tenants, Friends, and neighboring Gentlemen.

Glend. A shorter time shall send me to you, Lords:

And in my conduct shall your Ladies come,

From whom you now must steale, and take no leave

For there will be a World of Water shed,

Vpon

Vpon the parting of your Wives and you:

Hotsp. Me thinkes my moiety North from Burton here,
In quantitie equals not one of yours:

See, how this River comes me cranking in,
And cuts me from the best of all my Land,

A huge halfe Moone, a monstrous Cantle out.

He have the Currant in this place damn'd up,

And here the smug and Silver Trent shall runne,

In a new Chanell, faire and evenly:

It shall not winde with such a deepe indent,

To rob me of so rich a Bottome here.

Glend. Not winde? it shall, it must, you see it doth.

Mort. Yea, but marke how he beares his course,
And runnes me up, with like advantage on the other side,

Gelding the opposed Continent as much,

As on the other side it takes from you.

Worc. Yea, but a litle Charge will trench him here,

And on this North side winne this Cape of Land,

And then he runnes straight and even.

Hotsp. He have it so, a litle Charge will doe it.

Glend. He not have it alter'd.

Hotsp. Will not you?

Glend. No, nor you shall not.

Hotsp. Who shall say me nay?

Glend. Why, that will I.

Hotsp. Let me not understand you then, speake it in Welsh.

Glend. I can speake English, Lord, as well as you:

For I was train'd up in the English Court;

Where, being but young, I framed to the Harpe,

Many an English Dittie, lovely well,

And gave the Tongue a helpfull Ornament;

A Vertue that was never seene in you.

Hotsp. Marry, and I am glad of it with all my heart,

I had rather be a Kitten, and cry mew,

Then one of these same Meeter Ballad-mongers:

I had rather heare a Brazen Candlesticke turn'd,

Or a dry Wheele grate on the Axle-tree,

And that would set my teeth on edge,

Nothing to much, as mincing Poetrie;

'Tis like the forc't gate of a shuffling Nagge.

Glend. Come, you shall have Trent turn'd.

Hotsp. I doe not care: He give thrice so much Land

To any well-deserving friend;

But in the way of Bargaine, marke ye me,

He cavill on the ninth part of a hayre,

Are the Indentures drawne? shall we be gone?

Glend. The Moone shines faire,

You may away by Night:

He haste the Writer; and withall,

Breake with your Wives, of your departure hence:

I am afraid my Daughter will runne madde.

So much she doteth on her Mortimer.

Exit.

Mort. Fie, Cousin Percy, how you crosse my Father.

Hotsp. I cannot choose: sometime he angers me,

With telling me of the Moldwarpe and the Ant,

Of the Dreamer Merlin, and his Prophecies;

And of a Dragon, and a finne-lesse Fish,

A clip-wing'd Griffin, and a moulten Raven,

A couching Lyon, a ramping Cat,

And such a deale of skimble-skamble Stuffle,

As puts me from my Faith. I tell you what,

He held me last Night, at least, nine howres,

In reckning up the severall Devils Names,

That were his Lacqueyes:

I cry'd hum, and well, goe too,

But mark'd him not a word. O, he is astedious

As a tyred Horse, a railing Wife,

Worse then a smoakie house. I had rather live

With Cheefe and Garlike in a Windmill farre,

Then feede on Cates, and have him talke to me,

In any Summer House in Christendome.

Mort. In faith he was a worthy Gentleman;

Exceeding well read, and profited,

In strange Concealements:

Valiant as a Lyon, and wondrous affable,

And as bountifull, as Mines of India.

Shall I tell you, Cousin,

He holds your temper in a high respect,

And curbs himselfe, even of his naturall scope,

When you doe crosse his humor: faith he does.

I warrant you, that man is not alive,

Might so have tempted him, as you have done,

Without the taste of danger, and reproofe:

But doe not use it oft, let me entreat you.

Worc. In faith, my Lord, you are too wilfull blame,

And since your coming hither, have done enough,

To put him quite besides his patience:

You must needs learne, Lord, to amend this fault;

Though sometimes it shew Greatnesse, Courage, Blood,

And that's the dearest grace it renders you;

Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh Rage,

Defect of manners, want of government,

Pride, Haughtinesse, Opinion, and Disdaine:

The least of which, haunting a Noble man,

Loseth mens hearts, and leaves behind a staine

Vpon the beautie of all parts besides,

Beguiling them of commendation.

Hotsp. Well, I am school'd:

Good-manners be your speede;

Heere come your Wives, and let us take our leave.

Enter Glendower, with the Ladies.

Mort. This is the deadly spight that angers me,

My Wife can speake no English, I no Welsh.

Glend. My Daughter weepes, shee'll not part with you,

Shee'll be a Souldier too, shee'll to the Warres.

Mort. Good Father tell her, that she and my Aunt Percy

Shall follow in your Conduct speedily.

Glendower speakes to him Welsh, and she answers him in the same.

Glend. She is desperate heere:

A peevish selfe-will'd Harlotry,

One that no perswasion can doe good upon,

The Lady speakes in Welsh.

Mort. I understand thy Lookes: that pretty Welsh

Which thou powr'st down from these swelling Heavens,

I am too perfect in: and but for shame,

In such a parley should I answere thee.

The Lady againe in Welsh.

Mort. I understand thy Kisses, and thou mine,

And that's a feeble disputation:

But I will never be a Truant, Love,

Till I have learn'd thy Language: for thy tongue

Maks

Makes Welsh as sweet as Ditties highly penn'd,
Sung by a faire Queene in a Summers Bowre,
With ravishing Division to her Lute.

Glend. Nay, if thou melt, then will she runne madde.

Mort. O, I am Ignorance it selfe in this.

Glend. She bids you,

On the wanton Rushes lay you downe,
And rest your gentle Head upon her Lappe,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you,
And on your Eye-lids Crowne the God of Sleepe,
Charming your blood with pleasing heaviness;
Making such difference betwixt Wake and Sleepe,
As is the difference betwixt Day and Night,
The houre before the Heavenly Harneis'd Teeme
Begins his Golden Progresse in the East.

Mort. With all my heart Ile sit, and heare her sing:
By that time will our Booke, I thinke, be drawne.

Glend. Doe so:

And those Musicians that shall play to you,
Hang in the Ayre a thousand Leagues from thence;
And straight they shall be here: sit, and attend.

Hossp. Come Kate, thou art perfect in lying downe:
Come, quicke, quicke, that I may lay my Head in thy Lappe.

Lady. Goe, ye giddy-Goose.

The Musicke playes.

Hossp. Now I perceive the Devill understands Welsh,
And 'tis no marvell he is so humorous:
Byrlady he's a good Musitian.

Lady. Then would you be nothing but Musically,
For you are altogether governed by humors:
Lye still ye theefe, and heare the Lady sing in Welsh.

Hossp. I had rather heare (Lady) my Brach howlein Irish.

Lady. Would'st have thy Head broken?

Hossp. No.

Lady. Then be still.

Hossp. Neyther, 'tis a Womans fault.

Lady. Now God helpe thee.

Hossp. To the Welsh Ladies Bed.

Lady. What's that?

Hossp. Peace she sings.

Heere the Lady sings a Welsh Song.

Hossp. Come, Ile have your Song too.

Lady. Not mine, in good sooth.

Hossp. Not yours, in good sooth?

You sweare like a Comfit-makers Wife:
Not you, in good sooth; and, as true as I live;
And, as God shall mend me; and as sure as day:
And givest such Sarcenet suretie for thy Oathes,
As if thou never walk'st further then Finsbury.
Sweare me, Kate, like a Lady, as thou art,
A good mouth-filling Oath: and leave in sooth,
And such protest of Pepper-Ginger-bread,
To Velvet-Guards, and Sunday-Citizens.
Come, sing.

Lady. I will not sing.

Hossp. 'Tis the next way to turne Taylor, or be Red-breast teacher: and the Indentures bee drawne, Ile away within these two howres: and so come in, when you will. Exit.

Glend. Come, come, Lord Mortimer, you are as fast
As hot Lord Percy is on fire to goe,
By this our Booke is drawne: wee'le but scale,
And then to Horse immediately.

Mort. With all my heart. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter the King, Prince of Wales, and others.

King. Lords, give us leave:
The Prince of Wales, and I,
Must have some private conference:
But be neere at hand,
For we shall presently have need of you.

Exeunt Lords.

I know not whether Heaven will have it so,
For some displeasing service I have done;
That in his secret Doome, out of my Blood,
Hee'le breed Revengement, and a Scourge for me:
But thou do'st in thy passages of Life,
Make me beleave, that thou art onely mark'd
For the hot vengeance, and the Rod of heaven
To punish my Mistreadings. Tell me else,
Could such inordinate and low desires,
Such poore, such bare, such lewd, such meane attempts,
Such barren pleasures, rude society,
As thou art matcht withall, and grafted too,
Accompanie the greatnesse of thy blood;
And hold their levell with thy Princely heart?

Prince. So please your Majesty, I would I could Quit all offences with as cleare excuse,
As well as I am doubtlesse I can purge
My selfe of many I am charg'd withall:
Yet such extenuation let me begge,
As in reproofe of many Tales devis'd,
Which oft the Eare of Greatnesse needes must heare,
By smiling Pick-thankes, and base Newes-mongers;
I may for some things true, wherein my youth
Hath faultie wandred, and irregular,
Finde pardon on my true submission.

King. Heaven pardon thee:
Yet let me wonder, Harry,
At thy affections, which doe hold a Wing
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors.
Thy place in Councell thou hast rudely lost,
Which by thy younger brother is supply'd;
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the Court and Princes of my blood.
The hope and expectation of thy time
Is ruin'd, and the Soule of every man
Prophetically do fore-thinke thy fall.
Had I so lavish of my presence beene,
So common hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheape to vulgar Company;
Opinion, that did helpe me to the Crowne,
Had still kept loyall to possession,
And left me in reputelesse banishment,
A fellow of no marke, nor likely hood.
By being seldome seene, I could not stirre,
But like a Comet, I was wondred at,

That men would tell their Children, This is he:
Others would say, Where, Which is Bullingbrooke.
And then I stole all Courtesie from Heaven,
And drest my selfe in such Humility,
That I did pluke Allegiance from mens hearts,
Lowd Showts and Salutations from their mouthes,
Even in the presence of the Crowned King.
Thus I did keepe my Person fresh and new,
My prefence like a Robe Pontificall,
Ne're seene, but wondred at: and so my State,
Seldome but sumptuous, shewed like a Feast,
And wonne by rarenesse such Solemnity.
The skipping King he ambled up and downe,
With shallow Iesters, and rash Bavin Wits,
Soone kindled, and soone burnt, carded his State,
Mingled his Royalty with Carping Fooles,
Had his great Name prophaned with their Scornes,
And gave his Countenance, against his Name,
To laugh at gybing Boyes, and stand the push
Of every Beardlesse vaine Comparative;
Grew a Companion to the common Streetes,
Enteoff'd himselfe to Popularity:
That being dayly swallowed by mens Eyes,
They surfeted with Honye, and began to loathe
The taste of Swetnesse, whereof a little
More then a little, is by much too much.
So when he had occasion to be seene,
He was but as the Cuckow is in Iune,
Heard, not regarded: seene but with such Eyes,
As sicke and blunted with Communitie,
Affoord no extraordinary Gaze,
Such as is bent on Sunne-like Majesty,
When it shines seldome in admiring Eyes:
But rather drowz'd, and hung their eye-lids down,
Slept in his Face, and rendred such aspect
As Cloudy men use to do their adversaries,
Being with his prefence glutted, gorg'd, and full.
And in that very Line, Harry, standest thou:
For thou hast lost thy Princely Priviledge,
With vile participation. Not an Eye
But is awearie of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more:
Which now doth that I would not have it doe,
Make blinde it selfe with foolish tendernesse.

Prince. I shall hereafter, my thrice gracious Lord,
Be more my selfe.

King. For all the World,
As thou art to this houre, was Richard then,
When I from France set forth at Ravenspurgh;
And even as I was then, is Percy now:
Now by my Scepter, and my Soule to boot,
I have more worthy interest to the state
Then thou the shaddow of Succession;
For of no Right, nor colour like to Right,
He doth fill fields with Harneis in the Realme,
Turnes head against the Lyons armed Iawes;
And being no more in debt to yeeres, then thou, Leades ancient Lords, and reverent Bishops on
To bloody Battailles, and to brusing Armes.
What never-dying honour hath he got,
Against renowned Douglas? whose high Deedes,
Whose hot IncurSIONS and great Name in Armes,
Holds from all Souldiers chiefe Majoritie,
And Militarie Title Capitall.
Through all the Kingdomes that acknowledge Christ,
Thrice hath the Hotspur Mars, in swathing Clothes,

This Infant Warrior, in his Enterprises,
Discomfited great Douglas, ta'ne him once,
Enlarged him, and made a friend of him,
To fill the mouth of the deepe Defiance up,
And shake the peace and safety of our Throne.
And what say you to this? Percy, Northumberland.
The Arch-bishops Grace of Yorke, Douglas, Mortimer, Capitulate against us, and are up.
But wherefore do I tell these Newes to thee?
Why, Harry, doe I tell thee of my Foes,
Which art my neer'st and dearest Enemie?
Thou art like enough, through vassall Feare,
Base Inclination, and the start of Spleene,
To fight against me under Percies pay,
To dogge his heeles, and curtsie at his frownes.
To shew how much thou art degenerate.

Prince. Doe not thinke so, you shall not finde it so:
And Heaven forgive them, that so much have sway'd
Your Majesties good thoughts away from me:
I will redeeme all this on Percies head,
And in the closing of some glorious day,
Be bold to tell you, that I am your Sonne,
When I will weare a garment all of blood,
And staine my favours in a bloody Maske:
Which washt away, shall scowre my shame with it.
And that shall be the day, when ere it lights,
That this same Child of honour and Renowne,
This gallant Hotspur, this ali-prayfed Knight,
And your unthought-of Harry chance to meet:
For every Honor sitting on his Helme,
Would they were multitudes; and on my head
My shames redoubled. For the time will come,
That I shall make this Northerne Youth exchange
His glorious Deedes for my Indignities:
Percy is but my Factor, good my Lord,
To engrosse up glorious deedes on my behalfe:
And I will call him to so strict account,
That he shall render every Glory up,
Yea, even the sleightest worship of his time,
Or I will teare the Reckoning from his Heart.
This, in the Name of Heaven, I promise here:
The which, if I promise, and doe survive,
I doe beseech your Majestie, may save
The long-growne Wounds of my intemperature:
If not, the end of Life cancells all Bands,
And I will dye a hundred thousand Deaths,
Ere breake the smallest parcell of this Vow.

King. A hundred thousand Rebels dye in this:
Thou shalt have Charge, and soveraigne trust herein.

Enter Blunt.

How now good Blunt? thy lookes are full of speed.

Blunt. So hath the Businesse that I come to speake of.
Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word,
That Douglas and the English Rebels met
The eleventh of this moneth, at Shrewsbury.
A mightie and a fearefull Head they are,
(If Promises be kept on every hand)
As ever offered foule play in a State.

King. The Earle of Westmerland set forth to day:
With him my sonne, Lord Iohn of Lancaster,
For this advertisement is five dayes old.
On Wednesday next, Harry thou shalt set forward:
On thursday, we our selves will march.
Our meeting is Bridgenorth: and Harry, you shall march f Through

Through Gloucestershire : by which account,
Our Businesse valued some twelue dayes hence,
Our generall Forces at Bridgenorth shall meete.
Our hands are full of Businesse : let's away,
Advantage feedes them fat, while men delay. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Falstaffe and Bardolph.

Falst. Bardolph, am I not false away vilely, since this last action? doe I not bate? doe I not dwindle? Why my skinne hangs about mee like an olde Ladies loose Gowne : I am withered like an olde Apple John. Well, Ile repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking : I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. And I have not forgotten what the in-side of a Church is made of, I am a Pepper Corne, a Brewers Horse, the inside of a Church. Company, villanous Company hath bene the spoyle of me.

Bard. Sir John, you are so fretfull, you cannot live long.

Falst. Why there is it : Come, sing me a bawdy Song, make me merry : I was as vertuously given, as a Gentleman need to be ; vertuous enough, swore little, did not above seaven times a weeke, went to a Bawdy-house not above once in a quarter of an houre, payd Mony that I borrowed, three or foure times ; lived well, and in good compasse : and now I live out of all order, out of compasse.

Bard. Why, you are so fat, Sir John, that you must needes bee out of all compasse ; out of all reasonable compasse, Sir John.

Falst. Doethou amend thy Face, and Ile amend thy Life. Thou art our Admirall, thou bearest the Lanterne in the Poope, but 'tis in the Nose of thee ; thou art the Knight of the burning Lampe.

Bard. Why, Sir John, my Face does you no harme.

Falst. No, Ile be sworn : I make as good use of it, as many a man doth of a Deaths-Head, or a Memento Mori. I never see thy Face, but I thinke upon Hell fire, and Dives that lived in Purple ; for there he is in his Robes burning, burning. If thou wert any way given to vertue, I would sweare by thy Face ; my Oath should bee, By this Fire : But thou art altogether given over ; and wert indeede, but for the Light in thy Face, the Sunne of utter Darkenesse. When thou ran'st up Gads-Head in the Night, to catch my Horse, if I did not thinke that thou hadst bene an Ignis fatuus, or a Ball of Wild-fire, there's no Purchase in Mony. O, thou art a perpetuall Triumph, an everlasting Bone-fire-Light : thou hast saved mee a thousand Markes in Linkes and Torches, walking with thee in the Night betwixt Taverne and Taverne : But the sacke that thou hast drunke mee, would have bought mee lights as good cheape, as the dearest Chandlers in Europe. I have maintain'd that Salamander of yours with fire, any time this two and thirtie yeeres, Heaven reward me for it.

Bard. I would my Face were in your belly.

Falst. So should I be sure to be heart-burn'd.

Enter Hotspur.

How now, Dame Parlet the Hen, have you enquir'd yet who pick'd my Pocket?

Hostesse. Why Sir John, what doe you thinke, Sir John doe you thinke I keepe Theeves in my House? I have search'd, I have enquired, so haz my Husband, Man by Man, Boy by Boy, Servant by Servant ; the tight of a hayre was never lost in my house before.

Falst. Yelye Hostesse : Bardolph was shav'd, and lost many a hayre ; and Ile be sworn my Pocket was pick'd, goe to, you are a Woman, goe.

Hostesse. Who? I defie thee : I was never call'd for in mine owne house before.

Falst. Goe to, I know you well enough.

Hostesse. No, Sir John, you doe not know mee, Sir John. I know you, Sir John : you owe me Money, Sir John, and now you picke a quarrell, to beguile me of it : I bought you a dozen of Shirts to your Backe.

Falst. Douglas, filthy Douglas : I have given them away to Bakers Wives, and they have made Boulsters of them.

Hostesse. Now as I am a true Woman, Holland of eight shillings an Ell : You owe Mony here besides, Sir John, for your Dyet, and by-Drinkings, and Mony lent you, foure and twentie pounds.

Falst. He had his part of it, let him pay.

Hostesse. Hee? alas hee is poore, hee hath nothing.

Falst. How? Poore? Looke upon his Face : What call you Rich? Let them coyne his Nose, let them coyne his Cheekes, Ile not pay a Denier. What, will you make a Younker of me? Shall I not take mine ease in mine Inn, but I shall have my Pocket pick'd? I have lost a Seale-Ring of my Grand-fathers, worth fortie Marke.

Hostesse. I have heard the Prince tell him, I know how oft, that that Ring was Copper.

Falst. How? the Prince is a lacke, a Sneake-Cuppe ; and if he were heere, I would cudgell him like a Dogg, if he would say so.

Enter the Prince marching, and Falstaffe meets him, playing on his Trunchion like a Fife.

Falst. How now Lad? is the Winde in that Doore? Must we all march?

Bard. Yea, two and two, Newgate fashion.

Hostesse. My Lord, I pray you heare me.

Prince. What say'st thou, Mistrisse Quickly? How does thy Husband? I love him well, hee is an honest man.

Hostesse. Good, my Lord, heare me.

Falst. Prethee let her alone, and list to me.

Prince. What say'st thou, lacke?

Falst. The other Night I fell asleepe heere behind the Arras, and had my Pocket pickt : this House is turn'd Bawdy-house, they picke Pockets.

Prince. What didst thou lose, lacke?

Falst. Wilt thou beleeve me, Hal? Three or foure Bonds of fortie pound a peece, and a Seale-Ring of my Grand-fathers.

Prince. A Trifle, some eight-penny matter.

Host. So I told him, my Lord ; and I sayd, I heard your Grace say so : and (my Lord) hee speakes most vilely of you, like a foule-mouth'd man he is, and said, hee would cudgell you.

Prince. What he did not?

Host. There's neyther Faith, Truth, nor Woman-hood in me else.

Falst. There's

Falst. There's no more faith in thee then a flū'de Prune; nor no more truth in thee then in a drawne Fox: and for Wooman-hood, Maid-marian may be the Deputies wife of the Ward to thee. Go you nothing: go.

Hofst. Say, what thing? what thing?

Falst. What thing? why a thing to thanke heaven on.

Hofst. I am nothing to thanke heaven on, I would thou shouldst know it: I am an honest mans wife: and setting thy Knighthood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

Falst. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise.

Hofst. Say, what beast, thou knave thou?

Falst. What beast? Why an Otter.

Prin. An Otter, sir John? Why an Otter?

Falst. Why? She's neither fish nor flesh; a man knowes not where to have her.

Hofst. Thou art unjust man in saying so; thou, or any man knowes where to have me, thou knave thou.

Prince. Thou say'st true Hofstesse, and he slanders thee moit grossely.

Hofst. So he doth you, my Lord, and sayde this other day, You ought him a thousand pound.

Prince. Sirrah, do I owe you a thousand pound?

Falst. A thousand pound Hal? A Million. Thy love is worth a Million: thou ow'st me thy love.

Hofst. Nay my Lord, hee call'd you Iacke, and said hee would cudgell you.

Falst. Did I, Bardolph?

Bar. Indeed Sir John, you sayd so.

Falst. Yea, if he said my Ring was Copper.

Prince. If say 'tis Copper. Dar'st thou bee as good as thy word now?

Falst. Why Hal? thou know'st, as thou art but a man, I dare; but, as thou art a Prince, I feare thee, as I feare the roaring of the Lyons Whelpe.

Prince. And why not as the Lyon?

Falst. The King himsele is to bee feared as the Lyon:
Do'st thou thinke Ile feare thee, as I feare thy Father? nay
if I do, let my Girdle breake.

Prin. O, if it should, how would thy guttes fall about thy knees. But sirra: There's no roome for Faith, Truth, nor Honesty, in this bosome of thine: it is all fill'd uppe with Guttes and Midriffe. Charge an honest Woman with picking thy pocket? Why thou horson impudent imboist Rascall, if there were any thing in thy Pocket but Taverne Recknings, Memorandums of Bawdie-houses, and one poore penny-worth of Sugar-candie to make thee long-winded: if thy pocket were enrich'd with any other injuries but these, I am a Villaine: And yet you will stand to it, you will not Pocket up wrong. Art thou not asham'd?

Falst. Do'st thou heare Hal? Thou know'st in the state of Innocency, Adam fell: and what would poore Iacke Falstaffe do, in the dayes of Villany? Thou seest, I have more flesh then another man, and therefore more frailty.
You confesse then you pickt my Pocket?

Prin. It appears so by the Story.

Falst. Hofstesse, I forgive thee:

Go make ready Breakfast, love thy Husband,
Looke to thy Servants, and cherish thy Guests:
Thou shalt find me tractable to any honest reason:
Thou seest, I am pacified still.
Nay, I prethee be gone.

Exit Hofstesse.

Now Hal, to the newes at Court for the Robbery, Lad?
How is that answered?

Prin. O my sweet Beeffe:
I must still be good Angell to thee.
The mony is paid backe againe.

Falst. O, I do not like that paying backe, 'tis a double Labour.

Prin. I am good Friends with my Father, and may doe any thing.

Falst. Rob me the Exchequer the first thing thou do'st, and do it with unwash'd hands too.

Bard. Do my Lord.

Prin. I have procured thee Iacke, a Charge of Foot.

Falst. I would it had beene of Horse. Where shal I finde one that can steale well? O, for a fine theefe, of two and twentie, or thereabout: I am heynously unprouided. Well God be thanked for these Rebels, they offend none but the Vertuous. I laud them, I praise them.

Prin. Bardolph.

Bar. My Lord.

Prin. Go beare this Letter to Lord John of Lancaster
To my Brother John. This to my Lord of Westmerland, Go Peto, to horse: for thou, and I,
Have thirtie miles to ride yet ere dinnertime.

Iacke, meet me to morrow in the Temple Hall

At two a clocke in the afternoone,

There shalt thou know thy Charge, and there receive Mony and Order for their Furniture.

The Land is burning, Percie stands on hye,
And either they, or we must lower lye.

Falst. Rare words? brave world.

Hofstesse, my breakfast, come:

Oh, I could wish this Taverne were my drumme.

Exeunt omnes.

Actus Quartus, Scena Prima.

Enter Harrie Hotspurre, Worcester, and Dowglas.

Hot. Well said, my Noble Scot, if speaking truth
In this fine Age, were not thought flatterie,
Such attribution should the Dowglas have,
As not a Souldiour of this seasons Itampe,
Should go so generall currant through the world.
By heaven I cannot flatter: I defie
The Tongues of Soothers. But a Braver place
In my hearts love, hath no man then your Selfe.
Nay, taske me to my word: approve me Lord.

Dow. Thou art the King of Honor:
No man so potent breathes upon the ground,
But I will Beard him.

Enter a Messenger.

Hot. Do so, and 'tis well. What Letters hast thou there?
I can but thanke you.

Mess. These Letters come from your Father.

Hot. Letters from him?

Why comes he not himsele?

Mess. He cannot come, my Lord,
He is greivous sicke.

Hot. How? haz he the leysure to be sicke now,
In such a justling time? Who leades his power?
Vnder whose Government come they along?

Mess. His Letters beares his minde, not I his minde.

Wor. I prethee tell me, doth he keepe his Bed?

Mess. He did, my Lord, foure dayes ere I set forth :
And at the time of my departure thence,
He was much fear'd by his Phyfician.

Wor. I would the state of time had first beene whole,
Ere he by sicknesse had beene visited ;
His health was never better worth then now.

Hotsp. Sicke now? droope now? this sicknes doth infect
The very Life-blood of our Enterprize,
'Tis catching hither, even to our Campe.
He writes me here, that inward sicknesse;
And that his friends by deputation
Could not so soone be drawne : nor did he thinke it meet,
To lay so dangerous and deare a trust
On any Soule remov'd, but on his owne.
Yet doth he give us bold advertisement,
That with our small conjunction we should on,
To see how Fortune is dispos'd to us,
For, as he writes, there is no quailing now,
Because the King is certainly posselt
Of all our purposes. What say you to it?

Wor. Your Fathers sicknesse is a mayme tous.

Hotsp. A perillous Gash, a very Limme lopt off :
And yet, in faith, it is not his present want
Seemes more then we shall finde it.
Were it good, to let the exact wealth of all our states
All at one Cast? To set so rich a mayne
On the nice hazard of one doubtfull houre,
It were not good : for therein should we reade
The very Bottome, and the Soule of hope
The very Lift, the very utmost Bound
Of all our fortunes.

Dowg. Faith and so we should,
Where now remains a sweet reversion.
We may boldly spend, upon the hope
Of what is to come in :

A comfort of retyrement lives in this.

Hotsp. A Randevous, a Home to flye unto,
If that the Divell and Mischance looke bigge
Vpon the Maydenhead of our Affaires.

Wor. But yet I would your Father had beene here :
The qualitie and Heire of our Attempt
Brookes no divifion : If will be thought
By some, that know not why he is away,
That wisedome, loyaltie, and meere dislike
Of our proceedings, kept the Earle from hence.
And thinke, how such an apprehension
May turne the tide of fearefull Faction,
And breede a kinde of question in our cause :
For well you know, we of the offering side,
Must keepe aloofe from strict arbitrement,
And stop all fight-holes, every loope, from whence.
The eye of reason may prie in upon us :
This absence of your Father drawes a Curtaine,
That shewes the ignorant a kinde of feare
Before not dreamt of.

Hotsp. You strayne too farre.
I rather of his absence make this use :
It lends a Lustre, and more great Opinion,
A larger Dare to your great Enterprize,
Then if the Earle were here : for men must thinke,
If we without his helpe, can make a Head
To push against the Kingdome : with his helpe,
We shall o'returne it topsie-turvy downe :
Yet all goes well, yet all our joynts are whole,

Dowg. As heart can thinke :

There is not such a word spoke of in Scotland,
At this Dreame of Feare.

Enter Sir Richard Vernon.

Hotsp. My Cousin Vernon, welcome by my Soule,

Vern. Pray God my newes be worth a welcome, Lord.
The Earle of Westmerland, seven thousand strong,
Is marching hither-wards, with Prince John.

Hotsp. No harme : what more?

Vern. And further, I have learn'd,
The King himselfe in person hath set fourth,
Or hither-wards intended speedily,
With strong and mightie preparation.

Hotsp. He shall be welcome too,
Where is his Sonne,
The nimble-footed Mad-Cap, Prince of Wales,
And his Cumrades, that daft the World aside,
And bid it passe?

Vern. All furnisht, all in Armes,
All plum'd like Estridges, that with the Winde
Bayted like Eagles, having lately bath'd,
Glittering in Golden Coates, like Images,
As full of spirit as the Moneth of May,
And gorgeous as the Sunne at Mid-summer,
Wanton as youthfull Goates, wilde as young Bulls.
I saw young Harry with his Bever on,
His Cushes on his thighes, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like feathered Mercury,
And vaulted with such ease into his Seat,
As if an Angell dropt downe from the Clouds,
To turne and winde a fierie Pegasus,
And witch the World with Noble Horsemanship,

Hotsp. No more, no more,
Worse then the Sunne in March :
This prayse doth nourish Agues : let them come.
They come like Sacrifices in their trimme,
And to the fire-ey'd Maid of smoakie Warre,
All hot, and bleeding, will we offer them :
The mayled Mars shall on his Altar sit
Vp to the eares in blood. I am on fire,
To heare this rich reprizall is so nigh,
And yet not ours. Come, let me take my Horse,
Who is to beare me like a Thunder-bolt,
Against the bosome of the Prince of Wales.
Harry to Harry, shall not Horse to Horse
Meete, and ne're part, till one drop downe a Coarse?
Oh, that Glendower were come.

Vern. There is more newes :
I learned in Worcestet, as I rode along,
He cannot draw his Power this fourteene dayes.

Dowg. That's the worst Tidings that I heare of yet.

Wor. I by my faith, that beares a frosty sound.

Hotsp. What may the Kings whole Battaille reach unto?

Vern. To thirty thousand.

Hot. Forty let it be,

My Father and Glendower being both away,
The powres of us, may serue so great a day.
Come, let us take a muster speedily.

Doomesday is neere ; dye all, dye merrily.

Dow. Talke not of dying, I am out of feare
Of death, or deaths hand, for this one halfe yeare.

Exeunt omnes.

Scen.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Falstaffe and Bardolph.

Falst. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry, fill me a Bottle of Sack, our Souldiers shall march through: we'll to Sutton-cop-hill to Night.

Bard. Will you give me money, Captaine?

Falst. Lay out, lay out.

Bard. This Bottle makes an Angell.

Falst. And if it doe, take it for thy labour: and if it make twentie, take them all, Ile answere the Coynage. Bid my Lieutenant Peto meete me at the Townes end.

Bard. I will Captaine: farewell.

Exit.

Falst. If I bee not asham'd of my Souldiers, I am a fowle't-Gurnet: I have mis-us'd the Kings Presse dam-nably. I have got, in exchange of a hundred and fiftie Souldiers, three hundred and odde Pounds. I presse me none but good house-holders, Yeomens Sonnes: enquire me out contracted Batchelers, such as had beene ask'd twice on the Banes: such a Commodity of warme slaves, as had as lieve heare the Deuill, as a Drumme; such as feare the report of a Caliver, worse then a truck-Foole, or a hurt wilde-Ducke. I prest me none but such Tostes and Butter, with hearts in their Bellies no bigger then Pinnes heads, and they have bought out their services: And now, my whole Charge consists of Ancients, Corporals, Lieutenants, Gentlemen of Companies, Slaves as ragged as Lazarus in the painted Cloth, where the Gluttons Dogges licked his Sores; and such, as indeed were never Souldiers, but dis-carded unjust Servingmen, younger Sonnes to younger Brothers, Revolted Tapsters and Ostlers, Trade-falne, the Cankers of a calme World, and long Peace, tenne times more dis-honorable ragged, then an old-fac'd Ancient; and such have I to fill up the roomes of them that have bought out their services: that you would thinke, that I had a hundred and fiftie totter'd Prodigalls, lately come from Swine-keeping, from eating Draffe and Huskes. A mad fellow met mee on the way, and told me, I had unloaded all the Gibbers, and prest the dead bodies. No eye hath seene such skar-Crowes: Ile not march through Couentry with them, that's fiat. Nay, and the Villaines march wide betwixt the Legges, as if they had Gyves on; for indeede, I had the molt of them out of Prison. There's not a Shirt and a halfe in all my Company: and the halfe Shirt is two Napkins tackt together, and throwne over the shoulders like a Heralds Coat, without sleeves: and the Shirt, to say the truth, stole from my Host of S. Albones; or the Red-Nose Inne-keeper of Daventry. But that's all one, they'll finde Linnen enough on every Hedge.

Enter the Prince, and the Lord of Westmerland.

Prince. How now blowne Iacke? how now Quilt?

Falst. What Hal? How now mad Wag, what a Divell do'st thou in Warwickshire? My good Lord of Westmerland, I cry you mercy, I thought your Honour had already beene at Shrewsbury.

West. Faith, Sir John, 'tis more then time that I were there, and you too: but my Powers are there already. The King, I can tell you, looks for us all: we must away all to Night.

Falst. Tut, never feare me, I am as vigilant as a Cat, to steale Creame.

Prince. I thinke to steale Creame indeed, for thy theft hath alredie made thee Butter: but tell me Iacke, whose fellowes are these that come after?

Falst. Mine, Hal, mine.

Prince. I did never see such pittifull Rascals.

Falst. Tut, tut, good enough to toss: foode for Powder, foode for Powder: they'll fill a Pit, as well as better: tush man, mortall men, mortall men.

Westm. I, but Sir John, me thinkes they are exceeding poore and bare, too beggarly.

Falst. Faith, for their poverty, I know not where they had that; and for their barenesse, I am sure they never learn'd that of me.

Prince. No, Ile be sworne, unlesse you call three fingers on the Ribbes bare. But firra make haste. Percy is already in the field.

Falst. What, is the King encamp'd?

Westm. Hee is, Iohn, I feare wee shall stay too long.

Falst. Well, to the latter end of a Fray, and the beginning of a Feast, fits a dull fighter, and a keene Guest.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, Douglas, and Vernon.

Hotsp. Wee'll fight with him to Night.

Worc. It may not be.

Doug. You give him then aduantage.

Vern. Not a whit.

Hotsp. Why say you so? lookes he not for supply?

Vern. So doe we.

Hotst. His is certaine, ours is doubtfull.

Worc. Good Cousin be advis'd, stirre not to night.

Vern. Doe not, my Lord.

Doug. You doe not counsaile well: You speake it out of feare, and cold heart.

Vern. Doe me no slander, Douglas: by my Life, And I dare well maintaine it with my Life, If well-respected Honor bid me on, I hold as little counsaile with weake feare, As you, my Lord, or any Scot that this day lives. Let it be seene to morrow in the Battell, Which of us feares.

Doug. Yea, or to night.

Vern. Content.

Hotsp. To night, say I.

Vern. Come, come it may not be.

I wonder much, being me of such great leading as you are That you fore-see not what impediments Drag backe our expedition: certaine Horse Of my Cousin Vernons are not yet come up, Your Vncle Worcesters Horse came but to day, And now their pride and mettall is asleepe, Their courage with hard labour tame and dull, That not a Horse is halfe the halfe of himselfe, Hotsp. So are the Horses of the Enemie In generall, journey bated, and brought low: The better part of ours are full of rest.

Worc. The number of the King exceedeth ours :
For Gods sake, Cousin, stay till all come in.

The Trumpet sounds a Parley. Enter Sir Walter Blunt.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from the King,
If you vouchsafe me hearing, and respect.

Hotsp. Welcome, Sir Walter Blunt :
And would to God you were of our determination.
Some of us love you well : and even those some Envie your great deservings, and good name,
Because you are not of our qualitie,
But stand against us like an enemy.

Blunt. And Heaven defend, but still I should stand so,
So long as out of Limit, and true Rule,
You stand against anoynted Majestie.
But to my Charge.

The King hath sent to know
The nature of your griefes, and whereupon
You conjure from the brest of Civill Peace,
Such bold Hostilitie, teaching his dutious Land
Audacious Crueltie. If that the King
Have any way your good defaults forgot,
Which he confesseth to be manifold,
He bids you name your griefes ; and with all speed
You shall have your desires, with interest ;
And Pardon absolute for your selfe, and these,
Herein mis-led, by your suggestion.

Hotsp. The king is kinde :
And well we know, the King
Knowes at what time to promise, when to pay.
My Father, my Vnckle, and my selfe,
Did give him that same Royaltie he weares :
And when he was not fixe and twentie strong,
Sicke in the worlds regard, wretched and low,
A poore unminded Out-law, sneaking home,
My Father gave him welcome to the shore :
And when he heard him sweare, and vow to God,
He came to be but Duke of Lancaster,
To sue his Liverie, and begge his Peace,
With teares of Innocencie, and tearmes of Zeale :
My Father, in kinde heart and pittie mov'd,
Swore him assistance, and perform'd it too.
Now, when the Lords and Barons of the Realme
Perceiv'd Northumberland did leane to him,
The more and lesse came in with Cap and Knee,
Met him in Boroughs, Cities, Villages,
Attended him on Bridges, stood in Lanes,
Layd Gifts before him, proffer'd him their Oathes,
Gave him their Heires, as Pages followed him,
Even at the heeles, in golden multitudes.
He presently, as greatnesse knowes it selfe,
Steps me a little higher then his Vow
Made to my Father, while his blood was poore,
Vpon the naked shore at Ravenspurgh :
And now (forsooth) takes on him to reforme
Some certaine Edicts, and some strait Decrees,
That lay to heavie on the Common-wealth ;
Cryes out upon abuses, seemes to weepe
Over his Countries Wrongs : and by this Face,
This seeming Brow of Iustice, did he winne
The hearts of all that he did angle for.
Proceeded further, cut me off the Heads
Of all the Favorites, that the absent King
In deputation left behinde him heere,

When he was personall in the Irish Warre.

Blunt. Tut, I came not to heare this.

Hot. Then to the point.

In short time after, he depos'd the King,
Soone after that, depriv'd him of his Life :
And in the neck of that, task't the whole State.
To make that worfe, suffer'd his Kinsman March,
Who is, if every Owner were plac'd,
Indeed his King, to be engag'd in Wales,
There, without ransome, to lye forfeited :
Disgrac'd me in my happy Victories,
Sought to intrap me by intelligence,
Rated my Vnckle from the Councell-Boord,
In rage dismiss'd my Father from the Court,
Broke Oath on Oath, committing Wrong on Wrong,
And in conclusion, drove us to seeke out
This head of safetie ; and withall, to prie
Into his Title : The which we finde
Too indirect, for long continuance.

Blunt. Shall I returne this answer to the King?

Hotsp. Not so, Sir Walter.

Wee'le with-draw a while :
Goe to the King, and let there be impawn'd
Some suretie for a safe returne againe,
And in the Morning early shall my Vnckle
Bring him our purpose : and so farewell.

Blunt. I would you would accept of Grace and Love.

Hotsp. And't may be, so we shall.

Blunt. Pray Heaven you doe.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter the Arch-Bishop of Yorke, and Sir Michell,

Arch. Hie, good Sir Michell, beare this sealed Briefe
With winged haste to the Lord Marshal,
This to my Cousin Scroope, and all the rest
To whom they are directed.
If you knew how much they doe import,
You would make haste.

Sir Mich. My good Lord, I guesse their tenor.

Arch. Like enough you doe.

To morrow, good Sir Michell, is a day,
Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men
Must bide the touch. For Sir, at Shrewsbury,
As I am truly given to understand,
The King, with mightie and quick-rayed Power,
Meetes with Lord Harrie : and I feare, Sir Michell,
What with the sicknesse of Northumberland,
Whose power was in the first proportion ;
And what with Owen Glendowers absence thence,
Who with them was rated firmly too,
And comes not in, over-rul'd by Prophecies,
I feare the Power of Percy is too weake,
To wage an instant tryall with the King.

Sir Mich. Why my good Lord, you need not feare,
There is Douglas, and Lord Mortimer.

Arch. No, Mortimer is not there.

Sir Mich. But there is Mordake, Vernon, Lord Harry Percy,
And there is my Lord of Worcester,
And a Head of gallant Warriors,
Noble Gentlemen.

Arch. And

Arch. And so there is, but yet the King hath drawne
The speciall head of all the Land together :
The Prince of Wales, Lord Iohn of Lancaster,
The Noble Westmerland, and warlike Blunt ;
And many moe Corriuals, and deere men
Of estimation, and command in Armes.

Sir M. Doubt not my Lord, he shall be well oppos'd.

Arch. I hope no lesse : Yet needfull 'tis to feare,
And to prevent the worst, Sir Michell speed ;
For if Lord Percy thrive not, ere the King
Dismiss his power, he meanes to visit us ;
For he hath heard our Confederacie,
And, 'tis but Wisdome to make strong against him :
Therefore make haste, I must goe write againe
To other Friends : and so farewell, Sir Michell. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord Iohn of Lancaster, Earle of Westmerland, Sir Walter Blunt, and Falstaffe.

King. How bloodily the Sunne begins to peere
Above yon busky hill : the day lookes pale
At his distemperature.

Prin. The Southerne winde
Doth play the Trumpet to his purposes,
And by his hollow whistling in the Leaves,
Foretels a Tempest : and a blust'ring day.

King. Then with the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seeme soure to those that win.

The Trumpet sounds.

Enter Worcester.

King. How now my Lord of Worster ? 'Tis not well
That you and I should meet upon such tearmes,
As now we meet. You have deceiv'd our trust,
And made us doffe our easie Robes of Peace,
To crush our old limbes in ungentle Steele :
This is not well, my Lord, this is not well.
What say you to it ? Will you againe unknit
This churlish knot of all-aborred Warre ?
And move in that obedient Orbe againe,
Where you did give a faire and naturall light,
And be no more an exhal'd Meteor,
A prodigie of Feare, and a Portent
Of broached Mischeefe, to the unborne Times ?

Wor. Heare me, my Liege :
For mine owne part, I could be well content
To entertaine the Lagge-end of my life
With quiet houres : For I do protest,
I have not sought the day of this dislike.

King. You have not sought it : how comes it then ?
Fal. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.

Prin. Peace, Chewet, peace.

Wor. It pleas'd your Majesty, to turne your lookes
Of Favour, from my Selfe, and all our House ;
And yet I must remember you my Lord,
We were the first, and dearest of your Friends :
For you, my staffe of Office did I breake
In Richards time, and poasted day and night
To meet you on the way, and kisse your hand,

When yet you were in place, and in account
Nothing so strong and fortunate, as I ;
It was my Selfe, my Brother, and his Sonne,
That brought you home, and boldly did out-dare
The danger of the time. You swore to us,
And you did sweare that Oath at Doncaster,
That you did nothing of purpose 'gainst the State,
Nor claime no further, then your new-falne right,
The seate of Gannet, Dukedome of Lancaster.
To this, we sware our aide : But in short space,
It rain'd downe Fortune showring on your head,
And such a flood of Greatnesse fell on you,
What with our helpe, what with the absent King,
What with the injuries of wanton time,
The seeming sufferances that you had borne,
And the contrarious Windes that held the King
So long in the unlucky Irish Warres,
That all in England did repute him dead :
And from this swarme of faire advantages,
You tooke occasion to be quickly woo'd,
To gripe the generall sway into your hand,
Forgot your Oath to us at Doncaster,
And being fed by us, you us'd us so,
As that ungentle gull the Cuckowes Bird,
Vseth the Sparrow, did oppresse our Nest,
Grew by our Feeding, to so great a bulke,
That even our Love durst not come neere your sight
For feare of swallowing : But with nimble wing
We were inforc'd for safetie sake, to flye
Out of your sight, and raise this present Head,
Whereby we stand opposed by such meanes
As you your selfe, have forg'd against your selfe,
By unkindenage, dangerous countenance,
And violation of all faith and troth
Sworne to us in yonger enterprize.

King. These things indeede you have articulated, Proclaim'd at Market Crosses, read in Churches,
To face the Garment of Rebellion
With some fine colour, that may please the eye
Of fickle Changelings, and poore Discontents,
Which gape, and rub the Elbow at the newes
Of hurly burly Innouation :
And never yet did Insurrection want
Such water-colours, to impaint his cause :
Nor moody Beggars, starving for a time
Of pell-mell hauocke, and confusion.

Prin. In both our Armies, there is many a soule
Shall pay full dearly for this encounter,
If once they joyne in triall. Tell your Nephew,
The Prince of Wales doth joyne with all the world
In prayse of Henry Percy : By my Hopes,
This present enterprize set off his head,
I do not thinke a braver Gentleman,
More active, valiant, or more valiant young,
More daring, or more bold, is now alive,
To grace this latter Age with noble deedes.
For my part, I may speake it to my shame,
I have a Truant beene to Chivalry,
And so I heare, he doth account me too :
Yet this before my Fathers Majesty,
I am content that he shall take the oddes
Of his great name and estimation,
And will, to save the blood on either side,
Try fortune with him, in a Single Fight.

King. And Prince of Wales, so dare we venter thee,
Albeit, considerations infinite

Do make against it : No good Worster, no,
We love our people well ; even those we love
That are mislead upon your Cousins part :
And will they take the offer of our Grace :
Both he, and they, and you, yea, every man
Shall be my Friend againe, and Ile be his.
So tell your Cousin, and bring me word,
What he will do. But if he will not yeeld,
Rebuke and dread correction waite on us,
And they shall do their Office. So be gone,
We will not now be troubled with reply,
We offer faire, take it advifedly,

Exit Worcester.

Prin. It will not be accepted, on my Life,
The Douglas and the Hotspur both together,
Are confident against the world in Armes.

King. Hence therefore, every Leader to his charge,
For on their answer will we set on them ;
And God befriend us, as our cause is just. Exeunt.

Manet Prince and Falstaffe.

Fal. Hal, if thou see me downe in the battell,
And bestride me, so ; 'tis a point of friendship.

Prin. Nothing but a Colossus can do thee that freindship :
Say thy prayers, and farewell.

Fal. I would it were bed time Hal, and all well.

Prin. Why, thou ow'st heaven a death.

Falst. 'Tis not due yet : I would be loath to pay him before his day. What neede I bee so forward with him that call's not on me ? Well, 'tis no matter, Honour prickes me on. But how if Honour pricke me off when I come on ? How then ? Can Honour set too a legge ? No : or an arme ? No : Or take away the greefe of a wound ? No.
Honour hath no skill in Surgerie then ? No. What is Honour ? A word. What is that word Honour ? Ayre : A trim reckoning. Who hath it ? He that dy'de a Wednesday. Doth he feele it ? No. Doth he heare it ? No. Is it insensible then ? yea, to the dead. But will it not live with the living ? No. Why ? Detraction will not suffer it, therefore Ile none of it. Honour is a meere Scutcheon, and so ends my Catechisme. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Worcester, and Sir Richard Vernon.

Wor. O no, my nephew must not know, Sir Richard,
The liberall kinde offer of the king.

Ver. 'T were best he did.

Wor. Then we are all undone.
It is not possible, it cannot be,
The King would keepe his word in loving us,
He will suspect us still, and finde a time
To punish this offence in others faults :
Supposition, all our lives shall be sticke full of eyes ;
For Treason is but trusted like the Foxe,
Who ne're so tame, so cherisht, and lock'd up,
Will have a wilde trick of his Ancestors :
Looke how he can, or sad or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks,
And we shall feede like Oxen at a stall,
The better cherisht, still the nearer death.
My Nephewes trespass may be well forgot,
It hath the excuse of youth, and heate of blood,

And an adopted name of Priviledge,
A bare-brain'd Hotspur, govern'd by a Spleene :
All his offences live upon my head,
And on his Fathers. We did traine him on,
And his corruption being tane from us,
We as the Spring of all, shall pay for all :
Therefore good Cousin, let not Harry know
In any case, the offer of the King.

Ver. Deliver what you will, Ile say 'tis so.
Heere comes your Cofin.

Enter Hotspur.

Hot. My Vnkle is return'd,
Deliver up my Lord of Westmerland.
Vnkle, what newes ?

Wor. The King will bid you battell presently.

Dow. Defie him by the Lord of Westmerland.

Hot. Lord Douglas : Go you and tell him so.

Dow. Marry and shall, and verie willingly.

Exit Douglas.

Wor. There is no seeming mercy in the King.

Hot. Did you begge any ? God forbid.

Wor. I told him gently of our greevances,
Of his Oath-breaking : which he mended thus,
By now forswearing that he is forsworne,
He calls us Rebels, Traitors, and will scourge
With haughty armes, this hatefull name in us.

Enter Douglas.

Dow. Arme Gentlemen, to Armes, for I have throwne
A brave defiance in King Henries teeth :

And Westmerland that was engag'd did beare it,
Which cannot choose but bring him quickly on.

Wor. The Prince of Wales stept forth before the king,
And Nephew, challeng'd you to single fight.

Hot. O, would the quarrell lay upon our heads,
And that no man might draw short breath to day,
But I and Harry Monmouth. Tell me, tell me,
How shew'd his Talking ? Seem'd it in contempt ?

Ver. No, by my Soule : I never in my life
Did heare a Challenge urg'd more modestly
Vnlesse a Brother should a Brother dare
To gentle exercise, and proove of Armes.
He gave you all the Duties of a Man,
Trim'd up your praises with a Princely tongue,
Spoke your deservings like a Chronicle,
Making you ever better then his prayse,
By still dispraying prayse, valed with you :
And which became him like a Prince indeed,
He made a blushing citall of himselfe,
And chid his Trewant youth with a Grace,
As if he mastred there a double spirit
Of teaching, and of learning instantly :
There did he pause. But let me tell the World,
If he out-live the envie of this day,
England did never owe so sweete a hope,
So much misconstrued in his wantonnesse.

Hot. Cousin, I thinke thou art enamored
On his Follies : never did I heare
Of any Prince so wilde at Liberty.
But be he as he will, yet once ere night,
I will imbrace him with a Souldiers arme,
That he shall shrink under my curtesie.
Arme, arme with speed. And Fellow's, Soldiers, Friends,
Better consider what you have to do,
Than I that have not well the gift of Tongue,

Can

Can lift your blood up with perswasion.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My Lord, heere are letters for you.

Hot. I cannot reade them now.

O Gentlemen, the time of life is short ;
To spend that shortnesse basely, were too long.
If life did ride upon a Dials point,
Still ending at the arrivall of an houre,
And if we live, we live to tread on Kings:
If dye ; brave death, when Princes dye with us.
Now for our Consciencs, the Armes is faire,
When the intent for bearing them is just.

Enter another Messenger.

Mes. My Lord prepare, the King comes on apace,

Hot. I thanke him, that he cuts me from my tale :

For I profess not talking : Onely this,
Let each man do his best. And heere I draw a Sword,
Whose worthy temper I intend to staine
With the best blood that I can meete withall,
In the adventure of this perillous day.
Now Esperance Percy, and set on :
Sound all the lofty Instruments of Warre,
And by that Musicke, let us all imbrace :
For heaven to earth, some of us never shall,
A second time do such a curtesie.

They embrace, the Trumpets sound, the King entereth with his power, alarm unto the battell. Then enter Dowglas, and Sir Walter Blunt.

Blu. What is thy name, that in battell thus y crossst me?
What honour dost thou seeke upon my head?

Dow. Know then my name is Dowglas,
And I do haunt thee in the battle thus,
Because some tell me, that thou art a King.

Blunt. They tell thee true.

Dow. The Lord of Stafford heere to day hath bought Thy likenesse: for insteed of thee King Harry,
This sword hath ended him, so shall it thee,
Vnlesse thou yeeld thee as a Prisoner.

Blu. I was not borne to yeeld thou haughtie Scot,
And thou shalt finde a King that will revenge
Lord Staffords death.

Fight, Blunt is slaine, then enters Hotspur.

Hot. O Dowglas, hadst thou fought at Holmedon thus,
I never had triumphed o're a Scot.

Dow. All's done, all's won, here breathles lies the King.

Hot. Where?

Dow. Heere.

Hot. This Dowglas? No, I know this face full well :
A gallant Knight he was, his name was Blunt,
Sembably furnish'd like the King himselfe.

Dow. Ah foole : go with thy soule whither it goes,
A borrowed tittle hast thou bought too deere.
Why didst thou tell me, that thou wert a King?

Hot. The King hath many marching in his Coates.

Dow. Now by my Sword, I will kill all his Coates,
He murder all his Wardrobe peece by peece,
Vntill I meet the King.

Hot. Vp, and away,

Our Souldiers stand full fairely for the day. Exeunt.

Alarm, and enter Falstaffe solus.

Fal. Though I could scape shot-free at London, I feare the shot heere : here's no scoring, but upon the pate. Soft who art thou? Sir Walter Blunt, there's Honour for you:
here's no vanity, I am as hot as molten Lead, and as heavy too ; heaven keepe Lead out of mee, I neede no more weight then mine owne Bowelles. I have led my rag of Muffins where they are pepper'd ; there's not three of my 150, left alive, and they for the Townes end, to beg during life. But who comes heere?

Enter the Prince,

Prin. What, stand'st thou idle here? Lend me thy sword,
Many a Nobleman lies starke and stiffe
Vnder the hooves of vantage enemies,
Whose deaths are unrevenge'd. Prethee lend me thy sword

Fal. O Hal, I prethee give me leave to breath awhile : Turke Gregory never did such deeds in Armes, as I have done this day. I have paid Percy, I have made him sure.

Prin. He is indeed, and living to kill thee
I prethee lend me thy sword.

Falst. Nay Hal, if Percy bee alive, thou getst not my Sword ; but take my Pistoll if thou wilt.

Prin. Give it me : What, is it in the Case?

Fal. I Hal, 'tis hot : There's that will Sacke a City.

The Prince drawes out a Bottle of Sacke.

Prin. What, is it a time to jest and dally now? Exit

Thromes is at him.

Fal. If Percy be alive. Ile pierce him : if he do come in my way, so : if he do not, if I come in his (willingly) let him make a Carbonado of me, I like not such grinning honour as Sir Walter hath : Give me life, which if I can save, so : if not, honour comes unlook'd for, and ther's an end. Exit.

Scæna Tertia.

Alarm, excursions, enter the King, the Prince, Lord Iohn of Lancaster, and Earle of Westmerland.

King. I prethee Harry withdraw thy selfe, thou blecdest too much : Lord Iohn of Lancaster, go you with him.

P. Ioh. Not I, my Lord, unlesse I did bleed too.

Prin. I beseech your Majesty make up,
Least you retirement do amaze your friends.

King. I will do so :

My Lord of Westmerland leade him to his Tent.

West. Come my Lord. He leade you to your Tent

Prin. Leade me my Lord? I do not need your helpe,
And heaven forbid a shallow scratch should drive
The Prince of Wales from such a field as this,
Where stain'd Nobility lyes troden on,
And Rebels Armes triumph in massacres.

Ioh. We breath too long : come cousin Westmerland,
Our duty this way lies, for heavens sake come.

Prin. By heaven thou hast deceived me Lancaster,
I did not thinke thee Lord of such a spirit :

(Before, I lov'd thee as a brother, Iohn ;
But now, I do respect thee as my Soule.)

King. I saw him hold Lord Percy at the point,
With lustier maintenance then I did looke for
Of such an ungrowne Warriour.

Prin. O this Boy, lends mettall to us all. Exit.

Enter Dowglas.

Dow. Another King? They grow like Hydra's heads :
I am the Dowglas fatall to all those
That weare those colours on them. What art thou
That counterfeits the person of a King?

King. The King himselfe; who Dowglas grieves at hart

So

So many of his shadowes thou hast met,
And not the very King. I have two Boyes
Seeke Percy and thy selfe about the Field:
But seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily,
I will assay thee: so defend thy selfe.

Don. I feare thou art another countefeit:
And yet infaith thou bear'st thee like a King:
But mine I am sure thou art, who ere thou be,
And thus I win thee. They fight, the K. being in danger,
Enter Prince.

Prin. Hold up thy head vile Scot, or thou art like Never to hold it up againe: the Spirits
Of valiant Sherly, Stafford, Blunt, are in my Armes;
It is the Prince of Wales that threateth thee,
Who never promiseth, but meanes to pay.

They fight, Douglas flyeth.

Cheerely My Lord: how fares your Grace?

Sir Nicholas Gausey hath for succour sent,
And so hath Clifton: Ile to Clifton straight.

King. Stay, and breath awhile.
Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion,
And shew'd thou mak'st some tender of my life
In this faire rescue thou hast brought to me.

Prin. O heaven, they did me too much injury,
That ever sayd I hearkned to your death.
If it were so, I might have let alone
The insulting hand of Douglas over you,
Which would have bene as speedy in your end,
As all the poysonous Potions in the world,
And sav'd the Treacherous labour of your Sonne.

K. Make up to Clifton, Ile to Sir Nicholas Gausey. Exit
Enter Hotspurre.

Hot. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth.

Prin. Thou speakest as if I would deny my name.

Hot. My name is Harry Percy.

Prin. Why then I see a very valiant rebell of that name.
I am the Prince of Wales, and thinke not Percy,
To share with me in glory any more:
Two Starres keepe not their motion in one Sphere,
Nor can one England brooke a double reigne,
Of Harry Percy, and the Prince of Wales.

Hot. Nor shall it Harry, for the houre is come
To end the one of us; and would to heaven,
Thy name in Armes, were now as great as mine.

Prin. Ile make it greater, ere I part from thee,
And all the budding Honors on thy Crest,
Ile crop to make a Garland for my head.

Hot. I can no longer brooke thy Vanities. Fight.
Enter Falstaffe.

Fal. Well said Hal, to it Hal. Nay you shall finde no
Boyes play heere, I can tell you.

Enter Douglas, he fights with Falstaffe, who falls down
as if he were dead. The Prince killeth Percie.

Hot. Oh Harry, thou hast rob'd me of my youth:
I better brooke the losse of brittle life,
Then those proud titles thou hast wonne of me,
They wound my thoughts worse, then the sword my flesh:
But thought's the slave of Life, and Life, Times foole;
And Time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop. O, I could Prophesie,
But that the Earth, and the cold hand of death,
Lyes on my Tongue: No Percie, thou art dust
And food for ———

Prin. For Wormes, brave Percy. Farewell great heart:
Ill-weav'd Ambition, how much art thou shrunke?
When that this bodie did containe a spirit,

A Kingdome for it was too small a bound:
But now two paces of the vilest Earth
Is roome enough. This Earth that beares the dead,
Beares not alive so stout a Gentleman.

If thou wer't sensible of curtesie,
I should not make so great a shew of Zeale.
But let my favours hide thy mangled face,
And even in thy behalfe, Ile thanke my selfe
For doing these fayre Rites of Tenderesse.
Adieu, and take thy prayse with thee to heaven,
Thy ignomy sleepe with thee in the grave,
But not remembr'd in thy Epitaph.

What? Old Acquaintance? Could not all this flesh
Keepe in a little life? Poore Iacke, farewell:
I could have better spar'd a better man.

O, I should have a heavy misse of thee,
If I were much in love with Vanitie.
Death hath not stricke so fat a Deere to day,
Though many dearer in this bloody Fray:
Imbowell'd will I see thee by and by,
Till then, in blood, by Noble Percie lye. Exit.

Falstaffe riseth up.

Falst. Imbowell'd? If thou imbowell mee to day, Ile give you leave to powder me, and eat me too to morrow.
I was time to counterfet, or that hotte Termagant Scot, had paid me scot and lot too. Counterfeit? I am no counterfeit; to dye, is to be a counterfeit, for hee is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man: But to counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liveth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life in deede. The better part of Valour, is Discretion; in the which better part, I have saved my life. I am affraide of this Gun-powder Percy though he be dead. How if hee should counterfeit too, and rise? I am afraid hee would prove the better counterfeit: therefore Ile make him sure:
yea, and Ile sweare I kill'd him. Why may not he rise as well as I? Nothing confutes me but eyes, and no-bodie sees me. Therefore sirra, with a new wound in your thigh come you along me. Takes Hotspurre on his backe.

Enter Prince and Iohn of Lancaster.

Prin. Come Brother Iohn, full bravely hast thou fished thy Maiden sword.

Iohn. But soft, who have we heere?

Did you not tell me this fat man was dead?

Prin. I did, I saw him dead,
Breathlesse, and bleeding on the ground: Art thou alive?
Or is it fantasie that playes upon our eye-sight?
I prethee speake, we will not trust our eyes
Without our eares. Thou art not what thou seem'st.

Fal. No, that's certaine: I am not a double man: but if I am not Iacke Falstaffe, then am I a Iacke: There is Percy, if your Father will do me any Honor, so: if not, let him kill the next Percy himselve. I looke to be either Earle or Duke, I can assure you.

Prin. Why, Percy I kill'd my selfe, and saw thee dead.

Fal. Didst thou? Lord, Lord, how the world is given to Lying? I graunt you I was downe, and out of Breath, and so was he, but we rose both at an instant, and fought along houre by Shrewsburie clocke, If I may be believed, so: if not, let them that should reward Valour, beare the sinne upon their owne heads. Ile take't on my death
I gave him this wound in the Thigh: if the man were al-live, and would denie it, I would make him eate a peece of my sword.

Iohn. This is the strangest tale that e're I heard.

Prin. This is the strangest Fellow, Brother Iohn. Come

Come bring your luggage Nobly on your backe :
For my part, if a lye may doe thee grace,
He gil'd it with the happiest tearmes I have.

A Retreat is sounded.

The Trumpets sound Retreat, the day is ours :
Come Brother, let's to the highest of the field,
To see what Friends are living, who are dead. Exeunt.

Fal. He follow as they say, for Reward. Hee that rewards me, heaven reward him. If I do grow great againe, He grow lesse ? For He purge, and leave Sacke, and live cleanly, as a Noble man shoul d do. Exit.

Scena Quinta.

The Trumpets sound.

*Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord Iohn of Lancaster, Earle of Westmerland, with Worcester &
Vernon Prisoners.*

King. Thus ever did Rebellion finde Rebuke.
Ill-spirited Worcester, did we not send Grace,
Pardon, and tearmes of Love to all of you ?
And would'st thou turne our offers contrary ?
Mistake the tenor of thy Kinsmans trust ?
Three Knights upon our party slaine to day,
A Noble Earle and many a creature else,
Had beene alive this houre,
If like a Christian thou had'st truly borne
Betwixt our Armies, true Intelligence.

W. What I have done, my safety urg'd me to,

And I embrace this fortune patiently,
Since not to be avoided, it falls on me.

King. Beare Worcester to death, and Vernon too.
Other Offenders we will pause upon.

Exit Worcester and Vernon.

How goes the Field ?

Prin. The Noble Scot Lord Douglas, when he saw
The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him,
The Noble Percy slaine, and all his men,
Vpon the foot of feare, fled with the rest ;
And falling from a hill, he was so bruiz'd
That the pursuers tooke him. At my Tent
The Douglas is, and I beseech your Grace,
I may dispose of him.

King. With all my heart. ?

Prin. Then Brother Iohn of Lancaster,
To you this honourable bounty shall belong :
Goe to the Douglas, and deliver him
Vp to his pleasure, ransomlesse and free :
His Valour shewne upon our Crests to day,
Hath taught us how to cherish such high deeds,
Even in the bosome of our Adverfaries.

King. Then this remaines : that we devide our Power.
You Sonne Iohn, and my Cousin Westmerland
Towards Yorke shall bend you, with your deereft speed
To meet Northumbrland, and the Prelate Scroope,
Who (as we heare) are busily in Armes.
My Selfe, and Sonne Harry will towards Wales,
To fight with Glendower, and the Earle of March.
Rebellion in this Land shall lose his way,
Meeting the Checke of such another day ;
And since this Businesse so faire is done,
Let us not leave till all our owne be wonne. Exeunt.

The Second Part of Henry the Fourth,

Containing his Death : and the Coronation of King Henry the Fifth.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

INDUCTION.

Enter Rumor.

RPen your Eares : For which of you will stop
The vent of Hearing, when loud Rumor speakes?
, from the Orient, to the drooping West
(Making the wind my Post-horse) still unfold
The Acts commenced on this Ball of Earth.
Vpon my Tongue, continuall Slanders ride,
The which, in every Language, I pronounce,
Stuffing the eares of them with false Reports :
I speake of Peace, while covert Enmitie
(Vnder the smile of safety) wounds the World :
And who but Rumor, who but only I
Make fearefull Musters, and prepar'd Defence,
Whil'st the bigge yeare, swolne with some other griefes,
Is thought with childe, by the sterne Tyrant Warre;
And no such matter? Rumor, is a Pipe
Blowne by Surmise, Ielousies Conjectures ;
And of so easie, and so plaine a stop,
That the blunt Monster, with uncounted heads,
The still discordant, wavering Multitude,
Can play upon it. But what neede I thus
My well-knowne Body to Anathomize
Among my household? Why is Rumor heere?
I run before King Harries victory,
Who in a bloodie field by Shrewsburie
Hath beaten downe young Hosspurre, and his Troopes,
Quenching the flame of bold rebellion,
Even with the Rebels blood. But what meane I
To speake of truth at first? My Office is
To noyse abroad, that Harry Monmouth fell
Vnder the Wrath of Noble Hosspurres Sword :
And that the King, before the Dowglas Rage
Stoop'd his Anointed head, as low as death.
This have I rumor'd through the peasant-Townes,
Betweene the Royall Field of Shrewsburie,
And this Worme-eaten-Hole of ragged Stone,
Where Hosspurres Father, old Northumberland, Lyes crafty sicke. The Postes come tying on,
And not a man of them brings other newes
Then they have learn'd of Me. From Rumors Tongues,
They bring smooth-Comforts-false, worse then True-wrongs.

Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Lord Bardolfe, and the Porter.

L. Bar. Who keeps the Gate hoa?
Where is the Earle?

Pro. What shall I say you are?

Bar. Tell thou the Earle
That the Lord Bardolfe doth attend him heere.

Pro. His Lordship is walk'd forth into the Orchard,
Please it your Honor, knocke but at the Gate,
And he himselfe will answer.

Enter Northumberland.

L. Bar. Heere comes the Earle.

Nor. What newes Lord Bardolfe? Ev'ry minute now
Should be the Father of some Stratagem ;
The Times are wilde : Contention (like a Horse
Full of high Feeding) madly hath broke loose,
And beares downe all before him.

L. Bar. Noble Earle,
I bring you certaine newes from Shrewsbury.

Nor. Good, and heaven will.

L. Bar. As good as heart can wish :
The King is almost wounded to the death :
And in the Fortune of my Lord your Sonne,
Prince Harrie flaine outright : and both the Blunts
Kill'd by the hand of Dowglas. Young Prince John,
And Westmerland, and Stafford, fled the Field.
And Harrie Monmouth's Brawne (the Hulke Sir John)
Is prisoner to your Sonne. O, such a Day.
(So fought, so follow'd, and so fairely wonne)
Came not, till now, to dignifie the Times
Since Cesars Fortunes.

Nor. How is this deriv'd?

Saw you the Field? Came you from Shrewsbury?

L. Bar. I spake with one (my L.) that came fro thence,
A Gentleman well bred, and of good name,
That freely render'd me these newes for true.

Nor. Heere comes my Servant Travers, whom I sent
On Tuesday last, to listen after Newes.

Enter Travers.

L. Bar. My Lord, I over-rode him on the way,
And he is furnish'd with no certainties,
More then he (haply) may retaille from me.

Nor. Now Travers, what good tidings comes fro your

Tr.

Tr. My Lord, Iohn Umfrevill turn'd me backe
With joyfull tydings; and (being better hors'd)
Out-rode me. After him, came spurring hard
A Gentleman (al most fore-spent with speed)
That stopp'd by me, to breath his bloodied horse.
He ask'd the way to Chester: And of him
I did demand what Newes from Shrewsbury:
He told me, that Rebellion had ill lucke,
And that yong Harry Percies Spurre was cold.
With that he gave his able Horse the head,
And bending forwards strooke his able heeles
Against the panting sides of his poore Iade
Up to the Rowell head, and starting so,
He seem'd in running, to devoure the way,
Saying no longer question.

Nor. Ha? Againe:
Said he yong Harry Percies Spurre was cold?
(Of Hot-Spurre, cold-Spurre) that Rebellion,
Had met ill lucke?

L. Bar. My Lord: Ile tell you what,
If my yong Lord your Sonne, have not the day,
Vpon mine Honor, for a silken point
Ile give my Barony: Never talke of it.

Nor. Why should the Gentleman that rode by Travers
Give then such instances of Losse?

L. Bar. Who, he?
He was some hielding Fellow, that had stolne
The Horse he rode-on: and upon my life
Spake at adventure. Looke, here comes more Newes.

Enter Morton.

Nor. Yea, this mans brow, like to a Title-leaf,
Fore-tels the Nature of a Tragicke Volume:
So lookes the Strond, when the Imperious Flood
Hath left a witnes Vsurpation.

Morton, did'st thou come from Shrewsbury?
Nor. I ran from Shrewsbury (my Noble Lord)
Where hatefull death put on his vgly Maske
To fright our party.

Nor. How doth my Sonne, and Brother?
Thou trembl'st; and the whitenesse in thy Cheeke
Is apter then thy Tongue, to tell thy Errand.
Even such a man, so faint, so spiritlesse,
So dull, so dead in looke, so woe-be-gone,
Drew Priams Curtaine, in the dead of night,
And would have told him, Halfe his Troy was burn'd.
But Priams found the Fire, ere he his Tongue:
And I, my Percies death, ere thou report'st it.
This, thou would'st say: Your Sonne did thus, and thus:
Your Brother, thus. So fought the Noble Dowglas,
Stopping my greedy eare, with their bold deeds.
But in the end (to stop mine Eare indeed)
Thou hast a Sigh, to blow away this Praise,
Ending with Brother, Sonne, and all are dead.

Mor. Dowglas is living, and your Brother, yet:
But for my Lord, your Sonne.

No. Why he is dead.
See what a ready tongue Suspition hath;
He that but feares the thing, he would not know,
Hath by Instinct, knowledge from others Eyes,
That what he feard, is chanc'd. Yet speake (Morton)
Tell thou thy Earle, his Divination Lies,
And I will take it, as a sweet Disgrace,
And make thee rich, for doing me such wrong.

Mor. You are too great, to be (by me) gainesaid:

Your Spirit is too true, your Feares too certaine.

Nor. Yet for all this, say not that Percies dead.
I see a strange Confession in thine Eye:
Thou shak'st thy head, and hold'st it Feare, or Sinne,
To speake a truth. If he be slaine, say so:
The Tongue offends not, that reports his death:
And he doth sinne that both belye the dead:
Not he, which sayes the dead is not alive:
Yet the first bringer of unwelcome Newes
Hath but a loosing Office: and his Tongue,
Sound ever after as a fullen Bell
Remembred, knolling a departing Friend.

L. Bar. I cannot thinke (my Lord) your son is dead.

Mor. I am lorry, I should force you to beleve
That, which I would to heaven, I had not seene.
But these mine eyes, saw him in bloody state,
Rend'ring faint quittance (wearied, and out-breath'd)
To Henry Monmouth, whose swift wrath beate downe
The never-daunted Percie to the earth,
From whence (with life) he never more sprung up.
In few, his death (whose spirit lent a fire,
Even to the dullest Peasant in his Campe)
Being bruited once, tooke fire and heate away
From the best temper'd Courage in his Troopes.
For from his Mettle, was his Party steel'd;
Which once in him abated, all the rest
Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy Lead:
And as the Thing, that's heavy in it selfe,
Vpon enforcement, flies with greatest speede,
So did our Men, heavy in Hotspurres losse,
Lend to this weight, such lightnesse with their Feare,
That Arrowes fled not swifter toward their ayme,
Then did our Soldiers (ayming at their safety)
Fly from the field. Then was that Noble Worcester
Too soone ta'ne prisoner: and that furious Scot,
(The bloody Dowglas) whose well-labouring sword
Had three times slaine th' appearance of the King,
Gan vaile his stomacke, and did grace the shame
Of those that turn'd their backs: and in his flight,
Stumbling in Feare, was tooke. The summe of all,
Is, that the King hath wonne: and hath sent out
A speedy power, to encounter you my Lord,
Vnder the Conduct of yong Lancaster
And Westmerland. This is the Newes at full.

Nor. For this, I shall have time enough to mourne.
In Poyson, there is Physicke: and this newes
(Having beene well) that would have made me sicke,
Being sicke, have in some measure, made me well.
And as the Wretch, whose Feaver-weakened joynts,
Like strengthlesse Hindges, buckle under life,
Impatient of his Fit, breakes like a fire
Out of his keepers armes: Even so, my Limbes
(Weak'ned with greefe) being now inrag'd with greefe,
Are thrice themselves. Hence therefore thou nice crutch,
A scaly Gauntlet now, with joynts of Steele
Must glove this hand. And hence thou sickly Quoife,
Thou art a guard too wanton for the head,
Which Princes, flesh'd with Conquest, ayme to hit.
Now binde my Browes with Iron, and approach
The ragged'st houre, that Time and Spight dare bring
To frowne upon th'enrag'd Northumberland.
Let Heaven kisse Earth: now let not Natures hand
Keepe the wilde Flood confin'd: Let Order dye,
And let the world no longer be a stage
To feede Contention in a ling'ring Act:
But let one spirit of the First-borne Caine

Reigne in all bosomes, that each heart being set
On bloody Courtes, the rude Scene may end,
And darknesse be the burier of the dead. (Honor.

L. Bar. Sweet Earle, divorce not wisdom from your

Mor. The lives of all your loving Complices
Leane-on your health, the which if you give-o're
To stormy Passion, must perforce decay.
You cast th' event of Warre (my Noble Lord)
And summ'd the accompt of Chance, before you said
Let us make head: It was your presumize,
That in the dole of blowes, your Son might drop.
You knew he walk'd o're perils, on an edge
More likely to fall in, then to get o're:
You were advis'd his flesh was capeable
Of Wounds, and Scarres; and that his forward Spirit
Would lift him, where most trade of danger rang'd,
Yet did you say go forth: and none of this (Though strongly apprehended) could restraints
The stiffe-borne Action: What hath then befallne?
Or what hath this bold enterprize brought forth,
More then that Being, which was like to be?

L. Bar. We all that are engaged to this losse;
Knew that we ventur'd on such dangerous Seas,
That if we wrought out life, was ten to one:
And yet we ventur'd for the gaine propos'd,
Choak'd the respect of likely perill fear'd,
And since we are o're-set, venture againe.

Come, we will all put forth; Body, and Goods.

Mor. 'Tis more then time: And (my most Noble Lord)

I heare for certaine, and do speake the truth:
The gentle Arch-bishop of Yorke is up
With well appointed Powres: he is a man
Who with a double Surety bindes his Followers.
My Lord (your Sonne) had onely but the Corpses
But shadowes, and the shewes of men to fight.
For that same word (Rebellion) did divide
The action of their bodies, from their soules,
And they did fight with queasinesse, constrain'd
As men drinke Potions; that their Weapons only
Seem'd on our side: but for their Spirits and Soules,
This word (Rebellion) it had froze them up,
As Fish are in a Pond. But now the Bishop
Turnes Insurrection to Religion,
Suppos'd sincere, and holy in his Thoughts:
He's follow'd both with Body, and with Minde:
And doth enlarge his Rising, with the blood
Of faire King Richard, scrap'd from Pomfret stones,
Derives from heaven his Quarrell, and his Cause:
Tels them, he doth bestride a bleeding Land,
Gasping for life, under great Bullingbrooke,
And more, and lesse, do flocke to follow him.

North. I knew of this before. But to speake truth,
This present greefe had wip'd it from my minde.
Go in with me, and counsell every man
The aptest way for safety, and revenge:
Get Posts, and Letters, and make Friends with speed,
Never so few, nor never yet more need. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Falstaffe, and Page.

Fal. Sirra, you giant, what saies the Doct: to my water?

Page. He said sir, the water it selfe was a good healthy water: but for the party that ow'd it, he might have more discaies then he knew for.

Fal. Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at mee: the braine of this foolish compounded Clay-man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter, more then invent, or is invented on me. I am not onely witty my selfe, but the cause that wit is in other men. I doe walke before thee, like a Sow; that hath o'rewhelm'd her Litter, but one. If the Prince put thee into my Service for any other reason, then to let me off, why then I have no judgement. Thou horson Mandrake, thou art fitter to be worne in my cap, then to wait at my heeles.

I was never mann'd with an Agot till now: but I will let you neither in Gold, nor Silver, but in vilde apparell, and send you backe againe to your Maister, for a Jewell. The Inuencall (the Prince your Maister) whose Chin is not yet fledg'd, I will sooner have a beard grow in the Palmes of my hand, then he shall get one on his cheeke: yet he will not sticke to say, his Face is a Face-Royall. Heaven may finish it when he will, it is not a haire amisse yet: he may keepe it still as a Face-Royall, for a Barber shall never earne six pence out of it; and yet he will be crowing, as he had writ man ever since his Father was a Batchellor.
He may keepe his owne Grace, but hee is almost out of mine, I can assure him. What said M. Dumbledon, about the Satten for short Cloake, and Slops?

Page. He said sir, you should procure him better Affurance, then Bardolfe: he would not take his Bond & your he lik'd not the Security.

Fal. Let him bee damn'd like the Glutton, may his Tongue bee hotter, a horson Archibishop, a Rascally porpoorfooth-knave, to beare a Gentleman in hand, and then stand upon Security? The horson smooth-pates do now weare nothing but high shooes, and bunches of Keyes in their girdles: and if a man is through with them in honest Taking-up, then they must stand upon Security: I had as lief they would put Rats-bane in my mouth, as offer to stoppe it with Security. I look'd he should have sent me two and twenty yards of Satten (as I am a Knight) and he sends me Security. Well, he may sleepe in Security, for he hath the horne of Abundance: and the lightnesse of his Wife shines through it, and yet cannot he see, though he have his owne Lanthorne to light him.
Where's Bardolfe?

Page. He's gone into Smithfield to buy your worships a horse.

Fal. I bought him in Paules, and hee'll buy mee a horse in Smithfield. If I could get mee a wife in the Stewes, I were Mann'd, Hors'd, and Wiv'd.

Enter Chiefe Iustice, and Servants.

Page. Sir, heere comes the Nobleman that committed the Prince for striking him; about Bardolfe.

Fal. Wait close, I will not see him.

Ch. Iust. What's he that goes there?

Ser. Falstaffe, and't please your Lordship.

Iust. He that was in question for the Robbery?

Ser. He my Lord, but he hath since done good service at Shrewsbury: and (as I heare) is now going with some Charge, to the Lord John of Lancaster.

Iust. What to Yorke? Call him backe againe.

Ser. Sir John Falstaffe.

Fal. Boy, tell him, I am deafe.

Page. You must speake lowder, my Maister is deafe.

Iust. I am sure he is, to the hearing of any thing good.
Go plucke him by the Elbow, I must speake with him.

Ser. Sir John.

Fal. What? a yong knave and beg? Is there not warres there not employment? Doth not the K. lack subjects: do not the Rebels want Soldiers? Though it be a shame to be on

on any side but one, it is worse shame to begge, then to be on the worst side, were it worse then the name of Rebellion can tell how to make it.

Ser. You mistake me Sir.

Fal. Why sir? Did I say you were an honest man? Setting my Knight-hood, and my Souldier-ship aside, I had lyed in my throat, if had said so.

Ser. I pray you (Sir) then set your Knighthood and your Souldier-ship aside, and give mee leave to tell you, you lye in your throat, if you say I am any other then an honest man.

Fal. I give thee leave to tell me so? I lay a-side that which grows to me? If thou get'st any leave of me, hang me: if thou tak'st leave, thou wer't better be hang'd: you Hunt-counter, hence: Avant.

Ser. Sir, my Lord would speake with you.

Iust. Sir Iohn Falstaffe, a word with you.

Fal. My good Lord: give your Lordship good time of the day. I am glad to see your Lordship abroad: I heard say your Lordship was sicke. I hope your Lordship goes abroad by advise. Your Lordship (though not clean past your youth) hath yet some smack of age in you: some relish of the saltnesse of Time, and I most humbly beseech your Lordship, to have a reverend care of your health.

Iust. Sir Iohn, I sent for you before your Expedition, to Shrewsbury.

Fal. If it please your Lordship, I heare his Majesty is return'd with some discomfort from Wales.

Iust. I talke not of his Majesty: you would not come when I sent for you?

Fal. And I heare moreover, his Highnesse is falne into this same whorson Apoplexie. (you.)

Iust. Well, heaven mend him. I pray let me speak with

Fal. This Apoplexie is (as I take it) a kind of Lethargy, a sleeping of the blood, a horson Tingling.

Iust. What tell you me of it? be it as it is.

Fal. It hath it originall from much greefe; from study and perturbation of the braine. I have read the cause of his effects in Galen. It is a kinde of deafenesse.

Iust. I thinke you are falne into the disease: For you heare not what I say to you.

Fal. Very well (my Lord) very well: rather an't please you) it is the disease of not Listning, the malady of not Marking, that I am troubled withall.

Iust. To punish you by the heeles, would amend the attentio of your cares, & I care no tif I be your Physitian.

Fal. I am as poore as Iob, my Lord; but not so Patient: your Lordship may minister the Potion of imprisonment to me, in respect of Poverty: but how I should bee your Patient, to follow your prescriptions, the wise may make some dram of a scruple, or indeed, a scruple it selfe.

Iust. I sent for you (when there were matters against you for your life) to speake with me.

Fal. As I was then advised by my learned Councill, in the lawes of this Land-service, I did not come.

Iust. Well, the truth is (sir Iohn) you live in great infamy

Fal. He that buckles him in my belt, can't live in lesse.

Iust. Your Meanes is very slender, and your waite great.

Fal. I would it were otherwise: I would my Meanes were greater, and my waite slenderer.

Iust. You have misled the youthfull Prince.

Fal. The yong Prince hath misled mee. I am the Fellow with the great belly, and he my Dogge.

Iust. Well, I am loth to gall a new-heal'd wound: your daies service at Shrewsbury, hath a little gilded over your Nights exploit on Gads-hill. You may thanke the unquiet time, for your quiet o're posting that Action.

Fal. My Lord?

(Wolfe.)

Iust. But since all is wel, keep it so: wake not a sleeping

Fal. To wake a Wolfe, is as bad as to smell a Fox.

Iu. What? you are as a candle, the better part burnt out.

Fal. A Waffell-Candle, my Lord; all Tallow: if I did say of wax, my growth would approve the truth.

Iu. There is not a white haire on your face, but should have his effect of gravity.

Fal. His effect of grauy, grauy, grauy.

Iust. You follow the yong Prince up and downe, like his evill Angell.

Fal. Not so (my Lord) your ill Angell is light: but I hope, he that looks upon mee, will take mee without, weighing: and yet, in some respects I grant, I cannot go: I cannot tell. Vertue is of so little regard in these Costormongers, that true valor is turn'd Beare-heard. Pregnancie is made a Tapster, and hath his quicke wit wasted in giving Recknings: all the other gifts appertinent to man (as the malice of this Age shapes them) are not woorth a Gooseberry. You that are old, consider not the capacities of us that are yong: you measure the heat of our Livers, with the bitternes of your gals: and we that are in the vaward of our youth, I must confesse, are waggess too.

Iust. Do you set downe your name in the scrowle of youth, that are written downe old, with all the Characters of age? Have you not a moist eye? a dry hand? a yellow cheek? a white beard? a decreasing leg? an increasing belly? Is not your voice broken? your winde short? your wit single? and every part about you blasted with Antiquity? and wil you cal your selfe yong? Fy, fy, fy, sir Iohn.

Fal. My Lord, I was borne with a white head, & something a round belly. For my voice, I have lost it with halloving and singing of Anthemes. To approve my youth farther, I will not: the truth is, I am onely old in judgement and understanding, and he that will caper with mee for a thousand Markes, let him lend me the mony, & have at him. For the boxe of th'eare that the Prince gave you, he gave it like a rude Prince, and you tooke it like a sensible Lord. I have checkt him for it, and the yong Lion repents: Marry not in ashes and sacke-cloath, but in new Silke, and old Sacke.

Iust. Wel, heaven send the Prince a better companion.

Fal. Heaven send the Companion a better Prince: I cannot rid my hands of him.

Iust. Well, the King hath sever'd you and Prince Harry, I heare you are going with Lord Iohn of Lancaster, against the Archbishop, and the Earle of Northumberland

Fal. Yes, I thanke your pretty sweet wit for it: but looke you pray, (all you that kisse my Ladie Peace, at home) that our Armies joyn not in a hot day: for if I take but two shirts out with me, and I meane not to sweate extraordinarily: if it bee a hot day, if I brandish any thing but my Bottle, would I might never spit white againe: There is not a dangerous Action can peepe out his head, but I am thrust upon it. Well, I cannot last ever.

Iust. Well, be honest, be honest, and heaven blesse your Expedition.

Fal. Will your Lordship lend mee a thousand pound, to furnish me forth?

Iust. Not a peny, not a peny: you are too impatient to beare crosses. Fare you well. Commend mee to my Cosin Westmerland.

Exu.

Fal. If I do, fillop me with a three-man-Beetle. A man can no more separate Age and Covetousnesse, then he can part yong limbes and litchery: but the Gowt galles the one, and the pox pinches the other ; and so both the Degrees prevent my curses. Boy?

Page. Sir.

Fal. What money is in my purse?

Page. Seven groats, and two pence.

Fal. I can get no remedy against this Consumption of the purse. Borrowing onely lingers, and lingers it out, but the disease is incurable. Go beare this letter to my Lord of Lancaster, this to the Prince, this to the Earle of Westmerland, and this to old Mistris Vrsula, whome I have weekly sworne to marry, since I perceiv'd the first white haire on my chin. About it : you know where to finde me. A pox of this Gowt, or a Gowt of this Poxe: for the one or th'other playes the rogue with my great toe : It is no matter, if I do halt, I have the warres for my colour, and my Pension shall seeme the more reasonable: A good wit will make vse of any thing : I will turne diseases to commodity.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Archbishop, Hastings, Mowbray, and Lord Bardolfe.

Ar. Thus have you heard our causes and know our And my most noble Friends, I pray you all (Means: Speake plainly your opinions of our hopes, And first (Lord Marshall) what say you to it?

Mor. I well allow the occasion of our Armes, But gladly would be better satisfied, How (in our Meanes) we should advance our selves To looke with forehead bold and big enough Upon the Power and puissance of the King.

Hast. Our present Musters grow upon the File To five and twenty thousand men of choice: And our Supplies, live largely in the hope Of great Northumberland, whose bosome burnes With an incensed Fire of Injuries.

L. Bar. The question then (Lord Hastings) standeth thus Whether our present five and twenty thousand May hold-up-head, without Northumberland:

Hast. With him, we may.

L. Bar. I marry, there's the point: But if without him we be thought too feeble, My judgement is, we should not step too farre Till we had his Assistance by the hand. For in a Theame so bloody fac'd, as this, Conjecture, Expectation, and Surmise Of Aydes incertaine, should not be admitted.

Arch. 'Tis very true Lord Bardolfe, for indeed It was yong Hotspurres case, at Shrewsbury.

L. Bar. It was (my Lord) who lin'd himselfe with hope, Eating the ayre, on promise of Supply, Flatt'ring himselfe with Project of a power, Much smaller, then the smallest of his Thoughts, And so with great imagination (Proper to mad men) led his Powers to death, And (winking) leap'd into destruction.

Hast. But (by your leave) it never yet did hurt, To lay downe likely-hoods, and formes of hope.

L. Bar. Yes, if this present quality of warre, Indeed the instant action: a cause on foot, Lives so in hope: As in an early Spring, We see th'appearing buds, which to prove fruite, Hope gives not so much warrant, as Despaire That Frosts will bite the n. When we meane to build, We first surveye the Plot, then draw the Modell,

And when we see the figure of the house, Then must we rate the cost of the Ereccion, Which if we finde out-weighes Ability, What do we then, but draw a-new the Modell In fewer offices? Or at least, desist To builde at all? Much more, in this great worke, (Which is (almost) to plucke a Kingdome downe, And set another up) should we survey The plot of Situation, and the Modell, Consent upon a sure Foundation: Question Surveyors, know our owne estate, How able such a Worke to undergo, To weigh against his Opposite? Or else, We fortifie in Paper, and in Figures, Vsing the Names of men, instead of men: Like one, that drawes the Modell of a house Beyond his power to builde it; who (halfe through) Gives o're, and leaves his part-created Colt A naked subject to the Weeping Clouds, And waste, for churlish Winters tyranny.

Hast. Grant that our hopes (yet likely of faire birth) Should be still-borne: and that we now posselt The utmost man of expectation: I thinke we are a Body strong enough (Even as we are) to equall with the King.

L. Bar. What is the King but five & twenty thousand?

Hast. To us no more: nay not so much Lord Bardolfe. For his divisions (as the Times do braul) Are in three Heads: one Power against the French, And one against Glendower: Perforce a third Must take up us: So is the unfirme King In three divided: and his Coffers found With hollow Poverty, and Emptinesse.

Ar. That he should draw his severall strengths together And come against us in full puissance, Need not be dreaded.

Hast. If he should do so.

He leaves his backe unarm'd, the French, and Welch Baying him at the heeles, never feare that.

L. Bar. Who is it like should lead his Forces hither?

Hast. The Duke of Lancaster, and Westmerland: Against the Welsh himselfe, and Harry Monmouth. But who is substituted 'gainst the French, I have no certaine notice.

Arch. Let us on:

And publish the occasion of our Armes. The Common-wealth is sicke of their owne Choice, Their over-greedy love hath surfetted: An habitation giddy, and unsure Hath he that buildeth on the vulgar heart. O thou fond Many, with what loud applause Did'st thou beate heaven with blessing Bullingbrooke, Before he was, what thou would'st have him be? And being now trimm'd up in thine owne desires, Thou (beastly Feeder) art so full of him, That thou prouok'st thy selfe to cast him up. So, so, (thou common Dogge) did'st thou disgorge Thy glutton-bosome of the Royall Richard, And now thou would'st eate thy dead vomit up, And howl'st to finde it. What trust is in these Times? They, that when Richard liv'd, would have him dye, Are now become enamour'd on his grave. Thou that threw'st dust upon his goodly head When through proud London he came sighing on, After th'admired heeles of Bullingbrooke, Cri'st now, O Earth, yeeld us that King againe,

And

And take thou this( O thoughts of men accur'd)
"Past, and to come seems best; things Present, worst."
Mow. Shall we go draw our numbers, and set on?
Hof. We are Times subjects, and Time bids, be gon.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Hostesse, with two Officers, Fang, and Snare.
Hostesse. Mr. Fang, have you entred the Action?
Fang. It is enter'd.
Hof. Where's your Yeoman? Is it a lustly yeoman?
 Will he stand to it?
Fang. Sirr ha, where's Snare?
Hof. I, I, good M. Snare.
Snare. Heere, heere.
Fang. Snare, we must Arrest Sir John Falstaffe.
Hof. I good M. Snare, I have enter'd him, and all.
Sn. It may chance cost some of us our lives: he wil stab
Hof. Alas the day: take heed of him: he stabd me in mine owne house, and that most beastly: he cares not what mischeefe he doth, if his weapon be out. He will foyne like any divell, he will spare neither man, woman, nor childe.
Fan. If I can close with him, I care not for his thrust.
Hof. No, nor I neither: Ile be at your elbow.
Fang. If I but fitt him once: if he come but within my Vice.
Hof. I am undone with his going: I warrant he is an infinitive thing upon my score. Good M. Fang hold him sure: good M. Snare let him not scape, he comes continuantly to Py Corner (saving your manhoods) to buy a saddle, and hee is indited to dinner to the Lubbars head in Lombardstreet to M. Smoothes the Silkman. I pra'ye since my Exion is enter'd, and my Case so openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his answer: A 100. Mark is a long one, for a poore lone woman to beare: & I have borne, and borne, and borne, and have bin sub'd off, and sub'd-off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. There is no honesty in such dealing, unles a woman should be made an Asse and a Beast, to beare every Knaves wrong. Enter Falstaffe and Bardolfe.
 Yonder he comes, and that arrant Malmesey-Nose Bar-dolfe with him, Do your Offices, do your offices: M. Fang, & M. Snare, do me, do me, do me your Offices.
Fa. How now? whose Mare's dead? what's the matter?
Fang. Sir John, I arrest you, at the suit of Mist. Quickly.
Fal. Away Varlets, draw Bardolfe: Cut me off the Villaines head: throw the Queane in the Channel.
Hof. Throw me in the channell? Ile throw thee there.
 Wilt thou? wilt thou? thou bastardy rogue. Murder, murder, O thou Hony-suckle villaine, wilt thou kill Gods officers, and the Kings? O thou hony-seed Rogue, thou art a hony seed, a Man-queller, and a woman-queller.
Fal. Keep them off, Bardolfe. Fang. A rescu, a rescu-
Hof. Good people bring a rescu. Thou wilt not? thou wilt not? Doe, doe thou Rogue: Doe thou Hempseed.
Fag. Away you Scullion you Rampallian, you Fustil-lian: Ile tucke your Catastrophe. Enter, Ch. Justice.
Just. What's the matter? Keepe the Peace here, ho.
Hof. Good my Lord be good to mee. I beseech you stand to me.
Ch. Ju. How now sir John? What are you brauling here?
 Doth this become your place, your time, and business?
 You should have bene well on your way to Yorke.
 Stand from him Fellow, wherefore hang'st upon him?

Hof. Oh my most worshipfull Lord, and't please your Grace, I am a poore widdow of Eastcheap, and he is arrested at my suit. Ch. Just. For what summe?
Hof. It is more then for some (my Lord) it is for al: al
 I have, he hath eaten me out of house and home: hee hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his: but I will have some of it out againe, or I will ride thee o' Nights, like the Mare.
Fal. I thinke I am aslike to ride the Mare, if I have any vantage of ground, to get up.
Ch. Just. How comes this, Sir John? Fy, what a man of good temper would endure this tempest of exclamation?
 Are you not ashamed to inforce a poore Widdowe to so rough a course, to come by her owne?
Fal. What is the grosse summe that I owe thee?
Hof. Marry (if thou wer't an honest man) thy selfe, & the mony too. Thou didst sweare to mee upon a parcell gilt Goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber at the round table, by a sea-cole fire, on Wednesday in Whitson week, when the Prince brok thy head for lik'ning him to a singing man of Windsor; thou didst sweare to me then (as I was washing thy wound) to marry me, and make me my Lady thy wife. Canst y deny it? Did not goodwife Keech the Butchers wife come in then, and cal me gossip Quickly? comming in to borrow a messe of Vinegar: telling us, she had a good dish of Prawnes: whereby y didst desire to eat some: whereby I told thee they were ill for a greene wound? And didst not thou (when she was gone downe staires) desire me to be no more familiar with such poore people, saying, that ere long they should call me Madam?
 And didst y not kisse me, and bid mee fetch thee 30. s? I put thee now to thy Book-oath, deny it if thou canst?
Fal. My Lord, this is a poore mad soule: and she sayes up & downe the town, that her eldest son is like you. She hath bin in good case, & the truth is, pouerty hath distracted her: but for these foolish Officers, I beseech you, I may have redresse against them.
Just. Sir John, sir John, I am well acquainted with your maner of wrenching the true cause, the fallie way. It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of wordes, that come with such (more then impudent) sawcines from you, can thrust me from a levell consideration, I know you ha' practis'd upon the easie-yeelding spirit of this woman.
Hof. Yes in troth my Lord.
Just. Prethee peace: pay her the debt you owe her, and unpay the villany you have done her: the one you may do with sterling mony, & the other with currant repentance.
Fal. My Lord, I will not undergo this sneape without reply. You call honorable Boldnes, impudent Sawcines:
 I a man will curt'sie, and say nothing, he is vertuous: No, my Lord (your humble duty remebred) I wil not be your futor. I say to you, I desire deliv'rance from these Officers being upon hastily employment in the Kings Affaires.
Just. You speake, as having power to do wrong: But answer in the effect of your Reputation, and satisfie the poore woman.
Fal. Come hither Hostesse. Enter M. Gower.
Ch. Just. Now Maister Gower; What newes?
Gow. The King (my Lord) and Henry Prince of Wales
 Are neere at hand: The rest the Paper telles.
Fal. As I am a Gentleman.
Hof. Nay, you said so before.
Fal. As I am a Gentleman. Come, no more words of it.
Hof. By this Heavenly ground I tread on, I must bee faineto pawne both my Plate, and the Tapistry of my dy-ning Chambers.

Fal. Glasses, glasses, is the onely drinking: and for thy walles a pretty slight Drollery, or the Story of the Prodigal, or the Germane hunting in Water worke, is worth a thousand of these Bed-hangings, and these Flybitten Tapistries. Let it be ten pound (if thou canst.) Come, if it were not for thy humors, there is not a better Wench in England. Go, wash thy face, and draw thy Action: Come, thou must not be in this humour with me, come, I know thou was't set on to this.

Hof. Prethee (Sir Iohn) let it be but twenty Nobles, I am loath to pawne my Plate, in good earnest la.

Fal. Let it alone, and make other shift: you'l be a fool still.

Hof. Well, you shall have it although I pawne my Gowne. I hope you'l come to Supper: You'l pay me altogether?

Fal. Will I live? Go with her, with her: hooke-on, hooke-on.

Hof. Will you have Doll Teave-sheet meet you at supper?

Fal. No more words. Let's have her.

Ch. Inst. I have heard bitter newes.

Fal. What's the newes (my good Lord?)

Ch. Inst. Where lay the King last night?

Mef. At Basingstoke my Lord.

Fal. I hope (my Lord) all's well. What is the newes my Lord?

Ch. In. Come all his Forces backe?

Mef. No: Fifteene hundred Foot, five hundred Horse Are march'd up to my Lord of of Lancaster, Against Northumberland, and the Archbishop.

Fal. Comes the King backe from Wales, my noble L?

Ch. In. You shall have Letters of me presently.

Come go along with me, good M. Gowre.

Fal. My Lord.

Ch. In. What's the matter?

Fal. Maister Gowre, shall I entreate you with me to dinner?

Gow. I must waite upon my good Lord here. I thanke you, good Sir Iohn.

Ch. In. Sir Iohn, you loyter heere too long, being you are to take Souldiers up, in Countries as you go.

Fal. Will you sup with me, Maister Gowre?

Ch. Inst. What foolish Maister taught you these manners, Sir Iohn?

Fal. Maister Gowre, if they become mee not, he was a Foole that taught them mee. This is the right Fencing grace (my Lord) tap for tap, and so part faire.

C. In. Now the Lord lighten thee, thou art a great Foole.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Prince Henry, Pointz, Bardolfe, and Page.

Prin. Trust me, I am exceeding weary.

Poin. Is it come to that? I had thought wearines durst not have attach'd one of so high blood.

Prin. It doth me though it discolours the complexion of my Greatnesse to acknowledge it. Doth it not shew vildely in me, to desire small Beere?

Poin. Why, a Prince should not be so loosely studied, as to remember so weake a Composition.

Prince. Belike then, my Appetite was not Princely got: for (in troth) I do now remember the poore Creature, Small Beere. But indeede these humble considerations make me out of love with my greatnesse. What a disgrace is it to me, to remember thy name? Or to know thy face to morrow? Or to take note how many paire of Silk stockings thou hast? (Viz. these, and those that were thy peach-colour'd ones:) Or to beare the Inventory of thy shirts, as one for superfluity, and one other, for use. But that the Tennis-Court-keeper knowes better then I, for it is a low ebbe of Linnen with thee, when thou keepst not Racket there, as thou hast not doe a great while, because the rest of thy Low Countries, have made a shift to eate up thy Holland.

Poin. How ill it followes, after you have labour'd so hard, you should talke so idly? Tell me how many good yong Princes would do so, their Fathers lying so sicke, as yours is?

Prin. Shall I tell thee one thing, Pointz?

Poin. Yes: and let it be an excellent good thing.

Prin. It shall serve among wittes of no higher breeding then thine.

Poin. Go to: I stand the push of your one thing, that you'l tell.

Prin. Why, I tell thee, it is not meet, that I should be sad now my Father is sicke: albeit I could tell to thee (as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to cal my friend) I could be sad, and sad indeed too.

Poin. Very hardly, upon such a subject.

Prin. Thou think'st me as farre in the Divels Book, as thou, and Falstaffe, for obduracy and persistency. Let the end try the man. But I tell thee, my heart bleeds inwardly, that my Father is so sick: and keeping such vild company as thou art, hath in reason taken from me, all ostentation of sorrow.

Poin. The reason?

Pr. What would'st thou think of me, if I should weep?

Poin. I Would think thee a most Princely hypocrite.

Prin. It would be every mans thought: and thou art a blessed Fellow, to thinke as every man thinkes: never a mans thought in the world, keeps the Rode-way better then thine: every man would think me an Hypocrite indeede. And what accites your most worshipful thought to thinke so?

Poin. Why, because you have beene so lewde, and so much ingrafted to Falstaffe.

Prin. And to thee.

Pointz. Nay, I am well spoken of, I can heare it with mine own eares: the worst that they can say of me is, that I am a second Brother, and that I am a proper Fellowe of my hands: and those two things I confesse I cannot helpe. Look, look, here comes Bardolfe.

Prince. And the Boy that I gave Falstaffe, he had him from me Christian, and see if the fat villain have not transform'd him Ape.

Enter Bardolfe.

Bar. Save your Grace.

Prin. And yours, most Noble Bardolfe.

Poin. Come you pernicious Ass, you bashful Foole, must you be blushing? Wherefore blush you now? what a Maidenly man at Armes are you become? Is it such a matter to get a Pottle-pots Maiden-head?

Page. He call'd me even now (my Lord) through a red Lattice, and I could discerne no part of his face from the window:

window: at last I spy'd his eyes, and me thought he had made two holes in the Ale-wives new Petticoat, and peeped through h.

Prin. Hath not the boy profited?

Bar. Away, you horson upright Rabbet, away.

Page. Away, you rascally Altheas dreame, away.

Prin. Instruct us Boy: what dreame, Boy?

Page. Mary (my Lord) Althea dream'd, she was deliver'd of a Firebrand, and therefore I call him hir dream.

Prince. A Crownes-worth of good Interpretation: There it is, Boy.

Poin. O that this good Blossome could bee kept from Cankers: Well, there is six pence to preserve thee.

Bar. If you do not make him be hang'd among you, the gallows shall be wrong'd.

Prin. And how doth thy Maister, Bardolph?

Bar. Well, my good Lord: he heard of your Graces comming to Towne. There's a Letter for you.

Prin. Deliver'd with good respect: And how doth the Martlemas, your Maister?

Bar. In bodily health Sir.

Poin. Marry, the immortall part needs a Physician: but that moves not him: though that bee sicke, it dyes not.

Prin. I do allow this Wen to be as familiar with me, as my dogge. and he holds his place, for looke you he writes.

Poin. Letter. John Falstaffe Knight: (Every man must know that, as oft as he hath occasion to name himselfe:) Even like those that are kinne to the King, for they never pricke their finger, but they say, there is som of the kings blood spilt. How comes that (sayes he) that takes upon him not to conceive? the answer is as ready as a borrowed cap: I am the Kings poore Cousin, Sir.

Prin. Nay, they will be kin to us, but they will fetch it from Iaphet. But to the Letter: ——— Sir John Falstaffe, Knight, to the Sonne of the King, neereft his Father, Harry Prince of Wales, greeting.

Poin. Why this is a Certificate.

Prin. Peace.

I will imitate the honourable Romaines in brevity.

Poin. Sure he meanes brevity in breath: short-winded. I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and I leave thee. Bee not too familiar with Pointz, for hee misuses thy Favours so much, that he swears thou art to marry his Sister Nell. Repent at idle times as thou maist, and so farewell.

Thine, by yea and no: which is as much as to say, as thou usest him. Iacke Falstaffe with my Familiars:

John with my Brothers and Sister: & Sir John, with all Europe.

My Lord, I will sleepe this Letter in Sack, and make him eate it.

Prin. That's to make him eate twenty of his Words. But do you use me thus Ned? Must I marry your Sister?

Poin. May the Wench have no worse Fortune. But I never said so.

Prin. Well, thus we play the Foole with the time and the spirits of the wife, sit in the clouds, and mocke us: Is your Maister heere in London?

Bar. Yes my Lord.

Prin. Where suppes he? Doth the old Bore, feede in the old Franke?

Bar. At the old place my Lord, in East-cheape.

Prin. What Company?

Prin. Sup any women with him?

Page. None my Lord, but old Mistris Quickly, and M. Doll Teare-sheet.

Prin. What Pagan may that be?

Page. A proper Gentlewoman, Sir, and a Kinswoman of my Maisters.

Prin. Even such Kin, as the Parish Heyfors are to the Towne-Bull?

Shall we steale upon them (Ned) at Supper?

Poin. I am your shadow, my Lord, Ile follow you.

Prin. Sirrha, you boy, and Bardolph, no word to your Maister that I am yet in Towne.

There's for your silence.

Bar. I have no tongue, sir.

Page. And for mine Sir, I will governe it.

Prin. Fare ye well: go.

This Doll Teare-sheet should be some Rode.

Poin. I warrant you, as common as the way betweene S. Albans, and London.

Prin. How might we see Falstaffe bestow himselfe to night, in his true colours, and not our selves be seene?

Poin. Put on two Leather Ierkins, and Aprons, and waite upon him at his Table, like Drawers.

Prin. From a god, to a Bull? A heavy declension: It was Ioves case. From a Prince, to a Prentice, a low transformation, that shall be mine: for in every thing, the purpose must weigh with the folly. Follow me Ned. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Northumberland, his Lady, and Harry Percies Lady.

North. I prethee loving Wife, and gentle Daughter, Give an even way vnto my rough Affaires:

Put not you on the vilage of the Times, And be like them to Percie, troublesome.

Wife. I have given over, I will speake no more, Do what you will: your Wifedome, be your guide.

Nor. Alas (sweet Wife) my Honor is at pawne, And but my going, nothing can redeeme it.

La. Oh yet, for heavens sake, go not to these Warrs; The Time was (Father) when you broke your word,

When you were more endear'd to it, then now, When your owne Percie, when my heart-deere Harry,

Threw many a Northward looke, to see his Father Bring up his Powres: but he did long in vaine.

Who then perswaded you to stay at home? There were two Honors lost; Yours, and your Sonnes.

For Yours, may heavenly glory brighten it:

For His, it sticke upon him, as the Sunne.

In the gray vault of Heaven: and by his Light

Did all the Cheualry of England move

To do brave Acts. He was (indeed) the Glasse

Wherein the Noble-Youth did dresse themselves.

He had no Legges, that practic'd not his Gate:

And speaking thicke (which Nature made his blemish) Became the Accents of the Valiant.

For those that could speake low, and tardily,

Would turne their owne Perfection, to Abuse,

To seeme like him. So that in Speech, in Gate,

In Diet, in Affections of delight,

In Military Rules, Humors of Blood,

He

He was the Marke, and Glasse, Coppy, and Booke,
That fashion'd others. And him, O wondrous him,
O Miracle of Men! Him did you leave
(Second to none) un-seconded by you,
To looke upon the hideous god of Warre,
In dis-advantage, to abide a field,
Where nothing but the sound of Hotsprurs Name
Did seeme defensible: so you left him.
Never, O never doe his Ghost the wrong,
To hold your Honor more precise and nice
With others, then with him. Let them alone:
The Marshall and the Arch-bishop are strong.
Had my sweet Harry had but halfe their Numbers,
To day might I (hanging on Hotsprurs Necke)
Have talk'd of Monmouth's Grave.

North. Beshrew your heart,
(Fairst Daughter) you doe draw my spirits from me,
With new lamenting ancient Over-sights.
But I must goe, and meet with Danger there.
Or it will seeke me in another place,
And finde me worse provided.

Wife. O flye to Scotland,
Till that the Nobles, and the armed Commons,
Have of their Puissance made a litle taste.

Lady. If they get ground, and vantage of the King,
Then joyne you with them, like a Ribbe of Steele,
To make Strength stronger. But, for all our loves,
First let them trye themselves. So did your Sonne;
He was so suffer'd; so came I a Widow:
And never shall have length of Life enough,
To raine upon Remembrance with mine Eyes,
That it may grow, and sprowt, as high as Heaven,
For Recordation to my Noble Husband.

Nor. Come, come, go in with me: 'tis with my Minde
As with the Tyde, swell'd up unto his height,
That makes a still-stand, running neither way.
Faine would I goe to meet the Arch-bishop,
But many thousand Reasons hold me backe.
I will resolve for Scotland: there am I,
Till Time and Vantage crave my company. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter two Drawers

1. Drawer. What hast thou brought there? Apple-Iohns? Thou know'st Sir Iohn cannot endure an Apple-Iohn.

2. Draw. Thou say'st true: the Prince once set a Dish of Apple-Iohns before him, and told him there were five more Sir Iohns: and, putting off his Hat, said, I will now take my leave of these fixe drie, round, old-wither'd Knights. It anger'd him to the heart: but hee hath forgot that.

1. Draw. Why then cover, and set them downe: and see if thou canst finde out Sneakes Noyse; Mistris Tearesheet would faine have some Musique.

2. Draw. Sirrha, heere will be the Prince, and Maister Points, anon: and they will put on two of our Ierkins, and Aprons, and Sir Iohn must not know of it: Bardolph hath brought word.

1. Draw. Then here will be old Uris: it will be an excellent stratagem.

2. Draw. Ile see if I can finde out Sneake. Exit.

Enter Hostesse, and Dol.

Host. Sweet-heart, me thinkes now you are in an excellent good temperality: your Pulsfidge beates as extraordinarily, as heart would desire; and your Colour (I warrant you) is as red as any Rose: But you have drunk too much Canaries, and that's a marvellous searching Wine; and it perfumes the blood, ere we can say what's this. How doe you now?

Dol. Better then I was: Hem.

Host. Why that was well said: A good heart's worth Gold. Looke, here comes Sir Iohn.

Enter Falstaffe.

Falst. When Arthur first in Court--(empty the Iordan) and was a worthy King: How now Mistris Dol.

Host. Sick of a Calme: yea, good-footh.

Fal. So is all her Sect: if they bee once in a Calme, they are sick.

Dol. You muddy Rascall, is that all the comfort you give me?

Fal. You make fat Rascalls, Mistris Dol.

Dol. I make them: Gluttony and Diseases make them, I make them not.

Fal. If the Cooke make the Gluttony, you helpe to make the Diseases (Dol) we catch of you (Dol) we catch of you: Grant that, my poore Vertue, grant that.

Dol. I marry, our Chaynes, and our Jewels.

Falst. Your Brooches, Pearles, and Owches: For to serve bravely, is to come halting off: you know, to come off the Breach, with his Pike bent bravely, and to Surgery bravely; to venture upon the charg'd-Chambers bravely.

Host. Why this is the olde fashion: you two never meete, but you fall to soine discord: you are both (in good troth) as Rheumatike as two drie Tostes, you cannot one beare with anothers Confirmities. What the good-yere? One must beare, and that must bee you: you are the weaker Vessell, as they say, the emptier Vessell.

Dol. Can a weake emptie Vessell beare such a huge full Hogs-head? There's a whole Marchants Venture of Burdeaux-Stuffe in him: you have not seene a Hulke better stufft in the Hold. Come, Ile be friends with thee Iacke: Thou art going to the Warres, and whether I shall ever see thee againe, or no, there is no body cares.

Enter Drawer.

Draw. Sir, Ancient Pistoll is below, and would speake with you.

Dol. Hang him, swaggering Rascall, let him not come hither: it is the foule-mouth'd Rogue in England.

Host. If hee swagger, let him not come here: I must live amongst my Neighbors, Ile no Swaggers: I am in good name, and fame, with the very best: shut the doore, there comes no Swaggers heere: I have not liv'd all this while, to have swaggering now: shut the doore, I pray you.

Fal. Do'st thou heare, Hostesse?

Host. Pray you pacifie your self (Sir Iohn) there comes no Swaggers heere.

Fal. Do'st

Falst. Do'st thou heare? it is mine Ancient.

Hof. Tilly-fally (Sir Iohn) never tell me, your ancient Swaggerer comes not in my doores. I was before Master Tisick the Deputy, the other day: and as hee said to mee, it was no longer agoe then Wednesday last: Neighbour Quickly (sayes hee;) Maister Dombe, our Minister, was by then: Neighbour Quickly (sayes hee) receive those that are Civill; for (sayth hee) you are in an ill Name: now hee said so, I can tell whereupon: for (sayes hee) you are an honest Woman, and well thought on; therefore take heede what Guests you receive: Receive (sayes hee) no swaggering Companions. There comes none heere. You would blesse you to heare what hee said. No, Ile no Swaggerers.

Falst. Hee's no Swaggerer (Hofesse): a tame Cheater, hee: you may stroake him as gently, as a Puppy Greyhound: hee will not swagger with a Barbary Henne, if her feathers turne backe in any shew of resistance. Call him up (Drawer.)

Hof. Cheater, call you him? I will barre no honest man my haufe, nor no Cheater. but I do not love swaggering: I am the worfe when one sayes, swagger: Feele Maisters, how I shake: looke you, I warrant you.

Dol. So you doe, Hofesse.

Hof. Doe I? yea, in very truth doe I, if it were an Apen Lease: I cannot abide Swaggerers.

Enter Pistol, and Bardolph and his Boy.

Pist. 'Save you, Sir Iohn.

Falst. Welcome Ancient Pistol. Here (Pistol) I charge you with a Cup of Sacke: do you discharge upon mine Hofesse.

Pist. I will discharge upon her (Sir Iohn) with two Bullets.

Falst. She is Pistoll-prooffe (Sir) you shall hardly offend her.

Hof. Come, Ile drinke no Prooffes, nor no Bullets: I will drinke no more then will doe me good, for no mans pleasure, I.

Pist. Then to you (Mistris Dorothy) I will charge you.

Dol. Charge me? I scorne you (icury Companion) what? you poore, base, rascally, cheating, lacke-Linnen-Mate: away you mouldy Rogue, away, I am meat for your Master.

Pist. I know you, Mistris Dorothy.

Dol. Away you Cut-purse Rascall, you filthy Bung, away: By this Wine, Ile thrust my Knife in your mouldy Chappes, if you play the sawcy Cuttle with me. Away you Bottle-Ale Rascall, you Basket-hilt stale Ingler, you. Since when, I pray you, Sir? what, with two Points on your shoulder? much.

Pist. I will murder your Ruffe, for this.

Hof. No, good Captaine Pistol: not heere, sweete Captaine.

Dol. Captaine? thou abhominable damn'd Cheater, art thou not asham'd to be call'd Captaine? If Captaines were of my minde, they would trunchion you out, for taking their Names upon you, before you have earn'd the. You a Captaine? you slave, for what? for tearing a poore Whores Ruffe in a Bawdy-house? Hee a Captaine? hang him Rogue, hee lives upon mouldy stew'd-Pruines, and dry'd Cakes. A Captaine? These Villaines will make the word Captaine odious: Therefore Captaines had neede looke to it.

Bard. Pray thee go downe, good Ancient.

Falst. Hearke thee hither, Mistris Dol.

Pist. Not I: I tell thee what, Corporall Bardolph, I could teare her: Ile be reveng'd on her.

Pist. Ile see her damn'd first: to Pluto's damn'd Lake, to the Infernall Deepe, where Erebus and Tortures vilde also. Hold Hooke and Line; say I: Downe; downe Dogges, downe Fates: have wee not Hiren here?

Hof. Good Captaine Peefel be quiet, it is very late: I beseeke you now, aggravate your Choler.

Pist. These be good Humors indeede. Shall Packe-Horfes, and hollow-pamper'd Iades of Asia, which cannot goe but thirty miles a day, compare with Cesar, and with Caniballs, and Troian Greekes? nay, rather damne them with King Cerberus, and let the Welkin roare: shal wee fall foule for Toyes?

Hof. By my troth Captaine, these are very bitter words.

Bard. Be gone, good Ancient: this will grow to a Brawle anon.

Pist. Die men, like Dogges; give Crownes like Pinnes: Have wee not Hiren here?

Hof. On my word (Captaine) there's none such here. What the good-yere, doe you thinke I would denie her? I pray be quiet.

Pist. Then feed, and be fat (my faire Calipolis.) Come, give me some Sack, Si fortune me tormente, sperato me contente. Feare wee broad-sides? No, let the Fiend give fire: Give me some Sacke: and Sweet-heart lye thou there: Come wee to full Points here; and are cetera's no-thing?

Fal. Pistol, I would be quiet.

Pist. Sweet Knight, kisse thy Neaffe: what? wee have seene the seven Starres.

Dol. Thrust him downe stayres, I cannot endure such a Fustian Rascall.

Pist. Thrust him downe stayres? know we not Galloway Nagges?

Fal. Quoit him downe (Bardolph) like a shove-groat shilling; nay, if hee doe nothing but speake nothing, hee shall be nothing here.

Bard. Come, get you downe stayres.

Pist. What? shall wee have Incision? shall wee embrew? then Death rocke me asleepe, abridge my doleful dayes: why then let grievous, gastly, gaping Wounds, untwind'd the Sisters three: Come Atropos, I say.

Hof. Heere's good stutte toward.

Fal. Give me my Rapier, Boy.

Dol. I prethee lacke, I prethee doe not draw.

Fal. Get you downe stayres.

Hof. Here's a goodly tumult: Ile forswear keeping house, before Ile be in these tirrits, and frights. So: Murder I warrant now. Alas, alas put up your naked Weapons, put up your naked Weapons.

Dol. I prethee lack be quiet, the Rascall is gone: ah, you whorson little valiant Villaine, you.

Hof. Are you not hurt, i'th' Groyn? me thought hee made a shrewd Thrust at your Belly.

Fal. Have you turn'd him out of doores?

Bard. Yes Sir the Rascall's drunke: you have hurt him (Sir) in the shoulder.

Fal. A Rascall to brave me.

Dol. Ah, you sweet little Rogue, you: alas, poore Ape, how thou swear'st? Come, let me wipe thy Face: Come on, you whorson Chops: Ah Rogue, I love thee: Thon art

art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamemnon; and tenne times better then the nine Worthies : ah Villaine.

Fal. A rascally Slave, I will tosse the Rogue in a Blanket.

Dol. Doe, if thou dar'st for thy heart : if thou doo'st, Ile canvas thee betweene a paire of Sheetes.

Enter Musique.

Pag. The Musique is come, Sir.

Fal. Let them play ; play Sirs. Sit on my Knee, Dol. A Rascall, bragging Slave : the Rogue fled from me like Quick-silver.

Dol. And thou followd'st him like a Church : thou whorson little tydie Bartholmew Bore-pigge, when wilt thou leave fighting on dayes, and foyning on nights, and begin to patch up thine old Body for Heaven?

Enter the Prince and Poines disguis'd.

Fal. Peace (good Dol.) doe not speake like a Deaths-head : doe not bid me remember mine end.

Dol. Sirrha, what humor is the Prince of?

Fal. A good shallow young fellow : hee would have made a good Pantler, hee would have chipp'd Bread well.

Dol. They say Poines hath a good Wit.

Fal. Hee a good Wit? hang him Baboone, his Wit is as thicke as Tewksbury Mustard : there is no more conceit in him, then is in a Mallet.

Dol. Why doth the Prince love him so then?

Fal. Because their Legges are both of a bignesse : and hee playes at Quoits well, and eates Conger and Fennell, and drinckes off Candles ends for Flap-dragons, and rides the wild-Mare with the Boyes, and jumpes upon Ioyndstooles, and sweares with a good grace, and weares his Boot very smooth, like unto the Signe of the Legge, and breeds no bate with telling of discrete stories, and such other Gamboll faculties hee hath, that shewa weake Minde, and an able Body, for the which the Prince admits him; for the Prince himselve is such another : the weight of an hayre will turne the Scales betweene their Flabber-de-pois.

Prince. Would not this Nave of a Wheele have his Eares cut off?

Poin. Let us beate him before his Whore.

Prin. Looke, if the wither'd Elder hath not his Poll claw'd like a Parrot.

Poin. Is it not strange, that Desire should so many yeeres out-live performance?

Fal. Kisse me Dol.

Prin. Saturne and Venus this yeere in Conjunction? What sayes the Almanack to that?

Poin. And looke whether the fiery Trigon, his Man, be not lisping to his Maisters old Tables, his Note-Book, his Councell-keeper?

Fal. Thou do'st give me flatt'ring Buffes.

Dol. Nay truly, I kisse thee with a most constant heart.

Fal. I am old, I am old.

Dol. I love thee better, then I love ere a scurvy young Boy of them all.

Fal. What Stuffle wilt thou have a Kirtle of? I shall receive Money on Thursday : thou shalt have a Cappe to morrow. A merry Song, come : it growes late, wee will to to Bed. Thou wilt forget me, when I am gone.

Dol. Thou wilt set me a weeping, if thou say'st for prove that ever I dresse my selfe handsome, till thy returne : well, hearken the end.

Fal. Some Sack, Francis.

Prin. Poin. Anon, anon, Sir.

Fal. Ha? a Bastard Sonne of the Kings? And art not thou Poines, his Brother?

Prin. Why thou Globe of sinfull Continents, what a Life do'st thou leade?

Fal. A better then thou : I am a Gentleman, thou art a Drawer.

Prin. Very true, Sir : and I come to draw you out by the Eares.

Host. Oh, the Lord preserve thy good Grace : Welcome to London. Now Heaven blesse that sweet Face of thine : what, are you come from Wales?

Fal. Thou whorson mad Compound of Majesty : by this light Flesh, and corrupt Blood, thou art welcome.

Dol. How? you fat Foole, I scorne you.

Poin. My Lord, hee will drive you out of your revenge, and turne all to a merriment, if you take not the heat.

Prin. You whorson Candle-myne you, how vildly did you speake of me even now, before this honest, vertuous civil Gentlewoman?

Host. Blessing on your good heart, and so shee is by my troth.

Fal. Didst thou heare me?

Prince. Yes : and you knew me, as you did when you ranne away by Gads-hill : you knew I was at your back, and spoke it on purpose, to try my patience.

Fal. No, no ; no : not so : I did not thinke, thou wast within hearing.

Prin. I shall drive you then to confesse the wilfull abuse, and then I know how to handle you.

Fal. No abuse (Hall) on mine Honor, no abuse,

Prince. Not to dispraise me? and call me Pantler, and Bread-chopper, and I know not what?

Fal. No abuse (Hal.)

Poin. No abuse?

Fal. No abuse (Ned) in the World : honest Ned none. I disprays'd him before the Wicked, that the Wicked might not fall in love with him : In which doing, I have done the part of a carefull Friend, and a true Subject, and thy Father is to give me thankses for it. No abuse (Hall) none (Ned) none ; no Boyes, none.

Prince. See now whether pure Feare, and entire Cowardise, doth not make thee wrong this vertuous Gentlewoman, to close with us? Is shee of the Wicked? Is thine Hostesse heere, of the Wicked? Or is the Boy of the Wickd? Or honest Bardolph (whose Zeale burnes in his Nose) of the Wicked?

Poin. Answer thou dead Elme, answere.

Fal. The Fiend hath prickt downe Bardolph irrecoverable, and his Face is Lucifers Privy-Kitchin, where hee doth nothing but rost Mault - Wormes : for the Boy, there is a good Angell about him, but the Devill out-bids him too.

Prin. For the Women?

Fal. For one of them, shee is in Hell already, and burnes poore Soules : for the other, I owe her Money ; and whether shee bee damn'd for that, I know not.

Host. No, I warrant you.

Fal. No,

Pal. No. I thinke thou art not : I thinke thou art quit for that. Marry, there is another Indictment upon thee, for suffering flesh to bee eaten in thy house, contrary to the Law, for the which I thinke thou wilt howle.

Hof. All Victuallers do so : What is a Ioynt of Mutton, or two, in a whole Lent?

Prince. You, Gentlewoman.

Dol. What sayes your Grace?

Falst. His Grace sayes that, which his flesh rebels against.

Hof. Who knocks so lowd at doore ? Looke to the doore there, Francis?

Enter Peto.

Priv. Peto, how now? what newes?

Peto. The King, your Father, is at Westminster, And there are twenty weake and wearied Postes, Come from the North: and as I came along, I met, and over-tooke a dozen Captaines, Bare-headed, sweating, knocking at the Tavernes, And asking every one for Sir John Falstaffe.

Prin. By Heaven (Poines) I feele me much to blame, So idly to prophane the precious time, When Tempest of Commotion, like the South, Borne with black Vapour, doth begin to melt, And drop upon our bare vnarmed heads.

Give me my Sword, and Cloake:

Falstaffe, good night.

Exit.

Falst. Now comes in the sweetest Morfell of the night, and wee must hence, and leave it unpickt. More knocking at the doore? How now? what's the matter?

Bard. You must away to Court, Sir, presently, A dozen Captaines stay at doore for you.

Falst. Pay the Multitians, Sirra: farewell Hostesse, farewell Dol. You see (my good Wenches) how men of Merit are sought after: the undeserver may sleepe, when the man of Action is call'd on. Farewell good Wenches: if I be not sent away poste, I will see you againe, ere I goe.

Dol. I cannot speake: if my heart bee not ready to burst-Well (iweete Iacke) have a care of thy selfe.

Falst. Farewell, farewell.

Exit.

Hof. Well, fare thee well: I have knowne thee these twenty nine yeeres, come Pescod-time: but an honeste, and truer-hearted man-Well, fare thee well.

Bard. Mistris Teare-sheet.

Hof. What's the matter?

Bard. Bid Mistris Teare-sheet come to my Master.

Hof. Oh runne Dol, runne: runne, good Dol.

Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

King. Goe, call the Earles of Surrey, and of Warwick: When they come, bid them ore-reade these Letters, And well consider of them: make good speed. Exit.

How many thousand of my poorest Subjects Are at this howre asleepe? O Sleepe, O gentle Sleepe, Natures soft Nurse, how have I frighted thee, That thou no more wilt weigh my eye-lids downe, And sleepe my Sences in Forgetfulnesse? Why rather (Sleepe) lyeest thou in smoaky Cribes, Vpon uneasie Pallads stretching thee, And huiht with bussing Night, flyes to thy slumber, Then in the perfum'd Chambers of the Great? Vnder the Canopies of costly State, And lull'd with sounds of sweetest Melody? O thou dull god, why lyeest thou with the vilde, In loathsome Beds, and leav'st the Kingly Couch, A watch-case, or a common Larum-Bell? Wilt thou, upon the high and giddy Mast, Seale up the Ship-boyes Eyes, and rock his Braines, In Cradle of the rude imperious Surge, And in the visitation of the Windes, Who take the Russian Billowes by the top, Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging them With deaf'ning Clamors in the slipp'ry Clouds, That with the hurley, Death it selfe awakes? Canst thou (O partiall Sleepe) give thy Repose To the wet Sea-Boy, in an houre so rude: And in the calmest, and most stillest Night, With all appliances, and meanes to boote, Deny it to a King? Then happy Lowe, lye downe, Vneasie lyes the Head, that weares a Crowne.

Enter Warwicke and Surrey.

War. Many good-morrowes to your Majesty.

King. Is it good-morrow, Lords?

War. 'Tis One a Clock, and past.

King. Why then good-morrow to you all (my Lords:) Have you read o're the Letters that I sent you?

Uvar. We have (my Liege.)

King. Then you perceive the Body of our Kingdome, How foule it is: what ranke Diseases grow, And with what danger, neere the Heart of it?

Uvar. It is but as a Body, yet distemper'd, Which to his former strength may be restor'd, With good advice, and little Medicine: My Lord Northumberland will soone be cool'd.

King. Oh Heauen, that one might read the Book of Fate, And see the revolution of the Times Make Mountaines leuell, and the Continent (Weary of solide firmenesse) melt it selfe Into the Sea: and other Times, to see The beachy Girdle of the Ocean

Too wide for Neptunes hippes; how Chances mocks And Changes fill the Cuppe of Alteration With divers Liquors. 'Tis not tenne yeeres gone, Since Richard, and Northumberland, great friends, Did feast together; and in two yeeres after, Were they at Warres. It is but eight yeeres since, This Rercie was the man, neere my Soule; Wholike a Brother, toyl'd in my Affaires, And layd his Love and Life under my foot: Yea, for my sake, even to the eyes of Richard Gave him defiance. But which of you was by (You Cousin Nevil, as I may remember) When Richard, with his Eye, brim-full of Teares; (Then check'd, and rated by Northumberland) Did speake these words (now prov'd a Prophecie:) Northumberland, thou Ladder, by the which

My

My Cousin Bullingbrooke ascends my Throne:
(Though then, Heaven knowes, I had no such intent,
But that necessity so bow'd the State,
That I and Greatnesse were compell'd to kisse:)
The Time shall come (thus did hee follow it)
The Time will come, that foule Sinne gathering head, Shall breake into Corruption: so went on,
Fore-telling this same Times Condition,
And the division of our Amitie.

War. There is a History in all mens Lives,
Figuring the nature of the Times deceas'd:
The which observ'd, a man may prophecie
With a neere aime, of the maine chance of things,
As yet not come to Life, which in their Seeds
And weake beginnings lye entreaured:
Such things become the Hatch and Brood of Time;
And by the necessary forme of this,
King Richard might create a perfect guesse,
That great Northumberland, then falle to him,
Would of that Seed, grow to a greater falsenesse,
Which should not finde a ground to roote upon,
Vnlesse on you.

King. Are these things then Necessities?
Then let us meete them like Necessities;
And that same word, even now cryes out on us:
They say, the Bishop and Northumberland
Are fifty thousand strong.

War. It cannot be (my Lord:)
Rumor doth double, like the Voice, and Eccho,
The numbers of the feared. Please it your Grace
To goe to bed, upon my Life (my Lord)
The Pow'rs that you already have sent forth,
Shall brings this Prize in very easily.
To comfort you the more, I have receiv'd
A certaine instance, that Glendour is dead.
Your Majesty hath bene this fort-night ill,
And these unseason'd howres perforce must adde
Vnto your Sicknesse.

King. I will take your counsaile:
And were these inward Warres once out of hand,
Wee would (deare Lords) unto the Holy-Land.

Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Shallow and Silence: with Mouldy, Shadow, Wart, Feeble, Bull-calf.

Shal. Come-on, come-on, come-on: give mee your Hand, Sir, give mee your Hand, Sir: an early stirrer, by the Rood. And how doth my good Cousin Silence?

Sil. Good-morrow, good Cousin Shallow.

Shal. And how doth my Cousin, your Bed-fellow? and your fairest Daughter, and mine, my God-Daughter
Ellen?

Sil. Alas, a blacke Ouzell (Cousin Shallow.)

Shal. By yea and nay, Sir, I dare say my Cousin William is become a good Scholler? hee is at Oxford still, is hee not?

Sil. Indeepe Sir, to my cost.

Shal. Hee must then to the Innes of Court shortly: I was once of Clements Inne; where (I thinke) they will talke of mad Shallow yet.

Sil. You were call'd lusty Shallow then (Cousin.)

Shal. I was call'd any thing: and I would have done any thing indeede too, and roundly too. There was I, and little John Deis of Staffordshire, and blacke George Bar, and Francis Pick-bone, and Will Squele a Cot-fal-man, you had not foure such Swindge-bucklers in all the Innes of Court againe: And I may say to you, wee knew where the Bona-Roba's were, and had the best of them all at commandement. Then was Lake Falstaffe (now Sir John) a Boy, and Page to Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Nor- folke.

Sil. This Sir John (Cousin) that comes hither anon about Souldiers?

Shal. The same Sir John, the very same: I saw him breake Schoggan's Head at the Court-Gate, when he was a Crack, not thus high: and the very same day did I fight with one Sampson Stock-fish, a Fruiterer, behinde Greys- Inne. Oh the mad dayes that I have spent! and to see how many of mine olde Acquaintance are dead?

Sil. Wee shall all follow (Cousin.)

Shal. Certaine: 'tis certaine: very sure, verie sure:
Death is certaine to all, all shall dye. How a good Yoke of Bullocks at Stamford Faire?

Sil. Truly Cousin, I was not there.

Shal. Death is certaine. Is old Double of your Towne living yet?

Sil. Dead, Sir.

Shal. Dead? See, see: hee drew a good Bow: and dead? hee shot a fine shoote. John of Gaunt loved him well, and betted much Money on his head. Dead? hee would have clapt in the Clowt at Twelve-score, and carryed you a fore-hand Shaft at foureteene, and foureteene and a halfe, that it would have done a mans heart good to see. How a score of Ewes now?

Sil. Thereafter as they be: a score of good Ewes may be worth tenne pounds.

Shal. And is old Double dead?

Enter Bardolph and his Boy.

Sil. Heere come two of Sir John Falstaffes Men (as I thinke.)

Shal. Good-morrow, honest Gentlemen.

Bard. I beseech you, which is Iustice Shallow?

Shal. I am Robert Shallow (Sir) a poore Esquire of this County, and one of the Kings Iustices of the Peace:
What is your good pleasure with me?

Bard. My Captaine (Sir) commends him to you: my Captaine, Sir John Falstaffe: a tall Gentleman, and a most gallant Leader.

Shal. Hee greetes me well: (Sir) I knew him a good Back-Sword-man. How doth the good Knight? may I aske, how my Lady his Wife doth?

Bard. Sir, pardon: a Souldier is better accommodated, then with a Wife.

Shal. It is well said, Sir; and it is well said, indeede, too:
Better accommodated? it is good, yea indeede is it: good phrases are surely, and every where very commendable.
Accommodated, it comes of Accommodo: very good, a good Phrase.

Bard. Pardon, Sir, I have heard the word. Phrase call you it? by this Day, I know not the Phrase: but I will maintaine the Word with my Sword, to bee a Souldier-like Word, and a Word of exceeding good Command. Accommodated: that is, when a man
(as they say) accommodated: or, when a man is, being whereby whereby he thought to be accommodated, which is an excellent thing.

Enter Falstaffe.

Shal. It is very iust: Looke, heere comes good Sir John. Give me your hand, give me your Worships good hand: Trust me, you looke well: and beare your yeeres very well. Welcome, good Sir John.

Falst. I am glad to see you well, good Master Robert Shallow: Master Sure-card as I thinke?

Shal. No sir John, it is my Cousin Silence: in Commission with me.

Falst. Good Master Silence, it well befits you should be of the peace.

Sil. Your good Worship is welcome.

Falst. Eye, this is hot weather (Gentlemen) have you provided me heere halfe a dozen of sufficient men?

Shal. Marry have we sir: Will you sit?

Falst. Let me see them, I beseech you.

Shal. Where's the Roll? Where's the Roll? Where's the Roll? Let me see, let me see, let me see: so, so, so, so: yea marry Sir Raphe Mouldy: let them appeare as I call: let them doe so, let them doe so: Let me see, Where is Mouldy?

Moul. Heere, if it please you.

Shal. What thinke you (Sir John) a good limb'd fellow: yong, strong, and of good friends.

Falst. Is thy name Mouldy?

Moul. Yea, if it please you.

Falst. 'Tis the more time thou wert us'd.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha, most excellent. Things that are mouldy, lacke use: very singular good. Well said Sir John, very well said.

Falst. Pricke him.

Moul. I was prickt well enough before, if you could have let me alone: my old Dame will be undone now, for one to doe her Husbandry, and her Drudgery; you need not to have prickt me, there are other men fitter to goe out then I.

Falst. Goe too: peace Mouldy, you shall goe. Mouldy, it is time you were spent.

Moul. Spent?

Shal. Peace, fellow, peace; stand aside: Know you where you are? For the other sir John: Let me see: Sir Shadow.

Falst. I marry, let me have him to sit under: he's like to be a cold souldier.

Shal. Where's Shadow.

Shad. Heere sir.

Falst. Shadow, whose sonne art thou?

Shad. My Mothers sonne, Sir.

Falst. Thy Mothers sonne: like enough, and thy Fathers shadow: so the sonne of the Female, is the shadow of the Male: it is often so indeed, but not of the fathers substance.

Shal. Doe you like him, sir John?

Falst. Shadow will serve for Summer: pricke him: For we have a number of shadowes to fill up the Muster-Booke.

Shal. Thomas Wart.

Falst. Where's he?

Wart. Heere sir.

Falst. Is thy name Wart?

Wart. Yea sir.

Falst. Thou art a very ragged Wart.

Shal. Shall I pricke him downe, Sir John?

Falst. It were superfluous: for his apparrell is built upon his backe, and the whole frame stands upon pinnes: pricke him no more.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha, you can doe it sir: you can doe it: I commend you well.

Francis Feeble.

Feeble. Heere sir.

Shal. What Trade art thou Feeble?

Feeble. A Womans Taylor sir.

Shal. Shall I pricke him, sir?

Falst. You may:

But if he had beene a mans Taylor, he would have prick'd you. Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemies Battaille, as thou hast done in a Womans petticoate?

Feeble. I will doe my good will sir, you can have no more.

Falst. Well said, good Womans Tailor: Well sayde Couragious Feeble: thou wilt be as valiant as the wrathfull Dove, or most magnanimous Moufe. Pricke the womans Taylour well Master Shallow, deepe Master Shallow.

Feeble. I would Wart might have gone sir;

Falst. I would thou wert a mans Tailor, that thou might'st mend him, and make him fit to goe. I cannot put him to a private souldier, that is the Leader of so many thousands. Let that suffice, most Forcible Feeble.

Feeble. It shall suffice.

Falst. I am bound to thee, reverend Feeble. Who is the next?

Shal. Peter Bulcalse of the Greene.

Falst. Yea marry, let us see Bulcalse.

Bul. Heere sir.

Falst. Trust me, a likely Fellow. Come, pricke me Bulcalse till he roare againe.

Bul. Oh, good my Lord Captaine.

Falst. What? do'st thou roare before th'art prickt.

Bul. Oh sir, I am a diseased man.

Falst. What disease hast thou?

Bul. A whorson cold sir, a cough sir, which I caught with Ringing in the Kings affayres, upon his Coronation day, sir.

Falst. Come, thou shalt goe to the Warres in a Gowne: we will have away thy Cold, and I will take such order that thy friends shall ring for thee. Is heere all?

Shal. There is two more called then your number: you must have but foure heere sir, and so I pray you goe in with me to dinner.

Falst. Come, I will goe drinke with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. I am glad to see you in good troth, Master Shallow.

Shal. O sir John, doe you remember since we lay all night in the Winde-mill, in Saint Georges Field?

Falst. No more of that good Master Shallow: No more of that.

Shal. Ha? it was a merry night. And is Iane Night-worke alive?

Falst. She lives, Master Shallow.

Shal. She never could away with me.

Falst. Never, never: she would alwayes say she could not abide Master Shallow.

Shal. I could anger her to the heart: she was then a Bona-Roba. Doth she hold her owne well?

Falst. Old, old, Master Shallow.

Shal. Nay, she must be old, she cannot choose but be old:

old : certaine she's old : and had Robin Night-worke, by old Night-worke, before I came to Clements Inne.

Sil. That's fifty five yeeres agoe.

Shal. Hah, Cousin Silence, that thou hadst seene that, that this Knight and I have seene : hah, Sir John, said I well?

Falst. We have heard the Chymes at mid-night, Master Shallow.

Shal. That we have, that we have ; in faith, Sir John, we have : our watch-world was, Hem-Boyes. Come, let's to Dinner ; come, let's to Dinner : Oh the dayes that we have seene. Come, come.

Bul. Good Master Corporate Bardolph, stand my friend, and heere is foure Harry tenne shillings in French Crownes for you : in very truth, sir, I had as lief be hang'd sir, as goe? and yet, for mine owne part, sir, I doe not care, but rather, because I am unwilling, and for mine owne part, have a desire to stay with my friends : else, sir, I did not care, for mine owne part, so much.

Bar. Goe-too : stand aside.

Moul. And good Master Corporall Captaine, for my old Dames sake, stand my friend : she hath no body to doe any thing about her, when I am gone : and she is old and cannot helpe her selfe : you shall have forty, sir.

Bard. Go-too : stand aside.

Feeble. I care not, a man can dye but once : we owe a death. I will never beare a base mind : if it be my destiny, so : if it be not, so : no man is too good to serve his Prince : and let it goe which way it will, he that dies this yeere, is quit for the next.

Bard. Well said, thou art a good fellow.

Feebl. Nay, I will beare no base mind.

Falst. Come sir, which men shall I have?

Shal. Foure of which you please.

Bard. Sir, a word with you : I have three pound, to free Moully and Bull-calfe,

Falst. Go-too : well.

Shal. Come, sir John which foure will you have?

Falst. Doe you chuse for me.

Shal. Marry then, Moully, Bull-calfe, Feeble, and Shallow.

Falst. Moully, and Bull-calfe : for you Moully, stay at home, till you are past service : and for your part, Bull-calfe, grow till you come unto it : I will none of you.

Shal. Sir John, Sir John, doe not your selfe wrong, they are your likeliest men, and I would have you serv'd with the best.

Falst. Will you tell me (Master Shallow) how to chuse a man? Care I for the Limbe, the Thewes, the stature, bulke, and big assemblance of a man? give me the spirit (Master Shallow.) Where's Wart? you see what a ragged appearance it is : hee shall charge you, and discharge you, with the motion of a Pewterers Hammer : come off, and on, swifter then he that gibbets on the Brewers Bucket. And this same halfe-fac'd fellow, Shadow, give me this man, he presents no market to the Enemy, the foe-man may with as great ayme levell at the edge of a Pen-knife : and for a Retrait, how swiftly will this Feeble, the Womans Taylor, runne off. O, give me the spare men, and spare me the great ones. Put me a Calyver into Wart's hand, Bardolph.

Bard. Hold Wart, Traverse : thus, thus, thus.

Falst. Come manage me your Calyver : so : very well, go-too, very good, exceeding good. O, give me alwayes a little, leane, old, chopt, bald Shot. Well said Wart, thou art a good Scab : hold, there is a Tester for thee.

Shal. He is not his Crafts-master, he doth not doe it right. I remember at Mile-end-Greene, when I lay at Clements Inne, I was then Sir Dagenet in Arthur's Show : there was a little quiver fellow, and he would manage you his Peece thus : and he would about, and about, and come you in, and come you in : Rah, tah, tah, would he say, Bownce would he say, and away againe would he goe, and againe would he come : I shall never see such a fellow.

Fal. These fellowes will doe well, Master Shallow. Farewell Master Silence, I will not use many wordes with you : fare you well, Gentlemen both : I thanke you : I must a dozen mile to night. Bardolph, give the Souldiers Coates.

Shal. Sir John, Heaven blesse you, and prosper your Affayres, and send us Peace : As you returne, visit my house. Let our old acquaintance be renewed : peradventure I will with you to the Court.

Falst. I would you would, Master Shallow.

Shal. Go-too : I have spoke at a word. Fare you well. Exit.

Falst. Fare you well, gentle Gentlemen. On Bardolph, leade the men away. As I returne, I will fetch off these Iustices : I doe see the bottome of Iustice Shallow. How subject we old men are to this vice of Lying? This same starv'd Iustice hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildenesse of his Youth, and the Feates he hath done about Turnball-street, and every third word a Lye, duer pay'd to the hearer, then the Turkes Tribute. I doe remember him at Clements Inne, like a man made after supper, of a Cheese-paring. When he was naked, he was, for all the world, like a forked Radish, with a Head fantastically carv'd upon it with a Knife. He was so forlorne, that his Dimensions (to my thicke sight) were invincible. He was the very Queen of Famine : he came ever in the rere-ward of the Fashion : And now is this Vices Dagger become a Squire, and talkes as familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if he had beene sworne Brother to him : and he be sworne he never saw him but once in the Tilt-yard, and then he burst his Head, for crowding among the Marshals men. I saw it, and told John of Gaunt, he beat his owne Name, for you might have truss'd him and all his Apparrell into an Eele-skinne : the Case of a Treble Hooboy was a Mansion for him : a Court : and now hath he Land, and Beeves. Well, I will be acquainted with him, if I returne : and it shall goe hard, but I will make him a Philosophers two Stones to me. If the young Doe be a Bayt for the old Pike, I see no reason, in the Law of Nature, but I may snap at him. Let time shape, and there an end.

Exit.

Actus Quartus, Scena Prima.

Enter the Arch-bishop, Mowbray, Hastings, Westmerland, Colevile.

Bish. What is this Forrest call'd?

Hast. 'Tis Gualtree Forrest, and't shall please your Grace.

Bish. Here stand (my Lords) and send discoverers forth To know the numbers of our Enemies.

Exit.

Hast. We have sent forth already.

Bish. 'Tis well done.

My friends, and Brethren (in these great Affaires)

I must acquaint you, that I have receiv'd

New-dated Letters from Northumberland:

Their cold intent, tenure, and substance thus.

How doth he wish his Person, with such Powers

As might hold fortance with his Quality,

The which he could not levy: whereupon

He is retr'y'd, to ripe his growing Fortunes,

To Scotland; and concludes in hearty prayers,

That your Attempts may over-live the hazard,

And fearefull meeting of their Opposite.

Mow. Thus do the hopes we have in him, touch ground,
And dash themselves to pieces.

Enter a Messenger.

Hast. Now? what newes?

Mess. West of this Forrest, scarcely off a mile,

In goodly forme, comes on the Enemy:

And by the ground they hide, I judge their number

Vpon, or neere, the rate of thirty thousand.

Mow. The just proportion that we gave them out.
Let us sway-on; and face them in the field.

Enter Westmerland.

Bish. What well appointed Leader fronts us here?

Mow. I thinke it is my Lord of Westmerland.

West. Health, and faire greeting from our Generall,
The Prince, Lord John, and Duke of Lancaster.

Bish. Say on (my Lord of Westmerland) in peace:

What doth concerne your comming?

West. Then (my Lord)

Vnto your Grace doe I in cheife addresse

The substance of my Speech. If that Rebellion

Came like it selfe, in base and abject Routs,

Led on by bloody Youth, guarded with Rage,

And countenanc'd by Boyes, and Beggery:

I say if damn'd Commotion so appeare,

In his true, native, and most proper shape,

You (Reverend Father, and these Noble Lords)

Had not beene here, to dresse the ougly forme

Of base, and bloody insurrection,

With your faire Honors. You, Lord Arch-bishop,

Whose Sea is by a Civill Peace maintain'd,

Whose Beard, the Silver Hand of Peace hath touch'd,

Whose Learning, and good Letters, Peace hath tutor'd,

Whose white Investments figure Innocence,

The Dove, and very blessed Spirit of Peace.

Wherefore doe you so ill translate your selfe,

Out of the Speech of Peace, that beares such grace,

Into the harsh and boystrous Tongue of Warre?

Turning you Bookes to Graves, your Inke to Blood,

Your Pennes to Launces, and your Tongue divine

To a low Trumpet, and a Point of Warre?

Bish. Wherefore doe I this? so the question stands.

Briefely to this end: We are all diseas'd,

And with our surfetting, and wanton howres,

Have brought our selves into a burning Fever,

And we must bleede for it: of which Disease,

Our late King Richard (being infected) dy'd.

But (my most Noble Lord of Westmerland)

I take not on me here as a Physician,

Nor doe I, as an Enemy to Peace,

Troope in the Throngs of Military men:

But rather shew a while like fearefull Warre,

To dyet ranke Mindes, sicke of happinesse;

And purge th'obstructions, which begin to stop

Our very Veines of Life: heare me more plainly.

I have in equall ballance justly weigh'd,

What wrongs our Armes may do, what wrongs we suffer

And find our Griefes heavier then our Offences.

We see which way the streame of Time doth runne,

And are enforc'd from our most quiet there,

By the rough Torrent of Occasion,

And have the summary of all our Griefes

(When time shall serve) to shew in Articles;

Which long ere this, we offer'd to the King,

And might, by no Suit, gayne our Audience:

When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our Griefes,

We are deny'd accesse unto his person,

Even by those men, that most have done us wrong.

The dangers of the dayes but newly gone,

Whose memory is written on the Earth

With yet appearing blood; and the examples

Of every Minutes instance (present now)

Hath put us in these ill-beseeming Armes:

Not to breake Peace, or any Branch of it,

But to establish here a Peace indeed,

Concurring both in Name and Quality.

West. When ever yet was your Appeale deny'd;

Wherein have you beene galled by the King?

What Peere hath beene suborn'd, to grate on you,

That you should seale this lawlesse bloody Booke

Of forg'd Rebellion, with a Seale divine?

Bish. My brother generall, the Common-wealth,

I make my quarrell, in particular.

West. There is no neede of any such redresse;

Or if there were, it not belongs to you.

Mow. Why not to him in part, and to us all,

That feele the bruises of the dayes before,

And suffer the Condition of these Times

To lay a heavy and unequal Hand upon our Honors?

West. O my good Lord Mowbray,

Construe the Times to their Necessities,

And you shall say (indeed) it is the Time,

And not the King, that doth you injuries.

Yet for your part, it not appeares to me,

Either from the King, or in the present Time,

That you should have an inch of any ground

To build a Griefe on: Were you not restor'd

To all the Duke of Norfolkes Seignories,

Your Noble, and right well-remembered Fathers?

Mow. What thing, in Honor, had my father lost,

That need to be reviu'd, and breath'd in me?

The King that lov'd him, as the State stood then,

Was forc'd, perforce compell'd to banish him:

And then, that Henry Bullingbrooke and he

Being mounted, and both rowled in their Seates,

Their neighing Courfes daring of the Spurre,

Their armed Staves in charge, their Beavers downe,

Their eyes of fire, sparring through sights of Steele,

And the lowd Trumpet blowing them together:

Then, then, when there was nothing could have stay'd

My father from the Breast of Bullingbrooke;

O, when the King did throw his Warder downe.

(His owne Life hung upon the Staffe he threw)

Then threw he downe himselfe, and all their Lives,

That by Indictment, and by dint of Sword,

Have since mis-carried under Bullingbrooke.

West. You speake (Lord Mowbray) now you know not The Earle of Hereford, was reputed then (what.
In England the most valiant Gentleman.
Who knowes, on whom Fortune would then have smil'd?
But if your Father had bene Victor there,
He ne're had borne it out of Coventry.
For all the Country, in a generall voyce,
Cry'd hate upon him: and all their prayers, and love,
Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on,
And blest'd, and grac'd, and did more then the King.
But this is meere digression from my purpose.
Heere come I from our Princely Generall,
To know your Griefes; to tell you, from his Grace,
That he will give you Audience: and wherein
It shall appeare, that your demands are just,
You shall enjoy them, every thing set off,
That might so much as thinke you Enemies.

Mow. But he hath forc'd us to compell this Offer,
And it proceedes from Pollicy, not Love.

West. Mowbray, you over-weene to take it so:
This Offer comes from Mercy, not from Feare.
For loe, within a Ken our Army lyes,
Vpon mine Honor, all too confident
To give admittance to a thought of feare.
Our Battaile is more full of Names then yours,
Our Men more perfect in the use of Armes,
Our Armor all as strong, our Cause the best;
Then Reason will, our hearts should be as good.
Say you not then, our Offer is compell'd.

Mow. Well, by my will, we shall admit no Parley.

West. That argues but the shame of your offence:
A rotten Case abides no handing.

Hast. Hath the Prince John a full Commission,
In very ample vertue of his father,
To heare, and absolutely to determine
Of what Condition we shall stand upon?

West. That is intended in the Generalls Name:
I muse you make so slight a Question.

Bish. Then take (my Lord of Westmerland) this Sche-
For this contains our generall Grievances: (dule,
Each severall Article herein redress'd,
All members of our Cause, both here, and hence,
That are insinew'd to this Action,
Acquitted by a true substantiall forme,
And present execution of our wills,
To us, and to our purposes confin'd,
We come within our awfull Banks againe
And knit our Powers to the Arme of Peace.

West. This will I shew the Generall. Please you Lords
In sight of both our Battailes, wee may meete
At either end in peace: which Heaven so frame,
Or to the place of difference call the Swords,
Which must decide it.

Bish. My Lord, wee will doe so.

Mow. There is a thing within my Bosome tells me,
That no Conditions of our Peace can stand.

Hast. Feare you not that, if we can make our Peace
Vpon such large termes, and so absolute,
As our Conditions shall consist upon,
Our Peace shall stand as firme as Rocky Mountaines.

Mow. I, but our valuation shall be such,
That evry slight, and false-derived Cause,
Yea, every idle, nice, and wanton Reason,
Shall, to the King, taste of this Action:
That were our Royall faiths, Martyrs in Love,
We shall be winnowed with so rough a winde,

That even our Corne shall seeme as light as Chaffe,
And good from bad find no partition.

Bish. No, no (my Lord) note this: the King is weary
Of dainty, and such picking Grievances:
For he hath found, to end one doubt by Death,
Revives two greater in the Heires of Life.
And therefore will he wipe his Tables cleane,
And keepe no Tell-tale to his Memory,
That may repeat, and History his losse,
To new remembrance. For full well he knowes,
He cannot so precisely weede this Land,
As his misdoubts present occasion:
His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
That plucking to unfixe an Enemy,
He doth unfatten so, and shake a friend.
So that this Land, like an offensive wife,
That hath enrag'd him on, to offer strokes,
As he is striking, holds his infant up,
And hangs resolu'd Correction in the Arme,
That was uprear'd to execution.

Hast. Besides, the King hath wasted all his Rods,
On late Offenders, that he now doth lacke
The very Instruments of Chastisement:
So that his power, like to a Fangleffe Lion
May offer but not hold.

Bish. 'Tis very true:
And therefore be assur'd (my good Lord Marshall)
If we doe now make our attonement well,
Our Peace will (like a broken Limbe united)
Grow stronger, for the breaking.

Mow. Be it so:
Heere is return'd my Lord of Westmerland.

Enter Westmerland.

We. The Prince is here at hand: pleaseth your Lordship
To meet his Grace, just distance 'twene our Armies?

Mow. Your Grace of Yorke, in heaven's name then forward.

Bish. Before, and greet his Grace (my Lord) we come.

Enter Prince John.

John. You are well encountred here (my cosin Mowbray)
Good day to you, gentle Lord Archbishop, (broy)
And so to you Lord Hastings, and to all.
My Lord of Yorke, it better shew'd with you,
When that your Flocke (assembled by the Bell)
Encircled you, to heare with reverence
Your exposition on the holy Text,
Then now to se you heere an Iron man
Chearing a rowt of Rebels with your Drumme,
Turning the Word, to Sword; and Life to death:
That man that sits within a Monarches heart,
And ripens in the Sunne-shine of his favour,
Would he abuse the Countenance of the King,
Alacke, what Mischeifes might he set abroad,
In shadow of such Greatnesse? With you, Lord Bishop,
It is even so. Who hath not heard it spoken,
How deepe you were within the Bookes of Heaven?
To us, the speaker in his Parliament;
To us, the 'imagine voyce of Heaven it selfe:
The very Opener, and Intelligencer,
Betweene the Grace, the Sanctities of Heaven?
And our dull workings. O, who shall beleave,
But you mis-use the reverence of your Place,
Employ the Countenance, and Grace of Heaven,
As a false Favorite doth his Princes Name,
In deeds dishonorable? You have taken up,

Under the counterfeited Zeale of Heaven,
The Subjects of Heavens Substitute, my Father,
And both against the Peace of Heaven, and him,
Have here up-swarm'd them.

Bish. Good my Lord of Lancaster,
I am not heere against your Fathers Peace :
But (as I told my Lord of Westmerland)
The Time (mis-order'd) doth in common sence
Crowd us, and crush us, to this monstrous Forme,
To hold our safety up. I sent your Grace
The parcels, and particulars of our Griefe,
The which hath ben with scorne shov'd from the Court:
Whereon this Hydra-Sonne of Warre is borne,
Whose dangerous eyes may well be charm'd asleepe,
With grant of our most just and right desires;
And true Obedience, of this Madnesse cur'd,
Stoope tamely to the foot of Majesty.

Mow. If not, we ready are to try our fortunes,
To the last man.

Hast. And though we here fall downe,
We have Supplyes, to second our Attempt :
If they mis-carry, theirs shall second them.
And so, successe of Mischiefe shall be borne,
And Heire from Heire shall hold this Quarrell up,
Whiles England shall have generation.

John. You are too shallow (Hastings)
Much too shallow,
To found the bottome of the after-Times.

West. Pleaseth your Grace, to answere them directly,
How farre-forth you doe like their Articles:

John. I like them all, and doe allow them well :
And sweare here, by the honor of my blood,
My fathers purposes have beene mistooke,
And some, about him, have too lavishly
Wrested his meaning, and Authority.
My Lord, these Griefes shall be with speed redrest :
Vpon my life, they shall. If this may please you,
Discharge your powers unto their severall Counties,
As we will ours: and here betweene the Armies,
Let's drinke together friendly, and embrace,
That all their eyes may beare those Tokens borne,
Of our restored Love, and Amity.

Bish. I take your Princely word, for these redresses.

John. I give it you, and will maintaine my word ;
And thereupon I drinke unto your Grace.

Hast. Goe Captaine, and deliver to the Army
This newes of Peace : let them have pay, and part :
I know, it will well please them.

High thee Captaine.

Exit.

Bish. To you, my Noble Lord of Westmerland.

West. I pledge your Grace :
And if you knew what paines I have bestow'd,
To breed this present Peace,
You would drinke freely : but my love to ye,
Shall shew it selfe more openly hereafter.

Bish. I doe not doubt you.

West. I am glad of it.

Health to my Lord, and gentle Cousin Mowbray.

Mow. You wish me health in very happy season,
For I am, on the sodaine, something ill.

Bish. Against ill Chances, men are ever merry,
But heavinesse fore-runnes the good event.

West. Therefore be merry (Cooze) since sodaine sorrow
Serves to say thus : some good thing comes to morrow.

Bish. Beleeve me, I am passing light in spirit.

Mow. So much the worse, if your owne Rule be true.

John. The word of Peace is render'd : hearken how they showt.

Mow. This had beene chearefull, after Victory .

Bish. A Peace is of the nature of a Conquest :
For then both parties nobly are subdu'd,
And neither party looser.

John. Goe (my Lord)

And let our Army be discharged too :
And good my Lord (so please you) let our Traines
March by us, that we may peruse the men
We should have coap'd withall.

Exit.

Bish. Goe, good Lord Hastings :

And ere they be dismiss'd, let them march by. Exit.

John. I trust (Lords) we shall lye to night together.

Enter Westmerland.

Now Cousin, wherefore stands our Army still ?

West. The Leaders having charge from you to stand,
Will not goe off, untill they heare you speake.

John. They know their duties.

Enter Hastings.

Hast. Our Army is dispers'd :
Like youthfull Steeres, unyoak'd, they tooke their course
East, West, North, South : or like a Schoole broke up,
Each hurries towards his home, and sporting place.

West. Good tidings (my Lord Hastings) for the which I doe arrest thee (Traytor) of high Treason :
And you Lord Arch-bishop, and you Lord Mowbray,
Of Capitall Treason, I attach you both.

Mow. Is this proceeding just, and honorable ?

West. Is your Assembly so ?

Bish. Will you thus breake your faith ?

John. I pawn'd thee none :

I promis'd you redresse of these same Grievances
Whereof you did complaine ; which by mine Honor,
I will performe, with a most Christian care.
But for you (Rebels) looke to taste the due
Meet for Rebellion, and such Acts as yours.

Most shallowly did you these Armes commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.
Strike up our Drummes, pursue the scatter'd stray,
Heaven, and not we have safely fought to day.

Some guard these Traitors to the blocke of Death,
Treasons true bed, and yeelder up of breath, Exeunt.

Enter Falstaffe, and Collevile.

Falst. What's your Name, Sir ? of what Condition are you ? and of what place, I pray ?

Col. I am a Knight, Sir :

And my Name is Collevile of the Dale.

Falst. Well then, Collevile is your Name, a Knight is your Degree, and your Place, the Dale. Collevile shall still be your Name, a Traytor your Degree, and the Dungeon your Place, a place deepe enough : so shall you be still Collevile of the Dale.

Col. Are not you Sir John Falstaffe ?

Falst. As good a man as he sir, who ere I am : doe yee yeeld sir, or shall I sweate for you ? if I doe sweate, they are the drops of thy Lovers, and they weep for thy death, therefore rowze up Feare and Trembling, and doe observance to my mercy.

Col. I thinke you are Sir John Falstaffe, and in that thought yeeld me.

Fal. I have a whole Schoole of tongues in this belly of mine, and not a Tongue of them all, speakes any other word but my name : and I had but a belly of any indifferency, I were simply the most active fellow in Europe :
my wombe, my wombe, my wombe undoes me. Heere comes our Generall.

Enter Prince John, and Westmerland.

John. The heat is past, follow no farther now
Call in the Powers, good Cousin Westmerland.
Now Falstaffe, where have you beene all this while?
When every thing is ended, thou you come.
These tardy Trickes of yours will (on my life)
One time or other, breake some Gallows backe.

Falst. I would be sorry (my Lord) but it should be thus: I never knew yet, but rebuke and checke was the reward of Valour. Doe you thinke me a Swallow, an Arrow, or a Bullet? Have I, in my poore and old Motion, the expedition of Thought? I have speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibility. I have fowndred nine score and odde Postes: and heere (travell-tainted as I am) have, in my pure and immaculate Valour, taken Sir John Collevile of the Dale, a most furious Knight, and valorous Enemy: But what of that? he saw me, and yeelded: that I may justly say with the hooke-nos'd fellow of Rome, I came, saw, and over-came.

John. It was more of his Courtesie, then your deserving.

Falst. I know not: heere he is, and heere I yeeld him:
and I beseech your Grace, let it be book'd with the rest of this dayes deedes; or I sweare, I will have it in a particular Ballad, with mine owne Picture on the top of it (Collevile) kissing my foot:) To the which course, if I be enforc'd, if you doe not all shew like gilt two-pences to me; and I, in the cleare Sky of Fame, o're-shine you as much as the full Moone doth the Cynders of the Element (which shew like Pinnes-heads to her) beleve not the word of the Noble: therefore let me have right, and let desert mount.

John. Thine's too heavy to mount.

Falst. Let it shine then.

John. Thine's too thicke to shine.

Falst. Let it doe something (my good Lord) that may doe me good, and call it what you will.

John. Is thy Name Collevile?

Col. It is (my Lord.)

John. A famous Rebelle art thou, Collevile.

Falst. And a famous true Subject tooke him.

Col. I am (my Lord) but as my Betters are,
That led me hither: had they beene rul'd by me,
You should have wonne them dearer then you have.

Falst. I know not how they sold themselves, but thou like a kind fellow, gav'st thy selfe away; and I thanke thee, for thee.

Enter Westmerland.

John. Have you left pursuit?

West. Retreat is made, and Execution stay'd.

John. Send Collevile, with his Confederates,
To Yorke, to present Execution.

Blunt. leade him hence, and see you guard him sure.

Exit with Collevile.

And now dispatch we toward the Court (my Lords)
I heare the King, my Father is sore sicke,
Our Newes shall goe before us, to his Majesty,
Which (Cousin) you shall beare, to comfort him:
And we with sober speede will follow you.

Falst. My Lord, I beseech you, give me leave to goe through Gloucestershire; and when you come to Court, stand my good Lord, pray, in your good report.

John. Fare you well, Falstaffe: I, in my condition,
Shall better speake of you, then you deserve. Exit.

Falst. I would you had but the wit: 'twere better then your Dukedome, Good faith, this same young sober-blooded Boy doth not love me, nor a man cannot make him laugh; but thats no marvaile, he drinke no Wine.
There's never any of these demure Boyes come to any prooffe: for thinne drinke doth so over-coole their blood, and making many Fish-Meales, that they fall into a kind of Male Greene-sicknesse: and then, when they marry, they get Wenches. They are generally Fooles, and Cowards; which some of us should be too, but for inflammation.
A good Sherris-Sacke hath a twofold operation in it: it ascends me into the Braine, dryes me there all the foolish-and dull, and crudy Vapours, which environ it: makes it apprehensive, quicke, forgetive, full of nimble, fiery, and delectable shapes; which deliver'd o're to the Voyce,
the Tongue, which is the Birth, becomes excellent Wine.
The second property of your excellent Sherris, is, the warming of the Blood: which before (cold, and fetled) left the Liver white, and pale: which is the Badge of Puffillanimity, and Cowardize: but the Sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards, to the parts extremes: it illuminateth the Face, which (as a Beacon) gives warning to all the rest of this little kingdome (man) to Arme: and then the Vitall Commoners, and in-land petty spirits, muster me all to their Captaine, the Heart; who great, and pufft up with his retinue, doth any deed of Courage: and this Valour comes of Sherris. So, that skill in the Weapon is nothing, without Sacke (for that sets it a-worke:) and Learning, a meere Hoord of Gold, kept by a Devill, till Sacke commences it, and sets it in act, and use. Hereof comes it, that Prince Harry is valiant: for the cold blood he did naturally inherite of his Father, he hath, like leane, sterill, and bare Land, manured, husbanded, and tyll'd, with excellent endeavour of drinking good, and good store offertile Sherris, that he is become very hot, and valiant. If I had a thousand sonnes, the first Principle I would teach them, should be to forswear thine Potations, and to addict themselves to Sacke.

Enter Bardolph.

How now Bardolph.

Bard. The Army is discharged all, and gone.

Falst. Let them goe: Ile through Gloucestershire, and there will I visit Master Robert Shallow, Esquire: I have him already tempering betweene my finger and my thombe, and shortly will I seale with him. Come away.

Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter King, Warwicke, Clarence, Gloucester.

King. Now Lords, if heaven doth give successfull end
To this Debate that bleedeth at our doores,
We will our Youth leade on to higher Fields,
And draw no Swords, but what are sanctify'd.
Our Navy is address'd, our Power collected,
Our Substitutes, in absence, well invested,
And every thing lyes levell to our wish;
Onely we want a little personall strength:
And pause us, till these Rebels, now a-foot,
Come underneath the yoke of Government.

War. Both which we doubt not, but your Majesty Shall soone enjoy.

King.

King. Humphrey (my Sonne of Gloucester) where is the Prince, your Brother?

Glo. I thinke he's gone to hunt (my Lord) at Windfor.

King. And how accompanied?

Glo. I doe not know (my Lord)

King. Is not his Brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

Glo. No (my good Lord) he is in prefence heere.

Clar. What would my Lord, and Father?

King. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clarence, How chance thou art not with the Prince, thy Brother? He loves thee, and thou do'st neglect him (Thomas.)

Thou hast a better place in his Affection,

Then all thy Brothers: cherriſh it (my Boy)

And Noble Offices thou may'st effect

Of Mediation (after I am dead)

Betweene his Greatneſſe, and thy other Brethren.

Therefore omit him not: blunt not his Love,

Nor looſe the good advantage of his Grace,

By ſeeming cold, or careleſſe of his will.

For he is gracious, if he be obſerv'd:

He hath a Teare for Pitty, and a Hand

Open (as Day) for melting Charity:

Yet notwithstanding, being incens'd, he's Flint,

As humorous as Winter, and as ſudden,

As Flawes congealed in the Spring of day.

His temper therefore muſt be well obſerv'd:

Chide him for faults, and doe it reverently,

When you perceive his blood enclin'd to mirth:

But being moody, give him Line, and ſcope,

Till that his paſſions (like a Whale on ground)

Confound themſelves with working. Learne this Thomas,

And thou ſhalt prove a ſhelter to thy friends,

A Hoope of gold, to bind thy Brothers in:

That the united Veſſell of their Blood

(Mingled with Venome of Suggestion,

As force, perforce, the Age will powre it in)

Shall never leake, though it doe worke as ſtrong

As Aconitum, or raſh Gun-powder.

Clar. I ſhall obſerve him with all care, and love.

King. Why art thou not at Windſor with him (Thomas?)

Clar. Hee is not there to day: hee dines in London.

King. And how accompanied? Canſt thou tell that?

Clar. With Pointz, and other his continuall followers.

King. Moſt ſubject is the fatteſt Soyle to Weedes:

And he (the Noble Image of my Youth)

Is overſpread with them: therefore my griefe

Stretches it ſelfe beyond the howre of death.

The blood weepes from my heart, when I doe ſhape

(In formes imaginary) th'unguided Dayes,

And rotten Times, that you ſhall looke upon,

When I am ſleeping with my Anceſtors.

For when his head-ſtrong Riot hath no Curbe,

When Rage and hot-blood are his Counſailors,

When Meanes and laſh Manners meete together,

Oh, with what Wings ſhall his Affections flye

Towards fronting Perill, and oppoſ'd Decay?

War. My gracious Lord, you looke beyond him quite:

The Prince but ſtudyes his Companions,

Like a ſtrange Tongue: wherein, to gaine the Language

'Tis needfull, that the moſt immodest word

Be look'd upon, and learn'd: which once attain'd,

Your Highneſſe knowes, comes to no farther uſe,

But to be knowne, and hated. So, like groſſe termes,

The Prince will, in the perfectneſſe of time,

Caſt off his followers: and their memory

Shall as a Patterne, or a Meaſure, live,

By which his Grace muſt mete the lives of others,

Turning paſt-evills to advantages.

King. 'Tis ſeldome, when the Bee doth leave her Combe In the dead Carrion.

Enter Weſtmerland.

Who's heere? Weſtmerland?

Weſt. Health to my Sovereigne, and new happineſſe Added to that, that I am to deliver.

Prince Iohn, your Sonne, doth kiſſe your Graces Hand:

Mowbray, the Biſhop, Seroupe, Hastings, and all,

Are brought to the Correction of your Law.

There is not now a Rebels Sword unſheath'd,

But Peace puts forth her Olive every where:

The manner how this Action hath beens borne,

Here (at more leysure) may your Highneſſe reade,

With every courſe, in his particular.

King. O Weſtmerland, thou art a Summer Bird,

Which ever in the haunch of Winter ſings

The liſting up of day.

Enter Harcourt.

Looke, heere's more newes.

Har. From Enemies, Heaven keepe your Maſteſty:

And when they ſtand againſt you, may they fall,

As thoſe that I am come to tell you of.

The Earle Northumberland, and the Lord Bardolfe,

With a great Power of Engliſh, and of Scots,

Are by the Sherife of Yorkſhire overthrowne:

The manner, and true order of the fight,

This Packet (pleaſe it you) containes at large.

King. And wherefore ſhould theſe good newes Make me ſicke?

Will fortune never come with both hands full,

But write her faire words ſtill in fouleſt Letters?

She either gives a Stomacke, and no food,

(Such are the poore, in health) or elſe a Feaſt,

And takes away the Stomacke (ſuch are the Rich,

That have abundance, and enjoy it not.)

I ſhould rejoyce now, at this happy newes,

And now my Sight fayles, and my braine is giddy.

O me, come neere me, now I am much ill.

Glo. Comfort your Maſteſty.

Clar. Oh, my Royall Father.

Weſt. My ſovereigne Lord, cheare up your ſelfe, looke up.

War. Be patient (Princes) you doe know, theſe Fits

Are with his Highneſſe very ordinary.

Stand from him, give him ayre:

He'll ſtraight be well.

Clar. No, no, he cannot long hold out: theſe pangs,

Th'inceſſant care, and labour of his mind,

Hath wrought the Mure, that ſhould confine it in,

So thinne, that life lookes through, and will breake out.

Glo. The people feare me: for they doe obſerve

Vnfather'd Heires, and loathly Births of Nature:

The ſeaſons change their manners, as the yeere

Had found ſome moneths aſleepe, and leap'd them over.

Clar. The River hath thrice flow'd, no ebbe betweene:

And the old folke (Times doting Chronicles)

Say it did ſo, a little time before

That our great Grand-fire Edward ſick'd, and dy'de.

War.

War. Speake lower (Princes) for the King recovers.

Glo. This Apoplexy will (certaine) be his end.

King. I pray you take me up, and beare me hence Into some other Chamber : softly pray.

Let there be no noyse made (my gentle friends) Vnlesse some dull and favourable hand

Will whisper Musicke to my weary Spirit.

War. Call for the Musicke in the other Roome.

King. Set me the Crowne upon my Pillow here.

Clar. His eye is hollow, and he changes much.

War. Lesse noyse, lesse noyse.

Enter Prince Henry.

Pri. Hen. Who saw the Duke of Clarence?

Clar. I am here (Brother) full of heavinesse.

Pri. Hen. How now? Raine within doores, and none abroad? How doth the King?

Glo. Exceeding ill.

Pri. Hen. Heard he the good newes yet? Tell it him.

Glo. He alter'd much, upon the hearing it.

Pri. Hen. If he besicke with Ioy, He'l recover without Physicke.

War. Not so much noyse (my Lords) Sweet Prince speake low.

The King, your father, is dispos'd to sleepe.

Clar. Let us with-draw into the other Roome.

War. Will't please your Grace to goe along with us?

Pri. Hen. No: I will sit, and watch here, by the King. Why doth the Crowne lye there, upon his Pillow, Being so troublesome a Bed-fellow?

O pollish'd Perturbation! Golden Care!

That keep'st the Ports of slumber open wide, To many a watchfull Night: sleepe with it now, Yet not so sound, and halfe so deeply sweet,

As he whose Brow (with homely Biggen bound) Snores out the Watch of Night. O Majesty!

When thou do'st pinch thy Bearer, thou do'st sit Like a rich Armor, worne in heat of day, That scald'st with safety: by his Gates of breath,

There lyes a dowlney feather, which stirres not: Did he suspire, that light and weightlesse dowlne

Perforce must move. My gracious Lord, my Father,

This sleepe is sound indeed: this is a sleepe,

That from this Golden Rigoll hath divorc'd

So many English Kings. Thy due, from me,

Is Teares, and heavy Sorrowes of the Blood,

Which Nature, Love, and filiall tenderesse,

Shall (O deare father) pay thee plenteously.

My due, from thee, is this Imperiall Crowne,

Which (as immediate from thy place, and blood)

Derives it selfe to me. Loe, heere it sits,

Which Heaven shall guard:

And put the worlds whole strength into one gyant arme,

It shall not force this Lineall Honor from me.

This, from thee, will I to mine leave,

As 'tis left to me.

Exit.

Enter Warwicke, Gloucester, Clarence.

King. Warwicke, Gloucester, Clarence.

Clar. Doth the King call?

War. What would your Majesty? how fares your Grace?

King. Why did you leave me here alone (my Lords)?

Clar. We left the Prince (my Brother) here (my Liege) Who undertooke to sit and watch by you.

King. The Prince of Wales? where is he? let me see him.

War. This doore is open, he is gone this way.

Glo. He came not through the Chamber where wee stayd.

King. Where is the Crowne? who tooke it from my Pillow?

War. When we with-drew (my Liege) we left it heere.

King. The Prince hath ta'ne it hence: Goe seeke him out.

Is he so hasty, that he doth suppose

My sleepe, my death? Find him (my Lord of Warwicke)

Chide him hither: this part of his conjoynes

With my disease, and helpes to end me

See Sonnes, what things you are:

How quickly Nature falls into revolt,

When Gold becomes her Object?

For this, the foolish over-carefull fathers

Have broke their sleepes with thoughts, Their braines with care, their bones with industry.

For this, they have ingrossed and pyl'd up

The canker'd heapes of strange-atchieved Gold:

For this, they have beene thoughtfull, to invest

Their Sonnes with Arts, and Martiall Exercises:

When, like the Bee, culling from every flower

The vertuous Sweets, our Thighes packt with Wax,

Our Mouthes with Honey, we bring it to the Hive;

And like the Bees, are murdered for our paines.

This bitter taste yeelds his engrossments,

To the ending father.

Enter Warwicke.

Now where is he, that will not stay so long,

Till his friend sicknesse hath determin'd me?

War. My Lord, I found the Prince in the next Roome,

Washing with kindly Teares his gentle Cheekes,

With such a deepe demeanure, in great sorrow,

That Tyranny, which never quafft but blood,

Would (by beholding him) have wash'd his Knife

With gentle eye-drops. He is comming hither.

King. But wherefore did he take away the Crowne?

Enter Prince Henry.

Loe, where he comes. Come hither to me (Harry),

Depart the Chamber, leave us heere alone.

Exit.

Pri. Hen. I never thought to heare you speake againe.

King. Thy wish was father (Harry) to that thought:

I stay too long by thee, I weary thee.

Do'st thou so hunger for my empty Chayre,

That thou wilt needes invest thee with mine Honors,

Before thy howre be ripe? O foolish youth!

Thou seek'st the Greatnesse, that will over-whelme thee

Stay but a little: for my Cloud of Dignity

Is held from falling, with so weake a winde,

That it will quickly drop: my Day is dimme.

Thou hast stolne that, which after some few howres

Were thine, without offence: and at my death

Thou hast seal'd up my expectation.

Thy life did manifest, thou lov'd'st me not,

And thou wilt have me dye assur'd of it.

Thou hid'st a thousand Daggers in thy thoughts,

Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,

To stabbe at halfe an howre of my life.

What? canst thou not forbear me halfe an howre?

Then

Then get thee gone, and digge my grave thy selfe,
And bid the merry Bells ring to thy eare
That thou art Crowned, not that I am dead,
Let all the Teares, that should bedew my Hearse
Bedrops of Balme, to sanctifie thy head :
Only compound me with forgotten dult;
Give that, which gave thee life, unto the Wormes :
Plucke downe my Officers, breake my Decrees ;
For now a time is come, to mocke at forme.
Henry the fift is Crown'd : Vp Vanity,
Downe Royall State : All you sage Counsaillors, hence :
And to the English Court, assemble now
From ev'ry Region, Apes of Idlenesse.
Now neighbor-Confiners, purge you of your Scum :
Have you a Russian that will sweare ? drinke ? dance ?
Revell the night ? Rob ? Murder ? and commit
The oldest sinnes, the newest kind of wayes ?
Be happy, he will trouble you no more :
England, shall double gill'd, his trebble guilt.
England, shall give him Office, Honor, Might :
For the Fift Harry, from cur'b License pluckes
The muzzle of Restraint, and the wild Dogge
Shall flesh his tooth in every Innocent.
O my poore Kingdome (sicke, with civill blowes)
When that my Care could not with-hold thy Ryots,
What wilt thou doe, when Ryot is thy Care ?
O, thou wilt be a Wildernesse againe,
Peopled with Wolves (thy old Inhabitants.

Prin. O pardon me (my Liege)

But for my Teares,
The most Impediments unto my Speech,
I had fore-stall'd this deere, and deepe Rebuke,
Ere you (with greefe) had spoke, and I had heard
The course of it so farre. There is your Crowne,
And he that wears the Crowne immortally,
Long guard it yours: If I affect it more,
Then as your Honour, and as your Renowne,
Let me no more from this Obedience rise,
Which my most true, and inward dutious spirit
Teacheth this prostrate, and exterior bending.
Heaven witnesse with me, when I heere came in,
And found no course of breath within your Majesty,
How cold it strooke my heart. If I doe faine,
O let me, in my present wildernesse, dye,
And never live, to shew th' incredulous World,
The Noble change that I have purposed.
Commig to looke on you, thinking you dead,
(And dead almost (my Liege) to thinke you were)
I spake unto the Crowne (as having sense)
And thus upbraided it. The Care on thee depending,
Hath fed upon the body of my Father,
Therefore, thou best of Gold, art worst of Gold.
Other, lesse fine in Charract, is more precious,
Preserving life, in Med'cine potable :
But thou, most Fine, most Honour'd, most Renown'd,
Hastate the Bearer up.
Thus (my Royall Liege)
Accusing it, I put it on my Head,
To try with it (as with an Enemy,
That had before my face murdered my father)
The Quarrell of a true inheritor,
But if it did infect my blood with joy,
Or swell my Thoughts, to any straine of Pride,
If any Rebell, or vaine spirit of mine,
Did, with the least Affection of a Welcome,
Give entertainment to the might of it,

Let heaven, for ever, keepe it from my head,
And make me, as the poorest Vassaile is,
That doth with awe, and terror kneele to it.

King. O my Sonne !

Heaven put it in thy mind to take it hence,
That thou might'st joyne the more, thy Fathers love,
Pleading so wisely, in excuse of it,
Come hither Harry, sit thou by my bed,
And heare (I thinke, the very latest Counsell
That ever I shall breath : Heaven knowes, my Sonne)
By what by-patches, and indirect crook'd-wayes
I met this Crowne : and I my selfe know well
How troublesome it fate upon my head.
To thee, it shall descend with better Quiet,
Better Opinion, better Confirmation :
For all the soyle of the Atchievement goes
With me, into the Earth. It seem'd in me,
But as an Honor snatch'd with boyst'rous hand,
And I had many living, to upbraid
My gaine of it, by their Assistances,
Which dayly grew to a Quarrell, and to Blood-shed,
Wounding supposed Peace.
All these bold Feares,
Thou seest (with perrill) I have answered :
For all my Reigne, hath beene but as a Scene
Acting that argument. And now my death
Changes the Moode : For what in me, was purchas'd, Falles upon thee, in a more Fayrer sort.
So thou, the Garland wear'st successiue,
Yet, though thou stand'st more sure, then I could doe,
Thou art not firme enough, since griefes are Greene :
And all thy Friends, which thou must make thy friends
Have but their stings, and teeth, newly taken out,
By whose fell working, I was first advanc'd,
And by whose power, I well might lodge a Feare
To be againe displac'd. Which to avoyd,
I cut them off: and had a purpose now
To leade out many to the Holy Land ;
Least rest, and lying still, might make them looke
Too neere unto my State.

Therefore (my Harry)

Be it thy course to batle giddy Mindes
With Forraigne Quarrells : that Action hence borne out,
May waste the memory of the former dayes.
More would I, but my Lungs are wasted so,
That strength of Speech is utterly deni'd me.
How I came by the Crowne, O heaven forgive :
And grant it may, with thee, in true peace live.

Prin. My gracious Liege :

You wonne it ; wore it, kept it, gave it me,
Then plaine and right must my possession be ;
Which I, with more, then with a Common paine,
'Gainst all the World, will rightfully maintaine.

Enter Lord John of Lancaster, and Warwicke.

King. Looke, looke,
Heere comes my John of Lancaster :

John. Health, Peace, and Happinesse,
To my Royall Father:

King. Thou bring'st me happinesse, (Sonne John,)

But health (alacke) with youthfull wings is flowne
From this bare, wither'd Trunke. Vpon thy sight
My worldly businesse makes a period.

Where

Where is my Lord of Warwicke?

Prim. My Lord of Warwicke.

King. Doth any name particular, belong
Vnto the Lodging, where I first did swoon'd?

War. 'Tis call'd Iernsalem, my Noble Lord.

Kin. Laud be to heaven:

Even there my life must end.

It hath beene prophesied to me many yeares,

I should not dye, but in Iernsalem:

Which (vainely) I suppos'd the Holy-Land.

But beare me to that Chamber, there Ile lye:

In that Iernsalem, shall Harry dye.

Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Shallow, Silence, Falstaffe, Bardolfe, Page, and Davy.

Shal. By Cocke and Pye, you shall not away to night.
What Davy, I say.

Fal. You must excuse me, Master Robert Shallow.

Shal. I will not excuse you: you shall not be excused.
Excuses shall not be admitted: there is no excuse shall serve: you shall not be excus'd.

Why Davy.

Davy. Heere sir.

Shal. Davy, Davy, Davy, let me see (Davy) let me see:
William Cooke, bid him come hither. Sir John, you shall not be excus'd.

Davy. Marry sir, thus: those Precepts cannot bee serv'd: and againe sir, shall we sowe the head-land with Wheate?

Shal. With red Wheate Davy. But for William Cooke: are there no yong Pigeons?

Davy. Yee Sir.

Heere is now the Smithes note, for Shooing,
And Plough-Irons.

Shal. Let it be cast, and payde: Sir John, you shall not be excus'd.

Davy. Sir, a new linke to the Bucket must needes be had: And Sir, doe you meane to stoppe any of Williams
Wages, about the Sacke he lost the other day, at Hinckley Fayre?

Shal. He shall answer it:

Some Pigeons Davy, a couple of short-legg'd Hennes: a joynt of Mutton, and any pretty little tine Kickshawes, tell William Cooke.

Davy. Doth the man of Warre, stay all night sir?

Shal. Yes Davy:

I will use him well. A friend i'th Court, is better then a penny in purse. Vse his men well Davy, for they are arrant Knaves, and will backe-bite.

Davy. No worse then they are bitten, sir: For they have marvellous fowle linnen.

Shal. Well conceited Davy: about thy Businesse,
Davy.

Davy. I beseech you sir,
To countenance William Visor of Woncot, against Cle- ment Perkes of the hill.

Shal. There are many Complaints Davy, against that Visor, that Visor is an arrant Knave, on my knowledge.

Davy. I graunt your Worship, that he is a knave Sir:
But yet heaven forbid Sir, but a Knave should have some Countenance, at his Friends request. An honest man sir, is able to speake for himselfe, when a Knave is not. I have serv'd your Worship truly sir, these eight yeeres: and if I cannot once or twice in a Quarter beare out a knave, against an honest man, I have but a very little credite with your Worship. The Knave is mine honest Friend Sir, therefore I beseech your Worship, let him be Countenanc'd.

Shal. Goe too,

I say he shall have no wrong: Looke about Davy.
Where are you Sir John? Come, off with your Boots.
Give me your hand Master Bardolfe.

Bard. I am glad to see your Worship.

Shal. I thanke thee, with all my heart, kind Master
Bardolfe: and welcome my tall Fellow:
Come Sir John.

Falst. Ile follow you, good Master Robert Shallow.
Bardolfe, looke to our Horses. If I were saw'de into Quantities, I should make foure dozen of such bearded Hermites slaves, as Master Shallow. It is a wonderful thing to see the semblable Coherence of his mens spirits, and his: They, by observing of him, doe beare themselves like foolish Iustices: He, by conversing with them, is turn'd into a Iustice-like Servingman. Their spirits are so married in Conjunction, with the participation of Society, that they flocke together in consent, like so many-Wilde-Geese. If I had a suite to Master Shallow, I would humour his men, with the imputation of being neerer their Master. If to his Men, I would curry with Master Shallow, that no man could better command his Servants. It is certaine, that either wife bearing, orig-norant Carriage is caught, as men take diseases, one of another: therefore, let men take heede of their Company. I will devise matter enough out of this Shallow, to keepe Prince Harry in continuall Laughter, the wearing out of six Fashions (which is foure Tearmes) or two Actions, and he shall laugh with Intervallums. O it is much that a Lye (with a slight Oath) and a jest (with a sad brow) will doe, with a Fellow, that never had the Ache in his shoulders. O you shall see him laugh, till his Face be like a wet Cloake, ill laid up.

Shal. Sir John.

Falst. I come Master Shallow, I come Master Shallow.
Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter the Earle of Warwicke, and the Lord Chiefe Iustice.

War. How now, my Lord Chiefe Iustice, whither away?

Chie. Iust. How doth the King?

War. Exceeding well: his Cares
Are now, all ended.

Chie. Iust. I hope, not dead.

War. He's walk'd the way of Nature,
And to our purposes, he lives no more.

Chie. Iust. I would his Majesty had call'd me with him,
The service, that I truly did his life.
Hath left me open to all injuries.

War. Indeed I thinke the yong King loves you not.
Chai. Iust. I know he doth not, and doe arme my selfe
 To welcome the condition of the Time,
 Which cannot looke more hideously upon me,
 Then I have drawne it in my fantasie.

Enter Iohn of Lancaster, Gloucester, and Clarence.

War. Heere come the heavy issue of dead Harry :
 O, that the living Harry had the temper
 Of him, the worst of these three Gentlemen :
 How many Nobles then, should hold their places,
 That must strike faile, to Spirits of vilde sort ?

Chai. Iust. Alas, I feare, all will be over-turn'd.

Iohn. Good morrow Cofin Warwicke, good morrow.

Glou. Clar. Good morrow, Cofin.

Iohn. We meet, like men, that had forgot to speake.

War. We doe remember: but our Argument
 Is all too heavy, to admit much talke. (heavy.)

Iohn. Well: Peace be with him, that hath made us

Chai. Iust. Peace be with us, least we be heavier.

Glou. O, good my Lord, you have lost a friend indeed:
 And I dare sweare, you borrow not that face
 Of seeming sorrow, it is sure your owne.

Iohn. Though no man be assur'd what grace to find,
 You stand in coldest expectation.
 I am the sorrier, would 'twere otherwise.

Cl. Well, you must now speake Sir Iohn Falstaffe faire,
 Which swimmes against your streame of Quality.

Chai. Iust. Sweet Princes: what I did, I did in Honor,
 Led by th' Imperiall Conduct of my Soule,
 And never shall you see, that I will begge
 A ragged, and fore-stall'd Remission.
 If Troth, and upright Innocency faile me,
 He to the King (my Master) that is dead,
 And tell him, who hath sent me after him.

War. Heere comes the Prince.

Enter Prince Henry.

Ch. Iust. Good morrow: and heaven save your Majesty

Prin. This new, and gorgeous Garment, Majesty,
 Sits not so easie on me, as you thinke.

Brothers, you mixe your Sadnesse with some Feare:
 This is the English, not the Turkish Court:

Not Amurrah, an Amurrah succeeds,
 But Harry, Harry: Yet be sad (good Brothers)
 For (to speake truth) it very well becomes you:

Sorrow, so Royally in you appeares,
 That I will deeply put the fashion on,
 And weare it in my heart. Why then be sad,
 But entertaine no more of it (good brothers)

Then a joynt burthen, laid upon us all.
 For me, by Heaven (I bid you be assur'd)
 He be your Father, and your Brother too:

Let me but beare your Love, He beare your Cares;
 But weepe that Harry's dead, and so will I.

But Harry lives, that shall convert those Teares
 By number, into houres of Happinesse.

Iohn, &c. We hope no other from your Majesty.

Prin. You all looke strangely on me: and you most.
 You are (I thinke assur'd, I love you not.

Chai. Iust. I am assur'd (if I be measur'd rightly)
 Your Majesty hath no just cause to hate me.

Pri. No? How might a Prince of my great hopes forget
 So great Indignities you laid upon me?

What? Rate? Rebuke? and roughly send to Prison
 Th'immediate Heire of England? Was this easie?
 May this be wash'd in Lethe, and forgotten?

Chai. Iust. I then did use the Person of your Father;
 The Image of his power, lay then in me,
 And in th' administration of his Law,
 Whiles I was busie for the Commonwealth,
 Your Highnesse pleased to forget my place,
 The Majesty, and power of Law, and Iustice,
 The Image of the King, whom I presented,
 And strooke me in my very Seate of Iudgement:
 Whereon (as an Offender to your Father)

I gave bold way to my Authority,
 And did commit you. If the deed were ill.
 Be you contented, wearing now the Garland,
 To have a Sonne, set your Decrees at naught?
 To plucke downe Iustice from your awefull Bench?
 To trip the course of Law, and blunt the Sword
 That guards the peace, and safety of your Person?
 Nay more, to spurne at your most Royall Image,
 And mocke your workings, in a Second body?

Question your Royall Thoughts, make the case yours:
 Be now the Father, and propose a Sonne:
 Heare your owne dignity so much prophan'd,
 See your most dreadfull Lawes, so loosely slighted;
 Behold your selfe, so by a sonne disdained:
 And then imagine me, taking you part,
 And in your power, soft silencing your Sonne:
 After this cold consideration, sentence me;
 And, as you are a King, speake in your State,
 What I have done, that misbecame my place,
 My person, or my Lieges Sovereignty.

Prin. You are right Iustice, and you weigh this well:
 Therefore still beare the Ballance, and the Sword:
 And I doe wish your Honors may encrease,
 Till you doe live, to see a Sonne of mine
 Offend you, and obey you, as I did.

So shall I live, to speake my Fathers words:
 Happy am I, that have a man so bold,
 That dares doe Iustice, on my proper sonne;
 And no lesse happy, having such a Sonne,
 That would deliver up his Greatnesse so,
 Into the hands of Iustice. You did commit me:
 For which, I doe commit into your hand,
 Th'unstained Sword that you have us'd to beare:
 With this Remembrance; That you use the same
 With the like bold, just, and impartiall spirit
 As you have done 'gainst me. There is my hand,
 You shall be as a Father, to my Youth:
 My voyce shall sound, as you doe prompt mine eare,
 And I will stoope, and humble my intents,
 To your well-practis'd, wise Directions.

And Princes all, beleeeve me, I beseech you:
 My father is gone wilde into his Grave,
 (For in his Tombe, lye my Affections)
 And with his Spirits, sadly I survive,
 To mocke the expectation of the World:
 To frustrate Prophecies, and to race out
 Rotten opinion, who hath writ me downe
 After my seeming. The Tide of Blood in me,
 Hath proudly flow'd in Vanity, till now.
 Now doth it turne, and ebbe backe to the Sea,
 Where it shall mingle with the state of floods,
 And flow henceforth in formall Majesty.
 Now call we our High Court of Parliament,
 And let us choose such Limbes of Noble Counsaile,

That

That the great Body of our State may goe
In equall ranke, with the best govern'd Nation,
That warre, or Peace, or both at once may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us,
In which you (father) shall have formost hand,
Our Coronation done, we will accite
(As I before remembred) all our State,
And heaven (consigning to my good intents)
No Prince, nor Peere, shall have just cause to say,
Heaven shorten Harries happy life, one day. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Falstaffe, Shallow, Silence, Bardolfe, Page, and Pistoll.

Shal. Nay; you shall see mine Orchard where, in an Arbor we will eate a last yeres Pippin of my owne graffing, with a dish of Carrawayes, and so forth: Come cofin Silence, and then to bed.

Falst. You have heere a goodly dwelling, and a rich.

Shal. Barren, barren, barren: Beggars all, beggars all
Sir Iohn: Marry, good ayre. Spread Davy, spread Davy:
Well said Davy.

Falst. This Davy serves you for good uses: he is your Servingman, and your Husband.

Shal. A good Varlet, a good Varlet, a very good Var-let, Sir Iohn: I have drunke too much Sacke at Supper.
A good Varlet. Now sit downe, now sit downe: Come Cofin.

Sil. A firra (quoth-a) we shall doe nothing but eate, and make good cheere, and praise heaven for the merry yeere: when flesh is cheape, and Females deere, and lusty Lads rome heere, and there: so merrily, and ever among so merrily.

Falst. There's a merry heart, good Master Silence. Ile give you health for that anon.

Shal. Good Master Bardolfe: some wine, Davy.

Dav. Sweet sir, sit: Ile be with you anon: most sweet sir, sit. Master Page, good Master Page, sit: Proface.
What you want in meate, we'll have in drinke: but you beare, the heart's all.

Shal. Be merry Master Bardolfe, and my little Souldior
there, be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife ha's all.
For women are Shrewes, both short: and tall:
'Tis merry in Hall, when Beards wagge all;
And welcome merry Shrovetide. Be merry, be merry.

Falst. I did not thinke Master Silence had beene a man of this Mettle.

Sil. Who I? I have beene merry twice and once, ere now.

Davy. There is a dish of Lether-coats for you.

Shal. Davy.

Dav. Your Worship: Ile be with you straight. A cup of Wine, sir?

Sil. A Cup of Wine, that's briske and fine, and drinke unto the Leman mine: and a merry heart lives long-a.

Falst. Well said, Master Silence.

Sil. If we shall be merry, now comes in the sweet of the night.

Falst. Health, and long life to you, Master Silence.

Sil. Fill the Cup, and let it come. Ile pledge you a mile to the bottome.

Shal. Honest Bardolfe, welcome: If thou want'st any thing, and wilt not call, beshrew thy heart. Welcome my little tyne thee, and welcome indeed too: Ile drinke to Master Bardolfe, and to all the Cavileres about London.

Davy. I hope to see London, once ere I dye.

Bard. If I might see you there, Davy.

Shal. You'll cracke a quart together? Ha, will you not Master Bardolfe?

Bar. Yes Sir, in a pottle pot.

Shal. I thanke thee: the knave will sticke by thee, I can assure thee that. He will not out, he is true bred.

Bard. And Ile sticke by him, sir.

Shal. Why there spoke a King: lack nothing, be merry,
Looke, who's at doore there, ho: who knockes?

Falst. Why now you have done me right.

Sil. Doe me right, and dub me Knight, Sawings. Is't not so?

Fal. 'Tis so.

Sil. Is't? Why then say an old man can doe somewhat.

Dav. If it please your Worship, there's one Pistoll come from the Court with newes.

Falst. From the Court? Let him come in.

Enter Pistoll.

How now Pistoll?

Pist. Sir Iohn, save you sir.

Falst. What winde blew you hither, Pistoll?

Pist. Not the ill winde which blowes none to good, sweet Knight: Thou art now one of the greatest men in the Realme.

Sil. Indeed, I thinke he be, but Goodman Puffe of Barlon.

Pist. Puffe? Puffe in thy teeth, most recreant Coward base. Sir Iohn, I am thy Pistoll, and thy friend: helpe skelter have I rode to thee, and tydings doe I bring, and lucky joyes, and golden Times, and happy Newes of price.

Fal. I prethee now deliver them, like a man of this World.

Pist. A footra for the World, and Worlings base,
I speake of Affrica, and Golden loyes.

Fal. O base Assyrian Knight, what is thy newes?
Let King Covitha know the truth thereof.

Sil. And Robin-hood, Scarlet, and Iohn.

Pist. Shall dunghill Curres confront the Hellisons?
And shall good newes be baffel'd?

Then Pistoll lay thy head in Furies lappe.

Shal. Honest Gentleman,
I know not your breeding.

Pist. Why then Lament therefore.

Shal. Give me pardon, Sir.

If sir, you come with newes from the Court, I take it, there is but two wayes, either to utter them, or to conceale them. I am Sir, under the King, in some Authority.

Pist. Vnder which King?

Bezonian, speake, or dye.

Shal. Vnder King Harry.

Pist. Harry the Fourth? or Fift?

Shal. Harry the Fourth.

Pist. A footra for thine Office.

Sir Iohn, thy tender Lamb-kinne, now is King,
Harry the Fift's the man, I speake the truth.
When Pistoll lyes, doe this, and figge-me, like
The bragging Spaniard.

Falst.

Fal. What, is the old King dead?
Pist. As naile in doore.
 The things I speake, are just.
Fal. Away Bardolph, Saddle my Horse,
Master Robert Shallow, choose what Office thou wilt
 In the Land, 'tis thine. Pistol, I will double charge thee
 With Dignities.
Bard. O joyfull day:
 I would not take a Knighthood for my Fortune.
Pist. What? I do bring good newes.
Fal. Carrie Master Silence to bed: Master Shallow, my Lord Shallow, be what thou wilt, I am Fortunes Steward.
 Get on thy Bootes, wee'l ride all night. Oh sweet Pistoll:
Away Bardolfe: Come Pistoll, utter more to mee: and withall devise something to doe thy selfe good. Boote, boote Master Shallow, I know the young King is sicke for
 mee. Let us take any mans Horsses: The Lawes of England are at my command'ment. Happie are they, which have beene my Friends: and woe unto my Lord Chiefe Justice.
Pist. Let Vultures vil'de seize on his Lungs also:
 Where is the life that late I led, say they?
 Why heere it is, welcome those pleasant dayes. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Hostesse Quickly, Dol Teare-sheets, and Beadles.

Hostesse. No, thou arrant knave: I would I might dye, that I might have thee hang'd: Thou hast drawne my shoulder out of joynt.

Off. The Constables have deliver'd her over to mee: and shee shall have Whipping cheere enough, I warrant her. There hath beene a man or two (lately) kill'd about her.

Dol. Nut-hooke, nut-hooke, you Lye: Come on, Ile tell thee what, thou damnd Tripe-visag'd Rascall, if the Childs I now go with, do miscarrie, thou had'st better thou had'st strooke thy Mother, thou Paper-fac'd Villaine.

Host. O that Sir John were come, hee would make this a bloody day to some body. But I would the Fruite of her Wombe might miscarry.

Officer. If it doe, you shall have a dozen of Cushions againe, you have but eleven now. Come, I charge you both go with me: for the man is dead, that you and Pis-toll beate among you.

Dol. Ile tell thee what, thou thin man in a Censor; I will have you as soundly swindg'd for this, you blew-Bottel'd Rogue: you filthy famlsh'd Correctioner, if you be not swing'd Ile forswear halfe Kirtles.

Off. Come, come, you shee-Knight-arrant, come.
Host. O, that right should thus o're come might. Well of sufferance, comes ease.

Dol. Come you Rogue, come:
 Bring me to a Justice.

Host. Yes, come you starv'd Blood-hound.

Dol. Goodman death, goodman Bones.

Host. Thou Anatomy, thou.

Dol. Come you thinne Thing:

Come you Rascall.

Off. Very well.

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter two Groomes.

1. Groo. More Rushes, more Rushes.

2. Groo. The Trumpets have sounded twice.

1. Groo. It will be two of the Clocke, ere they come from the Coronation. Exit Groo.

Enter Falstaffe, Shallow, Pistol, Bardolfe, and Page.

Falstaffe. Stand heere by me, M. Robert Shallow, I will make the King do you Grace. I will leere upon him, as he comes by: and do but marke the countenance that he will give me.

Pistol. Blesse thy Lungs, good Knight.

Falst. Come heere Pistol, stand behind me. O if I had had time to have made new Liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrow'd of you. But it is no matter, this poore shew doth better: this doth inferre the zeale I had to see him.

Shal. It doth so.

Falst. It shewes my earnestnesse in affection;

Pist. It doth so.

Fal. My devotion.

Pist. It doth, it doth, it doth.

Fal. As it were, to ride day and night,
 And not to deliberate, not to remember,
 Not to have patience to shift me.

Shal. It is most certaine.

Fal. But to stand stained with Travaile, and sweating with desire to see him, thinking of nothing else, putting all affayres in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done, but to see him.

Pist. 'Tis semper idem: for absque hoc nihil est. 'Tis all in every part.

Shal. 'Tis so indeed.

Pist. My Knight, I will enflame thy Noble Liver, and make thee rage. Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts is in base Durance, and contagious prison: Hall'd thither by most Mechanical and durty hand. Rowze uppe Revenge from Ebon den, with fell Alecto's Snake, for Dol is in. Pistol, speakes nought but troth.

Fal. I will deliver her.

Pistol. There roard the Sea: and Trumpet Clangour sounds.

The Trumpets sound. Enter King Henrie the
Fift, Brothers, Lord Chiefe
Justice.

Falst. Save thy Grace, King Hall, my Royall Hall.

Pist. The heavens thee guard, and keepe, most royall Impe of Fame.

Fal. Save thee my sweet Boy.

King. My Lord Chiefe justice, speake to that vaine
 man.

Ch. Just. Have you your wits?

Know you what 'tis you speake?

Falst. My King, my love; I speake to thee, my heart.

King. I know thee not, old man: Fall to thy Prayers:
 How ill white haire become a Foole, and Iester?

I

I have

I have long dream'd of such a kinde of man,
 So surfeit-swell'd, so old, and so prophane:
 But being awake, I do despise my dreame.
 Make lesse thy body (hence) and more thy Grace,
 Leave gourmandizing; Know the Grave doth gape
 For thee, thrice wider then for other men.
 Reply not to me, with a Foole-borne Iest,
 Presume not, that I am the thing I was,
 For heaven doth know (so shall the world perceive)
 That I have turn'd away my former Selfe,
 So will I those that kept me Companie.
 When thou dost heare I am, as I have bin,
 Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast:
 The Tutor and the Feeder of my Riots:
 Till then, I banish thee, on paine of death,
 As I have done the rest of my Misleaders,
 Not to come neere our Person, by ten mile.
 For competence of life, I will allow you,
 That lacke of meanes enforce you not to evill:
 And as we heare you do redeeme your selves,
 We will according to your strength, and qualities,
 Give you advancement. Be it your charge (my Lord)
 To see perform'd the tenure of our word. Set on.

Exit King.

Fal. Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound.

Shal. I marry Sir John, which I beseech you to let mee have home with me.

Fal. That can hardly be. M. Shallow, do not you grieve at this: I shall be sent for in private to him: Looke you, he must seeme thus to the world: feare not your advancement: I will be the man yet, that shall make you great.

Shal. I cannot well perceive how, unlesse you should give me your Dublet, and stuffe mee out with Straw. I beseech you, good sir John, let me have five hundred of my thousand.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word. This that you heard, was but a colour.

Shal. A colour I feare, that you will dye in, Sir John.

Fal. Feare no colours, go with me to dinner:

Come Lieutenant Pistol, come Bardolfe,
 I shall be sent for soone at night.

Ch. Just. Go carry Sir John Falstaffe to the Fleete, Take all his company along with him.

Fal. My Lord, my Lord.

Ch. Just. I cannot now speake, I will heare you soone:
 Take them away.

Pist. Si fortuna me tormento, spera me contento.

Exit. Manet Lancaster and Chiefe Justice.

John. I like this faire proceeding of the Kings,
 He hath intent his wonted Followers
 Shall be very well provided for:
 But are banisht, till their conversations
 Appeare more wise, and modest in the world.

Ch. Just. And so they are.

John. The King hath call'd hs Parliament,
 My Lord.

Ch. Just. He hath.

John. I will lay oddes, that ere this yeere expire,
 We beare our Civil Swords, and Native fire
 As farre as France. I heard a Bird so sing,
 Whose Musicke (to my thinking) pleas'd the King.
 Come, will you hence?

Exit.

EPILOGVE.

I RST, my Feare : then , my Curtesie : last , my Speech.
My Feare , is your Displeasure : My Curtesie , my Dutie :
And my speech , to Begge your Pardons. If you looke for a good speech now , you undoe me : For what I haue to say , is of mine owne making : and what (indeed) I should say , will (I doubt) prooue mine owne marring. But to the Purpose, and so to the Venture. Bee it knowne to you (as it is very well) I was lately heere in the end of a displeasing Play , to pray your Patience for it, and to promise you a Better : I did meane (indeede) to pay you with this , which if (like an ill Venture) it come unluckily home , I breake ; and you , my gentle Creditors lose. Heere I promist you I would bee , and heere I commit my Boäie to your Mercies : Bate me some , and I will pay you some , and ( as most Debtors doe ) promise you infinitely.

If my Tongue cannot entreate you to acquit me : will you command mee to use my Legges ? And yet that were but light payment , to Dance out of your debt : But a good Conscience , will make any possible satisfaction , and so will I. All the Gentlewomen heere , have forgotten me ; if the Gentlewomen will not , then the Gentlemen doe not agree with the Gentlewomen , which was never seene before , in such an Assembly.

One word more , I beseech you : if you be not too much cloid with Fat Meate , our humble Author will continue the story (with Sir Iohn in it) and make you merry with faire Katherine of France : where ( for any thing I know ) Falstaffe shall dye of a sweat , unlesse already he bee kill'd with your hard Opinions : For Old-Castle died a martyr , and this is not the man. My Tongue is wearie , when my Legs are too ,
I will bid you good night ; and so kneele downe before you : (But indeed) to pray for the Queene.

The Life of King Henry the Fifth.

Enter Prologue.

O For a Muse of Fire, that would ascend
The brightest Heaven of Invention
A Kingdome for a Stage, Princes to Act,
And Monarches to behold the swelling Scene.
Then should the Warlike Harry, like himselfe,
Assume the Port of Mars, and at his heeles
(Least in, like hounds) should Famine, Sword, and Fire
Crouch for employment. But pardon, Gentles all:
The flat unraised Spirits, that hath dar'd,
On this unworthy Scaffold, to bring forth
So great an Object. Can this Cuck-Pit hold
The vastie field of France? Or may we cramme
Within this Wooden O, the very Caskes
That did affright the Ayre at Agincourt?
O pardon: since a crooked Figure may Attест in little place a Million,
And let us, Cypfers to this great Accompt,

On your imaginarie Forces worke.
Suppose within the Girdle of these Walls
Are now confin'd two mightie Monarches,
Whose high, up-reared, and abutting Fronts,
The perillous narrow Ocean parts asunder.
Peece out our imperfections with your thoughts:
Into a thousand parts divide one Man,
And make imaginarie Puissance.
Thinke when we talke of Horses, that you see them
Printing their proud Hoofes i' th' receiving Earth:
For 'tis your thoughts that now must decke our Kings,
Carry them here and there: Jumping o're Times;
Turning th' accomplishment of many yeeres
Into an Houre-glasse: for the which supplie,
Admit me Chorus to this Historie;
Who Prologue-like, your humble patience pray,
Gently to heare, kindly to judge our Play. Exit.

Actus primus. Scena Prima.

Enter the two Bishops, of Canterbury and Ely.

Bish. Cant.

MY Lord, Ile tell you, that selfe Bill is urg'd,
Which in th'eleveth yere of y last Kings reign
Was like, and had indeed against us past,
But that the scambling and unquiet time
Did push it out of farther question.

Bish. Ely. But how my Lord shall we resist it now?

Bish. Cant. It must be thought on: if it passe against us,
We lose the better part of our Possession:
For all the Temporall lands, which men devout
By Testament have given to the Church,
Would they strip from us; being valu'd thus,
As much as would maintaine, to the Kings honor,
Full fiftene Earles, and fiftene hundred Knights,
Six thousand and two hundred good Esquires:
And to reliefe of Lazars, and weake age
Of indigent faint Soules, past corporall toyle,
A hundred Almes-houses, right well supply'd:
And to the Coffers of the King beside,
A thousand pounds by th'yeere. Thus runs the Bill.

Bish. Ely. This would drinke deepe.

Bish. Cant. 'Twould drinke the Cup and all.

Bish. Ely. But what prevention?

Bish. Cant. The King is full of grace, and faire regard.

Bish. Ely. And a true lover of the holy Church.

Bish. Cant. The courses of his youth promis'd it not.
The breath no sooner left his Fathers body,
But that his wildnesse mortify'd in him,
Seem'd to dye too: yea at that very moment,
Consideration like an Angell came,
And whipt th'offending Adam out of him;
Leaving his body as a Paradise,
T'involve and containe Celestiall Spirits.
Never was such a sodaine Scholler made:
Never came Reformation in a Flood,
With such a heady currant scowring faults:
Nor never Hydra-headed Wilfulnesse
So soone did lose his Seat; and all at once;
As in this King.

Bish. Ely. We are blessed in the Change.

Bish. Cant. Heare him but reason in Divinity:
And all-admiring, with an inward wish
You would desire the King were made a Prelate:
Heare him debate of Common-wealth Affaires;
You would say, it hath been all in all his study:
List his discourse of Warre; and you shal heare
A fearefull Battaile rendred you in Musique.

Turne him to any Cause of Policy,
The Gordian Knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his Garter : that when he speaks,
The Ayre, a Charter'd Libertine, is still,
And the mute Wonder lurketh in menseares,
To steale his sweet and honyed Sentences :
So that the Art and Practique part of Life,
Must be the Mistresse to this Theorique.
Which is a wonder how his Grace should gleane it,
Since his addiction was to Courtes vaine,
His companies unletter'd, rude, and shallow,
His Houres fill'd up with Ryots, Banquets, Sports ;
And never noted in him any studie,
Any retyement, any sequestration,
From open Haunts and Popularitie.

B. Ely. The Strawberry growes underneath the Nettle,
And holesome Berryes thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser qualitie :
And so the Prince obscur'd his Contemplation
Vnder the Veyle of Wildnesse, which (no doubt)
Grew like the Summer Grasse, fastest by Night,
Vnscene, yet cressive in his facultie.

B. Cant. It must be so ; for Miracles are ceast :
And therefore we must needs admit the meanes,
How things are perfected.

B. Ely. But my good Lord :
How now for mittigation of this Bill,
Vrg'd by the Commons? doth his Majestie
Incline to it, or no ?

B. Cant. He seemes indifferent :
Or rather swaying more upon our part,
Then cherishing th'exhibitors against us :
For I have made an offer to his Majesty,
Vpon our Spirituall Convocation,
And in regard of Causes now in hand,
Which I have open'd to his Grace at large,
As touching France, to give a greater Summe,
Then ever at one time the Clergie yet
Did to his Predecessors part withall.

B. Ely. How did this offer seeme receiv'd, my Lord?

B. Cant. With good acceptance of his Majestie :
Save that there was not time enough to heare,
As I perceiv'd his Grace would faine have done,
The severalls and unhidden passages
Of his true Titles to some certaine Dukedomes,
And generally, to the Crowne and seat of France,
Deriv'd from Edward, his great Grandfather.

B. Ely. What was th'impediment that broke this off?

B. Cant. The French Embassador upon that instant
Crav'd audience ; and the howre I thinke is come,
To give him hearing : Is it foure a Clock ?

B. Ely. It is.

B. Cant. Then goe we in, to know his Embassie :
Which I could with a ready guesse declare,
Before the Frenchman speaks a word of it.

B. Ely. Ile wait upon you, and I long to heare it.

Exeunt.

Enter the King, Humfrey, Bedford, Clarence, Warwicke, Westmerland, and Exeter.

King. Where is my gracious Lord of Canterbury ?

Exeter. Not here in pefence.

King. Send for him good Vnckle.

Westm. Shall we call in th' Ambassador, my Liege ?

King. Not yet, my Cousin : we would be resolu'd,
Before we heare him, of some things of weight,
That taske our thoughts, concerning us and France.

Enter two Bishops.

B. Cant. God and his Angels guard you sacred Throne,
And make you long become it.

King. Sure we thanke you.

My learned Lord, we pray you to proceed,
And justly and religiously unfold,
Why the Law Salike, that they have in France,
Or should or should not barre us in our Clayme :
And God forbid, my deere and faithfull Lord,
That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your reading,
Or nicely charge your understanding Soule,
With opening Titles miscreate, whose right
Sutes not in native colours with the truth :
For God doth know, how many now in health,
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to.
Therefore take heed how you impawne our Person,
How you awake our sleeping Sword of Warre ;
We charge you in the name of God take heed :
For never two such Kingdomes did contend,
Without much fall of blood, whose guiltlesse drops
Are every one, a Woe, a sore Complaint,
'Gainst him, whose wrong gives edge unto the Swords,
That makes such waste in brieft mortalitie.
Vnder this Conjururation, speake my Lord :
For we will heare, note, and beleeve in heart,
That what you speake, is in your Conscience washt,
As pure as sinne with Baptisme.

B. Can. Then heare me gracious Sovereign, & you Peers,
That owe your selves, your lives, and services,
To this Imperiall Throne. There is no barre
To make against your Highnesse Clayme to France,
But this which they produce from Pharamond,
In terram Salicam Mulieres ne succedant,
No Woman shall succeed in Salike Land :
Which Salike Land, the French unjustly gloze
To be the realme of France, and Pharamond
The founder of this Law, and female Barre.
Yet their owne Authors faithfully affirme,
That the Land Salike is in Germanie,
Betweene the Flouds of Sala and of Elve :
Where Charles the Great having subdu'd the Saxons,
There left behind and settled certaine French :
Who holding in disdain the German Women,
For some dishonest manners of their life,
Establisht then this Law ; to wit, No Female
Should be Inheritrix in Salike Land :
Which Salike (as I said) 'twixt Elve and Sala,
Is at this day in Germanie, call'd Meisen.
Then doth it well appeare, the Salike Law
Was not devised for the Realme of France :
Nor did the French possesse the Salike Land,
Vntill foure hundred one and twentie yeeres
After defunction of King Pharamond,
Idly suppos'd the founder of this Law,
Who died within the yeere of our Redemption,
Foure hundred twentie six : and Charles the Great Subdu'd the Saxons, and did seat the French
Beyond the River Sala, in the yeere
Eight hundred five. Besides, their writers say,
King Pepin, which deposed Childerike,
Did as Heire generall, being descended
Of Blischild, which was Daughter to King Clothair,
Make Clayme and Title to the Crowne of France,
Hugh Capet also, who usurpt the Crowne

Of Charles the Duke of Lorraine, sole Heire male
Of the true Line and Stocke of Charles the great :
To find his Title with some shewes of truth,
Though in pure truth it was corrupt and naught,
Convey'd himselfe as th' Heire to th' Lady Lingare,
Daughter to Charlemaine, who was the Sonne
To Lewes the Emperour, and Lewes the Sonne
Of Charles the Great : also King Lewes the Tenth,
Who was sole Heire to the Usurper Capet,
Could not keepe quiet in his conscience,
Wearing the Crowne of France, 'till satisfied,
That faire Queene Isabel, his Grandmother,
Was Lineall of the Lady Ermengere,
Daughter to Charles the foresaid Duke of Lorraine:
By the which Marriage, the Lyne of Charles the Great
Was re-united to the Crowne of France.

So, that as cleare as is the Summers Sunne,
King Pepins Title, and Hugh Capets Clayme,
King Lewes his satisfaction, all appeare
To hold in Right and Title of the Female :
So doe the Kings of France upon this day.
Howbeit, they would hold up this Salique Law,
To barre your Highnesse clayming from the Female,
And rather chuse to hide them in a Net,
Then amply to imbarre their crooked Titles,
Usurpt from you and your Progenitors.

King May I with right and conscience make this claim?

Bish. Cant. The sinne upon my head, dread Sovereigne :
For in the Booke of Numbers is it writ,
When the man dyes, let the Inheritance
Descend unto the Daughter. Gracious Lord,
Stand for your owne, unwind your bloody Flagge:
Looke backe into your mightie Ancestors :
Goe my dread Lord, to your great Grandfathers Tombe,
From whom you clayme ; invoke his Warlike Spirit,
And your Great Vncles, Edward the Blacke Prince,
Whoon the French ground play'd a Tragedie,
Making defeat on the full Power of France :
Whiles his most mighty Father on a Hill
Stood smiling, to behold his Lyons Whelp
Forrage in blood of French Nobilitie.
O Noble English, that could entertaine
With halfe their Forces, the full pride of France,
And let another halfe stand laughing by,
All out of worke, and cold for action.

Bish. Awake remembrance of these valiant dead,
And with your puissant Arme renew their Feats ;
You are their Heire, you sit upon their Throne :
The Blood and Courage that renowned them,
Runs in your Veines : and my thrice-puissant Liege
Is in the very May-Morne of his Youth,
Ripe for Exploites and mighty Enterprises.

Exc. Your brother Kings and Monarches of the Earth
Doe all expect, that you should rowse your selfe,
As did the former Lyons of your Blood. (might ;

West. They know your Grace hath cause, and means, and
So hath your Highnesse : never King of England
Had Nobles richer, and more loyall Subjects,
Whose hearts have left their bodies here in England,
And lye pavillion'd in the field of France.

Bish. Cant. O let their bodies follow my deare Liege
With Blouds, and Sword and Fire, to win your Right :
Inayde whereof, we of the Spiritualltie
Will rayse your Highnesse such a mightie Summe,
As never did the Cleargie at one time
Bring in to any of your Ancestors.

King. We must not onely arme t'invaide the French,
But lay downe our proportions, to defend
Against the Scot, who will make roade upon us,
With all advantages.

Bish. Can. They of those Marches, gracious Sovereign, Shall be a Wall sufficient to defend
Our in-land from the pilfering Borderers.

King. We do not meane the courting snatchers onely,
But feare the maine intendment of the Scot,
Who hath beene still a giddy neighbour to us :
For you shall reade, that my great Grandfather
Never went with his forces into France,
But that the Scot, on his unfurnisht Kingdome,
Came pouring like the Tyde into a breach,
With ample and brim fulnesse of his force,
Galling the gleaned Land with hot assayes,
Girding with grievous siege, Castles and Townes :
That England being emptie of defence,
Hath shooke and trembled at th' ill neighbourhood.

B. Can. She hath bin the more fear'd the harm'd, my Liege:
For heare her but exampl'd by her selfe,
When all her Chevalrie hath been in France,
And she a mourning Widdow of her Nobles,
She hath her selfe not onely well defended,
But taken and impounded as a Stray,
The King of Scots : whom she did send to France,
To fill King Edwards fame with prisoner Kings,
And make their Chronicle as rich with prayle,
As is the Owse and bottome of the Sea
With sunken Wrack, and sum-lesse Treasuries.

Bish. Ely. But there's a saying very old and true,
If that you will France win, then with Scotland first begin.
For once the Eagle (England) being in prey,
To her unguarded Nest, the Weazell (Scot)
Comes sneaking, and so sucks her Princely Egges,
Playing the Mouse in absence of the Cat,
To tame and havocke more then she can eate.

Exit. It followes then, the Cat must stay at home,
Yet that is but a crush'd necessity;
Since we have lockes to safegard necessities,
And pretty traps to catch the petty theeves.
While that the Armed hand doth fight abroad,
Th' advised head defends it selfe at home :
For Government, though high, and low, and lower,
Put into parts, doth keepe in one consent,
Congreeing in a full and naturall cloze,
Like Musicke.

Cant. Therefore doth heaven divide
The state of man in divers functions,
Setting endeavor in continuall motion :
To which is fixed as an ayme or butt,
Obedience : for so worke the Hony Bees,
Creatures that by a rule in Nature teach
The Act of Order to a peopled Kingdome.
They have a King, and Officers of sorts,
Where some like Magistrats correct at home :
Others, like Merchants venture Trade abroad :
Others, like Souldiers armed in their stings,
Make boote upon the Summers Velvet buddes :
Which pillage, they with merry march bring home
To the Tent-royall of their Emperour :
Who busied in his Majesties surveyes
The singing Mason building roofes of Gold,
The civill Citizens kneading up the hony ;
The Poore Mechanicke Porters, crowding in Their heavy burthens at his narrow gate :

The sad-ey'd Iustice with his surly humme,
 Delivering ore to Executors pale
 The lazic yawning Drone : I this inferre,
 That many things having full reference
 To one consent, may worke contrariouly,
 As many Arrowes loosed severall wayes
 Come to one marke : as many wayes meet in one towne,
 As many fresh streames meet in one salt sea ;
 As many Lynes close in the Dials center :
 So may a thousand actions once a foote,
 And in one purpose, and be all well borne
 Without defeat. Therefore to France, my Liege,
 Divide your happy England into foure,
 Whereof, take you one quarter into France,
 And you withall shall make all Gallia shake.
 If we with thrice such powers left at home,
 Cannot defend our owne doores from the dogge,
 Let us be worried, and our Nation lose
 The name of hardinesse and policie.

King. Call in the Messengers sent from the Dolphin.
 Now are we well resolv'd, and by Gods helpe
 And yours, the noble sinewes of our power;
 France being ours, wee'l bend it to our Awe,
 Or breake it all to peeces. Or there wee'l sit, (Ruling in large and ample Emperie,
 Ore France, and all her (almost) Kingly Dukedomes)
 Or lay these bones in an unworthy Vrne,
 Tombleffe, with no remembrance over them :
 Either our History shall with full mouth
 Speake freely of our Acts, or else our grave
 Like Turkish mute, shall have a tonguelesse mouth,
 Not worshipt with a waxen Epitaph.

Enter Ambassadors of France.

Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleasure
 Of our faire Cosin Dolphin : for we heare,
 Your greeting is from him, not from the King.

Amb. May't please your Majestie to give us leave
 Freely to render what we have in charge :
 Or shall we sparingly shew you farre off
 The Dolphins meaning, and our Embassie.

King. We are no Tyrant, but a Christian King,
 Vnto whose grace our passion is as subject
 As is our wretches fettred in our prisons:
 Therefore with franke and with uncurbed plainnesse,
 Tell us the Dolphins minde.

Amb. Thus then in few :
 Your Highnesse lately sending into France,
 Did claime some certaine Dukedomes, in the right
 Of your great Predecessor, King Edward the third.
 In answer of which claime, the Prince our Master
 Sayes, that you favour too much of your youth,
 And bids you be advis'd : There's nought in France,
 That can be with a nimble Galliard wonne :
 You cannot revell into Dukedomes there.
 He therefore sends you meeter for your spirit
 This Tun of Treasure ; and in lieu of this,
 Desires you let the Dukedomes that you claime
 Heare no more of you. This the Dolphin speakes.

King. What Treasure Vncle?

Exe. Tennis balles, my Liege.

King. We are glad the Dolphin is so pleasant with us,
 His Present, and your paines we thanke you for:
 When we have matcht our Rackets to these Balles,
 We will in France (by Gods grace) play a set,
 Shall strike his fathers Crowne into the hazard.
 Tell him, he hath made a match with such a Wrangler,

That all the Courts of France will be disturb'd
 With Chaces. And we understand him well,
 How he comes o're us with our wilder dayes,
 Not measuring what use we made of them.
 We never valed this poore seate of England,
 And therefore living hence, did give our selfe
 To barbarous licence : As 'tis ever common,
 That men are merriest, when they are from home.
 But tell the Dolphin, I will keepe my State,
 Belike a King, and shew my sayle of Greatnesse,
 When I do rowse me in my Throne of France.
 For that I have layd by my Majestie,
 And plodded like a man for working dayes :
 But I will rise there with so full a glorie,
 That I will dazle all the eyes of France,
 Yea strike the Dolphin blinde to looke on us.
 And tell the pleasant Prince, this Mocke of his Hath turn'd his balls to Gun-stones, and his soule
 Shall stand fore charged, for the wastefull vengeance
 That shall flye with them: for many a thousand widowes
 Shall this his Mocke, mocke out of their deere husbands;
 Mocke mothers from their sonnes, mock Castles downe:
 And some are it ungotten and unborne,
 That shall have cause to curse the Dolphins scorne.
 But this lyes all within the will of God,
 To whom I do appeale, and in whose name
 Tell you the Dolphin, I am comming on,
 To venge me as I may, and to put forth
 My rightfull hand in a wel-hallow'd cause.
 So get you hence in peace : and tell the Dolphin,
 His Iest will favour but of shallow wit,
 When thousands weepe more then did laugh at it.
 Convey them with safe conduct. Fare you well.

Exeunt Ambassadors.

Exe. This was a merry Message.

King. We hope to make the Sender blush at it :
 Therefore, my Lords, omit no happy howre,
 That may give furth'rance to our Expedition;
 For we have now no thought in us but France,
 Save those to God, that runne before our businesse.
 Therefore let our proportions for these Warres
 Be soone collected, and all things thought upon,
 That may with reasonable swiftnesse adde
 More feathers to our Wings : for God before,
 Wee'le chide this Dolphin at his fathers doore.
 Therefore let every man now taske his thought,
 That this faire Action may on foot be brought. Exeunt.

Flourish. Enter Chorus.

Now all the Youth of England are on fire,
 And silken Dalliance in the Wardrobe lyes :
 Now thrive the Armorers, and Honors thought
 Reignes solely in the breast of every man.
 They sell the Pasture now, to buy the Horse ;
 Following the Mirror of all Christian Kings,
 With winged heeles, as English Mercuries.
 For now sits Expectation in the Ayre,
 And hides a Sword, from Hilt unto the Point,
 With Crownes Imperiall, Crownes and Coronets,
 Promis'd to Harry, and his followers.
 The French advis'd by good intelligence
 Of this most dreadfull preparation,
 Shake in their feare, and with pale Pollicy
 Seeke to divert the English purposes.
 O England : Modell to thy inward Greatnesse,
 Like little Body with a mightie Heart :

What

What mightst thou do, that honour would thee doe,
Were all thy children kinde and naturall :
But see, thy fault France hath in thee found out,
A nest of hollow bosomes, which he filles
With treacherous Crownes, and three corrupted men :
One Richard Earle of Cambridge, and the second
Henry Lord Scroope of Masham, and the third
Sir Thomas Grey Knight of Northumberland,
Have for the Gilt of France (O guilt indeed)
Confirm'd Conspiracy with fearefull France,
And by their hands, this grace of Kings must dye,
If Heil and Treason hold their promises,
Ere he take ship for France ; and in Southampton.
Linger your patience on, and wee'l digest
Th' abuse of distance ; force a play :
The summe is payde, the Traitors are agreed,
The King is set from London, and the Scene
Is now transported (Gentles) to Southampton,
There is the play-house now, there must you sit,
And thence to France shall we convey you safe,
And bring you backe : Charming the narrow seas
To give you gentle Passe : for if we may,
Wee'l not offend one stomacke with our Play.
But till the King come forth, and not till then,
Vnto Southampton do we shift our Scene.

Exit.

Enter Corporall Nym, and Lieutenant Bardolfe.

Bar. Well met Corporall Nym.

Nym. Good morrow Lievttenant Bardolfe.

Bar. What, are Ancient Pistoll and you friends yet ?

Nym. For my part, I care not : I say little : but when time shall serue, there shall be smiles, but that shall be as it may. I dare not fight, but I will winke and hold out mine yron : it is a simple one, but what though ? It will toste Cheese, and it will endure cold, as another mans sword will : and there's an end.

Bar. I will bestow a breakfast to make you friendes, and wee'l bee all three sworn brothers to France : Let't be so good Corporall Nym.

Nym. Faith, I will live so long as I may, that's the certaine of it : and when I cannot live any longer, I will doe as I may : That is my rest, that is the rendezvous of it.

Bar. It is certaine Corporall, that hee is married to Nell Quickly, and certainly she did you wrong, for you were troth-plight to her.

Nym. I cannot tell, Things must be as they may : men may sleepe, and they may have their throats about them at that time, and some say, knives have edges : It must be as it may, though patience bee a tyred name, yet shee will plodde, there must be Conclusions, well, I cannot tell.

Enter Pistoll, & Quickly.

Bar. Heere comes Ancient Pistoll and his wife : good Corporall be patient heere. How now mine Hoaste Pistoll ?

Pist. Bafe Tyke, call'st thou mee Hoste, now by this hand I sweare I scorne the terme : nor shall my Nell kepe Lodgers.

Host. No by my troth, not long : For we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteene Gentlewomen that live honestly by the pricke of their Needles, but it will bee thought wee keepe a Bawdy-house straight. O welliday Lady, if he be not hewne now, we shall see wilfull adultery and murther committed.

Bar. Good Lieutenant, good Corporall offer nothing
heere.

Nym. Pist.

Pist. Pist for thee, Island dogge : thou prickeard cur of Island.

Host. Good Corporall Nym shew thy valor, and put up your sword.

Nym. Will you shogge off ? I would have you solus.

Pist. Solus, egregious dog ? O Viper vile ; The solus in thy most meruailous face, the solus in thy teeth, and in thy throate, and in thy hatefull Lungs, yea in thy Maw, perdy ; and which is worse, within thy nastie mouth. I do retort the solus in thy bowels, for I can take, and Pistols cocke is up, and flashing fire will follow.

Nym. I am not Barbasen, you cannot conjure mee : I have an humor to knocke you indifferently well : If you grow fowle with me Pistoll, I will scoure you with my Rapier, as I may, in fayre tearmes. If you would walke off, I would pricke your guts a little in good tearmes, as I may, and that's the humor of it.

Pist. O Braggard vile, and damned furious wight,
The Grave doth gape, and doting death is neere,
Therefore exhale.

Bar. Heare me, heare me what I say : He that strikes the first stroake, Ile run him up to the hilts, as I am a soldier.

Pist. An oath of mickle might, and fury shall abate.
Give me thy fist, thy fore-foote to me give : Thy spirits are most tall.

Nym. I will cut thy throate one time or other in faire termes, that is the humor of it.

Pistoll. Couple a gorge, that is the word. I defie thee againe. O hound of Creet, think'st thou my spouse to get ?
No, to the Spittle goe, and from the Poudring tub of infamy, fetch forth the Lazar Kite of Grissids kinde, Doll Tenre-sheete, she by name, and her espouse. I have, and I will hold the Quondam Quickly for the onely she : and Pauca, there's enough to go to.

Enter the Boy.

Boy. Mine Hoast Pistoll, you must come to my Mayster, and your Hostesse : He is very sicke, & would to bed.
Good Bardolfe, put thy face betweene his sheetes, and do the Office of a Warming-pan : Faith, he's very ill.

Bard. Away you Rogue.

Host. By my troth he'l yeeld the Crow a pudding one of these dayes : the King has kild his heart. Good Husband come home presently.

Exit.

Bar. Come shall I make you two friends. Wee must to France together : why the diuel should we keepe knives to cut one anothers throats ?

Pist. Let floods ore-swell and fiends for food howle on.

Nym. You'l pay mee the eight shillings I won of you at Betting ?

Pist. Bafe is the slave that payes.

Nym. That now I will have : that's the humour of it.

Pist. As manhood shall compound : push home. Draw

Bard. By this sword, hee that makes the first thrust, Ile kill him : By this sword, I will.

Pi. Sword is an Oath, & Oaths must have their course

Bar. Coporall Nym, and thou wilt be friends be friends, and thou wilt not, why then bee enemies with mee too :
prethee put up.

Pist. A Noble shalt thou have, and present pay, and Liquor likewise will I give to thee, and friendshippe shall combine, and brotherhood. Ile live by Nymme, & Nymme shall live by me, is not this just ? For I shall Sutler be unto the Campe, and profits will accrue. Give me thy hand.

Nym.

Nym. I shall have my Noble?

Pist. In cash, most justly payd.

Nym. Well, then that's the humor of't.

Enter Hostesse.

Host. As ever you came of women, come in quickly to Sir Iohn: A poore heart, he is so shak'd of a burning quotidian Tertian, that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. The King hath run bad humors on the Knight, that's the even of it,

Pist. Nym, thou hast spoke the right, his heart is fracted and corroborate.

Nym. The King is a good King, but it must bee as it may: he passes some humors, and carrees.

Pist. Let us condole the Knight, for (Lambekins) we will live.

Enter Exeter, Bedford, & Westmerland.

Bed. Fore God his Grace is bold to trust these traitors

Ex. They shall be apprehended by and by.

West. How smooth and even they do beare themselves, As if allegiance in their bosomes late Crowned with faith, and constant loyalty.

Bed. The King hath note of all that they intend, By interception, which they dreame not of.

Ex. Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow, Whom he hath dull'd and cloy'd with gracious favours, That he should for a forraigne purse, so sell His Soveraignes life to death and treachery.

Sound Trumpets.

Enter the King, Scroope, Cambridge, and Gray.

King. Now sits the winde faire, and we will aboard. My Lord of Cambridge, and my kinde Lord of Masham, And you my gentle Knight, give me your thoughts: Thinke you not that the powres we beare with us Will cut their passage through the force of France? Doing the execution, and the acte, For which we have in head assembled them.

Scro. No doubt my Liege, if each man do his best.

King. I doubt not that, since we are well perswaded We carry not a heart with us from hence, That growes not in a faire consent with ours: Nor leave not one behinde, that doth not wish Successe and Conquest to attend on us.

Cam. Never was Monarch better fear'd and lov'd, Then is your Majesty; there's not I thinke a subject That sits in heart-greefe and uneasinesse Under the sweet shade of your government.

Kni. True: those that were your Fathers enemies, Have steep'd their gauls in honey, and do serve you With hearts create of dutie, and of zeale,

King. We therefore have great cause of thankfulnessse, And shall forget the office of our hand Sooner then quittance of desert and merit, According to the weight and worthinesse.

Scro. So service shall with steeled finewes toyle, And labour shall refresh it selfe with hope To do your Grace incessant services.

King. We Iudge no lesse. Vnkle of Exeter, Inlarge the man committed yesterday, That rayl'd against our person: We consider It was excessse of Wine that set him on, And on his more advice, We pardon him.

Scro. That's mercy, but too much security: Let him be punish'd Soveraigne, least example Breed (by his sufferance) more of such a kind.

King. O let us yet be mercifull.

Cam. So may your Highnesse, and yet punish too.

Grey. Sir, you shew great mercy if you give him life, After the taste of much correction.

King. Alas, your too much love and care of me, Are heavie Orisons 'gainst this poore wretch: If little faults proceeding on distemper, Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye When capitall crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appeare before us? We'l yet inlarge that man, Though Cambridge, Scroope, and Gray, in their deere care And tender preservation of our person Would have him punish'd. And now to our French causes, Who are the late Commissioners?

Cam. I one my Lord,

Your Highnesse bad me aske for it to day:

Scro. So did you me my Liege.

Gray. And I my Royall Soveraigne.

King. Then Richard Earle of Cambridge, there is yours: There yours Lords Scroope of Masham, and Sir Knight: Gray of Northumberland, this same is yours:

Reade them, and know I know your worthinesse.

My Lord of Westmerland and Vnkle Exeter,

We will aboard to night. Why how now Gentlemen? What see you in those papers, that you lose So much complexion? Looke ye how they change: Their cheekes are paper. Why, what reade you there, That have so cowardd and chac'd your blood Out of apparance.

Cam. I do confesse my fault,

And do submit me to your Highnesse mercy.

Gray.Scro. To which we all appeale.

King. The mercy that was quicke in us but late, By your owne counsaile is suppress'd and kill'd: You must not dare (for shame) to talke of mercy, For your owne reasons turne into your bosomes, As dogs upon their Masters, worrying you: See you my Princes, and my Noble Peeres, These English monsters: My Lord of Cambridge heere, You know how apt our love was, to accord To furnish him with all appertinences Belonging to his honour; and this man, Hath for a few light Crownes, lightly conspir'd And sworn unto the practises of France To kill us heere in Hampton. To the which, This Knight no lesse for bounty bound to us Then Cambridge is, hath likewise sworne. But O, What shall I say to thee Lord Scroope, thou cruell, Ingratefull, savage, and inhumane Creature? Thou that didst beare the key of all my counsailes. That knew'st the very bottome of my soule, That (almost) might'st have coyn'd me into Golde, Would'st thou have practis'd on me, for thy use? May it be possible, that forraigne hyer Could out of thee extract one sparke of evil That might annoy my finger? 'Tis so strange, That though the truth of it stand off as grosse As olacke and white, my eye will scarcely see it. Treason, and murder, ever kept together, As two yoke divels sworne to eythers purpose, Working so grossely in a naturall cause, That admiration did not hoope at them. But thou (gainst all proportion) didst bring in Wonder to waite on treason, and no murder: And whatsoever cunning fiend it was That wrought upon thee so preposterously, Hath got the voyce in hell for excellence:

And other divels that suggest by treasons,
Do botch and bungle up damnation,
With patches, colours, and with formes being fetcht
From glist'ring semblances of piety:
But he that temper'd thee, bad thee stand up,
Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason,
Vnlesse to dub thee with the name of Traitor.
If that same Dæmon that hath gull'd thee thus,
Should with his Lyon-gate walke the whole world,
He might returne to vassie Tartar backe,
And tell the Legions, I can never win
A soule so easie as that Englishmans.
Oh, how hast thou with jealousie infected
The sweetnesse of affiance? Shew men dutifull?
Why so didst thou: seeme they grave and learned?
Why so didst thou. Come they of Noble Family?
Why so didst thou. Seeme they religious?
Why so didst thou. Or are they spare in diet,
Free from grosse passion, or of mirth, or anger,
Constant in spirit, not swerving with the blood,
Garnish'd and deck'd in modest complement,
Not working with the eye, without the eare,
And but in purged judgement trusting neither?
Such and so finely boulted didst thou seeme:
And thus thy fall hath left a kinde of blot,
To make thee full fraught man, and best indued
With some suspicion, I will weepe for thee.
For this revolt of thine, me thinkes is like
Another fall of man. Their faults are open,
Arrest them to the answer of the Law,
And God acquit them of their practises.

Exe. I arrest thee of High Treason, by the name of Richard Earle of Cambridge.

I arrest thee of High Treason, by the name of Thomas
Lord Scroope of Marston.

I arrest thee of High Treason, by the name of Thomas
Grey, Knight of Northumberland.

Scro. Our purposes, God justly hath discover'd,
And I repent my fault more then my death,
Which I beseech your Highnesse to forgive,
Although my body pay the price of it.

Cam. For me, the Gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive,
The sooner to effect what I intended:
But God be thanked for prevention,
Which I in sufferance heartily will rejoyce
Beseeching God, and you, to pardon me.

Gray. Never did faithfull subject more rejoyce
At the discoverie of most dangerous Treason,
Then I do at this houre joy ore my selfe,
Prevented from a damned enterprize;
My fault, but not my body, pardon Sovereigne.

King. God quit you in his mercy: Heare your sentence
You have conspir'd against Our Royall person.
Ioynd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his Coffers,
Receyv'd the Golden Earnest of Our death:
Wherein you would have sold your King to slaughter,
His Princes, and his Peeres to servitude,
His Subjects to oppression, and contempt,
And his whole Kingdome into desolation:
Touching our person, seeke we no revenge,
But we our Kingdomes safety must so tender,
Whose ruine you three fought, that to her Lawes
We do deliver you. Get you therefore hence,
(Poore miserable wretches) to your death:
The taste whereof, God of his mercy give

You patience to indure, and true Repentance
Of all your deare offences. Beare them hence. Exeunt.
Now Lords for France: the enterprize whereof
Shall be to you as us, like glorious.

We doubt not of a faire and luckie Warre,
Since God so graciously hath brought to light
This dangerous Treason, lurking in our way.
To hinder our beginning. We doubt not now,
But every Rubbe is smoothed on our way,
Then forth, deare Countreymen: Let us deliver
Our Puissance into the hand of God,
Putting it straight in expedition.

Chearely to Sea, the signes of Warre advance,
No King of England, if not King of France. Exeunt.

Enter Pistoll, Nim, Bardolph, Boy, and Hostesse.

Hostesse. Prythee honey sweete Husband, let me bring thee to Staines.

Pistoll. No: for my manly heart dotherne. Bardolph, be blythe: Nim, rowse thy vaunting Veines: Boy, bristle thy Courage up: for Falstaffe hee is dead, and we must erne therefore.

Bard. Would I were with him, wheresomere hee is, eyther in Heaven, or in Hell.

Hostesse. Nay sure, hee's not in Hell: hee's in Arthur's Bosome, if ever man went to Arthur's Bosome: a made a finer end, and went away and it had beene any Christome Child: a parted ev'n just betweene Twelve and One, ev'n at the turning o'th' Tyde: for after I saw him fumble with the Sheets, and play with Flowers, and smile upon his fingers end, I knew there was but one way: for his Nose was as sharpe as a Pen, and a Table of greene fields. How now
Sir Iohn (quoth I?) what man? bee a good cheere: so a cryed out, God, God, God, three or foure times: now I, to comfort him, bid him a should not thinke of God; I hop'd there was no neede to trouble himselfe with any such thoughts yet: so a bad me lay more Cloathes on his feet: I put my hand into the Bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone: then I felt to his knees, and so up-war'd and upward, and all was as cold as any stone.

Nim. They say he cryed out of Sack.

Hostesse. I, that a did.

Bard. And of Women.

Hostesse. Nay, that a did not.

Boy. Yes that a did, and sayd they were Devils incarnate.

Woman. A could never abide Carnation, 'twas a Colour he never lik'd.

Boy. A said once, the Deule would have him about Women.

Hostesse. A did in some sort (indeed) handle Women:
but then hee was rumatique, and talk'd of the Whore of Babylon.

Boy. Doe you not remember a saw a Flea sticke upon Bardolph's Nose, and a said it was a blacke Soule burning in Hell.

Bard. Well, the fuell is gone that maintain'd that fire:
that's all the Riches I got in his service.

Nim. Shall wee shogg? the King will bee gone from Southampton.

Pist. Come, let's away. My Love, give me thy Lippes:
Looke to my Chattels, and my Moveables: Let Sences rule: The world is, Pitch and pay: trust none: for Oathes are Strawes, mens Faiths are Wafer-Cakes, and hold-fast is the onely Dogge: My Ducke, therefore Caveto bee thy Counsailor. Goe, cleare thy Chrystalls. Yokefellowes in Armes, let us to France, like Horseleeches

leeches my Boyes, to sucke, to sucke, the very blood to sucke.

Boy. And that's but unwholesome food, they say,

Pist. Touch her soft mouth, and march.

Bard. Farewell Hostesse.

Nim. I cannot kisse, that is the humour of it: but adieu.

Pist. Let Huswifrie appeare: keepe close, I thee command.

Hostesse. Farwell: adieu.

Exeunt.

Enter the French King, the Dolphin, the Dukes of Berry and Britaine.

King. Thus comes the English with full power upon us, And more then carefully it us concerns, To answer Royally in our defences.

Therefore the Dukes of Berry and of Britaine, Of Brabant and of Orleance shall make forth, And you Prince Dolphin, with all swift dispatch To lyne and new repayre our townes of Warre With men of courage, and with meanes defendant: For England his approaches makes as fierce, As Waters to the sucking of a Gulfe.

It fits us then to be as provident, As feare may teach us, out of late examples Left by the fatall and neglected English, Vpon our fields.

Dolphin. My most redoubted Father, It is most meet we arme us 'gainst the Foe: For Peace it selfe should not so dull a Kingdome, (Though War nor no knowne Quarrel were in question) But that Defences, Musters, Preparations, Should be maintain'd, assembled, and collected, As were a Warre in expectation. Therefore I say, 'tis meet we all goe forth, To view the sicke and feeble parts of France: And let us doe it with no shew of feare, No, with no more, then if we heard that England Were busied with a Whitson Morris-dance: For, my good Liege, she is so idly King'd, Her Scepter so phantastically borne, By a vaine giddie shallow humorous Youth, That feare attends her not.

Const. O Peace, Prince Dolphin, You are too much mistaken in this King: Question your Grace the late Embassadors, With what great State he heard their Embassie, How well supply'd with Noble Councillors, How modest in exception; and withall, How terrible in constant resolution: And you shall find, his Vanities fore-spent, Were but the out-side of the Roman Brutus, Covering Discretion with a Coat of Folly; As Gardeners doe with Ordure hide those Roots That shall first spring, and be most delicate.

Dolphin. Well, 'tis not so, my Lord High Constable. But though we thinke it so, it is no matter: In causes of defence, 'tis best to weigh The enemy more mightie then he seemes, So the proportions of defence are fill'd: Which of a weake and niggardly projection, Doth like a Miser spoyle his Coat, with scanting A little Cloth.

King. Thinke we King Harry strong: And Princes, looke you strongly arme to meet him. The Kindred of him hath bene flesht upon us:

And he is bred out of that bloody straine, That haunted us in our familiar Pathes: Witnesse our too much memorable shame, When Cressy Battell fatall was stricke, And all our Princes captiv'd, by the hand Of that blacke Name, Edward, black Prince of Wales: Whiles that his Mountaine Sire, on Mountaine standing Vp in the Ayre, crown'd with the Golden Sunne, Saw his Heroicall Seed, and smil'd to see him Mangle the Worke of Nature, and deface The Patternes, that by God and by French Fathers Had twentie yeeres beene made. This is a Stem Of that Victorious Stock: and let us feare The Native mightinesse and fate of him.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Embassadors from Harry King of England, Doe crave admittance to your Majesty.

King. Weele give them present audience. Goe, and bring them.

You see this Chate is hotly followed, friends.

Dolphin. Turne head, & stop pursuit: for coward Dogs Most spend their mouths, whe what they seem to threaten Runs farre before them. Good my Soueraigne Take up the English short, and let them know Of what a Monarchie you are the Head: Selfe-love, my Liege, is not so vile a sinne, As selfe-neglecting.

Enter Exeter.

King. From our Brother of England?

Exe. From him, and thus he greets your Majesty: He wills you in the Name of God Almighty, That you deuest your selfe, and lay apart The borrowed Glories, that by gift of Heaven; By Law of Nature, and of nations, longs To him and to his Heires, namely, the Crowne; And all wide-stretched Honors, that pertaine By Custome, and the Ordinance of Times, Vnto the Crowne of France: that you may know 'Tis no sinister, nor no awk-ward Clayme, Pickt from the Worme-holes of long-vanisht dayes, Nor from the dust of old Oblivion rakt, He sends you this most memorable Lyne, In every Branch truly demonstrative; Willing you over-looke this Pedigree: And when you find him evenly deriv'd From his most fam'd, of famous Ancestors, Edward the third; he bids you then resigne Your Crowne and Kingdome indirectly held From him the Native and true Challenger.

King. Or else what followes?

Exe. Bloody constraint: for if you hide the Crowne Even in your hearts, there will he rake for it. Therefore in fierce Tempest is he comming, In Thunder and in Earth-quake, like a love: That if requiring faile, he will compell. And bids you, in the Bowels of the Lord, Deliver up the Crowne, and to take mercie On the poore Soules, for whom this hungry Warre Opens his vastie lawes: and on your head Turning the Widdowes Teares, the Orphans Cryes, The dead-mens Bloud, the priuy Maidens Groanes, For Husbands Fathers and betrothed Lovers, That shall be swallowed in this Controversie. This is his Clayme, his threatening, and my Message: Vnlesse the Dolphin be in presence here; To whom expressly I bring greeting too.

King. For

King. For us, we will consider of this further:
To morrow shall you beare our full intent
Back to our Brother of England.

Dolph. For the Dolphin,
I stand here for him: what to him from England?
Exe. Scorne and defiance, sleight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not mis-become
The mighty Sender, doth he prize you at.
Thus sayes my King: and if your Fathers Highnesse
Doe not, in graunt of all demands at large,
Sweeten the bitter Mock you sent his Majesty;
We'll call you to so hot an Answer of it,
That Caves and Womby Vaultages of France
Shall chide your Trespas, and returne your Mock
In second Accent of his Ordinance.

Dolph. Say: if my Father render faire returne,
It is against my will: for I desire
Nothing but Oddes with England,
To that end, as matching to his Youth and Vanity,
I did present him with the Paris-Balls.

Ex. Hee'll make your Paris Looover shake for it,
Were it the Mistresse Court of mighty Europe:
And be assur'd, you'll find a difference,
As we his Subjects have in wonder found,
Betweene the promise of his greener dayes,
And these he maisters now: now he weiges Time
Even to the utmost Graine: that you shall reade
In your owne Losses, if he stay in France.

King. To morrow shall you know our mind at full.
Flourish.

Exe. Dispatch us with all speed, least that our King
Come here himsele to question our delay;
For he is footed in this Land already.

King. You shall be soone dispatcht, with faire conditi-
A Night is but small breathe, and little pawse, (ons.
To answer matters of this consequence. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Chorus.

Thus with imagin'd wing our swift Scene flies,
In motion of no lesse celerity then that of Thought
Suppose, that you have seene
The well-appointed King at Dover Peer,
Embarke his Royalty: and his brave Fleet,
With silken Streamers, the young Phebus fayning;
Play with your Fancies: and in them behold,
Vpon the Hempen Tackle, Ship-boyes climbing;
Heare the shrill Whistle, which doth order give
To sounds confus'd: behold the threaten Sayles,
Borne with th' invisible and creeping Wind,
Draw the huge Bottomes through the furrowed Sea,
Breasting the lofty Surge. O, doe but thinke
You stand upon the Rivage: and behold
A Citie on th' inconstant Billowes dauncing:
For so appeares this Fleet Majestically,
Holding due courseto Harflew. Follow, follow:
Grapple your minds to sternage of this Nauy,
And leave your England as dead Mid-night, still,
Guarded with Grandfires, Babyes, and old Women,
Either past, or not arriv'd to pyth and puissance:
For who is he, whose Chin is but enricht

With one appearing Hayre, that will not follow
These cull'd and choise-drawne Cavaliers to France?
Worke, worke your Thoughts, and therein see a Siege:
Behold the Ordenance on their Carriages,
With fatall mouthes gaping on girded Harflew,
Suppose th' Embassador from the French comes back:
Tells Harry, That the King doth offer him
Katharine his Daughter, and with her to Dowrie,
Some petty and unprofitable Dukedomes.
The offer likes not: and the nimble Gunner
With Lynstock now the divellish Cannon touches.

Alarm, and Chambers goe off.
And downe goes all before them. Still be kind,
And ech out our performance with your mind. Exit.

Enter the King, Exeter, Bedford, and Gloucester.

Alarm: Scaling Ladders at Harflew.

King. Once more unto the Breach,
Deare friends, once more;
Or close the Wall up with our English dead:
In Peace, there's nothing so becomes a man,
As modest stillnesse, and humility:
But when the blast of Warre blowes in our eares,
Then imitate the action of the Tyger:
Stiffen the sinewes, commune up the blood,
Disguise faire Nature with hard-favour'd Rage:
Then lend the Eye a terrible aspect:
Let it pry through the portage of the Head,
Like the Brasse Cannon: let the Brow o'rewhelme it,
As fearefully, as doth a galled Rocke
O're-hang and jutty his confounded Base,
Swill'd with the wilde and wastfull Ocean.
Now set the Teeth, and stretch the Nostrill wide,
Hold hard the Breath, and bend up every Spirit
To his full height. On, you Noblest English,
Whose blood is fet from Fathers of Warre-prooffe:
Fathers, that like so many Alexanders,
Have in these parts from Morne till Even fought,
And sheath'd their Swords, for lack of argument.
Dishonour not your Mothers: now attest,
That those whom you call'd Fathers, did beget you.
Be Coppy now to me of grosser blood,
And teach them how to Warre. And you good Yeomen,
Whose Lymbes were made in England; shew us here
The mettell of your Pasture: let us sweare,
That you are worth your breeding: which I doubt not:
For there is none of you so meane and base,
That hath not Noble luster in your eyes.
I see you stand like Grey-hounds in the slips,
Straying upon the Start. The Game's afoot:
Follow your Spirit; and upon this Charge,
Cry, God for Harry, England, and S. George.

Alarm, and Chambers goe off.

Enter Nim, Bardolph, Pistol, and Boy.

Bard. On, on, on, on, on, to the breach, to the breach.

Nim. Pray thee Corporall stay, the Knocks are too hot: and for mine owne part, I have not a Case of Lives:
the humor of it is too hot, that is the very plaine-Song
of it.

Pist. The plaine-Song is most just: for humors doe abound: Knocks goe and come: Gods Vassals drop and dye: and Sword and Shield, in bloody Field, doth winne immortall fame:

Boy. Would I were in an Ale-house in London, I would give all my fame for a Pot of Ale, and safety.

k

Pist. And

Pist. And I: If wishes would prevaile with me, my purpose should not faile with me; but thither would I high.

Boy. As duly, but not as truly, as Bird doth sing on bough.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Vp to the breach, you Dogges; avant you Cullions.

Pist. Be mercifull great Duke to men of Mould: abate thy Rage, abate thy manly Rage; abate thy Rage; great Duke. Good Bawcocke bate thy Rage: use lenity sweet Chucke.

Nim. These be good humors: your Honor wins bad humors.

Exit.

Boy. As young as I am, I have observ'd these three Swafhers. I am Boy to them all three, but all they three, though they would serve me, could not be Man to me; for indeed three such Antiques do not amount to a man: for Bardolph, hee is white-liver'd, and red-fac'd; by the meanes whereof, a fac's it out, but fights not: for Pistol, hee hath a killing Tongue, and a quiet Sword; by the meanes whereof, a breakes Words, and keepes whole Weapons: for Nim, hee hath heard, that men of few Words are the best men, and therefore hee scornes to say his Prayers, lest a should be thought a Coward: but his few bad Words are matcht with as few good Deeds; for a never broke any mans Head but his owne, and that was against a Post, when he was drunke. They will steale any thing, and call it Purchase. Bardolph stole a Lute-case, bore it twelve Leagues, and sold it for three halpence. Nim and Bardolph are sworne Brothers in filching: and in Callice they stole a fire-shovell. I knew by that peece of Service, the men would carry Coales. They would have me as familiar with mens Pockets, as their Gloves or their Hand-kerchers: which makes much against my Manhood, if I should take from anothers Pocket, to put into mine; for it is plaine pocketting up of Wrongs. I must leave them, and seeke some better Service: their Villany goes against my weake stomacke, and therefore I must cast it up.

Exit.

Enter Gower.

Gower. Captaine Fluellen, you must come presently to the Mynes; the Duke of Gloucester would speake with you.

Flu. To the Mynes? Tell you the Duke, it is not so good to come to the Mynes: for looke you, the Mynes are not according to the disciplines of the Warre; the cavities of it is not sufficient: for looke you, th'athversary, you may discusse unto the Duke, looke you, is digt himsefse foure yard under the Countermine: by Cheshu, I thinke a will plowe up all, if there is not better directions.

Gower. The Duke of Gloucester, to whom the Order of the Siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irish man, a very valiant Gentleman yfaith.

Welch. It is Captaine Mackmorrice, is it not?

Gower. I thinke it be.

Welch. By Cheshu he is an Ass, as in the World, I will verifie as much in his Beard: he ha's no more directions in the true disciplines of the Warres, looke you, of the Roman disciplines, then is a Puppy-dog.

Enter Mackmorrice, and Captaine Iamy.

Gower. Here a comes, and the Scots Captaine, Captaine Iamy, with him.

Welch. Captaine Iamy is a mervellous valorous Gentleman, that is certain, and of great expedition and knowledge in th'aunchiant Warres, upon my particlarknowledge of his directions: by Cheshu he will maintaine Argument as well as any Militarie man in the World, in the disciplines of the Pristine Warres of the Romans.

Scot. I say gudday, Captaine Fluellen.

Welch. Godden to your Worship, good Captaine Iames.

Gower. How now Captaine Mackmorrice, have you quit the Mynes? have the Pioners given o're?

Irish. By Chrish Law tis ill done: the Worke ish give over, the Trompet sound the Retreat. By my Hand I sweare, and my fathers Soule, the Worke ish ill done: it ish give over: I would have blowed up the Towne, so Chrish save me law, in an houre. O tis ill done, tis ill done: by my Hand tis ill done.

Welch. Captaine Mackmorrice, I beseech you now, will you voutsafe me, looke you, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the Warre, the Roman Warres, in the way of Argument, looke you, and friendly communication: partly to satisfie my Opinion, and partly for the satisfaction, looke you, of my Mind: as touching the direction of the Military discipline, that is the Point.

Scot. It fall be vary gud, gud feith, gud Captens both, and I fall quit you with gud leve, as I may pick occasions that fall I mary:

Irish. It is no time to discourse, so Chrish save me the day is hot, and the Weather, and the Warres, and the King, and the Dukes: it is no time to discourse, the Towne is beseech'd: and the Trumpet call us to the breach, and we talke, and be Chrish do nothing, tis shame for us all: so God sa'me tis shame to stand still, it is shame by my hand: and there is Throats to be cut, and Workes to be done, and there ish nothing done, so Chrish sa'me law.

Scot. By the Mes, ere theise eyes of mine take themselves to slomber, ayle de gud service, or Ile ligge i'th grund for it; ay, or goe to death: and Ile pay't as valorously as I may, that fall I fuerly do, that is the breff and the long: mary, I wad full faine heard some question tween you tway.

Welch. Captaine Mackmorrice, I thinke, looke you, under your correction, there is not many of your Nation.

Irish. Of my Nation? What ish my Nation? Is it a Villaine, and a Bastard, and a Knave, and a Rascall. What ish my Nation? Who talks of my Nation?

Welch. Looke you, if you take the matter otherwise then is meant, Captaine Mackmorrice, peradventure I shal thinke you doe not use me with that affability, as in discretion you ought to use me, looke you, being as good a man as your selfe both in the disciplines of Warre, and in the derivation of my Birth, and in other particularities.

Irish. I do not know you so good a man as my selfe: so Crish save me, I will cut off your Head.

Gower. Gentlemen both, you will mistake each other.

Scot. A, that's a foule fault.

A Parley.

Gower. The Towne sounds a Parley.

Welch. Captaine Mackmorrice, when there is more better opportunity to be required, looke you, I will bee so bold as to tell you, I know the disciplines of Warre, and there is an end.

Exit.

Enter the King and all his Traine before the Gates.

King. How yet resolves the Governour of the Towne? This is the latest Parle we will admit:

There

Therefore to our best mercy give your selves,
 Or like to men proud of destruction,
 Beside us to our worst: for as I am a Souldier,
 A Name that in my thoughts becomes me best;
 If I begin the batt'rie once againe,
 I will not leave the halfe-achieved Harflew,
 Till in her ashes she lye buried.
 The Gates of Mercy shall be all shut up,
 And the flesh'd Souldier, rough and hard of heart,
 In liberty of bloody hand, shall raunce
 With Conscience wide as Hell, mowing like Grass
 Your fresh faire Virgins, and your flowring Infants.
 What is it then to me, if impious Warre,
 Arrayed in games like to the Prince of Fiends,
 Doe with his smyrcht complexion all fell feats,
 Enlynckt to waste and desolation?
 What is't to me, when you your selves are cause,
 If your pure Maydens fall into the hand
 Of hot and forcing Violation?
 What Reyne can hold licencious Wickednesse,
 When downe the Hill he holds his fierce Carriere?
 We may as bootlesse spend our vaine Command
 Vpon th'enraged Souldiers in their spoyle,
 As send Precepts to the Leviathan to come ashore.
 Therefore, you men of Harflew,
 Take pittie of your Towne and of your People,
 Whiles yet my Souldiers are in my Command,
 Whiles yet the coole and temperate Wind of Grace
 O're-blowes the filthy and contagious Clouds
 Of heady Murther, Spoyle, and Villany.
 If not: why in a moment looke to see
 The blind and bloody Souldier, with foule hand
 Desire the Locks of your shrill-shrieking Daughters:
 Your Fathers taken by the silver Beards,
 And their most reverend Heads dashed to the Walls:
 Your naked Infants spitted upon Pykes,
 Whiles the mad Mothers, with their howles confus'd,
 Doe breake the Clouds; as did the Wives of Iewry,
 At Herods bloody-hunting slaughter-men.
 What say you? Will you yeeld, and this avoyd?
 Or guilty in defence, be thus destroy'd.

Enter Governour.

Gover. Our expectation hath this day an end:
 The Dolphin, whom of Succours we entreated,
 Returnes us, that his Powers are yet not ready;
 To rayse to great a Siege: Therefore great King,
 We yeeld our Towne and Lives to thy soft Mercy:
 Enter our Gates, dispose of us and ours,
 For we no longer are defensible.

King. Open your Gates: Come Vnckle Exeter,
 Goe you and enter Harflew, there remaine,
 And fortifie it strongly 'gainst the French:
 Vse mercy to them all for us, deare Vnckle.
 The Winter comming on, and Sicknesse growing
 Vpon our Souldiers, we will retyre to Calis.
 To night in Harflew will we be your Guest,
 Tomorrow for the March are we adrest.

Flourish, and enter the Towne.

Enter Katherine and an old Gentlewoman.

Kath. Alice, tu as esté en Angluterre, & tu parlois bien le Language.

Alice. En peu Madame.

Kath. Je te prie m'enseigner, il faut que j'apprenne a parler.
 Comment appelle vous la main en Anglois?

Alice. La main, il est appelle, de Hand.

Kath. De Hand.

Alice. Et le doyt.

Kat. Le doyt, ma foy ie oublie le doyt, mais ie me souviendray le doyt, ie pense qu'ils ont appelle de fingers, ou de fingres.

Alice. La main, de Hand, le doyt, le Fingres, le pense que ie suis le bon escholier.

Kath. I'ay gaigné deux mots d'Anglois viftement, comment
 appelle vous les ongles?

Alice. Les ongles, les appellons de Nayles.

Kath. De Nayles escoutez: dites moy, si ie parle bien: de Hand, de Fingres, de Nayles.

Alice. C'est bien dit Madame, il est fort bon Anglois.

Kath. Dites moy en Anglois le bras.

Alice. De Arme, Madame.

Kath. Et le coude.

Alice. D'Elbow.

Kath. D'Elbow: Je m'en fais la repetition de tous les mots que vous m'avez appris des a present.

Alice. Il est trop difficile Madame, comme ie pense.

Kath. Excuse moy Alice, escoute, d'Hand, de Fingre, de Nayles, d'Arme, de Bilbow.

Alice. D'elbow, Madame.

Kath. O Seigneur Dieu, ie m'en oublie d'Elbow, comment
 appelle vous le col.

Alice. De Neck, Madame.

Kath. De Neck, & le manson.

Alice. de Chin.

Kath. De Sin: le col, de Neck, le manson, de Sin.

Alice. Ouy. Sauf vostre honneur en verité vous prononciez les mots aussi droit, que le Natis d'Angleterre.

Kath. Je ne doute point d'apprendre par la grace de Dieu, & en peu de temps.

Ali. N'avez vous pas desja oublie ce que ie vous ay enseigné.

Kath. Nomme, ie reciteray a vous promptement, d'Hand, de Fingre, de Nayles, Madame.

Alice. De Nayles, Madame.

Kath. De Nayles, de Arme, de Ilbow.

Alice. Sans vostre honneur d'elbow.

Kath. Ainsi dis-je d'elbow, de Neck, & de Sin: cōment ap-pelle vous les pieds & de roba.

Alice. Le foot Madame, & le Count.

Kath. Le Foot, & le Count: O Seigneur Dieu, ce sont des mots mauuais, corruptible & impudique, & non pour les Dames d'Honneur d'user: Je ne voudrois prononcer ces mots de-vant les Seigneurs de France, pour tout le monde, il faut le Foot & le Count, neant moins, le reciteray un autrefois ma lecon ensemble, d'Hand, de Fingre, de Nayles, d'Arme, d'Elbow, de Neck, de Sin, de Foot, le Count.

Alice. Excellent, Madame.

Kath. C'est assez pour une fois, allons nous en disner.

Exeunt.

Enter the King of France, the Dolphin, the Constable of France, and others.

King. 'Tis certaine he hath past the River Some.

Const. And if he be not fought withall, my Lord,
 Let us not live in France: let us quit all,
 And give our Vineyards to a barbarous People,

Dolph. O Dieu vivant: Shall a few Sprayes of us,
 The emptying of our Fathers Luxury,
 Our Syens, put in wilde and savage Stock,
 Spirt up so suddenly into the Clouds,
 And over-looke their Grafters?

Brit. Normans, but bastard Normans, Norman bastards:

Mort de ma vie, if they march along
 Vnfought withall, but I will sell my Dukedome,

To buy a slobbry and a durty Farme
In that nooke-shotten Ile of Albion.

Const. Dieu de Batailles, where have they this mettell?
Is not their Clymate foggy, raw, and dull?
On whom, as in despite, the Sunne lookes pale,
Killing their Fruit with frownes? Can sodden Water,
A Drench for sur-reyn'd Iades, their Barly broth,
Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat?
And shall our quick blood, spirited with Wine,
Seeme frostie? O, for honor of our Land,
Let us not hang like roping Ifyckles
Vpon our Houses Thatch, whiles a more frosty People
Sweat drops of gallant Youth in our rich fields:
Poore we may call them, in their Native Lords.

Dolph. By Faith and Honor,
Our Madames mock at us, and plainly say,
Our Mettell is bred out, and they will give Their bodies to the Lust of English Youth,
To new-store France with Bastard Warriors.

Brit. They bid us to the English Dancing-Schooles,
And teach Lavolta's high, and swift Carranto's
Saying, our Grace is onely in our Heeles,
And that we are most lofty Run-awayes.

King. Where is Montjoy the Herald? speed him hence,
Let him greet England with our sharpe defiance.
Vp Princes, and with spirit of Honor edged,
More sharper then your Swords, high to the field:
Charles Delabreth, High Constable of France,
You Dukes of Orleanes, Burbon, and of Berry,
Alancon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgonie,
Jaques Chattillon, Rambures, Vandemont,
Beumont, Grand Pree, Roussi, and Faulconbridge,
Loys, Lestrale, Bousiquall, and Charaloyes,
High Dukes, great Princes, Barons, Lords, and Kings;
For your great Seats, now quit you of great shames:
Barre Harry England, that sweepes through our Land
With Penons painted in the blood of Harflew:
Rush on his Hoast, as doth the melted Snow
Vpon the Valleyes, whose low Vassall Seat,
The Alpes doth spit, and void his rhowme upon.
Goe downe upon him, you have Power enough,
And in a Captive Chariot, into Roan
Bring him our Prisoner.

Const. This becomes the Great.
Sorry am I his numbers are so few,
His Souldiers sick, and famisht in their Martires
For I am sure, when he shall see our Army,
Hee'll drop his heart into the sinck of feare,
And for atchievement, offer us his Ransome.

King. Therefore Lord Constable, haste on Montjoy,
And let him say to England, that we send,
To know what willing Ransome he will give.
Prince Dolphin, you shall stay with us in Roan.

Dolph. Not so, I doe beseech your Majetty.

King. Be patient, for you shall remaine with us.
Now forth Lord Constable, and Princes all:
And quickly bring us word of Englands fall. Exeunt.

Enter Captaines, English and VVelch, Gower, and Fluellen.

Gower. How now Captaine Fluellen, come you from the Bridge?

Flu. I assure you, there is very excellent Services committed at the Bridge.

Gow. Is the Duke of Exeter safe?

Flu. The Duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Agamemnon, and a man that I love and honour with my and my heart, and my duty, and my live, and my and my uttermost power. He is not, God be pray-blessed, any hurt in the World, but keepes the most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an chient Lieutenant there at the Pridge, I thinke in my conscience hee is as valiant a man as Marke Antony.

hee is a man of no estimation in the World, but I doe him doe as gallant service.

Gow. What doe you call him?

Flu. He is call'd aunchient Pistoll.

Gow. I know him not.

Enter Pistoll.

Flu. Here is the man.

Pist. Captaine, I thee beseech to doe me favours: the Duke of Exeter doth love thee well.

Flu. I, I prayse God, and I have merited some love at his hands.

Pist. Bardolph, a Souldier firme and sound of heart, and of buxome valour, hath by cruell Fate, and giddy Fortunes furious fickle Wheele, that goddesse blind, that stands upon the rolling restlesse Stone.

Flu. By your patience, aunchient Pistoll: Fortune is painted blinde, with a Muffler afore his eyes, to signifie to you, that Fortune is blinde; and shee is painted with with a Wheele, to signifie to you, which is the Morall of it, that shee is turning and inconstant, and mutabill, and variation: and her foot, looke you, is fixed upon a Sphericall Stone, which rowles, and rowles, and rowles in good truth, the Poet makes a most excellent descrip-on of it: Fortune is an excellent Morall.

Pist. Fortune is Bardolph's foe, and frownes on him:
for he hath stolne a Pax, and hanged must a be: damned death: let Gallowes gape for Dogge, let Man goe free, and let not Hempe his Wind-pipe suffocate: but Exeter
hath given the doome of death, for Pax of little price.
Therefore goe speake, the Duke will heare thy voyce, and let not Bardolph's vitall thred bee cut with edge of Penny-Cord, and vile reproach. Speake Captaine for his Life, and I will thee requite.

Flu. Aunchient Pistoll, I doe partly understand your meaning.

Pist. Why then rejoyce therefore.

Flu. Certainly Aunchient, it is not a thing to rejoyce at: for if, looke you, he were my Brother, I would desire the Duke to use his good pleasure, and put him to execution; for discipline ought to be used.

Pist. Dye, and be damn'd, and Figo for thy friendship.

Flu. It is well.

Pist. The Figge of Spaine. Exit.

Flu. Very good.

Gow. Why, this is an arrant counterfeite Rascall, I remember him now: a Bawd, a Cut-purse.

Flu. He assure you, a utr'ed as prave words at the Pridge, as you shall see in a Summers day: but it is very well: what he ha's spoke to me, that is well I warrant you, when time is serve.

Gow. Why 'tis a Gull, a Foole, a Rogue, that now and then goes to the Warres, to grace himselfe at his returne into London, under the forme of a Souldier: and such fellowes are perfit in the Great Commanders Names, & they will learne you by rote where Services were done;
at such and such a Sconce, at such a Breach, at such a Convoy: who came off bravely, who was shot, who disgrac'd, what termes the Enemy stood on: and thus they conne perfitly in the phraze of Warre; which they trick up with new-tuned Oathes: and what a Beard of the Generalls Cut, and a horride Sute of the Campe, will doe among foming Bottles, and Ale-washt wits, is wonderfull to be thought on: but you must learne to know such standers of the age, or else you may be marvellously misooke.

Flu. I tell you what, Captaine Gower: I doe perceive hee is not the man that hee would gladly make shew to the World hee is: if I finde a hole in his Coat, I will tell him my minde: hearken you, the King is comming, and I must speake with him from the Pridge.

Drum and Colours. Enter the King and his poore Souldiers.

Flu. God plesse your Majesty.

King. How now Fluellen, cam'st thou from the Bridge?

Flu. I, so please your Majesty: The Duke of Exeter ha's very gallantly maintain'd the Pridge; the French is gone off, looke you, and there is gallant and most prave passages: marry, th'athversarie was have possession of the Pridge, but he is enforced to retyre, and the Duke of Exeter is Master of the Pridge: I can tell your Majesty, the Duke is a prave man.

King. What men have you lost, Fluellen?

Flu. The perdition of th'athversary hath beene very great, reasonable great: mary for my part, I thinke the Duke hath lost never a man, but one that is like to be executed for robbing a Church, one Bardolph, if your Majesty know the man: his face is all bubukles and whelkes, and knobs, and flames a fire, and his lippes blowes at his nose, and it is like a coale of fire, sometimes plew, and sometimes red, but his nose is executed, and his fire's out.

King. Wee would have all such offenders so cut off: & we give expresse charge, that in our Martches through the Countrey, there bee nothing compell'd from the Villages; nothing taken, but pay'd for: none of the French upbrayded or abused in disdainefull Language; for when Levity and Cruelty play for a Kingdome, the gentler Gamester is the soonest winner.

Tucket. Enter Mountjoy.

Mountjoy. You know me by my habit.

King. Well then, I know thee: what shall I know of thee?

Mountjoy. My Maisters mind.

King. Vnfold it.

Mountjoy. Thus sayes my King: Say thou to Harry of England, Though we seem'd dead, we bid but sleepe: Advantage is a better Souldier then rashnesse. Tell him, wee could have rebuk'd him at Harflew, but that wee thought not good to bruise an injury, till it were full ripe. Now we speake upon our Q. and our voyce is imperiall: England shall repent his folly, see his weaknesse, and admire our sufferance. Bid him therefore consider of his ransome, which must proportion the losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, the disgrace wee have disgested; which in weight to re-answer, his perrinckle would bow under. For our losses, his Exchequer is too poore; for th'effusion of our blood, the Muster of his Kingdome too faint a number; and for our disgrace, his owne person kneeling at our feet, but a weake and worthless satisfaction. To this adde defiance: and tell him for conclusion, he hath betrayed his followers, whose condemnation is pronounc't: So farre my King and Maister, so much my Office.

King. What is thy name? I know thy quality.

Mountjoy. Mountjoy.

King. Thou doo'st thy Office fairely. Turne thee back, And tell thy King, I doe not seeke him now, But could be willing to march on to Callice, Without impeachment: for to say the sooth, Though 'tis no wisdom to confesse so much Vnto an enemy of Craft and Vantage, My people are with sicknesse much enfeebled, My numbers lessen'd: and those few I have, Almost no better then so many French; Who when they were in health, I tell thee Herald, I thought, upon one payre of English Legges Did march three Frenchmen. Yet forgive me God, That I doe bragge thus; this your ayre of France Hath blowne that vice in me. I must repent: Goe therefore tell thy Maister, here I am; My Ransome, is this frayle and worthless Trunke; My Army, but a weake and sickly Guard: Yet God before, tell him we will come on, Though France himselfe, and such another Neighbor Stand in our way. There's for thy labour Mountjoy. Goe bid thy Maister well advise himselfe, If we may passe, we will: if we be hindred, We shall your tawny ground with your red blood Discolour: and so Mountjoy fare you well. The summe of all our Answer is but this: We would not seeke a Battaille as we are, Nor as we are, we say wee will not shun it: So tell your Maister.

Mountjoy. I shall deliver so: Thanks to your Highnesse.

Glow. I hope they will not come upon us now.

King. We are in Gods hand, Brother, not in theirs: March to the Bridge, it now drawes toward night, Beyond the River wee'll encampe our selves, And on to morrow bid them march away. Exeunt.

Enter the Constable of France, the Lord Ramburs, Orleans, Dolphin, with others.

Const. Tut, I have the best Armour of the World: would it were day.

Orl. You have an excellent Armour: but let my Horse have his due.

Const. It is the best Horse of Europe.

Orl. Will it never be Morning?

Dolph. My Lord of Orleans, and my Lord High Constable, you talke of Horse and Armour?

Orl. You are as well provided of both, as any Prince in the World.

Dolph. What a long Night is this? I will not change my Horse with any that treads but on foure pasternes: ch'ha: he bounds from the Earth, as if his entrayles were hayres: le Cheval volant, the Pegasus, ches les narinos de feu. When I bestryde him, I soare, I am a Hawke: he trots the ayre: the Earth sings, when he touches it: the basest horne of his hoose, is more Muscalle then the Pipe of Hermes.

Orl. Hee's of the colour of the Nutmeg.

Dolph. And of the heat of the Ginger. It is a Beast for Persens: hee is pure Ayre and Fire; and the dull Elements of Earth and Water never appeare in him, but only in patient stilnesse while his Rider mounts him: hee is indeede a Horse, and all other lades you may call Beasts.

Const. Indeed my Lord, it is a most absolute and excellent Horse.

Dolph. It is the Prince of Palfrayes, his Neigh is like the bidding of a Monarch, and his countenance enforces Homage.

Orl. No more Cousin.

Dolph. Nay, the man hath no wit, that cannot from the rising of the Larke to the lodging of the Lambe, vary deserved prayse on my Palfray: it is a Threame as fluent as the Sea: Turne the Sands into eloquent tongues, and my Horse is argument for them all: 'tis a subject for a Soueraigne to reason on, and for a Soueraignes Soueraigne to ride on: And for the World, familiar to us, and unknowne, to lay apart their particular Functions, and wonder at him. I once writ a Sonnet in his prayse, and began thus, Wonder of Nature.

Orleance. I have heard a Sonnet begin so to ones Mistresse.

Dolph. Then did they imitate that which I compos'd to my Courser, for my Horse is my Mistresse.

Orl. Your Mistresse beares well.

Well. Me well, which is the prescript prayse and perfection of a good and particular Mistresse.

Const. Nay, for me thought yesterday your Mistresse shrewdly shooke your back.

Dolph. So perhaps did yours.

Const. Mine was not bridled.

Dolph. O then belike she was old and gentle, and you rode like a Kerne of Ireland, your French Horse off, and in your strait Stroffers.

Const. You have good judgement in Horsemanship.

Dolph. Be warn'd by me then: they that ride so, and ride not warily, fall into foule Boggs: I had rather have my Horse to my Mistresse.

Const. I had as live have my Mistresse a Iade.

Dolph. I tell thee Constable, my Mistresse weares his owne hayre.

Const. I could make as true a boast as that, if I had a Sow to my Mistresse.

Dolph. Le chien est retourné a son propre vomissement, est la levye lavée au boubvier: thou mak'st use of any thing.

Const. Yet doe I not use my Horse for my Mistresse, or any such Proverbe, so little kin to the purpose.

Ramb. My Lord Constable, the Armour that I saw in your Tent to night, are those Starres or Sunnes upon it?

Const. Starres my Lord.

Dolph. Some of them will fall to morrow, I hope.

Const. And yet my Sky shall not want.

Dolph. That may be, for you beare a many superfluously, and 'twere more honor some were away.

Const. Ev'n as your Horse beares your prayses, who would trot as wel, were some of your bragges dismounted.

Dolph. Would I were able to loade him with his desert. Will it never be day? I will trot to morrow a mile, and my way shal be paved with English Faces.

Const. I will not say so, for feare I should be fac't out of my way: but I would it were morning, for I would faine be about the eares of the English.

Ramb. Who will goe to Hazard with me for twenty Prisoners?

Const. You must first goe your selfe to hazard, ere you have them.

Dolph. 'Tis Mid-night, Ile goe arme my selfe. Exit.

Orl. The Dolphin longs for morning.

Ramb. He longs to eate the English.

Const. I thinke he will eate all he kills.

Orl. By the white Hand of my Lady, hee's a gallant Prince.

Const. Swear by her Foot, that she may tread out the Oath.

Orleance. He is simply the most active Gentleman of France.

Const. Doing is activity, and he will still be doing.

Orl. He never did harme, that I heard of.

Const. Nor will doe none to morrow: hee will keepe that good name still.

Orl. I know him to be valiant.

Const. I was told that, by one that knowes him better then you

Orl. What's hee?

Const. Marry hee told me so himselfe, and hee said he car'd not who knew it.

Orleance. He needes not, it is no hidden vertue in him.

Const. By my faith Sir, but it is: never any body saw it, but his Lacquey: 'tis a hooded valour, and when it appeares, it will bate.

Orl. Ill will never sayd well.

Const. I will cap that Proverbe with, There is flattery in friendship.

Orl. And I will take up that with, Give the Devill his due.

Const. Well plac't: there stands your friend for the Devill: have at the very eye of that Proverbe with, A Pox of the Devill.

Orl. You are the better at Proverbs, by how much a Fooles Bolt is soone shot.

Const. You have shot over.

Orl. 'Tis not the first time you were over-shot.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My Lord high Constable, the English lye within fiftene hundred paces of your Tents.

Const. Who hath measur'd the ground?

Mess. The Lord Grandpre.

Const. A valiant and most expert Gentleman. Would it were day? Alas poore Harry of England: hee longs not for the Dawning, as wee doe.

Orl. What a wretched and peevish fellow is this King of England, to mope with his fat-brain'd followers to farre out of his knowledge.

Const. If the English had any apprehension, they would runne away.

Orl. That they lack: for if their heads had any intellectual Armour, they could never weare such heavy Head-pieces.

Ramb. That Iland of England breedes very valiant Creatures; their Mastiffes are of vnmatchable courage.

Orleance. Foolish Curres, that runne winking into the mouth of a Russian Beare, & have their heads crush'd like rotten Apples: you may as well say, that's a valiant Flea, that dare eate his breakefast on the Lippe of a Lyon.

Const. Iust, iust: and the men doe sympathize with the Mastiffes; in robustious and rough comming on, leaving their Wits with their Wives: and then give them great Meales of Beefe, and Iron and Steele; they will eate like Wolves, and fight like Devils.

Orl. I.

Orl. I, but these English are shrewdly out of Beeefe.
Const. Then shall we finde to morrow, they have only stomackes to eate, and none to fight. Now is it time to arme: come, shall we about it?

Orl. It is now two a Clock: but let me see, by ten
 We shall have each a hundred English men. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius.

Chorus.

Now entertaine conjecture of a time,
 When creeping Murmure and the poring Darke
 Fills the wide Vessell of the Vniverse.
 From Camp to Camp, through the foule Wob of Night
 The Humme of either Army stilly sounds,
 That the fixt Centinels almost receive
 The secret Whispers of each others Watch.
 Fire answers fire, and through their paly flames
 Each Battaille sees the others umber'd face.
 Steed threatens Steed, in high and boattfull Neighs
 Piercing the Nights dull Eare: and from the Tents,
 The Armourers accomplishing the Knights,
 With busie Hammers closing Rivets up,
 Give dreadfull note of preparation.
 The Countrey Cocks doe crow, the Clocks doe towle:
 And the third howre of drowisie Morning nam'd,
 Prowd of their Numbers, and secure in Soule,
 The confident and over-lusty French,
 Doe the low-rated English play at Dice;
 And chide the creeple-tardy-gated Night,
 Who like a foule and ougly Witch doth limpe
 So tediously away. The poore condemned English,
 Like Sacrifices, by their watchfull Fires
 Sit patiently, and inly ruminare
 The Mornings danger: and their gesture sad,
 Invelting lanke-leane Cheeks, and Warre-worne Coats,
 Presented them unto the gazing Moone
 So many horride Ghosts. O now, who will behold
 The Royall Captaine of this ruin'd Band
 Walking from Watch to Watch, from Tent to Tent;
 Let him cry, Prayse and Glory on his head:
 For forth he goes, and visits all his Hoast,
 Bidsthem good morrow with a modest Smyle,
 And calls them Brothers, Friends, and Countreymen.
 Vpon his Royall Face there is no note,
 How dread an Army hath enrounded him;
 Nor doth he dedicate one jot of Colour
 Vnto the weary and all-watched Night:
 But freshly lookes, and over-bears Attaint,
 With chearefull semblance, and sweet Majesty:
 That every Wretch, pining and pale before,
 Beholding him, plucks comfort from his Lookes.
 A Largeesse universall, like the Sunne,
 His liberall Eye doth give to every one,
 Thawing cold feare, that meane and gentle all
 Behold, as may unworthinesse define,
 A little touch of Harry in the Night,
 And so our Scene must to the Battaille flye:
 Where, O for pittie, we shall much disgrace,
 With foure or five most vile and ragged foyles,
 (Right ill dispos'd, in brawle ridiculous)

The Name of Agincourt. Yet sit and see,
 Minding true things, by what their Mock'ries bee.

Exit.

Enter the King, Bedford, and Gloucester.

King. Gloster, 'tis true that we are in great danger,
 The greater therefore should our Courage be.
 God morrow Brother Bedford: God Almighty,
 There is some soule of goodnesse in things evill,
 Would men observingly distill it out.
 For our bad Neighbour makes us early stirrers,
 Which is both healthfull, and good husbandry.
 Besides, they are our outward Consciences,
 And Preachers to us all; admonishing,
 That we should dresse us fairely for our end.
 Thus may we gather Honey from the Weed,
 And make a Morall of the Divell himselfe.

Enter Erpingham.

Good morrow old Sir Thomas Erpingham:
 A good soft Pillow for that good white Head,
 Were better then a churlish turfe of France.

Erpin. Not so my Liege, this Lodging likes me better,
 Since I may say, now lye I like a King.

King. 'Tis good for men to love their present paine,
 Vpon example, so the Spirit is eased:
 And when the Mind is quickned, out of doubt
 The Organs, though defunct and dead before,
 Breake up their drowisie Grave, and newly move
 With calted slough, and fresh legerity.
 Lend me thy Cloake Sir Thomas: Brothers both,
 Commend me to the Princes in our Campe;
 Doe my good morrow to them, and anon
 Desire them all to my Pavillion.

Gloster. We shall, my Liege.

Erping. Shall I attend your Grace?

King. No my good Knight:
 Goe with my Brothers to my Lords of England:
 I and my Bosome must debate awhile,
 And then I would no other company.

Erping. The Lord in Heauen blesse thee, Noble Harry
Exeunt.

King. God a mercy old Heart, thou speak'st chearefully.

Enter Pistoll.

Pist. Che vous la?

King. A friend.

Pist. Discusse unto me, art thou Officer, or art thou base, common, and popular?

King. I am a Gentleman of a Company.

Pist. Trayl'st thou the puissant Pyke?

King. Even so: what are you?

Pist. As good a Gentleman as the Emperor.

King. Then you are a better then the King.

Pist. The King's a Bawcocke, and a Heart of Gold, a Lad of Life, an Impe of Fame, of Parents good, of Fift most valiant: I kisse his durty shooe, and from heart-string I love the lovely Bully. What is thy Name?

King. Harry le Roy.

Pi. Le Roy? a Cornish Name: art thou of Cornish Crew?

King. No, I am a Welchman.

Pist. Know'st thou Fluellen?

King. Yes.

Pist. Tell him Ile knock his Leeke about his Pate upon
 S. Davies day.

King. Doe not you weare your Dagger in your Cappe that day, least he knock that about yours.

Pist. Art

Pist. Art thou his friend?

King. And his Kinsman too.

Pist. The Figo for thee then.

King. I thanke you: God be with you.

Pist. My name is Pistol call'd.

Exit.

King. It forts well with your fiercenesse.

Manner King.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gower. Captaine Fluellen.

Flu. So, in the Name of Iesu Christ, speake fewer: it is the greatest admiration in the universall World, when the true and aunchient Prerogatives and Lawes of the Warres is not kept: if you would take the paines but to examine the Warres of Pompey the Great, you shall finde, I warrant you, that there is no tiddle taddle nor pibble bable in Pompeys Campe: I warrant you, you shall finde the Ceremonies of the Warres, and the Cares of it, and the Formes of it, and the Sobriety of it, and the Modesty of it, to be otherwise.

Gower. Why the Enemie is lowd, you heare him all Night.

Flu. If the Enemie is an Ass and a Foole, and a prating Coxcombe; is it meet, thinke you, that wee should also, looke you, be an Ass and a Foole, and a prating Coxcombe, in your owne conscience now?

Gow. I will speake lower.

Flu. I pray you, and beseech you, that you will. Exit.

King. Though it appeare a little out of fashion, There is much care and valour in this Welchman.

Enter three Souldiers, Iohn Bates, Alexander Court, and Michael Williams.

Court. Brother Iohn Bates, is not that the Morning which breakes yonder?

Bates. I thinke it be: but wee have no great cause to desire the approach of day.

Williams. Wee see yonder the beginning of the day, but I thinke wee shall never see the end of it. Who goes there?

King. A friend.

Will. Vnder what Captaine serve you?

King. Vnder Sir Iohn Erpingham.

Will. A good old Commander, and a most kinde Gentleman: I pray you, what thinke he of our estate?

King. Even as men wrackt upon a Sand, that looke to be waht off the next Tyde.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the King?

King. No: nor it is not meet he should: for though I speake it to you, I thinke the King is but a man, as I am: the Violet smells to him, as it doth to me; the Element shewes to him, as it doth to me; all his fences have but humane Conditions: his Ceremonies layd by, in his Nakednesse he appeares but a man; and though his affections are higher mounted then ours, yet when they stoupe, they stoupe with the like wing: therefore, when he sees reason of feares, as we doe; his feares, out of doubt, be of the same rellish as ours are: yet in reason, no man should possesse him with any appearance of feare; least hee, by shewing it, should dis-hearten his Army.

Bates. He may shew what outward courage he will: but I beleeve as cold a Night as 'tis, hee could wish himselfe in Thames up to the Neck; and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here.

King. By my troth, I will speake my conscience of the King: I thinke hee would not wish himselfe any where, but where hee is.

Bates. Then would he were here alone; so should he be sure to be ransomed, and a many poore mens lives saved.

King. I dare say, you love him not so ill, to wish him here alone: howsoever you speake this to feeble other mens minds, me thinks I could not dye any where so contented, as in the Kings company; his Cause being iust, and his Quarrell honorable.

Will. That's more then we know.

Bates. I, or more then we should seeke after; for wee know enough, if wee know wee are the Kings Subjects: if his Cause be wrong, our obedience to the King wipes the Cryme of it out of us.

Williams. But if the Cause be not good, the King himselfe hath a heavy Reckoning to make, when all those Legges, and Armes, and Heads, chopt off in a Battaille, shall joyne together at the latter day, and cry all, Wee dyed at such a place, some swearing, some crying for a Surgeon; some upon their Wives left poore behind them; some upon the Debts they owe, some upon their Children rawly left: I am afraid, there are few dye well, that dye in Battaille: for how can they charitably dispose of any thing, when Blood is their argument? Now, if these men doe not dye well, it will be a black matter for the King, that led them to it; whom to disobey, were against all proportion of subjection.

King. So, if a Sonne that is by his Father sent about Merchandize, doe sinfully miscarry upon the Sea; the imputation of his wickednesse, by your rule, should be imposed upon his Father that sent him: or if a Servant, under his Maisters command, transporting a summe of Money, be assailed by Robbers, and die in many irreconcilable Iniquities; you may call the businesse of the Maister the author of the Servants damnation: but this is not so. The King is not bound to answer the particular endings of his Souldiers, the Father of his Sonne, nor the Maister of his Servant; for they purpose not their death, when they purpose their services. Besides, there is no King, be his Cause never so spotlesse, if it come to the arbitrement of Swords, can trye it out with all unspotted Souldiers: some (peradventure) have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived Murther; some, of beguiling Virgins with the broken Seales of Perjury; some, making the Warres their Bulwarke, that have before gored the gentle Bosome of Peace with Pillage and Robberie. Now, if these men have defeated the Law, and outrunne Native punishment; though they can out-strip men, they have no wings to flye from God. Warre is his Beadle, Warre is his Vengeance: so that here men are punished, for before breach of the Kings Lawes, in now the Kings Quarrell: where they feared the death, they have borne life away; and where they would be safe, they perish. Then if they dye unprovided, no more is the King guilty of their damnation, then hee was before guilty of those Impieties, for the which they are now visited. Every Subjects Duty is the Kings, but every Subjects Soule is his owne. Therefore should every Souldier in the Warres doe as every sicke man in his Bed, wash every Moth out of his Conscience: and dying so, Death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost, wherein such preparation was gayned: and in him that escapes, it were not sinne to thinke, that making God so free an offer, he let him outlive that day, to see his Greatnesse, and to teach others how they should prepare.

Will. This

Will. 'Tis certaine, every man that dyes ill, the ill upon his owne head, the King is not to answer it.

Bates. I doe not desire hee should answer for me, and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

King. I my selfe heard the King say he would not be ransom'd.

Will. I, hee said so, to make us fight chearefully: but when our throats are cut, hee may be ransom'd, and wee ne're the wiser.

King. If I live to see it, I will never trust his word after.

Will. You pay him then: that's a perillous shot out of an Elder Gunne, that a poore and a private displeasure can doe against a Monarch: you may as well goe about to turne the Sunne to yce, with fanning in his face with a Peacockes feather: You'le never trust his word after, come, 'tis a foolish saying.

King. Your reproofe is something too round, I should beangry with you, if the time were convenient.

Will. Let it bee a Quarrell betweene us, if you live.

King. I embrace it.

Will. How shall I know thee againe?

King. Give me any Gage of thine, and I will weare it in my Bonnet: Then if ever thou dar'st acknowledge it, I will make it my Quarrell.

Will. Heere's my Glove: Give mee another of thine.

King. There.

Will. This will I also weare in my Cap: if ever thou come to me, and say, after to morrow, This is my Glove, by this Hand I will take thee a box on the eare.

King. If ever I live to see it, I will challenge it.

Will. Thou dar'st as well be hang'd.

King. Well, I will doe it, though I take thee in the Kings company.

Will. Keepe thy word: fare thee well.

Bates. Be friends you English fooles, be friends, wee have French Quarrels enow, if you could tell how to reckon.

Exeunt Souldiers.

King. Indeepe the French may lay twenty French Crownes to one, they will beat us, for they beare them on their shoulders: but it is no English Treason to cut French Crownes, and to morrow the King himselfe will be a Clipper.

Vpon the King, let us our Lives, our Soules,
Our Debts, our carefull Wives,
Our Children, and our Sinnes, lay on the King:
We must beare all.

O hard Condition, Twin-borne with Greatnesse,
Subject to the breath of every foole, whose sence
No more can feeble, but his owne wringing.
What infinite hearts-ease must Kings neglect,
That private men enjoy?

And what have Kings, that Privates have not too,
Save Ceremonie, save generall Ceremonie?

And what art thou, thou Idoll Ceremonie?
What kind of god art thou? that suffer'st more
Of mortall griefes, then doe thy worshippers.

What are thy Rents? what are thy Commings in?
O Ceremonie, shew me but thy worth.

What is thy Soule of Adoration?
Art thou ought else but Place, Degree, and Forme,
Creating awe and feare in other men?
Wherein thou art lesse happy, being fear'd,
Then they in fearing.

What drink'st thou off, in stead of Homage sweet,
But poyson'd flatterie? O, be sick, great Greatnesse,
And bid thy Ceremonie give thee cure.

Thinks thou the fiery Fever will goe out
With titles blowne from Adulation?

Wilt it give place to flexure and low bending?

Canst thou, when thou command'st the beggers knee,

Command the health of it? No, thou proud Dreame,

That play'st so subtilly with a Kings Repose,

I am a King that find thee: and I know,

'Tis not the Balme, the Scepter, and the Ball,

The Sword, the Mace, the Crowne Imperiall,

The enter-tissued Robe of Gold and Pearle,

The farfed Title running fore the King,

The Throne he sits on: nor the Tyde of Pompe,

That beates upon the high shore of this World:

No, not all these, thirre-gorgeous Ceremonies,

Not all these, lay'd in bed Majesticall,

Can sleepe so soundly, as the wretched Slave:

Who with a body fill'd, and vacante mind,

Gets him to rest, cram'd with distressefull bread,

Never sees horride Night, the Child of Hell:

But like a Lacquey, from the Rise to Set,

Sweates in the eye of Phobus; and all Night

Sleepes in Elizium: next day after dawne,

Doth rise and helpe Hiperion to his Horse,

And followes so the ever-running yeere

With profitable labour to his Grave:

And but for Ceremonie, such a Wretch,

Winding up Dayes with toyle; and Nights with sleepe,

Had the fore-hand and vantage of a King.

The Slave, a Member of the Countreyes peace,

Enioyes it: but in grosse braine little wots,

What watch the King keepes, to maintaine the peace;

Whose howres, the Pesant best advantages.

Enter Erpingham.

Erp. My Lord, your Nobles jealous of your absence,
Seeke through your Campe to find you.

King. Good old Knight, collect them all together.
At my Tent: Ile be before thee.

Erp. I shall doo't, my Lord.

Exit.

King. O God of Battailles, Steele my Souldiers hearts,

Possesse them not with feare: Take from them now

The sence of reckning of th'opposed numbers:

Pluck their hearts from them. Not to day, O Lord,

O not to day, thinke not upon the fault

My Father made, in compassing the Crowne.

I Richards body have interred new,

And on it have bestowed more contrite teares,

Then from it issued forced drops of blood.

Fine hundred poore I have in yeerely pay,

Who twice a day their wither'd hands hold up

Toward Heaven, to pardon blood:

And I have bnilt two Chauntries,

Where the sad and solemne Priests sing still

For Richards Soule. More will I doe:

Though all that I can doe, is nothing worth;

Since that my Penitence comes after all,

Imploring pardon.

Enter Gloucester.

Glouc. My Liege.

King. My Brother Gloucesters voyce? I:

I know thy errand, I will goe with thee:

The day, my friend, and all things stay for me.

Exeunt.

Enter

Enter the Dolphin, Orleans, Ramburs, and Beaumont.

Orleans. The Sunne doth gild our Armour, up my Lords.

Dolph. Monte Cheual: My Horfe, Valer Lacquay: Ha.

Orl. Oh brave spirit.

Dolph. Via les ewes & terre.

Orl. Rien puis le air & feu.

Dolph. Cein, Cousin Orleans. Enter Constable.

Now my Lord Constable?

Const. Hearke how our Scedes, for present Service neigh.

Dolph. Mount them, and make incision in their Hides, That their hot blood may spin in English eyes, And doubt them with superfluous courage: ha.

Ram. What, will you have them weep our Horses blood? How shall we then behold their naturall teares?

Enter Messenger.

Messenger. The English are embattail'd, you French Peeres.

Const. To Horfe you gallant Princes, straight to Horfe. Doe but behold yond poore and starued Band, And your faire shew shall suck away their Soules, Leaving them but the shales and huskes of men. There is not worke enough for all our hands, Scarce blood enough in all their sickly Veines, To give each naked Curtlex a stayne, That our French Gallants shall to day draw out, And sheath for lack of sport. Let us but blow on them, The vapour of our Valour will o're-turnethem. 'Tis positive 'gainst all exceptions, Lords, That our superfluous Lacquies, and our Pesants, Who in unnecessary action swarme About our Squares of Battaille, were enow To purge this field of such a hilding Foe; Though we upon this Mountaines Basis by, Tooke stand for idle speculation: But that our Honours must not. What's to say? A very little little let us doe, And all is done: then let the Trumpets found The Tucket Sonuance, and the Note to mount: For our approach shall so much dare the field, That England shall couch downe in feare, and yeeld.

Enter Grandpree.

Grandpree. Why do you stay so long, my Lords of France? Yond Iland Carrions, desperate of their bones, Ill-favouredly become the Morning field: Their ragged Curtaines poorely are let loose, And our Ayre shakes them passing scornefully. Bigge Mars seemes banqu'rout in their begger'd Hoast, And faintly through a rusty Bever peepes. The Horsemen sit like fixed Candlesticks, With Torch-staves in their hands: and their poore Iades Lob downe their heads, drooping the hide and hips: The gumme downe roping from their pale-dead eyes, And in their pale dull mowthes the Iymold Bitt Lyes foule with chaw'd grasse, still and motionlesse, And their executors, the knavish Crowes, Flye o're them all, impatient for their howre. Description cannot sute it selfe in words, To demonstrate the Life of such a Battaille, In life so livelesse, as it shewes it selfe.

Const. They have said their prayers, And they stay for death.

Dol. Shall we go send them Dinners, and fresh Sutes,

And give their fasting Horses Provender, And after fight with them?

Const. I stay but for my Guard: on To the field, I will the Banner from a Trumpet take, And use it for my haste. Come, come away, The Sunne is high, and we out-weare the day. Exeunt.

Enter Gloucester, Bedford, Exeter, Erpingham with all his Hoast: Salisbury, and Westmerland.

Glouc. Where is the King?

Bedf. The King himselfe is rode to view their Battaille.

West. Of fighting men they have full threescore thousand.

Exe. There's five to one, besides they all are fresh.

Salisb. Gods Arme strike with us, 'tis a fearefull oddes. God buy you Princes all; Ile to my Charge:

If we no more meet, till we meet in Heaven; Then joyfully, my Noble Lord of Bedford, My deare Lord Gloucester, and my good Lord Exeter, And my kind Kinsman, Warriors all, adieu.

Bed. Farwell good Salisbury, & good luck go with thee: And yet I doe thee wrong, to mind thee of it, For thou art fam'd of the firme truth of valour.

Exe. Farewell kind Lord: fight valiantly to day.

Bed. He is as full of Valour as of Kindnesse, Princely in both.

Enter the King

West. O that we now had here But one ten thousand of those men in England, That doe no worke to day.

King. What's he that wishes so?

My Cousin Westmerland. No my faire Cousin:

If we are markt to dye, we are enow To do our Countrey losse: and if to live, The fewer men, the greater share of honour. Gods will, I pray thee wish not one man more.

By love, I am not covetous for Gold, Nor care I who doth feed upon my cost:

It yernes me not, if men my Garments weare; Such outward things dwell not in my desires.

But if it be a sinne to covet Honor, I am the most offending Soule alive.

No faith, my Couze, wish not a man from England: Gods peace, I would not lose so great an Honor,

As one man more me thinkes would share from me, For the best hope I have. O, doe not wish one more:

Rather proclaime it (Westmerland) through my Hoast, That he which hath no stomach to this fight,

Let him depart, his Passport shall be made, And Crownes for Convoy put into his Purse:

We would not dye in that mans company, That feares his fellowship, to dye with us.

This day is call'd the Feast of Crispian:

He that out-lives this day, and comes safe home, Will stand a tip-toe when this day is named,

And rowse him at the Name of Crispian:

He that shall see this day, and live old age, Will yeerely on the Vigill feast his neighbours,

And say, to morrow is Saint Crispian:

Then will he strip his sleeve, and shew his skarres: Old men forget; yet all shall not be forgot:

But hee'll remember, with advantages,

What feats he did that day. Then shall our Names, Familiar in his mouth as household words,

Harry

Henry the King, Bedford and Exeter,
Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloucester,
Be in their flowing Cups freshly remembered.
This story shall the good man teach his sonne:
And Crispian Crispian shall n'ere goe by,
From this day to the ending of the World,
But we in it shall be remembered;
We few, we happy few, we band of brothers:
For he to day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother: be he ne're so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition.
And Gentlemen in England, now a bed,
Shall thinke the selves accurst they were not here;
And hold their Manhoods cheape, whiles any speaks,
That fought with us upon Saint Crispian's day.

Enter Salisbury.

Sal. My Sovereigne Lord, bestow your selfe with speed:
The French are bravely in their battailles set,
And will with all expedience charge on us.

King. All things are ready, if our minds be so.

West. Perish the man, whose mind is backward now.

King. Thou do'st not wish more helpe from England, Cobbe?

West. Gods will, my Liege, would you and I alone,
Without more helpe, could fight this Royall battaile.

King. Why now thou hast unwisht five thousand men:
Which likes me better, then to wish us one.
You know your places: God be with you all.

Tucket. Enter Montjoy.

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee King Harry,
If for thy Ransome thou wilt now compound,
Before thy most assured Overthrow:
For certainly, thou art so neere the Gulfe,
Thou needs must be englutted. Besides, in mercy
The Constable desires thee, thou wilt mind
Thy followers of Repentance; that their Soules
May make a peacefull and a sweet retyre
From off these fields: where (wretches) their poore bo-
Must lye and felter; (dies)

King. Who hath sent thee now?

Mont. The Constable of France.

King. I pray thee beare my former Answer back:
Bid them atchieve me, and then sell my bones.
Good God, why should they mock poore fellows thus?
The man that once did sell the Lyons skin
While the beast liv'd, was kill'd with hunting him.
A many of our bodies shall no doubt
Find Native Graves: upon the which, I trust
Shall witness live in Brasse of this dayes worke.
And those that leave their valiant bones in France,
Dying like men, though buried in your Dunghills,
They shall be fam'd: for there the Sun shall greet them,
And draw their honors reeking up to Heaven,
Leaving their earthly parts to choake your Clyme,
The smell whereof shall breed a Plague in France.
Marke then abounding valour in our English:
That being dead, like to the bullets grasing,
Breake out into a second course of mischiefe,
Killing in relapse of Mortality.
Let me speake proudly: Tell the Constable,
We are but Warriors for the working day:
Our Gaynesse and our Gilt are all besmyrcht
With rayny Martching in the painefull field.
There's not a piece of feather in our Hoast:
Good argument (I hope) we will not flye:

And time hath worne us into slovenry.
But by the Masse, our hearts are in the trim:
And my poore Souldiers tell me, yet ere Night,
They'll be in fresher Robes, or they will pluck
The gay new Coats o're the French Souldiers heads,
And turne them out of service. If they doe this,
As if God please, they shall; my Ransome then
Will soone be levyed.

Herauld, save thou thy labour:

Come thou no more for Ransome, gentle Herauld,
They shall have none, I sweare, but these my joynts:
Which if they have, as I will leave um them,
Shall yeeld them little, tell the Constable.

Mont. I shall, King Harry. And so fare thee well:
Thou never shalt hear Herauld any more. Exit.

King. I feare thou wilt once more come againe for a Ransome.

Enter Torke.

Torke. My Lord, most humbly on my knee I begge
The leading of the Vaward.

King. Take it, brave Torke.

Now Souldiers march away,
And how thou pleasest God, dispose the day. Exeunt.

Alarum. Excursions.

Enter Pistol, French Souldier, Boy.

Pistol. Yeeld Curre.

French. Je pense que vous estes le Gentil-homme de bone qualité.

Pist. Quality calmy culture me. Art thou a Gentleman? What is thy Name? discusse.

French. O Seigneur Dieu.

Pist. O Signieur Dewe should be a Gentleman: per-pend my words O Signieur Dewe, and marke: O Signieur Dewe, thou dyest on point of Fox, except O Signieur thou doe give to me egregious Ransome.

French. O prenez misericorde ayez pitie de moy.

Pist. Moy shall not serve, I will have forty Moyes: for
I will fetch thy rymme out at thy Throat, in droppes of Crimson blood.

French. Est-il impossible d'eschapper la force de ton bras.

Pist. Brasse, Curre? thou damned and luxurious Moun-taine Goat, offer't me Brasse?

French. O pardonne moy.

Pist. Say'st thou me so? is that a Tonne of Moyes?
Come hither boy, aske me this slave in French what is his Name.

Boy. Esconte comment estes vous appelle?

French. Monsieur le Fer.

Boy. He sayes his Name is M. Fer.

Pist. M. Fer: Ile fer him, and firke him, and ferret him:
discusse the same in French unto him.

Boy. I doe not know the French for fer, and ferret, & firke.

Pist. Bid him prepare, for I will cut his throat.

French. Que dit-il Monsieur?

Boy. Il me commande de vous dire que vous vous teniez prest, car ce soldat icy est disposee tout asture de couper vostre gorge.

Pist. Owy, cuppele gorge parmafoy pesant, unlesse thou give me Crownes, brave Crownes, or mangled shalt thou be by this my Sword.

French. O le vous supplie pour l'amour de Dieu: me par-donner, Je suis Gentil-homme de bonne maison, garde ma vie, &
Je vous donneray deux cents escus.

Pist. What are his words?

Boy. He

Boy. He prayes you to save his life, he is a Gentleman of a good houle, and for his ransom he will give you two hundred Crownes.

Pist. Tell him my fury shall abate, and I the Crownes will take.

Fren. Petit Monsieur que dit-il?

Boy. Encore qu'il est contre son lurement, de pa-donner aucun prisonnier: neant-moins pour les escus que vous luy promettez, il est content de vous donner la liberté de franchise.

Fren. Sur mes genoux ie vous donne mille remerciement, & le me estime heureux que ie ne tombe entre les mains d'un Chevalier, ie pense le plus brave valiant, & tres destiné Siegnieur d'Angleterre.

Pist. Expound unto me boy.

Boy. He gives you upon his knees a thousand thanks, and esteemes himselfe happy, that he hath falne into the hands of one (as he thinkes) the most brave, valorous and thrice-worthy signeur of England.

Pist. As I sucke blood, I will some mercy shew. Follow mee.

Boy. Sauve vous le grand Capitaine?

I did never know so wofull a voice issue from so empty a heart: but the song is true, The empty vessell makes the greatest sound. Bardolfe and Nim had tenne times more valour, then this roaring divell i'th old play, that every one may payre his nayles with a wooden dagger, and they are both hang'd, and so would this be, if hee durst steale any thing adventurously. I must stay with the Lackies, with the luggage of our camp, the French might have a good prey of us, if he knew of it, for there is none to guard it but boyes.

Exit.

Enter Constable, Orleans, Bourbon, Dolphin, and Ramburs.

Con. O Diable.

Orl. O signeur le iour & perdia, toute & perdie.

Dol. Mort Dieu ma vie, all is confounded, all, Reproach, and everlasting shame Sits mocking in our Plumes.

A short Alarm.

O meschante fortune, do not runne away.

Con. Why all our rankes are broke.

Dol. O perdurable shame, let's stab our selves: Be these the wretches that we plaid at dice for?

Orl. Is this the King we sent to, for his ransom?

Bur. Shame, and eternall shame, nothing but shame, Let us flye in once more backe againe, And he that will not follow Burbon now, Let him go hence, and with his cap in hand Like a base Pander hold the Chamber doore, Whilst by a base slave, no gentler then my dogge, His fairest daughter is contaminated.

Con. Disorder that hath spoyle'd us, friend us now, Let us on heapes go offer up our lives.

Orl. We are enow yet living in the Field, To smother up the English in our throngs, If any order might be thought upon.

Bur. The divell take Order now, Ile to the throng; Let life be short, else shame will be too long.

Exit.

Alarums. Enter the King and his trayne, with Prisoners.

King. Well have we done, thrice-valiant Countermen, But all's not done, yet keepe the French the field.

Exe. The D. of York commends him to your Majesty

King. Lives he good Vnckle: thrice within this I saw him downe: thrice up againe, and fighting From Helmet to the spurre, all blood he was.

Exo. In which array (brave Soldier) doth he lye, Larding the plaine: and by his bloody side, (Yoake-fellow to his honour-owing-wounds) The Noble Earle of Suffolke also lyes.

Suffolke first died, and Yorke all hagled over Comes to him, where in gore he lay insteeped, And takes him by the Beard, kisses the gashes That bloodily did yawne upon his face. He cryes aloud; Tarry my Cosin Suffolke, My soule shall thine keepe company to heaven: Tarry (sweet soule) for mine, then flye a-brest: As in this glorious and well-foughten field We kept together in our Chivalry.

Vpon these words I came and cheer'd him up, He smil'd me in the face, raught me his hand, And with a feeble gripe, sayes: Deere my Lord, Commend my service to my Sovereigne, So did he turne, and over Suffolkes necke He threw his wounded arme, and kist his lippes, And so espous'd to death, with blood he seal'd A Testament of Noble-ending-love: The pretty and sweet manner of it forc'd Those waters from me, which I would have stop'd, But I had not so much of man in mee, And all my mother came into mine eyes, And gave me up to teares.

King. I blame you not, For hearing this, I must perforce compound With mixtfull eyes, or they will issue to. But hearken, what new alarm is this same? The French have re-enforc'd their scatter'd men: Then every souldiour kill his Prisoners, Give the word through.

Alarm.

Exit.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Flu. Kill the poyes and the luggage, 'Tis expressly against the Law of Armes, tis as arrant a peece of knavery marke you now, as can bee offert in your Conscience now, is it not?

Gow. Tis certaine, ther's not a boy left alive, and the Cowardly Rascalls that ranne from the battaile ha'done this slaughter: besides they have burned and carried away all that was in the Kings Tent, wherefore the King most worthily hath caus'd every souldiour to cut his prisoners throat. O'tis a gallant King.

Flu. I, hee was borne at Monmouth Captaine Gower, what call you the Townes name, where Alexander the pig was borne?

Gow. Alexander the Great.

Flu. Why I pray you, is not pig, great? The pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnanimous, are all one reckonings, save the phrase is a little variations.

Gower. I thinke Alexander the Great was borne in Macedon, his Father was called Philip of Macedon, take it.

Flu. I thinke it is in Macedon where Alexander

porne: I tell you Captaine, if you looke in the Maps of the Orld, I warrant you shall find in the comparisons between Macedon and Monmouth, that the situations looke you, is both alike. There is a River in Macedon, and there is also moreover a River at Monmouth, it is call'd Wye at Monmouth: but it is out of my praines, what is the name of the other River: but 'tis all one, 'tis alike as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is Salmons in both. If you marke Alexanders life well, Harry of Monmouthes life is come after it indifferent well, for there is figures in all things. Alexander God knowes, and you know, in his rages, and his furies, and his wraths, and his chollers, and his moodes, and his displeasures, and his indignations, and also being a little intoxicated in his praines, did in his Ales and his angers (looke you) kill his best friend Clytus.

Gov. Our King is not like him in that, he never [kill'd any of his friends.

Flu. It is not well done (marke you now) to take the tales out of my mouth, ere it is made and finished. I speak but in the figures, and comparifous of it: as Alexander kill'd his friend Clytus, being in his Ales and his Cuppes; so also Harry Monmouth being in his right wittes, and his good judgements, turn'd away the fat Knight with the great belly doublet: he was full of jests, and gypes, and knaveries, and mockes, I have forgot his name.

Gov. Sir Iohn Falstaffe.

Flu. That is he: Ile tell you, there is good men porne at Monmouth.

Gov. Here comes his Majesty.

Alarum. Enter King Harry and Burbon with prisoners. Flourish.

King. I was not angry since I came to France, Vntill this instant. Take a Trumpet Herald, Ride thou unto the horsemen on yond hill: If they will fight with us, bid them come downe, Or voyde the field: they doe offend our fight. If they'll doe neither, we will come to them, And make them sker away, as swift as stones Enforced from the old Assyrian slings: Besides, we'll cut the throats of those we have, And not a man of them that we shall take, Shall taste our mercy. Goe and tell them so.

Enter Montjoy.

Exe. Here comes the Herald of the French, my Liege.

Gov. His eyes are humbler then they us'd to be,

King. How now, what meanes their Herald? Knowst thou not,

That I have fin'd these bones of mine for ransome?

Com'st thou againe for ransome?

Her. No great King:

I come to thee for charitable License,

That we may wander ore this bloody field,

To booke our dead, and then to bury them,

To sort our Nobles from our common men.

Many of our Princes (woe the while)

Lye drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood:

And doe our vulgar drench their peasant limbes

In blood of Princes, and with wounded steeds

Are fet-locked deepe in gore, and with wilde rage

Take out their armed heeles at their dead masters,

Slaying them twice. O give us leave great King,

To view the field in safety, and dispose

Of their dead bodies.

King. I tell thee truly Herald, I know not if the day be ours or no, For yet a many of your horsemen peere, And gallop ore the field.

Her. The day is yours.

King. Praised be God, and not our strength for it: What is this Castle call'd that stands hard by.

Her. They call it Agincourt.

King. Then call we this the field of Agincourt, Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.

Flu. Your Grandfather of famous memory (an't please your Majesty) and your great Vncle Edward the Placke Prince of Wales, as I have read in the Chronicles, fought a most prave pattle here in France.

King. They did Fluellen.

Flu. Your Majesty sayes very true: If your Majesties is remembred of it, the Welchmen did good service in a Garden where Leeks did grow, wearing Leeks in their Monmouth caps, which your Majesty know to this houre is an honorable badge of the service: And I doe beleeeve your Majesty takes no scone to weare the Leek upon S. Taviess day.

King. I weare it for a memorable honor: For I am Welch you know good Countryman.

Flu. All the water in Wye, cannot wash your Majesties Welch plood out of your pody, I can tell you that: God plesse it, and preserve it, as long as it pleases his Grace, and his Majesty too.

King. Thankes good my Countryman.

Flu. By Ieshu, I am your Majesties Countreyman, I care not who know it: I will confesse it to all the Orld, I need not to be ashamed of your Majesty, praised be God so long as your Majesty is an honest man.

King. Good keepe me so.

Enter Williams.

Our Heralds goe with him, Bring me just notice of the numbers dead On both our parts. Call yonder fellow hither.

Exe. Souldier, you must come to the King.

King. Souldier, why wear'st thou that Glove in thy Cap?

Will. And't please your Majesty, 'tis the gage of one that I should fight withall, if he be alive.

King. An Englishman?

Will. And't please your Majesty, a Rascall that swagger'd with me last night: who if alive, and ever dare to challenge this Glove, I have sworne to take him a boxe a'th eare: or if I can see my Glove in his cap, which he swore as he was a Souldier hee would weare (if aliue) I will strike it out soundly.

King. What thinke you Captaine Fluellen, is it fit this souldier keepe his oath?

Flu. He is a Craven and a Villaine else, and't please your Majesty in my conscience.

King. It may be, his enemy is a Gentleman of great fort, quite from the answer of his degree.

Flu. Though he be as good a Gentleman as the devill is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himselfe, it is necessary (looke your Grace) that he keepe his vow and his oath: If he be perjur'd (see you now) his reputation is as arrant a villaine and a lacke sawce, as ever his blacke shoo trodd upon Gods ground, and his earth, in my conscience law.

King. Then keepe thy vow firrah, when thou meet'st the fellow,

Will. So, I will my Liege, as I live.

King. Who serv'st thou under?

Will.

Will. Vnder Captaine Gower, my Liege.

Flu. Gower is a good Captaine, and is good knowlege and literated in the Warres.

King. Call him hither to me Souldier.

Will. I will my Liege.

Exit.

King. Here Fluellen, weare thou this favour for me, and sticke it in thy Cappe: when Alanson and my selfe were downe together, I pluckt this Glove from his Helme: if any man challenge this, he is a friend to Alanson, and an enemy to our Person, if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, and thou do'st me love.

Flu. Your Grace doo's me as great Honors as can be desir'd in the hearts of his Subjects: I would faine see the man, that ha's but two legges, that shall find himselfe agreev'd at this Glove; that is all: but I would faine see it once, and please God of his grace that I might see.

King. Know'st thou Gower?

Flu. He is my deare friend, and please you.

King. Pray thee goe seeke him, and bring him to my Tent.

Flu. I will fetch him.

Exit.

King. My Lord of Warwicke, and my brother Gloster, Follow Fluellen closely at the heeles. The Glove which I have given him for a favour, May haply purchase him a box a'th'eare. It is the Souldiers: I by bargain should weare it my selfe. Follow good Cousin Warwicke: If that the Souldier strike him, as I judge By his blunt bearing, he will keepe his word; Some sodaine mischief may arise of it: For I doe know Fluellen valiant, And toucht with Choler, hot as Gunpowder, And quickly will returne an injury. Follow, and see there be no harme betweene them. Goe you with me, Vnckle of Exeter.

Exeunt.

Enter Gower and Williams.

Will. I warrant it is to Knight you, Captaine.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Gods will, and his pleasure, Captaine, I beseech you now, come apace to the King: there is more good toward you peradventure, then is in your knowlege to dreame of.

Will. Sir, know you this Glove?

Flu. Know the Glove? I know the Glove is a Glove.

Will. I know this, and thus I challenge it.

Strikes him.

Flu. 'Sblud, an arrant Traytor as anyes in the Vniversall World, or in France, or in England.

Gow. How now sir? you Villaine.

Will. Doe you thinke Ile be forsworne?

Flu. Stand away Captaine Gower, I will give Treason his payment into plowes, I warrant you.

Will. I am no Traytor.

Flu. That's a Lye in thy Throat. I charge you in his Majesties Name apprehend him, he's a friend of the Duke Alansons.

Enter Warwicke and Gloucester.

War. How now, how now, what's the matter?

Flu. My Lord of Warwicke, here is, prayesd bee God for it, a most contagious Treason come to light, looke you, as you shall desire in a Summers day. Heere is his Majesty.

Enter King, and Exeter.

King. How now, what's the matter?

Flu. My Liege, heere is a Villaine, and a Traytor, that looke your Grace, ha's strooke the Glove which your Majesty is take out of the Helmet of Alanson.

Will. My Liege, this was my Glove, here is the fellow of it: and hee that I gave it to in change, promis'd to weare it in his Cappe: I promis'd to strike him, if he did. I met this man with my Glove in his Cappe, and I have have beene as good as my word.

Flu. Your Majesty heare now, saving your Majesty's Man-hood, what an arrant rascally, beggerly, low Knave it is: I hope your Majesty is peare me testimony and witnesse, and will avouchment, that this is the Glove of Alanson, that your Majesty is give me, in your science now.

King. Give me thy Glove Souldier; Looke, here is the fellow of it:

'Twas I indeed thou promis'd'st to strike.

And thou hast given me most bitter termes.

Flu. And please your Majesty, let his Necke answer for it, if there is any Marshall Law in the world.

King. How canst thou make me satisfaction?

Will. All offences, my Lord, come from the heart: never came any from mine, that might offend your Majesty.

King. It was our selfe thou didst abuse.

Will. Your Majesty came not like your selfe: you appear'd to me but as a common man: witnesse the Night, your Garments, your Lowlinesse: and when your highnesse suffer'd under that shape, I beseech you take it for your owne fault, and not mine; for had you beene as I tooke you for, I made no offence; therefore beseech your highnesse pardon me.

King. Here Vnckle Exeter, fill this Glove with Crownes, Add give it to this fellow. Keepe it fellow, And weare it for an honor in thy Cappe, Till I doe challenge it. Give him the Crownes: And Captaine, you must needs be friends with him.

Flu. By this Day and this Light, the fellow ha's not tell enough in his belly: hold, there is twelve-pence for you, and I pray you to serve God, and keepe you out of prawles and prabbles, and quarrells and disentions, and I warrant you it is the better for you.

Will. I will none of your Money.

Flu. It is with a good will: I can tell you it will serve you to mend your shooes: come, wherefore should you be so pashfull, your shooes is not so good: 'tis a good filling I warrant you, or I will change it.

Enter Herault.

King. Now Herault, are the dead numbred?

Herault. Heere is the number of the slaughtred French.

King. What Prisoners of good sort are taken, Vnckle?

Exe. Charles Duke of Orleance, Nephew to the King, John Duke of Burbon, and Lord Bonchiquald: Of other Lords and Barons, Knights and Squires, Full fiftene hundred, besides common men.

King. This Note doth tell me of ten thousand French That in the field lye slaine: of Princes in this number, And Nobles bearing Banners, there lye dead One hundred twenty six; added to these, Of Knights, Esquires, and gallant Gentlemen, Eight thousand and foure hundred: of the which, Five hundred were but yesterday dubb'd Knights, So that in these ten thousand they have lost, There are but fiftene hundred Mercenaries: The rest are Princes, Barons, Lords, Knights, Squires.

And Gentlemen of blood and quality,
The Names of those their Nobles that lye dead :
Charles Delabreth, High Constable of France,
Jacques of Chastillon, Admirall of France,
The Master of the Crosse-bowes, Lord Rambures,
Great Master of France, the brave Sir Guichard Dolphin,
John Duke of Alanson, Antonio Duke of Brabant,
The Brother to the Duke of Burgundy,
And Edward Duke of Barr : of lusty Earles,
Grandpre and Roussie, Fauconbridge and Foyes,
Beaumont and Marle, Vandemon and Lestrade.
Here was a Royall fellowship of death.
Where is the number of our English dead ?
Edward the Duke of Yorke, the Earle of Suffolke,
Sir Richard Ketly, Davy Gam Esquire ;
None else of name : and of all other men,
But five and twenty.

King. O God, thy Arme was heere :
And not to us, but to thy Arme alone,
Ascribe we all : when, without stratagem,
But in plaine shooke, and even play of Battaille,
Was ever knowne so great and little losse ?
On one part and on th'other, take it God,
For it is none but thine.

Exit. 'Tis wonderfull.

King. Come, go we in procession to the Village :
And be it death proclaymed through our Host,
To boast of this, or take that praife from God,
Which is his onely.

Flu. Is it not lawfull and please your Majesty, to tell how many is kill'd.

King. Yes Captaine : but with this acknowledgement,
That God fought for us.

Flu. Yes, my conscience, he did us great good.

King. Doe we all holy Rights ;
Let there be sung Non nobis, and Te deum,
The dead with charity enclos'd in Clay :
And then to Callice, and to England then,
Where ne're from France arriv'd more happy men.

Exeunt.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Chorus.

Vouchsafe to those that have not read the Story,
That I may prompt them : and of such as have,
I humbly pray them to admit th'excuse
Of time, of numbers, and due course of things,
Which cannot in their huge and proper life,
Behere presented. Now we beare the King
Toward Callice : grant him there ; And there being seene,
Heave him away upon your winged thoughts,
Athwart the Sea ; Behold the English beach
Pales in the flood, with Men, with Wives, and Boyes,
Whose shouts and claps out-voyce the deepmouth'd Sea,
Which like a mighty Whiffler fore the King,
Seemes to prepare his way : So let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London.
So swift a pace hath Thought, that even now
You may imagine him upon Blacke-Heath :
Where, that his Lords desire him, to have borne
His bruised Helmet, and his bended Sword
Before him, through the City : he forbids it,

Being free from vainenesse ; and selfe-glorious pride ;
Giving full Trophee, Signall, and Ostent,
Quite from himselfe, to God. But now behold,
In the quicke Forge and working-house of Thought,
How London doth powre out her Citizens,
The Mayor and all his Brethren in best sort,
Like to the Senatours of th'antique Rome,
With the Plebeians swarming at their heeles, Goe forth and fetch their Conqu'ring Cesar in :
As by a lower, but by loving likely hood,
Were now the Generall of our gracious Empresse,
As in good time he may, from Ireland comming,
Bringing Rebellion broached on his Sword ;
How many would the peacefull City quit,
To welcome him ? much more, and much more cause,
Did they this Harry. Now in London place him.
As yet the lamentation of the French
Invites the King of Englands stay at home :
The Emperour's comming in behalfe of France,
To order peace betweene them : and omit
All the occurrences, what ever chanc't,
Till Harries backe returne againe to France :
There must we bring him ; and my selfe have play'd
The Interim, by remembring you 'tis past.
Then brooke abridgement, and your eyes advance,
After your thoughts, straight backe againe to France.

Exit.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gow. Nay, that's right : but why weare you your Leeke to day ? Saint Davies day is past.

Flu. There is occasions and causes why and wherefore in all things : I wil tell you asse my friend, Capraine
Gower ; the rascally, scauld, beggerly, lowfie, praggling
Knave Pistoll, which you and your selfe, and all the World know to be no better then a fellow, looke you now, of no merits : he is come to mee, and prings me pread and saule yesterday, looke you, and bid me eate my Leeke :
it was in a place where I could not breed no contention with him ; but I will be so bold as to weare it in my Cap till I see him once againe, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

Enter Pistoll.

Gow. Why heere he comes, swelling like a Turkeycocke.

Flu. 'Tis no matter for his swellings, nor his Turkeycocks. God plesse you auchient Pistoll : you scurvy lowfie Knave, God plesse you.

Pist. Ha, art thou bedlam ? dost thou thirst, base Troian, to have me fold up Parcas fatall Web ? Hence ;
I am qualmish at the sinell of Leeke.

Flu. I plesseech you heartily, scurvy lowfie Knave, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eate, looke you, this Leeke ; because, looke you, you doe not love it, nor your affections, and your appetites and your digestions doe's not agree with it, I would desire you to eate it.

Pist. Not for Cadwallader and all his Goats.

Flu. There is one Goat for you. Strikes him.
Will you be so good, scauld Knave, as eate it ?

Pist. Base Troian, thou shalt dye.

Flu. You say very true, scauld Knave, when Gods will is : I will desire you to live in the meane time, and eate your Victuals : come, there is sawce for it. You call'd me yesterdady Mountaine-Squier, but I will make you to day a squire of low degree. I pray you fall to, if you can mocke a Leeke, you can eate a Leeke.

Gow. Enough Captaine, you have astonisht him.

Flu. I say, I will make him eate some part of my leeke, or I will peate his pate foure dayes: bite I pray you, it is good for your greene wound, and your bloody Coxcombe.

Pist. Must I bite?

Flu. Yes certainly, and out of doubt and out of question too, and ambiguities.

Pist. By this, Leeke, I will most horribly revenge: I eate and eate I sweare.

Flu. Eate I pray you, will you have some more sauce to your Leeke: there is not enough Leeke to sweare by.

Pist. Quiet thy Cudgell, thou dost see I eate.

Flu. Much good doe you scald knave, heartily. Nay, pray you throw none away, the skinne is good for your broken Coxcombe; when you take occasions to see Leekes hereafter, I pray you mocke at 'em, that is all.

Pist. Good.

Flu. I, Leekes is good: hold you, there is a groat to heale your pate.

Pist. Me a groat?

Flu. Yes verily, and in truth you shall take it, or I have another Leeke in my pocket, which you shall eate.

Pist. I take thy groat in earnest of revenge.

Flu. If I owe you any thing, I will pay you in Cudgels, you shall be a Woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but cudgels: God buy you, and keepe you, and heale your pate.

Exit.

Pist. All hell shall stirre for this.

Gow. Goe, goe, you are a counterfet cowardly Kave, will you mocke at an ancient Tradition began upon an honorable respect, and worne as a memorable Trophée of predeceased valor, and dare not avouch in your deeds any of your words. I have seene you gleeking and galling at this Gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speake English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English Cudgell: you find it otherwise, and henceforth let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition, fare ye well.

Exit.

Pist. Doeth fortune play the huswife with me now? Newes have I that my Doll is dead i'th Spittle of a malady of France, and there my rendezvous is quite cut off: Old I doe waxe, and from my weary limbes honor is Cudgeld. Well, Baud Ile turne, and something leane to Cut-purse of quicke hand: To England will I iteale, and there Ile steale;

And patches will I get unto these cudgeld scarres, And swore I got them in the Gallia warres.

Exit.

Enter at one doore, King Henry, Exeter, Bedford, Warwick, and other Lords; At another, Queene Isabel, the King, the Duke of Bourgoigne, and other French.

King. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met; Vnto our brother France, and to our Sister Health and faire time of day; Ioy and good wishes To our most faire and Princely Cousin Katherine; And as a branch and member of this Royalty, By whom this great assembly is contriv'd, We doe salute you Duke of Burgoigne, And Princes French and Peeres health to you all.

Fra. Right joyous are we to behold your face, Most worthy brother England, faire met. So are you Princes (English) every one.

Que. So happy be the Issue brother England Of this good day, and of this gracious meeting, As we are now glad to behold your eyes, Your eyes which hitherto have borne in them Against the French that met them in their bent; The fatall Balls of murdering Basilisks: The venome of such Lookes we fairely hope Have lost their quality, and that this day Shall change all griefes and quarrells into love.

Eng. To cry Amento that, thus we appeare.

Que. You English Princes all, I doe salute you.

Burg. My duty to you both, on equall love.

Great Kings of France and England: that I have labored With all my wits, my paines, and strong endeavours, To bring your most imperiall Majesties Vnto this Barre, and Royall interview; Your Mightinesse on both parts best can witnesse. Since then my Office hath so farre prevail'd, That Face to Face, and Royall Eye to Eye, You have congreeted: let it not disgrace me, If I demand before this Royall view, What Rub, or what impediment there is, Why that the naked, poore, and mangled Peace, Deare Nourse of Arts, Plenties, and joyfull Births, Should not in this best Garden of the World, Our fertile France, put up her lovely Visage? Alas, she hath from France too long beene chas'd, And all her Husbandry doth lye on heapes, Corrupting in it owne fertility.

Her Vine, the merry chearer of the heart, Vnpruned, dyes: her Hedges even pleach'd, Like Prisoners wildly over-growne with hayre, Put forth disorder'd Twigs: her fallow Leas, The Darnell, Hemlocke and ranke Femetary, Doth root upon; while that the Culter rusts, That should deracinate such Savagery: The even Mead, that erst brought sweetly forth The freckled Cowslip, Burnet, and greene Clover, Wanting the Sythe, withall uncorrected, ranke; Conceives by idlenesse, and nothing teemes, But hatefull Docks, rough Thistles, Keksyas, Burres, Losing both beauty and vility; And all our Vineyards, Fallowes, Meades, and Hedges, Defective in their natures, grow to wildnesse. Even so our Houses, and our selves, and Children, Have lost, or doe not learne, for want of time, The sciences that should become our Country; But grow like Savages, as Souldiers will, That nothing doe, but meditate on Blood, To swearing, and sterne Lookes, defus'd Attire, And every thing that seemes unnaturall. Which to reduce into our former favour, You are assembled: and my speech entreats, That I may know the Let, why gentle Peace Should not expell these inconveniences, And blesse us with her former qualities.

Eng. If, Duke of Burgony, you would the Peace Whose want gives growth to th'imperfections Which you have cited; you must buy that Peace With full accord to all our just demands, Whose Tenures and particular effects You have enschedul'd briefly in your hands.

Burg. The King hath heard them: to the which, as yet There is no Answer made.

Eng. Well then: the Peace which you before so urg'd, Lyes in his Answer.

Fran.

France. I have but with a curselary eye
O'reglanc't the Articles: Pleaseth your Grace
To appoint some of your Councell presently,
To sit with us once more, with better heed
To re-survey them: we will suddenly
Passé our accept and peremptory Answer.

Eng. Brother we shall. Goe Vnckle Exeter,
And brother Clarence, and brother Gloucester,
Warwicke, and Huntington, goe with the King,
And take with you free power, to ratifie,
Augment, or alter, as your Wildomes best
Shall see advantageable for our Dignity,
Any thing in or out of our Demands,
And we'll configne thereto. Will you, faire Sister,
Goe with the Princes, or stay here with us?

Quee. Our gracious Brother. I will goe with them:
Happely a Womans Voyce may doe some good,
When Articles too nicely urg'd, be stood on.

Eng. Yet leave our Cousin Katherine here with us,
She is our capitall Demand, compris'd
Within the fore-ranke of our Articles.

Que. She hath good leave.

Exeunt omnes.

Manet King, and Katherine.

King. Faire Katherine, and most faire,
Will you vouchsafe to teach a Souldier tearmes,
Such as will enter at a Ladyes eare,
And pleade his Love-suit to her gentle heart?

Kath. Your Majesty shall mocke at me, I cannot speake your English.

King. O faire Katherine, if you will love me soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to heare you con-fesse it brokenly with your English Tongue. Doe you like me, Kate?

Kath. Pardonne moy, I cannot tell wat is like me.

King. An Angell is like you Kate, and you are like an Angell.

Kath. Que dit il, que le suis semblable a les Anges?

Lady. Ouy verament (sans vostre Grace) ainsi dit il.

King. I said so, deere Katherine, and I must not blush to affirme it.

Kath. O bon Dieu, les langues des hommes sont plein de tromperies.

King. What sayes she, faire one? that the tongues of men are full of deceits?

Lady. Ouy, dat de tongues of de mans is be full of de-ceits: dat is de Princeesse.

King. The Princeesse is the better English-woman:
Faith Kate, my wooing is fit for thy understanding, I am glad thou canst speake no better English, for if thou could'st, thou would'st finde me such a plaine King, that thou wouldst thinke, I had sold my farme to buy my Crowne. I know no wayes to mince it in love, but directly to say, I love you; then if you urge me farther, then to say, Doe you in faith? I weare out my suite: Give me your answer, yfaith doe, and so clap hands, and a bargain: how say you, Lady?

Kath. Sans vostre honour, me understand well.

King. Marry, if you would put me to Verses, or to Dance for your sake, Kate, why you undid me: for the one I have neither words nor measure; and for the other
I have no strength in measure, yet a reasonable measure in strength. If I could winne a Lady at Leape frogge, or by vawting into my saddle, with my Armor on my back; under the correction of bragging be it spoken, I should quickly leape into a Wife: Or if I might buffet for my Love, or bound my Horse for her favours, I could lay on like a Butcher, and sit like a lacke an Apes; never off. But before God Kate, I cannot looke greenely, nor gaspe out my eloquence, nor I have no cunning in protestation;

onely downe-right Oathes, which I never use till urg'd, nor never breake for urging, It thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth Sunne-burning? that never lookes in his Glasse, for love of any thing he sees there? let thine Eye be thy Cooke. I speake to thee plaine Souldier: If thou canst love me for this, take me? if not? to say to thee that I shall dye, is true; but for thy love, by the L. No: yet I love thee too. And while thou liv'st, deare Kate, take a fellow of plaine and uncoyned Constancy, for he perforce must doe thee right, because he hath not the gift to wooe in other places: for these fellowes of infinit tongue, that can ryme themselves into Ladyes favours, they doe alwayes reason themselves out againe. What? a speaker is but a prater, a Ryme is but a Ballad; a good Legge will fall, a strait Backe will stoope, a blacke Beard will turne white, a curl'd Pate will grow bald, a faire Face will wither, a full Eye will wax hollow: but a good Heart, Kate, is the Sunne and the Moone, or rather the Sunne, and not the Moone; for it shines bright, and never changes, but keepe his course truely. If thou would have such a one, take me? and take me; take a souldier: take a souldier; take a King.
And what say'st thou then to my Love? speake my faire, and fairely, I pray thee.

Kath. Is it possible dat I should love de ennemy of France?

King. No, it is not possible you should love the Enemy of France, Kate; but in loving me, you should love the Friend of France: for I love France so well, that I will not part with a Village of it; I will have it all mine; and Kate, when France is mine, and I am yours; then yours is France; and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell wat is dat.

King. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French, which I am sure will hang upon my tongue, like a new-married Wife about her Husbands Necke, hardly to be shooke off; le quand sur le possession de Fraunce, & quand vous auez le possession de moy, (Let me see, what then? Saint Dennis be my speed) Donc vostre est Fraunce, & vous estes mienne.
It is as easie for me, Kate, to conquer the Kingdome, as to speake so much more French: I shall never move thee in French, unlesse it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Sans vostre honneur, le Francoys ques vous parlez, il & melieu quel Anglois le quel le parle.

King. No faith is't not, Kate: but thy speaking of my Tongue, and I thine, most truely falsely, must needes be graunted to be much at one. But Kate, doo'st thou understand thus much English? Canst thou love me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

King. Can any of your Neighbours tell, Kate? He aske them, Come I know thou lovest me: and at night, when you come into your Closet, you'll question this Gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will to her dispraise those parts in me, that you love with your heart; but good Kate, mocke me mercifully, the rather gentle Princeesse, because I love thee cruelly. If ever thou beest mine, Kate, as I have a saving Faith within me tels me thou shalt; I get thee with skambling, and thou must therefore needes prove a good Souldier-breeder:
Shall not thou and I, betweene Saint Dennis and Saint George, compound a Boy, halfe French halfe English,
that

that shall goe to Constantinople, and take the Turke by the Beard. Shall we not? what say'st thou, my faire Flower-de-Luce.

Kate. I doe not know dat.

King. No: 'tis hereafter to know, but now to promise: doe but now promise Kate, you will endeavour for your French part of such a Boy; and for my English moyty, take the word of a King, and a Batcheler. How answer you, La plus belle Katherine du monde mon trescher & deuin deesse.

Kath. Your Majestee aue faulse Frenche enough to deceive de most sage Damoiseil dat is en Fraunce.

King. Now fye upon my false French: by mine honor in true English, I love thee Kate; by which honor, I dare not sweare thou lovest me, yet my bloud begins to flatter me, that thou doo'st; notwithstanding the poore and untempering effect of my Visage. Now beshrew my Fathers Ambition, he was thinking of Civill Warres when he got me, therefore was I created with a stubborn out-side, with an aspect of Iron, that when I come to wooe Ladies, I fright them: but in faith Kate, the elder I wax, the better I shall appeare. My comfort is, that Old Age, that ill-layer up of Beauty, can doe no more spoyle upon my Face. Thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt weare me, if thou weare me, better and better: and therefore tell me, most faire Katherine, will you have me? Put off your Maiden Blushes, auouch the Thoughts of your Heart with the Lookes of an Empresse, take me by the Hand, and say, Harry of England, I am thine: which word thou shalt no sooner blesse mine Eare withall, but I will tell thee alowd, England is thine: Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantaginet is thine; who, though I speake it before his Face, if he be not Fellow with the best King, thou shalt find the best King of Good-fellowes. Come your answer in broken Musicke; for thy Voyce is Musicke, and thy English broken: Therefore Queene of all, Katherine, breake thy mind to me in broken English, wilt thou have me?

Kath. Dat is as it shall please de Roy mon pere.

King. Nay, it will please him well, Kate; it shall please him, Kate.

Kath. Den it fall also content me.

King. Vpon that I kisse your Hand, and I call you my Queene.

Kath. Laisse mon Seigneur, laisse, laisse, may soy: Je ne veus point que vous abbaisse vostre grandeur, en baisant le main d'une nostre Seigneur indignie serviteur, excuse moy. Je vous supply mon tres-puissant Seigneur.

King. Then I will kisse your Lippes, Kate.

Kath. Les Dames & Damoisels pour estre baise devant leur nopcese il net pas le costume de Fraunce.

King. Madam, my Interpreter, what sayes she?

Lady. Dat it is not be de fashion pour le Ladies of France; I cannot tell wat is buisse en Anglish.

King. To kisse.

Lady. Your Majestie entendre bettere que moy.

King. It is not a fashion for the Maids in France to kisse before they are married, would she say?

Lady. Ony verayment.

King. O Kate, nice Customes currie to great Kings. Deare Kate, you and I cannot bee confin'd within the weake Lyft of a Countreyes fashion: we are the makers of Manners, Kate; and the liberty that followes our Places, stoppes the mouth of all find-faults, as I will doe yours, for upholding the nice fashion of your Country, in denying me a Kisse: therefore patiently, and yeelding. You have Witch-craft in your Lippes, Kate; there is more eloquence in a Sugar touch of them; then in the Tongues of the French Councell: and they should sooner perswade Harry of England, then a generall Petition of Monarchs. Heere comes your father.

Enter the French Power, and the English Lords.

Burg. God save your Majesty, my Royall Cousin, teach you our Princess English?

King. I would have her learne, my faire Cousin, how perfectly I love her, and that is good English.

Burg. Is she not apt?

King. Our Tongue is rough. Coze, and my Condition is not smooth: so that having neither the Voyce nor the Heart of Flattery about me, I cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her, that he will appeare in his true likenesse.

Burg. Pardon the franknesse of my mirth, if I answer you for that. If you would conjure in her, you must make a Circle: if conjure up love in her in his true likenesse, he must appeare naked, and blind. Can you blame her then, being a Maid, yet ros'd over with the Virgin Crimson of Modesty, if she deny the apparance of a naked blind Boy in her naked seeing selfe? It were (my Lord) a hard Condition for a Maid to confesse to.

King. Yet they doe winke and yeeld, as Love is blind and enforces.

Burg. They are then excus'd, my Lord, when they see not what they doe.

King. Then good my Lord, teach your Cousin to consent to winking.

Burg. I will winke on her to consent, my Lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for Maides well Summer'd, and warme kept, are like Flies at Bartholomew-tyde, blind, though they have their eyes, and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

King. This Moralityes me over to Time, and a hot Summer; and so I shall catch the Flye, your Cousin, in the latter end, and she must be blind too.

Burg. As Love is my Lord, before it loves.

King. It is so: and you may, some of you, thanke Love for my blindness, who cannot see many a faire French City for one faire French Maid that stands in my way.

French King. Yes my Lord, you see them perspectively: the Cities turn'd into a Maid; for they are all gyrdled with Maiden Walls, that Warre hath entred.

King. Shall Kate be my Wife?

Fran. So please you.

England. I am content, so the Maiden Cities you talke of, may waite on her: so the Maid that stood in the way for my Wish, shall shew me the way to my Will.

France. We have consented to all tearmes of reason.

Eng. Is't so, my Lords of England?

West. The King hath granted every Article: His Daughter first; and then in sequele, all, According to their firme propoted natures.

Exit. Only

Exit. Onely he hath not yet subscribed this :
Where your Majesty demands, That the King of France having any occasion to write for matter of Graunt, shall name your Highnesse in this forme, and with this addition, in French : Nostre trescher filz Henry Roy'd Angleterre
Heretere de France : and thus in Latine ; Præclarissimus
Filius noster Henricus Rex Anglia & Heres Francia.

Fran. Nor this I have not Brother so deny'd,
But your request shall make me let it passe.

Engl. I pray you then, in love and deare allyance,
Let that one Article ranke with the rest,
And thereupon give me your Daughter.

Fran. Take her faire sonne, and from her blood rayse up
Issue to me, that the contending Kingdomes
Of France and England, whose very shoares looke pale,
With envy of each others happinesse,
May cease their hatred ; and this deare Conjunction Plant Neighbourhood and Christian-like accord
In their sweet Bosomes : that never Warre advance
His bleeding Sword 'twixt England and faire France.

Lords. Amen.

King. Now welcome Kate : and beare me witnesse all,
That here I kisse her as my Sovereigne Queene.

Flourish.

Quee. God, the best maker of all Marriages,
Combine your hearts in one, your Realines in one :
As Man and Wife being two, are one in love,
So be there 'twixt your Kingdomes such a Spoufall,
That never may ill Office, or fell jealousie,

Which troubles oft the Bed of blessed Marriage,
Thrust in betweene the Pation of these Kingdomes,
To make divorce of their incorporate League :
That English may as French, French Englishmen,
Receive each other. God speake this Amen.

All. Amen.

King. Prepare we for our Marriage : on which day,
My Lord of Burgundy we'll take your Oath
And all the Peeres, for surety of our Leagues.
Then shall I sweare to Kate, and you to me,
And may our Oathes well kept and prosp'rous be.

Sonet.

Exeunt.

Enter Chorus.

Thus farre with rough, and all-unable Pen,
Our bending Author hath pursu'd the Story,
In little roome confining mighty men,
Mangling by starts the full course of their glory.
Small time: but in that small, most greatly lived
This Starre of England. Fortune made his Sword ;
By which, the Worlds best Garden he atchieved :
And of it left his Sonne Imperiall Lord,
Henry the Sixt, in Infant Bands crown'd King
Of France and England, did this King succeed :
Whose State so many had the managing,
That they lost France, and make his England bleed :
Which oft our Stage hath showne ; and for their sake,
In your faire minds let this acceptance take.

The first Part of King Henry the Sixth.

Actus Prima. Scena Prima.

Dead March.

Enter the Funerall of King Henry the Fifth, attended on by the Duke of Bedford, Regent of France; the Duke of Gloster, Protector: the Duke of Exeter, Warwick, the Bishop of Winchester, and the Duke of Somerset.

Bedford.

Hing be  $\bar{y}$  heavens with black, yeild day to night;
Comets importing change of Times and States,
Brandish your crystall Tresses in the Sky,
And with them scourge the bad revolting Stars,
That have consented unto Henries death:
King Henry the Fifth, too famous to live long,
England ne're lost a King of so much worth.
Gloster. England ne're had a King untill his time:
Vertue he had, deserving to command.
His brandisht Sword did blind men with his beames,
His Armes spred wider then a Dragons Wings:
His sparkling Eyes, repleat with wrathfull fire,
More dazled and drove backe his Enemies,
Then mid-day sunne, fierce bent against their faces.
What should I say? his Deeds exceed all speech:
He ne're lift up his hand, but conquered.

Exe. We mourne in blacke, why mourn we not in
Henry is dead, and never shall revive: (blood?)
Vpon a Wooden Coffin we attend;
And deaths dishonorable Victory,
We with our stately presence glorifie,
Like Captives bound to a Triumphant Carre.
What? shall we curse the Planets of Mishap,
That plotted thus our Glories overthrow?
Or shall we thinke the subtil-witted French,
Conjurers and Sorcerers, that afraid of him,
By Magicke Verse have contriv'd his end?

Winch. He was a King, blest of the King of Kings.
Vnto the French, the dreadfull judgement-Day
So dreadfull will not be, as was his sight.
The Battailles of the Lord of Hosts he fought:
The Churches Prayers made him so prosperous.

Gloster. The Church? Where is it?
Had not Church-men pray'd,
His thred of Life had not so soone decay'd.
None doe you like, but an effeminate Prince,
Whom like a Schoole-boy you may over-awe.

Winch. Gloster, what ere we like, thou art Protector,
And lookest to command the Prince and Realme.
Thy Wife is proud, she holdeth thee in awe,

More then God or Religious Church-men may.

Gloster. Name not Religion, for thou lov'st the Flesh,
And ne're throughout the yeere to Church thougo'st,
Except it be to pray against thy foes.

Bed. Cease, cease these Iarres, and rest your minds in Let's to the Altar: Heralds wayt on us; (peace)
In stead of Gold, we'll offer up our Armes,
Since Armes awayle not, now that Henry's dead.
Posterity await for wretched yeeres,
When at their Mothers moist eyes, Babes shall sucke,
Our Ile be made a Nourish of salt Teares,
And none but Women left to wayle the dead.
Henry the Fifth, thy Ghost I invoke:
Prosper this Realme, keepe it from Civill Broyles,
Combat with adverse Planets in the heavens;
A farre more glorious Starre thy soule will make,
Then Iulius Caesar, or bright——

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My honorable Lords, health to you all:
Sad tidings bring I to you out of France,
Of losse, of slaughter, and discomfiture:
Guyen, Champaigne, Rheimes, Orleance,
Paris, Guyfours, Poictiers, are all quite lost.

Bed. What say'st thou man, before dead Henry's Coarce
Speake softly, or the losse of those great Townes
Will make him burst his Lead, and rise from death.

Gloster. Is Paris lost? and is Roan yeelded up?
If Henry were recall'd to life againe,
These newes would cause him once more yeeld the ghost.

Exe. How were they lost? what trechery was us'd?

Mess. No trechery, but want of Men and Money.
Amongst the Souldiers this is muttered,
That here you maintaine severall Factions:
And whil'st a Field should be dispatcht and fought,
You are disputing of your Generals.
One would have lingring Warres, with little cost;
Another would flye swift, but wanteth Wings:
A third man thinkes, without expence at all,
By guilefull faire words, Peace may be obtain'd.
Awake, away, English Nobility,
Let not slouth dimme your Honors, new begot;
Cropt are the Flower-de-Luces in your Armes
Of Englands Coat, one halfe is cut away.

Exe. Were our Teares wanting to this Funerall,
These Tidings would call forth her flowing Tides.

Bed. Me they concerne, Regent I am of France:
Give me my stealed Coat, Ile fight for France.
Away with these disgracefull wayling Robes;
Wounds will I lend the French, in stead of Eyes,
To weepe their intermissive Miseries.

Enter

Enter to them another Messenger.

Mess. Lords view these Letters, full of bad mischance.
France is revolted from the English quite,
Except some petty Townes, of no import.

The Dolphin Charles is crowned King in Rheimes:
The Bastard of Orleance with him is joyn'd:

Reynold, Duke of Aniou, doth his part,
The Duke of Alanfon flyeth to his side.

Exit.

Exe. The Dolphin crown'd King? all flye to him?
O whither shall we flye from this reproach?

Gloster. We will not flye, but to our enemies throats.
Bedford. if thou be slacke, Ile fight it out.

Bed. Gloster, why doubtst thou of my forwardnesse?
An Army have I mutter'd in my thoughts,
Wherewith already France is over-run.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. My gracious Lords, to adde to your laments,
Wherewith you now bedew King Henries heart,

I must informe you of a dismall fight,
Betwixt the stout Lord Talbot and the French.

Win. What? wherein Talbot overcame, is't so?

3. Mess. O no: wherein Lord Talbot was o'rethrowne:
The circumstance Ile tell you more at large.

The tenth of August last, this dreadfull Lord,
Retiring from the Siege of Orleance,

Having full scarce six thousand in his troupe,
By three and twenty thousand of the French

Was round encompassed, and set upon:

No leysure had he to enranke his men.

He wanted Pikes to set before his Archers:

In stead whereof, sharpe Stakes pluckt out of Hedges

They pitched in the ground confusedly,

To keepe the Horsemen off, from breaking in.

More then three houres the fight continued:

Where valiant Talbot, above humane thought,

Enacted wonders with his Sword and Lance.

Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand him:

Here, there, and every where enrag'd, he slew.

The French exclaym'd, the Devill was in Armes,

All the whole Army stood amaz'd on him.

His souldiers spying his undaunted Spirit,

A Talbot, a Talbot, cry'd out amaine.

And rusht into the Bowels of the battaile.

Here had the Conquest fully beene seal'd up,

If Sir John Falstaffe had not play'd the Coward,

He being in the Vauward, plac'd behind,

With purpose to relieve and follow them,

Cowardly fled, not having strucke one stroake.

Hence grew the generall wracke and massacre;

Enclosed were they with their Enemies.

A base Wallon, to win the Dolphins grace,

Thrust Talbot with a Speare into the Backe,

Whom all France, with their chiefe assembled strength,

Durst not presume to looke once in the face.

Bed. Is Talbot slaine then? I will slay my selfe,

For living idly here, in pompe and ease,

Whil' st such a worthy Leader, wanting ayd,

Vnto his dastard foe-men is betray'd,

3. Mess. O no, he lives, but is tooke Prisoner,

And Lord Scales with him, and Lord Hungerford:

Most of the rest slaughter'd, or tooke likewise.

Bed. His Ransome there is none but I shall pay.

Ile hale the Dolphin headlong from his Throne,

His Crowne shall be the Ransome of my friend:

Four of their Lords Ile change for one of ours.

Farewell my Masters, to my Taske will I,
Bonfires in France forthwith I am to make,
To keepe our great Saint Georges Feast withall.
Ten thousand Souldiers with me I will take,
Whose bloody deeds shall make all Europe quake.

3. Mess. So you had neede, for Orleance is besieg'd,
The English Army is growne weake and faint:
The Earle of Salisbury craveth supply,
And hardly keeps his men from mutiny,
Since they so few, watch such a multitude.

Exe. Remember Lords your Oathes to Henry sworne: Eyther to quell the Dolphin utterly;
Or bring him in obedience to your yoake.

Bed. I doe remember it, and here take leave,
To goe about my preparation.

Exit Bedford.

Gloster. Ile to the Tower with all the hast I can,
To view th' Artillery and Munition,
And then I will proclaime young Henry King.

Exit Gloster.

Exe. To Eltam will I, where the young King is,
Being ordain'd his speciall Governor,
And for his safety there Ile best devise.

Exit.

Winch. Each hath his Place and Function to attend:
I am left out; for me nothing remaines:
But long I will not be lacke out of Office,
The King from Eltam I intend to send,
And sit at chiefeest sterne of publike Weale.

Exit.

Enter Charles, Alanfon, and Reigneir, marching with Drum and Souldiers.

Charl. Mars histrue moving, even as in the Heavens
So in the Earth to this day is not knowne.
Late did he shine upon the English side:
Now we are Victors, upon us he smiles.
What Townes of any moment, but we have?
At pleasure here we lye, neere Orleance:
Otherwhiles, the famisht English, like pale ghosts,
Faintly besiege us one houre in a moneth.

Al. They want their Porridge, and their fat Bul Beeves
Eyther they must be dyeted like Mules.

Reig. Let's raise the Siege: why live we idly here?
And have their Provender ty'd to their mouthes,
Or pitteous they will looke, like drowned Mice.

Talbot is taken, whom we wont to feare:

Remayneth none but mad-brain'd Salisbury,

And he may well in fretting spend his gall,

Nor men nor Money hath he to make Warre.

Char. Sound, sound Alarum, we will rush on them,

Now for the honour of the forlorne French:

Him I forgive my death, that killeth me;

When he sees me goe backe one foot, or flye. Exeunt.

Heere Alarum, they are beaten backe by the English, with great losse.

Enter Charles, Alanfon, and Reigneir.

Charl. Who ever saw the like? what men have I?
Dogges, Cowards, Dastards: I would ne're have fled,
But that they left me 'midst my Enemies.

Reig. Salisbury is a desperate Homicide,
He fighteth as one weary of his life:
To other Lords, like Lyons wanting foode,
Doe rush upon us as their hungry prey.

Alanf.

Alan. Froyfard, a Countrey man of ours, records,
England all Olivers and Rowlands breed,
During the time Edward the third did raigne:
More truly now may this be verified;

For none but Samsons and Goliasses

It sendeth forth to skirmish: one to tenne?

Leane raw-bon'd Rascalls, who would e're suppose,

They had such courage and audacity;

Charl. Let's leave this Towne,

For they are hayre-brain'd Slaves,

And hunger will enforce them to be more eager:

Of old I know them; rather with their Teeth

The Walls they'll teare downe, then forsake the Siege.

Reig. I thinke by some odde Gimmalls or device

Their Armes are set, like Clockes, still to strike on;

Else ne're could they hold out so as they doe:

By my consent, we'll even let them alone.

Alan. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of Orleans.

Bast. Where's the Prince Dolphin? I have newes for him.

Dolph. Bastard of Orleans, thrice welcome to us.

Bast. Me thinkes your lookes are sad, your cheare ap-Hath the late overthrow wrought this offence? (pal'd.
Be not dismay'd, for succour is at hand:

A holy Maid hither with me I bring,

Which by a Vision sent to her from Heaven,

Ordained is to raise this tedious Seige,

And drive the English forth the bounds of France:

The spirit of deepe Prophecie she hath,

Exceeding the nine Sibyls of old Rome:

What's past, and what's to come, she can descry.

Speake, shall I call her in? beleeve my words,

For they are certaine, and unfallible.

Dolph. Goe call her in: but first, to try her skill,

Reignier stand thou as Dolphin in my place;

Question her proudly, let thy Lookes be sterne,

By this meanes shall we found what skill she hath.

Enter Ioane Puzel.

Reig. Faire Maid, is't thou wilt doe these wondrous feats?

Puz. Reignier, is't thou that thinkest to beguile me?

Where is the Dolphin? Come, come from behind,

I know thee well, though never seene before.

Be not amaz'd, there's nothing hid from me;

In private wil I talke with thee apart:

Stand backe you Lords, and give us leave a while.

Reig. She takes upon her bravely at first dash.

Puz. Dolphin, I am by birth a Shepherds Daughter,

My wit untrain'd in any kind of Art:

Heaven and our Lady gracious hath it pleas'd

To shine on my contemptible estate.

Loe, whilest I wayted on my tender Lambes,

And to Sunnes parching heat displai'd my cheekes,

Gods Mother deigned to appeare to me,

And in a Vision full of Majesty,

Will'd me to leave my base Vocation,

And free my Countrey from Calamity:

Her ayde she promis'd, and assur'd successe.

In compleat Glory she reveal'd her selfe;

And whereas I was blacke and swart before:

With those cleare Rayes, which she infus'd on me,

That beauty am I blest with, which you see.

Aske me what question thou canst possible,

And I will answer unpremeditated:

My Courage try by Combat, if thou dar'st,

And thou shalt find that I exceed my Sex.

Resolve on this, thou shalt be fortunate,

If thou receive me for thy Warlike Mate.

Dolph. Thou hast astonisht me with thy high termes,

Onely this prooffe Ile of thy Valour make,

In single Combat thou shalt buckle with me;

And if thou vanquishest, thy words are true,

Otherwise I renounce all confidence.

Puz. I am prepar'd: here is my keen-edg'd Sword,

Deckt with fine Flower-de-Luces on each side,

The which at Touraine, in S. Katherines Church-yard,

Out of a great deale of old Iron, I chose forth.

Dolph. Then come a Gods name, I feare no woman.

Puzel. And while I live, Ile ne're flye no man.

Here they fight, and Ioane de Puzel overcomes.

Dolph. Stay, stay thy hands, thou art an Amazon,

And fightest with the Sword of Deborah.

Puzel. Christs Mother helps me, else I were too weake.

Dolph. Who e're helps thee, 'tis thou that must helpe

Impatiently I burne with thy desire,

My heart and hands thou hast at once subdu'd,

Excellent Puzel, if thy name be so,

Let me thy servant, and not Sovereigne be,

'Tis the French Dolphin sueth to thee thus.

Puzel. I must not yeeld to any rights of Love,

For my Profession's sacred from above:

When I have chased all thy Foes from hence,

Then will I thinke upon a recompence.

Dolph. Meane time looke gracious on thy prostrate Thrall.

Reig. My Lord me thinkes is very long in talke.

Alan. Doubtlesse he shrives this woman to her smocke.

Else ne're could he so long protract his speech.

Reignier. Shall wee disturbe him, since he keepes no meane?

Ala. He may mean more then we poore men do know?

These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues.

Reig. My Lord, where are you? what devise you on,
Shall we give o're Orleans, or no?

Puzel. Why no, I say: distrustfull Recreants,

Fight till the last gaspe: for Ile be your guard.

Dolph. What she sayes, Ile confirme: we'll fight it out.

Puzel. Assign'd am I to be the English Scourge.

This night the Siege assuredly Ile raise:

Expect Saint Martins Summer, Halcyons dayes,

Since I have entred thus into these Warres.

Glory is like a Circle in the Water,

Which never ceaseth to enlarge it selfe,

Till by broad spreading, it disperse to nought.

With Henries death, the English Circle ends,

Dispersed are the glories it included:

Now am I like that proud insulting Ship,

Which Cesar and his fortune bare at once.

Dolph. Was Mahomet inspired with a Dove?

Thou with an Eagle art inspired then.

Helen, the Mother of Great Constantine,

Nor yet S. Philips daughters were like thee.

Bright Starre of Venus, faine downe on the Earth,

How may I reverently worship thee enough?

Alan. Leave off delays, and let us raise the Siege.

Reignier.

Reig. Woman, doe what thou canst to save our honors,
Drive them from Orleance, and be immortaliz'd.
Dolph. Presently we'll try: come, let's away about it,
No Prophet will I trust, if she prove false. Exeunt.

Enter Gloster, with his Serving-men.

Gloster. I am come to survey the Tower this day;
Since Henries death, I feare there is Conveyance:
Where be these Warders, that they wait not here?
Open the Gates, 'tis Gloster that calls.

1. Warder. Who's there, that knocks so imperiously?

Gloster. 1. Man. It is the Noble Duke of Gloster.

2. Warder. Who ere he be, you may not be let in.

1. Man. Villaines, answer you so the Lord Protector?

1. Warder. The Lord protect him, so we answer him,
We doe no otherwise then we are will'd.

Gloster. Who willed you? or whose will stands but mine?
There's none Protector of the Realme, but I:
Breake up the Gates, Ile be your warrantize;
Shall I be flowted thus by dunghill Groomes?

Glosters men rush at the Tower Gates, and Woodvile the Lieutenant speaks within.

Wood. What noyse is this? what Traytors have wee here?

Gloster. Lieutenant, is it you whose voyce I heare?
Open the Gates, here's Gloster that would enter.

Wood. Have patience Noble Duke, I may not open,
The Cardinall of Winchester forbids:
From him I have expresse commandement,
That thou nor none of thine shall be let in.

Gloster. Faint-hearted Woodvile, prizest him 'fore me:
Arrogant Winchester, that haughty Prelate,
Whom Henry our late Sovereigne ne're could brooke?
Thou art no friend to God, or to the King:
Open the Gates, or Ile shut thee out shortly.

Servingmen. Open the Gates unto the Lord Protector,
Or we'll burst them open, if that you come not quickly.

Enter to the Protector at the Tower Gates, Winchester and his men in Tawney Coates.

Winchester. How now ambitious Vmper, what means
this?

Gloster. Pie'd Priest, doo'st thou command me to be shut out?

Winchester. I doe, thou most usurping Proditor,
And not Protector of the King or Realme.

Gloster. Stand backe thou manifest Conspirator,
Thou that contrived'st to murder our dread Lord,
Thou that giv'st Whores Indulgences to sinne,
Ile canvas thee in thy broad Cardinalls Har,
If thou proceed in this thy insolence.

Winch. Nay, stand thou backe, I will not budge a foot:
This be Damascus, be thou cursed Cain,
To slay thy Brother Abel, if thou wilt.

Gloster. I will not slay thee, but Ile drive thee backe:
Thy Scarlet Robes, as a Childs bearing Cloth,
Ile use, to carry thee out of this place.

Winch. Doe what thou dar'st, I beard thee to thy face.

Gloster. What? am I dar'd, and bearded to my face?
Draw men, for all this priviledged place,
Blew Coats to Tawny Coats. Priest, beware your Beard,
I meane to tugge it, and to cuffe you soundly.
Vnder my feet Ile stampe thy Cardinalls Hat:

In spight of Pope, or dignities of Church,
Here by the Cheekes Ile drag thee up and downe.

Winchester. Gloster, thou wilt answer this before the Pope.

Gloster. Winchester Goose, I cry, a Rope, a Rope.
Now beat them hence, why doe you let them stay?
Thee Ile chafe hence, thou Wolfe in Sheepes array.
Out Tawney-Coates, out Scarlet Hypocrite.

Here Glosters men beat out the Cardinalls men, and enter in the hurly-burly the Mayor of London, and his Officers.

Mayor. Eye Lords, that you being supreme Magistrats,
Thus contumeliously should breake the Peace.

Gl. Peace Mayor, for thou know'st little of my wrongs:
Here's Beauford, that regards nor God nor King,
Hath here distrayn'd the Tower to his use.

Winch. Here's Gloster too, a Foe to Citizens,
One that still motions Warre, and never Peace,
O're-charging your free Purfes with large Fines;
That seekes to overthrow Religion,
Because he is Protector of the Realme;
And would have Armour here out of the Tower,
To Crowne himselfe King, and suppress the Prince.

Gloster. I will not answer thee with words, but blowes.

Here they skirmish againe.

Mayor. Nought rests for me, in this tumultuous strife,
But to make open Proclamation.

Come Officer, as lowd as e're thou canst, cry:

All manner of men, assembled here in Armes this day, against Gods Peace and the Kings, we charge and command you, in his Highnesse Name, to repayre to your severall dwell-ling places, and not to weare, handle, or use any Sword, Weapon, or Dagger hence-forward, upon paine of death.

Gloster. Cardinall, Ile be no breake of the Law:
But we shall meet, and breake our minds at large.

Winch. Gloster, we'll meet to thy deare cost be sure:
Thy heart-blood I will have for this dayes worke.

Mayor. Ile call for Clubs, if you will not away:
This Cardinall is more haughty then the Devill.

Gloster. Major farewell: thou doo'st but what thou may'st.

Winch. Abominable Gloster, guard thy Head,
For I intend to have it ere long.

Exeunt.

Mayor. See the Coast clear'd, and then we will depart.
Good God, these Nobles should such stomacks beare,
I my selfe fight not once in forty yeere. Exeunt.

Enter the Master Gunner of Orleance, and his Boy.

M. Gun. Sirrha, thou know'st how Orleance is besieg'd
And how the English have the Suburbs wonne.

Boy. Father I know, and oft have shot at them,
How e're unfortunate, I mis'd my ayme.

M. Gun. But now thou shalt not. Be thou rul'd by me:
Cheife Master Gunner am I of this Towne,
Something I must doe to procure me grace:
The Princes espyals have informed me:
How the English, in the Suburbs close entrencht,
Went through a secret Grate of Iron Barres,
In yonder Tower, to over-peere the City,
And thence discover, how with most advantage
They may vex us with Shot or with Assault.
To intercept this inconvenience,
A Peece of Ordnance 'gainst it I have plac'd,

And

And fully even these three dayes have I watcht,
If I could see them. Now Boy doe thou watch,
For I can stay no longer.

If thou spy'st any, runne and bring me word,
And thou shalt find me at the Governors.

Boy. Father, I warrant you, take you no care,
He never trouble you, if I may spye them.

Exit.

Exit.

Enter Salisbury, and Talbot on the Turrets, with others.

Salis. Talbot, my life, my joy, againe return'd?
How wert thou handled, being Prisoner?
Or by what meanes got'st thou to be releas'd?
Discourse I prethee on this Turrets top.

Tal. The Earle of Bedford had a Prisoner,
Call'd the brave Lord Ponton de Santraile,
For him was I exchange'd, and ransom'd.
But with a baser man of Armes by farre,
Once in contempt they would have barter'd me:
Which I disdain'd, scorn'd, and craved death,
Rather then I would be so pil'd esteem'd;
In fine, redeem'd I was as I desir'd.
But O, the trecherous Falstaffe wounds my heart,
Whom with my bare fists I would execute,
If I now had him brought into my power.

Salis. Yet tell'st thou not, how thou wert entertain'd.

Tal. With scoffes and scornes, and contumelious taunts,
In open Market-place produc't they me,
To be a publique spectacle to all:
Here, said they, is the Terror of the French,
The Scar-Crow that affrights our Children so.
Then broke I from the Officers that led me,
And with my nayles digg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurle at the beholders of my shame.
My grisly countenance made others flye,
None durst come neere, for feare of suddaine death.
In Iron Walls they deem'd me not secure:
So great feare of my Name 'mongst them were spread,
That they suppos'd I could rend Barres of Steele,
And spurne in pieces Posts of Adamant.
Wherefore a guard of chosen Shot I had;
That walkt about me every Minute while:
And if I did but stirre out of my Bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart.

Enter the Boy with a Linstocke.

Salis. I grieve to heare what torments you endur'd,
But we will be reveng'd sufficiently.
Now it is Supper time in Orleance:
Here, through this Grate, I can count every one,
And view the Frenchmen how they fortifie:
Let us looke in, the sight will much delight thee:
Sir Thomas Gargrave, and Sir William Glansdale,
Let me have your expresse opinions,
Where is best place to make our Batt'ry next?

Gargr. I thinke at the North Gate, for there stand Lords.

Glanf. And I heere, at the Bulwarke of the Bridge.

Talb. For ought I see, this City must be famisht,
Or with light Skirmishes enfeebled.

Here they shot, and Salisbury falls downe.

Salis. O Lord have mercy on us, wretched sinners.

Gargr. O Lord have mercy on me, wofull man.

Talb. What chance is this, that suddenly hath crost us?
Speake Salisbury; at least, if thou canst, speake:

How far'st thou, Mirror of all Martiall men?

One of thy Eyes, and thy Cheekes side strucke
Accursed Tower, accursed fatall Hand,
That hath contriv'd this wofull Tragedy.

In thirteene Battailles, Salisbury o'recame:

Henry the Fifth he first trayn'd to the Warres.

Whil'st any Trumpe did sound, or Drum strucke
His Sword did ne're leaue striking in the field.

Yet liv'st thou Salisbury? though thy speech doth

One Eye thou hast to looke to Heaven for grace.

The Sunne with one Eye vieweth all the World.

Heaven be thou gracious to none alive,

If Salisbury wants mercy at thy hands.

Beare hence his Body, I will helpe to bury it.

Sir Thomas Gargrave, hast thou any life?

Speake unto Talbot, nay, looke up to him.

Salisbury cheare thy Spirit with this comfort,
Thou shalt not dye whiles——

He beckens with his hand, and smiles on me:

As who should say, When I am dead and gone,

Remember to avenge me on the French.

Plantaginet I will, and Neville like will,

Play on the Lute, beholding the Townes burne:

Wretched shall France be onely in my Name.

Here an Alarum, and it Thunders and Lightens.

What stirre is this? what tumult's in the Heavens?
Whence cometh this Alarum, and the noyse?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My Lord, my Lord, the French have gather'd
The Dolphin, with one Joane de Puzel joyn'd,
A holy Prophetesse, new risen up,
Is come with a great Power, to rayse the Siege.

Here Salisbury listeth himselfe up, and groanes.

Talb. Heare, heare, how dying Salisbury doth groane:
It irkes his heart he cannot be reveng'd.

Frenchmen, lie be a Salisbury to you.

Puzel or Puffel, Dolphin or Dog-fish,

Your hearts lie stampe out with my Horses heeles,

And make a Quagmire of your mingled braines.

Convey me Salisbury into his Tent,

And then we'll try what these dastard Frenchmen dare.

Alarum,

Exit.

Here an Alarum againe, and Talbot pursueth the Dolphin, and driveth him: Then enter Joane de Puzel, driving Englishmen before her. Then enter,

Talbot.

Talb. Where is my strength, my valour, and my force?
Our English Troupes retyre, I cannot stay them.
A Woman clad in Armour chafeth them.

Enter Puzel.

Here, here she comes. He have about with thee:

Deville, or Devils Dam, He conjure thee:

Blood will I draw on thee, thou art a Witch.

And straightway give thy Soule to him thou serv'st.

Puz. Come, come, 'tis onely I that must disgrace thee.

Here they fight.

Talb. Heavens, can you suffer Hell so to prevail?

My brest He burst with straining of my courage,

And from my shoulders cracke my Armes asunder,

But I will chastise this high-minded Strumpet.

They fight againe.

Puz. Talbot farewell, thy houre is not yet come,
I must goe Vi'tuall Orleance forwith;

A short Alarum: then enter the Towne with Souldiers.

Ore.

...and if thou canst, I scorn thy strength.
 ...cheare up thy hungry-starved men,
 ...to make his Testament,
 ...as many more shall be. Exit.
 My thoughts are whirled like a Potters Wheele.
 ...not where I am, nor what I doe:
 ...by feare, not force, like Hannibal,
 ...backe our troupes, and conquers as she lists:
 ...with smoake, and Doves with noysome stench,
 ...their Hyves and Houses driven away.
 ...call'd us, for our fiercenesse, English Dogges,
 ...like the Whelpes, we crying runne away.

A short Alarum.

...make Countrey men, eyther renew the fight,
 ...teare the Lyons out of Englands Coat;
 ...your Soyle, give Sheepe in Lyons stead:
 ...run not halfe so trecherous from the Wolfe,
 ...Horse or Oxen from the Leopard,
 ...you flye from your oft-subdued slaves.
Alarum. Here another Skirmish.
 ...will not be, retyre into your Trenches:
 ...all consented unto Salisbury death,
 ...would strike a stroake in his revenge.
 ...is entred into Orleance,
 ...sight of us, or ought that we could doe.
 ...would I were to dye with Salisbury,
 ...the shame hereof, will make me hide my head.

Exit Talbot.

Enter on the Walls, Puzel, Dolphin, Reignier, Alanfon, and Souldiers.

Puzel. Advance our waving Colours on the Walls,
 ...Orleance from the English wolves:
 ...de Puzel hath perform'd her word.
Dolph. Divinest Creature, bright Affra's Daughter,
 How shall I honour thee for this successe?
 Thy promises are like Adonis Garden,
 That the day bloom'd, and fruitfull were the next.
 France, triumph in thy glorious Prophetesse,
 Recover'd is the Towne of Orleance,
 Most blessed hap did ne're befall our State.
Reignier. Why ring not out the Bells alowd,
 Throughout the Towone?
 Dolphin command the Citizens make Bonfires,
 And feast and banquet in the open streets,
 To celebrate the joy that God hath given us.
Alanfon. All France will be repleat with mirth and joy,
 When they shall heare how we have play'd the men.
Dolph. 'Tis Joane not we, by whom the day is wonne:
 For which, I will devide my Crowne with her,
 And all the Priests and Fryers in my Realme,
 Shall in proceffion sing her endlesse prayse.
 A stately Pyramis to her Ile reare,
 Then Rhodope's or Memphis ever was.
 In memorie of her wen she is dead,
 Her Ashes, in an Urne more precious
 Than the rich-jewel'd Coffe of Darius,
 Transported, shall be at high Festivals
 Before the Kings and Queenes of France.
 No longer on Saint Dennis will we cry,
 But Joane de Puzel shall be France's Saint.
 Come in, and let us Banquet Royally,
 After this Golden Day of Victorie.

Flourish.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter a Sergeant of a Band, with two Sentinels.

Ser. Sirs, take your places and be vigilant:
 If any noyse or Souldier you perceive
 Neere to the walles, by some apparant signe
 Let us have knowledge at the Court of Guard.

Sent. Sergeant you shall. Thus are poore Servitors
 (When others sleepe upon their quiet beds)
 Constrain'd to watch in darkenesse, raine, and cold.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, and Burgundy, with scaling Ladders: Their Drummes beating a Dead March.

Tal. Lord Regent, and redoubted Burgundy,
 By whose approach, the Regions of Artoys,
Wallon, and Picardy, are friends to us:
 This happy night, the Frenchmen are secure,
 Having all day carows'd and banquetted,
 Embrace we then this opportunitie,
 As fitting best to quittance their deceite,
 Contriv'd by Art, and balefull Sorcerie.

Bed. Coward of France, how much he wrongs his fame,
 Despairing of his owne armes fortitude,
 To joyne with Witches, and the helpe of Hell.

Bur. Traitors have never other company.
 But what's that Puzell whom they tearme so pure?

Tal. A Maid, they say.

Bed. A Maid? And be so martiall?

Bur. Pray God she prove not masculine ere long:
 If underne ath the Standard of the French
 She carry Armor, as she hath begun.

Tal. Well, let them practise and converse with spirits.
 God is our Fortresse, in whose conquering name
 Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarkes.

Bed. Ascend brave Talbot, we will follow thee.

Tal. Not altogether: Better farre I guesse,
 That we do make our entrance severall wayes:
 That if it chance the one of us do faile,
 The other yet may rise against their force.

Bed. Agreed; Ile to yond corner.

Bur. And I to this.

Tal. And heere will Talbot mount, or make his grave.
 Now Salisbury for thee and for the right
 Of English Henry, shall this night appeare
 How much in duty, I am bound to both.

Sent. Arme, arme, the enemy doth make assault.

Cry, S. George. A Talbot.

The French leape ore the walles in their shirts. Enter severall wayes, Bastard, Alanfon, Reignier, halfe ready, and halfe unready.

Alan. How now my Lords? what all unreadie so?

Bast. Unready? I and glad we scap'd so well.

Reig. 'Twas time (I throw) to wake and leave our beds,
 Hearing Alarums at our Chamber doores.

Alan. Of all exploits since first I follow'd Armes, Ne're heard I of a walike enterprize

M

More

More venturous, or desperate then this.

Bast. I thinke this Talbot be a Fiend of Hell.

Reig. If not of Hell, the Heavens sure favour him.

Alansf. Here cometh Charles, I marvell how he sped?

Enter Charles and Ione.

Bast. Tut, holy Ione was his defensive Guard.

Charl. Is this thy cunning, thou deceitfull Dame?
Didst thou at first, to flatter us withall,
Make us partakers of a little gayne,
That now our losse might be ten times so much?

Ione. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his friend?
At all times will you have my power alike?
Sleeping or waking, must I still prevaile,
Or will you blame and lay the fault on me?
Improvident Souldiers, had your watch beene good,
This sodaine mischiefe never could have falne.

Charl. Duke of Alanson, this was your default,
That being Captaine of the Watch to Night,
Did looke no better to that weightie Charge.

Alansf. Had all our Quarters beene as safely kept,
As that whereof I had the government,
We had not beene thus shamefully surpriz'd.

Bast. Mine was secure.

Reig. And so was mine, my Lord.

Charl. And for my selfe, most part of all this Night
Within her Quarter, and mine owne Precinct,
I was imploy'd in passing to and fro,
About relieving of the Centinels.

Then how, or which way, should they first breake in?

Ione. Question (my Lords) no further of the case,
How or which way; 'tis sure they found some place,
But weakely guarded, where the breach was made:
And now there rests no other shift but this,
To gather our Souldiors, scatter'd and dispers't,
And lay new Flat-formes to endamage them.

Exeunt.

Alarm. Enter a Souldier, crying, a Talbot, a Talbot:
they flye, leaving their Cloathes behind.

Sould. Ile be so bold to take what they have left:
The Cry of Talbot serves me for a Sword,
For I have loaden me with many Spoyles,
Vsing no other Weapon but his Name. Exit.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundie.

Bedf. The day begins to breake, and Night is fled, Whose pitchy Mantle over-vayl'd the Earth.
Here found Retreat, and cease our hot pursuit. Retreat.

Talb. Bring forth the Body of old Salisbury,
And here advance it in the Market-Place,
The middle Center of this cursed Towne.
Now have I pay'd my Vow unto his Soule,
For every drop of blood was drawne from him,
There hath at least five Frenchmen dyed to night.
And that hereafter Ages may behold
What ruine happened in revenge of him,
Within their chiefeft Temple Ile erect
A Tombe, wherein his Corps shall be interr'd:
Vpon the which, that every one may reade,
Shall be engrav'd the sacke of Orleans,
The trecherous manner of his mournfull death,
And what a terror he had beene to France.
But Lords, in all our bloody Massacre,
I muse we met not with the Dolphins Grace,

His new-come Champion, vertuous Ione of Acre,
Nor any of his false Confederates.

Bedf. 'Tis thought Lord Talbot, when the fight
Rows'd on the sodaine from their drowsie Beds,
They did amongst the troopes of armed men,
Leape o're the Walls for refuge in the field.

Burg. My selfe, as farre as I could well discern,
For smoke, and duskie vapors of the night,
Am sure I scar'd the Dolphin and his Trull,
When Arme in Arme they both came swiftly running
Like to a paire of loving Turtle-Doves,
That could not live asunder day or night;
After that things are set in order here,
Wee'll follow them with all the power we have.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. All hayle, my Lords: which of his Princely my Call ye the Warlike Talbot, for his Acts

So much applauded through the Realme of France?

Talb. Here is the Talbot, who would speake with

Mess. The vertuous Lady, Countesse of Auerghen,
With modestie admiring thy Renowne,
By me entreats (great Lord) thou would'st vouchsafe
To visit her poore Castle where she lyes,
That she may boast she hath beheld the man,
Whose glory fills the World with lowd report.

Burg. Is it even so? Nay, then I see our Warres
Will turne unto a peacefull Comick sport,
When Ladyes crave to be encountred with.
You may not (my Lord) despise her gentle suit.

Talb. Ne're trust me then: for when a World of men
Could not prevaile with all their Oratorie,
Yet hath a Womans kindnesse over-rul'd:
And therefore tell her, I returne great thanks;
And in submission will attend on her.

Will not your Honours beare me company?

Bedf. No, truly, 'tis more then manners will:
And I have heard it sayd, Vnbidden Guests
Are often welcomest when they are gone.

Talb. Well then, alone (since there's no remedie)
I meane to prove this Ladyes courtesie.
Come hither Captaine, you perceive my minde.

Whisper.

Capt. I doe my Lord, and meane accordingly.

Exeunt.

Enter Countesse.

Count. Porter, remember what I gave in charge,
And when you have done so, bring the Keyes to me.

Port. Madame, I will. Exit.

Count. The Plot is layd, if all things fall out right,
I shall as famous be by this exploit,
As Scythian Tomyris by Cyrus death.
Great is the rumour of this dreadfull Knight,
And his achievements of no lesse account:
Faine would mine eyes be witnesse with mine eares,
To give their censure of these rare reports.

Enter Messenger and Talbot.

Mess. Madame, according as your Ladyship desir'd,
By message crav'd, so is Lord Talbot come.

Count. And he is welcome: what? is this the man?

Mess. Madame, it is.

Count. Is this the Scourge of France?
Is this the Talbot, so much fear'd abroad?
That with his Name the Mothers still their Babes?
I see Report is fabulous and false.

I thought I should have scene some Hercules,
A second Hector, for his grim aspect,
And large proportion of his strong knit Limbes.
Alas, this is a Child, a silly Dwarfie :

It cannot be, this weake and writhled shrimpe
Should strike such terror to his Enemies.

Talb. Madame, I have beene bold to trouble you :
But since your Ladyship is not at leysure,
Hee sort some other time to visit you.

Count. What meanes he now ?
Goe aske him, whither he goes ?

Mess. Stay my Lord Talbot, for my Lady craves,
To know the cause of your abrupt departure ?

Talb. Marry, for that shee's in a wrong beleefe,
I goe to certifie her Talbot's here.

Enter Porter with Keyes.

Count. If thou be he, then art thou Prisoner.

Talb. Prisoner? to whom?

Count. To me, blood-thirstie Lord :
And for that cause I train'd thee to my House.
Long time thy shadow hath been thrall to me,
For in my Gallery thy picture hangs :
But now the substance shall endure the like,
And I will chayne these Legges and Armes of thine,
That hast by tyrannie these many yeeres
Wasted our Countrey, slaine our Citizens,
And sent our Sonnes and Husbands captivate.

Talb. Ha, ha, ha.

Count. Laughst thou Wretch ?

Thy mirth shall turne to moane.

Talb. I laugh to see your Ladiship so fond,
To thinke, that you have ought but Talbot's shadow,
Whereon to practise your severity.

Count. Why? art not thou the man?

Talb. I am indeede.

Count. Then have I substance too.

Talb. No, no, I am but shadow of my selfe:
You are deceiv'd, my substance is not here ;
For what you see, is but the smallest part,
And least proportion of Humanitie :
Itell you Madame, were the whole Frame here,
It is of such a spacious loftie pitch,
Your Roofe were not sufficient to contain'r.

Count. This is a Riddling Merchant for the nonce,
He will be here, and yet he is not here :

How can these contrarieties agree ?

Talb. That will I shew you presently.

Winds his Hornes, Drummes strike up, a Peale of Ordinance : Enter Souldiers.

How say you Madame? are you now perswaded,
That Talbot is but shadow of himselfe ?
These are his substance, sinewes, armes, and strength,
With which he yoaketh your rebellious Neckes,
Razeth your Cities, and subverts your Townes,
And in a moment makes them desolate.

Count. Victorious Talbot, pardon my abuse,
I finde thou art no lesse then Fame hath bruited,
And more then may be gathered by thy shape.
Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath,
For I am sorry, that with reverence
I did not entertaine thee as thou art.

Talb. Be not dismay'd, faire Lady, nor misconster
The minde of Talbot, as you did mistake
The outward composition of his body.
What you have done, hath not offended me :
Nor other satisfaction doe I crave,

But onely with our patience, that we may Taste of your Wine, and see what Cates you have,
For Souldiers stomackes alwayes serve them well.

Count. With all my heart, and thinke me honored,
To feast so great a Warrior in my house. Exeunt.

Enter Richard Plantagenet, Warwick, Somerset, Poole, and others.

Yorke. Great Lords and Gentlemen,
What meanes this silence ?

Dare no man answere in a Case of Truth ?

Suff. Within the Temple Hall we were too lowd,
The Garden here is more convenient.

Yorke. Then say at once, if I maintain'd the Truth :
Or else was wrangling Somerset in th'error ?

Suff. Faith I have beene a Truant in the Law,
And never yet could frame my will to it,
And therefore frame the Law unto my will.

Som. Iudge you, my Lord of Warwicke, then betweene us.

War. Betweene two Hawks, which flies the higher pitch,
Betweene two Dogs, which hath the deeper mouth,
Betweene two Blades, which beares the better temper,
Betweene two Horses, which doth beare him best,
Betweene two Girles, which hath the merriest eye,
I have perhaps some shallow spirit of judgement :
But in these nice sharpe Quillets of the Law,
Good faith I am no wiser then a Daw.

Yorke. Tut, tut, here is a mannerly forbearance :
The truth appeares so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out.

Som. And on my side it is so well apparrell'd,
So cleare, so shining, and so evident,
That it will glimmer through a blind-mans eye.

Yorke. Since you are tongue-ty'd, and soloth to speake,
In dumbe significants proclayme your thoughts :
Let him that is a true-borne Gentleman,
And stands upon the honor of his birth,
If he suppose that I have pleaded truth,
From off this Bryer plucke a white Rose with me,

Som. Let him that is no Coward, nor no flatterer,
But dare maintaine the party of the truth,
Pluck a red Rose from off this Thorne with me.

War. I love no Colours : and without all colour
Of base insinuating flatterie,
I pluck this white Rose with Plantagenet.

Suff. I plucke this red Rose, with young Somerset,
And say withall, I thinke he held the right.

Vernon. Stay Lords and Gentlemen, and pluck no more Till you conclude, that he upon whose side
The fewest Roses are crompt from the tree,
Shall yeeld the other in the right opinion.

Som. Good Master Vernon, it is well objected :
If I have fewest, I subscribe in silence.

Yorke. And I.

Vernon. Then for the truth, and plainenesse of the Case,
I plucke this pale and Majden Blossome here,
Giving my Verdict on the white Rose side.

Som. Prick not your finger as you plucke it off,
Least bleeding, you doe paint the white Rose red,
And fall on my side so against your will.

Vernon. If I, my Lord, for my opinion bleed,
Opinion shall be Surgeon to my hurt,
And keepe me on the side where still I am.

Som. Well, well, come on, who else?

Lawier. Vnlesse my Studie and my Bookes be false,
The argument you held, was wrong in you ;
In signe whereof, I plucke a white Rose too.

Torke. Now Somerſet, where is your argument?

Som. Here in my Scabbard, meditating, that Shall dye your white Rose in a bloody red:

Torke. Meane time your cheeks do counterfeit our Roses:
For pale they looke with feare, as witnessing
The truth on our ſide.

Som. No Plantagenet :

'Tis not for feare, but anger, that thy cheekes
Blush for pure ſhame, to counterfeit our Roses,
And yet thy tongue will not confeſſe thy error.

Torke. Hath not thy Rose a Canker, Somerſet?

Som. Hath not thy Rose a Thorne, Plantagenet?

Torke. I, ſharpe and piercing to maintaine his truth,
Whiles thy conſuming Canker eates his falſhood:

Som. Well, Ile find friends to weare my bleeding Roses,
That ſhall maintaine what I have ſaid is true,
Where falſe Plantagenet dare not be ſcene.

Torke. Now by this Maiden Bloſſome in my hand;
I ſcorne thee and thy falſion, peeviſh Boy.

Suff. Turne not thy ſcornes this way Plantagenet.

Torke. Prowd Poole, I will, and ſcorne both him and thee.

Suff. Ile turne my part thereof into thy throat:

Som. Away, away, good William de la Poole,
We grace the Yeoman, by converſing with him.

Warw. Now by Gods will thou wrong'ſt him, Somerſet:
His Grandfather was Lyonel Duke of Clarence,
Third Sonne to the third Edward King of England :
Spring Crefleſſe Yeomen from ſo deepe a Root?

Torke. He beares him on the place's Priviledge,
Or durſt not for his craven heart ſay thus.

Som. By him that made me, Ile maintaine my words
On any plot of Ground in Chriſtendome.
Was not thy Father, Richard, Earle of Cambridge,
For Treason executed in our late Kings dayes?
And by his Treason, ſtand'ſt not thou attainted,
Corrupted and exempt from ancient Gentry?
His treſpaſſe yet lives guiltie in thy blood;
And till thou be reſtor'd, thou art a Yeoman.

Torke. My Father was attached, not attainted,
Condemn'd to dye for Treason, but no Traytor ;
And that Ile prove on better men then Somerſet,
Were growing time once ripened to my will.
For your partaker Poole, and you your ſelfe,
Ile note you in my Booke of Memorie,
To ſcourge you for this apprehenſion :
Looke to it well, and ſay you are well warn'd.

Som. Ah, thou ſhalt finde us ready for thee ſtill :
And know us by theſe Colours for thy Foes,
For theſe, my friends in ſpight of thee ſhall weare.

Torke. And by my Soule, this pale and angry Rose,
As Cognizance of my blood-drinking hate,
Will I for ever, and my faction weare,
Vntill it wither with me to my Grave,
Or flouriſh to the height of my Degree.

Suff. Goe forward, and be choak'd with thy ambition:
And ſo farewell, untill I meete thee next. Exit.

Som. Have with thee Poole : Farewell ambitious Richard. Exit.

Torke. How I am brav'd and muſt perforce endure it?

Warw. This blot that they object againſt your houſe,
Shall be wip't out in the next Parliament,

Call'd for the Truce of Wincheſter and Glouceſter :

And if thou be not then created Torke,

I will not live to be accounted Warwicke.

Meane time, in ſignall of my love to thee,

Againſt proud Somerſet, and William Poole,

Will I upon thy partie weare this Rose.

And here I propheticke : this brawle to day,
Growne to this faction in the Temple Garden,
Shall ſend betweene the Red-Rose and the White,
A thouſand Soules to Death and deadly Night.

Torke. Good Maſter Vernon, I am bound to you,
That you on my behalfe would plucke a Flower.

Ver. In your behalfe ſtill will I weare the ſame.

Lawyer. And ſo will I.

Torke. Thankes gentle Sir.

Come, let us foure to Dinner : I dare ſay,
This Quarrell will drinke Blood another day.

Exeunt.

Enter Mortimer, brought in a Chayre, and Iaylors.

Mort. Kind Keepers of my weake decaying Age,
Let dying Mortimer here reſt himſelfe.

Even like a man new haled from the Wrack,
So fare my Limbes with long Imprisonment :
And theſe gray Lockes, the Purſuiuants of death,
Neflor-like aged, in an Age of Care,

Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer.

Theſe Eyes, like Lampes, whoſe waſting Oyle is ſpent,
Waxe dimme, as drawing to their Exigent.

Weake Shoulders, over-borne with burthening Griefe,
And pyth-leſſe Armes, like to a withered Vine,
That droupes his ſappe-leſſe Branches to the ground.
Yet are theſe Feet, whoſe ſtrength-leſſe ſtay is numbe,
(Vnable to ſupport this Lumpe of Clay)

Swift-winged with deſire to get a Grave,
As witting I no other comfore have.

But tell me Keeper, will my Nephew come?

Keeper. Richard Plantagenet, my Lord, will come:
We ſent unto the Temple, his Chamber,
And answer was return'd, that he will come :

Mort. Enough : my ſoule then ſhall be ſatisfied.
Poore Gentleman, his wrong doth equall mine,
Since Henrie Monmouth firſt began to reigne,
Before whoſe Glory I was great in Armes,
This loathſome ſequeſtration have I had ;
And even ſince then, hath Richard beene obſcur'd,
Depriv'd of Honour and Inheritance.

But now, the Arbitrator of Deſpaires,
Juſt death, kinde Vmire of mens miſeries,
With ſweet enlargement doth diſmiſſe me hence :
I would his troubles likewiſe were expir'd,
That ſo he might recover what was loſt.

Enter Richard

Keeper. My Lord, your loving Nephew now is come.

Mort. Richard Plantagenet, my friend, is he come?

Rich. I, Noble Vnckle, thus ignobly us'd,
Your Nephew, late deſpised Richard, comes.

Mort. Direct mine Armes, I may embrace his Necke,
And in his Boſome ſpend my latter gaspe.
Oh tell me when my Lippes doe touch his Cheekes,
That I may kindly give one fainting Kiſſe,
And now declare ſweet Stem from Torke's great Stock,
Why didſt thou ſay of late thou wert deſpis'd?

Rich. Firſt

Rich. First, leane thine aged Back against mine Arme,
And in that case, Ile tell thee my Discafe.

This day in a gument upon a Case,
Some words there grew 'twixt Somerſet and me :
Amongſt which tearmes, he us'd his lavish tongue,
And did upbrayd me with my Fathers death ;
Which obloquie ſet barres before my tongue,
Elſe with the like I had requited him.
Therefore good Vnckle, for my Fathers ſake,
In honour of a true Plantagenet,
And for Alliance ſake, declare the cauſe
My Father, Earle of Cambridge, loſt his Head.

Mort. That cauſe (faire Nephew) that imprifon'd me,
And hath detain'd me all my flowring Youth,
Within a leathſome Dungeon, there to pyne,
Was curſed inſtrument of his deceaſe.

Rich. Discover more at large what cauſe that was,
For I am ignorant, and cannot gueſſe.

Mort. I will, if that my fading breath permit,
And death approach not, ere my Tale be done.

Henry the Fourth, Grandfather to this King,
Depos'd his Nephew Richard, Edwards Sonne,
The firſt begotten, and the lawfull Heire
Of Edward King, third of that Deſcent.

During whoſe Reigne, the Percies of the North,
Finding his Viurpation moſt unjuſt,
Endevor'd my advancement to the Throne.

The reaſon mov'd theſe Warlike Lords to this,
Was, for that (young King Richard thus remov'd, Leaving no Heire begotten of his Body )
I was the next by Birth and Parentage :

For by my Mother I derived am
From Lionel Duke of Clarence, the third Sonne
To King Edward the Third ; whereas hee,
From John of Gaunt doth bring his Pedigree,
Being but the fourth of that Heroick Lyne.

But marke : as in this haughtie great attempt,
They labour'd to plant the rightfull Heire,
I loſt my Libertie, and they their Lives.

Long after this, when Henry the Fifth (Succeeding his Father Bullingbrooke ) did reigne ;
Thy Father, Earle of Cambridge, then deriv'd
From famous Edmund Langley, Duke of Yorke, Marrying my Siſter, that thy Mother was ;

Againe, in pittie of my hard diſtreſſe,
Levied an Army, weening to redeeme,
And have inſtall'd me in the Diademe :

But as the reſt, ſo fell that Noble Earle,
And was beheaded. Thus the Mortimers,
In whom the Title reſted, were ſuppreſt.

Rich. Of which, my Lord, your Honor is the laſt.

Mort. True; and thou ſeeſt, that I no Iſſue have,
And that my fainting words doe warrant death :
Thou art my Heire ; the reſt, I wiſh thee gather :
But yet be wary in thy ſtudious care.

Rich. Thy grave admoniſhments prevaile with me :
But yet me thinkes, my Fathers execution
Was nothing leſſe then bloody Tyranny.

Mort. With ſilence, Nephew, be thou pollitick,
Strong fix'd is the Houſe of Lancaster,
And like a Mountaine, not to be remov'd.

But now thy Vnckle is removing hence,
As Princes doe their Courts, when they are cloy'd
With long continuance in a ſetled place.

Rich. O Vnckle, would ſome part of my young yeeres
Might but redeeme the paſſage of your Age.

Mort. Thou do'ſt then wrong me, as y<sup>e</sup> ſlaughterer doth,
Which giveth many Wounds, when one will kill.
Mourne not, except thou ſorrow for my good,
Onely give order for my Funerall.

And ſo farewell, and faire be all thy hopes;
And prosperous be thy Life in Peace and Warre. Dyes.

Rich. And peace, no Warre, befall thy parting Soule.
In priſon haſt thou ſpent a Pilgrimage,
And like a Hermite over-paſt thy dayes.
Well, I will locke his Counſell in my Breaſt,
And what I doe imagine, let that reſt.

Keepers convey him hence, and I my ſelfe
Will ſee his Buriall better then his Life. Exit.

Here dyes the duſkie Torch of Mortimer,
Choakt with Ambition of the meaner ſort.
And for thoſe Wrongs, thoſe bitter injuries,
Which Somerſet hath offer'd to my Houſe,
I doubt not, but with honor to redreſſe.

And therefore haſte I to the Parliament,
Eyther to be reſtored to my Blood,
Or make my will th' advantage of my good. Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Flouriſh. Enter King, Exeter, Gloſter, Wincheſter, Warwick, Somerſet, Suffolke, Richard Plantagenet. Gloſter offers to put up a Bill : Wincheſter ſnatches it, teares it.

Winch. Com'ſt thou with deepe premeditated Lines?
With written Pamphlets, ſtudiouſly devis'd?

Humfrey of Gloſter, if thou canſt accuſe,
Or ought intend'ſt to lay unto my charge,

Doe it without invention, ſuddenly,
As I with ſudden, and extemporall ſpeech,
Purpose to answer what thou canſt object.

Glo. Presumptuous Prieſt, this place commands my patience,
Or thou ſhould'ſt find thou haſt diſ-honor'd me.

Thinke not, although in Writing I prefer'd
The manner of thy vile outrageous Crimes,
That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able
Verbatim to rehearſe the Methode of my Penne.

No prelate, ſuch is thy audacious wickedneſſe,
Thy lewd, peſtiferous and diſſentious pranks,
As very infants prattle of thy pride.

Thou art a moſt pernicious Viſurer,
Froward by nature, Enemy to peace,
Laciſcious, wanton, more then well beſeemes
A man of thy profeſſion, and Degree.

And for thy Trecherie, what's more manifeſt?

In that thou lay'd'ſt a Trap to take my Life,
As well at London Bridge, as at the Tower,
Beſide, I feare me, if thy thoughts were ſifted,
The King, thy ſoveraigne, is not quite exempt
From envious mallice of thy ſwelling heart.

Winch. Gloſter, I doe deſie thee. Lords vouchſake
To give me hearing what I ſhall reply.

If I were covetous, ambitious or perverſe,
As he will have me : how am I ſo poore?
Or how haps it, I ſeek not to advance

Or rayſe my ſelfe? but keepe my wonted Calling.

And for Diſſention, who preferreth Peace
More then I doe? except I be provok'd

No, my good Lords, it is not that offends,
It is not that, that hath incens'd the Duke:

It is becauſe no one ſhould ſway but he,
No one, but he, ſhould be about the King ;
And that engenders Thunder in his breaſt;

And makes him rore these Accusations forth.
But he shall know I am as good——

Gloſt. As good?

Thou Bastard of my Grandfather.

Winch. I, Lordly Sir: for what are you, I pray,
But one imperious in anothers Throne?

Gloſt. Am I not Protector, sawcie Priest?

Winch. And am not I a Prelate of the Church?

Gloſt. Yes, as an Out-law in a Castle keepes,
And use it, to patronage his Theft.

Winch. Vnreuerent Gloſter.

Gloſt. Thou art reverent,
Touching thy Spirituall Function, not thy Life.

Winch. Rome shall remedie this.

Warw. Roame thither then.

My Lord, it were your dutie to forbear.

Som. I, see the Bishop be not over-borne:
Me thinkes my Lord should be Religious,
And know the Office that belongs to such.

Warw. Me thinkes his Lordship should be humbler,
It fitteth not a Prelate so to plead.

Som. Yes, when his holy State is toucht so neere.

Warw. State holy, or unhallow'd, what of that?
Is not his Grace Protector to the King?

Rich. Plantagenet I see must hold his tongue, Least it be said, Speake Sirrha when you should:
Must your bold Verdict enter talke with Lords?
Else would I have a fling at Winchester.

King. Vnckles of Gloſter, and of Winchester,
The speciall Watch-men of our English Weale,
I would prevaile, if Prayers might prevaile,
To joyne your hearts in love and amitie.
Oh, what a Scandall is it to our Crowne,
That two such Noble Peeres as ye should iarre?
Beleeve me, Lords, my tender yeeres can tell,
Civill dissention is a viperous Worme,
That gnawes the Bowels of the Common-wealth.

A noyse within. Downe with the Tawny-Coats.

King. What tumult's this?

Warw. An Vpore, I dare warrant,
Begun through malice of the Bishops men.

A noyse againe, Stones, Stones.

Enter Mayor.

Mayor. Oh my good Lords, and vertuous Henry, Pitty the Cittie of London, pittie us:
The Bishop, and the Duke of Glosters men,
Forbidden late to carry any Weapon,
Have fill'd their Pockets full of peeble stones;
And banding themselves in contrary parts,
Doe pelt so fast at one anothers Pate,
That many have their giddy braynes knockt out:
Our Windowes are broke downe in every Street,
And we, for feare, compell'd to shut our Shops.

Enter in skirmish with bloody Pates.

King. We charge you, on allegiance to our selves,
To hold your slaughtering hands, and keepe the Peace:
Pray' Vnckle Gloſter mitigate this strife.

1. Serving. Nay, if we be forbidden Stones, wee'le fall to it with our Teeth.

2. Serving. Doe what ye dare, we are as resolute:

skirmish againe.

Gloſt. You of my household, leave this peevish broyle,
And set this unaccustom'd fight aside.

3. Seru. My Lord, we know your Grace to be a man
Iust, and upright; and for your Royall Birth,
Inferior to none, but to his Majestie:
And ere that we will suffer such a Prince,
So kinde a Father of the Common-weale,
To be disgraced by an Inke-horne Mate,
Wee and our Wives and Children all will fight,
And have our bodies slaughtred by thy foes.

1. Seru. I, and the very parings of our Nayles
Shall pitch a Field when we are dead,

Begin againe.

Gloſt. Stay, stay, I say:

And if you love me, as you say you doe,
Let me perswade you to forbear a while.

King. Oh, how this discord doth afflict my soule.
Can you, my Lord of Winchester, behold
My sighes and teares, and will not once relent?
Who should be pittifull, if you be not?
Or who should study to preferre a Peace,
If holy Church-men take delight in broyles?

Warw. Yeeld my Lord Protector, yeeld Winchester,
I see you meane with obstinate repulse
To flay the Sovereigne, and destroy the Realme.
You see what mischief, and what Murther too,
Hath beene enacted through your enmitie:
Then be at peace, except ye thirst for blood.

Winch. He shall submit, or I will never yeeld.

Gloſt. Compassion on the King commands me stoupe,
Or I would see his heart out, ere the Priest
Should ever get that priviledge of me.

Warw. Behold my Lord of Winchester, the Duke
Hath banisht moodie discontented fury,
As by his smoothed Browes it doth appeare:
Why looke you still so sterne, and tragicall?

Gloſt. Here Winchester, I offer thee my Hand.

King. Fie Vnckle Beauford, I have heard you preach,
That Mallice was a great and grievous sinne:
And will not you maintaine the thing you teach?
But prove a chiefe offender in the same.

Warw. Sweet King: the Bishop hath a kindly gyrd:
For shame my Lord of Winchester relent;
What, shall a Child instruct you what to doe?

Winch. Well, Duke of Gloſter, I will yeeld to thee
Love for thy Love, and Hand for Hand I give.

Gloſt. I, but I feare me with a hollow Heart.
See here my friends and loving Countreymen,
This token serveth for a Flagge of Truce,
Betwixt our selves, and all our followers:
So helpe me God, as I dissemble not.

Winch. So helpe me God, as I intend it not.

King. Oh loving Vnckle, kinde Duke of Gloſter,
How joyfull am I made by this Contract,
Away my Masters, trouble us no more,
But joyne in friendship, as your Lords have done.

1. Seru. Content, Ile to the Surgeons.

2. Seru. And so will I.

3. Seru. And I will see what Physicke the Taverne affords. Exeunt.

Warw. Accept this Scrowle, most gracious Sovereigne,
Which in the Right of Richard Plantagenet,
We doe exhibite to your Majestie.

Glo. Wel urg'd, my Lord of Warwick: for sweet Prince,
And if your Grace marke every circumstance,
You have great reason to doe Richard right,
Especially for those occasions
At Eltam Place I told your Majestie.

King. And

King. And those occasions, Vnckle, were of force :
Therefore my loving Lords, our pleasure is,
That Richard be restored to his Blood.

Warw. Let Richard be restored to his Blood,
So shall his Fathers wrongs be recompenc't.

Winch. As will the rest, so willet Winchester.

King. If Richard will be true, not that alone,
But al the whole Inheritance I give,
That doth belong unto the House of Yorke,
From whence you spring, by Lineall Descent.

Rich. Thy humble servant vowes obedience,
And humble service, till the point of death.

King. Stoope then, and set your Knee against my Foot,
And in reguerdon of that dutie done,
I gytt thee with the valiant Sword of Yorke.

Rise Richard, like a true Plantagenet,
And rise created Princely Duke of Yorke.

Rich. And so thrive Richard, as thy foes may fall,
And as my dutie springs, so perish they,
That grudge one thought against your Majestie.

Al. Welcome high Prince, the mighty Duke of Yorke.

Som. Perish base Prince, ignoble Duke of Yorke.

Glo. Now will it best availe your Majestie,
To crosse the Seas, and to be Crown'd in France :
The presence of a King engenders love
Amongst his Subjects and his loyall Friends,
As it dis-animates his Enemies.

King. When Gloster sayes the word, King Henry goes,
For friendly counsaile cuts off many Foes.

Glo. Your Ships already are in readinesse.

Exeunt.

Manet Exeter.

Exet. I, we may march in England, or in France,
Not seeing what is likely to ensue ;
This late diffention growne betwixt the Peeres,
Burnes under fained ashes of forg'd love,
And will at last breake out into a flame,
As festred members rot but by degree,
Till bones and flesh and sinewes fall away,
So will this base and envious discord breed.
And now I feare that fatall Prophecie,
Which in the time of Henry, nam'd the Fifth,
Was in the mouth of every sucking Babe,
That Henry borne at Monmouth should winne all,
And Henry borne at Windsor should lose all :
Which is so plaine, that Exeter doth wish,
His dayes may finish, ere that haplesse time.

Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Pucell disguis'd, with foure Souldiors with Sacks upon their backs.

Pucell. These are the Citie Gates, the Gates of Roan,
Through which our Policy must make a breach.
Take heed, be wary how you place your words,
Talkelike the vulgar sort of Market men,
That come to gather Money for their Corne.
If we have entrance, as I hope we shall,
And that we finde the slouthfull Watch but weake,
Ile by a signe give notice to our friends,
That Charles the Dolphin may encounter them.

Souldier. Our Sacks shall be a meane to sacke the City,
And we be Lords and Rulers over Roan,
Therefore wee'le knock.

Knock.

Watch. Chela.

Pucell. Peasants la pouvre gens de France,
Poore Market folkes that come to sell their Corne.

Watch. Enter, goe in, the Market Bell is rung.

Pucell. Now Roan, Ile shake thy Bulwarkes to the ground.

Exeunt.

Enter Charles, Bastard, Alanson.

Charles. Saint Dennis blesse this happy Stratageme,
And once againe wee'le sleepe secure in Roan.

Bastard. Here entred Pucell, and her Practisants :
Now she is there, how will she specifie ?
Here is the best and safest passage in.

Reig. By thrusting out a Torch from yonder Tower,
Which once discern'd, shewes that her meaning is,
No way to that ( for weaknesse ) which she entred.

Enter Pucell on the top, thrusting out a Torch burning.

Pucell. Behold, this is the happy Wedding Torch,
That joyneth Roan unto her Countreymen,
But burning fatall to the Talbonites.

Bastard. See Noble Charles the Beacon of our friend,
The burning Torch in yonder Turret stands.

Charles. Now shine it like a Commet of Revenge,
A Prophet to the fall of all our Foes.

Reig. Deferre no time, delays have dangerous ends,
Enter and cry, the Dolphin, presently,
And then doe execution on the Watch.

Alarm.

An Alarm, Talbot in an Excursion.

Talb. France, thou shalt rue this Treason with thy teares,
If Talbot but survive thy Trecherie.

Pucell that Witch, that damned Sorceresse,
Hath wrought this Hellish Mischiefe unawares,
That hardly we escap't the Pride of France.

Exit.

An Alarm : Excursions. Bedford brought in sick in a Chayre.

Enter Talbot and Burgonie without : within, Pucell, Charles, Bastard, and Reigneir on the Walls.

Pucell. God morrow Gallants, want ye Corn for Bread ?
I thinke the Duke of Burgonie will fast,
Before hee'ie buy againe at such a rate.

'Twas full of Darnell : doe you like the taste ?

Burg. Scoffe on vile Fiend, and shamelesse Curtizan,
I trust ere long to choake thee with thine owne,
And make thee curse the Harvelt of that Corne.

Charles. Your Grace may starve (perhaps) before that time.

Bedf. Oh let no words, but deedes, revenge this Treason.

Pucell. What will you doe, good gray-beard ?
Breake a Launce, and runne a-Tilt at Death,
Within a Chayre.

Talb. Foule Fiend of France, and Hag of all despight, Incompas'd with thy lustfull Paramours,
Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant Age,
And twit with Cowardise a man halfe dead ?
Damsell, Ile have a bowt with you againe,
Or else let Talbot perish with this shame.

Pucell. Are ye so hot, Sir : yet Pucell hold thy peace,
If Talbot doe but Thunder, Raine will follow.

They whisper together in counsell.

God speed the Parliament : who shall be the Speaker ?

Talb. Dar

Talb. Dare yee come forth, and meet us in the field?

Pucell. Belike your Lordship takes us then for fooles,
To try if that our owne be ours, or no.

Talb. I speake not to that rayling Hecate,
But unto thee Alanson, and therest.
Will ye, like Souldiors, come and fight it out?

Alansf. Seignior no.

Talb. Seignior hang: base Muleters of France,
Like Pesant toot-Boyes doe they keepe the Walls,
And dare not take up Armes, like Gentlemen.

Pucell. Away Captaines, let's get us from the Walls,
For Talbot meanes no goodnesse by his Lookes,
God buy my Lord, we came fir but to tell you
That we are here.

Exeunt from the Walls.

Talb. And there will we be too, ere it be long,
Or else reproach be Talbots greatest fame.
Vow Burgonie, by honor of thy house,
Prickt on by publike Wrongs sustain'd in France,
Either to get the Towne againe, or dye.
And I, as sure as English Henry lives,
And as his Father here was Conqueror;
As sure as in this late betrayed Towne,
Great Cordelions Heart was buried;
So sure I sweare, to get the Towne, or dye.

Burg. My Vowes are equall partners with thy Vowes.

Talb. But ere we goe, regard this dying Prince,
The valiant Duke of Bedford: Come my Lord,
We will bestow you in some better place,
Fitter for sicknesse, and for crasie age,

Bedf. Lord Talbot, doe not so dishonour me:
Here will I sit, before the Walls of Roan,
And will be partner of your weale or woe.

Burg. Couragious Bedford, let us now perswade you.

Bedf. Not to be gone from hence, for once I read,
That stout Pendragon, in his Litter sick,
Came to the field, and vanquished his foes.
Me thinkes I should reviuie the Souldiors hearts;
Because I ever found them as my selfe.

Talb. Vndaunting spirit in a dying brest,
Then be it so: Heavens keepe old Bedford safe.
And now no more adoe, brave Burgonie,
But gather we our Forces out of hand,
And set upon our boasting Enemie.

Exit.

An Alarm: Excursions. Enter Sir Iohn Falstaffe, and a Captaine.

Cap. Whither away Sir Iohn Falstaffe, in such haste?

Falst. Whither away? to save my selfe by flight,
We are like to have the overthrow againe.

Cap. What? will you flye, and leave Lord Talbot?

Falst. I, all the Talbots in the World, to save my life.

Exit.

Cap. Cowardly Knight, ill fortune follow thee.

Exit.

Retreat. Excursions. Pucell, Alanson, and Charles flye.

Bedf. Now quiet Soule, depart when Heauen please,
For I have seene our Enemies overthrow.
What is the trust or strength of foolish man?
They that of late were daring with their scoffes,
Are glad and faine by flight to save themselves.

Bedford dyes, and is carryed in by two in his Chaire.

An Alarm. Enter Talbot, Burgonie, and the rest.

Talb. Lost, and recovered in a day againe,
This is a double Honor, Burgonie:
Yet Heavens have glory for this Victory.

Burg. Warlike and Martiall Talbot, Burgonie
Inshrines thee in his heart, and there erects
Thy Noble Deeds, as Valors Monuments.

Talb. Thanks gentle Duke: but where is Pucel now?
I thinke her old Familiar is asleepe.
Now where's the Bastards braves, and Charles his glikes?
What all amort? Roan hangs her head for griefe,
That such a valiant Company are fled.

Now will we take some order in the Towne,
Placing therein some expert Officers,
And then depart to Paris, to the King,
For there young Henry with his Nobles lye.

Burg. What wills Lord Talbot, pleaseth Burgonie.

Talb. But yet before we goe, let's not forget
The Noble Duke of Bedford, late deceas'd,
But see his Exequies fulfill'd in Roan,
A braver Souldier never couched Launce,
A gentler heart did never sway in Court.
But Kings and mightiest Potentates must die,
For that's the end of humane miserie.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Charles, Bastard, Alanson, Pucell.

Pucell. Dismay not (Princes) at this accident,
Nor grieve that Roan is so recovered:
Care is no cure, but rather corrasie,
For things that are not to be remedy'd.
Let frantike Talbot triumph for a while,
And like a Peacocke sweepe along his tayle,
Wee'le pull his Plumes, and take away his Trayne,
If Dolphin and the rest will be but rul'd.

Charles. We have beene guided by thee hitherto,
And of thy Cunning had no diffidence,
One sudden Foyle shall never breed distrust.

Bastard. Search out thy wit for secret pollicies,
And we will make thee famous through the World.

Alansf. Wee'le set thy Statue in some holy place,
And have thee reverenc't like a blessed Saint.
Employ thee then, sweet Virgin, for our good,

Pucell. Then thus it must be, this doth Ioane devise:
By faire perswasions, mixt with sugred words,
We will intice the Duke of Burgonie
To leave the Talbot, and to follow us.

Charles. I marry Sweeting, if we could doe that,
France were no place for Henries Warriors,
Nor should that Nation boast it so with us,
But be extirped from our Provinces.

Alansf. For ever should they be expuls'd from France,
And not have Title of an Earledome here.

Pucell. Your Honors shall perceive how I will worke,
To bring this matter to the wished end.

Hearke, by the sound of Drumme you may perceive
Their Powers are marching unto Paris-ward.

Here sound an English March.

There goes the Talbot with his Colours spred,
And all the Troupes of English after him.

French.

French March.

Now in the Rereward comes the Duke and his:
Fortune in favour makes him lagge behinde.
Summon a Parley, we will talke with him.

Trumpets sound a Parley.

Charles. A Parley with the Duke of Burgonie?

Burg. Who craves a Parley with the Burgonie?

Pucell. The Princely Charles of France, thy Countrey-
man.

Burg. What say'st thou Charles? for I am marching hence.

Charles. Speake Pucell, and enchant him with thy words.

Pucell. Brave Burgonie, undoubted hope of France,
Stay, let thy humble hand-maid speake to thee.

Burg. Speake on, but be not over-tedious.

Pucell. Look on thy Countrey, looke on fertile France,
And see the Cities and the Townes defac't,
By wasting Ruine of the cruell Foe,
Aslookes the Mother on her lowly Babe,
When Death doth close his tender-dying Eyes,
See, see the pining Malady of France:

Behold the Wounds, the most unatural Wounds,
Which thou thy selfe hast given her wofull Brest.

Oh turne thy edged Sword another way,
Strike those that hurt, and hurt not those that helpe:

One drop of Blood drawne from thy Countries Bosome,
Should grieve thee more then streames of forraine gore.

Returne thee therefore with a flood of Teares,
And wash away thy Countries stayned Spots.

Burg. Either she hath bewicht me with her words,
Or Nature makes me suddenly relent.

Pucell. Besides, all French and France exclames on thee,
Doubting thy Birth and lawfull Progenie.

Whom joynt thou with, but with a Lordly Nation,
That will not trust thee, but for Profits sake?

When Talbot hath set footing once in France,
And fashion'd thee that Instrument of Ill,

Who then, but English Henry, will be Lord,
And thou be thrust out, like a Fugitive?

Call we to minde, and marke but this for prooffe:
Was not the Duke of Orleans thy Foe?

And was he not in England Prisoner?

But when they heard he was thine Enemy,
They set him free, without his Ransome pay'd,

In spight of Burgonie and all his friends.

Seethen, thou fight'st against thy Countreymen,
And joynt with them will be thy slaughter-men.

Come, come, returne; returne thou wandring Lord,
Charles and the rest will take thee in their armes.

Burg. I am vanquished:

These haughty words of hers
Have batt' red me like roaring Cannon-shot,

And made me almost yeeld upon my knees.
Forgive me Countrey, and sweet Countreymen:

And Lords accept this heartie kind embrace.
My Forces and my Power of men are yours.

So farewell Talbot, Ile no longer trust thee.

Pucell. Done like a Frenchman: turne and turne againe.

Charles. Welcome brave Duke, thy friendship makes us fresh.

Bastard. And doth beget new Courage in our Brests.

Alans. Pucell hath bravely play'd her part in this,
And doth deserve a Coronet of Gold.

Charles. Now let us on, my Lords,
And ioyn our Powers,
And seeke how we may preiudice the Foe.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter the King, Gloucester, Winchester, Yorke, Suffolke Somerset, Warwick, Exeter: To them, with his Souldiors, Talbot.

Talb. My gracious Prince, and honorable Peeres,
Hearing of your arrivall in this Realme,
I have a while given Truce unto my Warres,
To doe my dutie to my Sovereigne.
In signe whereof, this Arme, that hath reclaim'd
To your obedience, fiftie Fortresses,
Twelve Cities, and seven walled Townes of strength,
Beside five hundred Prisoners of esteeme;
Lets fall his Sword before your Highnesse feet:
And with submissive loyaltie of heart
Ascribes the Glory of his Conquest got,
First to my God, and next unto your Grace.

King. Is this the Lord Talbot, Vnckle Gloucester,
That hath so long bene resident in France?

Gloster. Yes, if it please your Majestie, my Liege.

King. Welcome brave Captaine, and victorious Lord
When I was young (as yet I am not old)
I doe remember how my Father said,
A stouter Champion never handled Sword.
Long since we wereresolved of your truth,
Your faithfull service, and your toyle in Warre:
Yet never have you tasted our reward,
Or beene reguerdon'd with so much as Thankses,
Because till now, we never saw your face,
Therefore stand up, and for these good deserts,
We here create you Earle of Shrewsbury,
And in our Coronation take your place.

Exeunt.

Manent Vernon and Bassett.

Vern. Now Sir, to you that were so hot at Sea,
Disgracing of these Colours that I weare,
In honor of my Noble Lord of Yorke,
Dar'st thou maintaine the former words thou spak'st?

Bass. Yes Sir, as well as you dare patronage
The envious barking of your sawcie Tongue,
Against the Duke of Somerset.

Vern. Sirrha, thy Lord I honor as he is.

Bass. Why what is he? as good a man as Yorke.

Vern. Hearke ye: not so: in witnesse take ye that.
Strikes him.

Bass. Villaine, thou knowest
The Law of Armes is such.
That who so drawes a Sword, 'tis present death,
Or else this Blow should broach thy dearest Bloud.
But Ile unto his Majestie, and crave,
I may have liberty to venge this Wrong,
When thou shalt see, Ile meet thee to thy cost.

Vern. Well miscreant, Ile be there as soone as you,
And after meete you, sooner then you would.

Exeunt.

Enter

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter King, Gloucester, Winchester, Yorke, Suffolke, Somerset, Warwicke, Talbot, and Governor Exeter.

Glo. Lord Bishop, set the Crowne upon his head.

Win. God save King Henry of that name the sixth.

Glo. Now Governour of Paris take your oath,
That you elect no other King but him;
Esteeme none friends, but such as are his Friends,
And none your Foes, but such as shall pretend Malicious practises against his State:
This shall ye do, so helpe you righteous God.

Enter Falstaffe.

Fal. My gracious Sovereigne, as I rode from Calice,
To halte unto your Coronation:
A Letter was deliver'd to my hands,
Writ to your Grace, from th' Duke of Burgundy.

Tal. Shame to the Duke of Burgundy, and thee:
I vow'd (base Knight) when I did meet thee next,
To teare the Garter from thy Cravens legge,
Which I have done, because (unworthily)
Thou was't installed in that High Degree.
Pardon me Princely Henry, and the rest:
This Dastard, at the battell of Poitiers,
When (but in all) I was fixe thousand strong,
And that the French were almost ten to one,
Before we met, or that a stroke was given,
Like to a trustie Squire, did run away.
In which assault, we lost twelue hundred men.
My selfe, and divers Gentlemen beside,
Were there surpriz'd, and taken prisoners.
Then iudge (great Lords) if I have done amisse:
Or whether that such Cowards ought to weare
This Ornament of Knighthood, yea or no?

Glo. To say the truth, this fact was infamous,
And ill befeeming any common man:
Much more a Knight, a Capitaine, and a Leader.

Tal. When first this Order was ordain'd my Lords,
Knights of the Garter were of Noble birth;
Valiant, and Vertuous, full of haughty Courage,
Such as were growne to credit by the warres:
Not fearing Death, nor shrinking for Distresse.
But alwayes resolute, in most extreames.
He then, that is not furnish'd in this fort,
Doth but vsurpe the Sacred name of Knight,
Prophaning this most Honourable Order,
And should (if I were worthy to be Iudge)
Be quite degraded, like a Hedge-Borne Swaine,
That doth presume to boast of Gentle blood.

K. Staine to thy Countrymen, thou hear'st thy doom;
Be packing therefore, thou that wast a knight:
Henceforth we banish thee on paine of death.
And now my Lord Protector view the Letter,
Sent from our Vncle Duke of Burgundy.

Exit.

Glo. What meanes his Grace, that he hath chaung'd his Stile?

No more but plaine and bluntly? (To the King.)
Hath he forgot he is his Soueraigne?
Or doth this churlish Superscription
Pretend some alteration in good will?
What's heere? I have upon especiall cause,
Mov'd with compassion of my Countries wracke,
Together with the pittifull complaints
Of such as your oppression feedes upon,

Forfaken your pernicious Faction,
And ioyn'd with Charles, the rightfull king of France.
O monstrous Treachery: Can this be so?

That in alliance, amity, and oathes,
There should be found such false dissembling guile?

King. What? doth my Vncle Burgundy revolt?

Glo. He doth my Lord, and is become my foe.

King. Is that the worst this letter doth containe?

Glo. It is the worst, and all (my Lord) he writes.

King. Why then Lord Talbot there shal talke with him,
And give him chastisement for this abuse.

How say you (my Lord) are you not content?

Tal. Content my Liege? Yes: but that I am prevented,
I should have begg'd I might have bene employd.

King. Then gather strength, and march unto him straight:

Let him perceive how ill we brooke his Treason,
And what offence it is to flout his Friends.

Tal. I go my Lord, in heart desiring still
You may behold confusion of your foes.

Enter Vernon and Bassett.

Ver. Grant me the Combate, gracious Sovereigne.

Bas. And me (my Lord) grant me the Combate too.

Yorke. This is my Servant, heare him Noble Prince.

Som. And this is mine (sweet Henry) favour him.

King. Be patient Lords, and give them leave to speake,
Say Gentlemen, what makes you thus exclaime
And wherefore crave you Combate? Or with whom?

Ver. With him (my Lord) for he hath done me wrong.

Bas. And I with him, for he hath done me wrong.

King. What is that wrong whereon you both complain?
First let me know, and then Ile answer you.

Bas. Crossing the Sea, from England into France,
This Fellow heere with carping tongue,
Vpbraid me about the Rose I weare,
Saying, the sanguine colour of the Leaves
Did present my Masters blushing cheekes:
When stubbornly he did repugne the truth,
About a certaine question in the Law,
Argu'd betwixt the Duke of Yorke, and him:
With other vile and ignominious tearmes.
In confutation of which rude reproach,
And in defence of my Lords worthinesse,
I craue the benefit of Law of Armes.

Ver. And that is my petition (Noble Lord):
For though he seeme with forged queint conceite
To set a glosse upon his bold inrent,
Yet know (my Lord) I was provok'd by him,
And he first tooke exceptions at this badge,
Pronouncing that the palenesse of this Flower,
Bewray'd the faintnesse of my Masters heart.

Yorke. Will not this malice Somerset be left?

Som. Your private grudge my Lord of Yorke, wil out,
Though ne're so cunningly you smother it.

King. Good Lord what madnesse rules in brainesicke men,

When for so slight and frivolous a cause,
Such factions & mutations shal arise?

Good Cousins both of Yorke and Somerset,
Quiet your selves, and be at peace,

Yorke. Let this dissention first be tryed by fight,
And then your Highnesse shal command a Peace.

Som. The quarrell toucheth none but us alone,
Betwixt our selves let us decide it then.

Yorke. There is my pledge, accept it Somerset.

Ver. Nay, let it rest where it began at first.

Bas.

Bass. Confirme it so, mine honourable Lord.

Glo. Confirme it so? Confounded be your strife,
And perish ye with your audacious prate,
Presumptuous vassals, are you not asham'd
With this immodest clamorous outrage,
To trouble and disturbe the King, and Vs?
And you my Lords, methinkes you do not well
To beare with their perverse Objections:
Much lesse to take occasion from their mouthes,
To raise a mutiny betwixt your selves:
Let me perswade you take a better course.

Exit. It grieves his Highnesse,
Good my Lords, be friends.

King. Come hither you that would be Combatants:
Henceforth I charge you, as you love our favour,
Quite to forget this Quarrell, and the cause.
And you my Lords: Remember where we are,
In France, amongst a fickle wavering Nation:
If they perceive dissention in our lookes,
And that within our selves we disagree;
How will their grudging stomackes be provok'd
To wilfull Disobedience, and Rebell?
Beside, What infamy will there arise,
When Forraigne Princes shall be certified,
That for a toy, a thing of no regard,
King Henries Peeres, and chiefe Nobility,
Destroy'd themselves, and lost the Realme of France?
Oh thinke upon the Conquest of my Father,
My tender yeares, and let us not forgoe
That for a trifle, that was bought with blood.
Let me be Vmper in this doubtfull strife:
I see no reason if I weare this Rose,
That any one should therefore be suspicious
Imore incline to Somerset, then Yorke:
Both are my kinsmen, and I love them both.
As well they may upbray'd me with my Crowne,
Because (forsooth) the King of Scots is Crown'd.
But your discretions better can perswade,
Then I am able to instruct or teach:
And therefore as we hither came in peace,
So let us still continue peace and love.
Cofin of Yorke, we institute your Grace
To be our Regent in these parts of France:
And good my Lord of Somerset, unite
Your troopes of horsemen, with his Bands of foote,
And like true Subjects, sonnes of your Progenitors,
Go cheerefully together, and digest
Your angry Choller on your Enemies.
Our Selfe, my Lord Protector, and the rest,
After some respite will returne to Calice;
From thence to England, where I hope ere long
To be presented by your Victories,
With Charles, Alanson, and that Traiterous rout.

Exeunt. Manet Yorke, Warwicke, Exeter, Vernon.

War. My Lord of Yorke, I promise you the King Prettyly (me thought) did play the Orator.)

Yorke. And so he did, but yet I like it not,
In that he weares the badge of Somerset.

War. Tush, that was but his fancie, blame him not,
I dare presume (sweet Prince) he thought no harme.

Yorke. And if I wish he did. But let it rest,
Other affayres must now be managed.

Flourish. Manet Exeter.

Exit. Well didst thou Richard to suppress thy voyce:
For had the passions of thy heart burst out,
Weare we should have scene decipher'd there

More rancorous spight, more furious raging broyles,
Then yet can be imagin'd or suppos'd:
But howsoere, no simple man that sees
This iarring discord of Nobilitie,
This shouldering of each other in the Court,
This factious bandying of their Favourites,
But that it doth preface some ill event.
'Tis much, when Scepters are in Childrens hands:
But more, when Envy breeds unkinde devision. Exit.
Then comes the ruine, there begins confusion.

Enter Talbot with Trumpet and Drumme;
before Burdeaux.

Talb. Go to the Gates of Burdeaux, Trumpeter, Summon their Generall unto the Wall. Sounds.

Enter Generall aloft.

English John Talbot (Captaines) calls you forth,
Servant in Armes to Harry King of England,
And thus he would. Open your City Gates,
Be humbled to us, call my Sovereigne yours,
And do him homage as obedient Subjects,
And Ile withdraw me, and my bloody power.
But if you frowne upon this proffer'd Peace,
You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Leane Famine, quartering Steele, and climbing Fire,
Who in a moment, even with the earth,
Shall lay your stately, and ayre-braving Towers,
If you forsake the offer of their love.

Cap. Thou ominous and fearefull Owle of death,
Our Nations terror, and their bloody scourge,
The period of thy Tyranny approacheth,
On us thou canst not enter but by death:
For I protest we are well fortified,
And strong enough to issue out and fight.
If thou retire, the Dolphin well appointed,
Stands with the snares of Warre to tangle thee.
On either hand thee, there are Squadrons pitcht,
To wall thee from the liberty of Flight;
Ten thousand French have tane the Sacrament,
And no way canst thou turne thee for redresse,
But death doth front thee with apparant spoyle,
And pale destruction meetes thee in the face:
To ryue their dangerous Artillerie
Vpon no Christian soule but English Talbot:
Loe, there thou standst a breathing valiant man
Of an invincible unconquer'd spirit:
This is the latest Glorie of thy prayse,
That I thy enemy dew thee withall:
For ere the Glasse that now begins to runne,
Finish the proceffe of his sandy houre,
These eyes that see thee now well coloured,
Shall see thee withered, bloody, pale, and dead.

Drum a farre off.

Harke, harke, the Dolphins drumme, a warning bell,
Sings heavy Musicke to thy timorous soule,
And mine shall ring thy dire departure out. Exit.

Tal. He Fables not, I heare the enemy;
Out some light Horsemen, and peruse their Wings.
O negligent and heedlesse Discipline,
How are we park'd and bounded in a pale?
A little Heard of Englands timorous Deere,
Maz'd with a yelping kennell of French Curses.
If we be English Deere, be then in blood,
Not Rascall-like to fall downe with a pinch,
But rather moodie mad: And desperate Stagges,

Turne

Turne on the bloody Hounds with heads of Steele,
And make the Cowards stand aloofe at bay :
Sell every man his life as deere as mine,
And they shall finde deere Deere of us my Friends.
God, and S. George, Talbot and Englands right, Prosper our Colors in this dangerous fight. Exeunt.

Enter a Messenger that meets Yorke. Enter Yorke with Trumpets, and many Souldiers.

Yorke. Are not the speedy scouts return'd againe,
That dog'd the mighty Army of the Dolphin?

Mess. They are return'd my Lord, and give it out,
That he is march'd to Burdeaux with his power
To fight with Talbot: as he march'd along,
By your espials were discovered

Two mightier Troopes then that the Dolphin led,
Which joyn'd with him, and made their march for (Burdeaux

Yorke. A plague upon that Villaine Somerset,
That thus delays my promised supply
Of horsemen, that were levied for this siege.
Renowned Talbot doth expect my ayde,
And I am lowted by at Traitor Villaine,
And cannot helpe the noble Chevalier :
God comfort him in this necessity :
If he miscarry, farewell Warres in France.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. Thou Princely Leader of our English strength,
Never so needfull on the earth of France,
Spurre to the rescue of the Noble Talbot,
Who now is girdled with a waste of Iron,
And hem'd about with grim destruction :
To Burdeaux warlike Duke, to Burdeaux Yorke,
Else farewell Talbot, France, and Englands honor.

Yorke. O God, that Somerset who in proud heart
Doth stop my Cornets, were in Talbots place,
So should we save a valiant Gentleman,
By forfeiting a Traitor and a Coward :
Mad ire, and wrathfull fury makes me weepe,
That thus we dye, while remisse Traitors sleepe.

Mess. O send some succour to the distrest Lord.

Yorke. Hedies, we lose: I breake my warlike word:
We mourne, France smiles: We lose, they dayly get,
All long of this vile Traitor Somerset.

Mess. Then God take mercy on brave Talbots soule;
And on his Sonne yong John, who two hours since,
I met in travaile towards his warlike Father;
This heaven yeeres did not Talbot see his sonne,
And now they meet where both their lives are done.

Yorke. Alas, what joy shall noble Talbot have,
To bid his yong sonne welcome to his Grave :
Away, vexation almost stoppes my breath,
That hundred friends greeke in the houre of death.

Lucie farewell, no more my fortune can,
But curse the cause I cannot ayde the man.

Maine, Blois, Poytiers, and Tonnes, are wonne away,
Long all of Somerset, and his delay. Exit.

Mess. Thus while the Vulture of sedition,
Feedes in the bosome of such great Commanders,
Sleeping neglectiō doth betray to losse :
The Conquest of our searfe-cold Conqueror,
That ever-living man of Memorie,
Henrie the sixt : Whiles they each other crosse,
Lives, Honours, Lands, and all, hurrie to losse. Exit.

Enter Somerset with his Armie.

Som. It is too late, I cannot send them now :
This expedition was by Yorke and Talbot,
Too rashly plotted. All our generall force,
Might with a sally of the very Towne
Be buckled with : the over-daring Talbot
Hath sullied all his glosse of former Honor
By this unheedfull, desperate, wilde adventure :
Yorke set him on to fight, and dye in shame,
That Talbot dead, great Yorke might beare the name.

Cap. Heere is Sir William Lucie, who with me
Set from our ore-matcht forces forth for ayde.

Som. How now Sir William, whither were you sent?
Lucie. Whither my Lord, from bought and sold L. Talbot,
Who ring'd about with bold adversitie,
Cries out for noble Yorke and Somerset,
To beate assaying death from his weake Regions;
And whiles the honourable Captaine there
Drops bloody sweet from his warre-wearied limbes,
And in advantage lingring lookes for rescue,
You his false hopes, the trust of Englands honour,
Keepe off aloofe with worthlesse emulation :
Let not your private discord keepe away
The levied succours that shall lend him ayde,
While he renowned Noble Gentleman
Yeelds up his life unto a world of oddes.
Orleance the Bastard, Charles, and Burgundie,
Alanfon, Reignard, compasse him about,
And Talbot perisheth by your default.

Som. Yorke set him on, Yorke should have sent him ayde.

Lucie. And Yorke as fast upon your Grace exclaims,
Swearing that you with-hold his levied hoast,
Collected for this expedition.

Som. York lyes: He might have sent, & had the Horse:
I owe him little Dutie, and lesse Love,
And take foule scorne to fawne on him by sending.

Lucie. The fraud of England, not the force of France,
Hath now intrapt the Noble-minded Talbot :
Never to England shall he beare his life,
But dies betraid to fortune by your strife.

Som. Come go, I will dispatch the Horsemen strait:
Within sixe houres, they will be at his ayde.

Lucie. Too late comes rescue, he is tane or slaine,
For flye he could not, if he would have fled :
And flye would Talbot never though he might.

Som. If he be dead, brave Talbot then adieu.

Lucie. His fame lives in the world. His shame in you. Exeunt.

Enter Talbot and his Sonne.

Tal. O young John Talbot, I did send for thee
To tutor thee in stratagems of Warre,
That Talbots name might be in thee reviv'd,
When saplesse Age, and weake unable limbes
Should bring thy Father to his drooping Chaire.
But O malignant and ill-boading Starres,
Now thou art come unto a Feast of death,
A terrible and unavoyded danger :
Therefore deere Boy, mount on my swiftest horse,
And Ile direct thee how thou shalt escape
By sodaine flight. Come, dally not, be gone,

John. Is my name Talbot? and am I your Sonne? (Shall)

And shall I flye? O, if you love my Mother,
Dishonor not her Honorable Name,
To make a Bastard, and a Slave of me:

The World will say, he is not Talbot's blood,
That basely fled, when Noble Talbot stood.

Talb. Flye, to revenge my death, if I be slaine.

John. He that flies so, will ne're returne againe.

Talb. If we both stay, we both are sure to dye.

John. Then let me stay, and Father doe you flye:

Your losse is great, so your regard should be;

My worth unknowne, no losse is knowne in me.

Vpon my death, the French can little boast;

In yours they will, in you all hopes are lost.

Flight cannot stayne the Honor you have wonne,

For mine it will, that no Exploit have done.

You fled for Vantage, every one will sweare:

But if I bow, they'le say it was for feare.

There is no hope that ever I will stay,

If the first howre I shrinke and run away:

Here on my knee I begge Mortality,

Rather then Life, preserv'd with Infamy.

Talb. Shall all thy Mothers hopes lye in one Tombe?

John. I, rather then Ile shame my Mothers Wombe.

Talb. Vpon my Blessing I command thee goe.

John. To fight I will, but not to flye the Foe.

Talb. Part of thy Father may be sav'd in thee.

John. No part of him, but will be shame in mee.

Talb. Thou never hadst Renowne, nor canst not lose it.

John. Yes, your renowned Names shall flight abuse it?

Talb. Thy Fathers charge shal cleare thee from this stain.

John. You cannot witnesse for me, being slaine.

If Death be so apparant, then both flye.

Talb. And leave my followers here to fight and dye?

My Age was never tainted with such shame.

John. And shall my Youth be guilty of such blame?

No more can I be severed from your side,

Then can your selfe, your selfe in twaine divide:

Stay, goe, doe what you will, the like doe I;

For live I will not, if my Father dye.

Talb. Then here I take my leave of thee, faire Sonne,

Borne to eclipse thy Life this afternoone:

Come, side by side, together live and dye,

And Soule with Soule from France to Heaven flye.

Exeunt.

Alarum: Excursions, wherein Talbot's Sonne is hemm'd about, and Talbot rescues him.

Talb. Saint George, and Victory, fight Souldiers, fight:

The Regent hath with Talbot broke his word,

And left us to the rage of France his Sword.

Where is John Talbot? pause, and take thy breath,

I gave thee Life, and rescu'd thee from Death.

John. O twice my Father, twice am I thy Sonne:

The Life thou gav'st me first, was lost and done,

Till with thy Warlike Sword, despight of Fate,

To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date.

Talb. When from the Dolphins Crest thy Sword struck

It warm'd thy Fathers heart with prowd desire (fire,

Of bold-fac't Victory. Then Leaden Age,

Quickn'd with Youthfull Spleene, and Warlike Rage,

Beat downe Alanson, Orleanse, Burgundie,

And from the Pride of Gallia rescued thee.

The irefull Bastard Orleanse, that drew blood

From thee my Boy, and had the Maidenhood

Of thy first fight, I soone encountred,

And interchanging blowes, I quickly shed

Some of his Bastard blood, and in disgrace

Bespoke him thus: Contaminated base,

And mis-begotten blood, I spill of thine.

Meane and right poore, for that pure blood of mine,

Which thou didst force from Talbot, my brave Boy,

Here purposing the Bastard to destroy,

Came in strong rescue. Speake thy Fathers care:

Art thou not weary John? How do'st thou fare?

Wilt thou yet leave the Battaile, Boy, and flye,

Now thou art seal'd the Sonne of Chivalry?

Flye, to revenge my death when I am dead,

The helpe of one stands me in little stead.

Oh, too much folly is it, well I wot,

To hazard all our lives in one small Boat.

If I to day dye not with Frenchmens Rage,

To morrow I shall dye with mickle Age.

By me they nothing gaine, and if I stay,

'Tis but the shortning of my Life one day.

In thee thy Mother dyes, our Households Name,

My Deaths Revenge, thy Youth, and Englands Fame:

All these, and more, we hazard by thy stay;

All these are sav'd, if thou wilt flye away.

John. The Sword of Orleanse hath not made me smart,

These words of yours draw Life-blood from my Heart.

On that advantage, bought with such a shame,

To save a paltry Life, and slay bright Fame,

Before young Talbot from old Talbot flye,

The Coward Horse that beares me, fall and dye:

And like me to the peasant Boyes of France,

To be Shames scorne, and subject of Mischance.

Surely, by all the Glory you have wonne,

And if I flye I am not Talbot's Sonne.

Then talke no more of flight, it is no boot,

If Sonne to Talbot, dye at Talbot's foot.

Talb. Then follow thou thy desp'rate Syre of Crete

Thou Icarus, thy Life to me is sweet:

If thou wilt fight, fight by thy Fathers side,

And commendable prov'd, let's dye in pride.

Exit.

Alarum. Excursions. Enter old Talbot led.

Talb. Where is my other Life? mine owne is gone.

O, where's young Talbot? where is valiant John?

Triumphant Death, sinced with Captivity,

Young Talbot's Valour makes me smile at thee.

When he perceiv'd me shrinke, and on my Knee,

His bloody Sword he brandisht over mee,

And like a hungry Lyon did commence

Rough deeds of Rage, and sterne Impatience:

But when my angry Guardant stood alone,

Tending my ruine, and assay'd of none,

Dizzie-ey'd Fury, and great rage of Heart,

Suddenly made him from my side to start

Into the clust'ring Battaile of the French:

And in that Sea of Blood, my Boy did drench

His over-mounting Spirit; and there di'de

My Icarus, my Blossome, in his pride.

Enter with John Talbot, borne.

Serv. O my deare Lord, loe where your Sonne is borne.

Ta. Thou antique Death, which laugh'st us here to scorn,

Anon from thy insulting Tyrannie,

Coupled in bonds of perpetuity,

Two Talbots winged through the lither Skie,

In thy despight shall scape Mortality.

O thou whose wounds become hard favoured death,

n

Speake

Speake to thy father, ere thou yeeld thy breath,
 Brave death by speaking, whither he will or no:
 Imagine him a Frenchman, and thy Foe.
 Poore Boy, he smiles, me thinks, as who should say,
 Had Death bene French, then Death had dyed to day.
 Come, come, and lay him in his Fathers armes,
 My spirit can no longer beare these harmes.
 Souldiers adieu: I have what I would have,
 Now my old armes are yong John Talbots grave. Dyes

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Charles, Alanson, Burgundie, Bastard, and Pucell.

Char. Had Yorke and Somersset brought rescue in,
 We should have found a bloody day of this.

Bast. How the yong whelpe of Talbots raging wood,
 Did flesh his puny-sword in Frenchmens blood.

Puc. Once I encountred him, and thus I said:
 Thou Maiden youth, be vanquisht by a Maide.
 But with a provd Majestical high scorne
 He answer'd thus: Yong Talbot was not borne
 To be the pillage of a Giglot Wench,
 He left me proudly, as unworthy fight.

Bur. Doubtlesse he would have made a noble Knight:
 See where he lyes inherced in the armes
 Of the most bloody Nurser of his harmes.

Bast. Hew them to peeces, hack their bones assunder,
 Whose life was Englands glory, Gallia's wonder.

Char. Oh no forbear: For that which we have fled
 During the life, let us not Wrong it dead.

Enter Lucy.

Lu. Herald, conduct me to the Dolphins Tent,
 To know who hath obtain'd the glory of the day.

Char. On what submissive message art thou sent?

Lucy. Submission Dolphin? Tis a meere French word:
 We English Warriours wot not what it meanes.
 I come to know what Prisoners thou hast tane,
 And to survey the bodies of the dead.

Char. For prisoners askst thou? Hell our prison is.
 But tell me whom thou seek'st?

Luc. But where's the great Alcides of the field,
 Valiant Lord Talbot Earle of Shrewsbury?
 Created for his rare successe in Armes,
 Great Earle of Walsford, Waterford, and Valence,
 Lord Talbot of Goodrig and Vichinfield,
 Lord Strange of Blackmere, Lord Verdon of Alton,
 Lord Cromwell of Wingefield, Lord Furnivall of Sheffeld,
 The thrice victorious Lord of Falconbridge,
 Knight of the Noble Order of S. George,
 Worthy S. Michael, and the Golden Fleece,
 Great Marshall to our King Henry the sixt,
 Of all his Warres within the Realme of France.

Puc. Heere's a silly stately stile indeede:
 The Turke that two and fifty Kingdomes hath,
 Writes not so tedious a stile as this.
 Him that thou magnifi'st with all these Titles,
 Stinking and fly-blowne lyes heere at our freete,

Lucy. Is Talbot slaine, the Frenchmens only Scourge,
 Your Kingdomes terror, and blacke Nemesis?
 Oh were mine eye-balles into Bullets turn'd,
 That I in rage might shoot them at your faces.

Oh, that I could but call these dead to life,
 It were enough to fright the Realme of France.
 Were but his Picture left amongst you here,
 It would amaze the proudest of you all.
 Give me their Bodies, that I may beare them hence,
 And give them Buriall, as becomes their worth.

Puc. I thinke this upstart is old Talbots Ghost,
 He speakes with such a proud commanding spirit:
 For Gods sake let him have him; to keepe them here,
 They would but stinke, and putrifie the ayre.

Char. Go take their bodies hence.

Lucy. Ile beare them hence: but from their ashes shall be reard

A Phoenix that shall make all France appear'd.

Char. So we be rid of them, do with them what y will.
 And now to Paris in this conquering vaine,
 All will be ours, now bloody Talbot's slaine. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter King, Glocester, and Exeter.

King. Have you perus'd the Letters from the Pope,
 The Emperor, and the Earle of Arminack?

Glo. I have my Lord, and their intent is this,
 They humbly sue unto your Excellence,
 To have a godly peace concluded of,
 Betwene the Realmes of England, and of France.

King. How doth your Grace affect their motion?

Glo. Well (my good Lord) and as the only means
 To stop effusion of our Christian blood,
 And stablish quietnesse on every side.

King. I marry Vnckle, for I alwayes thought
 It was both impious and unnaturall,
 That such immanity and bloody strife
 Should reigne among Professors of one Faith.

Glo. Beside my Lord, the sooner to effect,
 And surer binde this knot of amitie,
 The Earle of Arminacke neere knit to Charles,
 A man of great Authority in France,
 Proffers his onely daughter to your Grace,
 In marriage, with a large and sumptuous Dowry.

King. Marriage Vnckle? Alas my yeares are yong;
 And fitter is my study, and my Bookes,
 Than wanton dalliance with a Paramour.
 Yet call th' Embassadors, and as you please,
 So let them have their answers every one:
 I shall be well content with any choyce
 Tends to Gods glory, and Countries weale.

Enter Winchester, and three Ambassadors.

Exet. What, is my Lord of Winchester install'd,
 And call'd unto a Cardinals degree?
 Then I perceive, that will be verified
Henry the Fifth did sometime prophesie.
 If once he come to be a Cardinall,
 Hee'l make his cap coequall with the Crowne.

King. My Lords Ambassadors, your severall suites
 Have bin consider'd and debated on,
 Your purpose is both good and reasonable:
 And therefore are we certainly resolv'd,
 To draw conditions of a friendly peace,

Which

Which by my Lord Winchester we meane
Shall be transported presently to France.

Glo. And for the proffer of my Lord your Maister,
I have inform'd his Highnesse so at large,
As liking of the Ladies vertuous gifts,
Her Beauty, and the valew of her Dower,
He doth intend she shall be Englands Queene,

King. In argument and prooffe of which contract,
Bere her this Jewell, pledge of my affection.
And so my Lord Protector see them guarded,
And safely brought to Dover, wherein ship'd
Commit them to the fortune of the sea. Exeunt.

Win. Stay my Lord Legate, you shall first receive
The summe of money which I promised
Should be delivered to his Holinesse,
For cloathing me in these grave Ornaments.

Legat. I will attend upon your Lordships leysure,

Win. Now Winchester will not submit, I trow,
Or be inferiour to the proudest Peere;
Humphrey of Gloster, thou shalt well perceive,
That neither in birth, or for authority,
The Bishop will be over-borne by thee:
He either make thee stoope, and bend thy knee,
Or sacke this Country with a mutiny. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Charles, Burgundy, Alanson, Bastard, Reignier, and Iane.

Char. These newes (my Lords) may cheere our drooping spirits:

'Tis said, the stout Parisians do revolt,
And returne againe unto the warlike French.

Alan. Then march to Paris Royall Charles of France,
And keepe not backe your power in dalliance.

Puc. Peace be amongst them if they turne to us,
Else ruine combat with their Pallaces.

Enter Scout.

Scout. Successe unto our valiant Generall,
And happinesse to his accomplices.

Char. What tidings send our Scouts? I prethee speak,

Scout. The English Army that divided was Into two parties, is now conjoyn'd in one,
And meanes to give you battell presently.

Char. Somewhat too sodaine Sirs, the warning is,
But we will presently provide for them.

Bar. I trust the Ghost of Talbot is not there:
Now he is gone my Lord, you neede not feare.

Puc. Of all base passions, Feare is most accurst.
Command the Conquest Charles, it shall be thine:
Let Henry fret, and all the world repine.

Char. Then on my Lords, and France be fortunate.

Exeunt. Alarm. Excursions.

Enter Iane de Pucell.

Puc. The Regent conquers, and the Frenchmen flye.
Now helpe ye charming Spelles and Periapts,
And ye choyse spirits that admonish me,
And give me signes of future accidents.
You speedy helpers, that are substitutes

Thunder.

Vnder the Lordly Monarch of the North,
Appeare, and ayde me in this enterprize.

Enter Friends.

This speedy and quicke appearance argues prooffe
Of your accustomed diligence to me.

Now ye Familiar Spirits, that are cull'd
Out of the powerfull Regions under earth,
Helpe me this once, that France may get the field.

They walke, and speake not.

Oh hold me not with silence over-long:

Where I was wont to feed you with my blood,

He lop a member off, and give it you,

In earnest of a further benefit:

So you do condescend to helpe me now.

They hang their heads.

No hope to have redresse? My body shall Pay recompence, if you will graunt my suite,

They shake their heads.

Cannot my body, nor blood-sacrifice,

Intreate you to your wonted furtherance?

Then take my soule; my body, soule, and all,

Before that England give the French the foyle.

They depart.

See, they for sake me. Now the time is come,

That France must vale her lofty plumed Crest,

And let her head fall into Englands lappe.

My ancient Incantations are too weake,

And hell too strong for me to buckle with:

Now France, thy glory droopeth to the dust.

Exit.

Excursions. Burgundy and Yorke fight hand to hand. French flye.

Yorke. Damsell of France, I thinke I have you fast,
Vnchaine your spirits now with spelling Charmes,

And try if they can gaine your liberty.

A goodly prize, fit for the diuels grace.

See how the vgly Witch doth bend her browes,

As if with Circe, she would change my shape.

Puc. Chang'd to a worser shape thou canst not be:

Yor. Oh, Charles the Dolphin is a proper man,

No shape but his can please your dainty eye.

Puc. A plaguing mischeefe light on Charles, and thee,

And may ye both be sodainly surpriz'd

By bloody hands, in sleeping on your beds.

Yorke. Fell banning Hagge, Inchantresse hold thy tongue.

Puc. I prethee give me leave to curse awhile.

Yor. Curse Miscreant, when thou comst to the stake

Exeunt.

Alarm. Enter Suffolke with Margaret in his hand.

Suff. Be what thou wilt, thou art my prisoner.

Gazes on her.

Oh Fairest Beauty, do not feare, nor flye:

For I will touch thee but with reverend hands,

I kisse these fingers for eternall peace,

And lay them gently on thy tender side.

Who art thou, say? that I may honor thee.

Marg. Margaret my name, and daughter to a King,
The King of Naples, who so ere thou art.

Suff. And Earle I am, and Suffolke am I call'd.

Be not offended Natures myracle,

Thou art allotted to be tane by me:

So doth the Swan her downy Cignets save,

n 2

Keep-

Keeping them prisoner underneath hir wings:
 Yet if this servile usage once offend,
 Go, and be free againe, as Suffolkes friend. She is going.
 Oh stay: I have no power to let her passe,
 My hand would free her, but my heart sayes no.
 As playes the Sunne upon the glassie streames,
 Twinkling another counterfetted beame,
 So seemes this gorgeous beauty to mine eyes,
 Faine would I wooe her, yet I dare not speake:
 Ile call for Pen and Inke, and write my minde:
 Fye De la Pole, disable not thy selfe:
 Hast not a Tongue? Is she not heere thy prisoner?
 Wilt thou be daunted at a Womans sight?
 I: Beauties Princely Majesty is such,
 Confounds the tongue, and makes the senses rough.
Mar. Say Earle of Suffolke, if thy name be so,
 What ransome must I pay before I passe?
 For I perceive I am thy prisoner.
Suf. How canst thou tell she will deny thy suite,
 Before thou make a triall of her love?
M. Why speak'st thou not? What ransom must I pray?
Suf. She's beautifull; and therefore to be Wooed:
 She is a Woman, therefore to be Wonne.
Mar. Wilt thou accept of ransome, yea or no?
Suf. Fond man, remember that thou hast a wife,
 Then how can Margaret be thy Paramour?
Mar. I were best to leave him, for he will not heare.
Suf. There all is marr'd: there lies a cooling card.
Mar. He talkes at random: sure the man is mad.
Suf. And yet a dispensation may be had.
Mar. And yet I would that you would answer me:
Suf. Ile win this Lady Margaret. For whom?
 Why for my King: Tush, that's a wooden thing.
Mar. He talkes of wood: It is some Carpenter.
Suf. Yet so my fancy may be satisfied,
 And peace established betweene these Realmes.
 But there remaines a scruple in that too:
 For though her Father be the King of Naples,
 Duke of Anjou and Mayne, yet is he poore,
 And our Nobility will scorne the match.
Mar. Heare ye Captaine? Are you not at leasure?
Suf. It shall be so, disdaine they ne're so much:
Henry is youthfull, and will quickly yeeld.
 Madam, I have a secret to reveale.
Mar. What though I be inthral'd, he seems a knight,
 And will not any way dishonor me.
Suf. Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say.
Mar. Perhaps I shall be rescu'd by the French,
 And then I need not crave his curtesie.
Suf. Sweet Madam, give me hearing in a cause.
Mar. Tush, women have bene captivate ere now.
Suf. Lady, wherefore talke you so?
Mar. I cry you mercy, 'tis but Quid for Quo.
Suf. Say gentle Princess, would you not suppose
 Your bondage happy, to be made a Queene?
Mar. To be a Queene in bondage, is more vile,
 Than is a slave, in base servility:
 For Princes should be free.
Suf. And so shall you,
 If happy Englands Royall King be free.
Mar. Why what concernes his freedome unto mee?
Suf. Ile undertake to make thee Henries Queene,
 To put a Golden Scepter in thy hand
 And set a precious Crowne upon thy head,
 If thou wilt condescend to be my ———
Mar. What?

Suf. His love.
Mar. I am unworthy to be Henries wife.
Suf. No gentle Madam, I unworthy am
 To wooe so faire a Dame to be his wife,
 And have no portion in the choice my selfe.
 How say you Madam, are ye so content?
Mar. And if my Father please, I am content.
Suf. Then call our Captaines and our Colours forth,
 And Madam, at your Fathers Castle walles,
 Wee'l crave a parley, to conferre with him.
Sound. Enter Reignier on the Walles.
 See Reignier see, thy daughter prisoner.
Reig. To whom?
Suf. To me.
Reig. Suffolke, what remedy?
 I am a Souldier, and unapt to weepe,
 Or to exclaime on Fortunes ficklenesse.
Suf. Yes, there is remedy enough my Lord,
 Consent, and for thy Honor give consent,
 Thy daughter shall be wedded to my King,
 Whom I with paine have wooed and wonne thereto:
 And this her easie held imprisonment,
 Hath gain'd thy daughter Princely liberty.
Reig. Speakes Suffolke as he thinks?
Suf. Faire Margaret knowes,
 That Suffolke doth not flatter, face, or faine.
Reig. Vpon thy Princely warrant, I descend,
 To give thee answer of thy just demand.
Suf. And heere I will expect thy comming.

Trumpets sound. Enter Reignier.

Reig. Welcome brave Earle into our Territories,
 Command in Anjou what your Honor pleases.
Suf. Thanks Reignier, happy for so sweet a Child,
 Fit to be made companion with a King:
 What answer makes your Grace unto my suite?
Reig. Since thou dost daigne to wooe her little worth,
 To be the Princely Bride of such a Lord:
 Vpon condition I may quietly
 Enjoy mine owne, the Country Maine and Anjou,
 Free from oppression, or the stroke of Warre,
 My daughter shall be Henries, if he please.
Suf. That is her ransome, I deliver her,
 And those two Counties I will undertake
 Your Grace shall well and quietly enjoy.
Reig. And I againe in Henries Royall name,
 As Deputy unto that gracious King,
 Give thee her hand for signe of plightd faith.
Suf. Reignier of France, I give thee Kingly thanks,
 Because this is in Trafficke of a King.
 And yet me thinkes I could be well content
 To be mine owne Attorney in this case.
 Ile over then to England with this newes,
 And make this marriage to be solemniz'd:
 So farewell Reignier, set this Diamond safe
 In Golden Pallaces as it becomes.
Reig. I do embrace thee, as I would embrace
 The Christian Prince King Henry were he heere.
Mar. Farewell my Lord, good wishes, praise, & prayers,
 Shall Suffolke ever have of Margaret. She is going.
Suf. Farewel sweet Madam: but hearken you Margaret,
 No Princely commendations to my King?
Mar. Such commendations as becomes a Maide,
 A Virgin, and his Servant, say to him.
Suf. Words sweetly plac'd, and modestly directed,

But Madame, I must trouble you againe,
No loving Token to his Majesty?

Mar. Yes, my good Lord, a pure unspotted heart,
Never yet taint with love, I lend the King.

Suf. And this withall.

Kisse her.

Mar. That for thy selfe, I will not so presume,
To send such peevish tokens to a King.

Suf. Oh wert thou for my selfe: but Suffolke stay,
Thou mayest not wander in that Labyrinth,
There Minotaurs and ugly Treasons lurke.
Solicite Henry with her wonderous praise,
Bethinke thee on her Vertues that surmount,
Made naturall Graces that extinguish Art,
Repeate their semblance often on the Seas,
That when thou com'st to kneele at Henries feete,
Thou mayest bereave him of his wits with wonder. Exit.

Enter Yorke, Warwicke, Shepherd, Pucell.

Yor. Bring forth that Sorceresse condemn'd to burne.

Shep. Ah Ione, this kils thy Fathers heart out-right,
Have I sought every Countrey farre and neere,
And now it is my chance to finde thee out,
Must I behold thy timelesse cruell death:
Ah Ione, sweet daughter Ile die with thee.

Puc. Decrepit Miser, base ignoble Wretch,
I am descended of a gentler blood.

Thou art no Father, nor no Friend of mine.

Shep. Out, out: My Lords, and please you, 'tis not so,
I did beget her, all the Parish knowes:
Her Mother liveth yet, can testifie

She was the first fruite of my Bach'ler-ship,

War. Gracelesse, wilt thou deny thy Parentage?

Yor. This argues, what her kinde of life hath beene,
Wicked and vile, and so her death concludes.

Shep. Eye Ione, that thou wilt be so obstacle:
God knowes, thou art a collop of my flesh,
And for thy sake have I shed many a teare:
Deny me not, I pry thee, gentle Ione.

Puc. Pezant avant. You have suborn'd this man
Of purpose, to obscure my Noble birth.

Shep. 'Tis true, I gave a Noble to the Priest,
The morne that I was wedded to her mother.
Kneele downe and take my blessing, good my Gyrle.

Wilt thou not stoope? Now cursed be the time
Of thy nativity: I would the Milke
Thy mother gave thee when thou suck'dst her brest,
Had bin a little Rats-bane for thy sake.

O else, when thou didst keepe my Lambes a field,
I with some ravenous Wolfe had eaten thee.

Doeft thou deny thy Father, cursed Drab?

O burne her, burne her, hanging is too good.

Exit.

Yor. Take her away, for she hath liv'd too long,
To fill the world with vicious qualities.

Puc. First let me tell you whom you have condemn'd;

Not me, begotten of a Shepherd Swaine,
But issued from the Progeny of Kings.

Vermous and Holy, chosen from above,
By inspiration of Celestiall Grace,

To worke exceeding miracles on earth.

I never had to do with wicked Spirits,

But you that are polluted with your lustes,

Stain'd with the guiltlesse blood of Innocents,

Corrupt and tainted with a thousand Vices:

Because you want the grace that others have,

You judge it straight a thing impossible

To compasse Wonders, but by helpe of divels.

No misconceived, Ione of Aire hath beene
A Virgin from her tender infancy,
Chaste, and immaculate in very thought,
Whose Maiden-blood thus rigorously effus'd,
Will cry for Vengeance, at the Gates of Heaven.

Yor. I, I: away with her to execution.

War. and hearke ye firs: because she is a Maide,
Spare for no Faggots, let there be enow:
Place barrelles of pitch upon the fatall stake,
That so her torture may be shortned.

Puc. Will nothing turne your unrelenting hearts?
Then Ione discovet thine infirmity,

That warranteth by Law, to be thy priviledge.

I am with childe ye bloody Homicides:

Murther not then the Fruite within my Wombe,
Although ye hale me to a violent death.

Yor. Now heaven forfend, the holy Maid with child?

War. The greatest miracle that ere ye wrought:
Is all your strict precisenesse come to this?

Yor. She and the Dolphin have bin jugling,
I did imagine what would be her refuge.

War. Well go to, we will have no Bastards live,
Especially since Charles must Father it.

Puc. You are deceiv'd, my childe is none of his,
It was Alanson that injoy'd my love.

Yor. Alanson that notorious Machevile?

It dyes, and if it had a thousand lives.

Puc. Oh give me leave, I have deluded you,
'Twas neither Charles, nor yet the Duke I nam'd,
But Reignier King of Naples that prevail'd.

War. A married man! that's most intollerable.

Yor. Why here's a Gyrle: I thinke she knowes not wel
(There were so many) whom she may accuse.

War. It's signe she had beene liberall and free.

Yor. And yet forsooth she is a Virgin pure.
Strumpet, thy words condemne thy Brat, and thee.
Vse no intreaty, for it is in vaine.

Pu. Then lead me hence: with whom I leave my curse.
May never glorious Sunne reflex his beames
Vpon the Countrey where you make abode:
But darknesse, and the gloomy shade of death
Inviron you, till Mischeefe and Despaire, Drive you to break your necks, or hang your selves. Exit.

Enter Cardinall.

Yor. Breake thou in peeces, and consume to ashes,
You fowle accursed minister of Hell.

Car. Lord Regent, I do greeete your Excellence
With Letters of Commission from the King.

For know my Lords, the States of Christendome,
Mov'd with remorse of these out-ragious broyles,
Have earnestly implor'd a generall peace,
Betwixt our Nation, and th'aspyring French;
And heere at hand, the Dolphin and his Traine
Approacheth, to conferre about some matters.

Yor. Is all our travell turn'd to this effect,
After the slaughter of so many Peeres,
So many Captaines, Gentlemen, and Souldiers,
That in this quarrell have beene overthrowne,
And sold their bodies for their Countries benefite,
Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace?
Have we not lost most part of all the Townes,
By treason, Falshood, and by Treachery,
Our great Progenitors had conquered?
Oh Warwicke, Warwicke, I foresee with greefe
The utter losse of all the Realme of France.

War. Be patient Yorke, if we conclude a Peace

It shall be with such strict and severe Covenants,
As little shall the Frenchmen gaine thereby.

Enter Charles, Alançon, Bastard, Reignier.

Char. Since Lords of England, it is thus agreed,
That peacefull truce shall be proclaim'd in France,
We come to be informed by your selves,
What the conditions of that league must be.

Tor. Speake Winchester, for boyling choller chokes
The hollow passage of my poyson'd voice,
By sight of these our balefull enemies.

Win. Charles, and the rest, it is enacted thus:
That in regard King Henry gives consent,
Of meere compassion, and of lenity,
To ease your Country of distressefull Warre,
And suffer you to breathe in fruitfull peace,
You shall become true Liegemen to his Crowne.
And Charles, upon condition thou wilt sweare
To pay him tribute, and submit thy selfe,
Thou shalt be plac'd as Viceroy under him,
And still enjoy thy Regall dignity.

Alan. Must he be then as shadow of himselfe?
Adorne his Temples with a Coronet,
And yet in substance and authority,
Retaine but priuiledge of a private man?
This proffer is absurd, and reasonlesse.

Char. 'Tis knowne already that I am posselt
With more then halfe the Gallian Territories,
And therein reuerenc'd for their lawfull King.
Shall I for lucre of the rest un-vanquisht,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but Viceroy of the whole?
No Lord Ambassador, Ile rather keepe
That which I have, than coveting for more
Be cast from possibillity of all.

Tor. Insulting Charles, hast thou by secret meanes
Vs'd intercession to obtaine a league,
And now the matter growes to compremize,
Stand'st thou aloofe upon Comparifon.
Either accept the Title thou usurp'st,
Of benefit proceeding from our King,
And not of any challenge of Desert,
Or we will plague thee with incessant Warres.

Reig. My Lord, you do not well in obstinacy,
To cavill in the course of this Contract:
If once it be neglected, ten to one
We shall not finde like opportunity.

Alan. To say the truth, it is your policy,
To save your Subjects from such massacre
And ruthlesse slaughters as are daily seene
By our proceeding in Hostility.
And therefore take this compact of a Truce,
Although you breake it, when your pleasure serves.

War. How sayst thou Charles?
Shall our Condition stand?

Char. It Shall:
Onely reserv'd, you claime no interest
In any of our Townes of Garrison.

Tor. Then sweare Allegiance to his Majesty,
As thou art Knight, never to disobey,
Nor be Rebellious to the Crowne of England,
Thou nor thy Nobles, to the Crowne of England.
So, now dismisfe your Army when ye please:
Hang up your Ensignes, let your Drummes be still,
For heere we entertaine a solemne peace.

Exeunt.

Enter Suffolke in conference with the King, Glocester, and Exeter.

King. Your wondrous rare description (noble Earle)
Of beauteous Margaret hath astonish'd me:
Her vertues graced with externall gifts,
Do breed Loves settled passions in my heart,
And like as rigour of tempestuous gulfes
Provokes the mightiest Hulke against the tide,
So am I driven by breath of her Renowne,
Either to suffer Sphipwracke, or arrive
Where I may have fruition of her Loue.

Suf. Tush my good Lord, this superficial tale,
Is but a preface of her worthy praise:
The cheefe perfections of that lovely Dame,
(Had I sufficient skill to utter them)
Would make a volume of inticing lines,
Able to ravish any dull conceit.

And which is more, she is not so Divine,
So full replete with choice of all delights,
But with as humble lowlinesse of minde,
She is content to be at your command:
Command I meane, of Vertuous chaste intents,
To love, and Honor Henry as her Lord.

King. And other wise, will Henry ne're presume:
Therefore my Lord Protector, give consent,
That Marg'ret may be Englands Royall Queene.

Glo. So should I give consent to flatter sinne,
You know (my Lord) your Highnesse is betroath'd
Vnto another Lady of esteeme,
How shall we then dispence with that contract,
And not deface your Honor with reproach?

Suf. As doth a Ruler with unlawfull Oathes,
Or one that at a Triumph, having vow'd
To try his strength, forsaketh yet the Listes
By reason of his Adversaries oddes.
A poore Earles daughter is unequall oddes,
And therefore may be broke without offence.

Glon. Why what (I pray) is Margaret more than that?
Her Father is no better than an Earle,
Although in glorious Titles he excell.

Suf. Yes my good Lord, her Father is a King,
The King of Naples, and Ierusalem,
And of such great Authority in France,
As his alliance will confirme our peace,
And keepe the Frenchmen in Allegiance.

Glo. And so the Earle of Arminacke may doe,
Because he is neere Kinsman unto Charles.

Exet. Beside, his wealth doth warrant liberall dower,
Where Reignier sooner will receive, than give.

Suf. A Dowre my Lords? Disgrace not so your King,
That he should be so abject, base, and poore,
To choose for wealth, and not for perfect Love.
Henry is able to enrich his Queene,
And not to seeke a Queene to make him rich:
So worthlesse Pezants bargain for their Wives,
As Market men for Oxen, Sheepe, or Horfe.
But marriage is a matter of more worth,
Then to be dealt in by Atturney-ship:
Not whom we will, but whom his Grace affects,
Must be companion of his Nuptiall bed.
And therefore Lords, since he affects her most,
Most of all these reasons bindeth us,
In our opinions she should be preferr'd.
For what is wedlocke forced, but a Hell,
An age of discord and continuall strife?

Whereas

Whereas the contrary bringeth forth blisse,
And is a patterne of Celestiall peace.
Whom should we match with Henry being a King,
But Margaret, that is daughter to a King?
Her peerelesse feature, joynd with her birth,
Approves her fit for none, but for a King.
Her valiant courage, and undaunted spirit,
(More then in women commonly is seene)
Will answer our hope in issue of a King:
For Henry, sonne unto a Conqueror,
Is likely to beget more Conquerors,
If with a Lady of so high resolve,
(As is faire Margaret) he be link'd in love.
Then yeeld my Lords, and heere conclude with mee,
That Margaret shall be Queene, and none but thee.
King. Whether it be through force of your report,
My Noble Lord of Suffolke: Or for that
My tender youth was never yet attaint
With any passion of inflaming love;
I cannot tell: but this I am assur'd,
I feele such sharpe dissention in my breast,
Such fierce alarums both of Hope and Feare,
As I am sicke with working of my thought.

Take therefore shipping, poste my Lord to France,
Agree to any covenants, and procure
That Lady Margaret do vouchsafe to come
To crosse the Seas to England, and be crown'd
King Henry's faithfull and annointed Queene.
For your expences and sufficient charge,
Among the people gather up a tenth.
Be gone I say, for till you do returne,
I rest perplexed with a thousand Cares.
And you (good Vnckle) banish all offence:
If you do censure me, by what you were,
Not what you are, I know it will excuse
This sodaine execution of my will.
And so conduct me, where from company,
I may revolve and ruminare my greefe.

Exit.

Glo. I, greefe I feare me, both at first and last.

Exit Gloucester.

Suf. Thus Suffolke hath prevail'd, and thus he goes
As did the youthfull Paris once to Greece,
With hope to finde the like event in love,
But prosper better than the Trojan did:
Margaret shall now be Queene, and rule the King:
But I will rule both her, the King, and Realme.

Exit.

FIN IS.

The

The second Part of King Henry the Sixth

vvith the death of the Good Duke H V M F R E Y.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Flourish of Trumpets: Then Hoboyes.

Enter King, Duke Humfrey, Salisbury, Warwicke, and Bedford on the one side.

The Queene, Suffolke, Yorke, Somerset, and Buckingham, on the other.

Suffolke.

AS by your high Imperiall Majesty,
I had in charge at my depart for France,
As Procurator to your Excellence,
To marry Princes Margaret for your Grace;
So in the Famous Ancient City, Toures,
In presence of the Kings of France, and Sicill,
The Dukes of Orleance, Calaber, Britaigne, Alanson,
Seven Earles, twelve Barons, & twenty reverend Bishops
I have perform'd my Taske, and was espous'd,
And humbly now upon my bended knee,
In sight of England, and her Lordly Peeres,
Deliver up my Title in the Queene
To your most gracious hand, that are the Substance
Of that great Shadow I did represent:
The happiest Gift, that ever Marquess gave,
The Fairest Queene, that ever King receiv'd.

King. Suffolke arise. Welcome Queene Margaret,
I can expresse no kinder signe of Love
Then this kinde kisse: O Lord, that lends me life,
Lend me a heart replete with thankfulness:
For thou hast given me in this beauteous Face
A world of earthly blessings to my soule,
If Simpaty of Love unite our thoughts.

Que. Great King of England, and my gracious Lord,
The mutuall conference that my minde hath had,
By day, by night; waking, and in my dreames,
In Courtly company, or at my Beades,
With you mine Alder liefest Sovereigne,
Makes me the bolder to salute my King,
With ruder termes, such as my wit affords,
And over joy of heart doth minister.

King. Her sight did ravish, but her grace in Speech,
Her words yclad with wisdomes Majesty,
Makes me from Wondring, fall to Weeping joyes,
Such is the Fulnesse of my hearts content.

Lords, with one cheerefull voice, Welcome my Love.

All kneel. Long live Qu. Margarete, Englands happines.

Quee. We thanke you all.

Flourish

Suf. My Lord Protector, so it please your Grace,
Here are the Articles of contracted peace,
Betweene our Sovereigne, and the French King Charles,
For eightene moneths concluded by consent.

Glo. Reads. Inprimis, It is agreed betweene the French K.
Charles, and William de la Pole Marquess of Suffolke, Ambbassador for Henry King of England, That the said Henry shal espouse the Lady Margaret, daughter unto Reignier King of Naples, Sicillia, and Ierusalem, and Crowne her Queene of England, ere the thirtieth of May next ensuing.

Item, I hat the Dutchy of Anjou, and the Countie of Maine shall be released and delivered to the King her father.

King. Vnkle, how now?

Glo. Pardon me gracious Lord,
Some sodaine qualme hath stricke me at the heart,
And dim'd mine eyes, that I can reade no further.

King. Vnkle of Winchester, I pray reade on.

Win. Item, It is further agreed betweene them, That the Dutcheffe of Anjou and Maine, shal be released and delivered over to the King her Father, and shal be sent over of the King of Englands owne proper Cost and Charges, without having any Dowry.

King. They please us well. Lord Marques kneel down,
We heere create thee the first Duke of Suffolke,
And girt thee with the Sword. Cousin of Yorke,
We heere discharge your Grace from being Regent
I'th parts of France, till terme of eightene Moneths
Be full expyr'd. Thankes Vnkle Winchester,
Gloster, Yorke, Buckingham, and Somerset,
Salisbury, and Warwicke.

We thanke you all for this great favour done,
In entertainment to my Princely Queene.
Come, let us in, and with all speede provide
To see her Coronation be perform'd.

Exeunt King, Queene, and Suffolke.

Manent the rest.

Glo. Brave Peeres of England, Pillars of the State,
To you Duke Humfrey must unload his greefe:
Your greefe, the common greefe of all the Land.
What did my brother Henry spend his youth,
His valour, coine, and people in the warres?
Did he so often lodge in open field,
In Winters cold, and Summers parching heate,
To conquer France, his true inheritance?
And did my brother Bedford toyle his wits,

To keepe by policy what Henry got:

Have you your selves, Somerset, Buckingham,
Brave Yorke, Salisbury, and victorious Warwicke,
Received deepe scarres in France and Normandy:
Or hath mine Vncke Beauford, and my selfe,
With all the Learned Counsell of the Realme,
Studied so long, sat in the Councell house,
Early and late, debating too and fro
How France and Frenchmen might be kept in awe,
And hath his Highnesse in his infancy,
Crowned in Paris in despite of foes,
And shall these Labours, and these Honours dye?
Shall Henries Conquest, Bedfords vigilance,
Your Deeds of Warre, and all our Counsell dye?
O Peeres of England, shamefull is this League,
Fatal this Marriage, cancelling your Fame,
Blotting your names from Bookes of memory,
Racing the Characters of your Renowne,
Defacing Monuments of Conquer'd France,
Vndoing all as all had never bin.

Car. Nephew, what meanes this passionate discourse?

This peroration with such circumstance:

For France, 'tis ours; and we will keepe it still,

Glo. I Vncke, we will keepe it, if we can:

But now it is impossible we should.

Suffolke, the new made Duke that rules the roost,

Hath given the Duchy of Anjou and Maine,

Vnto the poore King Reignier, whose large style

Agrees not with the leanness of his purse.

Sal. Now by the death of him that dyed for all,

These Countiees were the Keues of Normandie:

But wherefore weepes Warwicke, my valiant sonne?

War. For greefe that they are past recovery.

For were there hope to conquer them againe,

My sword should shed hot blood, mine eyes no teares.

Anjou and Maine? My selfe did win them both:

Those Provinces, these Armes of mine did conquer,

And are the Citties that I got with wounds,

Deliver'd up againe with peacefull words?

Mori Dieu.

Yor. For Suffolkes Duke, may he be suffocate,

That dims the Honor of this Warlike Isle:

France should have torne and rent my very heart,

Before I would have yeelded to this League.

I never read but Englands Kings have had

Large summes of Gold, and Dowries with their wives,

And our King Henry gives away his owne,

To match with her that brings no vantages.

Hum. A proper jest, and never heard before,

That Suffolke should demand a whole Fifteenth,

For Costs and Charges in transporting her:

She should have staid in France, and sterv'd in France

Before—

Car. My Lord of Gloster, now ye grow too hot,

It was the pleasure of my Lord the King.

Hum. My Lord of Winchester I know your minde.

'Tis not my speeces that you do mislike:

But 'tis my presence that doth trouble ye,

Rancour will out, proud Prelate, in thy face

I see thy fury: If I longer stay,

We shall begin our ancient bickerings:

Lordings farewell, and say when I am gone,

I prophesied, France will be lost ere long. Exit Humfrey.

Car. So, there goes our Protector in a rage:

'Tis knowne to you he is mine enemy:

Nay more, an enemy unto you all,

And no great friend, I feare me to the King;

Consider Lords, he is the next of blood,

And heyre apparant to the English Crowne:

Had Henry got an Empire by his marriage,

And all the wealthy Kingdomes of the West,

There's reason he should be displeas'd at it:

Looke to it Lords, let not his smoothing words

Bewitch your hearts, be wise and circumspect.

What though the common people favour him,

Calling him, Humfrey the good Duke of Gloster,

Clapping their hands, and crying with loud voice,

Iesu maintaine your Royall Excellence,

With God preserve the good Duke Humfrey.

I feare me Lords, for all this flattering glosse,

He will be found a dangerous Protector.

Buc. Why should he then protect our Sovereigne?

He being of age to governe of himselfe.

Cosin of Somerset, joyne you with me,

And altogether with the Duke of Suffolke,

Wee'l quickly hoys Duke Humfrey from his seat.

Car. This weighty businesse will not brooke delay,

Ile to the Duke of Suffolke presently. Exit Cardinal.

Som. Cosin of Buckingham, though Humfries pride

And greatnesse of his place be greefe to us,

Yet let us watch the haughty Cardinal,

His insolence is more intollerable

Then all the Princes in the Land beside,

If Gloster be displac'd, hee'l be Protector.

Buc. Or thou, or I Somerset will be Protector,

Despite Duke Humfrey, or the Cardinal.

Exit Buckingham, and Somerset.

Sal. Pride went before, Ambition followes him.

While these do labour for their owne preferment,

Behoooves it us to labor for the Realme.

I never saw but Humfrey Duke of Gloster,

Did beare him like a Noble Gentleman:

Oft have I seene the haughty Cardinal.

More like a Souldier, then a man o'th Church,

As stout and proud as he were Lord of all,

Sweare like a Russian, and demeane himselfe

Vnlike the Ruler of a Common-weale.

Warwicke my sonne, the comfort of my age,

Thy deeds, thy plainnesse, and thy house-keeping,

Hath wonne the greatest favour of the Commons,

Excepting none but good Duke Humfrey.

And Brother Yorke, thy Acts in Ireland,

In bringing them to civill Discipline:

Thy late exploits done in the heart of France,

When thou wert Regent for our Sovereigne,

Have made thee fear'd and honor'd of the people,

Ioyne we together for the publicke good,

In what we can, to bridle and suppress

The pride of Suffolke, and the Cardinal,

With *Somerset*s and *Buckingham*s Ambition,

And as we may, cherish Duke Humfries deeds,

While they do tend the profit of the Land.

War. So God helpe Warwicke, as he loves the Land,

And common profit of his Countrey.

Yor. And so sayes Yorke,

For he hath greatest cause.

Sal. Then lets make haste away,

And looke unto the maine?

Warw. Vnto the maine?

Oh Father, Maine is lost,

That Maine, which by maine force Warwicke did winne

And would have kept, so long as breath did last:

Main

Main-chance father you meant, but I meant Maine,
Which I will win from France, or else be slaine.

Exit Warwick, and Salisbury. Manet Yorke.

Yorke. Anjou and Maine are given to the French,
Paris is lost, the state of Normandy
Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone:
Suffolke concluded on the Articles,
The Peeres agreed, and Henry was well pleas'd,
To change two Dukedomes for a Dukes faire daughter.
I cannot blame them all, what is't to them?

'Tis thine they give away, and not their owne.
Pirates may make cheape penyworths of their pillage,
And purchase Friends, and give to Curtezans,
Still revelling like Lords till all be gone:
While as the silly Owner of the goods
Weepes over them, and wrings his haplesse hands,
And shakes his head, and trembling stands aloofe,
While all is shar'd and all is borne away,
Ready to sterue, and dare not touch his owne.
So Yorke must sit, and fret, and bite his tongue,
While his owne Lands are bargain'd for, and sold:
Me thinkes the Realmes of England, France, and Ireland,
Beare that proportion to my flesh and blood,
As did the fatall brand Altham burnt,
Vnto the Princes heart of Calidon:

Anjou and Maine both given unto the French?
Cold newes for me: for I had hope of France,
Even as I have of fertile Englands soile.
A day will come, when Yorke shall claime his owne,
And therefore I will take the Neuills parts,
And make a shew of love to proud Duke Humfrey,
And when I spy advantage, claime the Crowne,
For that's the Golden marke I seeke to hit:
Nor shall proud Lancaster usurpe my right,
Nor hold the Scepter in his childish Fist,
Nor weare the Diadem upon his head,
Whose Church-like humors fits not for a Crowne.
Then Yorke be still a-while, till time do serue:
Watch thou, and wake when others be asleepe,
To prie into the secrets of the State,
Till Henry surfetting in joyes of love,
With his new Bride, & Englands deere bought Queene,
And Humfrey with the Peeres be false at jarres:
Then will I raise aloft the Miske-white-Rose,
With whose sweet smell the Ayre shall be perfum'd,
And in my Standard beare the Armes of Yorke,
To grapple with the house of Lancaster,
And force perforce Ile make him yeeld the Crowne,
Whose bookish Rule, hath pull'd faire England downe.

Exit Yorke.

Enter Duke Humfrey and his wife Elianor.

Elian. Why droopes my Lord like over-ripen'd Corn,
Hanging the head at Ceres plenteous load?
Why doth the Great Duke Humfrey knit his browes,
As frowning at the Favours of the world?
Why are thine eyes fixt to the fullen earth,
Gazing on that which seemes to dimme thy sight?
What seest thou there? King Henries Diadem,
Inchac'd with all the Honors of the world?
If so, gaze on, and grovell on thy face;
Vntill thy head be circled with the same.
Put forth thy hand, reach at the glorious Gold.
What, is't too short? Ile lengthen it with mine.
And having both together heav'd it up,
Wee'le both together lift our heads to heaven,
And never more abase our sight so low,

As to vouchsafe one glance unto the ground.

Hum. O Nell, sweet Nell, if thou dost love thy Lord,
Banish the Canker of ambitious thoughts:
And may that thought, when I imagine ill
Against my King and Nephew, vertuous Henry,
Be my last breathing in this mortall world.

My troublous dreames this night, doth make me sad.
Eli. What dream'd my Lord, tell me, and Ile requite it
With sweet rehearfall of my mornings dreame?

Hum. Me thought this staffe mine Office-badge in Court

Was broke in twaine: by whom, I have forgot,
But as I thinke, it was by'th Cardinall,
And on the peeces of the broken Wand
Were plac'd the heads of Edmond Duke of Somerset,
And Willsam de la Pole first Duke of Suffolke.
This was my dreame, what it doth bode God knowes.

Eli. Tut, this was nothing but an argument,
That he that breakes a stick of Glosters grove,
Shall lose his head for his presumption.
But list to me my Humfrey, my sweete Duke:
Me thought I sate in Seate of Majesty,
In the Cathedrall Church of Westminster,
And in that Chaire where Kings & Queens wer crown'd,
Where Henry and Dame Margaret kneeled to me,
And on my head did set the Diadem.

Hum. Nay Elianor, then must I chide outright:
Presumptuous Dame, ill-nurter'd Elianor,
Art thou not second Woman in the Realme?
And the Protector's wife belov'd of him?
Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command,
Above the reach or compasse of thy thought?
And wilt thou still be hammering Treachery,
To tumble downe thy husband, and thy selfe,
From top of Honor, to Disgraces fete?
Away from me, and let me heare no more.

Eli. What, what, my Lord? Are you so chollericke
With Elianor, for telling but her dreame?
Next time Ile kepe my dreames unto my selfe,
And not be check'd.

Hum. Nay be not angry, I am pleas'd againe.

Enter Messenger.

Mess. My Lord Protector, 'tis his Highnes pleasure,
You do prepare to ride unto S. Albons,
Where as the King and Queene do meane to Hawke.

Hum. I go. Come Nell thou wilt ride with us? Ex. Hu.

Eli. Yes my good Lord, Ile follow presently.
Follow I must, I cannot go before,
While Gloster beares this bale and humble minde:
Were I a Man, a Duke, and next of blood,
I would remove these tedious stumbling blockes,
And smoothe my way upon their headlesse neckes.
And being a woman, I will not be slacke
To play my part in Fortunes Pageant.

Where are you there? Sir John; nay feare not man,
We are alone, here's none but thee, & I. Enter Hume.

Hume. Iesus preserve your Royall Majesty.

Eli. What saist thou? Majesty: I am but Grace.

Hume. But by the grace of God, and Humes advice,
Your Graces Title shall be multiplied.

Eli. What saist thou man? Hast thou as yet confer'd
With Margerit Iordane the cunning Witch,
With Roger Bolingbrooke the Conjuror?
And will they undertake to do me good?

Hume. This they have promised, to shew your Highnes
A Spirit rais'd from depth of under ground,

That

That shall make answer to such Questions,
As by your Grace shall be propounded him.

Eliano. It is enough, Ile thinke upon the Questions:
When from Saint Albons we doe make returne;
Wee'le see those things effected to the full.
Here Hume, take this reward; make merry man
With thy Confederates in this weighty cause.

Exit Eliano.

Hume. Hume must make merry with the Duchesse Gold:
Marry and shall: but how now, Sir John Hume?

Seale up your Lips, and give no words but Mum,
The businesse asketh silent secrecy.

Dame Eliano gives Gold, to bring the Witch:
Gold cannot come amisse, were she a Devill.

Yet have I Gold flies from another Coast:

I dare not say, from the rich Cardinall,

And from the great and new-made Duke of Suffolke;

Yet I doe finde it so: for to be plaine,

They (knowing Dame Eliano's aspiring humor)

Have hyred me to under-mine the Duchesse,

And buzze these Conjurations in her brayne.

They say, A crafty Knave do's need no Broker.

Yet am I Suffolke and the Cardinalls Broker.

Hume, if you take not heed, you shall goe neere

To call them both a payre of crafty Knaves.

Well, so it stands: and thus I feare at last.

Hume's Knavery will be the Duchesse Wracke,

And her Attainture, will be Humphreyes fall:

Sort how it will, I shall have Gold for all.

Exit.

Enter three or foure Petitioners, the Armorer's Man being one.

1. Pet. My Maisters, let's stand close, my Lord Protector will come this way by and by, and then wee may deliver our Supplications in the Quill.

2. Pet. Marry the Lord protect him, for hee's a good man, Iesu blesse him.

Enter Suffolke, and Queene.

Peter. Here a comes me thinkes, and the Queene with him: Ile be the first sure.

2. Pet. Come backe foole, this is the Duke of Suffolke, and not my Lord Protector.

Suff. How now fellow: would'st any thing with me?

1. Pet. I pray my Lord pardon me, I tooke ye for my Lord Protector.

Quee. To my Lord Protector? Are your Supplications to his Lordship? Let me see them: what is thine?

1. Pet. Mine is, and t'please your Grace, against John Goodman, my Lord Cardinals Ma' for keeping my Houfe, and Lands and Wife and all, from me.

Suff. Thy Wife too? that's some Wrong indeede.
What's yours? What's heere? Against the Duke of Suffolke, for enclosing the Commons of Melforde. How now, Sir Knave?

2. Pet. Alas Sir, I am but a poore Petitioner of our whole Towneship.

Pet. Against my Maister Thomas Horner, for saying,
That the Duke of Yorke was rightfull Heire to the Crowne.

Quee. What say'st thou? Did the Duke of Yorke say, hee was rightfull Heire to the Crowne?

Pet. That my Mistresse was? No forsooth: my Maister said, That he was; and that the King was an Vsurper.

Suff. Who is there?

Enter Servant.

Take this fellow in, and send for his Maister with a Purse-vant presently: wee'le heare more of your matter before the King. Exit.

Quee. And as for you that love to be protected
Vnder the Wings of our Protectors Grace,
Begin your Suites anew, and sue to him.

Tear the Supplication.

Away, base Cullions: Suffolke let them goe.

All. Come, let's be gone.

Exit.

Quee. My Lord of Suffolke, say, is this the guise?

Is this the Fashions in the Court of England?

Is this the Governement of Brittaines Ile?

And this the Royalty of Albions King?

What, shall King Henry be a Pupill still,

Vnder the surly Glosters Governance?

Am I a Queene in Title and in Stile,

And must be made a Subject to a Duke?

I tell thee Poole, when in the Citie Tours

Thou ran'st a-tilt in honor of my Love,

And stol'st away the Ladies hearts of France;

I thought King Henry had resembled thee,

In Courage, Courtship, and Proportion:

But all his minde is bent to Holinesse,

To number Ave-Maries on his Beades:

His Champions, are the Prophets and Apostles,

His Weapons, holy Sawes of sacred Writ,

His Study is his Tilt-yard, and his Loves

Are brazen Images of Canonized Saints.

I would the Colledge of the Cardinalls

Would chuse him Pope, and carry him to Rome,

And set the Triple Crowne upon his Head;

That were a State fit for his Holinesse.

Suff. Madame be patient: as I was cause
Your Highnesse came to England, so will I
In England worke your Graces full content.

Quee. Beside the haught Protector, have we Beauford
The imperious Churchman; Somerset, Buckingham,
And grumbling Torke: and not the least of these,
But can doe more in England then the King.

Suff. And he of these, that can doe most of all,
Cannot doe more in England then the Neils:
Salisbury and Warwick are no simple Peeres.

Quee. Not all these Lords do vex me halfe so much,
As that proud Dame, the Lord Protectors Wife:
She sweepes it though the Court with troupes of Ladies,
More like an Empreffe, then Duke Humphreyes Wife:
Strangers in Court, doe take her for the Queene:
She beares a Dukes Revenewes on her backe,
And in her heart she scornes our Poverty:
Shall I not live to be aveng'd on her?
Contemptuous base-borne Callot as she is,
She vaunted 'mongst her Minions t'other day,
The very trayne of her worst wearing Gowne,
Was better worth then all my Fathers Lands,
Till Suffolke gave two Dukedomes for his Daughter.

Suff. Madame, my selfe have lym'd a Bush for her,
And plac't a Quier of such enticing Birds,
That she will light to listen to the Layes,
And never mount to trouble you againe.
So let her rest: and Madame list to me,
For I am bold to counsaile you in this;
Although we fancy nor the Cardinall,
Yet must we joyne with him and with the Lords,
Till we have brought Duke Humphrey in disgrace.

As for the Duke of Yorke, this late Complaint
Will make but little for his benefit:
So one by one wee'le weed them all at last,
And you your selfe shall steere the happy Helme. Exit.

Enter the King, Duke Humfrey, Cardinall, Buckingham, Yorke, Salisbury, Warwick, and the Duchesse.

King. For my part, Noble Lords, I care not which,
Or Somerset, or Yorke, all's one to me.

Yor. If Yorke have ill demean'd himselfe in France,
Then let him be deny'd the Regent's ship.

Som. If Somerset be unworthy of the Place,
Let Yorke be Regent, I will yeeld to him.

Warw. Whether your Grace be worthy, yea or no,
Dispute not that, Yorke is the worthyer.

Card. Ambitious Warwicke, let thy betters speake.

Warw. The Cardinall's not my better in the field.

Buck. All in this presence are thy betters, Warwicke.

Warw. Warwicke may live to be the best of all.

Salish. Peace Sonne, and shew some reason Buckingham
Why Somerset should be prefer'd in this?

Queene. Because the King forsooth will have it so.

Humf. Madame, the King is old enough himselfe
To give his Censure: These are no Womans matters.

Quee. If he be old enough, what needs your Grace
To be Protector of his Excellence?

Humf. Madame, I am Protector of the Realme,
And at his pleasure will resigne my Place.

Suff. Resigne it then, and leave thine insolence.
Since thou wert King, as who is King, but thou?
The Common-wealth hath dayly run to wrack,
The Dolphin hath prevayl'd beyond the Seas,
And all the Peeres and Nobles of the Realme
Have beene as Bond-men to thy Sovereignty.

Car. The Commons hast thou rackt, the Clergies Bags
Are lanke and leane with thy Extortions.

Som. Thy sumptuous Buildings, and thy Wives Attire
Have cost a masse of publique Treasure.

Buck. Thy Cruelty in execution
Vpon Offendors, hath exceeded Law,
And left thee to the mercy of the Law.

Quee. Thy sale of Offices and Townes in France,
If they were knowne, as the suspect is great,
Would make thee quickly hop without thy Head.

Exit Humfrey.

Give me my Fanne: what, Mynion, can ye not?

She gives the Duchesse a box on the eare.

I cry you mercy, Madame: was it you?

Duch. Was't I? yea, I it was, prowd French-woman:
Could I come neere your Beauty with my Nails,
I could set my ten Commandements in your face.

King. Sweet Aunt be quiet, 'twas against her will.

Duch. Against her will, good King? looke to't in time,
Shee'le hamper thee, and dandle thee like a Baby:
Though in this place most Maister weares no Breeches,
She shall not strike Dame Elior vnreveng'd.

Exit Elior.

Buck. Lord Cardinall, I will follow Elior,
And listen after Humfrey, how he proceedes:
Shee's tickled now, her Fume can neede no spurres,
Shee'le gallop farre enough to her destruction.

Exit Buckingham.

Enter Humfrey.

Humf. Now Lords, my Choller being over-blowne,
With walking once about the Quadrangle,
I come to talke of Common-wealth Affaires.
As for your spightfull false Objections,
Prove them, and I lye open to the Law:
But God in mercy so deale with my Soule,
As I in duty love my King and Countrey.
But to the matter that we have in hand:
I say, my Sovereigne, Yorke is meetest man
To be your Regent in the Realme of France.

Suff. Before we make election, give me leave
To shew some reason, of no little force,
That Yorke is most unmeet of any man.

Yorke. Ile tell thee, Suffolke, why I am vnmeet.
First, for I cannot flatter thee in Pride:
Next, if I be appointed for the Place,
My Lord of Somerset will keepe me here,
Without Discharge, Money, or Furniture,
Till France be wonne into the Dolphins hands.
Last time I danc't attendance on his will,
Till Paris was besieg'd, famisht, and lost.

Warw. That can I witnesse, and a fouler fact
Did never Traytor in the Land commit.

Suff. Peace head-strong Warwicke.

Warw. Image of Pride, why should I hold my peace?

Enter Armorer and his Man.

Suff. Because here is a man accused of Treason,
Pray God the Duke of Yorke excuse himselfe.

Yorke. Doth any one accuse Yorke for a Traytor?

King. What mean'st thou, Suffolke? tell me, what are these?

Suff. Please it your Majesty, this is the man
That doth accuse his Maister of High Treason;
His words were these: That Richard, Duke of Yorke,
Was rightfull Heire unto the English Crowne,
And that your Majesty was an Vsurper.

King. Say man, were these thy words?

Armo. And't shall please your Majesty, I never sayd nor thought any such matter: God is my witnesse, I am falsely accus'd by the Villaine.

Peter. By these tenne bones, my Lords, he did speake them to me in the Garret one Night, as wee were scowring my Lord of Yorke's Armor.

Yorke. Base Dughill Villaine, and Mechanicall, Ile have thy Head for this thy Traytors speech:
I doe beseech your Royall Majesty,
Let him haue all the rigor of the Law.

Ar. Alas, my Lord, hang me if ever I spake the words:
my accuser is my Prentice, and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, hee did vow upon his knees he would be even with me: I have good witnesse of this, therefore I beseech your Majesty, doe not cast away an honest man for a Villaines accusation.

King. Vnckle, what shall we say to this in law?

Humf. This doome, my Lord, if I may judge:
Let Somerset be Regent o're the French,
Because in Yorke this breeds suspicion:
And let these have a day appointed them
For single Combat, in convenient place,
For he hath witnesse of his servants malice:
This is the Law, and this Duke Humfrees doome.

Som. I

Som. I humbly thanke your Royall Majesty.

Armorer. And I accept the Combat willingly.

Peter. Alas, my Lord, I cannot fight; for Gods sake pittie my case: the spight of my man prevaileth against me. O Lord have mercy upon me, I shall never be able to fight a blow: O Lord my heart.

Humf. Sirrha, or you must fight, or else be hang'd.

King. Away with them to Prison: and the day of Combat, shall be the last of the next moneth. Come Somerfet. we'll see thee sent away.

Flourish.

Exeunt.

Enter the Witch, the two Priests, and Bullingbrooke.

Hume. Come my Masters, the Duchesse I tell you expects performance of your promises.

Bullin. Master Hume, we are therefore provided: will her Ladyship behold and heare our Exorcismes?

Hume. I, what else? feare you not her courage.

Bullin. I have heard her reported to be a Woman of invincible spirit: but it shall be convenient, Master Hume, that you be by her aloft, while we be busie below; and so I pray you goe in Gods Name, and leave us.

Exit Hume.

Mother Jordan, be you prostrate, and grovell on the Earth; John Southwell reade you, and let us to our worke.

Enter Elianor aloft.

Elian. Well said my Masters, and welcome all: To this geere, the sooner the better.

Bullin. Patience, good Lady, Wizards know their times: Deepe Night, darke Night, the silent of the Night, The time of Night when Troy was set on fire, The time when Screech-owles cry, and Bandogs howle; And spirits walke, and Ghosts breakeup their Graves; That time best fits the worke we have in hand. Madam, sit you, and feare not: whom we raise, We will make fast within a hallow'd Verge.

Here doe the Ceremonies belonging, and make the Circle, Bullingbrooke or Southwell reades, Conjuro te, &c. It Thunders and Lightens terribly: then the Spirit riseth.

Spirit. Adsum.

Witch. Asmath, by the eternall God, Whose name and power thou tremblest at, Answer that I aske: for till thou speake, Thou shalt not passe from hence.

Spirit. Aske what thou wilt; that I had said, and done.

Bullin. First of the King: What shall of him become?

Spirit. The Duke yet lives, that Henry shall depose: But him out-live, and dye a violent death.

Bullin. What fates await the Duke of Suffolke?

Spirit. By Water shall he dye, and take his end.

Bullin. What shall befall the Duke of Somersfet?

Spirit. Let him shun Castles.

Safer shall he upon the sandie Plaines, Then where Castles mounted stand.

Have done, for more I hardly can endure.

Bullin. Descend to Darkenesse, and the burning Lake: Full fiend avoyde.

Thunder and Lightning.

Exit Spirit.

Enter the Duke of Yorke, and the Duke of Buckingham with their Guard, and breake in.

Yorke. Lay hands upon these Traytors, and their trash: Beldam I thinke we watcht you at an inch.

What Madam, are you there? the King and Common-Are deeply indebted for this peece of paines; (weale My Lord Protector will, I doubt it-not, See you well guerdon'd for these good deserts.

Elian. Not halfe so bad as thine to Englands King, Injurious Duke, that threatest where's no cause.

Buck. True Madam, none at all: what call you this? Away with them, let them be clapt up close, And kept asunder: you Madam shall with us.

Stafford take her to thee.

We'll see your Trinkets here all forth-comming.

All away.

Exit.

Yorke. Lord Buckingham, me thinkes you watcht her A pretty Plot, well chosen to build upon. (well:

Now pray my Lord, let's see the Devills Writ.

What have we here?

Reades.

The Duke yet lives, that Henry shall depose:

But him out live, and dye a violent death.

Why this is just. Asio Acacida Romanos vincere posse.

Well, to the rest:

Tell me what fate awaits the Duke of Suffolke?

By Water shall he dye, and take his end.

What shall betide the Duke of Somersfet?

Let him shunne Castles,

Safer shall he be upon the sandy Plaines,

Then where Castles mounted stand.

Come, come, my Lords,

These Oracles are hardly attain'd,

And hardly understood.

The King is now in progresse towards Saint Albones,

With him, the husband of this lovely Lady:

Thither goes these Newes,

As fast as horse can carry them:

A sorry breakfast for my Lord Protector.

Buc. Your Grace shall give me leave, my Lord of Yorke, To be the Poste, in hope of his reward.

Yorke. At your pleasure, my good Lord. Who's within there, hoe?

Enter a Servingman.

Invite my Lords of Salisbury and Warwicke To sup with me to morrow Night. Away.

Exeunt

Enter the King, Queene, Protector, Cardinall, and Suffolke, with Faulknors hollowing.

Quee. Beleeve me Lords, for flying at the Brooke, I saw not better sport these seven yeeres day; Yet by your leave, the Winde was very high, And ten to one, old Ioane had not gone out.

King. But what a point, my Lord, your Faulcon made, And what a pytch she flew above the rest:

To see how God in all his Creatures workes,

Yea Man and Birds are fayne of climbing high.

Suff. No marvell, and it like your Majesty,

My Lord Protectors Hawkes doe towre so well,

They know their Master loves to be aloft,

And beares his thoughts above his Faulcons Pitch.

Gloft. My Lord, 'tis but a base ignoble minde, That mounts no higher then a Bird can soe.

Card. I thought as much, he would be above the Clouds.

Gloſt. I my Lord Cardinall, how thinke you by that? Were it not good your Grace could flye to Heaven?

King. The Treasury of everlasting Ioy.

Card. Thy heaven is on Earth, thine Eyes and Thoughts Beat on a Crowne, the Treasure of thy heart, Pernitious Protector, dangerous Peere, That smooth'ſt it ſo with King and Commonweale.

Gloſt. What Cardinall?

Is your Priest-hood growne peremptory?

Tantane animis Caeſtibus ira, Church-men ſo hot?

Good Vnckle hide ſuch mallice:

With ſuch Holynesse can you doe it?

Suff. No mallice Sir, no more then well becomes So good a Quarrell, and ſo bad a Peere.

Gloſt. As who, my Lord?

Suff. Why, as you, my Lord, An't like your lordly Lords Protectorſhip.

Gloſt. Why Suffolke, England knowes thine insolence.

Quee. And thy Ambition, Gloſter.

King. I prethee peace, good Queene, And whet not on theſe too-too furious Peeres, For bleſſed are the Peace-makers on Earth

Card. Let me be bleſſed for the Peace I make Againſt this proud Protector with my Sword.

Gloſt. Faith holy Vnckle, would't were come to that.

Card. Marry, when thou dar'ſt.

Gloſt. Make up no factious numbers for the matter, In thine owne perſon anſwer thy abuſe.

Card. I, where thou dar'ſt not peepe: And if thou dar'ſt, this Evening, On the Eaſt ſide of the Grove.

King. How now, my Lords?

Card. Beleeve me, Couſin Gloſter, Had not your man put up the Foule ſo ſuddenly, We had had more ſport. Come with thy two-hand Sword,

Gloſt. True Vnckle, are ye advis'd? The Eaſt ſide of the Grove:

Cardinall, I am with you.

King. Why how now, Vnckle Gloſter?

Gloſt. Talking of Hawking; nothing elſe, my Lord. Now by Gods Mother, Priſt, Ile ſhawe your Crowne for this, Or all my Fence ſhall faile.

Card. Medice teipſum, Protector ſee to't well, protect your ſelfe.

King. The Windes grow high, So doe your Stomackes Lords: How irkeſome is this Muſicke to my heart? When ſuch Strings jarre, what hope of Harmony? I pray my Lords let me compound this ſtrife,

Enter one crying a Miracle.

Gloſt. What meanes this noyſe? Fellow, what Miracle do'ſt thou proclaime?

One. A Miracle, a Miracle.

Suffolke. Come to the King, and tell him what Miracle.

One. Forſooth, a blind man at Saint Albones Shrine, Within this halfe houre hath receiv'd his ſight, A man that ne're ſaw in his life before.

King. Now God be praiſ'd, that to beleeving Soules Gives Light in Darkeneſſe, Comfort in Deſpaire.

Enter the Mayor of Saint Albones, and his Brethren, bearing the man betweene two in a Chayre.

Card. Here comes the Towneſ-men, on Proceſſion, To preſent your Highneſſe with the man.

King. Great is his comfort in this Earthly Vale, Although by his ſight his ſinne be multiplyed.

Gloſt. Stand by, thy Maſters, bring him neere the King. His highneſſe pleaſure is to talke with him.

King. Good-fellow, tell us here the circumſtance, That we for thee may glorifie the Lord.

What, haſt thou beene long blind, and now reſtor'd?

Simp. Borne blind, and't pleaſe your Grace.

Wiſe. I indeed was he.

Suff. What Woman is this?

Wiſe. His Wife, and't like your Worſhip.

Gloſt. Haſt thou beene his Mother, thou could'ſt have better told.

King. Where wert thou borne?

Simp. At Barwicke in the North, and't like your Grace.

King. Poore ſoule, Gods goodneſſe hath beene great to thee: Let never Day nor Night unſhallowed paſſe, But ſtill remember what the Lord hath done.

Quee. Tell me, good-fellow, Cam'ſt thou here by Chance, or of Devotion, To this holy Shrine?

Simp. God knowes of pure Devotion, Being call'd a hundred times, and oftner, In my ſleepe, by good Saint Albon: Who ſaid; Symon, come: come offer at my Shrine, And I will helpe thee.

Wiſe. Moſt true, forſooth: And many time and oft my ſelfe have heard a Voyce, To call him ſo.

Card. What, art thou lame?

Simp. I, God Almighty helpe me.

Suff. How cam'ſt thou ſo?

Simp. A fall off of a Tree.

Wiſe. A Plum-tree, Maſter.

Gloſt. How long haſt thou beene blind?

Simp. O borne ſo, Maſter.

Gloſt. What, and would'ſt climbe a Tree?

Simp. But that in all my life, when I was a youth.

Wiſe. Too true, and bought his climbing very deare,

Gloſt. Maſte, thou lov'd'ſt Plummes well, that would'ſt venture ſo.

Simp. Alas, good Maſter, my Wife deſired ſome Damions, and made mee climbe, with danger of my Life.

Gloſt. A ſubtil Knave, but yet it ſhall not ſerve: Let me ſee thine Eyes, winck now, now open them, In my opinion, yet thou ſeeſt not well.

Simp. Yes Maſter, cleare as day, I thanke God and Saint Albon.

Gloſt. Say'ſt thou me ſo: what Colour is this Cloake of?

Simp. Red Maſter, Red as blood.

Gloſt. Why that's well ſaid: What Colour is my Gowne of?

Simp. Blacke forſooth, Coale-blacke, as Iet.

King. Why then, thou know'ſt what Colour Iet is of?

Suff. And yet I thinke, Iet did he never ſee.

Gloſt.

Gloſt. But Cloakes and Gownes, before this day, a many.

Wife. Never before this day, in all his life.

Gloſt. Tell me Sirrha, what's my Name?

Simp. Alas Maſter, I know not.

Gloſt. What's his Name?

Simp. I know not,

Gloſt. Nor his?

Simp. No indeed, Maſter.

Gloſt. What's thine owne Neme?

Simp. Saunder Simpcox, and if it pleaſe you, Maſter.

Gloſt. Then Saunder, ſit there,

the lying ſt Knaue in Chriſtendome.

If thou haſt bene borne blind,

Thou might'ſt as well have knowne all our Names,

As thus to name the ſeverall Colours we doe weare.

Sight may diſtinguiſh Colours :

But ſuddenly to nominate them all,

is impoſſible.

My Lords, Saint Albons here hath done a Miracle :

And would ye not thinke it, Cunning to be great,

That could reſtore this Cripple to his Legges againe?

Simp. O Maſter, that you could?

Gloſt. My Maſters of Saint Albons,
Have you not Beadles in your Towne,
And things call'd Whippes?

Mayor. Yes, my Lord, if it pleaſe your Grace.

Gloſt. Then ſend for one preſently.

Mayor. Sirrha, goe fetch the Beadle hither ſtraight.

Exit.

Gloſt. New fetch me a Stoole hither by and by.

Now Sirrha, if you meane to ſave your ſelfe from Whipping, leape me over this Stoole, and runne away.

Simp. Alas Maſter, I am not able to ſtand alone :
You goe about to torture me in vaine.

Enter a Beadle with Whippes.

Gloſt. Well Sir, we muſt have you find your Legges.
Sirrha Beadle, whippe him till he leape over that ſame Stoole.

Bead. I will, my Lord.

Come on Sirrha, off with your Doublet, quickly.

Simp. Alas Maſter, what ſhall I doe? I am not able to ſtand.

After the Beadle hath hit him once, he leapes over the Stoole, and runnes away : and they follow, and cry, A Miracle.

King. O God, ſeeſt thou this, and beareſt ſo long ;

Quee. It made me laugh, to ſee the Villaine runne.

Gloſt. Follow the Knaue, and take this Drab away.

Wife. Alas Sir, we did it for pure need.

Glo. Let them be whipt through every Market Towne
Till they come to Barwicke, from whence they came.

Exit.

Card. Duke Humfrey ha's done a Miracle to day.

Suff. True : made the Lame to leape and flye away.

Gloſt. But you have done more Miracles then I :
You made in a day, my Lord, whole Townes to flye.

Enter Buckingham.

King. What Tidings with our Couſin Buckingham?

Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to unfold :
A ſort of naughty perſons, lewdly bent,
Vnder the Countenance and Confederacy

Of Lady Eleanor, the Protector's Wife,
The Ring-leader and head of all this Rout,
Have practis'd dangerously againſt your State;
Dealing with Witches and with Conjurers,
Whom we have apprehended in the Fact,
Rayſing up wicked Spirits from under ground,
Demanding of King Henries Life and Death,
And other of your Highneſſe Privy Councell,
As more at large your Grace ſhall underſtand.

Card. And ſo my Lord Protector, by this meanes
Your Lady is forth-comming, yet at London.
This Newes I thinke hath turn'd your Weapons edge ;
'Tis like, my Lord, you will not keepe your houre.

Gloſt. Ambitious Church-man, leave to afflict my heart :
Sorrow and grieve have vanquiſht all my powers ;
And vanquiſht as I am, I yeeld to thee,
Or to the meanest Groome.

King. O God, what miſchiefes worke the wicked ones?
Heaping confuſion on their owne heads thereby.

Quee. Gloſter, ſee here the Tincture of thy Neſt,
And looke thy ſelfe be faultleſſe, thou wert beſt.

Gloſt. Madam, for my ſelfe, to heaven I doe appeale,
How I have lov'd my King, and Common-weale :
And for my Wife, I know not how it ſtands,
Sorry I am to heare what I have heard.

Noble ſhe is : but if ſhe have forgot
Honor and Vertue, and converſ't with ſuch,

As like to Pytch, deſile Nobility ;

I baniſh her my Bed, and Company,

And give her as a Prey to Law and Shame,
That hath diſ-honored Gloſters honeſt Name.

King. Well, for this Night we will repoſe us here :
To morrow toward London, backe againe,
To looke into this Buſineſſe thorowly,
And call theſe foule Offendors to their Anſweres ;
And poyle the Cauſe in Juſtice equall Scales, (vailes, Whoſe Beame ſtands ſure, whoſe rightfull cauſe pre-
Exeunt.

Enter Yorke, Salisbury, and Warwick.

Yorke. Now my good Lords of Salisbury and Warwick,
Our ſimple Supper ended, give me leave,
In this cloſe Walke, to ſatiſſie my ſelfe,
In craving your opinion of my Title,
Which is infallible, to Englands Crowne.

Salis. My Lord, I long to heare it at full.

Warw. Sweet Yorke begin : and if thy clayme be good,
The Nevills are thy Subjects to command.

Yorke. Then thus :

Edward the third, my Lords, had ſeven Sonnes :
The firſt, Edward the Blacke-Prince, Prince of Wales ;
The ſecond, William of Hatfield ; and the third,
Lionel, Duke of Clarence : next to whom,
Was John of Gaunt, the Duke of Lancaſter ;
The fifth, was Edward Langley, Duke of Yorke ;
The ſixt, was Thomas of Woodſtocke, Duke of Gloſter,
William of Windſor was the ſeventh, and laſt,
Edward the Blacke-Prince dyed before his Father,
And left behind him Richard, his onely Sonne,
Who after Edward the third's death, raignd King,
Till Henry Bullingbrooke, Duke of Lancaſter,
The eldeſt Sonne and Heire of John of Gaunt,
Crown'd by the Name of Henry the fourth,
Seiz'd on the Realme, depos'd the rightfull King,
Sent his poore Queene to France, from whence ſhe came,

And him to Pumfret ; where, as all you know,
Harmlesse King Richard was murdered traiterously:

Warw. Father, the Duke hath told the truth ;
Thus got the House of Lancaster the Crowne.

Torke. Which now they hold by force, and not by right:
For Richard, the first Sonnes Heire, being dead,
The issue of the next Sonne should have reign'd.

Salis. But William of Hatfield dyed without an Heire.

Torke. The third Sonne, Duke of Clarence,
From whose Line I clayme the Crowne,
Had Issue Philip, a Daughter,
Who married Edmond Mortimer, Earle of March:
Edmond had Issue, Roger, Earle of March ;
Roger had Issue, Edmond, Anne, and *Eliano*r.

Salis. This Edmond, in the Reigne of Bullingbrooke,
As I have read, layd clayme unto the Crowne,
And but for Owen Glendour, had beene King ;
Who kept him in Captivity, till he dyed.
But, to the rest.

Torke. His eldest Sister, Anne,
My Mother, being Heire unto the Crowne,
Marryed Richard, Earle of Cambridge,
Who was to Edmond Langley,
Edward the thirds fift Sonnes sonne ;
By her I clayme the Kingdome:
She then was Heire to Roger, Earle of March,
Who was the Sonne of Edmond Mortimer,
Who marryed Philip, sole Daughter
Vnto Lionel, Duke of Clarence.
So, if the issue of the elder Sonne
Succeed before the younger, I am King. (this?)

Warw. What plaine proceeding is more plaine then
Henry doth clayme the Crowne from John of Gaunt,
The fourth Sonne, Torke claymes it from the third:
Till Lionels issue fayles, his should not reigne.
It fayles not yet, but flourishes in thee,
And in thy Sonnes, faire slippes of such a Stocke.
Then Father Salisbury, kneele we together,
And in this private Plot be we the first,
That shall salute our rightfull Sovereigne
With honor of his Birth-right to the Crowne.

Both. Long live our Sovereigne Richard, Englands
King.

Torke. We thanke you Lords:
But I am not your King, till I be Crown'd,
And that my Sword be stayn'd
With heart-blood of the House of Lancaster:
And that's not suddenly to be perform'd,
But with advice and silent secrecy.
Doe you as I doe in these dangerous dayes,
Winke at the Duke of Suffolkes insolence,
At Beaufords Pride, at Somersees Ambition,
At Buckingham, and all the Crew of them,
Till they have snar'd the Shepheard of the Flocke,
That vertuous Prince, the good Duke Humfrey:
'Tis that they seeke ; and they, in seeking that,
Shall find their deaths, if Torke can prophecy.

Salisb. My Lord, breake we off ; we know your mind at full.

Warw. My heart assures me, that the Earle of Warwicke,
Shall one day make the Duke of Torke a King.

Torke. And Nevill, this I doe assure my selfe.
Richard shall live to make the Earle of Warwicke
The greatest man in England, but the King.

Exeunt.

Sound Trumpets. Enter the King and State, with Guard, to banish the Duchesse.

King. Stand forth Dame *Eliano*r Cobham,
Glosters Wife :

In sight of God, and us, your guilt is great,
Receive the sentence of the Law for sinne,
Such as by Gods Booke are adiudg'd to death.
You foure from hence to Prison, backe againe:
From thence, unto the place of Execution ;
The Witch in Smithfield shall be burnt to ashes,
And you three shall be strangled on the Gallows.
You Madam, for you are more Nobly borne,
Despoyled of your Honor in your Life,
Shall, after three dayes open Penance done,
Live in your Countrey here, in Banishment,
With Sir John Stanley, in the Ile of Man.

Elian. Welcome is Banishment, welcome were my Death.

Gloster. *Eliano*r, the Law thou seest hath judged thee,
I cannot iustifie whom the Law condemnes.
Mine eyes are full of teares, my heart of grieve.
Ah Humfrey, this dishonor in thine age,
Will bring thy head with sorrow to the ground.
I beseech your Majesty give me leave to goe ;
Sorrow would follace, and mine Age would cease.

King. Stay Humfrey, Duke of Gloster.
Ere thou goe, give up thy Staffe,
Henry will to himselfe Protector be,
And God shall be my hope, my stay, my guide,
And Lanthorne to my feete :

And goe in peace, Humfrey, no lesse below'd,
Then when thou wert Protector to thy King.

Quee. I see no reason, why a King of yecres
Should be to be protected like a Child;
God and King Henry governe Englands Realme:
Give up your Staffe, Sir, and the King his Realme.

Gloster. My Staffe ? Here, Noble Henry, is my Staffe:
As willingly doe I the same resigne,
As ere thy Father Henry made it mine ;
And even as willingly at thy feete I leave it,
As others would ambitiously receive it.
Farewell good King: when I am dead and gone,
May honorable Peace attend thy Throne.

Exit Gloster.

Quee. Why now is Henry King, and Margaret Queene,
And Humfrey, Duke of Gloster, scarce himselfe,
That beares so shrewd a mayme: two Pulls at once;
His Lady banisht, and a Limbe lopt off
This Staffe of Honor raught, there let it stand,
Where it best fits to be, in Henries hand.

Suff. Thus drowpes this lofty Pyne, & hangs his sprays
Thus *Eliano*r's Pride dyes in her youngest dayes.

Torke. Lords, let him goe. Please it your Majesty,
This is the day appointed for the Combat,
And ready are the Appellant and Defendant,
The Armorer and his Man, to enter the Lists,
So please your highnesse to behold the fight.

Quee. I, good my Lord: for purposely therefore Left I the Court, to see this Quarrell try'de.

King. A Gods Name see the Lyfts and all things fit,
Here let them end it, and God defend the right.

Torke. I never saw a fellow worse bestead,
Or more afraid to fight, then is the Appellant,
The servant of this Armorer, my Lords.

Enter

Enter at one Doore the Armorer and his Neighbors, drinking to him so much, that he is drunke; and he enters with a Drumme before him. and his Staffe, with a Sand-bagge fastened to it: and at the other Doore his Man, with a Drumme and Sand-bagge, and Prentices drinking to him.

1. Neighbor. Here Neighbour Horner, I drinke to you in a Cup of Sacke; and feare not Neighbor, you shall doe well enough.

2. Neighbor. And here Neighbour, here's a Cup of Charneco.

3. Neighbor. And here's a Pot of good Double-Beere Neighbor: drinke, and feare not your Man.

Armorer. Let it come ifaith, and Ile pledge you all, and a figge for Peter.

1. Pren. Here Peter, I drinke to thee, and be not afraid.

2. Pren. Be merry Peter, and feare not thy Master, Fight for credit of the Prentices.

Peter. I thanke you all: drinke, and pray for me, I pray you, for I thinke I have taken my last Draught in this World. Here Robin, and if I dye, I give thee my Aporne; and Will, thou shalt have my Hammer: and here Tom, take all the Money that I have. O Lord blesse me, I pray God, for I am never able to deale with my Master, he hath learnt so much fence already.

Salis. Come, leave your drinking, and fall to blowes. Sirrha, what's thy Name:

Peter. Peter forsooth.

Salis. Peter? what more?

Peter. Thumpe.

Salis. Thumpe? Then see thou thumpe thy Master well.

Armorer. Masters, I am come hither as it were upon my Mans instigation, to prove him a Knave, and my seife an honest man: and touching the Duke of Yorke, I will take my death, I never meant him any ill, nor the King, nor the Queene: and therefore Peter have at thee with a downe-right blow.

Tork. Dispatch, this Knaves tongue begins to double. Sound Trumpets, Alarum to the Combattants.

They fight, and Peter strikes him downe.

Armorer. Hold Peter, hold, I confesse, I confesse Treason.

Tork. Take away his Weapon: Fellow thanke God, and the good Wine in thy Masters way.

Peter. O God, have I overcome mine Enemie in this presence? O Peter, thou hast prevayl'd in right.

King. Goe, take hence that Traytor from our sight, For by his death we doe perceive his guilt, And God in Iustice hath reveal'd to us The truth and innocence of this poore fellow, Which he had thought to have murder'd wrongfully. Come fellow, follow us for thy Reward.

Exeunt.

Enter Duke Humfrey and his Men in Mourning Cloakes.

Gloster. Thus sometimes hath the brightest day a Cloud: And after Summer, evermore succeeds Barren Winter, with his wrathfull nipping Cold; So Cares and Ioyes abound, as Seasons fleet.

Sirs, what's a Clocke?

Serv. Tenne, my Lord.

Gloster. Tenne is the houre that was appointed me, To watch the comming of my punisht Duchesse: Vnneath may she endure the Flinty Streets, To treade them with her tender-feeling feet. Sweet Nell, ill can thy Noble Mind abrooke The abject People, gazing on thy face, With envious Lookes still laughing at thy shame, That erst did follow thy prowd Chariot-Wheelles, When thou didst ride in triumph through the streets. But soft, I thinke she comes, and Ile prepare My teare-stayn'd eyes, to see her Miseries.

Enter the Duchesse in a white Sheet, and a Taper burning in her hand, with the Sherife and Officers.

Serv. So please your Grace, we'll take her from the Sherife.

Gloster. No, stirre not for your lives, let her passe by.

Elian. Come you, my Lord, to see my open shame? Now thou do'st Penance too. Looke how they gaze, See how the giddy multitude doe point, And nodde their heads, and throw their eyes on thee. Ah Gloster, hide thee from their hatefull lookes, And in thy Closet pent up, rue my shame, And banne thine Enemies, both mine and thine.

Gloster. Be patient, gentle Nell, forget this griefe.

Elian. Ah Gloster, teach me to forget my selfe:

For whilst I thinke I am thy married Wife, And thou a Prince, Protector of this Land: Me thinks I should not thus be led along, May'd up in shame, with Papers on my backe, And follow'd with a Rabble, that rejoyce To see my teares, and heare my deepe-set groanes. The ruthlesse Flint doth cut my tender feet, And when I start, the envious people laugh, And bid me be advised how I treade.

Ah Humfrey, can I beare this shamefull yoake? Trowest thou, that ere Ile looke upon the World, Or count them happy, that enjoyes the Sunne? No: Darke shall be my Light, and Night my Day. To thinke upon my Pompe, shall be my Hell. Sometime Ile say, I am Duke Humfrees Wife, And he a Prince, and Ruler of the Land: Yet so he rul'd, and such a Prince he was, As he stood by, whilst I, his forlorne Duchesse, Was made a wonder, and a pointing stocke To every idle Rascall follower.

But be thou milde, and blush not at my shame, Nor stirre at nothing, till the Axe of Death Hang over thee, as sure it shortly will. For Suffolke, he that can doe all in all With her, that hatech thee and hates us all, And Yorke, and impious Beauford, that false Priest, Have all ym'd Bulshes to betray thy Wings, And flye thou how thou canst, they'll tangle thee, But feare not thou, untill thy foot be snar'd, Nor never seeke prevention of thy foes.

Gloster. Ah Nell, forbear: thou aymest all avry: I must offend, before I be attainted: And had I twenty times so many foes, And each of them had twenty times their power, All these could not procure me any scathe, So long as I am loyall, true, and crimelesse. Would'st have me rescue thee from this reproach?

Why yet thy scandall were not wipt away,
But I in danger for the breach of Law
Thy greatest helpe is quiet, gentle Nell :
I pray thee tort thy heart to patience,
These few dayes wonder will be quickly worne.

Enter a Herald.

Her. I summon your Grace to his Majesties Parliament
Holden at Bury, the first of this next Moneth,

Gloster. And my consent ne're ask'd herein before ?
This is close dealing. Well, I will be there.

My Nell, I take my leave; and Master Sherife,
Let not her Penance exceede the Kings Commission.

Sher. And't please you Grace, here my Commission
And Sir John Stanley is appointed now, (Itayes:
To take her with him to the Ile of Man.

Gloster. Must you, Sir John, protect my Lady here?

Stanley. So am I given in charge, may't please your Grace:

Gloster. Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray
You use her well: the World may laugh againe,
And I may live to doe you kindnesse, if you doe it her.
And to Sir John, farewell.

Eliau. What, gone my Lord, and bid me not farewell?

Gloster. Witnesse my teares, I cannot stay to speake.

Exit Gloster.

Eliau. Art thou gone too? all comfort goe with thee,
For none abides with me: my Joy, is Death:
Death, at whose Name I oft have beene afear'd,
Because I wish'd this Worlds eternity.

Stanley. I prethee goe, and take me hence,
I care not whither, for I begge no favour;
Onely convey me where thou art commanded.

Stan. Why, Madam, that is to the Ile of Man,
There to be us'd according to your State.

Eliau. That's bad enough, for I am but reproach:
And shall I then be us'd reproachfully?

Stan. Like to a Duchesse, and Duke Humfries Lady;
According to that State you shall be us'd.

Eliau. Sherife farewell, and better then I fare,
Although thou hast beene Conduct of my shame.

Sher. It is my Office, and Madam pardon me.

Eliau. I, I, farewell, thy Office is discharg'd:
Come Stanley, shall we goe?

Stan. Madam, your Penance done,
Throw off this Sheet,
And goe we to attyre you for our Journey.

Eliau. My shame will not be shifted with my Sheet:
No, it will hang upon my richest Robes,
And shew it selfe, attyre me how I can.
Goe, leade the way, I long to see my Prison. Exeunt.

Enter King, Queene, Cardinal, Suffolke, Torke, Buckingham, Salisbury, and Warwicke, to the Parliament.

King. I muse my Lord of Gloster is not come:
'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man,
What e're occasion keeps him from us now.

Quee. Can you not see? or will ye not observe
The strangenesse of his alter'd Countenance?
With what a Majesty he beares himselfe,
How insolent of late he is become,
How proud, how peremptory, and unlike himselfe.
We know the time since he was milde and affable,
And if we did but glance a farre-off Looke,
Immediately he was upon his Knece,

That all the Court admir'd him for submission.
But meet him now, and be it in the Morne,
When every one will give the time of day,
He knits his Brow, and shewes an angry Eye,
And passeth by with stiffe unbowed Knece,
Disdaining duty that to us belongs.
Small Curres are not regarded when they grinne,
But great men tremble when the Lyon rores,
And Humfrey is no little Man in England.
First note, that he is neere you in descent,
And should you fall, he is the next will mount.
Me seemeth then, it is no Pollicy,
Respecting what a rancorous mind he beares,
And his advantage following your decease,
That he should come about your Royall Person,
Or be admitted to your highnesse councill.
By flattery hath he wonne the Commons hearts:
And when he please to make Commotion,
'Tis to be fear'd they all will follow him.

Now 'tis the Spring, and Weedes are shallow-rooted,
Suffer them now, and they'll o're-grow the Garden,
And choake the Herbes for want of husbandry.

The reverent care I beare unto my Lord,
Made me collect these dangers in the Duke.

If it be fond, call it a Womans feare:

Which feare, if better Reasons can supplant,
I will subscribe, and say I wrong'd the Duke.
My Lord of Suffolke, Buckingham, and Torke.
Reprove my allegation, if you can,
Or else conclude my words effectually.

Suff. Well hath your highnesse scene into this Duke:

And had first beene put to speake my mind,
I thinke I should have told your Graces Tale.

The Duchesse, by his subornation,
Vpon my Life began her divelish practises:

Or if he were not privy to those Faults,
Yet by reputing of his high descent,

As next the King, he was successiue Heire,
And such high vaunts of his Nobility,

Did intigate the Bedlam braine-sicke Duchesse,
By wicked meanes to frame our Soveraignes fall.

Smooth runnes the Water, where the Brooke is deepe,
And in his simple shew he harbours Treason.

The Fox barkes not, when he would steale the Lambe.
No, no, my Soveraigne, Gloster is a man
Vnfounded yet, and full of deepe deceit.

Card. Did he not, contrary to forme of Law,
Devise strange deaths, for small offences done?

Torke. And did he not, in his Protectorship,
Levy great summes of Money through the Realme,

For Souldiers pay in France, and never sent it?
By meanes whereof, the Townes each day revolted.

Buck. Tut, these are petty faults to faults unknowne,
Which time will bring to light in smooth Duke Humfrey.

King. My Lords at once: the care you have of us,
To mowe downe Thornes that would annoy our Foot,
Is worthy praise: but shall I speake, my conscience,

Our Kinsman Gloster is as innocent,
From meaning Treason to our Royall Person,

As is the sucking Lambe, or harmlesse Dove:
The Duke is vertuous, milde, and too well given,

To dreame on evill, or to worke my downefall.

Quee. Ah what's more dangerous, then this fond affi-
Seemes he a Dove? his feathers are but borrow'd, (ance)
For he's disposed as the hatefull Raven.

Is he a Lambe? his Skinne is surely lent him,

For

For he's enclin'd as is the ravenous Wolves.
Who cannot steale a shape, that meanes deceit?
Take heed, my Lord, the welfare of us all,
Hangs on the cutting short that fraudfull man.

Enter Somerset.

Som. All health unto my gracious Sovereigne.

King. Welcome Lord Somerset: What Newes from France?

Som. That all your Interest in those Territories,
Is vtterly bereft you: all is lost.

King. Cold Newes, Lord Somerset: but Gods will be done.

Torke. Cold Newes for me: for I had hope of France,
As firmly as I hope for fertile England.
Thus are my Blossomes blasted in the Bud,
And Caterpillers eat my Leaves away:
But I will remedy this geare ere long,
Or sell my Title for a glorious Grave.

Enter Gloucester.

Gloucester. All happinesse unto my Lord the King:
Pardon, my Liege, that I have stay'd so long.

Suff. My Gloucester, know that thou art come too soone,
Vnlesse thou wert more loyal then thou art:
I doe arrest thee of high Treason here.

Gloucester. Well Suffolk, yet thou shalt not see me blush,
Nor change my Countenance for this Arrest:
A heart unspotted, is not easily daunted.
The purest Spring is not so free from mud,
As I am cleare from Treason to my Sovereigne.
Who can accuse me? wherein am I guilty?

Torke. 'Tis thought, my Lord,
That you tooke Bribes of France,
And being Protector, stay'd the Souldiers pay,
By meanes whereof, his highnesse hath lost France.

Gloucester. Is it but thought so?
What are they that thinke it?
I never rob'd the Souldiers of their pay,
Nor ever had one penny Bribe from France.
So helpe me God, as I have watcht the Night,
I Night by Night, in studying good for England.
That Doyt that ere I wrested from the King,
Or any Groat I hoorded to my use,
Be brought against me at my Tryall day.
No: many a Pound of mine owne proper store,
Because I would not taxe the needy Commons,
Have I dispursed to the Garrisons,
And never ask'd for restitution.

Card. It serves you well, my Lord, to say so much.

Gloucester. I say no more then truth, so helpe me God.

Torke. In your Protectorship, you did devise Strange Tortures for Offenders, never heard of,
That England was defam'd by Tyranny.

Gloucester. Why 'tis well knowne, that whiles I was Protector,
Pitty was all the fault that was in me:
For I should melt at an Offenders teares,
And lowly words were Ransome for their fault:
Vnlesse it were a bloody Murtherer,
Or foule felonious Theefe, that fleec'd poore passengers,
I neuer gave them condigne punishment.
Murder indeed, that bloody sinne, I tortur'd
Above the Felon, or what Trespas else.

Suff. My Lord, these faults are easie, quickly answer'd:
But mightier Crimes are lay'd unto your charge,
Whereof you cannot easily purge your selfe.

I doe arrest you in his highnesse Name,
And here commit you to my Lord Cardinall
To keepe, untill your further time of Tryall.

King. My Lord of Gloucester, 'tis my speciall hope,
That you will cleare your selfe from all suspence,
My Conscience tells me you are innocent.

Gloucester. Ah gracious Lord, these dayes are dangerous:
Vertue is choakt with foule Ambition,
And Charity chas'd hence by Rancours hand;
Foule Subornation is predominant,
And Equitie exil'd your highnesse Land.
I know, their Complot is to have my Life:
And if my death might make this Iland happy,
And prove the Period of their Tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingnesse.
But mine is made the Prologue to their Play:
For thousands more, that yet suspect no perill,
Will not conclude their plotted Tragedy.

Beaufords red sparkling eyes blab his hearts mallice,
And Suffolkes cloudy Brow his stormy hate;
Sharpe Buckingham unburthens with his tongue,
The envious Load that lyes upon his heart:
And dogged Torke, that reaches at the Moone,
Whose over-weening Arme I have pluckt backe,
By false accuse doth leuell at my life.

And you, my Sovereigne Lady, with the rest,
Causelesse have lay'd disgraces on my head,
And with your best endeavour have stirr'd up
My liefest Liege to be mine Enemy:
I, all of you have lay'd your heads together,
My selfe had notice of your Conventicles,
And all to make away my guiltlesse life.
I shall not want false Witnesse, to condemne me,
Nor store of Treasons, to augment my guilt:
The ancient Proverbe will be well effected,
A Staffe is quickly found to beat a Dogge.

Card. My Liege, his rayling is intollerable.
If those that care to keepe your Royall Person
From Treasons secret Knife, and Traytors Rage,
Be thus upbraided, chid, and rated at,
And the Offender granted scope of speech,
'Twill make them coole in zeale unto your Grace.

Suff. Hath he not twit our Sovereigne Lady here
With ignominious words, though Clarkely coucht?
As if she had suborned some to sweare
False allegations, to o'rethrow his state.

Que. But I can give the loser leave to chide.

Gloucester. Farre truer spoke then meant: I lose indeed,
Beshrew the winners, for they play'd me false,
And well such losers may have leave to speake.

Back. He'll wrest the sence, and hold us here all day.
Lord Cardinall, he is your Prisoner.

Card. Sirs, take away the Duke, and guard him sure.

Gloucester. Ah, thus King Henry throwes away his Crutch
Before his Legges be firme to beare his body.

Thus is the Shepherd beaten from thy side,
And Wolves are gnarling, who shall gnaw thee first.
Ah that may feare were false, ah that it were;

For good King Henry, thy decay I feare. Exit Gloucester.

King. My Lords, what to your wisdomes seemeth best,
Doe, or undoe, as if our selfe were here.

Queene. What, will your highnesse leave the Parliamment?

King. I Margaret: my heart is drown'd with griefe,
Whose flood begins to flowe within mine eyes;
My body round engyrt with misery:

For

For what's more miserable then Discontent?
 Ah Vnckle Humfrey, in thy face I see
 The Map of Honor, Truth, and Loyalty:
 And yet, good Humfrey, is the houre to come,
 That ere I prov'd thee false, or fear'd thy faith.
 What lowring Starre now envies thy estate?
 That these great Lords, and Margaret our Queene,
 Doe seeke subversion of thy harmelesse Life.
 Thou never didst them wrong, nor no man wrong:
 And as the Butcher takes away the Calfe,
 And binds the Wretch, and beats it when it strays,
 Bearing it to the bloody Slaughter-house;
 Even so remorselesse have they borne him hence:
 And as the Damme runnes lowing up and downe,
 Looking the way her harmelesse young one went,
 And can doe nought but wayle her Darlings losse;
 Even so my selfe bewayles good Glosters case
 With sad unhelpfull teares, and with dimn'd eyes;
 Looke after him, and cannot doe him good:
 So mighty are his vowed Enemies.
 His fortunes I will weepe, and 'twixt each groane,
 Say, who's a Traytor? Gloster he is none.

Quee. Free Lords:

Cold Snow melts with the Sunnes hot Beames:
Henry, my Lord, is cold in great Affaires,
 Too full of foolish pittie: and Glosters shew
 Beguiles him, as the mournfull Crocodile
 With sorrow snares relenting passengers;
 Or as the Snake, roll'd in a flowring Banke,
 With shining checker'd slough doth sting a Child,
 That for the beauty thinkes it excellent.
 Beleev me Lords, were none more wise then I,
 And yet herein I judge mine owne Wit good;
 This Gloster should be quickly rid the World,
 To rid us from the feare we have of him.

Card. That he should dye, is worthy pollicy,
 But yet we want a Colour for his death:
 'Tis meet he be condemn'd by course of Law.

Suff. But in my mind, that were no pollicy:
 The King will labour still to save his Life,
 The Commons haply rise, to save his Life;
 And yet we have but triviall argument,
 More then mistrust, that shewes him worthy death.

Yorke. So that by this, you would not have him dye.

Suff. Ah Yorke, no man alive, so faine as I.

Yorke. 'Tis Yorke that hath more reason for his death.
 But my Lord Cardinall, and you my Lord of Suffolke,
 Say as you thinke, and speake it from your Soules:
 Wer't not all one, an empty Eagle were set,
 To guard the Chicke from a hungry Kyte,
 As place Duke Humfrey for the Kings Protector?

Quee. So the poore Chicken should be sure of death,

Suff. Madam 'tis true: and wer't not madnesse then,
 To make the Fox surveyor of the Fold?
 Who being accus'd a crafty Murtherer,
 His guilt should be but idly posted over,
 Because his purpose is not executed.
 No: let him dye, in that he is a Fox,
 By nature prov'd an Enemy to the Flocke,
 Before his Chaps be stayn'd with Crimson blood,
 As Humfrey prov'd by Reason to my Liege.
 And doe not stand on Quillets how to slay him:
 Be it by Gynnes, by Snares, by Subtlety,
 Sleeping, or Waking, 'tis no matter how,
 So he be dead; for that is good deceit.
 Which mates him first, that first intends deceit.

Quee. Thrice Noble Suffolke, 'tis resolutely spoke.

Suff. Not resolute, except so much were done,
 For things are often spoke, and seldome meant,
 But that my heart accordeth with my tongue,
 Seeing the deed is meritorious,
 And to preserve my Sovereigne from his Foe,
 Say but the word, and I will be his Priest.

Card. But I would have him dead, my Lord of Suffolke,
 Ere you can take due Orders for a Priest:
 Say you consent, and censure well the deed,
 And Ile provide his Executioner,
 I tender so the safety of my Liege.

Suff. Here is my hand, the deed is worthy doing.

Quee. And so say I.

Yorke. And I: and now we three have spoke it,
 Is skills not gearly who impugnes our doome.

Enter a Poste.

Post. Great Lords, from Ireland am I come amaine,
 To signifie, that Rebels there are up,
 And put the Englishmen unto the Sword,
 Send Succours (Lords) and stop the Rage betime,
 Before the Wound doe grow incurable;
 For being Greene, there is great hope of helpe.

Card. A Breach that craves a quicke expedient stop;
 What counsaile give you in this weighty cause?

Yorke. That Somerfet be sent a Regent thither:
 'Tis meet that luckye Ruler be employ'd,
 Witnesse the fortune he hath had in France.

Som. If Yorke, with all his farre-fet pollicy,
 Had beene the Regent there, in stead of me,
 He never would have stay'd in France so long.

Yorke. No, not to lose it all, as thou hast done.
 I rather would have lost my life betimes,
 Then bring a burthen of dis-honour home,
 By staying there so long, till all were lost.
 Shew me one skarre, character'd on thy skinne.
 Mens flesh preserv'd so whole, doe seldome winne.

Quee. Nay then, this sparke will prove a raging fire,
 If Wind and Fuell be brought, to feed it with:
 No more, good Yorke; sweet Somerfet be still.
 Thy fortune, Yorke, hadst thou beene Regent there,
 Might haply have prov'd farre worse then his.

Yorke. What, worse then naught? nay, then a shame take all.

Somerfet. And in the number, thee, that witheth shame.

Card. My Lord of Yorke, try what your fortune is.
 Th'uncivill Kernes of Ireland are in Armes,
 And temper Clay with blood of Englishmen.
 To Ireland will you leade a Band of men,
 Collected choycely, from each County some,
 And try your hap against the Irishmen?

Yorke. I will, my Lord, so please his Majesty.

Suff. Why, our Authority is his consent,
 And what we doe establish, he confirms;
 Then, Noble Yorke, take thou this Taske in hand.

Yorke. I am content: Provide me Souldiers, Lords.
 Whiles I take order for mine owne affaires.

Suff. A charge, Lord Yorke, that I will see perform'd.
 But now returne we to the false Duke Humfrey.

Card. No more of him: for I will deale with him,
 Thathenceforth he shall trouble us no more:
 And so breake off, the day is almost spent,
 Lord Suffolke, you and I must talke of that event.

Yorke. My.

Torke. My Lord of Suffolke, within foureteene dayes
At Bristow I expect my Souldiers,
For there Ile ship them all for Ireland.

Suff. Ile see it truly done, my Lord of Torke. Exeunt.
Manet Torke.

Torke. Now Torke, or never, steale thy fearfull thoughts
And change misdoubt to resolution;
Be that thou hop'st to be, or what thou art;
Resigne to death, it is not worth th' enjoying:
Let pale-fac't feare keepe with the meane-borne man,
And finde no harbor in a Royall heart. (thought,
Faster then Spring-time showres, comes thought on
And not a thought, but thinkes on Dignity.
My braine, more busie then the labouring Spider,
Weaves tedious Snares to trap mine Enemies.
Well Nobles, well: 'tis politickely done,
To send me packing with an Host of men:
I feare me, you but warme the starved Snake,
Who cherisht in your breasts, will sting your hearts,
'Twas men I lackt, and you will give them me;
I take it kindly: yet be well assur'd,
You put sharpe Weapons in a mad-mans hands.
Whiles I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will stirre up in England some blacke Storme,
Shall blow ten thousand Soules to heaven, or hell:
And this fell Tempest shall not cease to rage,
Vntill the Golden Circuit on my head,
Like to the glorious Sunnes transparant Beames,
Doe calme the fury of this mad-bred Flawe.
And for a minister of my intent,
I have seduc'd a head-strong Kentishman,
John Cade of Ashford,
To make Commotion, as full well he can,
Vnder the Title of John Mortimer.
In Ireland have I seene this stubborne Cade
Oppose him/else against a Troupe of Kernes,
And fought so long, till that his thighes with Darts
Were almost like a sharpe-quill'd Porpentine:
And in the end being rescued, I have seene
Him caper upright, like a wilde Morisco,
Shaking the bloody Darts, as he his Bells.
Full often, like a shag-hayr'd crafty Kerne,
Hath he conversed with the Enemy,
And undiscover'd, come to me againe,
And given me notice of their Villanies.
This devill here shall be my substitute,
For that John Mortimer, which now is dead,
In face, in gate, in speech he doth resemble.
By this, I shall perceiue the Commons mind,
How they affect the House and Clayme of Torke.
Say he be taken, rackt, and tortured;
I know, no paine they can inflict upon him,
Will make him say, I mov'd him to those Armes.
Say that he thrive, as 'tis great like he will,
Why then from Ireland come I with my strength,
And reape the Harvest which that Rascall sow'd.
For Humphrey; being dead, as he shall be,
And Henry put apart: the next for me. Exit.

Enter two or three running over the Stage, from the Murder of Duke Humphrey.

1. Runne to my Lord of Suffolke: let him know
We have dispatcht the Duke, as he commanded.
2. Oh, that it were to doe; what have we done?
Didst ever heare a man so penitent? Enter Suffolke.
1. Heere comes my Lord.

Suff. Now Sirs, have you dispatcht this thing?

1. I, my good Lord, he's dead.

Suff. Why that's well said. Goe, get you to my house,
I will reward you for this venturous deed:
The King and all the Peeres are here at hand.
Have you layd faire the Bed? are all things well,
According as I gave directions?

1. 'Tis, my good Lord.

Suff. Away, be gone. Exeunt.

Enter the King, the Queene, Cardinall, Suffolke, Somerset, with Attendants.

King. Goe call our Vnckle to our presence straight:
Say, we intend to try his Grace to day,
If he be guilty, as 'tis published.

Suff. Ile call him presently, my Noble Lord. Exit.

King. Lords take your places; and I pray you all Proceed no straiter 'gainst our Vnckle Gloster,
Then from true evidence, of good esteeme;
He be approv'd in practise culpable.

Quee. God forbid any Malice should prevayle,
That faultlesse may condemne a Noble man:
Pray God he may acquit him of suspicion.

King. I thanke thee Nell, these wordes content me much.

Enter Suffolke.

How now? why look'st thou pale? why tremblest thou?
Where is our Vnckle? what's the matter, Suffolke?

Suff. Dead in his Bed, my Lord: Gloster is dead.

Quee. Marry God forsend.

Card. Gods secret Iudgement: I did dreame to Night,
The Duke was dumbe, and could not speake a word.

King sounds.

Quee. How fares my Lord? Helpe Lords, the King is dead.

Som. Reare up his Body, wring him by the Nose.

Quee. Run, goe, helpe, helpe: Oh Henry ope thine eyes

Suff. He doth revieve againe, Madam be patient.

King. Oh heavenly God.

Quee. How fares my gracious Lord?

Suff. Comfort my Sovereigne, gracious Henry com-
fore.

King. What, doth my Lord of Suffolke comfort me?
Came he right now to sing a Ravens Note,
Whose dismall tunne bereft my Vitall powres:
And thinkes he, that the chirping of a Wren,
By crying comfort from a hollow breast,
Can chase away the first conceived sound?
Hide not thy poyson with such sugred words,
Lay not thy hands on me: forbear I say,
Their touch affrights me as a Serpents sting.
Thou balefull Messenger, out of my sight:
Vpon thy eye-balls, murderous Tyranny
Sits in grim Majesty, to fright the World.
Looke not upon me, for thine eyes are wounding;
Yet doe not goe away; come Basiliske.
And kill the innocent gazer with thy sight:
For in the shade of death, I shall find joy;
In life, but double death, now Gloster's dead.

Quee. Why doe you rate my Lord of Suffolke thus?
Although the Duke was enemy to him,
Yet he most Christian-like laments his death;
And for my selfe, Foe as he was to me,
Might liquid teares, or heart-offending groanes,
Or blood-consuming sighes recall his Life;

I would be blind with weeping, sicke with grones,
Looke pale as Prim-rose with blood-drinking sighes,
And all to have the Noble Duke alive.

What know I how the world may deeme of me?
For it is knowne we were but hollow Friends:
It may be judg'd I made the Duke away.
So shall my name with Slanders tongue be wounded,
And Princes Courts be fill'd with my reproach:
This get I by his death: Aye me unhappy,
To be a Queene, and Crown'd with infamy.

King. Ah woe is me for Gloster, wretched man.

Quee. Be woe for me, more wretched then he is.
What, dost thou turne away, and hide thy face?
I am no loathsome Leaper, looke on me.
What? Art thou like the Adder waxen deafe?
Be poysonous too, and kill thy forlorne Queene.
Is all thy comfort shut in Glosters Tombe?
Why then Dame Eleanor was ne're thy joy.
Erect his Statue, and worship it,
And make my Image but an Ale-house signe.
Was I for this nye wrack'd upon the Sea,
And twice by aukward winde from Englands banke
Drove backe againe unto my Native Clime.
What boaded this? but well fore-warning winde
Did seeme to say, seeke not a Scorpions Nest,
Nor set no footing on this unkind Shore.
What did I then? But curst the gentle gusts,
And he that loos'd them forth their Brazen Caves,
And bid them blow towards Englands blessed shore,
Or turne our Sterne upon a dreadfull Rocke:
Yet Aeolus would not be a murtherer,
But left that hatefull office unto thee.
The pretty vaulting Sea refus'd to drowne me,
Knowing that thou wouldst have me drown'd on shore
With teares as salt as Sea, through thy unkindnesse.
The splitting Rockes cowl'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides,
Because thy flinty heart more hard then they,
Might in thy Pallace, perish Eleanor,
As farre as I could ken thy Chalky Cliffes,
When from thy Shore, the Tempest beate us backe,
I stood upon the Hatches in the storme:
And when the dasky sky, began to rob
My earnest-gaping-sight of the Lands view,
Iooke a coltly Jewell from my necke,
A Heart it was bound in with Diamonds,
And threw it towards thy Land: The Sea receiv'd it,
And so I wish'd thy body might my Heart:
And even with this, I lost faire Englands view,
And bid mine eyes be packing with my heart,
And call'd them blind and dusky Spectacles,
For losing ken of Albions wished Coast,
How often have I tempted Suffolkes tongue
(The agent of thy foule inconstancy)
To sit and watch me as Ascanius did,
When he to madding Dido would unfold
His Fathers Acts, commenc'd in burning Troy,
Am I not witcht like her? Or thou not false like him?
Aye me, I can no more: Dye Elinor,
For Henry weepes, that thou dost live so long.

Noyse within. Enter Warwicke, and many Commons.

War. It is reported, mighty Sovereigne,
That good Duke Humfrey Traiterously is murdered

By Suffolkes, and the Cardinall Beaufords meanes:

The Commons like an angry hive of Bees
That want their Leader, scatter up and downe,
And care not who they sting in his revenge.
My selfe have calm'd their spleenfull mutiny,
Vntill they heare the order of his death.

King. That he is dead good Warwicke, 'tis too true,
But how he dyed, God knowes, not Henry:
Enter his Chamber, view his breathlesse Corpes,
And comment then upon his sodaine death.

Warw. That shall I doe my Liege: Stay Salsbury
With the rude multitude, till I returne.

King. O thou that judgest all things, stay my thoughts:
My thoughts, that labour to perswade my soule,
Some violent hands were laid on Humfries life:
If my suspect be false, forgiue me God,
For judgement onely doth belong to thee:
Faine would I goe to chafe his paly lips,
With twenty thousand kisses, and to draine
Vpon his face an Ocean of salt teares,
To tell my love unto his dumbe deafe trunke,
And with my fingers feele his hand, unfeeling:
But all in vaine are these meane Obsequies,

Bed put forth.

And to survey his dead and earthly Image:
What were it but to make my sorrow greater?

Warw. Come hither gracious Sovereigne, view this body.

King. That is to see how deepe my grave is made,
For with his soule fled all my worldly solace;
For seeing him, I see my life in death.

War. As surely as my soule intends to live
With that dread King that tooke our state upon him,
To free us from his Fathers wrathfull curse,
I doe beleue that violent hands were laid
Vpon the life of this thrice-famed Duke.

Suff. A dreadfull Oath, sworne with a solemne tongue:
What instance gives Lord Warwicke for his vow?

War. See how the blood is setled in his face.
Oft have I seene a timely-parted Ghost,
Of ashy semblance, meager, pale, and bloodlesse,
Being all descended to the labouring heart,
Who in the Conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the same for aydance 'gainst the enemy,
Which with the heart there cooles, and ne're returneth,
To blush and beautifie the Cheeke againe.
But see, his face is blacke, and full of blood:
His eye-balles further out, than when he lived,
Staring full gaffly, like a strangled man:
His hayre up rear'd, his nostris stretcht with struggling:
His hands abroad display'd, as one that graspt
And tugg'd for Life, and was by strength subdu'd.
Looke on the sheets his haire (you see) is sticking,
His well proportion'd Beard, made ruffe and rugg'd,
Like to the Summers Corne by Tempest lodged:
It cannot be but he was murdred heere,
The least of all these signes were probable.

Suf. Why Warwicke, who should doe the D. to death?
My selfe and Beauford had him in protection,
And we, I hope sir, are no murtherers.

War. But both of you were vowed D. Humfries death.
And you (forsooth) had the good Duke to keepe:
Tis like you would not feast him like a friend,
And 'tis well scene, he found an enemy.

Quee. Then you belike suspect these Noblemen,
As guilty of Duke Humfries timelesse death.

War.

Warw. Who finds the Heyfer dead, and bleeding fresh,
And sees fast-by, a Butcher with an Axe,
But will suspect, 'twas he that made the slaughter?
Who finds the Partridge in the Puttockes Nest,
But may imagine how the Bird was dead,
Although the Kyte soare with unbloudied Beake?
Even so suspicious is this Tragedy.

Que. Are you the Butcher, Suffolke? where's your Knife?
Is Beauford tearm'd a Kyte? where are his Tallons?

Suff. I weare no Knife, to slaughter sleeping men.
But here's a vengefull Sword, rusted with eale,
That shall be scowred in his rancorous heart,
That slanders me with Murthers Crimson Badge.
Say, if thou dar'st, prow'd Lord of Warwickshire,
That I am faulty in Duke Humfries death.

Warw. What dares not Warwicke, if false Suffolke dare him?

Que. He dares not calme his contumelious Spirit,
Nor cease to be an arrogant Controller,
Though Suffolke dare him twenty thousand times.

Warw. Madam, be still: with reverence may I say,
For every word you speake in his behalfe,
Is slander to your Royall Dignity.

Suff. Blunt-witted Lord, ignoble in demeanor,
If ever Lady wrong'd her Lord so much,
Thy Mother tooke into her blamefull Bed,
Some sterne untutor'd Churle; and Noble Stocke
Was graft with Crab-tree slip, whose Fruit thou art,
And never of the Neuils Noble Race.

Warw. But that the guilt of Murther bucklers thee,
And I should rob the Deaths-man of his Fee,
Quitting thee thereby of ten thousand shames,
And that my Sovereignes presence makes me mild,
I would, false murd'rous Coward, on thy Knee
Make thee beg pardon for thy passed speech,
And say, it was thy Mother that thou meant'st.
That thou thy selfe wast borne in Bastardy;
And after all this fearefull Homage done,
Give thee thy hyre, and thy Soule to hell,
Pernicious blood-sucker of sleeping men.

Suff. Thou shalt be waking, while I shed thy blood,
If from this presence thou dar'st goe with me.

Warw. Away even now, or I will drag thee hence,
Unworthy though thou art, Ile cope with thee,
And doe some service to Duke Humfries Ghost.

Exeunt.

King. What stronger Brest-plate then a heart untainted?
Thrice is he arm'd, that hath his Quarrell just;
And he but naked, though lockt up in Steele,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted.

A noyse within.

Quee. What noyse is this?

Enter Suffolke and Warwicke, with their Weapons drawne.

King. Why how now Lords?
Your wrathfull Weapons drawne,
Here in our presence? Dare you be so bold?
Why what tumultuous clamor have we here?

Suff. The trayt'rous Warwicke, with the men of Bury,
Set all upon me, mighty Sovereigne.

Enter Salisbury.

Salis. Sirs stand apart, the King shall know your mind.

Dread Lord, the Commons send you word by me,
Vnlesse Lord Suffolke straight be done to death,
Or banished faire Englands Territories,
They will by violence teare him from your Pallace,
And torture him with grievous lingring death.
They say, by him the good Duke Humfrey dy'de:
They say, in him they feare your Highnesse death;
And meere instinct of Love and Loyalty,
Free from a stubborne opposite intent,
As being thought to contradict your liking,
Makes them thus forward in his Banishment.
They say, in care of your most Royall Person,
That if your Highnesse should intend to sleepe,
And charge, that no man should disturbe your rest,
In paine of your dislike, or paine of death;
Yet notwithstanding such a strait Edict,
Were there a Serpent seene, with forked Tongue,
That slyly glyded towards your Majesty,
It were but necessary you were wak't:
Least being suffer'd in that harmelesse slumber,
The mortall Worme might make the sleepe eternall.
And therefore doe they cry, though you forbid,
That they will guard you, where you will, or no,
From such fell Serpents as false Suffolke is;
With whose invenomed and farall sting,
Your loving Vnckle, twenty times his worth,
They say is shamefully bereft of life.

Commons within. An Answer from the King, my Lord of Salisbury.

Suff. 'Tis like the Commons, rude unpolisht hinds,
Could send such Message to their Sovereigne:
But you, my Lord, were glad to be imploy'd,
To shew how queint an Orator you are.
But all the Honor Salisbury hath wonne,
Is, that he was the Lord Embassador,
Sent from a sort of Tinkers to the King.

Within. An answer from the King, or wee will all breake in.

King. Goe Salisbury, and tell them all from me,
I thanke them for their tender loving care;
And had I not beene cited so by them,
Yet did I purpose as they doe entreat:
For sure, my thoughts doe hourelly prophecy,
Mischance unto my State by Suffolkes meanes.
And therefore by his Majesty I sweare,
Whose farre-unworthy Deputy I am,
He shall not breathe infection in this ayre,
But three dayes longer, on the paine of death.

Que. Oh Henry, let me pleade for gentle Suffolke.

King. Vngentle Queene, to call him gentle Suffolke.
No more I say: if thou do'st pleade for him,
Thou wilt but adde encrease unto my Wrath.
Had I but said, I would have kept my word;
But when I sweare, it is irrevocable:
If after three dayes space thou here bee'st found,
On any ground that I am Ruler of,
The World shall not be Ransome for thy Life.
Come Warwicke, come good Warwicke, goe with me,
I have great matters to impart to thee. Exit.

Que. Mischance and Sorrow goe along with you,
Hearts Discontent, and sowre Affliction,
Be play-fellowes to keepe you company:
There's two of you, the Devill made a third,
And three-fold Vengeance tend upon your steps.

Suff. Cease, gentle Queene, these Execrations,
And let thy Suffolke take his heavy leave.

Queene.

Quee. Fye Coward woman, and soft hearted wretch.
Hast thou not spirit to curse thine enemy?

Suff. A plague upon them : wherefore should I curse them?

Would curses kill, as doth the Mandrakes grone,
I would invent as bitter searching termes,
As curst, as harsh, and horrible to heare,
Deliver'd strongly through my fixed teeth,
With full as many signes of deadly hate,
As leane-fac'd envy in her loathsome cave.
My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words,
Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten Flint,
Mine haire be fixt an end, as one distract :
I, every joynt should seeme to curse and ban,
And even now my burthen'd heart would breake
Should I not curse them. Poyson be their drinke;
Gall, worse then Gall, the daintiest that they taste :
Their sweetest shade, a grove of Cypress Trees :
Their cheefest Prospect, murd'ring Basiliskes :
Their softest Touch, as smart as Lizards stings :
Their Musicke, frightfull as the Serpents hisse,
And boading Screech-Owles, make the Confort full.
All the foule terrors in darke seated heil——

Quee. Enough sweet Suffolke, thou torment'st thy selfe,
And these dread curses like the Sunne 'gainst glasse,
Or like an over-charged Gun, recoile,
And turnes the force of them upon thy selfe.

Suff. You bade me ban, and will you bid me leave?
Now by the ground that I am banish'd from,
Well could I curse away a Winters night,
Though standing naked on a Mountaine top,
Where byting cold would never let grasse grow,
And thinke it but a minute spent in sport.

Quee. Oh, let me intreat thee cease, give me thy hand,
That I may dew it with my mournfull teares ;
Nor let the raine of heaven wet this place,
To wash away my woefull Monuments.
Oh, could this kisse be printed in thy hand,
That thou might'st thinke upon these by the Seale,
Through whom a thousand sighes are breath'd for thee.
So get thee gone, that I may know my griefe,
'Tis but surmiz'd, whiles thou art standing by,
As one that surrets, thinking on a want :
I will repeale thee, or be well assur'd,
Adventure to be banished my selfe :
And banished I am, if but from thee.

Goe, speake not to me; even now be gone,
Oh goe not yet. Even thus, two friends condemn'd,
Embrace, and kisse, and take ten thousand leaves,
Loather a hundred times to part then dye;
Yet now farewell, and farewell life with thee.

Suff. Thus is poore Suffolke ten times banished,
Once by the King, and three times thrice by thee.
'Tis not the Land I care for, wer't thou hence,
A Wildernesse is populous enough,
So Suffolke had thy heavenly company :
For where thou art, there is the World it selfe,
With every severall pleasure in the World :
And where thou art not, Desolation.
I can no more : Livethou to joy thy life;
My selfe no joy in nought, but that thou liv'st.

Enter Vanx.

Quee. Whither goes Vanx so fast? what newes I prethee?

Vanx. To signifie unto his Majesty,
That Cardiuall Beauford is at point of death :
For sodainely a greivous sickenesse tooke him,
That makes him gaspe, and stare, and catch the ayre,
Blaspheming God, and cursing men on earth.
Sometime he talkes, as if Duke Humphries Ghost
Were by his side : Sometime, he calles the King,
And whispers to his pillow, as to him,
The secrets of his over-charged soule,
And I am sent to tell his Majesty,
That even now he cries aloud for him.

Quee. Goe tell this heavy Message to the King. Exit.
Aye me ! What is this World ? What newes are these?
But wherefore grieve I at an houres poore losse,
Omitting Suffolkes exile, my foules Treasure?
Why onely Suffolke mourne I not for thee?
And with the Southerne clouds, contend in teares?
Theirs for the earths encrease; mine for my sorrowes.
Now get thee hence, the King thou know'st is coming
If thou be found by me, thou art but dead.

Suff. If I depart from thee, I cannot live,
And in thy sight to dye, what were it else,
But like a pleasant slumber in thy lap?
Heere could I breathe my soule into the ayre,
As milde and gentle as the Cradle-babe,
Dying with mothers dugges betweene it's slips,
Where from thy sight, I should be raging mad.
And cry out for thee to close up mine eyes :
To have thee with thy lippes to stop my mouth :
So should'st thou either turne my flying soule,
Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
And then it liv'd in sweet Elizium.
To dye by thee, were but to dye in jest,
From thee to dye, were torture more then death :
Oh let me stay, befall what may befall.

Quee. Away : Though parting be a fretfull corosive,
It is applyed to a deathfull wound.
To France sweet Suffolke : Let me heare from thee :
For wheresoever thou art in this worlds Globe,
Ile have an Iris that shall find thee out.

Suff. I goe.

Quee. And take my heart with thee.

Suff. A Jewell lockt into the wofulst Caske,
That ever did containe a thing of worth,
Even as a splitted Barke, so sunder we :
This way fall I to death.

Quee. This way for me. Exeunt.

Enter the King, Salisbury, and Warwicke, to the Cardinall in bed.

King. How fare's my Lord ? Speake Beauford to thy Sovereigne.

Ca. If thou beest death, Ile give thee Englands Treasure, Enough to purchase such another Island,
So thou wilt let me live, and feele no paine.

King. Ah, what a signe it is of evil life,
Where death's approach is scene so terrible.

War. Beauford, it is thy Sovereigne speakes to thee.

Beau. Bring me unto my Triall when you will.
Dy'de he not in his bed ? Where should he dye?
Can I make men live where they will or no ?
Oh torture me no more, I will confesse.
Alive againe ? Then shew me where he is,
Ile give a thousand pound to looke upon him,
He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them.

Combe

Combe downe his haire; looke, looke, it stands upright,
Like Lime-twigs set to catch my winged soule:
Give me some drinke, and bid the Apothecarie
Bring the strong poyson that I bought of him.

King. Oh thou eternall moover of the heavens,
Looke with a gentie eye upon this Wretch,
Oh beate away the busie meddling Fiend,
That layes strong siege unto this wretches soule,
And from his bosome purge this blacke despaire.

War. See how the pangs of death do make him grin.

Sal. Disturbe him not, let him passe peaceably.

King. Peace to his soule, if Gods good pleasure be.
Lord Card'nall, if thou think'st on heavens blisse,
Hold up thy hand, make signall of thy hope.

He dyes and makes no signe: Oh God forgive him.

War. So bad a death, argues a monstrous life.

King. Forbeare to judge, for we are sinners all.
Close up his eyes, and draw the Curtaine close,
And let us all to Meditation.

Exeunt.

Alarum. Fight at Sea. Ordenance goes off.

Enter Lieutenant, Suffolke, and others.

Lieu. The gaudy blabbing and remorsefull day,
Is crept into the bosome of the Sea:
And now loud howling Wolves arouse the Iades
That dragge the Tragicke melancholy night:
Who with their drowfie, slow, and flagging wings
Cleape dead-mens graves; and from their misty lawes,
Breathe foule contagious darknesse in the ayre:

Therefore bring forth the Souldiers of our prize,
For whilst our Pinnace Anchors in the Downes,
Here shall they make their rancome on the sand,
Or with their blood staine this discoloured shore.
Master, this Prisoner freely give I thee.

And thou that art his Mate, make boote of this:
The other Walter Whismore is thy share.

1. Gent. What is my rancome Master, let me know.

Ma. A thousand Crownes, or else lay down your head.

Ma. And so much shall you give, or off goes yours.

Lieu. What thinke you much to pay 2000. Crownes,
And beare the name and port of Gentlemen?

Cut both the Villaines throat, for dye you shall:

The lives of those which we have lost in fight,

Be counter-poyts'd with such a pettie summe.

1. Gent. He give it sir, and therefore spare my life.

2. Gent. And so will I, and write home for it straight.

Whism. I lost mine eye in laying the prize aboard,

And therefore to revenge it, shalt thou dye,

And so should these, if I might have my will.

Lieu. Be not so rash, take rancome, let him live.

Suf. Looke on my George, I am a Gentleman,

Rate me at what thou wilt, thou shalt be payed.

Whis. And so am I: my name is Walter Whismore.

How now? why starts thou? what doth death affright?

Suf. Thy name affrights me, in whose sound is death:

A cunning man did calculate my Birth,

And told me that by water I should dye:

Yet let not this make thee be bloody-minded,

Thy name is Gualtier, being rightly sounded.

VV. Gualtier or VValter, which it is I care not,

Never yet did base dishonour blurre our name,

But with our sword we wip'd away the blot.

Therefore, when Merchant-like I sell revenge,

Broke be my sword, my Armes torne and defac'd,

And I proclaim'd a Coward through the world,

Suf. Stay Whismore, for thy Prisoner is a Prince,
The Duke of Suffolke, William de la Pole.

Whis. The Duke of Suffolke, muffled up in ragges?

Suf. I, but these raggs are no part of the Duke.

Lieu. But Iove was never slaine as thou shalt be,
Obscure and lowlie Swaine, King Henries blood.

Suf. The honourable blood of Lancaster
Must not be shed by such a jaded Groome:
Hast thou not kist thy hand, and held my firrop?
Bare-headed plodded by my foot-cloth Mule,
And thought thee happy when I thooke my head.

How often hast thou waited at my cup,
Fed from my Trencher, kneel'd downe at the boord,
When I have feasted with Queene Margaret?
Remember it, and let it make thee Crest-faine,
I, and alay this thy abortive Pride:

How in our voiding Lobby hast thou stood,

And duly waited for my comming forth?

This hand of thine hath writ in thy behalfe,

And therefore shall it charme thy riotous tongue.

Whis. Speake Captaine, shall I stab the forlorn Swaine?

Lieu. First let my words stab him, as he hath me.

Suf. Base slave, thy words are blunt, and so art thou.

Lieu. Convey him hence, and on our long boats side,
Strike off his head. Suf. Thou dar'st not for thy owne.

Lieu. Poolo, Sir Poolo? Lord,

I kennell, puddle, sinke, whose filth and durt

Troubles the silver Spring, where England driakes:

Now will I dam up this thy yawning mouth,

For swallowing the Treasure of the Realme.

Thy lips that kist the Queene, shall sweepe the ground:

And thou that siml'dst at good Duke Humfries death,

Against the senselesse windes shalt grin in vaine,

Who in contempt shall hisse at thee againe.

And wedded be thou to the Haggies of heil,

For daring to affye a mighty Lord

Vnto the daughter of a worthlesse King,

Having neither Subject, Wealth, nor Diadem:

By diuelish policy art thou growne great,

And like ambitious Sylla over-gor'd,

With gobbets of thy Mother-bleeding heart.

By thee Anjou and Maine were sold to France.

The false revolting Normans thorough thee,

Disdaine to call us Lord, and Piccardie

Hath slaine their Governors, surpriz'd our Forts,

And sent the ragged Souldiers wounded home:

The Princely Warwicke, and the Nevils all,

Whose dreadfull swords were never drawne in vaine,

As hating thee, and rising up in Armes.

And now the House of Yorke thrust from the Crowne,

By shamefull murder of a guiltlesse King,

And lofty proud incroaching tyranny,

Burnes with revenging fire, whose hopefull colours

Advance our halfe-fac'd Sunne striving to shine;

Vnder the which is writ, Inuitis nubibus.

The Commons heere in Kent are up in armes,

And to conclude, Reproach and Beggerie,

Is crept into the Pallace of our King,

And all by thee; away convey him hence.

Suf. O that I were a God, to shoot forth Thunder

Vpon these paltry, servile, abject Drudges:

Small things make base men proud. This Villaine heere,

Being Captaine of a Pinnace, threats more

Then Bargulus the strong Illyrian Pyrate.

Drones sucke not Eagles blood, but rob Bee-hives;

It is impossible that I shal'd dye

By such a lowly Vassall as thy selfe.

Thy words move Rage, and not remorse in me :

I goe of Message from the Queene to France :

I charge thee waite me safely crosse the Channell.

Lien. Water : W. Come Suffolke, I must waite thee to thy death.

Suf. Gelidus timor occupat artus, it is thee I feare.

Wal. Thou shalt have cause to feare before I leave thee.

What, are ye danted now? Now will ye stoope?

i. Gent. My gracious Lord intreat him, speak him fair.

Suf. Suffolkes Imperiall tongue is sterne and rough :
Vs'd to command, untaught to pleade for favour.

Farre be it, we should honour such as these

With humble suite : no, rather let my head

Stoope to the blocke, then these knees bow to any,

Save to the God of heaven; and to my King:

And sooner dance upon a bloody pole,

Then stand uncover'd to the Vulgar Groome.

True Nobility, is exempt from feare :

More can I beare, then you dare execute.

Lien. Hale him away, and let him talke no more :

Come Souldiers, shew what cruelty ye can.

Suf. That this my death may never be forgot.

Great men oft dye by vilde Bezonians.

A Romane Sworder, and Bandetto slave

Murder'd sweet Tully. Brutus Bastard hand

Stab'd Julius Caesar. Savage Islanders

Pompey the Great, and Suffolke dyes by Pyrats.

Exit Walter with Suffolke.

Lien. And as for these whose ransome we have set,

It is our pleasure one of them depart :

Therefore come you with us, and let him go.

Exit Lieutenant, and the rest.

Manet the first Gent. Enter Walter with the body.

Wal. There let his head, and livelesse bodie lye,

Vntill the Queene his Mistris bury it. Exit Walter.

i. Gent. O barbarous and bloody spectacle,

His body will I beare unto the King :

If he revenge it not, yet will his Friends,

So will the Queene, that living, held him deere. Exit.

Enter Benis, and Iohn Holland.

Benis. Come and get thee a sword, though made of a
Lath, they have bene up these two dayes.

Hol. They have the more neede to sleepe now then:

Benis. I tell thee, Iacke Cade the Cloathier, meanes to dresse the Common-wealth and turne it, and set a new nap upon it.

Hol. So he had need, 'tis thred-bare. Well, I say, it was never merrie world in England, since Gntlemen came up.

Benis. O miserable Age: Vertue is not regarded in Handy-crafts men.

Hol. The Nobilitie thinke scorne to goe in Leather Aprons.

Benis. Nay more, the Kings Councell are no good Workemen.

Hol. True: and yet it is said, Labour in thy Vocation:
which is as much to say, as let the Magistrates be laboring men, and therefore should we be Magistrates.

Benis. Thou hast hit it: for there's no better signe of a brave minde, then a hard hand.

Hol. I see them, I see them: There's Bests Sonne, the Tanner of Wingham.

Benis. He shall have the skinnies of our enemies, to make Dogges Leather of.

Hol. And Dicke the Butcher.

Benis. Then is fin stricke downe like an Oxe, and in-quities throte cut like a Calfe.

Hol. And Smith the Weaver.

Ben. Argo, their thred of life is spun.

Hol. Come, come, let's fall in with them.

Drumme. Enter Cade, Dicke Butcher, Smith the Weaver, and a Sawyer, with infinite numbers.

Cade. We Iohn Cade, so term'd of our supposed Father.

But. Or rather of stealing a Cade of Herrings.

Cade. For our enemies shall faile before us, inspired with the spirit of putting down Kings and Princes. Command silence.

But. Silence.

Cade. My Father was a Mortimer.

But. He was an honest man, and a good Bricklayer.

Cade. My mother a Plantagenet.

Butch. I knew her well, she was a Midwife.

Cade. My wife descended of the Lacies.

But. She was indeed a Pedlers daughter, and sold many Laces.

Weaver. But now of late, not able to travell with her furr'd Packe, she washes buckes here at home.

Cade. Therefore am I of an honorable house.

But. I by my faith the field is honourable, and there was he borne, under a hedge: for his Father had never a house but the Cage.

Cade. Valiant I am.

Weaver. A must needs, for beggery is valiant.

Cade. I am able to endure much.

But. No question of that: for I have seene him whip three Market dayes together.

Cade. I feare neither sword, nor fire.

Wea. He need not feare the sword, for his Coate is of proofe.

But. But me thinkes he should stand in feare of fire, being burnt i'th hand for stealing of Sheepe.

Cade. Be brave then, for your Captaine is Brave, and Vowes Reformation. There shall be in England, seven halfe peny Loaves sold for a peny: the three hoop'd pot, shall have ten hoopcs, and I will make it Felony to drinke small Beere. All the Realme shall be in Common, and in Cheapside shall my Palfrey go to grasse: and when I am
King, as King I will be.

All. God save your Majestie.

Cade. I thanke you good people. There shall bee no mony, all shall eate and drinke on my score, and I will apparrell them all in one Livery, that they may agree like Brothers, and worship me their Lord.

But. The first thing we do, let's kill all the Lawyers.

Cade. Nay, that I meane to do. Is not this a lamentable thing, that of the skin of an innocent Lambe should be made Parchment; that Parchment being scribeld ore, should undoe a man. Some say the Bee stings, but I say,
'tis the Bees wax: for I did but seale once to a thing, and I was never my owne man since. How now? Who's there?

Enter a Clarke.

Weaver. The Clarke of Chattam: hee can write and reade, and cast accompt.

Cade. O monstrous!

Wea. We tooke him setting boyes Coppies.

Cade. Here's a Villaine.

Wea. Ha's a Booke in his pocket with red Letters in't.

Cade. Nay then he is a Conjuror.

But. Nay, he can make Obligations, and write Court hand.

Cade. I am sorry for't: The man is a proper man of mine Honor: unlesse I finde him guilty, he shall not die. Come hither sirrah, I must examine thee: What is thy name?

Clarke. Emannell.

But. They use to write it on the top of Letters: 'Twill go hard with you.

Cade. Let me alone: Dost thou use to write thy name? Or hast thou a marke to thy selfe, like an honest plain dealing man?

Clarke. Sir I thanke God, I have bin so well brought up, that I can write my name.

All. He hath confest: away with him: he is a Villaine and a Traitor.

Cade. Away with him I say: Hang him with his Pen and Inke-horne about his necke.

Exit one with the Clarke

Enter Michaell.

Miob. Where's our Generall?

Cade. Heere I am thou particular fellow.

Mich. Fly, fly, fly, Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the Kings Forces.

Cade. Stand villaine, stand, or Ile fell thee downe: he shall be encountred with a man as good as himselfe. He is but a Knight, is a?

Mich. No.

Cade. To equall him I will make my selfe a knight presently; Rise up Sir Iohn Mortimer. Now have at him.

Enter Sir Humphrey Stafford, and his Brother, with Drum and Soldiers.

Staf. Rebellious Hinds, the filth and scum of Kent, Mark'd for the Gallowes; Lay your Weapons downe, Home to your Cottages: forsake this Groome. The King is mercifull, if you revolt.

Bro. But angry, wrathfull, and inclin'd to blood, If you go forward: therefore yeeld, or dye.

Cade. As for these silken-coated slaves I passe not, It is to you good people, that I speake, Over whom (in time to come) I hope to reigne: For I am rightfull heyre unto the Crowne.

Staf. Villaine, thy Father was a Playsterer, And thou thy selfe a Sheareman, art thou not?

Cade. And Adam was a Gardiner.

Bro. And what of that?

Cade. Marry, this Edmond Mortimer Earle of March, married the Duke of Clarence daughter, did he not?

Staf. I sir.

Cade. By her he had two Children at one birth.

Bro. That's false.

Cade. I, there's the question; But I say, 'tis true: The elder of them being put to nurse, Was by a begger-woman stolne away, And ignorant of his birth and parentage, Became a Bricklayer, when he came to age. His sonne am I, deny it if you can.

But. Nay, 'tis too true, therefore he shall be King.

Wea. Sir, he made a Chimney in my Fathers house, and the bricke are alive at this day to testifie it: therefore deny it not.

Staf. And will you credit this base Drudges Wordes, that speakes he knowes not what?

All. I marry will we, therefore get you gone.

Bro Iacke Cade, the D. of Yorke hath taught you this.

Cade. He lyes, for I invented it my selfe. Go too Sirrah, tell the King from me, that for his Fathers sake Henry the fift, (in whose time boyes went to Span-counter for French Crownes) I am content he shall reigne, but Ile be Protector over him.

Butcher. And furthermore wee'le have the Lord Sayes head, for selling the Dukedome of Maine.

Cade. And good reason: for thereby is England main'd And faine to goe with a staffe, but that my puissance holds it up, Fellow-Kings, I tell you, that that Lord Say hath gelded the Commonwealth, and made it an Eunuch: and more then that, he can speake French, and therefore he is a Traitor.

Staf. O grosse and miserable ignorance.

Cade. Nay answer if you can: The Frenchmen are our enemies: go too then: I ask but this: Can he that speaks with the tonge of an enemy, be a good Councillour, or no?

All. No, no, and therefore wee'l have his head.

Bro. Well, seeing gentle words will not prevayle, Assaile them with ths Army of the King.

Staf. Herald away, and throughout every Towne, Proclaime them Traytors that are up with Cade, That those which flye before the battell ends, May even in their wives and Childrens sight, Be hang'd up for example at their doores: And you that be the Kings friends follow me. Exit.

Cade. And you that love the Commons follow me: Now shew your selves men, 'tis for Liberty. We will not leave one Lord, one Gentleman: Spare none, but such as go in clouted shooen, For they are thrifty honest men, and such As would (but that they dare not) take our parts.

But. They are are all in order, and march toward us.

Cade. But then are we in order, when we are most out of order. Come, march forward.

Alarums to the fight, wherein both the Staffords are slaine.
Enter Cade and the rest.

Cade. Where's Dicke, the Butcher of Ashford?

But. Heere sir.

Cade. They fell before thee like sheepe and Oxen, and thou behaved'st thy selfe, as if thou hadst bene in thine owne Slaughter-house: Therefore thus wil I reward thee, the Lent shall bee as long againe as it is, and thou shalt have a License to kill for a hundred lacking one.

But. I desire no more.

Cade. And to speake truth, thou deserv'st no lesse. This Monument of the victorie will I beare, and the bodies shall be dragg'd at my horse heeles, till I do come to London, where we will have the Maiors sword born before us.

But. If we meane to thrive, and do good, breake open the Gaoles, and let out the Prisoners.

Cade. Feare not that I warrant thee. Come, let's march towards London. Exeunt.

Enter the King with a Supplication, and the Queene with Suffolkes head, the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Say.

Queene. Oft have I heard that greefe softens the mind, And

And makes it fearefull and degenerate,
Thinke therefore on revenge, and cease to weepe.
But who can cease to weepe, and looke on this?
Here may his head lye on my throbbing brest:
But where's the body that I should imbrace?

Buc. What answer makes your Grace to the Rebels Supplication?

King. Ile send some holy Bishop to intreate:
For God forbid, so many simple soules
Should perish by the Sword. And I my selfe,
Rather then bloody warre shall cut them short,
Will parly with Iacke Cade their Generall.
But stay, Ile reade it over once againe.

Qu. Ah barbarous villaines: Hath this lovely face,
Rul'd like a wandring Plannet over me,
And could it not inforce them to relent,
That were unworthy to behold the same?

King. Lord Say, Iacke Cade hath sworne to have thy head.

Say. I, but I hope your Highnesse shall have his.

King. How now Madam?
Still lamenting and mourning for Suffolkes death?
I feare me (Love) if that I had beene dead,
Thou would'st not halfe have mourn'd so much for me.

Qu. No my Love, I should not mourne, but dye for thee.

Enter a Messenger.

King. How now? What newes? Why com'st thou in such haste?

Mes. The Rebels are in Southwarke: Fly my Lord:
Iacke Cade proclaimes himselfe Lord Mortimer, Descended from the Duke of Clarence house,
And calls your Grace Vsurper, openly,
And vowes to Crowne himselfe in Westminster.
His Army is a ragged multitude
Of Hinds and Pezants, rude and mercilesse:
Sir Humphrey Stafford, and his Brothers death,
Hath given them heart and courage to proceede:
All Schollers, Lawiers, Courtiers, Gentlemen,
They call false Catterpillers, and intend their death.

King. Oh gracelesse men: they know not what they do.

Buc. My gracious Lord, retire to Killingworth,
Vntill a power be rais'd to put them downe.

Qu. Ah were the Duke of Suffolke now alive,
These Kentish Rebels should be soone appeas'd.

King. Lord Say, the Traitors hate thee,
Therefore away with us to Killingworth.

Say. So might your Graces person be in danger:
The sight of me is odious in their eyes:
And therefore in this City will I stay,
And live alone as secret as I may.

Enter another Messenger.

Mes. Iacke Cade hath gotten London-bridge,
The Citizens flye him and forsake their houses:
The Rascall people, thirsting after prey,
Ioynie with the Traitor, and they joyntly sweare
To spoyle the City, and your Royall Court.

Buc. Then linger not my Lord, away, take horse.

King. Come Margaret, God our hope will succour us.

Qu. My hope is gone, now Suffolke is deceast.

King. Farewell my Lord, trust not to Kentish Rebels.

Buc. Trust no body for feare you be betrayed.

Say. The trust I have, is in mine innocence,

And therefore am I bold and resolute.

Exeunt.

Enter Lord Scales upon the Tower walking. Then enter two or three Citizens below.

Scales. How now? Is Iacke Cade slaine?

1. Cit. No my Lord, nor likely to be slaine:
For they have wonne the Bridge,
Killing all those that withstand them:
The L. Maior craves ayd of your Honor from the Tower
To defend the City from the Rebels.

Scales. Such ayd as I can spare you shall command,
But I am troubled heere with them my selfe.
The Rebels have assay'd to win the Tower.
But get you into Smithfield, and gather head,
And thither I will send you Mathew Goffe.
Fight for your King, your Country, and your Lives,
And so farewell, for I must hence againe.

Exeunt.

Enter Iacke Cade and the rest, and strikes his staffe on London stone.

Cade. Now is Mortimer Lord of this City,
And heere sitting upon London Stone,
I charge and command, that of the Cities cost
The pissing Conduit run nothing but Clarret Wine
The first yeere of our raigne.
And now henceforward it shall be Treason for any,
That calles me other then Lord Mortimer.

Enter a Souldier running.

Soul. Iacke Cade, Iacke Cade.

Cade. Knocke him downe there.

They kill him.

But. If this Fellow be wise, hee'l never call yee *Iacke
Cade* more, I thinke he hath a very faire warning.

Dicke. My Lord, there's an Army gathered together in Smithfield.

Cade. Come, then let's go fight with them:
But first, go and set London Bridge on fire,
And if you can, burne downe the Tower too.
Come, let's away.

Exeunt omnes.

Alarums. Mathew Goffe is slaine, and all the rest,
Then enter Iacke Cade, with his Company,

Cade. So firs: now go some and pull down the Savoy:
Others to'th Innes of Court, downe with them all.

But. I have a suit unto your Lordship.

Cade. Be it a Lordshippe, thou shalt have it for that word.

But. Onely that the Lawes of England may come out of your mouth.

John. Masse 'twill be sore Law then, for he was thrust in the mouth with a Speare, and 'tis not whole yet.

Smith. Nay John, it will be stinking Law, for his breath stinkes with tosted Cheefe.

Cade. I have thought upon it, it shall bee so. Away, burne all the Records of the Realme, my mouth shall bee
the Parliament of England.

John. Then we are like to have biting Statutes
Vnlesse his teeth be pull'd out.

Cade. And hence-forward all things shall be in Common.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My Lord, a prize, a prize, heeres the Lord Say, which sold the Townes in France, He that made us pay one and twentie Fifteenes, and one shilling to the pound, the last Subsidie.

Enter

Enter George with the Lord Say.

Cade. Well, he shall be beheaded for it tentimes: Ah thou Say, thou Surge, nay thou Buckram Lord, now art thou within point-blanke of our Iurisdiction Regall. What canst thou answer to my Majesty, for giving up of Normandie unto Mounfier Basimecu, the Dolphin of France? Be it knowne unto thee by these presence, even the presence of Lord Mortimer, that I am the Beesome that must sweepe the Court cleane of such filth as thou art: Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the Realme, in erecting a Grammar Schoole: and whereas before, our Fore-fathers had no other Bookes but the Score and the Tally, thou hast caused printing to be us'd, and contrary to the King, his Crowne, and Dignity, thou hast built a Paper-Mill. It will bee proved to thy Face, that thou hast men about thee, that usually talke of a Nowne and a Verbe, and such abominable wordes, as no Christian eare can endure to heare. Thou hast appointed Iustices of Peace, to call poore men before them, about matters they were not able to answer. Moreover, thou hast put them in prison, and because thy could not reade, thou hast hang'd them, when (indeed) onely for that cause they have beene most worthy to live. Thou dost ride on a foot-cloth, dost thou not?

Say. What of that?

Cade. Marry, thou ought'st not to let thy horse weare a Cloake, when honest men then thou go in their Hole and Doublets.

Dicke. And worke in their shirt too, as my selfe for example, that am a butcher.

Say. You men of Kent.

Dic. What say you of Kent.

Say. Nothing but this: 'Tis bona terra, mala gens.

Cade. Away with him, away with him, he speakes Latine.

Say. Heare me but speake, and beare me wher'e you will:

Kent in the Commentaries Cesar writ,
Is term'd the civill place of all this Isle:
Sweet is the Country, because full of Riches,
The People Liberall, Valiant, Active, Wealthy,
Which makes me hope thou art not void of pittie.
I sold not Maine, I lost not Normandie,
Yet to recover them would lose my life:
Iustice with favour have I alwayes done,
Prayers and Teares have mov'd me, Gifts could never;
When have I ought exacted at your hands?
Kent to maintaine, the King, the Realme and you,
Large gifts have I bestow'd on learned Clarkes,
Because my Booke prefer'd me to the King.
And seeing Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the Wing wherewith we flye to heaven,
Vnlesse you be possesst with divellish spirits,
You cannot but forbear to murder me:
This Tongue hath parlied unto Forraigne Kings
For your behoofe.

Cade. Tut, when struck'st thou one blow in the field?

Say. Great men have reaching hands: oft have I struck Those that I neve saw, and strucke them dead.

Geo. O monstrous Coward! What, to come behinde Folkes?

Say. These cheeks are pale with watching for your good.

Cade. Give him a box o'th'eare, and that will make'em red againe.

Say. Long sitting to determine poore mens causes, Hath made me full of sicknesse and discaies.

Cade. Ye shall have a hempen Candle then, & the help of a hatchet.

Dicke. Why dost thou quiver man?

Say. The Palsie, and not feare provokes me.

Cade. Nay he noddles at us, as who should say, Ile be even with you. Ile see if his head will stand steddier on a pole, or no: Take him away and behead him.

Say. Tell me: wherein have I offended moit?

Have I affected wealth, or honor? Speake.

Are my Chelsts fill'd up with extorted Gold?

Is my apparrell sumptuous to behold?

Whom have I injur'd, that ye seeke my death?

These hands are free from guiltlesse bloodshedding,

This brest from harbouring foule deceitfull thoughts.

O let me live.

Cade. I feele remorse in my selfe with his words: but Ile bridle it: he shall dye, and it be but for pleading so well for his life. Away with him, he ha's a Familiar under his Tongue, he speake not a Gods name. Go, take him away I say, and strike off his head presently and then breake into his Sonne in Lawes house, Sir James Cromer, and strike off his head, and bring them both upon two poles hither.

All. It shall be done.

Say. Ah Countymen; If when you make your prai'rs, God should be so obdurate as your selves:

How would it fare with your departed soules?

And therefore yet relent, and save my life.

Cade. Away with him, and do as I command ye: the proudest Peere in the Realme, shall not weare a head on his shoulders, unlesse he pay me tribute: there shall not a maid be married, but she shall pay to me her Mayden-head ere they have it: Men shall hold of mee in Capite. And we charge and command, that their wives be as free as heart can wish, or tongue can tell.

Dicke. My Lord,
When shall we go to Cheapside, and take up commodities upon our billes?

Cade. Marry presently.

All. O brave.

Enter one with the heads.

Cade. But is not this braver:
Let them kisse one another: For they lov'd well
When they were alive. Now part them againe,
Least they consult about the giving up
Of some more Townes in France, Soldiers,
Deferre the spoyle of the Citie untill night;
For with these borne before us, in steed of Maces,
Will we ride through the streets, and at every Corner
Have them kisse. Away. Exit.

Alarum, and Retreat. Enter againe Cade, and all his rabblement.

Cade. Vp Fish-streete; downe Saint Magnes corner, kill and knocke downe, throw them into Thames:

Sound a parley.

What noyse is this I heare?

Dare any be so bold to sound Retreat or Parley

When I command them kill?

Enter Buckingham, and old Clifford.

Buc. I heere they be, that dare and will disturb thee:
Know Cade, we come Ambassadors from the King
Vnto the Commons, whom thou hast misled,
And heere pronounce free pardon to them all,
That will forsake thee, and go home in peace.

Clif. What say ye Countymen, will ye relent
And yeeld to mercy, whil't 'tis offered you,
Or let a rabble leade you to your deaths.
Who loves the King, and will imbrace his pardon,
Fling up his cap and say, God save his Majestie;
Who hateth him, and honors not his Father,
Henry the fift, that made all France to quake,
Shake he his weapon at us, and passe by.

All. God save the King, God save the King.

Cade. What Buckingham and Clifford are ye so brave?
And you base Pezants, doe ye beleewe him, will you needs be hang'd with your Pardons about your neckes? Hath my sword therefore broke through London gates, that you should leave me at the white-heart in Southwarke.
I thought ye would never have given out these Armes til you had recovered your ancient Freedome: but you are all Recreants and Dastards, and delight to live in slaverye to the Nobility. Let them breake your backs with burthens, take your houses over your heads, ravish your Wives and Daughters before your faces. For me, I will make shift for one, and so Gods Cursse light upon you all.

All. Wee'l follow Cade,
Wee'l follow Cade.

Clif. Is Cade the sonne of Henry the fift,
That thus you do exclaime you'l go with him.
Will he conduct you through the heart of France,
And make the meanest of you Earles and Dukes?
Alas, he hath no home, no place to flye too:
Nor knowes he how to live, but by the spoyle,
Vnlesse by robbing of your Friends, and us.
Wer't not a shame, that whilst you live at iarre,
The fearfull French, whom you late vanquished
Should make a start ore-seas, and vanquish you?
Me thinkes already in this civill broyle,
I see them Lording it in London streets,
Crying Villain unto all they meete.
Better ten thousand base-borne Cades miscarry,
Then you should stoope unto a Frenchmans mercy.
To France, to France, and get what you have lost:
Spare England, for it is your Native Coast:
Henry hath mony, you are strong and manly:
God on our side, doubt not of Victorie.

All. A Clifford, a Clifford,
Wee'l follow the King and Clifford.

Cade. Was ever Feather so lightly blowne too & fro, as this multitude? The name of Henry the fift, hailes them to an hundred mischiefes, and makes them leave me desolate. I see them lay their heads together to surprize me. My sword make way for me, for heere is no staying:
in despite of the divels and hell, have through the verie middest of you, and heavens and honor be witnesse, that no want of resolution in mee, but onely my Followers base and ignominious treasons, make me betake mee to my heeles.

Exit.

Buc. What, is he fled? Go some and follow him,
And he that brings his head unto the King,
Shall have a thousand Crownes for his reward.

Exeunt some of them.

Follow me souldiers, wee'l devise a meane,
To reconcile you all unto the King.

Exeunt omnes.

Sound Trumpets. Enter King, Queene, and Somerset on the Tarras.

King. Was ever King that joy'd an earthly Throne,
And could command no more content then I?
No sooner was I crept out of my Cradle,
But I was made a King, at nine moneths olde.
Was never subject long'd to be a King,
As I do long and wish to be a Subject.

Enter Buckingham and Clifford.

Buc. Health and glad tydings to your Majesty.

King. Why Buckingham, is the Traitor Cade surpris'd?
Or is he but retir'd to make him strong?

Enter Multitudes with Halsters about their Neckes.

Clif. He is fled my Lord, and all his powers do yeeld,
And humbly thus with halters on their neckes,
Expect your Highnesse doome of life, or death.

King. Then heaven set ope thy everlasting gates,
To entertaine my vowes of thanks and praise.
Souldiers, this day have you redeem'd your lives,
And shew'd how well you love your Prince & Country:
Continue still in this so good a minde,
And Henry though he be unfortunate,
Assure your selves will never be unkinde:
And so with thanks, and pardon to you all,
I do dismisse you to your severall Countries.

All. God save the King, God save the King.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Please it your Grace to be advertised,
The Duke of Yorke is newly come from Ireland,
And with a puissant and a mighty power
Of Gallow-glasses and stout Kernes,
Is marching hitherward in proud array,
And still proclaimeth as he comes along,
His Armies are onely to remove from thee
The Duke of Somerset, whom he tearmes a Traitor.

King. Thus stands my state, 'twixt Cade and Yorke distrest,

Like to a Ship, that having scap'd a Tempest,
Is straight way claim'd, and boarded with a Pyrate,
But now is Cade driven backe, his men dispierc'd,
And now is Yorke in Armes, to second him.
I pray thee Buckingham go and meet him,
And aske him what's the reason of these Armes:
Tell him, Ile send Duke Edmund to the Tower,
And Somerset we will commit thee thither,
Vntill his Army be dismist from him.

Somerset. My Lord,
Ile yeeld my selfe to prison willingly,
Or unto death, to do my Countrey good.

King. In any case, be not too rough in termes,
For he is fierce, and cannot brooke hard Language.

Buc. I will my Lord, and doubt not so to deale,
As all things shall redound unto your good.

King. Come wife, let's in, and learne to governe better,
For yet may England curse my wretched reigne.

*Exeunt.
Enter*

Enter Cade.

Cade. Fye on Ambition: sic on my selfe, that have a sword, and yet am ready to famish. These five dayes have I hid me in these Woods, and durst not peepe out, for all the Country is laid for me: but now am I hungry, that if I might have a Lease of my life for a thousand yeares, I could stay no longer. Wherefore on a Bricke wall have I climb'd into this Garden, to see if I can eate Grasse, or picke a Sallet another while, which is not amisse to coole a mans stomacke this hot weather: and I think this word Sallet was borne to do me good; for many a time but for a Sallet, my braine-pan had bene cleft with a brown Bill; and many a time when I have bene dry, & bravely marching, it hath serv'd me insteede of a quart pot to drinke in: and now the word Sallet must serve me to feed on.

Enter Iden.

Iden. Lord who would live turmoyle in the Court, And may enjoy such quiet walkes as these? This small inheritance my Father left me, Contenteth me, and worth a Monarchy. I seeke not to waxe great by others warning, Or gather wealth I care not with what envy: Sufficeth, that I have maintaines my state, And sends the poore well pleased from my gate.

Cade. Heere's the Lord of the soile come to seize mee for a stray, for entring his Fee-simple without leave. A Villaine, thou wilt betray me, and get a 1000. Crownes of the King by carrying my head to him, but Ile make thee eate Iron like an Ostridge, and swallow my Sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part.

Iden. Why rude Companion, whatsoere thou be, I know thee not, why then should I betray thee? Is't not enough to breake into my Garden, And like a theefe to come to rob my grounds: Climbing my walles in spite of me the Owner, But thou wilt brave me with these sawcie tearmes?

Cade. Brave thee? I by the best blood that ever was broach'd, and beard thee to. Looke on me well, I have eate no meate these five dayes, yet come thou and thy five men, and if I doe not leave you all as dead as a doore nail, I pray God I may never eate grasse more.

Iden. Nay, it shall ne're be sayd, while England stands, That Alexander Iden an Esquire of Kent, Tooke oddes to combate a poore famisht man. Oppose thy stedfast gazing eyes to mine, See if thou canst out-face me with thy lookes: Set limbe to limbe, and thou art farre the lesser: Thy hand is but a finger to my fist, Thy legge a sticke compared with this Truncheon, My foote shall fight with all the strength thou halt, And if mine arme be heaved in the Ayre, Thy grave is digg'd already in the earth: As for words, whose greatnesse answer's words, Let this my sword report what speech forbears.

Cade. By my Valour: the most compleate Champi-on that ever I heard. Steele, if thou turne the edge, or, cut not out the burly bon'd Clowne in chaines of Beefe, ere thou sleepe in thy Sheath, I beseech Iove on my knees thou mayst be turn'd to Hebnailes.

Heere they fight.

O I am slaine, Famine and no other hath slaine me, let ten thousand divelles come against me, and give me but the ten meales I have lost, and I'de defie them all. Wither Garden, and be henceforth a burying place to all that do dwell in this house, because the unconquered soule of Cade is fled.

Iden. Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor? Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deede, And hang thee o're my Tombe, when I am dead. Ne're shall this blood be wiped from thy point, But thou shalt weare it as a Heralds coate, To emblaze the Honor thy Master got.

Cade. Iden farewell, and be proud of thy victory: Tell Kent from me, she hath lost her best man, and exhort all the World to be Cowards: for I that never feared any, am vanquished by famine, not by Valour. Dyes.

Id. How much thou wrong'st me heaven be my judge; Die damned Wretch, the curse of her that bare thee: And as I thrust thy body in with my sword, So with I, I might thrust thy soule to hell. Hence wilt I dragge thee headlong by the heeles Vnto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave, And there cut off thy most ungracions head, Which I will beare in triumph to the King, Leaving thy trunk for Crowes to feed upon. Exit.

Enter Yorke, and his Army of Irish, with Drumme and Colours.

Yor. From Ireland thus comes Yorke to claim his right, And plucke the Crowne from feeble Henries head. Ring, Belles alowd, burne Bonfires cleare and bright To entertaine great Englands lawfull King. Ah Sancta Majestas! who would not buy thee deere? Let them obey, that knowes not how to Rule. This hand was made to handle nought but Gold. I cannot give due action to my words, Except a Sword or Scepter ballance it. A Scepter shall it have, have I a soule, On which Ile tisse the Fleure-de-Luce of France.

Enter Buckingham.

Whom have we heere? Buckingham to disturbe me? The king hath sent him sure: I must dissemble.

Buc. Yorke, if thou meanest well, I greet thee well.

Yor. Humfrey of Buckingham, I accept thy greeting. Art thou a Messenger, or come of pleasure.

Buc. A Messenger from Henry, our dread Liege, To know the reason of these Armes in peace. Or why, thou being a Subject, as I am, Against thy Oath, and true Allegiance sworne, Should raise so great a power without his leave? Or dare to bring thy Force so neere the Court?

Yor. Scarle can I speake, my Choler is so great. Oh I could hew up Rockes, and fight with Flint, I am so angry at these abject termes.

And now like Ajax Telamonius, On Sheepe or Oxen could I spend my furie.

I am farre better borne then is the King: More like a King, more Kingly in my thoughts. But I must make faire weather yet a while, Till Henry be more weake, and I more strong.

O Buckingham, I prethee pardon me, That I have given no answer all this while: My minde was troubled with deepe Melancholly. The cause why I have brought this armie hither,

Is to remove proud Somerset from the King,
Seditious to his Grace, and to the State.

Buc. That is too much presumption on thy part:
But if thy Armes be to no other end,
The King hath yeelded unto thy demand:
The Duke of Somerset is in the Tower.

Yorke. Vpon thine Honor is he Prisoner?

Buc. Vpon mine Honor he is Prisoner?

Yorke. Then Buckingham, I do dismisse my Powers:
Souldiers I thanke you all: disperse your selues:
Meet me to morrow in S. Georges Field,
You shall have pay, and every thing you wish.
And let my Sovereigne, vertuous Henrie,
Command my eldest sonne, nay all my sonnes,
As pledges of my Fealtie and Love,
He send them all as willing as I live:
Lands, Goods, Horse, Armor, any thing I have
Is his to use, so Somerset may dye.

Buc. Yorke, I commend this kinde submission;
We twaine will go into his Highnesse Tent.

Enter King and Attendants.

King. Buckingham, doth Yorke intend no harme to us;
That thus he marcheth with thee Arme in Arme?

Yorke. In all submission and humility,
Yorke doth present himselfe unto your Highnesse.

K. Then what intends these forces thou dost bring?

Yor. To heave the Traitor Somerset from hence,
And fight against that monstrous Rebell Cade,
Whom since I heard to be discomfited.

Enter Iden with Cades head.

Iden. If one so rude, and of so meane condition
May passe into the presence of a King:
Loe, I present your Grace a Traitors head,
The head of Cade, whom I in combat slew.

King. The head of Cade? Great God, how iust art thou?
Oh let me view his Visage being dead,
That living wrought me such exceeding trouble.
Tell me my Friend, art thou the man that slew him?

Iden. I was, an't like your Majestie.

King. How art thou call'd? And what is thy degree?

Iden. Alexander Iden, that's my name,
A poore Esquire of Kent, that loves the King.

Buc. So please it you my Lord, 'twere not amisse
He were created Knight for his good service.

King. Iden, kneele downe, rise up a Knight:
We give thee for reward a thousand Markes,
And will, that thou henceforth attend on us.

Iden. May Iden live to merit such a bountie,
And never live but true unto his Liege.

Enter Queene and Somerset.

K. See Buckingham, Somerset comes with th' Queene,
Go bid her hide him quickly from the Duke.

Qu. For thousand Yorkes he shall not hide his head,
But boldly stand, and front him to his face,

Yor. How now? is Somerset at libertie?
Then Yorke unloose thy long imprisoned thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equall with thy heart.
Shall I endure the sight of Somerset?
False King, why hast thou broken faith with me,
Knowing how hardly I can brooke abuse?
King did I call thee? no, thou art no King:
Not fit to governe and rule multitudes,
Which durst not, no nor canst not rule a Traitor.

That Head of thine doth not become a Crowne:
Thy hand is made to graspe a Palmers staffe,
And not to grace an awefull Princely Scepter.
That Gold, must round engirt the browes of mine,
Whose Smile and Frowne, like Achilles Speare
Is able with the change, to kill and cure.
Heere is a hand to hold a Scepter up,
And with the same to acte controlling Lawes:
Give place: by heaven thou shalt rule no more
O're him, whom heaven created for thy Ruler.

Som. O monstrous Traitor! I arrest thee Yorke
Of Capitall Treason 'gainst the King and Crowne:
Obey audacious Traitor, kneele for Grace.

Yorke. Wold'st have me kneele? First let me aske of thee,
If they can brooke I bow a knce to man:
Sirrah, call in my sonnes to be my baile:
I know ere they will let me goe to Ward,
They'l pawne their Swords for my infranchisement.

Qu. Call hither Clifford, bid him come amaine,
To say, if that the Bastard boyes of Yorke
Shall be the Surety for their Traitor Father.

Yorke. O blood-bespotted Neapolitan,
Out-cast of Naples, Englands bloody Scourge:
The sonnes of Yorke, thy betters in their birth,
Shall be their Fathers baile, and bane to those
That for my Surety will refuse the Boyes.

Enter Edward and Richard.

See where they come, Ile warrant they'l make it good.

Enter Clifford.

Qu. And here comes Clifford to deny their baile.

Clif. Health and all happinesse to my Lord the King.

Yor. I thanke thee Clifford: Say, what newes with thee?
Nay, do not fright me with an angry looke:
We are thy Sovereigne Clifford, kneele againe;
For thy mistaking so, We pardon thee.

Clif. This is my King Yorke, I do not mistake,
But thou mistakest me much to thinke I do,
To Bedlem with him, is the man growne mad?

King. I Clifford, a Bedlem and ambitious humor
Makes him oppose himselfe against his King.

Clif. He is a Traitor, let him to the Tower,
And crop away that factious pate of his.

Qu. He is arrested, but will not obey:
His sonnes (he sayes) shall give their words for him.

Yor. Will you not sonnes?

Edw. I Noble Father, if our words will serue.

Rich. And if words will not, then our Weapons shall.

Clif. Why what a brood of Traitors have we heere?

Yor. Look in a Glasse, and call thy Image so.
I am thy King, and thou a false-heart Traitor:
Call hither to the stake my two brave Beares,
That with the very shaking of their Chaines,
They may astonish these fell-lurking Curses:
Bid Salisbury and Warwicke come to me.

Enter the Earles of Warwicke, and Salisbury.

Clif. Are these thy Beares? Wee'l baitethy Bears to death,
And manacle the Berard in their Chaines,
If thou dar'st bring them to the bayting place.

Rich. Oft have I seene a hot ore-weening Curre,
Run backe and bite, because he was with-held,
Who being suffer'd with the Beares fell paw,
Hath clapt his taile, betweene his legges and cride,
And such a peece of service will you do,

If you oppose your selves to match Lord Warwicke.

Clif. Hence heape of wrath, foule indigested lumpe,
As crooked in thy manners, as thy shape.

Yorke. Nay we shal heate you thoroughly anon.

Clif. Take heede least by your heate you burne your selves.

King. Why Warwicke, hath thy knee forgot to bow?
Old Salisbury, shame to thy silver haire,
Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sicke sonne,
What wilt thou on thy death-bed play the Ruffian?
And seeke for sorrow with thy spectacles?
Oh where is Faith? Oh, where is Loyalty?

If it be banisht from the frosty head,
Where shall it finde a harbour in the earth?
Wilt thou go digge a grave to finde out Warre,
And shame thine honourable age with blood?
Why art thou old, and want'st experience?
Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it?
For shame in dutie bend thy knee to me,
That bowes unto the grave with milckie age.

Sal. My Lord, I have considered with my selfe
The Title of this most renowned Duke,
And in my conscience, do repute his grace
The rightfull heire to Englands Royall seate.

King. Hast thou not sworne Allegiance unto me?

Sal. I have.

Ki. Canst thou dispense with heaven for such an oath?

Sal. It is great sinne, to sweare unto a sinne:

But greater sinne to keepe a sinfull oath:
Whocan be bound by any solemne Vow
To doe a murd'rous deede, to rob a man,
To force a spotlesse Virgins Chastitie,
To reave the Orphan of his Patrimonie,
To wring the Widdow from her custom'd right,
And have no other reason for this wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemne Oath?

Qu. A subtle Traitor needs no Sophister.

King. Call Buckingham, and bid him arme himselfe.

Yorke. Call Buckingham, and all the friends thou hast,
I am resolv'd for death and dignity.

Old Clif. The first I warrant thee, if dreames prove true.

War. You were best to go to bed, and dreame againe,
To keepe thee from the Tempest of the field.

Old Clif. I am resolv'd to beare a greater storme,
Then any thou canst conjure up to day:

And that Ile write upon thy Burgonet,
Might I but know thee by thy houses Badge.

War. Now by my Fathers badge, old Nenils Crest,
The rampant Beare chain'd to the ragged staffe,
This day Ile weare aloft my Burgonet,
As on a Mountaine top, the Cedar shewes,
That keepe his leaves in spight of any storme,
Even so affright thee with the view thereof.

Old Clif. And from thy Burgonet Ile rend thy Beare,
And tread it under foot with all contempt,
Despight the Bearard, that protects the Beare.

To Clif. And so to Armes victorious noble Father,
To quell the Rebels, and their Complices.

Rich. Fie, Charitie for shame, speake not in spight,
For you shall sup with Iesu Christ to night.

To Clif. Foule stigmaticke, that's more then thou canst tell.

Rich. If not in heaven, you'l surely sup in hell. Exeunt.

Enter Warwicke.

War. Clifford of Cumberland, 'tis Warwicke calles:
And if thou dost not hide thee from the Beare,

Now when the angrie Trumpet soundsalarum,
And dead mens cries do fill the emptie ayre,
Clifford I say, come forth and fight with me,
Proud Northerne Lord, Clifford of Cumberland,
Warwicke is hoarse with calling thee to armes.

Enter Yorke.

War. How now my Noble Lord? What all a-foot.

Yor. The deadly handed Clifford slew my steed:
But match to match I have encountred him,
And made a prey for Carrion Kytes and Crowes
Even of the bonnie beast he loved so well.

Enter Clifford.

War. Of one or both of us the time is come.

Yor. Hold Warwicke: seek thee out some other chace,
For I my selfe must hunt this Deere to death.

War. Then nobly Yorke, 'tis for a Crown thou fightst:
As I intend Clifford to thrive to day,
It greeves my soule to leave thee unassail'd. Exit War.

Clif. What feelt thou in me Yorke?
Why dost thou pause?

Yorke. With thy brave bearing should I be in love,
But that thou art so fast mine enemy.

Clif. Nor should thy prowess want praise and esteeme,
But that 'tis shewne ignobly, and in Treason.

Yorke. So let it helpe me against thy sword,
As I in justice, and true right expresse it.

Clif. My soule and bodie on the action both.

Yorke. A dreadfull lay, addresse thee instantly.

Clif. La fin Corronne les oeuvres.

Dies.

Yor. Thus Warre hath given thee peace, for 'art still,
Peace with his soule, heaven if it be thy will.

Enter young Clifford.

Clif. Shame and Confusion all is on the rout,
Feare frames disorder, and disorder wounds
Where it should guard. O Warre, thou sonne of hell,
Whom angry heavens do make their minister,
Throw in the frozen bosomes of our part,
Hot Coales of Vengeance. Let no Souldiers flye.
He that is truly dedicate to Warre,
Hath no selfe-love: nor he that loves himselfe,
Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,
The name of Valour. O let the vile world end,
And the premised Flames of the Last day,
Knit earth and heaven together.

Now let the generall Trumpet blow his blast,
Particularities, and petty sounds
To cease. Was't thou ordained (O deere Father)
To lose thy youth in peace, and to atchieve
The Silver Livery of advised Age,
And in thy Reverence, and thy Chayre-dayes, thus
To dye in Ruffian battell? Even at this fight,
My heart is turn'd to stone: and while 'tis mine,
It shall be stony. Yorke, not our old men spares:
No more will I their Babes, Teares Virginall,
Shall be to me, even as the Dew to Fire,
And Beautie, that the Tyrant oft reclaimes,
Shall to my flaming wrath, be Oyle and Flax:
Henceforth, I will not have to doe with pitty.

Meet I an infant of the house of Yorke,
Into as many gobbets will I cut it
As wilde Medea yong Abfirtis did.
In cruelty, will I seeke out my Fame.
Come thou new ruine of olde Cliffords house:
As did Aeneas old Anchises beare,
So beare I thee upon my manly shouldiers:
But then, Aeneas bare a living load;

Nothing

Nothing so heavy as these woes of mine.

Enter Richard, and Somerset to fight.

Rich. Solye thou there:
For underneath an Ale-house paltry signe,
The Castle in S. Albons, Somerset
Hath made the Wizard famous in his death:
Sword, hold thy temper; Heart, be wrathfull still:
Priests pray for enemies, but Princes kill.

Fight. Excursions.

Enter King, Queene, and others.

Qu. Away my Lord, you are slow, for shame away.

King. Can we out-run the Heavens? Good Margaret stay.

Qu. What are you made of? You'll nor fight nor flye:
Now is it manhood, wisdom, and defence,
To give the enemy way, and to secure us
By what we can, which can no more but flye.

If you be tane, we then should see the bottome
Of all our Fortunes: but if we haply scape,
(As well we may, if not through your neglect)
We shall to London get, where you are lov'd,
And wherethis breach now in our fortunes made
May readily be stopt.

Enter Clifford.

Clif. But that my heart's on future mischief set,
I would speake blasphemy ere bid you fly:
But flye you must: Vncurable discomfite
Reignes in the hearts of all our present parts.
Away for your reliefe, and we will live
To see their day, and them our Fortune give.
Away my Lord, away.

Exeunt.

Alarum. Retreat. Enter Yorke, Richard, Warwick, and Souldiers, with Drum & Colours.

Yorke. Of Salisbury, who can report of him,
That winter Lyon, who in rage forgets
Aged contusions, and all brush of Time:
And like a Gallant, in the brow of youth,
Repaires him with Occasion. This happy day
Is not it selfe, nor have we wonne one foot,
If Salisbury be lost.

Rich. My Noble Father:

Three times to day I hope him to his horse,
Three times bestrid him: Thrice I led him off,
Perswaded him from any further act:
But still where danger was, still there I met him,
And like rich hangings in a homely house,
So was his will, in his old feeble body.
But Noble as he is, looke where he comes.

Enter Salisbury.

Sal. Now by my Sword, well hast thou fought to day:
By'th Masse so did we all. I thanke you Richard.

God knowes how long it is I have to live:
And it hath pleas'd him that three times to day
You have defended me from imminent death.
Well Lords, we have uot got that which we have,
'Tis not enough our foes are this time fled,
Being opposites of such repaying Nature.

Yorke. I know our safety is to follow them
For (as I heare) the King is fled to London,
To call a present Court of Parliament.

Let us pursue him ere the Writs go forth.

What sayes Lord Warwicke, shalt we after them?

War. After them I nay before them if we can:

Now by my hand (Lords) 'twas a glorious day.
Saint Albons battell wonne by famous Yorke,
Shall be eterniz'd in all Age to come.

Sound Drumme and Trumpets, and to London all,
And more such dayes as these, to us befall.

Exeunt.

The third Part of King Henry the Sixt. vvith the death of the Duke of YORKE.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Alarum.

Enter Plantagenet, Edward, Norfolk, Mountagne, Warwicke, and Souldiers.

Warwicke.

Wonder how the King escap'd our hands?
P.L. While we pursu'd the Horsmen of y North,
He flyly stole away, and left his men:
Whereat the great Lord of Northumberland,

Whose Warlike eares could never brooke retreat,
Chear'd bp the drouping Army, and himselfe.
Lord Clifford and Lord Stafford all a-breast
Charg'd our maine Battailes Front: and breaking in,
Were by the Swords of common Souldiers slaine.

Edw. Lord Staffords Father, Duke of Buckingham,
Is either slaine or wounded dangerous.

I clef his Beaver with a down-right blow:
That this is true (Father) behold his blood.

Mount. And Brother, here's the Earle of Wiltshires Whom I encountred as the Battels joyn'd. (blood,

Rich. Speake thou for me, and tell them what I did.

Plant. Richard hath best deserv'd of all my sonnes:
But is your Grace dead, my Lord of Somerset?

Nor. Such hope have all the line of John of Gaunt.

Rich. Thusdo I hope to shake King Henries head.

Warw. And so doe I, victorious Prince of Yorke.

Before I see thee seated in that Throne,
Which now the House of Lancaster usurpes,
I vow by Heaven, these eyes shall never close.

This is the Pallace of the fearefull King,
And this the Regall Seat: possesse it Yorke,
For this is thine, and not King Henries Heires.

Plant. Assist me then, sweet Warwicke, and I will.
For hither we have broken in by force.

Nor. Wee'le all assist you: he that flies, shall dye.

Plant. Thanks gentle Norfolk, stay by me my Lords,
And Souldiers stay and lodge by me this Night.

They goe up.

Warw. And when the King comes, offer him no violence,
Vnlesse he seeke to thrust you out perforce.

Plant. The Queene this day here holds her Parliament,
But little thinkes we shall be of her counsaile,
By words or blowes here let us winne our right.

Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this House.

Warw. The bloody Parliament shall this be call'd, Vnlesse Plantagenet, Duke of Yorke, be King,

And bashful Henry depos'd, whole Cowardize,
Hath made us by-words to our enemies.

Plant. Then leave me not, my Lords be resolute,
I meane to take possession of my right.

Warw. Neither the King, nor he that loves him best,
The proudest he that holds up Lancaster,
Dares stirre a Wing, if Warwicke shake his Bells.
He plant Plantagenet, root him up who dares:
Resolve thee Richard, clayme the English Crowne.

Enter King Henry, Clifford, Northumberland, Westmerland, Exeter, and the rest.

Henry. My Lords, looke where the sturdy Rebell sits,
Even in the Chayre of State: belike he meanes,
Backt by the power of Warwicke, that false Peere,
To aspire unto the Crowne, and reigne as King.
Earle of Northumberland, he slew thy Father,
And thine, Lord Clifford, & you both have vow'd revenge
On him, his tonnes, his favorites, and his friends.

Northumb. If I be not, Heavens be reveng'd on me.

Clifford. The hope thereof, makes Clifford mourne in Steele.

Westm. What, shall we suffer this? let's pluck him down,
My heart for anger burnes, I cannot brooke it.

Henry. Be patient, gentle Earle of Westmerland.

Clifford. Patience is for Poultroones, and such is he:
He durst not sit there, had your Father liv'd.
My gracious Lord, here in the Parliament
Let us assayle the Family of Yorke.

North. Well hast thou spoken, Cousin be it so.

Henry. Ah, know you not the City favours them,
And they have troopes of Souldiers at their becke?

Westm. But when the Duke is slaine, they'le quickly flye.

Henry. Farre be the thought of this from Henries heart,
To make a Shambles of the Parliament House.
Cousin of Exeter, frownes, words, and threats,
Shall be the Warre that Henry meanes to use:
Thou factious Duke of Yorke descend my Throne,
And kneele for grace and mercie at my feet,
I am my Sovereigne.

Yorke. I am thine.

Exet. For shame come downe, he made thee Duke of Yorke.

Yorke. It was my Inheritance, as the Earledome was.
Exet. Thy

Exet. Thy Father was a Traytor to the Crowne.

Warw. Exeter thou art a Traytor to the Crowne.
In following this usurping Henry.

Clifford. Whom should hee follow, but his naturall King?

Warw. True Clifford, and that's Richard Duke of Yorke.

Henry. And shall I stand, and thou sit in my Throne?

Yorke. It must and shall be so, content thy selfe.

Warw. Be Duke of Lancaster, let him be King.

Westm. He is both King, and Duke of Lancaster,
And that the Lord of Westmerland shall maintaine.

Warw. And Warwicke shall disprove it. You forget,
That we are those which chas'd you from the field,
And slew your Fathers, and with Colours spread
Martcht through the Citie to the Pallace Gates.

Northumb. Yes Warwicke, I remember it to my griefe,
And by his Soule, thou and thy House shall rue it.

Westm. Plantagenet, of thee and these thy Sonnes,
Thy Kinsmen, and thy Friends, Ile have more lives
Then drops of bloud were in my Fathers Veines.

Cliff. Vrge it no more, lest that in steed of words,
I send thee, Warwicke, such a Messenger,
As shall revenge his death, before I stirre.

Warw. Poore Clifford, how I scorne his worthless Threats.

Plant. Will you we shew our Title to the Crowne?
If not, our Swords shall pleade it in the field.

Henry. What Title hast thou Traytor to the Crowne?

My Father was as thou art, Duke of Yorke,
Thy Grandfather Roger Mortimer, Earle of March.
I am the Sonne of Henry the Fift,
Who made the Dolphin and the French to stoupe,
And seiz'd upon their Townes and Provinces.

Warw. Talke not of France, sith thou hast lost it all.

Henry. The Lord Protector lost it, and not I:
When I was crown'd I was but nine moneths old.

Rich. You are old enough now,
And yet me thinkes you lose:
Father teare the Crowne from the Vsurpers Head.

Edward. Sweet Father doe so, set it on your Head.

Mount. Good Brother,
As thou lov'st and honorest Armes,
Let's fight it out, and not stand cavilling thus.

Richard. Sound Drummes and Trumpets, and the King will flye.

Plant. Sonnes peace.

Henry. Peace thou, and give King Henry leave to speake.

Warw. Plantagenet shall speake first: Heare him Lords,
And be you silent and attentive too,
For he that interrupts him, shall not live.

Hen. Think'st thou, that I will leave my Kingly Throne, Wherein my Grandfire and my Father sat?

No: first shall Warre unpeople this my Realme;
I, and their Colours often borne in France,
And now in England, to our hearts great sorrow,
Shall be my Winding-sheet. Why faint you Lords?
My Title's good, and better farre then his.

Warw. But prove it Henry, and thou shalt be King.

Hen. Henry the Fourth by Conquest got the Crowne.

Plant. 'Twas by Rebellion against his King.

Henry. I know not what to say, my Titles weake:
Tell me, may not a King adopt an Heire?

Plant. What then?

Henry. And if he may, then am I lawfull King:
For Richard, in the view of many Lords,

Resign'd the Crowne to Henry the Fourth,
Whose Heire my Father was, and I am his.

Plant. He rose against him, being his Sovereigne,
And made him to resigne his Crowne perforce.

Warw. Suppose, my Lords, he did it unconstrayn'd,
Thinke you twere prejudicial to his Crowne?

Exet. No: for he could not so resigne his Crowne,
But that the next Heire should succeed and reigne.

Henry. Art thou against us, Duke of Exeter?

Exet. His is the right, and therefore pardon me.

Plant. Why whisper you, my Lords, and answer not?

Exet. My Conscience tells me he is lawfull King.

Henry. All will revolt from me, and turne to him.

Northumb. Plantagenet, for all the Clayme thou lay'st,
Thinke not, that Henry shall be so despos'd.

Warw. Depos'd he shall be, in despite of all.

Northumb. Thou art deceiv'd:

'Tis not thy Southerne power
Of Essex, Norfolk, Suffolke, nor of Kent,
Which makes thee thus presumptuous and prowd,
Can set the Duke up in despite of me.

Clifford. King Henry, be thy Title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vowes to fight in thy defence:

May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneele to him that slew my Father.

Henry. Oh Clifford, how thy words revive my heart.

Plant. Henry of Lancaster, resigne thy Crowne:
What mutter you, or what conspire you Lords?

Warw. Doe right unto this Princely Duke of Yorke,
Or I will fill the house with armed men,
And ore the Chayre of State, where now he sits,
Write up his Title with usurping blood.

He stampes with his foot, and the Souldiers shew themselves.

Henry. My Lord of Warwick, heare but one word,
Let me for this time reigne as King.

Plant. Confirme the Crowne to me and to mine Heires,
And thou shalt reigne in quiet while thou liv'st.

Henry. I am content: Richard Plantagenet
Enjoy the Kingdome after my decease.

Clifford. What wrong is this unto the Prince, your Sonne?

Warw. What good is this to England, and himselfe?

Westm. Base, fearefull, and despairing Henry.

Clifford. How hast thou injur'd both thy selfe and us?

Westm. I cannot stay to heare these Articles.

Northumb. Nor I.

Clifford. Come Cousin, let us tell the Queene these Newes.

Westm. Farewell faint-hearted and degenerate King,
In whose cold blood no sparke of honor bides.

Northumb. Be thou a prey unto the house of Yorke,
And dye in Bands, for this unmanly deed.

Clif. In dreadfull Warre may'st thou be overcome,
Or live in peace abandon'd and despis'd.

Warw. Turne this way Henry, and regard them not.

Exeter. They seeke revenge, and therefore will not yeeld.

Henry. Ah Exeter.

Warw. Why should you sigh, my Lord?

Henry. Not for my selfe Lord Warwicke, but my Sonne,
Whom I unnaturally shall dis-inherite.

But be it as it may: I here entayle
The Crowne to thee and to thine heires for ever,
Conditionally, that here thou take an Oath,
To cease this Civill Warre: and whil'st I live,

To honor me as thy King, and Sovereigne:
Neither by Treason nor Hostility.

To seeke to put me downe, and reigne thy selfe.

Plant. This Oath I willingly take, and will performe.
War. Long live King Henry: Plantagenet embrace him.

Henry. And long live thou, & these thy forward Sonnes.

Plant. Now Yorke and Lancaster are reconcil'd.

Exet. Accurst be he that seekes to make them foes.

Sonet. Here they come downe.

Plant. Farewell my gracious Lord, Ile to my Castle.

War. And Ile keepe London with my Souldiers.

Nor. And I to Norfolk with my followers.

Moun. And I unto the Sea, from whence I came.

Hen. And I with griefe and sorrow to the Court.

Enter the Queene.

Exet. Heere comes the Queene,
Whole Lookes bewray her anger:
Ile steale away.

Henry. Exeter, so will I.

Queene. Nay, goe not from me, I will follow thee.

Hen. Be patient gentle Queene, and I will stay.

Quee. Who can be patient in such extreames?

Ah wretched man, would I had dy'de a Maid,

And never seene thee, never borne thee Sonne,

Seeing thou hast prov'd so unnaturall a Father.

Hath he deserv'd to lose his Birth-right thus?

Hadst thou but lov'd him halfe so well as I,

Or felt that paine which I did for him once,

Or nourisht him, as I did with my blood,

Thou wouldst have left thy dearest heart-blood there,

Rather then made that savage Duke thine Heire,

And dis-inherited thine oney Sonne.

Prin. Father, you cannot dis-inherit me:

If you be King, why should not I succede?

Hen. Pardon me Margaret, pardon me sweet Sonne,

The Earle of Warwick and the Duke enforc't me.

Quee. Enforc't thee? Art thou King, and wilt be forc't?

I shame to heare thee speake: ah timorous Wretch,

Thou hast undone thy selfe, thy Sonne, and me,

And giv'n unto the House of Yorke such head,

As thou shalt reigne but by their sufferance.

To entaile him and his Heires unto the Crowne,

What is it, but to make thy Sepulcher,

And creepe into it farre before thy time?

Warwicke is Chancelor, and the Lord of Callice,

Sterne Falconbridge commands the Narrow Seas,

The Duke is made Protector of the Realme,

And yet shalt thou be safe? Such safety findes

The trembling Lambe, invironned with Wolves.

Had I beene there, which am a silly Woman,

The Souldiers should have tofs'd me on their Pikes,

Before I would have granted to that Act.

But thou preferrest thy Life, before thine Honor.

And seeing thou do'st, I here divorce my selfe,

Both from thy Table Henry, and thy Bed,

Unill that Act of Parliament be repealed,

Whereby my Sonne is dis-inherited.

The Northerne Lords, that have forsworne thy Colours,

Will follow mine, if once they see them spread:

And spread they shall be, to thy foule disgrace,

And utter ruine of the House of Yorke.

Thus doe I leave thee: Come Sonne, let's away,

Our Army is ready, come, wee'll after them.

Henry. Stay gentle Margaret, and heare me speake.

Queene. Thou hast spoke too much already: get thee gone.

Hen. Gentle Sonne Edward, thou wilt stay with me?

Quee. I, to be murther'd by his Enemies.

Prin. When I returne with victory from the field,
Ile see your Grace: till then, Ile follow her.

Quee. Come Sonne away, we may not linger thus.

Hen. Poore Queene,

How love to me, and to her Sonne,

Hath made her breake out into termes of Rage.

Reveng'd may she be on that hatefull Duke,

Whose haughty spirit, winged with desire,

Will cost my Crowne, and like an empty Eagle,

Tyre on the flesh of me, and of my Sonne.

The losse of those three Lords torments my heart:

Ile write unto them, and entreat them faire;

Come Cousin, you shall be the Messenger.

Exet. And I hope, shall reconcile them all.

Exit.

Enter Richard, Edward, and Mountague.

Richard. Brother, though I bee youngest, give mee leave.

Edw. No, I can better play the Orator.

Moun. But I have reasons strong and forceable.

Enter the Duke of Yorke.

Yor. Why how now Sonnes, and Brother, at a strife?
What is your Quarrell? how began it first?

Edw. No Quarrell, but a slight Contention.

Yor. About what?

Rich. About that which concernes your Grace and us,
The Crowne of England, Father, which is yours.

Yor. Mine Boy? not till King Henry be dead.

Rich. Your Right depends not on his life, or death.

Edw. Now you are Heire, therefore enjoy it now:
By giving the House of Lancaster leave to breathe,
It will out-runne you, Father, in the end.

Yor. I tooke an Oath, that he should quietly reigne.

Edw. But for a Kingdome any Oath may be broken:
I would breake thousand Oathes, to reigne one yeere.

Richard. No: God forbid your Grace should be forsworne.

Yor. I shall be, if I claime by open Warre.

Richard. Ile prove the contrary, if you'll heare mee speake.

Yor. Thou canst not, Sonne: it is impossible.

Rich. An Oath is of no moment, being not tooke
Before a true and lawfull Magistrate,
That hath authority over him that sweares.

Henry had none, but did usurpe the place.

Then seeing 'twas he that made you to depose,

Your Oath, my Lord, is vaine and frivolous.

Therefore to Armes: and Father doe but thinke,

How sweet a thing it is to weare a Crowne,

Within whose Circuit is Elzium,

And all that Poets faine of Blisse and Ioy.

Why doe we linger thus? I cannot rest,

Untill the White Rose that I weare, be dy'de

Even in the luke-warme blood of Henries heart.

Yor. Richard ynough: I will be King, or dye.

Brother, thou shalt to London presently,

And whet on Warwick to this Enterprise.

Thou Richard shalt to the Duke of Norfolk,
And tell him privily of our intent.
You Edward shall unto my Lord Cobham,
With whom the Kentishmen will willingly rise.
In them I trust: for they are Souldiors,
Witty, courteous, liberall, full of spirit.
While you are thus imploy'd, what resteth more?
But that I seeke occasion how to rise,
And yet the King not privy to my Drift,
Nor any of the House of Lancaster.

Enter Gabriel.

But stay, what Newes? Why comm'st thou in such poste?

Gabriel. The Queene,
With all the Northerne Earles and Lords,
Intend heere to besiege you in your Castle.
She is hard by, with twenty thousand men:
And therefore fortifie your Hold, my Lord.

Tor. I, with my Sword.
What? think'st thou, that we feare them?
Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me,
My Brother Mountague shall poste to London.
Let Noble Warwicke, Cobham, and the rest,
Whom we have left Protectors of the King,
With powrefull Policy strengthen themselves,
And trust not simple Henry, nor his Oathes.
Moun. Brother, I goe: I'll winne them, feare it not.
And thus most humbly I doe take my leave.

Exit Mountague.

Enter Mortimer, and his Brother.

Tor. Sir John, and Sir Hugh Mortimer, mine Vnckles,
You are come to Sandall in a happy houre.
The Armie of the Queene meane to besiege us.
John. Shee shall not neede, wee'll meete her in the field.
Tor. What, with five thousand men?
Rich. I, with five hundred, Father, for a neede.
A Woman's General: what should we feare?

A March afarre off.

Edw. I heare their Drummes:
Let's set our men in order,
And issue forth, and bid them Battaile straight.
Tor. Five men to twenty: though the oddes be great,
I doubt not, Vnckle, of our Victory.
Many a Battaile have I wonne in France,
When as the Enemy hath bene tenne to one:
Why should I not now have the like successe?

Alarm. Exit.

Enter Rutland, and his Tutor.

Rutl. Ah, whither shall I flye, to scape their hands?
Ah Tutor, looke where bloody Clifford comes.

Enter Clifford.

Clifford. Chaplaine away, thy Priesthood saves thy life.
As for the Brat of this accused Duke,
Whose Father slew my Father, he shall dye.

Tutor. And I, my Lord, will beare him company.

Cliff. Souldiers, away with him.

Tutor. Ah Clifford, murther not this innocent Child, Least thou be hated both of God and Man. Exit.

Clifford. How now? is he dead already?
Or is it feare, that makes him close his eyes?
He open them.

Rutl. So looks the pent-up Lyon o're the Wretch,
That trembles under his devouring Pawes:
And so he walkes, insulting o're his Prey,
And so he comes, to rend his Limbes asunder.
Ah gentle Clifford, kill me with thy Sword,
And not with such a cruell threatening Looke:
Sweet Clifford heare me speake, before I dye:
I am too meane a subiect for thy Wrath,
Be thou reveng'd on men, and let me live.

Cliff. In vaine thou speak'st, poore Boy:
My Fathers blood hath stopt the passage
Where thy words should enter.

Rutl. Then let my Fathers blood open it againe,
He is a man, and Clifford cope with him.

Cl. Had I thy Brethren here, their lives and thine:
Were not revenge sufficient for me:
No, if I digg'd up thy fore-fathers Graves,
And hung their rotten Coffins up in Chaynes,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart.
The sight of any of the House of Torke,
Is as a Fury to torment my Soule:
And till I root out their accursed Line,
And leave not one alive, I live in Hell.
Therefore----

Rutl. Oh let me pray, before I take my death:
To thee I pray; sweet Clifford pittie me.

Clifford. Such pittie as my Rapiers point affords.
Rutl. I never did thee harme: why wilt thou slay
me?

Clif. Thy Father hath.

Rutl. But 'twas ere I was borne:
Thou hast, one Sonne, for his sake pittie me,
Least in revenge thereof, sith God is just,
He be as miserably slaine as I.
Ah, let me live in Prison all my dayes,
And when I give occasion of offence,
Then let me dye, for now thou hast no cause.

Cl. No cause? thy Father slew my Father: therefore dye.

Rutl. Dij faciant laudis summa sit ista tua. Dis.

Cl. Plantagenet, I come Plantagenet:
And this thy Sonnes blood cleaving to my Blade,
Shall rust upon my Weapon, till thy blood
Congeal'd with this, doe make me wipe off both, Exit.

Alarm. Enter Richard, Duke of Torke.

Tor. The Army of the Queene hath got the field:
My Vnckles both are slaine, in rescuing me,
And all my followers, to the eager foe
Turne back, and flye, like, Ships before the Winde,
Or Lambes pursu'd by hunger-staru'd Wolves.
My Sonnes, God knowes what hath bechanced them:
But this I know, they have demean'd themselves
Like men borne to Renowne, by Life or Death.
Three times did Richard make a Lane to me,
And thice cry'de, Courage Father, fight it out:
And full as oft came Edward to my side,
With Purple Faulchion, painted to the Hilt,
In blood of those that had encountred him:
And when the hardiest Warriors did retyre,
Richard cry'de, Charge, and give no foot of ground,
And cry'de, A Crowne, or else a glorious Tombe,

A Scepter, or an Earthly Sepulcher.
With this we charg'd againe: but out alas,
We bodg'd againe, as I have seene a Swan
With bootlesse labour swimme against the Tytle,
And spend her strength with over-matching Waves.

A short Alarm within.

Ah hearke, the fatall followers doe pursue,
And I am faint, and cannot flye their fury:
And were I strong, I would not shunne their fury.
The Sands are numbred, that make up my Life,
Here must I stay, and here my Life must end.

Enter the Queene, Clifford, Northumberland, the young Prince, and Souldiers.

Come bloody Clifford, rough Northumberland,
I dare your quenchlesse fury to more rage:
I am your Burt, and I abide your Shot.

North. Yeeld to our mercy, proud Plantagenet.

Clif. I, to such mercy, as his ruthlesse Arme
With downe-right payment, shew'd unto my Father.
Now Phaeton hath tumbled from his Carre,
And made an Evening at the Noone-tide Prick.

Tor. My ashes, as the Phoenix, may bring forth
A Bird, that will revenge upon you all:
And in that hope, I throw mine eyes to Heaven,
Scorning what ere you can afflict me with.

Why come you not? what, multitudes, and feare?

Clif. So Cowards fight, when they can flye no further,
So Doves doe peck the Faulcons piercing Tallons,
So desperate Theeves, all hopelesse of their Lives,
Breathe out Invectives gainst the Officers.

Tor. Oh Clifford, but bethinke thee once againe:
And in thy thought ore-run my former time:
And if thou canst, for blushing, view this face,
And bite thy tongue, that slanders him with Cowardice,
Whose frowne hath made thee faint and flye ere this.

Clif. I will not bandy with thee word for word,
But buckler with thee blowes twice two for one.

Que. Hold valiant Clifford, for a thousand causes
I would prolong a while the Traytors Life:
Wrath makes him deafe; speake thou Northumberland.

North. Hold Clifford, doe not honor him so much,
To prick thy finger, though to wound his heart.
What valour were it, when a Curre doth grinne,
For one to thrust his Hand betweene his Teeth,
When he might spurne him with his Foot away?
It is Warres prize, to take all Vantages,
And tenne to one, is no impeach of Valour.

Clifford. I, I, so strives the Woodcooke with the Gynne.

Northumberland. So doth the Conny struggle in the Net.

Tor. So triumph Theeves upon their conquer'd Booty,
So True men yeeld, with Robbers so o're-match.

North. What would your Grace have done unto him
now?

Que. Brave Warriors, Clifford and Northumberland,
Come make him stand upon this Mole-hill here,
That raught at Mountaines with out-stretched Armes,
Yet parted but the shadow with his Hand.
What, was it you that would be Englands King?
Was't you that revell'd in our Parliament,
And made a Preachment of your high Descent?
Where are your Messe of Sonnes, to back you now?
The wanton Edward, and the lusty George?

And where's that valiant Crook-back Prodigy,
Dicky, your Boy, that with his gtumbling voyce
Was wont to cheare his Dad in Mutinies?
Or with the rest, where is your Darling, Rutland?
Looke Yorke, I stayn'd this Napkin with the blood
That valiant Clifford, with his Rapiers point,
Mad issue from the bosome of the Boy,
And if thine eyes can water for his death,
I give thee this to dry thy Cheekes withall.
Alas poore Yorke, but that I hate thee deadly,
I should lament thy miserable state.

I prythee grieve, to make me merry, Yorke.
What, hath thy fiery heart so parcht thine entrayles,
That not a Teare can fall, for Rutlands death?
Why art thou patient, man? thou should'st be mad:
And I, to make thee mad, doe mock thee thus:
Stampe, rave, and fret, that I may sing and dance.
Thou would'st be fce'd, I see, to make me sport:
Yorke cannot speake, unlesse he weare a Crowne.

A Crowne for Yorke; and Lords, bow lowe to him:
Hold you his hands, whilest I doe set it on.

I marry Sir, now lookes he like a King:

I, this is he that tooke King Henries Chaire,
And this his he was is adopted Heire.

But how is it, that great Plantagenet

Is crown'd so soone, and broke his solemne Oath?

As I bethinke me, you should not be King,

Till our King Henry had shooke hands with Death.

And will you pale your head in Henries Glory,

And rob his Temples of the Diademe,

Now in his Life, against your holy Oath?

Oh 'tis a fault too too unpardonable.

Off with the Crowne: and with the Crowne, his Head,
And whilest we breathe, take time to doe him dead.

Clifford. That is my Office, for my Fathers sake.

Queene. Nay stay, let's heare the Orizons hee makes.

Yorke. Shee-Wolfe of France,
But worse then Wolves of France,
Whose Tongue more poisons then the Adders Tooth:
How ill-beseeming is it in thy Sex,
To triumph like an Amazonian Trull,
Vpon their Woes, whom Fortune captivates?
But that thy Face is Vizard-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evill deedes,
I would assay, prowd Queene, to make thee blush.
To tell thee whence thou cam'st, of whom deriv'd,
Were shame enough, to shame thee,
Wert thou not shamelesse,

Thy Father beares the type of King of Naples,
Of both the Sicils, and Ierusalem.

Yet not so wealthy as an English Yeoman.

Hath that poore Monarch taught thee to insult?

It needes not, nor it bootes thee not, prowd Queene,
Vnlesse the Adage must be verif'd,

That Beggers mount, runne their Horse to death.

'Tis Beauty that doth oft make Women prowd,

But God he knowes, thy share thereof is small.

'Tis Vertue that doth make them most admir'd,

The contrary doth make thee wondred at.

'Tis Government that makes them seeme Divine,

The want thereof, makes thee abhominable.

Thou art as opposite to every good,

As the Antipodes are unto vs,

Or as the South to the Septentrion.

Oh Tygres Heart, wrapt in a Womans Hide,

How could'st thou drayne the Life-blood of the Child,
To bid the Father wipe his eyes withall,
And yet be seene to beare a Womans face?
Women are soft, milde, pittiful, and flexible;
Thou sterne, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorselesse.
Bidst thou me rage? why now thou hast thy wish.
Would'st thou have me weepe? why now thou hast thy will.
For raging wind blowes up incessant showers,
And when the Rage allayes, the Raine begins.
These Teares are my sweet Rutlands Obsequies,
And every drop cryes vengeance for his death,
Gainst thee fell Clifford, and thee false French-woman.

Northumb. Bestrew me, but his passions move me so,
That hardly can I check my eyes from Teares.

Tor. That face of his,
The hungry Caniballs would not have toucht,
Would not have stayn'd the roses just with blood:
But you are more inhumane, more innexorable,
Oh, tenne times more then Tygers of Hyrcania.
See, ruthlesse Queene, a haplesse Fathers Teares:
This Cloth thou dipd'st in blood of my sweet Boy,
And I with Teares doe wash the blood away.
Keepe thou the Napkin, and goe boast of this,
And if thou tell'st the heavy story right,
Vpon my Soule, the hearers will shed Teares:
Yea, even my Foes will shed fast-falling Teares,
And say, Alas, it was a pittious deed.
There, take the Crown, and with the Crowne, my Curse,
And in thy need, such comfort come to thee,
As now I reape at thy too cruell hand.
Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the World,
My soule to Heaven, my Blood upon your Heads.

North. Had he been slaughter-man to all my Kinne,
I should not for my Life but weepe with him,
To see how inly Sorrow gripes his Soule.

Que. What weeping ripe, my Lord Northumberland?
Thinke but upon the wrong he did us all,
And that will quickly dry thy melting Teares.

Clifford. Heere's for my Oath, heere's for my Fathers
Death.

Queene. And heere's to right our gentle-hearted
King.

Tor. Open thy Gate of Mercy, gracious God.
My Soule flies through these wounds, to seeke out thee.

Quee. Off with his Head, and set it on Yorke Gates,
So Yorke may over-look the Towne of Yorke.

Exeunt.

A March. Enter Edward, Richard, and their power.

Edw. I wonder how our Princely Father scap't:
Or whether he be scap't away, or no,
From Cliffords and Northumberlands pursuit?
Had he been t'ane, we should have heard the newes:
Had he beene slaine, we should have heard the newes:
Or had he scap't, methinkes we should have heard
The happy tidings of his good escape.

How fares my Brother? why is he so sad?

Rich. I cannot joy, untill I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant Father is become.
I saw him in the Battaille range about,
And watcht him how he singled Clifford forth,
Methought he bore him in the thickest troupe,
As doth a Lyon in a Heard of Neat,
Or as a Beare encompass'd round with Dogges:

Who having pinch't a few, and made them cry,
The rest stand all aloofe, and barke at him.

So far'd our Father with his Enemies,

So fled his Enemies my Warlike Father:

Me thinkes 'tis prize enough to be his Sonne.

See how the Morning opes her golden Gates,

And takes her farewell of the glorious Sunne.

How well resembles it the prime of Youth,

Trimm'd like a Yonker, prauncing to his Love?

Ed. Dazle mine eyes, or doe I see three Sunnes?

Rich. Three glorious Sunnes, each one a perfect Sunne,

Not separated with the racking Clouds,

But sever'd in a pale cleare-shining Skie.

See, see they joyne, embrace, and seeme to kisse,

As if they vow'd some League inviolable.

Now are they but one Lampe, one Light, one Sunne:

In this, the Heaven figures some event.

Edw. 'Tis wondrous strange,

The like yet never heard of.

I thinke it cites us (Brother) to the field,

That wee, the Sonnes of brave Plantagenet,

Each one already blazing by our meedes,

Should notwithstanding joyne our Lights together,

And over-shine the Earth, as this the World.

What ere it bodes, hence-forward will I beare

Vpon my Targuet three faire shining Sunnes.

Rich. Nay, beare three Daughters:

By your leave, I speake it,

You love the Breeder better then the Male.

Enter one blowing.

But what art thou, whose heavy Lookes fore-tell
Some dreadfull story hanging on thy Tongue?

Mess. Ah, one that was a wofull looker on
When as the Noble Duke of Yorke was slaine,
Your Princely Father, and my loving Lord.

Edward. Oh speake no more, for I have heard too much.

Rich. Say how he dy'de, for I will heare it all.

Mess. Environed he was with many foes
And stood against them, as the hope of Troy
Against the Greekes, that would have entred Troy.
But Hercules himselfe must yeeld to oddes;
And many stroakes, though with a little Axe,
Hewes downe and fells the hardest tymer'd Oake.
By many hands your Father was subdu'd,
But onely slaught'ed by the irefull Arme
Of un-relenting Clifford, and the Queene:
Who crown'd the gracious Duke in high despight,
Laugh'd in his face: and when with grieve he wept,
The ruthlesse Queene gave him, to dry his Cheeke,
A Napkin, steeped in the harmelesse blood
Of sweet young Rutland, by rough Clifford slaine:
And after many scornes, many foule taunts,
They tooke his Head, and on the Gates of Yorke
They set the same, and there it doth remaine,
The saddest spectacle that ere I view'd.

Edw. Sweet Duke of Yorke, our Prop to leane upon,
Now thou art gone, wee have no Staffe, no Stay.

Oh Clifford, boyst'rous Clifford, thou hast slaine

The flowre of Europe, for his Chevalry,

And trecherously hast thou vanquisht him,

For hand to hand he would have vanquisht thee.

Now my Soules Pallace is become a Prizon:

Ah, would she breake from hence, that this my body

Might

Might in the ground be closed up in rest:
For never henceforth shall I joy againe:
Never, oh never shall I see more joy.

Rich. I cannot weep: for all my bodies moisture
Scarfe serves to quench my Furnace-burning heart:
Nor can my tongue unloade my hearts great burthen,
For selfe-same winde that I should speake withall,
Is kindling coales that fires all my brest,
And burnes me up with flames, that tears would quench.
To weep, is to make lesse the depth of griefe:
Teares then for Babes; Blowes, and Revenge for mee.
Richard, I beare thy name, Ile venge thy death,
Or dye renowned by attempting it.

Ed. His name that valiant Duke hath left with thee:
His Dukedome, and his Chaire with me is left.

Rich. Nay, if thou be that Princely Eagles Bird;
Shew thy descent by gazing 'gainst the Sunne:
For Chaire and Dukedome, Throne and Kingdome say,
Either that is thine, or else thou wer't not his.

March. Enter Warwicke, Marquesse Mountacute, and their Army.

Warwicke. How now faire Lords? What fare? What newes abroad?

Rich. Great Lord of Warwicke, if we should recompt
Our balefull newes, and at each words deliverance
Stab Poniards in our flesh, till all were told,
The words would adde more anguish then the wounds.
O valiant Lord, the Duke of Yorke is slaine.

Edw. O Warwicke, Warwicke, that Plantagenet
Which held thee deerely, as his Soules Redemption,
Is by the sterne Lord Clifford done to death.

War. Ten dayes ago, I drown'd these newes in teares,
And now to adde more measure to your woes,
I come to tell you things sith then befallne.
After the bloody Fray at Wakefield fought,
Where your brave Father breath'd his latest gaspe,
Tydings, as swiftly as the Postes could runne,
Were brought me of your Losse, and his Depart.
I then in London, keeper of the King,
Mustred my Soldiers, gathered flocks of Friends,
Marcht toward S. Albons, to intercept the Queene,
Bearing the King in my behalfe along:
For by my Scouts, I was advertised
That she was comming with a full intent
To dash our late Decree in Parliament,
Touching King Henries Oath, and your Succession:
Short Tale to make, we at S. Albons met,
Our Battailles joyn'd and both sides fiercely fought:
But whether 'twas the coldnesse of the King,
Who look'd full gently on his warlike Queene,
That robb'd my Soldiers of their heated Spleene.
Or whether 'twas report of her successe,
Or more then common feare of Cliffords Rigour,
Who thunders to his Captives, Blood and Death,
I cannot judge: but to conclude with truth,
Their Weapons like to Lightning, came and went:
Our souldiers like the Night-Owles lazie flight,
Or like a lazie Thresher with a Flaile,
Fell gently downe, as if they strucke their Friends.
I cheer'd them up with justice of our Cause,
With promise of high pay, and great Reward:
But all in vaine, they had no heart to fight,
And we (in them) no hope to win the day,
So that we fled: the King unto the Queene,
Lord George, your Brother, Norfolk, and my Selfe,

In-haste, post halte, are come to joyne with you:
For in the Marches heere we heard you were,
Making another Head, to fight againe.

Ed. Where is the Duke of Norfolk, gentle Warwick?
And when came George from Burgundy to England?

War. Some six miles off the Duke is with the Souldiers;
And for your Brother he was lately sent
From your kinde Aunt Dutcheffe of Burgundy,
With ayde of Souldiers to this needfull Warre.

Rich. 'Twas oddes belike, when valiant Warwick fled;
Oft have I heard his praises in Pursuite,
But n'ere till now, his Scandall of Retire.

War. Nor now my Scandall Richard, dost thou heare:
For thou shalt know this strong right hand of mine,
Can plucke the Diadem from faint Henries head,
And wring the awefull Scepter from his Fist,
Were heas famous, and as bold in Warre,
As he is fam'd for Mildnesse, Peace, and Prayer.

Rich. I know it well Lord Warwick, blame me not,
Tis love I beareth thy glories makes me speake:
But in this troublous time, what's to be done?
Shall wee go throw away our Coates of Steele,
And wrap our bodies in blacke mourning Gownes,
Numb'ring our Ave-Maries with our Beads?
Or shall we on the Helmets of our Foes
Tell our Devotion with revengefull Armes?
If for the last, say I, and to it Lords.

War. Why therefore Warwick came to seek you out,
And therefore comes my Brother Mountainque:
Attend me Lords, the proud intulking Queene,
With Clifford, and the haught Northumberland,
And of their Feather, many moe proud Birds,
Have wrought the easie-melting King, like Wax.
He swore consent to your Succession,
His Oath enrolled in the Parliament.
And now to London all the crew are gone,
To frustrate both his Oath, and what beside
May make against the house of Lancaster.
Their power (I thinke) is thirty thousand strong:
Now, if the helpe of Norfolk, and my selfe,
With all the Friends that thou brave Earle of March,
Amongst the loving Welshmen can't procure,
Will but amount to five and twenty thousand,
Why Via, to London will we march,
And once againe, bestride our foaming Steeds,
And once againe cry Charge upon our Foes,
But never once againe turne backe and flye.

Rich. I, now me thinks I heare great Warwick speak;
Ne're may he live to see a Sun-shine day,
That cries Retire, if Warwicke bid him stay.

Ed. Lord Warwick, on thy shoulder will I lean,
And when thou failest (as God forbid the houre)
Must Edward fall, which perill heaven forefend.

War. No longer Earle of March, but Duke of Yorke:
The next degree, is England's Royall Throne:
For King of England shalt thou be proclaim'd
In every Burrough as we passe along,
And he that throwes not up his cap for joy,
Shall for the Fault make forfeit of his head.
King Edward, valiant Richard Mountainque:
Stay we no longer, dreaming of Renowne,
But sound the Trumpets, and about our Taske.

Rich. Then Clifford, were thy heart as hard as Steele,
As thou hast shewne it flinty by thy deeds,
I come to pierce it, or to give thee mine.

Edw. Then strike up Drums, God and S. George for us.

Enter a Messenger.

War. How now? what newes?

Mes. The Duke of Norfolke sends you word by me,
The Queene is comming with a puissant Hoast,
And craves your company, for speedy counsell.

War. Why then it forts, brave Warriors, let's away.

Exeunt omnes.

Enter the King, the Queene, Clifford, Northumberland and Yong Prince, with Drumme and Trumpetes.

Que. Welcome my Lord, to this brave town of York,
Yonders the head of that Arch-enemy,
That fought to be incompart with your Crowne,
Doth not the object cheere your heart, my Lord.

K. I, as the rockes cheere them that feare their wrack,
To see this fight, it irkes my very soule:
With-hold revenge (deere God) 'tis not my fault,
Nor wittingly have I infring'd my Vow.

Clif. My gracious Liege, this too much lenity
And harmfull pittie must be layd aside:
To whom do Lyons cast their gentle Lookes?
Not to the Beast, that would usurpe their Den.
Whose hand is that the Forrest Beare doth lick?
Not his that spoiles her yong before her face.
Who scapes the lurking Serpents mortall sting?
Not he that sets his foot upon her backe.
The smallest Worme will turne, being troden on,
And Doves will pecke in safegard of their Brood.
Ambitious Yorke, did leuell at thy Crowne,
Thou smiling, while he knit his angry browes.
He but a Duke, would have his Sonne a King,
And raise his issue like a loving Sire,
Thou Being a King, blest with a goodly sonne,
Didst yeeld consent to disinherit him:
Which argued thee a most unloving Father.
Vnreasonable Creatures feed their young,
And though mans face be fearefull to their eyes,
Yet in protection of their tender ones,
Who hath not seene them even with those wings,
Which sometime they have us'd with fearfull flight,
Make warre with him that climb'd unto their nest,
Offering their owne lives in their yongs defence?
For shame, my Liege, make them your President:
Were it not pittie that this goodly Boy
Should loose his Birth-right by his Fathers fault,
And long heereafter say unto his childe,
What my great Grandfather, and Grandfire got,
My carelesse Father fondly gave away.
Ah, what a shame were this? Looke on the Boy,
And let his manly face, which promiseth
Successfull Fortune Steele thy melting heart,
To hold thine owne, and leave thine owne with him.

King. Full well hath Clifford plaid the Orator,
Inferring arguments of mighty force:
But Clifford tell me, didst thou never heare,
That things ill got, had ever bad successe.
And happy alwayes was it for that Sonne,
Whose Father for his hoording went to hell:
He leave my Sonne my Vertuous deeds behinde,
And would my Father had left me no more:
For all the rest is held at such a Rate,
As brings a thousand fold more care to keepe,
Then in possession any jot of pleasure.
Ah Cofin Yorke, would thy best Friends did know,

How it doth greeve me that thy head is heere.

Que. My Lord cheere up your spirits, our foes are nye,
And this soft courage makes your Followers faint:
You promist Knighthood to our forward sonne,
Vnsheath your sword, and dub him presently.

Edward, kneele downe.

King. Edward Plantagenet, arise a Knight,
And learne this Lesson, Draw thy Sword in right.

Prin. My gracious Father, by your Kingly leave,
He draw it as Apparant to the Crowne,
And in that quarrell, use it to the death.

Clif. Why that is spoken like a toward Prince.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Royall Commanders, be in readinesse,
For with a Band of thirty thousand men,
Comes Warwicke backing of the Duke of Yorke,
And in the Townes as they do march along,
Proclaimes him King, and many flye to him,
Darraigne your battell, they are at hand.

Clif. I would your Highnesse would depart the field,
The Queene hath best successe when you are absent.

Que. I good my Lord, and leave us to our Fortune.

King. Why, that's my fortune too, therefore He stay.

North. Be it with resolution then to fight.

Prin. My Royall Father, cheere these Noble Lords,
And hearten those that fight in your defence:
Vnsheath your Sword, good Father: Cry S. George.

March. Enter Edward, Warwicke, Richard, Clarence, Norfolke, Mountague, and Soldiers.

Ed. Now perjur'd Henry, wilt thou kneel for grace?
And set thy Diadem upon my head?
Or bide the mortall Fortune of the field.

Que. Go rate thy Minions, proud insulting Boy,
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in termes,
Before thy Sovereigne, and thy lawfull King?

Ed. I am his King, and he should bow his knee:
I was adopted Heire by his consent.
Since when, his Oath is broke: for as I heare,
You that are King, though he do weare the Crowne,
Have caus'd him by new Act of Parliament,
To blot out me, and put his owne Sonne in.

Clif. And reason too,
Who should succede the Father, but the Sonne?

Rich. Are you there Butcher? O, I cannot speake.

Clif. I Crooke-back, here I stand to answer thee,
Or any he, the proudest of thy fort.

Rich. 'Twas you that kill'd yong Rutland, was it not?

Clif. I, and old Yorke, and yet not satisfied.

Rich. For Gods sake Lords give signall to the fight.

War. What say'st thou Henry,
Wilt thou yeeld the Crowne? (you speake)

Quee. Why how now long-tongu'd Warwicke, dare
When you and I, met at S. Albons last,
Your legges did better service then your hands.

War. Then 'twas my turne to fly, and now 'tis thine:

Clif. You said so much before, and yet you fled.

War. 'Twas not your valor Clifford drove me thence,

Nor. No, nor your manhood that durst make you stay.

Rich. Northumberland, I hold thee reverently,
Breake off the parley, for scarce I can refraine
The execution of my big-swolne heart
Vpon that Clifford, that cruell Child-killer.

Clif. I slew thy Father, cal'st thou him a Child?

Rich.

Rich. I like a Dastard, and a treacherous Coward,
As thou didd'st kill our tender Brother Rutland,
But ere Sunset, Ile make thee curse the deed.

King. Have done with words (my Lords) and heare me speake.

Qu. Defie them then, or els hold close thy lips.

King. I prythee give no limits to my Tongue,
I am a King, and priviledg'd to speake.

Cliff. My Liege, the wound that bred this meeting heere,
Cannot be cur'd by Words, therefore be still.

Rich. Then Executioner vnsheath thy sword:
By him that made us all, I am resolv'd,

That Cliffords Manhood, lyes upon his tongue.

Ed. Say Henry, shall I have my right, or no:

A thousand men have broke their Fast to day,
That ne're shall dine, unlesse thou yeeld the Crowne.

War. If thou deny, their Blood upon thy head.

For Yorke in justice put's his Armour on.

Pr. Ed. If that be right, which Warwick saies is right,
There is no wrong, but every thing is right.

War. Who ever got thee, there thy Mother stands,
For well I wot, thou hast thy Mothers tongue.

Qu. But thou art neither like thy Sire nor Damme,
But like a foule mishapen Stygmaticke,
Mark'd by the Destinies to be avoided,
As venome Toades, or Lizards dreadfull stings.

Rich. Iron of Naples, hid with English gilt,
Whose Father beares the Title of a King,
(As if a Channell should be call'd the Sea)
Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art extraught,
To let thy tongue detect thy base-borne heart.

Ed. A wiffe of straw were worth a thousand Crowns,
To make this shamelesse Callet know her selfe:

Helen of Greece was fairer farre then thou,
Although thy Husband may be Menelaus;
And ne're was Agamemnon's Brother wrong'd
By that false Woman, as this King by thee.
His Father revel'd in the heart of France,
And tam'd the King, and made the Dolphin stoope:
And had he match'd according to his State,
He might have kept that glory to this day.

But when he tooke a begger to his bed,
And grac'd thy poore Sire with his Bridall day,
Even then that Sun-thine brew'd a showre for him,
That washt his Fathers fortunes forth of France,
And heap'd sedition on his Crowne at home:
For what hath broach'd this tumult but thy Pride?
Had'st thou bene meeke, our Title still had slept,
And we in pittie of the Gentle King,
Had slept our Claime, untill another Age.

Cl. But when we saw, our Sunshine made thy Spring,
And that thy Summer bred us no increafe,
We set the Axe to thy usurping Roote:

And though the edge hath something hit our selves,
Yet know thou, since we have begun to strike,
Wee'l never leave, till we have hewne thee downe,
Or bath'd thy growing, with our heated bloods.

Ed. And in this resolution, I defie thee,
Not willing any longer Conference,
Since thou denied'st the gentle King to speake.
Sound Trumpets, let our bloody Colours wave,
And either Victory, or else a Grave.

Qu. Stay Edward.

Ed. No wrangling Woman, wee'l no longer stay,
These words will cost ten thousand lives this day.

Exeunt omnes.

Alarum. Excursions. Enter Warwick.

War. Fore-spent with Toile, as Runners with a Race,
I lay me downe a little while to breath:

For strokes receiv'd, and many blowes repaid,
Have robb'd my strong knit sinewes of their strength,
And spight of spight, needs must I rest a-while.

Enter Edward running.

Ed. Smile gentle heaven, or strike ungentle death,
For this world frownes, and Edward's Sunne is clowded.

War. How now my Lord, what happe? what hope of good?

Enter Clarence.

Cl. Out hap is losse, our hope but sad despaire,
Our rankes are broke, and ruine followes us.
What counsaile give you? whither shall we flye?

Ed. Bootlesse is flight, they follow us with Wings,
And weake we are, and cannot shun pursuite.

Enter Richard.

Rich. Ah Warwicke, why hast y withdrawn thy selfe?
Thy Brothers blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,
Broach'd with the Steely point of Cliffords Launce:
And in the very pangs of death, he cryde,
Like to a dismall Clangor heard from farre,
Warwicke, revenge; Brother revenge my death.
So underneath the belly of their Steeds,
That stain'd their Fetlockes in his smoaking blood,
The Noble Gentleman gave up the ghost.

War. Then let the earth be drunken with our blood:
Ile kill my Horse because I will not flye:
Why stand we like soft-hearted women heere,
Wayling our losses, whiles the Foe doth Rage,
And looke upon, as if the Tragedy
Were plaid in jest, by counterfetting Actors.
Heere on my knee, I vow to God above,
Ile never Pawse againe, never stand still,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
Or Fortune given me measure of Revenge.

Ed. Oh Warwicke, I do bend my knee with thine,
And in this vow do chaine my soule to thine.
And ere my knee rise from the Earths cold face,
I throw my hands, mine eyes, my heart to thee,
Thou setter up, and plucker downe of Kings,
Beseeching thee (if with thy will it stands)
That to my Foest this body must be prey,
Yet that thy brazen gates of heaven may ope,
And give sweet passage to my sinfull soule.
Now Lords, take leave untill we meete againe,
Where ere it be, in heaven, or in earth.

Rich. Brother,
Give me thy hand, and gentle Warwicke,
Let me embrace thee in my weary armes:
I that did never weepe, now melt with wo,
That Winter should cut off our Spring-time so.

War. Away, away:
Once more sweet Lords farewell.

Cl. Yet let us altogether to our Troopes.
And give them leave to flye, that will not stay:
And call them Pillars that will stand to us:
And if we thrive, promise them such rewards
As Victors weare at the Olympian Games.
This may plant courage in their quailing breasts,
For yet is hope of Life and Victory:

Fore-

Foreflow no longer, make we hence amaine.

Exeunt.

Excursions. Enter Richard and Clifford.

Rich. Now Clifford, I have singled thee alone,
Suppose this arme is for the Duke of Yorke,
And this for Rutland, both bound to revenge,
Wer't thou environ'd with a Brazen wall.

Clif. Now Richard, I am with thee heere alone,
This is the hand that stabb'd thy Father Yorke,
And this the hand, that slew thy Brother Rutland,
And here's the heart, that triumphs in their death,
And cheere these hands, that slew thy Sire and Brother,
To execute the like upon thy selfe,
And so have at thee.

They Fight, Warwicke comes, Clifford flies.

Rich. Nay Warwicke, single out some other Chace,
For I my selfe will hunt this Wolfe to death. Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter King Henry alone.

Hen. This battell fares like to the mornings Warre;
When dying clouds contend, with growing light,
What time the Shepheard blowing of his nailes,
Can neither call it perfect day, nor night.
Now swayes it this way, like a Mighty Sea,
Forc'd by the Tide, to combat with the Winde:
Now swayes it that way, like the selfe-same Sea,
Forc'd to retyre by fury of the Winde.
Sometime, the Flood prevails; and then the Winde:
Now, one the better; then, another best;
Both tugging to be Victors, brest to brest:
Yet neither Conqueror, nor Conquered.
So is the equall poise of this fell Warre.
Heere on this Mole-hill will I sit me dowre,
To whom God will, there be the victory:
For Margaret my Queene, and Clifford too
Have chid me from the Battell: Swearing both,
They prosper best of all when I am thence.
Would I were dead, if Gods good will were so;
For what is in this world, but Greefe and Woe.
Oh God! me thinkes it were a happy life,
To be no better then a homely Swaine,
To sit upon a hill, as I doe now,
To carve out Dials quaintly, point by point,
Thereby to see the Minutes how they runne:
How many makes the Houre full compleate,
How many Hournes bring about the Day,
How many Dayes will finish up the Yeare,
How many Yeares, a Mortall man may live.
When this is knowne, then to divide the Times:
So many Hournes, must I tend my Flocke;
So many Hournes, must I take my Rest:
So many Hournes, must I Contemplate:
So many Hournes, must I Sport my selfe:
So many Dayes, my Ewes have bene with yong:
So many weekes, ere the poore Fooles will Eane:
So many yeares, ere I shall sheere the Fleece:
So Minutes, Hournes, Dayes, Monthes, and Yeares,
Past over to the end they were created,
Would I bring white haire, unto a Quiet grave.
Ah! what a life werethis? How sweet? how lovely?
Gives not the Hawthorne bush a sweeter shade
To Shepheards, looking on their silly Sheepe,
Then doth a rich Imbroider'd Canopy
To Kings, that feare their Subjects treachery?
Oh yes, it doth; a thousand fold it doth.
And to conclude, the Shepherds homely Curds,

His cold thinne drinke out of his Leather Bottle,
His wonted sleepe, under a fresh trees shade,
All which secure, and sweetly he enjoys,
Is farre beyond a Princes Delicates:
His Viands sparkling in a Golden Cup,
His body couched in a curious bed,
When Care, Mistrust, and Treason waits on him,

Alarum. Enter a Sonne that hath kill'd his Father, at one doore: and a Father that hath kill'd his Sonne at another doore.

Son. Ill blowes the winde that profits no body,
This man whom hand to hand I slew in fight,
May be possessed with some store of Crownes,
And I that (haply) take them from him now,
May yet (ere night) yeeld both my life and them
To some man else, as this dead man doth me.
Who's this? Oh God! It is my Fathers face,
Whom in this Conflict, I (unwares) have kill'd:
Oh heavy times! begetting such Events.
From London, by the King was I prest forth,
My Father being the Earle of Warwicks man,
Came on the part of Yorke; prett by his Maister:
And I, who at his hands receiv'd my life,
Have by my hands, of Life bereaved him.
Pardon me God, I knew not what I did:
And pardon Father, for I knew not thee.
My Teares shall wipe away these bloody markes:
And no more words, til they have flow'd their fill.

King. O pitteous spectacle! O bloody Times!
Whiles Lyons warre, and battaile for their Dennes,
Poore harmlesse Lambes abide their enmity.
Weepe wretched man: He ayde thee Teare for Teare,
And let our hearts and eyes, like Civill Warre,
Be blinde with teares, and break ore-charg'd with griefe

Enter Father, bearing of his Sonne.

Fa. Thou that so stoutly hath resisted me,
Give, me thy Gold, if thou hast any Gold:
For I have bought it with an hundred blowes.
But let me see: Is this our Foe-mans face?
Ah, no, no, no, it is mine onely Sonne.
Ah Boy, if any life be left in thee,
Throw up thine eye: see, see, what showres arise,
Blowne with the windie Tempest of my heart,
Vpon thy wounds, that killes mine Eye, and Heart.
O pittie God, this miserable Age!
What Stragems? how fell? how Butcherly?
Erroneous, mutinous, and vnnaturall,
This deadly quarrell daily doth beget?
O Boy! thy Father gave thee life too soone,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late.

Ks. Woe above woe: griefe, more then common griefe;
O that my death would stay these ruthfull deeds:
O pittie, pittie, gentle heaven pittie:
The Red Rose and the White are on his face,
The Fatall Colours of our striving Houses:
The one, his purple Blood right well resembles,
The other his pale Cheekes (me thinkes) presenteth:
Wither one Rose, and let the other flourish:
If you contend, a thousand lives must wither.

Son. How will my Mother, for a Fathers death
Take on with me, and ne're be satisfi'd?

Fa. How will my Wife, for slaughter of my Sonne,
Shed seas of Teares, and ne're be satisfi'd?

King. How will the Country, for these wofull chances,
Mis-thinke

Mis-thinke the King, and not be satisfied?

Son. Was ever sonne, so rew'd a Fathers death?

Fath. Was ever Father so bemoan'd his Sonne?

Hen. Was ever King so greev'd for Subjects woe?

Much is your sorrow; Mine, ten times so much.

Son. Ile beare thee hence, where I may weepe my fill.

Fath. These armes of mine shall be thy winding sheet:

My heart (sweet Boy) shall be thy Sepulcher,

For from my heart, thine Image ne're shall go.

My fighting brest, shall be thy Funerall bell;

And so obsequious will thy Father be,

Men for the losse of thee, having no more,

As Priam was for all his Valiant Sonnes,

Ile beare thee hence, and let them fight that will,

For I have murdered where I should not kill. Exit.

Hen. Sad-hearted-men, much overgone with Care;

Heere sits a King, more wofull then you are.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter the Queen, the Prince, and Exeter.

Prin. Fly Father, flye: for all your Friends are fled.

And Warwicke rages like a chafed Bull:

Away, for death doth hold us in pursuite.

Que. Mount you my Lord, towards Barwicke post a-maine:

Edward and Richard like a brace of Grey-hounds,

Having the fearfull flying Hare in sight,

With fiery eyes, sparkling for very wrath,

And bloody steele graspt in their yrefull hands

Are at our backes, and therefore hence amaine.

Exet. Away: for vengeance comes along with them.

Nay, stay not to expostulate, make speed,

Or else come after, Ile away before.

Hen. Nay take me with thee, good sweet Exeter:

Not that I feare to stay, but love to goe

Whither the Queene intends. Forward, away. Exeunt.

Alowd alarum. Enter Clifford Wounded.

Clif. Heere burnes my Candle out; I heere it dies,

Which whiles it lasted, gave King Henry light.

O Lancaster! I feare thy overthrow,

More then my Bodies parting with my Soule:

My Love and Feare, glew'd many Friends to thee,

And now I fall. Thy tough Commixtures melt,

Impairing Henry, strengthning misproud Yorke;

And whither flye the Gnats, but to the Sunne?

And who shines now, but Henries Enemies?

O Phœbus! had'st thou never given consent,

That Phaeton should checke thy fiery Steds,

Thy burning Carre never had scorched the earth.

And Henry, had'st thou sway'd as Kings should do,

Or as thy Father, and his Father did,

Giving no ground unto the house of Yorke,

They never then had sprung like Sommer Flies:

I, and ten thousand in this lucklesse Realme,

Had left no mourning Widdowes for our death,

And thou this day, had'st kept thy Chaire in peace.

For what doth cherriish Weeds, but gentle ayre?

And what makes Robbers bold, but too much lenity?

Bootlesse are Plaints, and Curelesse are my Wounds?

No way to flye, nor strength to hold out flight:

The Foe is mercilesse, and will not pittie:

For at their hands I have deserv'd no pittie.

The ayre hath got into my deadly Wounds,

And much effuse of blood, doth make me faint:

Come Yorke, and Richard, Warwicke, and the rest,

I stab'd your Fathers bosomes; Split my brest.

Alarum & Retreat. Enter Edward, Warwicke, Richard, and Souldiers, Montague, & Clarence.

Ed. Now breathe we Lords, good fortune bids us pause,

And smooth the frownes of War, with peacfull looks:

Some Troopes pursue the bloody-minded Queene,

That led calme Henry, though he were a King,

As doth a Saile, fill'd with a fretting Gust

Command an Argosie to stemme the Waves:

But thinke you (Lords) that Clifford fled with them?

War. No, 'tis impossible he should escape:

(For though before his face I speake the word)

Your Brother Richard markt him for the Grave.

And wheresoere he is, hee's surely dead. Clifford grones

Rich. Whose soule is that which takes hir heavy leave?

A deadly grone, like life and deaths departing.

See who it is.

Ed. And now the Battaile's ended,

If Friend or Foe, let him be gently used.

Rich. Revoke that doome of mercy, for 'tis Clifford,

Who not contented that he lopp'd the Branch

In hewing Rutland, when his leaves put forth,

But set his murth'ring knife unto the Roote,

From whence that tender spray did sweetly spring,

I meane our Princely Father, Duke of Yorke.

War. From off the gates of Yorke, fetch down y head,

Your Fathers head, which Clifford placed there:

In stead whereof, let this supply the roome,

Measure for measure, must be answered.

Ed. Bring forth that fatall Schreechowe to our house,

That nothing sung but death, to us and ours:

Now death shall stop his dismall threatning sound,

And his ill-boading tongue, no more shall speake.

War. I thinke his understanding is bereft:

Speake Clifford, dost thou know who speakes to thee?

Darke cloudy death ore-shades his beames of life,

And he nor sees, nor heares us, what we say.

Rich. O would he did, and so (perhaps) he doth,

'Tis but his policy to counterfet,

Becaute he would avoid such bitter taunts

Which in the time of death he gave our Father.

Cl. If so thou think'st,

Vex him with eager Words.

Rich. Clifford, aske mercy, and obtaine no grace.

Ed. Clifford, repent in bootlesse penitence.

War. Clifford, devise excuses for thy faults.

Cl. While we devise fell Tortures for thy faults!

Rich. Thou didd'st love Yorke, and I am son to Yorke.

Edw. Thou pittied'st Rutland, I will pittie thee.

Cl. Where's Captaine Margaret, to fence you now?

War. They mocke thee Clifford,

Swear as thou was't wont.

Rich. What, not an Oath? Nay then the world go's hard,

When Clifford cannot spare his Friends an oath:

I know by that he's dead, and by my Soule.

If this right hand would buy but two howres life,

That I (in all despight) might rayle at him,

This hand should chop it off: & with the issuing Blood

Stifle the Villaine, whose unslanch'd thirst

Yorke, and yong Rutland could not satisfie.

War. I, but he's dead. Off with the Traitors head,

And reare it in the place your Fathers stand,

And now to London with Triumphant march,

There

There to be crowned Englands Royall King:
From whence, shall Warwicke cut the Sea to France,
And aske the Lady Bona for thy Queene:
So shalt thou sinow both these Lands together,
And having France thy Friend, thou shalt not dread
The scattred Foe, that hopes to rile agine:
For though they cannot greatly sting to hurt,
Yet looke to have them buz to offend thine eares.
First, will I see the Coronation,
And then to Brittain Ile crosse the Sea;
To effect this marriage, so it please my Lord.

Ed. Even as thou wilt sweet Warwicke, let it be:
For on thy shoulder do I builde my Seate;
And never will I undertake the thing
Wherein thy counsaile and consent is wanting:
Richard, I will create thee Duke of Gloucester,
And George of Clarence; Warwicke as our Selfe,
Shall do, and undo as him pleaseth best.

Rich. Let me be Duke of Clarence, George of Gloster,
For Glosters Dukedome is too ominous.

War. Tut, that's a foolish observation:

Richard, be Duke of Gloster: Now to London,
To see these Honors in possession.

Exeunt.

Enter Sinklo, and Humfrey, with Crosse-bowes in their hands.

(our selves:

Sink. Vnder this thicke growne brake, wee'l shrowd
For through this Laund anon the Deere will come,
And in this covert will we make our Stand,
Culling the principall of all the Deere.

Hum. Ile stay above the hill, so both may shoot,

Sink. That cannot be, the noise of thy Crosse-bow
Will scarre the Heard, and so my shoot is lost:
Heere stand we both, and ayme we at the best:
And for the time shall not seeme tedious,
Ile tell thee what befell me on a day,
In this selfe-place, where now we meane to stand.

Sink. Heere comes a man, let's stay till he be past:

Enter the King with a Prayer booke.

Hen. From Scotland am I stolne even of pure love,
To greet mine owne Land with my wishfull sight:
No Harry, Harry, 'tis no Land of thine,
Thy place is fill'd, thy Scepter wrung from thee,
Thy Balme washt off, wherewith thou was Annointed:
No bending knee will call thee Cesar now,
No humble suiters prease to speake for right:
No, not a man comes for redresse of thee:
For how can I helpe them, and not my selfe?

Sin. I, heere's a Deere, whose skin's a Keepers Fee:
This is the quondam King; Let's seize upon him.

Hen. Let me embrace the fowre Adversaries,
For Wise men say, it is the wisest course.

Hum. Why linger we? Let us lay hands upon him.

Sink. Forbear a-while, wee'l heare a little more.

Hen. My Queene and Son are gone to France for aid:
And (as I heare) the great Commanding Warwicke
Is thither gone, to crave the French Kings Sister
To wife for Edward. If this newes be true,
Poore Queene, and Sonne, your labour is but lost:
For Warwicke is a subtle Orator:
And Lewis a Prince soone wonne with moving words:
By this account then, Margaret may winne him,
For she's a woman to be pittied much:
Her sighes will make a batt'ry in his brest,
Her teares will pierce into a Marble heart:

The Tyger will be milde, whiles she doth mourne;
And Nero will be tainted with remorse,
To heare and see her plaints, her Brinish Teares.
I, but shee's come to begge, Warwicke to give:
Shee on his left side, craving ayde for Henry;
He on his right, asking a wife for Edward.
Shee Weepes, and sayes, her Henry is depos'd:
He Smiles, and sayes, his Edward is instaul'd;
That she (poore Wretch) for greefe can speake no more:
While Warwicke tels his Title, smoothes the Wrong,
Inferreth arguments of mighty strength,
And in conclusion winnes the King from her,
With promise of his Sister, and what else,
To strengthen and support King Edwards place.
O Margaret, thus 'twill be, and thou (poore soule)
Art then forsaken, as thou went'st forlorne.

Hum. Say, what art thou talk'ft of Kings & Queene?

King. More then I seeme, and lesse then I was born to:
A man at least, for lesse I should not be:

And men may talke of Kings, and why not I?

Hum. I, but thou talk'ft, as if thou wer't a King,

King. Why so I am (in Minde) and that's enough.

Hum. But if thou be a King, where is thy Crowne?

King. My Crowne is in my heart, not on my head:
Not deck'd with Diamonds, and Indian stones:
Nor to be seene: my Crowne, is call'd Content,
A Crowne it is, that fildome Kings enjoy.

Hum. Well, if you be a King crown'd with Content,
Your Crowne Content, and you, must be contented
To go along with us. For (as we thinke)
You are the king, King Edward hath depos'd:
And we his subjects, sworne in all Allegiance,
Will apprehend you, as his Enemy.

King. But did you never sweare, and breake an Oath.

Hum. No, never such an Oath, nor will not now.

King. Where did you dwell when I was K. of England?

Hum. Heere in this Countrey, where we now remaine.

King. I was annointed King at nine monthes old,
My Father, and my Grandfather were Kings:
And you were sworne true Subjects unto me:
And tell me then, have you not broke your Oathes?

Si. No, for we were Subjects, but while you were king.

King. Why? Am I dead? Do I not breath a Man?
Ah simple men, you know not what you sweare:
Looke, as I blow this Feather from my Face,

And as the Ayre blowes it to me againe,
Obeying with my winde when I do blow,
And yeelding to another, when it blowes,
Commanded alwayes by the greater gust:
Such is the lightnesse of you, common men.
But do not breake your Oathe, for of that sinne,
My milde intreaty shall not make you guilty.
Go where you will, the King shall be commanded,
And be you kings, command, and Ile obey.

Sink. We are true Subjects to the King,
King Edward.

King. So would you be againe to Henry,
If he were seated as King Edward is.

Sink. We charge you in Gods name & the Kings,
To go with us unto the Officers.

King. In Gods name lead, your Kings name be obeyd,
And what God will, that let your King performe,
And what he will, I humbly yeeld unto.

Exeunt.

Enter K. Edward, Gloster, Clarence, Lady Gray.
King. Brother of Gloster, at S. Albons field

This

This Ladyes Husband, Sir Richard Grey, was slaine,
His Land then seiz'd on by the Conqueror,
Her suit is now; to repossesse those Lands,
Which wee in Iustice cannot well deny,
Because in Quarrell of the House of Torke,
The worthy Gentleman did lose his Life.

Rich. Your Highnesse shall doe well to graunt her suit:
It were dishonor to deny it her.

King. It were no lesse, but yet Ile make a pawse.

Rich. Yea, is it so:

I see the Lady hath a thing to graunt,
Before the King will graunt her humble suit.

Cl. Hee knowes the Game, how true hee keeps the winde?

Rich. Silence.

King. Widow, we will consider of your suit,
And come some other time to know our minde.

Wid. Right gracious Lord, I cannot brooke delay,
May it please your Highnesse to resolve me now,
And what your pleasure is, shall satisfie me.

Rich. I Widow? then Ile warrant you all your Lands,
And if what pleases him, shall please you:
Fight closer, or good faith you'le catch a Blow.

Cl. I feare her not, unlesse she chance to fall.

Rich. God forbid that, for hee'le take vantages.

King. How many Children hast thou, Widow? tell me.

Cl. I thinke he meanes to begge a Child of her.

Rich. Nay then whip me: hee'le rather give her two.

Wid. Three, my most gracious Lord.

Rich. You shall have foure, if you'le be rul'd by him.

King. 'Twere pittie they should lose their Fathers Lands.

Wid. Be pittifull, dread Lord, and graunt it then.

King. Lords give us leave, Ile trye this Widowes wit.

Rich. I, good leave have you, for you will have leave,
Till Youth take leave, and leave you to the Crutch.

King. Now tell me, Madame, doe you love your Children?

Wid. I, full as dearly as I love my selfe.

King. And would you not doe much to doe them
good?

Wid. To doe them good, I would sustayne some harme.

King. Then get your Husbands Lands, to doe them
good.

Wid. Therefore I came unto your Majesty.

King. Ile tell you how these Lands are to be got.

Wid. So shall you bind me to your Highnesse service.

King. What service wilt thou doe me, if I give them?

Wid. What you command, that rests in me to doe.

King. But you will take exceptions to my Boone.

Wid. No, gracious Lord, except I cannot doe it.

King. I, but thou canst doe what I meane to aske.

Wid. Why then I will doe what your Grace commands.

Rich. Hee plyes her hard, and much Raine weares the Marble.

Cl. As red as fire? nay then, her Wax must melt.

Wid. Why stoppes my Lord? shall I not heare my Taske?

King. An easie Taske, 'tis but to love a King.

Wid. That's soone perform'd, because I am a Subject.

King. Why then, thy Husbands Lands I freely give thee.

Wid. I take my leave with many thousand thanke.

Rich. The March is made, she seales it with a Curtsie.

King. But stay thee, 'tis the fruits of love I meane.

Wid. The fruits of Love, I meane, my loving Liege.

King. I, but I feare me in another sence.

What Love, think'it thou, I sue so much to get?

Wid. My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers,
That love which Vertue begges, and Vertue graunts.

King. No, by my troth, I did not meane such love.

Wid. Why then you meane not as I thought you did.

King. But now you partly may perceive my minde.

Wid. My minde will never graunt what I perceive
Your Highnesse aymes at, if I ayme aright.

King. To tell thee plaine, I ayme to lye with thee.

Wid. To tell you plaine, I had rather lye in Prison.

King. Why then thou shalt not have thy Husbands
Lands.

Wid. Why then mine Honesty shall be my Dower,
For by that losse, I will not purchase them.

King. Therein thou wrong'st thy Children mightily.

Wid. Herein your Highnesse wrongs both them & me:
But mighty Lord, this merry inclination
Accords not with the sadnesse of my suit:
Please you dismissee me, either with I, or no.

King. I, if thou wilt say I to my request:
No, if thou do'st say No to my demand.

Wid. Then No, my Lord: my suit is at an end.

Rich. The Widow likes him not, shes knits her Browes.

Clarence. Hee is thee bluntest Wooer in Christen-dome.

King. Her Looks doe argue her replete with Modesty,
Her Words doe shew her Wit-incomparable,
All her perfections challenge Sovereignty,
One way, or other, she is for a King,
And shee shall be my Love, or else my Queene.
Say, that King Edward take thee for his Queene?

Wid. 'Tis better said then done, my gracious Lord:
I am a subject fit to jeast withall,
But farre unfit to be a Sovereigne.

King. Sweet Widow, by my State I sweare to thee,
I speake no more then what my Soule intends,
And that is, to enjoy thee for my Love.

Wid. And that is more then I will yeeld unto:
I know, I am too meane to be your Queene,
And yet too good to be your Concubine.

King. You cavill, Widow, I did meane my Queene.

Wid. 'I will grieve your Grace, my sonnes should call you Father.

King. No more, then when my Daughters
Call thee Mother.

Thou art a Widow, and thou hast some Children,
And by Gods Mother, I being but a Batchelor,
Have other-some. Why, 'tis a happy thing,
To be the Father unto many Sonnes:

Answer no more, for thou shalt be my Queene.

Rich. The Ghostly Father now hath done his Shrift.

Cl. When hee was made a Shriver, 'twas for shift.

King. Brothers, you muse what Chat wee two have had.

Richard. The Widow likes it not, for shee lookes sad.

King. You'd thinke it strange, if I should marry
her.

Cl. To whom my Lord?

King. Why Clarence, to my selfe.

Rich. That

Rich. That would be tenne dayes wonder at the least.

Clar. That's a day longer then a Wonder lasts.

Rich. By so much is the Wonder in extremes.

King. Well, jeaft on Brethers : I can tell you both,
Her fuit is graunted for her Husbands Lands.

Enter a Noble man.

Nob. My gracious Lord, Henry your Foe is taken,
And brought your Prisoner to your Pallace Gate.

King. See that he be convey'd unto the Tower:
And goe wee Brethers to the man that tooke him,
To question of his apprehension.

Widow goe you along: Lords use her honourably

Exeunt.

Manet Richard.

Rich. I, Edward will use Women honourably.
Would he were waitted, Marrow, Bones, and all,
That from his Loynes no hopefull Branch may spring,
To crosse me from the Golden time I looke for:
And yet, betweene my Soules desire, and me,
The lustfull Edwards Title buried,
Is Clarence, Henry, and his Sonne young Edward,
And all the unlook'd-for Issue of their Bodies,
To take their Roomes, ere I can place my selfe:
A cold premeditation for my purpose.
Why then I doe but dreame on Sovereignty,
Like one that stands upon a Promontorie,
And spies a farre-off shore, where he would tread,
Wishing his foot were equall with his eye,
And chides the Sea, that sunders him from thence,
Saying hee'le lade it dry, to have his way:
So doe I wish the Crowne, being so farre off,
And so I chide the meanes that keepes me from it,
And so (I say) Ile cut the Causes off,
Flattering me with impossibilities:
My Eyes too quicke, my Heart o're-weenes too much,
Vnlesse my Hand and Strength could equall them.
Well, say there is no Kingdome then for Richard:
What other Pleasure can the World afford?
Ile make my Heaven in a Ladies Lappe,
And decke my Body in gay Ornaments,
And 'witch sweet Ladies with my Words and Lookes.
Oh miserable Thought! and more unlikely,
Then to accomplish twenty Golden Crownes.
Why Love forswore me in my Mothers Wombe:
And for I should not deale in her soft Lawes,
Shee did corrupt frayle Nature with some Bribe,
To shrinke mine Arme up like a wither'd Shrub,
To make an envious Mountaine on my Back,
Where sits Deformity to mocke my Body;
To shape my Legges of an unequall size,
To dis-proportion me in every part:
Like to a Chaos, or an un-lick'd Beare-whelp,
That carries no impression like the Damme.
And am I then a man to be belov'd?
Oh monstrous fault, to harbour such a thought.
Then since this Earth affords no Ioy to me,
But to command, to check, to o're-beare such,
As are of better Person then my selfe:
Ile make my Heaven, to dreame upon the Crowne,
And whiles I live, t'account this World but Hell,
Vntill my mis-shap'd Trunke, that beares this Head,
Be round impaled with a glorious Crowne.
And yet I know not how to get the Crowne,
For many Lives stand betweene me and home:

And I, like one lost in a Thorny Wood,
That rents the Thornes, and is rent with the Thornes,
Seeking a way, and straying from the way,
Not knowing how to finde the open Ayre,
But toyling desperately to finde it out,
Torment my selfe, to catch the English Crowne:
And from that torment I will free my selfe,
Or hew my way out with a bloody Axe.
Why I can smile, and murder whiles I smile,
And cry, Content, to that which grieves my Heart,
And wet my Cheekes with artificiall Teares,
And frame my Face to all occasions.
Ile drowne more Saylers then the Mermaid shall,
Ile slay more gazers then the Basiliske,
Ile play the Orator as well as Nestor,
Deceive more flyly then Ulysses could,
And like a Simon, take another Troy.
I can adde Colours to the Camelion,
Change shapes with Proteus, for advantages,
And set the murtherous Machevill to Schoole.
Can I doe this, and cannot get a Crowne?
Tut, were it farther off, Ile plucke it downe. Exit.

Flourish.

*Enter Lewis the French King, his Sister Bona, his Admirall, call'd Bourbon: Prince Edward,
Queene Margaret, and the Earle of Oxford.
Lewis sits, and riseth up againe.*

Lewis. Faire Queene of England, worthy Margaret,
Sit downe with us : it ill befits thy State,
And Birth, that thou should'st stand, while Lewis doth sit.

Mar. No, mighty King of France: now Margaret,
Must strike her saile, and learne a while to serve,
Where Kings command. I was (I must confesse)
Great Albions Queene, in former Golden dayes:
But now mischance hath trod my Title downe,
And with dishonor layd me on the ground,
Where I must take like Seat unto my fortune,
And to my humble Seat conforme my selfe.

Lewis. Why say, faire Queene, whence springs this deepe despaire?

Mar. From such a cause, as fills mine eyes with tears,
And stops my tongue, while heart is drown'd in cares.

Lew. What ere it be, be thou still like thy selfe,
And sit thee by our side. Sits her by him.
Yeeld not thy necke to Fortunes yoake,
But let thy dauntlesse minde still ride in triumph,
Over all mischance.

Be plaine, Queene Margaret, and tell thy grieve,
It shall be eas'd, if France can yeeld reliefe.

Mar. Those gracious words
Revive my drooping thoughts,
And give my tongue ty'd sorrowes leave to speake.
Now therefore be it knowne to Noble Lewis,
That Henry, sole possessor of my Love,
Is, of a King, become a banisht man,
And forc'd to live in Scotland a Forlorne;
While proud ambitious Edward, Duke of Yorke,
Vsurpes the Regall Title, and the Seat
Of Englands true anoynted lawfull King.
This is the cause that I, poore Margaret,
With this my Sonne, Prince Edward Henries Heire,
Am come to crave thy just and lawfull ayde:
And if thou faile us, all our hope is done.
Scotland hath will to helpe, but cannot helpe:

Our people, and our Peeres, are both mis-led,
Our Treasure seiz'd, our Souldiers put to flight,
And (as thou seest) our selves in heavy plight.

Lew. Renewed Queene,

With patience calme the Storme,
While we bethinke a meanes to breake it off.

Marg. The more we stay, the stronger growes our Foe.

Lew. The more I stay, the more Ile succour thee.

Marg. O, but impatience waiteth on true sorrow.
And see where comes the breeder of my sorrow.

Enter Warwick.

Lew. What's he approacheth boldly to our presence?

Marg. Our Earle of Warwicke, Edwards greatest friend.

Lewis. Welcome brave Warwicke, what beings thee to France? He descends. She arises.

Marg. I, now begins a second Storme to rise,
For this is he that moves both Winde and Tyde.

Warw. From worthy Edward, King of Albion,
My Lord and Sovereigne, and thy vowed Friend,
I come (in Kindnesse, and unfayned Love)

First, to doe greetings to thy Royall Person,
And then to crave a League of Amity :

And lastly, to confirme that Amity
With Nuptiall Knot, if thou vouchsafe to graunt
That vertuous Lady Bona, thy faire Sister,
To Englands King, in lawfull Marriage.

Marg. If that goe forward, Henries hope is done.

Warw. And gracious Madam, Speaking to Bona.
In our Kings behalfe,

I am commanded, with your leave and favour,
Humbly to kisse you Hand, and with my Tongue
To tell the passion of my Soveraignes Heart ;
Where Fame, late entring at his heedfull Eares,
Hath plac'd thy beauties Image, and thy Vertue.

Marg. King Lewis, and Lady Bona, heare me speake,
Before you answer Warwicke. His demand
Springs not from Edwards well-meant honest Love,
But from Deceit, bred by Necessity :

For how can Tyrants safely governe home,
Vnlesse abroad they purchase great allyance ?

To prove him Tyrant, this reason may suffice,
That Henry liveth still : but were he dead,

Yet here Prince Edward stands, King Henries Sonne.

Looke therefore Lewis, that by this League and Marriage
Thou draw not on thy Danger, and Dis-honor :

For though Vsurpers sway the rule a while,

Yet Heavens are just, and Time suppresseth Wrongs.

War. Injurious Margaret.

Edw. And why not Queene?

War. Because thy father Henry did usurpe,
And thou no more art Prince, then she is Queene.

Oxf. Then Warwicke disanulls great John of Gaunt,
Which did subdue the greatest part of Spaine ;

And after John of Gaunt, Henry the Fourth,

Whose Wisdome was a Mirror to the wisest :

And after that wise Prince, Henry the Fift,

Who by his Prowesse conquered all France :

From these, our Henry lineally descends,

War. Oxford, how haps it in this smooth discourse,

You told not, how Henry the Sixt hath lost

All that, which Henry the Fift had gotten ;

Me thinkes these Peeres of France should smile at that.

But for the rest : you tell a Pedigree

Of threescore and two yeeres, a silly time

To make prescription for a Kingdomes worth.

Oxf. Why Warwicke, canst thou speake against thy Liege

Whom thou obeyd'st thirty and six yeeres,

And not bewray thy Treason with a blush ?

War. Can Oxford, that did ever fence the right,

Now buckler falsehood with a Pedigree ?

For shame leave Henry, and call Edward King.

Oxf. Call him my King, by whose injurious doome

My elder Brother, the Lord Aubrey Vere

Was done to death ? and more then so, my Father,

Even in the downe-fall of his mellow'd yeeres,

When Nature brought him to the doore of Death ;

No Warwicke, no : while Life upholds this Arme,

This Arme upholds the House of Lancaster.

Warw. And I the house of Torke.

Lew. Queene Margaret, Prince Edward, and Oxford

Vouchsafe at our request, to stand aside,

While I use further conference with Warwicke.

They stand aloofe.

Mar. Heavens grant, that Warwicks words bewitch him not.

Lew. Now Warwicke, tell me even upon thy conscience

Is Edward your true King ? for I were loth

To linke with him, that were not lawfull chosen.

Warw. Thereon I pawne my Credit, and mine Honor.

Lew. But is he gracious in the peoples eye ?

War. The more, that Henry was unfortunate.

Lew. Then further : all dissembling set aside,

Tell me for truth, the measure of his love,

Vnto our Sister Bona.

War. Such it seemes,

As may befeeme a Monarch like himselfe.

My selfe have often heard him say, and sweare,

That this his Love was an externall Plant,

Whereof the Root was fixt in Vertues ground,

The Leaves and Fruit maintain'd with Beauties Sunne,

Exempt from Envy, but not from Disdaine,

Vnlesse the Lady Bona quit his paine.

Lew. Now Sister, let us heare your firme resolve.

Bona. Your graunt, or your deny, shall be mine,

Yet I confesse, that often ere this day, Speaks to War.

When I have heard your Kings desert recounted,

Mine eare hath tempted judgement to desire.

Lew. Then Warwicke, this :

Our Sister shall be Edwards.

And now forthwith shall Articles be drawne,

Touching the Ioynture that your King must make,

Which with her Dowry shall be counter-poy'sd :

Draw neere, Queene Margaret, and be a witnesse,

That Bona shall be Wife to the English King.

Prin. Edw. To Edward, but not to the English King.

Marg. Deceitfull Warwicke, it was thy device,

By this alliance to make voyd my suit :

Before thy comming, Lewis was Henries friend.

Lew. And still is friend to him, and Margaret,

But if your Title to the Crowne be weake,

As may appeare by Edwards good successe :

Then 'tis but reason, that I be releas'd

From giving ayde, which late I promised.

Yet shall you have all kindnesse at my hand,

That your estate requires, and mine can yeeld.

Warw. Henry now lives in Scotland, at his ease ;

Where

Where having nothing, nothing can he lose.
And as for you your selfe (our quondam Queene)
You have a Father able to maintaine you,
And better 'twere, you troubled him, then France.

Mar. Peace impudent, and shamelesse Warwicke, Peace,
Proud setter up, and puller downe of Kings,
I will not hence, till with my Talke and Teares
(Both full of Truth) I make King Lewis behold
Thy flye conveyance, and thy Lords false love.

Poste blowing a horn within.
For both of you are Birds of selfe-tame Feather.

Lew. Warwicke, this is some poste to us, or thee.

Enter a Poste.

Poste. My Lord Ambassador,
These Letters are for you. Speaks to Warwicke.
Sent from your Brother Marquesse Mountague.
These from our King, unto your Majesty. To Lewis.
And Madam, these for you, To Margaret.
From whom, I know not.

They all read their Letters.

Oxf. I like it well, that our faire Queene and Mistris
Smiles at her newes, while Warwicke frownes at his.

Prince Edm. Nay marke how Lewis stampes as he were netled. I hope, all's for the best.

Lew. Warwicke, what are thy Newes?
And yours, faire Queene?

Mar. Mine such, as fill my heart with unhop'd joyes.

War. Mine full of sorrow, and hearts discontent.

Lew. What? has your King marry'd the Lady Grey?
And now to looth your Forgery, and his,
Sends me a Paper to perswade me Patience?
Is this th' Alliance that he seekes with France?
Dare he presume to scorne us in this manner?

Mar. I told your Majesty as much before:
This proveth Edwards Love, and Warwicks honesty.

War. King Lewis, I here protest in sight of heaven,
And by the hope I have of heavenly blisse,
That I am cleere from this misdeed of Edwards;
No more my King, for he dishonors me,
But most himselfe, if he could see his shame.
Did I forget, that by the house of Yorke
My father came untimely to his death?
Did I let passe th' abuse done to my Neece?
Did I impale him with the Regall Crowne?
Did I put Henry from his Native Right?
And am I guerdon'd at the last, with Shame?
Shame on himselfe, for my Desert is Honor.
And to repaire my Honor lost for him,
I heere renounce him, and returne to Henry.
My Noble Queene, let former grudges passe,
And henceforth, I am thy true Servitour:
I will revenge his wrong to Lady Bona,
And replant Henry in his former state.

Mar. Warwicke,
These words have turn'd my Hate, to Love,
And I forgive, and quite forget old faults,
And joy that thou becom'st King Henries Friend.

War. So much his Friend, I, his unfained Friend,
That if King Lewis vouchsafe to furnish us
With some few Bands of chosen Souldiors,
He undertake to Land them on our Coast,
And force the Tyrant from his seat by Warre.
'Tis not his new-made Bride shall succour him,
And as for Clarence, as my Letters tell me,
He's very likely now to fall from him,
For matching more for wanton Lust, then Honor,

Or then for strength and safety of our Country.

Bona. Deere brother, how shall Bona be reveng'd,
But by thy helpe to this distressed Queene?

Mar. Renowned Prince, how shall Poore Henry live,
Vnlesse thou rescue him from foule despaire?

Bona. My quarrell, and this English Queens, are one.

War. And mine faire Lady Bona, joynes with yours.

Lew. And mine, with hers, and thine, and Margarets.
Therefore at last, I firmly am resolv'd
You shall have ayde.

Mar. Let me give humble thanks for all, at once,

Lew. Then Englands Messenger, returne in Poste,
And tell false Edward, thy supposed King,
That Lewis of France, is sending over Maskers
To revell it with him, and his new Bride.

Thou seest what's past, goe feare thy King withall.

Bona. Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
I weare the Willow Garland for his sake.

Mar. Tell him, my mourning weeds are layde aside,
And I am ready to put Armor on.

War. Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong,
And therefore Ile un-Crowne him, er't be long.
There's thy reward, be gone. Exit Poste.

Lew. But Warwicke,
Thou and Oxford, with five thousand men
Shall crosse the Seas, and bid false Edward battaile:
And as occasion serves, this Noble Queene
And Prince, shall follow with a fresh Supply,
Yet ere thou goe, but answer me one doubt:
What Pledge have we of thy firme Loyalty?

War. This shall assure my constant Loyalty,
That if our Queene, and this young Prince agree,
He joyne mine eldest daughter, and my Ioy,
To him forthwith, in holy Wedlocke bands.

Mar. Yes, I agree, and thanke you for your Motion.
Sonne Edward, she is Faire and Vertuous,
Therefore delay not, give thy hand to Warwicke,
And with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable,
That onely Warwicks daughter shall be thine.

Fri. Ed. Yes, I accept her, for she well deserves it,
And heere to pledge my Vow, I give my hand.

He gives his hand to Warwicke.

Lew. Why stay we now? These souldiers shalbe levied,
And thou Lord Bourbon, our High Admirall
Shalt waft them over with our Royall Fleete.
I long till Edward fall by Warres mischance,
For mocking Marriage with a Dame of France.

Exeunt. Manet Warwicke.

War. I came from Edward as Ambassador,
But I returne his sworne and mortall Foe:
Matter of Marriage was the charge he gave me,
But dreadfull Warre shall answer his demand.
Had he none else to make a stale but me?
Then none but I, shall turne his Iest to Sorrow,
I was the Cheefe that rais'd him to the Crowne.
And Ile be Cheefe to bring him downe againe:
Not that I pittie Henries misery,
But seeke Revenge on Edwards mockery. Exit.

Enter Richard, Clarence, Somerset, and Mountague.

Rich. Now tell me Brother Clarence, what thinke you
Of this new Marriage with the Lady Grey?
Hath not our Brother made a worthy choyce?

Clar. Alas, you know, 'tis farre from hence to France,
How

How could he stay till Warwicke made returne?

Son. My Lords, forbear this talke : here comes the King.

Flourish.

Enter King Edward, Lady Grey, Pembroke, Stafford, Hastings : foure stand on one side, and foure on the other.

Rich. And his well-chosen Bride.

Clar. I mind to tell him plainly what I thinke.

King. Now brother of Clarence,

How like you our Choyce,

That you stand penfive, as halfe malecontent?

Clar. As well as Lewis of France,

Or the Earle of Warwicke,

Which are so weake of courage, and in judgement,

That they'le take no offence at our abuse.

King. Suppose they take offence without a cause :

They are but Lewis and Warwicke, I am Edward,

Your King and *Warwicke*s, and must have my will.

Rich. And shall have your will, because our King :

Yet halty Marriage seldome proveth well.

King. Yes Brother Richard, are you offended too?

Rich. Not I : no :

God forbid, that I should with them sever'd,

Whom God hath joyn'd together :

I, and 'twere pittie, to sunder them,

That yoake so well together.

King. Setting your skornes, and your dislike aside,

Tell me some reason, why the Lady Grey

Should not become my Wife, and Englands Queene?

And you too, Somerset and Mountague,

Speake freely what you thinke.

Clar. Then this is mine opinion :

That King Lewis becomes your Enemy,

For mocking him about the Marriage

Of the Lady Bona.

Rich. And Warwicke, doing what you gave in charge, Is now dis-honored by this New Marriage.

King. What, if both Lewis and Warwicke be appeas'd, By such invention as I can devise?

Moun. Yet, to have joyn'd with France in such alliance, Would more have strength'ned this our Commonwealth 'Gainst forraine stormes, then any home-bred Marriage.

Hast. Why, knowes not Mountague, that of it selfe, England is safe, if true within it selfe?

Moun. Yes, but the safer, when 'tis back'd with France.

Hast. 'Tis better using France, then trusting France ;

Let us be back'd with God, and with the Seas,

Which he hath giv'n for fence impregnable,

And with their helpes, onely defend our selves :

In them, and in our selves, our safety lyes.

Clar. For this one speech, Lord Hastings well deserves To have the Heire of the Lord Hungerford.

King. I, what of that? it was my will, and graunt,

And for this once, my Will shall stand for Law.

Rich. And yet me thinks, your Grace hath not done wel

To give the Heire and Daughter of Lord Scales

Vnto the Brother of your loving Bride ;

She better would have fitted me, or Clarence :

But in your Bride you bury Brotherhood.

Clar. Or else you would not have bestow'd the Heire

Of the Lord Bonvill on your new Wives Sonne,

And leave your Brothers to goe speede elsewhere.

King. Alas, poore Clarence : is it for a Wife

That thou art malecontent? I will provide thee.

Clar. In chusing for your selfe,

You shew'd your judgement :

Which being shallow, you shall give me leave

To play the Broker in mine owne behalfe;

And to that end, I shortly mind to leave you.

King. Leave me, or tarry, Edward will be King.

And not be ty'd unto his Brothers will.

Lady Grey. My Lords, before it pleas'd his Majesty

To raise my State to Title of a Queene,

Doe me but right, and you must all confesse,

That I was not ignoble of Descent,

And meaner then my selfe have had like fortune.

But as this Title honors me and mine,

So your dislikes, to whom I would be pleasing,

Doth cloud my joyes with danger, and with sorrow.

King. My Love, forbear to fawne upon their frownes:

What danger, or what sorrow can befall thee,

So long as Edward is thy constant friend,

And their true Sovereigne, whom they must obey?

Nay, whom they shall obey, and love thee too,

Vnlesse they seeke for hatred at my hands :

Which if they doe, yet will I keepe thee safe,

And they shall feelee the vengeance of my wrath.

Rich. I heare, yet say not much, but thinke the more.

Enter a Post.

King. Now Messenger, what Letters, or what Newes from France?

Post. My Sovereigne Liege, no Letters, and few words, But such, as I (without your speciall pardon)

Dare not relate.

King. Goe too, we pardon thee :

Therefore, in brieft, tell their words,

As nere as thou canst guesse them.

What answer makes King Lewis, unto our Letters?

Post. At my depart, these were his very words :

Goe tell false Edward, the supposed King,

That Lewis of France is sending over Maskers,

To revell it with him, and his new Bride.

King. Is Lewis so brave? belike he thinkes me Henry.

But what said Lady Bona to my Marriage?

Post. These were her words, ur'd with mild disdain:

Tell him, in hope he'll prove a Widower shortly,

He weare the Willow Garland for his sake.

King. I blame not her; she could say little lesse :

She had the wrong. But what said Henries Queene?

For I heard, that she was there in place.

Post. Tell him (quoth she)

My mourning Weedes are done,

And I am ready to put Armour on.

King. Belike she minds to play the Amazon.

But what said Warwicke to these injuries?

Post. He, more incens'd against your Majesty,

Then all the rest, discharg'd me with these words :

Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong,

And therefore Ile uncrowne him, er't belong.

King. Ha? durst the Traytor breath out so prowd words?

Well, I will arme me, being thus fore-warn'd :

They shall have Warres, and pay for their presumption.

But say, is Warwicke friends with Margaret?

Post. I, gracious Sovereigne,

They are so link'd in friendship,

That yong Prince Edwards marryes Warwicke Daughter.

Clar. Belike, the elder ;

Clarence will have the yonger.

Now Brother King farewell, and sit you fast,
For I will hence to Warwicke other Daughter,
That though I want a Kingdome, yet in Marriage
I may not prove inferior to your selfe.
You that love me, and Warwicke, follow me.

Exit Clarence, and Somerset followes.

Rich. Not I:

My thoughts ayme at a further matter:

I stay not for the love of Edward, but the Crowne.

King. Clarence and Somerset both gone to Warwicke?

Yet am I arm'd against the worst can happen:

And haste is needfull in this desp'rate case.

Pembrooke and Stafford, you in our behalfe

Goe levy men, and make prepare for Warre;

They are already, or quickly will be landed:

My selfe in person will straight follow you.

Exeunt Pembrooke, and Stafford.

But ere I goe, Hastings and Mountague

Rosolve my doubt: you twaine, of all the rest,

Are neere to Warwicke, by blood, and by allyance:

Tell me, if you love Warwicke more then me;

If it be so, then both depart to him:

I rather wish you foes, then hollow friends.

But if you minde to hold your true obedience,

Give me assurance with some friendly Vow,

That I may never have you in suspect.

Mount. So God helpe Mountague, as he proves true.

Hast. And Hastings, as he favours Edwards cause.

King. Now, brother Richard, will you stand by us?

Rich. I, in despite of all that shall withstand you.

King. Why so: then am I sure of Victory.

Now therefore let us hence, and lose no howre,

Till we meet Warwicke, with his forraine powre.

Exeunt.

Enter Warwicke, and Oxford in England, with French Souldiours.

Warw. Trust me, my Lord, all hitherto goes well,
The common people by numbers swarme to us.

Enter Clarence, and Somerset.

But see where Somerset and Clarence comes:

Speake suddenly, my Lords, are wee all friends?

Clar. Feare not that, my Lord.

Warw. Then gentle Clarence, welcome unto Warwicke,

And welcome Somerset: I hold it cowardize,

To rest mistrustfull, where a Noble Heart

Hath pawn'd an open Hand, in signe of Love:

Else might I thinke, that Clarence, Edwards brother,

Were but a fained friend to our proceedings:

But welcome sweet Clarence, my daughter shall be thine.

And now, what rests? but in Nights Coverture,

Thy Brother being carelessly encamp'd,

His Souldiours lurking in the Towne about,

And but attended by a simple Guard,

We may surprize and take him at our pleasure,

Our Scouts have found the adventure very easie:

That as Vlysses, and stout Diomedes,

With sleight and manhood stole to Rhesus Tents,

And brought from thence the Thracian fatall Steeds;

So we, well cover'd with the Nights blacke Mantle,

At unawares may beat downe Edwards Guard,

And seize him selfe: I say not, slaughter him,

For I intend but onely to surprize him.

You that will follow me to this attempt,

Applaud the Name of Henry, with your Leader.

They all cry, Henry.

Why then, let's on our way in silent sort,

For Warwicke and his friends, God and Saint George.

Exeunt.

Enter three Watchmen to guard the Kings Tent.

1. Watch. Come on my Masters, each man take his stand,
The King by this, is set him downe to sleepe.

2. Watch. What, will he not to Bed?

1. Watch. Why, no: for he hath made a solemne Vow,
Never to lye and take his naturall Rest,
Till Warwicke, or him selfe, be quite supprest.

2. Watch. To morrow then belike shall be the day,
If Warwicke be so neere as men report.

3. Watch. But say, I pray, what Noble man is that,
That with the King here resteth in his Tent?

1. Watch. 'Tis the Lord Hastings, the Kings chiefest friend.

3. Watch. O, is it so? but why commands the King,
That his cheife followers lodge in Townes about him,
While he him selfe keepes in the cold field?

2. Watch. 'Tis the more honour, because more dangerous.

3. Watch. I, but give me worship, and quietnesse,
I like it better then a dangerous honor.

If Warwicke knew in what estate he stands,

'Tis to be doubted he would waken him.

1. Watch. Vnlesse our Halberds did shut up his passage.

2. Watch. I: wherefore else guard we his Royall Tent,
But to defend his Person from Night-foes?

Enter Warwicke, Clarence, Oxford, Somerset, and French Souldiours silent all.

War. This is his Tent, and see where stand his Guard:
Courage my Masters: Honor now, or never:
But follow me, and Edward shall be ours.

1. Watch. Who goes there?

2. Watch. Stay, or thou dyest.

Warwicke and the rest cry all, Warwicke, Warwicke, and set upon the Guard, who flye, crying, Arme, Arme, Warwicke and the rest following them.

The Drumme playing, and Trumpet sounding.

Enter Warwicke, Somerset, and the rest, bringing the King out in his Gowne, sitting in a Chaire: Richard and Hastings flyes over the Stage.

Som. What are they that flye there?

Warw. Richard and Hastings, let them goe, heere is the Duke.

King Edw. The Duke?

Why Warwicke, when we parted,

Thou call'dst me King.

Warw. I, but the case is alter'd.

When you disgrace'd me in my Embassade,

Then I degraded you from being King,

And come now to create you Duke of Torke.

Alas, how should you governe any Kingdome,

That know not how to use Embassadors,

Nor how to be contented with one Wife,

Nor how to use your Brothers brotherly,

Nor how to study for the Peoples Welfare,

Nor how to shrowd your selfe from Enemies?

King Edw.

K. Edw. Yea, Brother of Clarence,
Art thou here too?
Nay then I see, that Edward needs must downe.
Yet Warwicke, in despite of all mischance,
Of thee thy selfe, and all thy Complices,
Edward will alwayes beare himselfe as King:
Though Fortunes mallice overthrow my State,
My minde exceeds the compasse of her Wheele.
War. Then for his mind, be Edward Englands King.

Takes off his Crowne.

But Henry now shall weare the English Crowne;
And be true King indeed: thou but the shadow.
My Lord of Somerſet, at my request,
See that forthwith Duke Edward be convey'd
Vnto my Brother Arch-Bishop of Torke:
When I have fought with Pembrooke, and his fellowes,
He follow you, and tell what answer
Lewis and the Lady Bona send to him.
Now for a-while farewell good Duke of Torke.

They leade him out forcibly.

K. Ed. What Fates impole, that men must needs abide;
It boots not to resist both wind and tide. Exeunt.
Oxf. What now remains my Lords for us to doe,
But march to London with our Souldiers?
War. I, that's the first thing that we have to doe,
To free King Henry from imprisonment,
And see him seated in the Regall Throne.

Exit.

Enter Rivers, and Lady Gray.

Riv. Madam, what makes you in this sodain change?
Gray. Why Brother Rivers, are you yet to learne
What late misfortune is befallne King Edward?
Riv. What losse of some pitcht battell Against Warwicke?
Gray. No, but the losse of his owne Royall person.
Riv. Then is my Sovereigne slaine?
Gray. I almost slaine, for he is taken prisoner,
Either betrayed by falshood of his Guard,
Or by his Foe surpriz'd at unawares:
And as I further have to understand,
Is new committed to the Bishop of Torke,
Fell Warwicke's brother, and by that our Foe.
Riv. These Newes I must confesse are full of grieve,
Yet gracious Madam, beare it as you may,
Warwicke may loofe, that now hath wonne the day.
Gray. Till then, faire hope must hinder lives decay:
And I the rather waine me from despaire
For love of Edward's Off-spring in my wombe:
This is it that makes me bridle my passion,
And beare with Mildnesse my misfortunes crosse:
I, I, for this I draw in many a teare,
And stop the rising of blood-sucking sighes,
Least with my sighes or teares, I blast or drowne
King Edward's Fruite, true heyre to th'English Crowne.
Riv. But Madam,
Where is Warwicke then become?
Gray. I am inform'd that he comes towards London,
To set the Crowne once more on Henries head:
Goeffe thou the rest, Kings Edward's friend must downe.
But to prevent the Tyrants violence,
(For trust not him that hath once broken faith)
He hence forthwith unto the Sanctuary,

To save (at least) the heire of Edward's right:
There shall I rest secure from force and fraud:
Come therefore let us flye, while we may flye,
If Warwicke take us, we are sure to dye. Exeunt.

Enter Richard, Lord Hastings, and Sir William Stanley.

Rich. Now my Lord Hastings, and Sir William Stanley
Leave off to wonder why Idrew you hither,
Into this cheefest Thicket of the Parke.
Thus stands the case: you know our King, my Brother,
Is prisoner to the Bishop here, at whose hands
He hath good usage, and great liberty,
And often but attended with weake guard,
Comes hunting this way to disport himselfe.
I have advertis'd him by secret meanes,
That if about this houre he make this way,
Vnder the colour of his usuall game,
He shall here find his friends with Horse and Men,
To set him free from his Captivity.

Enter King Edward, and a Huntsman with him.

Hunt. This way my Lord,
For this way lies the Game.

King Edw. Nay this way man,
See where the Huntsmen stand.

Now brother Glouster, Lord Hastings, and the rest,
Stand you thus close to steale the Bishops Deere?

Rich. Brother, the time and case, requireth hast,
Your horse stands ready at the Parke-corner,

King Ed. But whither shall we then?

Hast. To Lyn my Lord,
And ship from thence to Flanders.

Rich. Well guest beleewe me, for that was my meaning.

King Edw. Stanley, I will requite thy forwardnesse.

Rich. But wherefore stay we? 'tis no time to talke.

King Edw. Huntsman, what say'st thou?
Wilt thou goe along?

Hunt. Better doe so, then tarry and be hang'd.

Rich. Come then away, lets ha no more adoe.

King Edw. Bishop farewell,
Sheeld thee from Warwicke's frowne,
And pray that I may re-possesse the Crowne. Exeunt.

Enter King Henry the sixth, Clarence, Warwicke, Somerſet, young Henry, Oxford, Mountague, and Lieutenant.

King Hen. M. Lieutenant, now that God and Friends
Have shaken Edward from the Regall seate,
And turn'd my captive state to liberty,
My feare to hope, my sorrowes unto joyes,
At our enlargement what are thy due Fees?

Lieu. Subjects may challenge nothing of their Sou'rains
But, if an humble prayer may prevaile,
I then crave pardon of your Majesty.

King Hen. For what, Lieutenant? For well vsing me?
Nay, be thou sure, He well requite thy kindnesse.
For that it made my imprisonment, a pleasure:
I, such a pleasure, as incaged Birds
Conceive; when after many moody Thoughts,
At last, by Notes of Household harmony,
They quite forget their losse of liberty.

But Warwicke, after God, thou set'st me free,
And chiefly therefore, I thanke God, and thee,
He was the Author, thou the instrument.
Therefore that I may conquer Fortunes spight,
By living low, where Fortune cannot hurt me,
And that the people of this blessed Land
May not be punish't with my thwarting starres,
Warwicke, although my head still weare the Crowne,
I here resigne my Government to thee,
For thou art fortunate in all thy deeds.

War. Your Grace hath still beene fam'd for vertuous,
And now may seeme as wise as vertuous,
By spying and avoiding Fortunes malice,
For few men rightly temper with the Starres :
Yet in this one thing let me blame your Grace,
For chusing me, when Clarence is in place.

Clar. No Warwicke, thou art worthy of the sway,
To whom the Heavens in thy Nativity,
Adjudge'd an Olive Branch, and Lawrell Crowne,
As likely to be blest in Peace and Warre :
And therefore I yeeld thee my free consent.

Warw. And I chuse Clarence onely for Protector.

King. Warwicke and Clarence, give me both your hands.
Now joyne your hands, and with your hands your
That no dissention hinder Government : (hearts,
I make you both Protectors of this Land,
While I my selfe will leade a private Life,
And in devotion spend my latter dayes,
To sinnes rebuke, and my Creators praise.

Warw. What answers Clarence to his Soveraignes will?

Clar. That he consents, if Warwicke yeeld consent,
For on thy fortune I repose my selfe.

Warw. Why then, though loth, yet must I be content:
We'll yoake together, like a double shadow
To Henries Body, and supply his place ;
I meane, in bearing weight of Government,
While he enjoys the honor, and his ease.
And Clarence, now then it is more then needfull,
Forthwith that Edward be pronounc'd a Traytor,
And all his Lands and Goods confiscated.

Clar. What else ? and that Succession be determined.

Warw. I, therein Clarence shall not want his part.

King. But with the first, of all your cheife affaires,
Let me intreat (for I command no more)
That Margaret your Queene, and my Sonne Edward,
Be sent for, to returne from France with speed :
For till I see them here, by doubtfull feare,
My joy of liberty is halfe eclips'd.

Clar. It shall be done, my Soveraigne, with all speed.

King. My Lord of Somerset, what Youth is that,
Of whom you seeme to have so tender care?

Somer. My Liege, it is young Henry, Earle of Richmond.

King. Come hither, Englands Hope :

Layes his Hand on his Head.

If secret Powers suggest but truth
To my divining thoughts,
This pretty Lad will prove our Countries blisse.
His lookes are full of peacefull Majesty,
His head by nature fram'd to weare a Crowne,
His hand to wield a Scepter, and himsele
Likely in time to blesse a Regall Throne :
Make much of him, my Lords ; for this is he Must helpe you more, then you art hurt by me.

Enter a Posse.

Warw. What newes, my friend?

Posse. That Edward is escaped from your brother,
And fled (as he heares since) to Burgundy.

Warw. Unfavory newes : but how made he escape?

Posse. He was convey'd by Richard, Duke of Gloster,
And the Lord Hastings, who attended him
In secret ambush, on the Forrest side,
And from the Bishops Huntsmen rescu'd him :
For Hunting was his dayly Exercise.

Warw. My Brother was too carelesse of his charge.
But let us hence, my Soveraigne, to provide
A salve for any sore, that may betide. Exeunt.

Manent Somerset, Richmond, and Oxford.

Som. My Lord, I like not of this flight of Edward;
For doubtlesse, Burgundy will yeeld him helpe,
And we shall have more Warres befor't be long.
As Henries late presaging Prophecy
Did glad my heart, with hope of this young Richmond;
So doth my heart mis-give me, in these Conflicts,
What may befall him, to his harme and ours.
Therefore, Lord Oxford, to prevent the worst,
Forthwith we'll send him hence to Brittainy,
Till stormes be past of Civill Enmity.

Oxf. I : for if Edward re possesse the Crowne,
'Tis like that Richmond, with the rest, shall downe.

Som. It shall be so : he shall to Brittainy.
Come therefore, let's about it speedily. Exeunt.

Enter Edward, Richard, Hastings,
and Souldiers.

Edw. Now brother Richard, Lord Hastings, and the rest,
Yet thus farre Fortune maketh us amends,
And sayes, that once more I shall enterchange
My wained state, for Henries Regall Crowne :
Well have we pass'd, and now re-pass'd the Seas,
And brought desired helpe from Burgundy.
What then remains, we being thus arriv'd
From Ravenspurgh Haven, before the Gates of York,
But that we enter, as into our Dukedome ?

Rich. The Gates made fast ?

Brother, I like not this.

For many men that stumble at the Threshold,
Are well fore-told, that danger lurkes within.

Edw. Tush man, aboadments must not now affright us.
By faire or foule meanes we must enter in,
For hither will our friends repaire to us.

Hast. My Liege, Ile knocke once more, to summon them.

Enter on the Walls, the Mayor of Yorke, and his Brethren.

Mayor. My Lords.

We were fore-warned of your comming,
And shut the Gates, for safety of our selves ;
For now we owe allegiance unto Henry.

Edw. But, Master Mayor, if Henry be your King,
Yet Edward, at the least, is Duke of Yorke.

Mayor. True, my good Lord, I know you for no lesse.

Edw. Why, and I challenge nothing but my Dukedome,
As being well content with that alone. Rich.

Rich. But when the Fox hath once got in his Nose,
He'll soone find meanes to make the Body follow.

Hast. Why, Master Mayor, why stand you in a doubt?
Open the Gates, we are King Henries friends.

Mayor. I, say you for the Gates shall then be opened.
He descends.

Rich. A wise stout Captaine, and soone perswaded.

Hast. The good old man would faine that all were well.
So 'twere not long of him: but being entred,
I doubt not I, but we shall soon perswade
Both him, and all his Brothers, unto reason.

Enter the Mayor, and two Aldermen.

Edw. So, Master Mayor: these Gates must not be shut,
But in the Night, or in the time of Warre.

What, feare not man, but yeild me up the Keyes,
Takes his Keyes.

For Edward will defend the Towne, and thee,
And all those friends, that deime to follow me.

March. Enter Mountgomery, with Drumme and Souldiers.

Rich. Brother, this is Sir John Mountgomery,
Our trusty friend, unlesse I be deceiv'd.

Edwar. Welcome Sir John: but why come you in Armes?

Mount. To helpe King Edward in his time of storme,
As every loyall Subject ought to doe.

Edw. Thankes good Mountgomery:
But we now forget our Title to the Crowne,
And onely clayme our Dukedomé,
Till God please to send the rest.

Mount. Then fare you well, for I will hence againe,
I came to serve a King, and not a Duke:
Drummer strike up, and let us march away.

The Drumme begins to March.

Edw. Nay stay, Sir John, a while, and we'll debate
By what safe meanes the Crowne may be recover'd.

Mount. What talke you of debating? in few words,
If you'll not here proclaime your selfe our King,
Ile leave you to your fortune, and be gone,
To keepe them backe, that come to succour you.

Why shall we fight, if you pretend no Title?

Rich. Why Brother, wherefore stand you on nice points?

Edw. When we grow stronger,
Then we'll make our Clayme:

Till then, 'tis wisdom to conceale our meaning.

Hast. Away with scrupulous Wit, now Armes must rule.

Rich. And fearelesse minds clymbe soonest unto Crowns.
Brother, we will proclaime you out of hand,
The bruit thereof will bring you many friends.

Edw. Then be it as you will: for 'tis my right,
And Henry but usurpes the Diademe.

Mount. I, now my Sovereigne speaketh like himselfe,
And now will I be Edwards Champion.

Hast. Sound Trumpet, Edward shall be here proclaim'd:
Come, fellow Souldier, make thou proclamation.

Flourish. Sound.

Soul. Edward the Fourth, by the Grace of God, King of England and France, and Lord of Ireland, &c.

Mount. And whosoe're gainfayes King Edwards right,
By this I challenge him to single fight.

Throwes downe his Gannet.

All. Long live Edward the Fourth.

Edw. Thankes brave Mountgomery.

And thankes unto you all:

If fortune serve me, Ile requite this kindnesse.

Now for this Night, let's harbor here in Torke:

And when the Morning Sunne shall raise his Carre
Above the Border of this Horizon,

We'll forward towards Warwicke, and his Mates;

For well I wot, that Henry is no Souldier.

Ah froward Clarence, how evill it beleeves thee,

To flatter Henry, and forsake thy Brother?

Yet as we may, we'll meet both thee and Warwicke,

Come on brave Souldiers: doubt not of the Day,
And that once gotten, doubt not of large Pay. Exeunt.

Enter the King, Warwicke, Mountague, Clarence, Oxford, and Somersjer.

War. What counsaile, Lords? Edward from Belgia,
With hasty Germanes, and blunt Hollanders,
Hath pass'd in safety through the Narrow Seas,
And with his troupes doth march amaine to London,
And many giddy people flocke to him.

King. Let's levy men, and beat him backe againe.

Clar. A little fire is quickly trodden out,
Which being suffer'd, Rivers cannot quench.

War. In Warwickshire I have true-hearted friends,
Not mutinous in peace, yet bold in Warre,

Those will I muster up: and thou Sonne Clarence

Shalt stirre up in Suffolke, Norfolke, and in Kent,

The Knights and Gentlemen, to come with thee.

Thou brother Mountague, in Buckingham,

Northampton, and in Leicestershire, shalt find

Men well enclin'd to heare what thou command'st

And thou, brave Oxford, wondrous well belov'd,

In Oxfordshire shalt muster up thy friends.

My Sovereigne, with the loving Citizens,

Like to his Liand, gyrt in with the Ocean,

Or modest Dyan, circled with her Nymphs;

Shall rest in London, till we come to him:

Faire Lords take leave, and stand not to reply.

Farewell my Sovereigne.

King. Farewell my Heitor, and my Troyes true hope.

Clar. In signe of truth, I kisse your Highnesse hand.

King. Well-minded Clarence, be thou fortunate.

Mount. Comfort, my Lord, and so I take my leave.

Oxf. And thus I seale my truth, and bid adieu.

King. Sweet Oxford, and my loving Mountague,
And all at once, once more a happy farewell.

War. Farewell, sweet Lords, let's meet at Coventry.

Exeunt.

King. Here at the Pallace will I rest a while.

Cousin of Exeter, what thinkes your Lordship?

Me thinkes, the Power that Edward hath in field,

Should not be able to encounter mine.

Exet. The doubt is, that he will seduce the rest.

King. That's not my feare, my meed hath got me fame:

I have not stopt mine eares to their demands,

Nor posted off their suites with slow delayes,

My pittie hath beene balme to heale their wounds,

My mildnesse hath allay'd their swelling griefes,

My mercy dry'd their water-flowing teares.

I have not beene desirous of their wealth,

Nor much opprest them with great Subsidies,

Nor forward of revenge, though they much err'd.

Then why should they love Edward more then me?

No Exeter, these Graces challenge Grace:

And

And when the Lyon fawnes upon the Lambe,
The Lambe will never cease to follow him.

Shout within, A Lancaster, A Lancaster.

Exe. Harke, hearke, my Lord, what Shouts are these?

Enter Edward and his Souldiers.

Edw. Seize on the shamefac'd Henry, beare him hence,
And once againe proclaime us King of England.
You are the Fount, that makes small Brookes to flow,
Now stops thy Spring, my Sea shall sucke them dry,
And swell so much the higher, by their ebbe.
Hence with him to the Tower, let him not speake.

Exit with King Henry.

And Lords, towards Coventry bend we our course,
Where peremptory Warwicke now remains:
The Sunne shines hot, and if we use delay,
Cold biting Winter marres our hop'd-for Hay.

Rich. Away betimes, before his forces joyne,
And take the great-growne Traytor unawares:
Brave Warriors, march amaine towards Coventry.

Exeunt.

Enter Warwicke, the Mayor of Coventry, two Messengers, and others upon the Walls.

War. Where is the Post that came from valiant Oxford?
How farre hence is thy Lord, mine honest fellow?

Mess. 1. By this at Dunsmore, marching hitherward.

War. How farre off is our Brother Mountague?
Where is the Post that came from Mountague?

Mess. 2. By this at Daintry, with a puissant troope.

Enter Somerville.

War. Say Somerville, what sayes my loving Sonne?
And by thy guesse, how nigh is Clarence now?

Somer. At Southam I did leave him with his forces,
And doe expect him here some two houres hence.

War. Then Clarence is at hand, I heare his Drumme.

Somer. It is not his, my Lord, heare Southam lyes:

The Drum you Honor heares, marcheth from Warwicke.

War. Who should that be belike unlook'd for friends.

Somer. They are at hand, and you shall quickly know.

*March. Flourish. Enter Edward, Richard,
and Souldiers.*

Edw. Goe, Trumpet, to the Walls, and sound a Parle.

Rich. See how the surly Warwicke mans the Wall.

War. Oh unbids pight, is sportfull Edward come?
Where slept our Scouts, or how are they seduc'd,
That we could heare no newes of his repayre.

Edw. Now Warwicke, wilt thou ope the City Gates,
Speake gentle words, and humbly bend thy Knee,
Call Edward King, and at his hands begge Mercy,
And he shall pardon thee these Outrages?

War. Nay rather, wilt thou draw thy forces hence,
Confesse who set thee up, and pluckt thee downe,
Call Warwicke Patron, and be penitent,
And thou shalt still remaine the Duke of Yorke.

Rich. I thought at least he would have said the King,
Or did he make the least against his will?

War. Is not a Dukedome, Sir, a goodly gift?

Rich. I, by my faith, for a poore Earle to give,
He doe thee service for so good a gift.

War. 'Twas I that gave the Kingdome to thy Brother.

Edw. Why then 'tis mine, if but by Warwicke's gift.

War. Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight:
And Weakeling, Warwicke takes his gift againe,
And Henry is my King, Warwicke his Subject.

Edw. But Warwicke's King is Edwards Prisoner:
And gallant Warwicke, doe but answer this,
What is the Body, when the head is off?

Rich. Alas, that Warwicke had no more fore-cast,
But whiles he thought to steale the single Ten,
The King was slyly finger'd from the Decke:
You left poore Henry at the Bishops Pallace,
And tenne to one you'll meet him in the Tower.

Edw. 'Tis even so, yet you are Warwicke still.

Rich. Come Warwicke,
Take the time, kneele downe, kneele downe:
Nay when? strike now, or else the Iron cooles.

War. I had rather chop this hand off at a blow,
And with the other, fling it at thy face,
Then beare so low a sayle, to strike to thee.

Edw. Sayle how thou canst,
Have Winde and Tyde thy friend,
This hand, fast wound about thy coale-blacke hayre,
Shall, whiles thy head is warme, and new cut off,
Write in the dust this Sentence with thy blood,
Wind-changing Warwicke now can change no more.

Enter Oxford, with Drumme and Colours.

War. Oh chearefull Colours, see where Oxford comes.

Oxf. Oxford, Oxford, for Lancaster.

Rich. The Gates are open, let us enter too.

Edw. So other foes may set upon our backes.
Stand we in good array: for they no doubt
Will issue out againe, and bid us battaile;
If not, the City being but of small defence,
We'll quickly rowze the Traitors in the fame.

War. Oh welcome Oxford, for we want thy helpe.

Enter Mountague, with Drumme and Colours.

Mount. Mountague, Mountague, for Lancaster.

Rich. Thou and thy Brother both shall buy this Treason
Even with the dearest blood your bodies beare.

Edw. The harder matcht, the greater Victory,
My mind presageth happy gaine, and Conquest.

Enter Somerset, with Drumme and Colours.

Som. Somerset, Somerset, for Lancaster.

Rich. Two of thy Name, both Dukes of Somerset,
Have sold their Lives unto the House of Yorke,
And thou shalt be the third, if this Sword hold.

Enter Clarence, with Drumme and Colours.

War. And loe, where George of Clarence sweepes along
Of force enough to bid his brother Battaile:
With whom, an upright zeale to right, prevails
More then the nature of a Brothers love.

Come Clarence, come: thou wilt, if Warwicke call.

Clar. Father of Warwicke, know you what this meanes?
Looke here, I throw my infamy at thee:
I will not ruinate my Fathers House,
Who gave his blood to lyme the stones together,
And set up Lancaster. Why, trowest thou, Warwicke,
That Clarence is so harsh, so blunt, unnaturall,
To bend the fatall instruments of Warre

Against

Against his brother, and his lawfull King.
Perhaps thou wilt object my holy Oath :
To keepe that Oath, were more impiety,
Then Isephah; when he sacrific'd his Daughter.
I am so sorry for my Trespas made,
That to deserve well at my brothers hands,
I here proclaime my selfe thy mortall foe :
With resolution, wherefoe're I meet thee,
(As I will meet thee, if thou stirre abroad)
To plague thee, for thy foule mis-leading me.
And so, proud-hearted Warwicke, I defie thee,
And to my brother turne my blushing Cheekes.
Pardon me Edward, I will make amends :
And Richard, doe not frowne upon my faults,
For I will henceforth be no more unconstant.

Edw. Now welcome more, and ten times more belov'd
Then if thou never hadst deserv'd our hate.

Rich. Welcome good Clarence, this is Brother-like.

Warw. Oh passing Traytor, perjur'd and unjust.

Edw. What Warwicke,
Wilt thou leave the Towne, and fight?

Or shall we beat the Stones about thine Eares?

Warw. Alas, I am not coop'd here for defence :

I will away towards Barnet presently,
And bid thee Battaille, Edward, if thou dar'st.

Edw. Yes Warwicke, Edward dares, and leads the way :
Lords to the field : Saint George, and Victory. Exeunt.

March. Warwicke and his company followes.

Alarm, and Excursions. Enter Edward bringing forth Warwicke wounded.

Edw. So, lye thou there : dye thou, and dye our feare,
For Warwicke was a Bug that fear'd us all.
Now Mountague sit fast, I seeke for thee,
That Warwicks Bones may keepe thine company.

Exit.

War. Ah, who is nigh? come to me, freind, or foe,
And tell me who is Victor, Yorke, or Warwicke?
Why aske I that? my mangled body shewes,
My blood, my want of strength, my sicke heart shewes,
That I must yeeld my body to the Earth,
And by my fall, the conquest to my foe.
Thus yeelds the Cedar to the Axes edge,
Whose Armes gave shelter to the Princely Eagle,
Vnder whose shade the ramping Lyon slept,
Whose top-branch over-peer'd Ioves spreading Tree,
And kept low Shrubs from Winters pow'rfull Winde.
These Eyes, that now are dim'd with Deaths black Veyle
Have beene as piercing as the Mid-day Sunne,
To search the secret Treasons of the World :
The Wrinkles in my Browes, now fill'd with blood,
Were lik'ned oft to Kingly Sepulchers :
For who liv'd King, but I could digge his Grave?
And who durst smile, when Warwicke ben this Brow?
Loe, now my Glory smear'd in dust and blood.
My Parkes, my Walkes, my Mannors that I had,
Even now forsake me ; and of all my Lands,
Is nothing left me, but my bodies length.
Why, what is Pompe, Rule, Reigne, but Earth and Dust?
And live we how we can, yet dye we must.

Enter Oxford and Somerset.

Som. Ah Warwicke, Warwicke, wert thou as we are,
We might recover all our Losse againe :

The Queene from France hath brought a puissant power
Even now we heard the newes, ah, could'st thou flye.

Warw. Why then I would not flye. Ah Mountague,
If thou be there, sweet brother, take my hand,
And with thy Lippes keepe in my Soule a while.
Thou lov'st me not : for, brother, if thou didst,
Thy teares would wash this cold congealed blood,
That glewes my Lippes, and will not let me speake.
Come quickly Mountague, or I am dead,

Som. Ah Warwicke, Mountague hath breath'd his last,
And to the latest gaspe, cry'd out for Warwicke :

And said, Commend me to my valiant Brother.

And more he would have said, and more he spoke,

Which sounded like a Cannon in a Vault,

That mought not be distinguisht: but at last,

I well might heare, delivered with a groane,

O farewell Warwicke.

War. Sweet rest his Soule :

Flye Lords, and save your selves,

For Warwicke bids you all farewell, to meet in heaven.

Oxf. Away, away, to meet the Queenes great power.

Here they beare away his Body.

Exeunt.

Flourish. Enter King Edward in triumph, with Richard, Clarence, and the rest.

King. Thus farre our fortune keepe an upward course,
And we are grac'd with wreaths of Victory :

But in the midst of this bright-shining Day,

I spy a blacke suspicious threatning Cloud,

That will encounter with our glorious Sunne,

Ere he attaine his easefull Western Bed :

I meane, my Lords, those powers that the Queene

Hath rays'd in Gallia, have arriv'd our Coast,

And, as we heare, march on to fight with us.

Clar. A little gale will soone disperse that Cloud,

And blow it to the Source from whence it came,

Thy very Beames will dry those Vapours up,

For every Cloud engenders not a Storme.

Rich. The Queene is valued thirty thousand strong,

And Somerset, with Oxford, fled to her :

If she have time to breathe, be well assur'd

Her faction will be full as strong as ours.

King. Weare advertis'd by our loving friends,

That they doe hold their course toward Tewksbury.

We having now the best at Barnet field,

Will thither straight, for willingnesse rids way,

And as we march, our strength will be augmented :

In every County as we goe along,

Strike up the Drumme, cry courage, and away. Exeunt.

March. Enter the Queene, young Edward, Somerset, Oxford, and Souldiers.

Qu. Great Lords, wife men ne'r sit and waile their losse

But chearely seeke how to redresse their harmes.

What though the Mast be now blowne over-boord,

The Cable broke, the holding-Anchor lost,

And halfe our Saylors swallow'd in the flood?

Yet lives our Pilot still. Is't meet, that he Should leave the Helme, and like a fearefull Lad,

With tearefull Eyes adde Water to the Sea,

And give more strength to that which hath too much,

Whiles in his moane, the Ship splits on the Rocke,

Which industry and Courage might have sav'd?

Ah what a shame, ah what a fault were this.

Say Warwicke was our Anchor : what of that?

And

And Montague our Top-Mast : what of him ?
 Our slaught' red friends, the Tackles : what of these ?
 Why is not Oxford here, another Anchor ?
 And Somerſet, another goodly Maſt ?
 The friends of France our Shrowds and Tacklings ?
 And though unſkilfull, why not Ned and I,
 For once allow'd the ſkilfull Pilots Charge ?
 We will not from the Helme, to ſit and weepe,
 But keepe our Courſe (though the rough Winde ſay no)
 From Shelves and Rocks, that threaten us with Wracke.
 As good to chide the Waves, as ſpeake them faire.
 And what is Edward, but a ruthleſſe Sea ?
 What Clarence, but a Quick-ſand of Deceit ?
 And Richard, but a rag'd fatall Rocke ?
 All theſe, the Enemies to our poore Barke.
 Say you can ſwim, alas 'tis but a while :
 Tread on the Sand, why there you quickly ſinke,
 Beſtride the Rocke, the Tyde will waſh you off,
 Or elſe you faſhiſh, that's a three-fold Death.
 This ſpeake I (Lords) to let you underſtand,
 If caſe ſome one of you would flye from us,
 That there's no hop'd-for Mercy with the Brothers,
 More then with ruthleſſe Waves, with Sands and Rocks.
 Why courage then, what cannot be avoided,
 'Twere childiſh weakenefſe to lament, or feare.

Prin. Me thinkes a Woman of this valiant Spirit,
 Should, if a Coward heard her ſpeake theſe words,
 Inſuſe his Breſt with Magnanimity,
 And make him, naked, foyle a man at Armes.
 I ſpeake not this, as doubting any here :
 For did I but ſuſpect a fearefull man,
 He ſhould have leave to goe away betimes,
 Leaſt in our need he might infect another,
 And make him of like ſpirit to himſelfe.
 If any ſuch be here, as God forbid,
 Let him depart, before we neede his helpe.

Oxf. Women and Children of ſo high a courage,
 And Warriors faint, why 'twere perpetuall ſhame.
 Oh brave young Prince : thy famous Grandfather
 Doth live againe in thee ; long may'ſt thou live,
 To beare his Image, and renew his Glories.

Som. And he that will not fight for ſuch a hope,
 Goe home to Bed, and like the Owle by day,
 If he ariſe, be mock'd and wondred at.

Que. Thankes gentle Somerſet, ſweet Oxford thankes.

Prince. And take his thankes, that yet hath nothing elſe.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. Prepare you Lords, for Edward is at hand,
 Ready to fight : therefore be reſolute.

Oxf. I thought no leſſe : it is his Policy,
 To haſte thus faſt, to find us unprovided.

Som. But he's deceiv'd, we are in readineſſe.

Que. This cheares my heart, to ſee your forwardneſſe.

Oxf. Here pitch our Battaile, hence we will not budge.

*March. Enter Edward, Richard, Clarence,
 and Souldiers.*

Edw. Brave followers, yonder ſtands the thorny Wood
 Which by the Heavens aſſiſtance, and your ſtrength,
 Muſt by the Roots be hew'ne up yet ere Night.
 I need not adde more fuell to your fire,
 For well I wot, ye blaze, to burne them out :
 Give ſignall to the fight, and to it Lords.

Que. Lords, Knights, and Gentlemen, what I ſhould ſay,
 My teares gaine-ſay : for every word I ſpeake,
 Yee ſee I drinke the water of my eye.
 Therefore no more but this : Henry your Sovereigne
 Is Priſoner to the Foe, his State uſurp'd,
 His Realme a ſlaughter-houſe, his Subjects ſlaine,
 His Statutes cancell'd, and his Treſure ſpent :
 And yonder is the Wolfe, that makes this ſpoyle.
 You fight in Juſtice : then in Gods Name, Lords,
 Be valiant, and give ſignall to the fight.

Alarum, Retreat, Excursions.

Exeunt.

Enter Edward, Richard, Queene, Clarence, Oxford, Somerſet.

Edw. Now here's a period of tumultuous Broyles.
 Away with Oxford to Hames Caſtle ſtraight :
 For Somerſet, off with his guilty Head.

Goe beare them hence, I will not heare them ſpeake.

Oxf. For my part, Ile not trouble thee with words.

Som. Nor I, but ſtoupe with patience to my fortune.

Exeunt.

Quee. So part we ſadly in this troublous World,
 To meet with Ioy in ſweet Jeruſalem.

Edw. Is Proclamation made, That who finds Edward,
 Shall have a high Reward, and he his Life ?

Rich. It is, and loe where youthfull Edward comes.

Enter the Prince.

Edw. Bring forth the Gallant, let us heare him ſpeake.
 What can ſo young a Thorne begin to pricke ?

Edward, what ſatisfaction canſt thou make,
 For bearing Armes, for ſtirring up my ſubjects,
 And all trouble thou haſt turn'd me to ?

Prin. Speake like a Subject, prowd ambitions Torke.
 Suppoſe that I am now my Fathers Mouth,
 Reſigne thy Chayre, and where I ſtand, kneele thou,
 Whil'ſt I propoſe the ſelfe-ſame words to thee,
 Which (Traytor) thou would'ſt have me anſwer to.

Quee. Ah, that thy Father had beene ſo reſolv'd.

Rich. That you might ſtill have worne the Petticoat,
 And ne're have ſtoine the Breach from Lancaſter.

Prin. Let Aep fable in a Winters Night,
 His Corniſh Riddies ſorts not with this place.

Rich. By Heaven, Brat, Ile plague ye for that word.

Quee. I thou waſt borne to be a plague to men.

Rich. For Gods ſake, take away this Captive Scold.

Prin. Nay, take away this ſcolding Crooke-backe, rather.

Edw. Peace wilfull Boy, or I will charme your tongue.

Clar. Vntutor'd Lad, thou art too malapert.

Prin. I know my duty, you are all undutiſull :
 Lascivious Edward, and thou perjur'd George,

And thou miſ-mapen Dicke, I tell ye all,
 I am your better, Traytors as ye are.

And thou uſurp'ſt my Fathers right and mine.

Edw. Take that, the likenefſe of this Rayler here.

Stabs him.

Rich. Sprawl'ſt thou ? take that, to end thy agony.

Rich. Stabs him.

Clar. And ther's for twitting me with perjury.

Clar. Stabs him.

Quee. Oh, kill me too.

Rich. Marry, and ſhall.

Offers to kill her.

Edw. Hold, Richard, hold, for we have done too much.

Rich.

Rich. Why should she live, to fill the World with words?

Edw. What? doth she frowne? use meanes for her recovery.

Rich. Clarence excuse me to the King my Brother: Ile hence to London on a serious matter, Ere ye come there, be sure to heare some newes.

Clar. What? what?

Rich. Tower, the Tower.

Exit.

Que. Oh Ned, sweet Ned, speake to thy Mother Boy. Can't thou not speake? O Traitors, Murtherers!

They that stabb'd Caesar, shed no blood at all:

Did not offend, nor were not worthy Blame,

If this foule deed were by, to equall it.

He was a Man; this (in respect) a Child,

And Men, ne're spend their fury on a Child.

What's worse then Murtherer, that I may name it?

No, no, my heart will burst, and if I speake,

And I will speake, that so my heart may burst.

Butchers and Villaines, bloody Canniballes,

How sweet a Plant have you untimely cropt:

You have no children (Butchers) if you had,

The thought of them would have stirr'd up remorse;

But if you ever chance to have a Child,

Looke in his youth to have him so cut off.

As deathsmen you have rid this sweet young Prince.

King. Away with her, goe beare her hence perforce.

Que. Nay, never beare me hence, dispatch me heere:

Here sheath thy Sword, Ile pardon thee my death:

What? wilt thou not? Then Clarence doe it thou.

Clar. By heaven, I will not doe thee so much ease.

Que. Good Clarence doe, sweet Clarence do thou do it.

Clar. Didst thou not heare me sweare I would not do

Que. I but thou usest to forswear thy selfe. (it?

'Twas sin before, but now 'tis Charity.

What wilt thou not? Where is that diuels butcher Richard

Hard favor'd Richard? Richard, where art thou?

Thou art not heere; Murther is thy Almesdeed.

Petitioner for Blood, thou ne're pul'st backe.

Edw. Away I say, I charge ye beare her hence.

Que. So come to you, and yours, as to this Prince.

Exit Lucene.

Edw. Where's Richard gone.

Clar. To London all in post, and as I guesse,

To make a bloody Supper in the Tower?

Edw. He's to daie if a thing comes in his head.

Now march we hence, discharge the common fort

With Pay and Thankes, and let's away to London;

And see our gentle Queene how well she fares,

By this (I hope) she hath a Sonne for me.

Exit.

Enter Henry the sixth, and Richard, with the Lieutenant on the Walls.

Rich. Good day, my Lord, what at your Booke so hard?

Hen. I my good Lord: my Lord I should say rather,

'Tis sinne to flatter, Good was little better:

Good Gloster, and good devill, were alike,

And both preposterous: therefore, not Good Lord.

Rich. Sirrha, leave us to our selves, we must conferre.

Hen. So flies the wreakelesse shepherd from the Wolfe:

So first the harmelesse Sheepe doth yeeld his Fleece,

And next his Throate, unto the butchers Knife.

What Scene of death hath Rossius now to Acte?

Rich. Suspition alwayes haunts the guilty mind,

The Theefe doth feare each bush an Officer,

Hen. The Bird that hath beene limed in a bush,

With trembling wings misdoubteth every bush;

And I the haplesse Male to one sweet Bird,

Have now the fatall Object in my eye,

Where my poore yong was limb'd, was caught, and kild.

Rich. Why what a peevish Foole was that of Creet,

That taught his Sonne the office of a Fowle,

And yet for all his wings, the foole was drown'd.

Hen. I Dedalus, my poore Boy Icarus,

Thy Father Minos, that deni'd our course,

The Sunne that fear'd the wings of my sweet Boy.

Thy Brother Edward, and thy selfe, the Sea

Whose envious Gulfe did swallow up his life:

Ah, kill me with thy Weapon, not with words,

My brest can better brooke thy Daggers point,

Then can my eares that Tragicke History.

But wherefore dost thou come? Is't for my Life?

Rich. Think'st thou I am an Executioner?

Hen. A persecutor I am sure thou art,

If murthering Innocents be Executing,

Why then thou art an Executioner.

Rich. Thy Son I kill'd for his presumption.

Hen. Hadst thou bin kill'd, when first thou did pre-

Thou hadst not liv'd to kill a Sonne of mine: (same,

And thus I prophesie, that many a thousand,

Which now mistrust no parcell of my feare,

And many an old mans sigh, and many a Widdowes,

And many an Orphans water-standing-eye,

Men for their Sonnes, Wives for their Husbands fate,

And Orphans, for their Parents timeles death,

Shall rue the houre that ever thou wast borne.

The Owle shriek'd at thy birth, an evill signe,

The Night-Crow cry'de, aboding lucklesse time,

Dogs howl'd, and hiddeous Tempest shooke down Trees:

The Raven rook'd her on the Chimnies top,

And chatt'ring Pies in dismall Discords sung:

Thy Mother felt more then a Mothers paine,

And yet brought forth lesse then a Mothers hope,

To wit, an indigested deformed lump,

Not like the fruit of such a goodly Tree.

Teeth hadst thou in thy head, when thou wast borne,

To signifie, thou cam'st to bite the world:

And if the rest be true, which I have heard,

Thou cam'st ———

Rich. Ile heare no more:

Dye Prophet in thy speech,

Stabs him.

For this (amongst the rest) was I ordain'd.

Hen. I, and for much more slaughter after this,

O God forgive my sinnes, and pardon thee.

Dyes.

Rich. What? will the aspiring blood of Lancaster

Sinke in the ground? I thought it would have mounted.

See how my sword weepes for the poore Kings death.

O may such purple teares be alway shed

From those that wish the downefall of our house.

If any sparke of life be yet remaining,

Downe, downe to hell, and say I sent thee thither.

Stabs him againe.

I that have neither pittie, love, nor feare,

Indeed 'tis true that Henrie told me of:

For I have often heard my Mother say,

I came into the world with my Legs forward.

Had I not reason (thinke ye) to make hast,

And seeke their Ruine, that usurp'd our Right?

The Midwife wonder'd, and the Women cride

O Iesus bleffe us, he is borne with teeth,

And

And so I was, which plainly signified,
That I should snarle, and bite, and play the dogge:
Then since the Heavens have shap'd my body so,
Let hell make crook'd my Mind to answer it.
I have no brother, I am like no brother:
And this word [Love] which Gray-beards call Divine,
Be resident in men like one another,
And not in me: I am my selfe alone.
Clarence beware, thou keep'st me from the light,
But I will fort a pitchy day for thee:
For I will buzze abroad such Prophecies,
That Edward shall be fearefull of his life,
And then to purge his feare, Ile be thy death.
King Henry, and the Prince his Son are gone,
Clarence thy turne is next, and then the rest,
Counting my selfe but bad, till I be best.
Ile throw thy body in another roome,
And Triumph Henry, in thy day of Doome.

Exit.

Enter King, Queene, Clarence, Richard, Hastings,
Nurse, and Attendants.

King. Once more we sit in Englands Royall Throne,
Re-purchac'd with the Blood of Enemies:
What valiant Foe-men, like to Autumnes Corne,
Have we mow'd downe in tops of all their pride?
Three Dukes of Somerset, threefold Renowne,
For hardy and undoubted Champions:
Two Cliffords, as the Father and the Sonne,
And two Northumberlands: two braver men,
Ne're spurr'd their Coursers at the Trumpets sound.
With them, the two brave Beares, Warwicke and Mounta-
That in their Chaines fetter'd the Kingly Lyon, (gne,
And made the Forrest tremble when they roar'd.

Thus have we swept Suspicion from our Seate;
And made our footstool of Security.
Come hither Besse, and let me kisse my Boy:
Yong Ned, for thee, thine Vnckles, and my selfe,
Have in our Armors watcht the Winter night,
Went all afoote in Summers scalding heate,
That thou might'st repossesse the Crowne in peace,
And of our Labours thou shalt reape the gaine.

Rich. Ile blast his Harvest, if your head were laid,
For yet I am not look'd on in the world.
This shoulder was ordain'd so thicke, to heave,
And heave it shall some waight, or breake my backe;
Worke thou the way, and that shalt execute.

King. Clarence and Gloster, love my lovely Queene,
And kis your Princely Nephew Brothers both.

Clar. The duty that I owe unto your Majesty,
I Seale upon the lips of this sweet Babe.

Clar. Thankes Noble Clarence, worthy brother thanks.

Ri. And that I love the tree from whence thou sprang'st Witnesse the loving kisse I give the Fruite:

To say the truth, so Iudas kist his master,
And cryed all haile, when as he meant all harme.

King. Now am I seated as my soule delights,
Having my Countries peace, and brothers loves.

Clar. What will your Grace have done with Margaret?
Reynard her Father, to the King of France
Hath pawn'd the Sicils and Ierusalem,
And hither have they sent it for her ransome.

King. Away with her, and waft her hence to France:
And now what rests, but that we spend the time
With stately Triumphes, mirthfull Comicke shewes,
Such as befits the pleasure of the Court.

Sound Drummes and Trumpets, farewell sowre annoy,
For heere I hope begins our lasting joy. Exeunt omnes.

The Tragedy of Richard the Third: vvith the Landing of Earle Richmond, and the Battell at Bosworth Field.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Richard Duke of Gloster, solus.

Ow is the Winter of our Discontent,
Made glorious Summer by this Son of Yorke :
And all the clouds that lowr'd upon our house
In the deepe bosome of the Ocean buried.
Now are our browes bound with Victorious Wreathes,
Our bruised armes hung up for Monuments;
Our sterne Alarums chang'd to merry Meetings ;
Our dreadfull Martches, to delightfull Measures.
Grim-visag'd Warre, hath smooth'd his wrinkled Front:
And now, in steed of mounting Barbed Steeds,
To fright the Soules of fearefull Adversaries,
He capers nimble in a Ladies Chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a Lute.
But I, that am not shap'd for sportive trickes,
Nor made to court an amorous Looking-glasse :
I, that am Rudely stamp't, and want loves Majesty,
To strut before a wanton ambling Nymph :
I, that am curtail'd of this faire Proportion,
Cheated of Feature by dissembling Nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing World, scarce halfe made up,
And that so lamely and unfashionable,
That dogges barke at me, as I halt by them:
Why I (in this weak piping time of Peace)
Have no delight to passe away the time,
Vnlesse to see my Shadow in the Sunne,
And descant on mine owne Deformity.
And therefore, since I cannot prove a Lover,
To entertaine these faire well spoken dayes,
I am determin'd to prove a Villaine,
And hate the idle pleasures of these dayes.
Plots have I laid, Inductions dangerous,
By drunken Prophecies, Libels, and Dreames,
To set my Brother Clarence and the King
In deadly hate, the one against the other:
And if King Edward be as true and just,
As I am Subtle, False, and Treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely be mew'd up:
About a Prophecie, which sayes that G,
Of Edward heyles the murtherer shall be.
Dive thoughts downe to my soule, here Clarence comes.

Enter Clarence, and Brakenbury, guarded.
Brother, good day : What meanes this armed guard

That waites upon your Grace ?

Cl. His Majestie tendring my persons safety,
Hath appointed this Conduct, to convey me to th' Tower.

Rich. Vpon what cause ?

Cl. Because my name is George.

Rich. Alacke my Lord, that fault is none of yours :
He should for that commit your Grandfathers.

O belike, his Majesty hath some intent,
That you should be new Christned in the Tower.

But what's the matter Clarence, may I know ?

Cl. Yea Richard, when I know : but I protest

As yet I do not : But as I can learne,
He hearkens after Prophecies and Dreames,
And from the Crosse-row pluckes the letter G ;
And sayes, a Wizard told him, that by G,
His issue disinherited should be.

And for my name of George begins with G,
If followes in his thought that I am he.

These (as I learne) and suchlike toyes as these,
Hath moov'd his Highnesse to commit me now.

Rich. Why this it is, when men are rul'd by Women:

'Tis not the King that sends you to the Tower,

My Lady Grey his Wife, Clarence 'tis she,

That tempts him to this harsh Extremity.

Was it not she, and that good man of Worship,

Anthony Woodville her Brother there,

That made him send Lord Hastings to the Tower :

From whence this present day he is delivered.

We are not safe Clarence, we are not safe.

Cl. By heaven, I thinke there is no man secure

But the Queenes Kindred, and night-walking Heralds;

That trudge betwixt the King, and Mistis Shore :

Heard you not what an humble Suppliant:

Lord Hastings was, for his delivery ?

Rich. Humbly complaining to her Deitie, I heard it

Got my Lord Chamberlaine his liberty.

He tell you what, I thinke it is our way,

If we will keepe in favour with the King,

To be her men, and weare her Livery :

The jealous ore-worne Widdow, and her selfe,

Since that our Brother dub'd these Gentlewomen,

Are mighty Gossips in our Monarchy.

Bra. I beseech your Graces both to pardon me,

His Majesty hath straightly given in charge,

That no man shall have private Conference

(Of what degree soever) with your Brother.

f

Rich.

Rich. Even so, and please your Worship Brakenbury,
You may partake of any thing we say:
We speake no Treason man; We say the King
Is wife and vertuous, and his Noble queene
Well strooke in yeeres, faire and not jealous.
We say, that Shores Wife hath a pretty Foot,
A cherry Lip, a bonny Eye, a passing pleasing tongue:
And that the Queenes Kindred are made gentle Folkes.
How say you sir? can you deny all this?

Bra. With this (my Lord) my selfe have nought to doe.

Rich. Naught to doe with Mistres Shore?
I tell thee Fellow, he that doth naught with her (Excepting one) were best to doe it secretly alone.

Bra. What one, my Lord?

Rich. Her Husband Knave, would'st thou betray me?

Bra. I do beseech your Grace
To pardon me, and withall forbear
Your Conference with the Noble Duke.

Cl. We know thy charge Brakenbury, and will obey.

Rich. We are the Queenes abjects, and must obey.
Brother farewell, I will unto the King,
And whatsoever you will imploy me in,
Were it to call King Edwards Widdow, Sister,
I will performe it to infranchise you.
Meane time, this deepe disgrace of Brotherhood,
Touches me deeper then you can imagine.

Cl. I know it pleaseth neither of us well.

Rich. Well, your imprisonment shall not be long,
I will deliver you, or else lye for you:
Meane time have patience.

Cl. I must perforce: farewell. Exit Cl.

Rich. Go tread the path that thou shalt ne're return:
Simple plaine Clarence, I do love thee so,
That I will shortly send thy Soule to Heaven,
If Heaven will take the present at our hands,
But who comes heere? the new delivered Hastings?

Enter Lord Hastings.

Hast. Good time of day unto my gracious Lord,

Rich. As much unto my good Lord Chamberlaine:
Well are you welcome to this open Ayre,
How hath your Lordship brook'd imprisonment?

Hast. With patience (Noble Lord) as prisoners must:
But I shall live (my Lord) to give them thanks
That were the cause of my imprisonment.

Rich. No doubt, no doubt, and so shall Clarence too,
For they that were your Enemies, are his,
And have prevail'd as much on him, as you.

Hast. More pittie, that the Eagles should be mew'd, Whiles Kites and Buzzards play at liberty.

Rich. What newes abroad?

Hast. No newes so bad abroad, as this at home:
The King is sickly, weake and melancholly,
And his Physitians feare him mightily.

Rich. Now by Saint Iohn, that newes is bad indeed.
O he hath kept an evill diet long,
And over-much consum'd his Royall Person:
'Tis very grievous to be thought upon.
Where is he, in his bed?

Hast. He is.

Rich. Go you before, and I will follow you.

Exit Hastings.
He cannot live: I hope, and must not dye,
Till George be pack'd with post-horse up to Heaven.

He in to urge his hatred more to Clarence,
With Lyes well steel'd with weighty arguments,
And if I faile not in my deepe intent,
Clarence hath not another day to live:
Which done, God take King Edward to his mercy,
And leave the world for me to busle in.
For then, He marry Warwicks youngest daughter,
What though I kill'd her Husband, and her Father,
The readiest way to make the Wench amends,
Is to become her husband and her Father:
The which will I, not all so much for love,
As for another secret close intent,
By marrying her, which I must reach unto.
But yet I run before my horse to Market:
Clarence still breathes, Edward still lives and reignes,
When they are gone, then must I count my gains. Exit

Scena Secunda.

Enter the Coarse of Henrie the sixth with Halberds to guard it, Lady Anne being the Mourner.

Anne. Set downe, set downe your honorable load,
If Honor may be shrowded in a Herte;
Whil'st I a-while obsequiously lament
Th' untimely fall of Vertuous Lancaster,
Poore key-cold Figure of a holy King,
Pale ashes of the House of Lancaster;
Thou bloodlesse Remnant of that Royall Blood,
Be it lawfull that I invoke thy Ghost,
To heare the Lamentations of poore Anne,
Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughtered Sonne,
Stab'd by the selfesame hand that made these wounds.
Loe, in these windowes that let forth thy life,
I powre the helpleffe Balme of my poore eyes.
O cursed be the hand that made these holes:
Curfed the heart, that had the heart to do it:
Curfed the Blood, that let this blood from hence:
More direfull hap betide that hated Wretch
That makes us wretched by the death of thee,
Then I can wish to Wolves, to Spiders, Toades,
Or any creeping venom'd thing that lives.
If ever he have Childe, Abortive be it,
Prodigious, and untimely brought to light,
Whose ugly and unnaturall Aspect
May fright the hopefull Mother at the view,
And that be Heyre to his unhappinesse.
If ever he have Wife, let her be made
More miserable by the death of him,
Then I am made by my young Lord, and thee.
Come now towards Chertsey with your holy Lode,
Taken from Paules, to be interred there,
And still as you are weary of this waight,
Rest you, whiles I lament King Henries Coarse.

Enter Richard Duke of Gloster.

Rich. Stay you that beare the Coarse, & set it downe.
An. What blacke Magitian conjures up this Fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds?

Rich. Villains set downe the Corse; or by S. Paul,
He make a Coarse of him that disobeyes.

Gen. My Lord stand backe, and let the Coffin passe.

Rich. Vnmanner'd Dogge,
Stand thou when I commaund :

Advance thy Halbert higher then my brest,
Or by S. Paul Ile strike thee to my Foote,
And spurne upon thee Begger for thy boldnesse.

Anne. What do you tremble ? are you all affraid ?
Alas, I blame you not, for you are Mortall,
And Mortall eyes cannot endure the Divell.

Avant thou dreadfull minister of Hell ;
Thou had'st but power over his Mortall body,
His soule thou canst not have : Therefore be gone.

Rich. Sweet Saint, for Charity, be not so curst.
An. Foule Divell,

For Gods sake hence, and trouble us not,
For thou hast made the happy earth thy Hell :

Fill'd it with cursing cries, and deepe exclames :
If thou delight to view thy heynous deeds,
Behold this patterne of thy Butcheries.

Oh Gentlemen, see, see dead Henries wounds,
Open their congeal'd mouthes, and bleed afresh.

Blush, blush, thou lump of foule Deformitie :
For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood

From cold and empty Veines where no blood dwels,
Thy deeds inhumane and unnaturall,

Provokes this Deluge most unnaturall.
O God ! which this Blood mad'st, revenge his death :

O Earth ! which this Blood drink'st, revenge his death.
Either Heav'n with Lightning strike the murth'rer dead.

Or Earth gape open wide, and eate him quicke,
As thou dost swallow up this good Kings blood,

Which his Hell-govern'd arme hath butchered.

Rich. Lady, you know no Rules of Charity,
Which renders good for bad, Blessings for Curses.

An. Villaine, thou know'st nor law of God nor Man,
No Beast so fierce, but knowes some touch of pitty.

Rich. But I know none, and therefore am no Beast,
An. O wonderfull, when divels tell the truth !

Rich. More wonderfull, when Angels are so angry :
Vouchsafe (divine perfection of a Woman)

Of these supposed Crimes, to give me leave
By circumstance, but to acquit my selfe.

An. Vouchsafe (defus'd infection of a man)
Of these knowne evils, but to give me leave

By circumstance, to curse thy cursed Selfe.

Rich. Fairer then tongue can name thee, let me have
Some patient leysure to excuse my selfe.

An. Fouler then heart can thinke thee,
Thou canst make no excuse currant,

But to hang thy selfe.

Rich. By such despaire, I should accuse my selfe.
An. And by despairing shalt thou stand excused,

For doing worthy Vengeance on thy selfe,
That didst it unworthy slaughter upon others.

Rich. Say that I slew them not.
An. Then say they were not slaine :

But dead they are, and divellish slave by thee.
Rich. I did not kill your Husband.

An. Why then he is alive.
Rich. Nay, he is dead, and slaine by Edwards hands.

An. In thy foule throat thou Ly'st,
Queene Margaret saw

Thy murd'rous Faulchion smoaking in his blood :
The which, thou once didst bend against her brest,

But that thy Brothers beate aside the point.
Rich. I was provoked by her slanderous tongue,

That laid their guilt, upon my guiltlesse Shoulders.

An. Thou was't provoked by thy bloody minde,
That never dream'd it on ought but butcheries :
Didst thou not kill this King ?

Rich. I graunt ye.

An. Do'st grant me Hedge-hogge,
Then God grant me too

Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deede:
O he was gentle, milde, and vertuous,

Rich. The better for the King of heaven that hath him.

An. He is in heaven where thou shalt never come.

Rich. Let him thanke me, that holpe to send him thi-
ther :

For he was fitter for that place then earth.

An. And thou unfit for any place but hell.

Rich. Yes one place else, if you will heare me name it,

An. Some dungeon.

Rich. Your Bed-chamber.

An. Ill rest betide the chamber where thou lyest.

Rich. So will it Madam, till I lye with you.

An. I hope so.

Rich. I know so. But gentle Lady Anne,

To leave this keene encounter of our wits,

And fall something into a slower method.

Is not the causer of the timelesse deaths

Of these Plantagenets, Henrie and Edward,

As blamefull as the Executioner ?

An. Thou was't the cause, and most accurst effect.

Rich. Your beauty was the cause of that effect :

Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleepe,

To undertake the death of all the world,

So I might live one houre in your sweet bosome.

An. If I thought that, I tell thee Homicide,

These Nayles should rent that beauty from my Cheekes.

Rich. These eyes could not endure y beauties wrack,

You should not biemish it, if I stood by ;

As all the world is cheared by the Sunne,

So I by that : It is my day, my life.

An. Blacke night ore-shade thy day, & death thy life.

Rich. Curse not thy selfe faire Creature,

Thou art both.

An. I would I were, to be reveng'd on thee.

Rich. It is a quarrell most unnaturall,

To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee.

An. It is a quarrell just and reasonable,

To be reveng'd on him that kill'd my Husband.

Rich. He that bereft the Lady of thy Husband,

Did it to helpe thee to a better husband.

An. His better doth not breathe upon the earth.

Rich. He lives, that loves thee better then he could.

An. Name him.

Rich. Plantagenet.

An. Why that was he.

Rich. The selfesame name, but one of better Nature.

An. Where is he ?

Heere :

Spits at him.

Why dost thou spit at me.

An. Would it were mortall poyson, for thy sake.

Rich. Never came poyson from so sweet a place.

An. Never hung poyson on a fowler Toade.

Out of my sight, thou dost infect mine eyes.

Rich. Thine eyes (sweet Lady) have infected mine.

An. Would they were Basiliskes, to strike thee dead.

Rich. I would they were, that I might dye at once :

For now they kill me with a living death.

Those eyes of thine, from mine have drawne salt Teares ;

Sham'd their Aspects with store of childish drops :
 These eyes, which never shed remorsefull teare,
 No, when my Father Yorke, and Edward wept,
 To heare the pittious moane that Rutland made
 When black-fac'd Clifford shooke his sword at him.
 Nor when thy Warlike Father like a Childe,
 Told the sad storie of my Fathers death,
 And twenty times, made pause to sob and weepe
 That all the standers by had wet their cheekes
 Like Trees bedash'd with raine : in that sad time,
 My manly eyes did scorne an humble teare :
 And what these sorrowes could not thence exhale,
 Thy Beauty hath, and made them blinde with weeping.
 I never sued to Friend, nor Enemy :
 My Tongue could never learne sweet smoothing word.
 But now thy Beauty is propos'd my Fee,
 My proud heart sues, and prompts my tongue to speake.

She looks scornfully at him.

Teach not thy lip such Scorne ; for it was made
 For kissing Lady, not for such contempt.
 If thy revengefull heart cannot forgive,
 Loe heere I lend thee this sharpe-pointed Sword,
 Which if thou please to hide in this true brest,
 And let the foule fourth that adareth thee,
 I lay it naked to the deadly stroke,
 And humbly begge the death upon my knee.

He layes his brest open, she offers at it with his sword.

Nay do not pause : For I did kill King Henric,
 But 'twas thy Beauty that provoked me.
 Nay now dispatch : 'Twas I that stabb'd yong Edward,
 But 'twas thy Heavenly face that set me on.

She falls the Sword.

Take up the sword againe, or take up me.

An. Arise Dissembler, though I wish thy death,
 I will not be thy Executioner.

Rich. Then bid me kill my selfe, and I will do it.

An. I have already.

Rich. That was in thy rage :

Speake it againe, and even with thy word,
 This hand, which for thy love, did kill thy Love,
 Shall for thy love, kill a farre truer Love,
 To both their deaths shalt thou be accessary.

An. I would I knew thy heart.

Rich. 'Tis figur'd in my tongue.

An. I feare me, both are false.

Rich. Then never Man was true.

An. Well, well, put up your Sword.

Rich. Say then my Peace is made.

An. That shalt thou know heereafter.

Rich. But, shall I live in hope?

An. All men I hope live so.

Vouchsafe to weare this Ring.

Rich. Looke how thy Ring incompasseth my Finger,
 Even so thy Brest incloseth my poore heart :
 Weare both of them, for both of them are thine.

And if thy poore devoted Servant may
 But beg one favour at thy gracious hand,
 Thou dost confirme his happynesse for ever.

An. What is it?

Rich. That it may please you leave these sad designs,
 To him that hath most cause to be a Mourner,
 And presently repaire to Crosbie House :

Where (after I have solemnly interr'd
 At Chertsey Monast'ry this Noble King,
 And wet his Grave with my Repentant Teares)

I will with all expedient duty see you.

For divers unknowne Reasons, I beseech you,
 Grant me this Boon.

An. With all my heart and much it joyes me too,
 To see you are become so penitent.

Tressel and Barkley, go along with me.

Rich. Bid me farewell.

An. 'Tis more then you deserve :
 But since you teach me how to flatter you,
 Imagine I have said farewell already.

Exit two with An.

Gent. Towards Chertsey, Noble Lord ?

Rich. Now to White Friars, there attend my coming.
Exit Chertsey.

Was ever woman in this humour Woo'd?
 Was ever woman in this humor wonne ?
 He have her but I will not keepe her long.
 What ? I that kill'd her husband, and his Father,
 To take her in her hearts extreamest hate,
 With curses in her mouth, Teares in her eyes,
 The bleeding witnesse of my hatred by,
 Having God, her Conscience, and these bars against me,
 And I no friends to backe my suite withall,
 But the plaine Divell and dissembling lookes ?
 And yet to winne her ? All the world to nothing.
 Hah !

Hath she forgot already that brave Prince,
Edward, her Lord whom I (some three moneths since)
 Stab'd in my angry mood, at Tewkesbery ?
 A sweeter and a lovelier Gentleman,
 Fram'd in the prodigality of Nature :
 Yong, Valiant, Wise, and (no doubt) right Royall,
 The spacious word cannot againe afford :
 And will she abase her eyes on me,
 That cropt the Golden prime of this sweet Prince,
 And made her Widdow to a wofull Bed ?
 On me, whose All not equals Edwards Moytie ?
 On me, that halts, and am mishapen thus ?
 My Dukedome, to a Beggerly denier !
 I do mistake my person all this while :
 Vpon my life she findes (although I cannot)
 My selfe to be a maru'llous proper man.
 He be at Charges for a looking-glasse,
 And entertaine a score or two of Taylors,
 To study fashions to adorne my body :
 Since I am crept in favour with my selfe,
 I will maintaine it with some little cost,
 But first He turne yon fellow in his Grave,
 And then returne lamenting to my Love.
 Shine out faire Sunne, till I have bought a glasse,
 That I may see my Shadow as I passe.

Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter the Queene Mother, Lord Rivers, and Lord Gray.

Riv. Have patience Madam, there's no doubt his Majesty
 Will soone recover his accustom'd health.

Gray. In that you brooke it ill, it makes him worse,
 Therefore for Gods sake entertaine good comfort,
 And cheere his Grace with quicke and merry eyes.

Qu. If he were dead, what would betide on me ?

Gray.

Gray. Noother harme, but losse of such a Lord.

Qu. The losse of such a Lord, includes all harmes.

Gray. The Heavens have blest you with a goodly Son,
To be your Comforter, when he is gone.

Qu. Ah! he is yong; and his minority
Is put unto the trust of Richard Glouster,
A man that loves not me, nor none of you.

Riv. Is it concluded he shall be protector?

Qu. It is determin'd, not concluded yet:
But so it must be, if the King miscarry.

Enter Buckingham and Derby.

Gray. Here comes the Lord of Buckingham & Derby.

Buc. Good time of day unto your Royall Grace.

Der. God make your Majesty joyfull, as you have bin.

Qu. The Countesse Richmond, good my L. of Derby.
To your good prayer, will scarce say, Amen.

Yet Derby, notwithstanding shee's your wife,
And loves not me, be you good Lord assur'd,
I hate not you for her proud arrogance.

Der. I do beseech you, either not believe
The envious slanders of her false Accusers:

Or if she be accus'd on true report,
Beare with her weaknesse, which I thinke proceeds
From wayward sicknesse, and no grounded malice.

Qu. Saw you the King to day my Lord of Derby?

Der. But now the Duke of Buckingham and I,
Are come from visiting his Majesty.

Qu. What likelyhood of his amendment Lords?

Buc. Madam good hope, his Grace speakes chearfully.

Qu. God grant him health, did you confer with him?

Buc. I Madam, he desires to make attonement.
Betwene the Duke of Glouster, and your Brothers,
And betwene them, and my Lord Chamberlaine,
And sent to warne them to his Royall presence.

Qu. Would all were well, but that will never be,
I feare our happinesse is at the height.

Enter Richard.

Rich. They do me wrong, and I will not indure it,
Who is it that complains unto the King,

That I (forsooth) am sterne, and love them not?

By holy Paul, they love his Grace but lightly,

That fill his eares with such dissentious Rumors.

Because I cannot flatter, and looke faire,
Smile in mens faces, smooth, deceive, and cogge,

Ducke with French nods, and Apish curtesie,

I must be held a rancorous Enemy.

Cannot a plaine man live, and thinke no harme,

But thus his simple truth must be abus'd,

With silken, slye, insinuating Iackes?

Gray. To whom in all this presence speakes your Grace?

Rich. To thee, that hast nor honesty, nor Grace:

When have I injur'd thee? When done thee wrong?

Or thee? or thee? or any of your Faction?

A plague upon you all. His Royall Grace

(Whom God preserve better then you would wish)

Cannot be quiet scarce a breathing while,

But you must trouble him with lewd complaints.

Qu. Brother of Glouster, you mistake the matter:

The King on his owne Royall disposition,

(And not provok'd by any Sutor else)

Ayming (belike) at your interior hatred,

That in your outward action shewes it selfe

Against my Children, Brothers, and my Selfe,

Makes him to send, that he may learne the ground.

Rich. I cannot tell, the world is growne so bad,
That Wrens make prey, where Eagles dare not pearch.

Since everie Iacke became a Gentleman,

There's many a gentle person made a Iacke.

Qu. Come, come, we know your meaning Brother
You envy my advancement, and my friends: Glouster,

God grant we never may have neede of you.

Rich. Meane time, God grants that I have need of you.

Our Brother is imprison'd by your meanes,

My selfe disgrac'd, and the Nobilitie

Held in contempt, while great Promotions

Are daily given to ennoble those

That scarce some two dayes since were worth a Noble.

Qu. By him that rais'd me to this carefull height,

From that contented hap which I enjoy'd.

I never did incense his Majesty

Against the Duke of Clarence, but have bin

An earnest advocate to plead for him.

My Lord you do me shamefull injurie,

Falsely to draw me in these vile suspects.

Rich. You may deny that you were not the meane

Of my Lord Hastings late imprisonment.

Riv. She may my Lord, for ———

Rich. She may Lord Rivers, why who knowes not, for

She may do more fir then denying that:

She may helpe you to many faire preferments,

And then deny her ayding hand therein,

And lay those Honors on your high desert.

What may she not, she may, I marrie may she,

Riv. What marrie may she?

Rich. What marrie may she? Marrie with a King,

A batcheller, and a handsome stripling too,

I wis your Grandam had a worser match.

Qu. My Lord of Glouster, I have too long borne

Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffes:

By heaven, I will acquaint his Majesty

Of those grosse taunts that oft I have endur'd.

I had rather be a Countrie servant maide

Then a great Queene, with this condicion,

To be so baited, scorn'd, and stormed at,

Small joy have I in being Englands Queene.

Enter old Queene Margaret.

Mar. And lesned be that small, God I beseech him,
Thy honor, state, and seate, is due to me.

Rich. What? threat you me with telling of the King?

I will avouch't in presence of the King:

I dare adventure to be sent to th' Tower.

'Tis time to speake,

My paines are quite forgot.

Margaret. Out Divell,

I do remember them too well:

Thou killd'st my Husband Henrie in the Tower,

And Edward my poore Son, at Tewkesbury.

Rich. Ere you were Queene,

I, or your Husband King:

I was a packe-horse in his great affaires:

A weeder out of his proud Adversaries.

A liberall rewarder of his Friends,

To royalize his blood, I spent mine owne.

Margaret. I and much better blood

Then his, or thine.

Rich. In all which time, you and your Husband Grey
Were factious, for the house of Lancaster;
And Rivers, so were you: was not your Husband,
In Margarets Battaile, at Saint Albans, slaine?
Let me put in your mindes, if you forget
What you have beene ere this, and what you are:
Withall, what I have beene and what I am.

Q. M. A murth'rous Villaine, and so still thou art.

Rich. Poore Clarence did forsake his Father Warwicke,
I, and forswore himselfe (which Iesu pardon.)

Q. M. Which God revenge.

Rich. To fight on Edwards partie, for the Crowne,
And for his meede, poore Lord, he is mew'd up:
I would to God my heart were Flint, like Edwards,
Or Edwards soft and pittifull, like mine;
I am too childish foolish for this World.

Q. M. High thee to Hell for shame, & leave this World
Thou Cacodemon, there thy Kingdome is.

Riv. My Lord of Gloster: in those busie dayes,
Which here you urge, to prove us Enemies,
We follow'd then our Lord, our Sovereigne King,
So should we you, if you should be our King.

Rich. If I should be? I had rather be a Pedler:
Farre be it from my heart, the thought thereof.

Qu. As little joy (my Lord) as you suppose
You should enjoy, were you this Countries King,
As little joy you may suppose in me,
That I enjoy, being the Queene thereof.

Q. M. A little joy enjoyes the Queene thereof,
For I am she and altogether joylesse:
I can no longer hold me patient.

Heare me, you wrangling Pyrates that fall out,
In sharing that which yon have pill'd from me:
Which of you trembles not, that looks on me?
If not, that I am Queene, you bow like Subjects;
Yet that by you depos'd, you quake like Reblls.

Ah gentle Villaine doe not turne away. (sight?)

Rich. Foule wrinkled Witch, what mak'st thou in my

Q. M. But repetition of what thou hast marr'd,
That will I make, before I let thee goe.

Rich. Wert thou not banished on paine of death?

Q. M. I was: but I doe find more paine in banishment,
Then death can yeeld me here, by abode.

A Husband and a Sonne thou ow'st to me,
And thou a Kingdome; all of you allegiance:
This Sorrow that I have, by right is yours,
And all the Pleasures you usurpe are mine.

Rich. The Curse my Noble Father layd on thee,
When thou didst Crown his Warlike Brows with Paper,
And with thy scornes drew'st rivers from his eyes,
And then to dry them, gav'st the Duke a Clowt,
Steep'd in the faultlesse blood of prettie Rutland:
His Curses then, from bitterness of Soule,
Denounc'd against thee, are false upon thee:
And God, not we, hath plagu'd thy bloody deed.

Qu. So just is God, to right the innocent.

Hast. O, 'twas the foulest deed to slay that Babe,
And the most mercilesse that ere was heard of.

Riv. Tyrants themselves wept when it was reported.

Dorf. No man but prophesied revenge for it.

Buck. Northumberland, then present wept to see it.

Q. M. What? were you snarling all before I came,
Ready to catch each other by the throat,
And turne you al your hatred now on me?
Did Yorkes dread Curse prevaile so much with Heaven,
That Henries death, my lovely Edwards death,

Their Kingdomes losse, my wofull banishment,
Should all but answere for that peevish brat?
Can curses pierce the Cloudes and enter Heaven?
Why then give way dull Cloudes to my quicke Curses.
Though not by warre, by Surfet dye your King,
As ours by Murther, to make him a King.

Edward thy Sonne, that now is Prince of Wales,
For Edward our Sonne that was Prince of Wales,
Dye in his youth, by like untimely violence.
Thy selfe a Queene, for me that was a Queene.
Out-live thy glorie, like my wretched selfe:
Long may'st thou live, to waile thy Childrens death,
And see another, as I see thee thee now,
Deck'd in thy Rights, as thou art stall'd in mine.
Long dye thy happie dayes, before thy death,
And after many length'ned howres of griefe,
Dye neither Mother, Wife, nor Englands Queene.
Rivers and Dorset, you were standers by,
And so wast thou, Lord Hastings, when my Sonne
Was stab'd with bloody Daggers: God, I pray him,
That none of you may live his naturall age,
But by some unlook'd accident cut off.

Rich. Have done thy Charme, y hatefull wither'd Hagge.

Q. M. And leave out thee? stay Dog, for y shalt heare me.
If Heaven have any grievous plague in store,
Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee,
O let them keepe it, till thy finnes be ripe,
And then hurle downe their indignation
On thee, the troubler of the poore Worlds peace.
The worme of Conscience still begnaw thy Soule,
Thy Friends suspect for Traytors while thou liv'st,
And take deepe Traytors for thy dearest Friends:
No sleepe close up that deadly Eye of thine,
Vnlesse it be while some tormenting Dreame
Affrights thee with a Hell of ougly Divells.
Thou elvish mark'd, abortive rooting Hogge,
Thou that wast seal'd in thy Nativitie
The slave of Nature, and the Sonne of Hell:
Thou slander of thy heavie Mothers Wombe,
Thou loathed Issue of thy Fathers Loynes,
Thou Ragge of Honor, thou detested.

Rich. Margaret.

Q. M. Richard. Rich. Ha.

Q. M. I call thee not.

Rich. I cry thee mercie then: for I did thinke,
That thou hadst call'd me all these bitter names.

Q. M. Why so I did, but look'd for no reply.
Oh let me make the Period to my Curse.

Rich. 'Tis done by me, and ends in Margaret.

Q. Thus have you breath'd your curse against your self.
Q. M. Poore painted Queen, vain flourish of my fortune,
Why strew'st thou Sugar on that Bottel'd Spider,
Whose deadly Web ensnareth thee about?

Foole, foole, thou whet'st a Knife to kill thy selfe:
The day will come, that thou shalt wish for me,
To helpe thee curse this poysonous Bunch-backt Toade.

Hast. False boding Woman, end thy franticke Curse,
Least to thy harme, thou move our patience.

Q. M. Foule shame upon you, you have all mov'd mine.
Ri. Were you wel serv'd, you would be taught your duty.

Q. M. To serve me well, you all should doe me duty,
Teach me to be your Queene, and you my Subjects:
O serve me well, and teach your selves that duty.

Dorf. Dispute not with her, she is lunaticke.

Q. M. Peace master Marquesse, you are malapert,
Your fire-new stampe of Honor is scarce currant.

O that your young Nobilitie can judge
What 'twere to lose it, and be miserable.
They that stand high, have many blasts to shake them,
And if they fall, they dash themselves to peeces.

Rich. Good counsaile marry, learne it, learne it Margarette.

Dor. It touches you my Lord, as much as me.

Rich. I, and much more : but I was borne so high :
Our ayerie buildeth in the Cedars top,
And dallies with the winde, and scornes the Sunne.

Mar. And turnes the Sun to shade : alas, alas,
Witnesse my Sorne now in the shade of death,
Whose bright out-shining beames, thy cloudy wrath
Hath in eternall Darkenesse folded up.

Your ayery buildeth in our ayeries Nest :
O God that seest it do not suffer it,
As it is wonne with blood, lost be it so.

Buc. Peace, peace for shame : If not for Charity.

Mar. Vrge neither charity, nor shame to me :
Vncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully my hopes (by you) are butcher'd.
My Charity is outrage, Life my shame,
And in that shame, still live my sorrowes rage.

Buc. Have done, have done.

Mar. O Princely Buckingham, Ile kisse thy hand,
In signe of League and amity with thee :
Now faire befall thee, and thy Noble house :
Thy Garments are not spotted with our blood :
Northou within the compasse of my curse.

Buc. Nor no one heere : for Curses never passe
The lips of those that breathe them in the ayre.

Mar. I will not thinke but they ascend the sky,
And there awake Gods gentle sleeping peace.
O Buckingham, take heede of yonder dogge :
Looke when he fawnes, he bites ; and when he bites,
His venom tooke will rankle to the death :
Have not to do with him, beware of him,
Sinne, death, and hell have set their markes on him,
And all their Ministers attend on him.

Rich. What doth she say, my Lord of Buckingham ?

Buc. Nothing that I respect my gracious Lord.

Mar. What dost thou scorne me

For my gentle counsell ?

And sooth the divell that I warne thee from.

O but remember this another day :

When he shall split thy very heart with sorrow :
And say (poore Margaret) was a Prophetesse :

Live each of you the subjects to his hate,

And he to yours, and, all of you to Gods.

Exit.

Buc. My haire doth stand an end to heare her curses.

Riv. And so doth mine, I muse why she's at liberty.

Rich. I cannot blame her, by Gods holy mother,
She hath had too much wrong, and I repent
My part thereof, that I have done to her.

Mar. I never did her any to my knowledge.

Rich. Yet you have all the vantage of her wrongs :

I was too hot, to doe some body good,
That is too cold in thinking of it now :

Marry as for Clarence, he is well repayed :

He is frank'd up to fating for his paines,
God pardon them, that are the cause thereof.

Riv. A vertuous, and a Christian like conclusion,
To pray for them that have done scath to us.

Rich. So do I ever, being well advis'd.

Speakes to himselfe.

For had I curst now, I had curst my selfe.

Enter Catesby.

Cates. Madam, his Majesty doth call for you,
And for your Grace, and yours my gracious Lord.

Qu. Catesby I come, Lords will you go with me.

Riv. We wait upon your Grace.

Exeunt all but Gloster.

Rich. I do the wrong, and first begin to brawle.
The secret Mischiefes that I set abroad,
I lay unto the greevous charge of others.
Clarence, whom I indeede have cast in darknesse,
I do beweepe to many simple Gulls,
Namely to Derby, Hastings, Buckingham,
And tell them 'tis the Queene, and her Allies,
That stirre the King against the Duke my Brother.
Now they beleve it, and withall whet me
To be reveng'd on Rivers, Dorset, Grey.
But then I sigh, and with a peece of Scripture,
Tell them that God bids us doe good for evill :
And thus I cloathe my naked Villanie
With odde old ends, stolne forth of holy Writ,
And seeme a Saint, when most I play the divell.

Enter two murderers.

But soft, heere come my executioners,
How now my hardy stout resolved Mates,
Are you now going to dispatch this thing ?

Vil. We are my Lord, and come to have the Warrant,
That we may be admitted where he is.

Rich. Well thought upon, I have it heere about me :
When you have done, repayre to Crosby place ;
But sirs be sodaine in the execution,
Withall obdurate, do not heare him pleade ;
For Clarence is well spoken, and perhappes
May move your hearts to pittie, if you marke him.

Vil. Tur, tut, my Lord, we will not stand to prate,
Talkers are no good dooers, be assur'd :
We go to use our hands, and not our tongues.

Rich. Your eyes drop Mill-stones, when Fooles eyes fall Teares.

I like you Lads, about your businesse straight.

Go, go, dispatch.

Vil. We will my Noble Lord.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Clarence and Keeper.

Keep. Why looks your Grace so heavily to day ?

Cl. O, I have past a miserable night,
So full of fearefull Dreames, of ugly sights,
That as I am a Christian faithfull man,
I would not spend another such a night
Though 'twere to buy a world of happy dayes :
So full of dismall terror was the time.

Keep. What was your dream my Lord, I pray you tel me.

Cl. Me thoughts that I had broken from the Tower,
And was embark'd to crosse to Burgundy,
And in my company my Brother Gloucester,
Who from my Cabin tempted me to walke,
Vpon the Hatches : There we look'd toward England,
And cited up a thousand heavy times,

During

During the warres of Yorke and Lancaster
That had befallne us us. As he pac'd along
Vpon the giddy footing of the Hatches,
Me thought that Gloster stumbled, and in falling
Strooke me (that thought to stay him) over-board,
Into the tumbling billowes of the maine.
O Lord, me thought what paine it was to drowne,
What dreadfull noyse of water in mine eares,
What sights of ugly death within mine eyes.
Me thoughts, I saw a thousand fearefull wrackes :
A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon :
Wedges of Gold, great Anchors, heapes of Pearle,
Inestimable Stones, unvaiewed Jewels,
All scatterred in the bottome of the Sea:
Some lay in dead-mens Sculles, and in the holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept
(As 'twere in scorne of eyes) reflecting Gemmes,
That woo'd the slimy bottome of the deepe,
And mock'd the dead bones that lay scattred by.

Keep. Had you such leysure in the time of death,
To gaze upon these secrets of the deepe?

Cl. Me thought I had, and often did I strive
To yeeld the Ghost : but still the envious Flood
Stop'd in my soule, and would not let it forth
To find the empty, vast, and wand'ring ayre :
But smother'd it within my panting buike,
Who almost burst, to belch it in the Sea.

Keep. Awak'd you not in this fore Agony?

Cl. No, no, my dreame was lengthen'd after life.
O then, began the Tempest to my Soule,
I past (me thought) the Melancholly flood,
With that fowre Ferric-man which Poets write of,
Vnto the Kingdome of perpetuall Night.
The first that there did greet my Stranger-soule,
Was my great Father-in-law renowned Warwicke,
Who spake aloud : What scourge for Perjurie,
Can this darke Monarchy afford false Clarence?
And so he vanish'd. Then came wand'ring by,
A Shadow like an Angell, with bright hayre
Dabbel'd in blood, and he shriek'd out aloud
Clarence is come, false, fleeting, perjur'd Clarence,
That stab'd me in the field by Tewkesbury :
Seize on him Furies, take him unto Torment.
With that (me thought) a Legion of foule Fiends
Invirion'd me, and howled in mine eares
Such heddeous cries, that with the very Noise,
I (trembling) wak'd, and for a season after,
Could not beleewe, but that I was in Hell,
Such terrible Impression made my Dreame.

Keep. No marvell Lord, though it affrighted you,
I am affraid (me thinks) to heare you tell it.

Cl. Ah Keeper, Keeper, I have done these things
(That now give evidence against my Soule)
For Edwards sake, and see how he requites me.
O God ! if my deepe prayres cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath in me alone :
O spare my guiltlesse Wife, and my poore children.
Keeper, I prythee sit by me a-while,
My soule is heavy, and I faine would sleepe.

Keep. I will my Lord, God give your Grace good rest.

Enter Brakenbury the Lieutenant.

Bra. Sorrow breakes Seasons, and reposing houres,
Makes the Night Morning, and the Noon-tide night :

Princes have but their Titles for their Glories,
An outward Honor, for an inward Toyle,
And for unfelt Imaginations
They often feeble a world of restless Cares :
So that betweene their Titles, and low name,
There's nothing differs but the outward fame.

Enter two Murderers.

1. Mur. Ho, who's heere?

Bra. What would'st thou Fellow? And how cam'st thou hither.

2. Mur. I would speake with Clarence, and I came hither on my Legges.

Bra. What so breefe?

1. 'Tis better (Sir) then to be tedious:
Let him see our Commission, and talke no more. Reads

Bra. I am in this, commanded to deliver
The Noble Duke of Clarence to your hands.
I will not reason what is meant heereby,
Because I will be guiltlesse from the meaning.
There lies the Duke asleepe, and there the Keyes.
He to the King, and signifie to him,
That thus I have resign'd to you my charge. Exit.

1 You may sir, 'tis a point of wisedome :
Fare you well.

2 What, shall we stab him as he sleepe.

1 No: hee'l say 'twas done cowardly, when he wakes.

2 Why he shall never wake, untill the great Iudgement day.

1 Why then he'l say, we stab'd him sleeping.

2 The urging of that word Iudgement, hath bred a kinde of remorie in me.

1 What? art thou affraid?

2 Not to kill him, having a Warrant.

But to be damn'd for killing him, from the which
No Warrant can defend me.

1 I thought thou had'st bin resolute.

2 So I am, to let him live.

1 Hee backe to the Duke of Glouster, and tell him so.

2 Nay, I prythee stay a little :

I hope this passionate humor of mine, will change.
It was wont to hold me but while one tels twenty.

1 How do'st thou feeble thy selfe now?

2 Some certaine dregges of conscience are yet within me.

1 Remember our Reward, when the deed's done.

2 Come, he dies : I had forgot the Reward.

1 Where's thy conscience now.

2 O, in the Duke of Glosters purse.

1 When he opens his purse to give us our Reward, thy Conscience flies out.

2 'Tis no matter, let us goe : There's few or none will entertaine it.

1 What if it come to thee againe?

2 Hee not meddle with it, it makes a man a Coward :
A man cannot steale, but it accuseth him : A man cannot Swear, but it Checkes him : A man cannot lye with his Neighbours Wife, but it detects him. 'Tis a blushing shamefac'd spirit, that mutinies in a mans bosome : It fillles a man full of Obstacles. It made me once restore a Purse of Gold that (by chance) I found : It beggars any man that keepees it : It is turn'd out of Townes and Cities for a dangerous thing, and every man that meansto live well, endeavours to trust to himselfe, and live without it.

1. 'Tis even now at my elbow, perswading me not to kill the Duke.

2. Take the divell in thy minde, and beleve him not: He would insinuate with thee but to make thee sigh.

1. I am strong fram'd, he cannot prevaile with me.

2. Spoke like a tall man, that respects thy reputation.

Come, shall we fall to worke?

1. Take him on the Costard, with the hiltes of thy Sword, and then throw him into the Malmesey-Butte in the next roome.

2. O excellent device; and make a sop of him.

1. Soft, he wakes.

2. Strike.

1. No, we'll reason with him.

Cl. Where art thou Keeper? Give me a cup of wine.

2. You shall have Wine enough my Lord anon.

Cl. In Gods name, what art thou?

1. A man, as you are.

Cl. But not as I am Royall.

1. Nor you as we are, Loyall.

Cl. Thy voyce is thunder, but thy lookes are humble.

1. My voyce is now the Kings, my lookes mine owne.

Cl. How darkly, and how deadly dost thou speake?

Your eyes doe menace me: why looke you pale?

Who sent you hither? Wherefore doe you come?

2. To, to, to ———

Cl. To murther me?

Both. I, I.

Cl. You scarcely have the hearts to tell me so, And therefore cannot have the hearts to doe it.

Wherein my friends have I offended you?

1. Offended us you have not, but the King.

Cl. I shall be reconcil'd to him againe.

2. Never my Lord, therefore prepare to dye.

Cl. Are you drawne forth among a world of men

To slay the innocent? What is my offence?

Where is the Evidence that doth accuse me?

What lawfull Quelt have given their Verdict up

Unto the frowning Iudge? Or who pronounc'd

The bitter sentence of poore Clarence death?

Before I be convict by course of Law,

To threaten me with death, is most unlawfull.

I charge you, as you hope for any goodnesse,

That you depart, and lay no hands on me:

The deed you undertake is damnable.

1. What we will doe we doe upon command.

2. And he that hath commanded, is our King.

Cl. Erroneous Vassals, the great King of Kings

Hath in the Table of his Law commanded

That thou shalt doe no murther, Will you then

Spurne at his Edict, and fulfill a Mans?

Take heed: for he holds Vengeance in his hand

To hurle upon their heads that breake his Law.

2. And that same Vengeance doth he hurle on thee,

For false forswearing, and for murther too:

Thou didst receive the Sacrament, to fight

In quarrell of the House of Lancaster.

1. And like a Traitor to the name of God,

Didst breake that Vow, and with thy treacherous blade,

Woundst the Bowels of thy Sou'raignes Sonne.

2. Whom thou wast sworn to cherish and defend.

1. How canst thou urge Gods dreadful Law tous,

When thou hast broke it in such deere degree?

Cl. Alas! for whose sake did I that ill deed?

For Edward, for my Brother, for his sake.

He sends you not to murther me for this:

For in that sinne, he is as deepe as I.

If God will be avenged for the deed,

O know you yet, he doth it publicly,

Take not the quarrell from his powrefull arme:

He needs no indirect, or lawlesse course,

To cut off those that have offended him:

1. Who made thee then a bloody minister,

When gallant springing brave Plantagenet,

That Princely Novice was stricke dead by thee?

Cl. My Brothers love, the Divell, and my Rage:

1. Thy Brothers Love, our Duty, and thy Faults,

Provoke us hither now, to slaughter thee.

Cl. If you doe love my Brother, hate not me:

I am his brother, and I love him well.

If you are hyrd for meed, go backe againe,

And I will send you to my Brother Glouster:

Who shall reward you better for my life,

Then Edward will for tydings of my death.

2. You are deceiv'd,

Your Brother Glouster hates you.

Cl. Oh no, he loves me, and he holds me deere:

Go you to him from me.

1. I so we will.

Cl. Tell him, when that our Princely Father Yorke

Blest his three Sonnes with his victorious Arme,

He little thought of this divided Friendship:

Bid Glouster thinke on this, and he will weepe.

1. I Millstones, as he lessoned us to weepe.

Cl. O do not slander him, for he is kinde,

1. Right, as Snow in Harvest:

Come, you deceive your selfe,

'Tis he that sends us to destroy you heere.

Cl. It cannot be, for he bewept my Fortune,

And hugg'd me in his armes, and swore with fobs,

That he would labour my delivery.

1. Why so he doth, when he delivers you

From this earths thraldome, to the joyes of heaven.

2. Make peace with God, for you must die my Lord.

Cl. Have you that holy feeling in your soules,

To counsaile me to make my peace with God,

And are you yet to your owne soules so blinde,

That you wil warre with God, by murd'ring me?

O first consider, they that set you on

To do this deede, will hate you for the deede.

2. What shall we do?

Cl. Relent, and save your soules:

Which of you, if you were a Princes sonne,

Being pent from Liberty, as I am now,

If two such murtherers as your selves came to you,

Would not intreat for life, as you would begge

Were you in my distresse.

1. Relent? no: 'Tis cowardly and womanish.

Cl. Not to relent, is beastly, savage, divellish.

My Friend, I spy some pittie in thy lookes:

O, if thine eye be not a flatterer,

Come thou on my side, and intreat for me,

A begging Prince, what begger pitties not?

2. Looke behinde you, my Lord.

Take that, and that, if all this will not do, Stabs him.

He drowne you in the Malmesey-But within. Exit.

2. A bloody deed, and desperately dispatch:

How faine (like Pilate) would I wash my hands

Of this most greivous murther. Enter 1. Murtherer

1. How now? what mean'st thou that thou help'st me not? By heaven the Duke shall know how slacke you have beene.

2. Mur. I would he knew that I had sav'd his brother ;
Take thou the Fee, and tell him what I say,
For I repent me that the Duke is slaine. Exit.

1. Mur. So doe not I: goe Coward as thou art.
Well, Ile goe hide the body in some hole,
Till that the Duke give order for his buriall :
And when I have my meede, I will away;
For this will out, and then I must not stay. Exit.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Flourish.

Enter the King sick, the Queene, Lord Marquesse Dorset, Rivers, Hastings, Catesby, Buckingham, Woodvill.

King. Why so: now have I done a good dayes worke.
You Peeres, continue this united League :
I, every day expect an Embassage
From my Redeemer, to redeeme me hence.
And more to peace my soule shall part to heaven,
Since I have made my Friends at peace on earth.
Dorset and Rivers, take each others hand,
Dissemble not your hatred, Swear your love.

Riv. By heaven, my soule is purg'd from grudging hate,
And with my hand I seale my true hearts Love.

Hast. So thrive I, as I truly sweare the like.

King. Take heed you dally not before your King,
Lest he that is the supreme King of Kings
Confound your hidden falshood, and award
Either of you to be the others end.

Hast. So prosper I, as I sweare perfect love.

Riv. And I, as I love Hastings with my heart.

King. Madam, your selfe is not exempt from this :
Nor you Sonne Dorset, Buckingham nor you ;
You have beene factious one against the other.
Wife, love Lord Hastings, let him kisse your hand,
And what you doe doe it unfeignedly.

Que. There Hastings, I will never more remember
Our former hatred, so thrive I, and mine.

King. Dorset, embrace him :

Hastings, love Lord Marquesse.

Dor. This interchange of love, I heere protest
Vpon my part, shall be inviolable.

Hast. And so sweare I.

King. Now Princely Buckingham, seale thou this league
With thy embracements to my wives Allies,
And make me happy in your unity.

Buc. When ever Buckingham doth turne his hate
Vpon your Grace, but with all dutious love,
Doth cherish you, and yours, God punish me
With hate in those where I expect most love,
When I have most need to imploy a Friend,
And most assured that he is a Friend,
Deepe, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he unto me : This doe I begge of heaven,
When I am cold in love, to you, or yours. Embrace.

King. A pleasing Cordiall, Princely Buckingham
Is this thy Vow, unto my sickely heart .

There wanteth now our brother Gloster heere,
To make the blessed period of this peace.

Buc. And in good time,
Heere comes Sir Richard Ratcliffe, and the Duke.

Enter Ratcliffe, and Gloster.

Rich. Good morrow to my Sovereigne King & Queene
And Princely Peeres, a happy time of day :

King. Happy indeed, as we have spent the day :
Gloster, we have done deeds of Charity,
Made peace of enmity, faire love of hate,
Betweene these swelling wrong incensed Peeres,

Rich. A blessed labour my most Sovereigne Lord ;
Among this Princely heape, if any heere
By false intelligence, or wrong surmize
Hold me a Foe : if I unwillingly, or in my rage,
Have ought committed that is hardly borne,
To any in this presence, I desire
To reconcile me to his friendly peace :

'Tis death to me to be at enmity :
I hate it, and desire all good mens love,
First Madam, I intreate true peace of yon,
Which I will purchase with my dutious service.
Of you my Noble Cousin Buckingham,
If ever any grudge were lodg'd betweene us.
Of you and you, Lord Rivers and of Dorset,
That all without desert have frown'd on me :
Of you Lord Woodvill, and Lord Scales of you,
Dukes, Earles, Lords, Gentlemen, indeed of all.
I doe not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soule is any jot at oddes,
More then the infant that is borne to night :
I thanke my God for my Humility.

Que. A holy day shall this be kept hereafter :
I would to God all strifes were well compounded.
Ny Sovereigne Lord, I doe beseech your Highnesse
To take our brother Clarence to your Grace.

Rich. Why Madam, have I offered love for this,
To be so flowted in this Royall presence ?
Who knowes not that the gentle Duke is dead ? They
You doe him injury to scorne his Coarse. all start.

King. Who knowes not he is dead ?
Who knowes he is ?

Que. All-seeing heaven, what a world is this ?
Buc. Looke I so pale Lord Dorset, as the rest ?

Dor. I my good Lord, and no man in the presence,
But his red colour hath forlooke his cheekes.

King. Is Clarence dead ? The order was reverst.

Rich. But he (poore man) by your first order dyed,
And that a winged Mercury did beare :
Some tardy Cripple bare the Countermand,
That come too lagge to see him buried.
God grant, that some lesse Noble, and lesse Loyall,
Neerer in bloody thoughts, and not in blood,
Deserve not worse then wretch'd Clarence did,
And yet goe currant from suspicion.

Enter Earle of Derby.

Der. A boone my Sovereigne for my service done.

King. I prethee peace, my soule is full of sorrow.

Der. I will not rise, unlesse your Highnesse heare me.

King. Then say at once, what is it thou request.

Der. The forfeit (Sovereigne) of my servants life,
Who flew to day a Riotous Gentleman,
Lately attendant on the Duke of Norfolke.

King. Have I a tongue to doome my Brothers death ?
And shall that tongue give pardon to a slave ?
My brother kill'd no man, his fault was Thought,
And yet his punishment was bitter death.

Who

Who sued to me for him? Who (in my wrath)
Kneel'd at my feet: and bid me be advis'd?
Who spoke of Brotherhood? who spoke in love?
Who told me how the poore soule did forsake
The mighty Warwick, and did fight for me:
Who told me in the Field at Tewkesbury,
When Oxford had me downe, he rescued me:
And said deere Brother live, and be a King?
Who told me, when we both lay in the Field,
Frozen (almost) to death, how he did lap me
Even in his Garments, and did give himselfe
(All thin and naked) to the numbe colde night?
Altho' this from my Remembrance, brutish wrath
Sinfully pluckt, and not a man of you
Had so much grace to put it in my minde:
But when your Carters, or your waiting Vassalls
Have done a drunken Slaughter, and defac'd
The precious Image of our deere Redeemer,
You straight are on your knees for Pardon, pardon,
And I (unjustly too) must grant it you.
But for my Brother, not a man would speake,
Nor I (ungracious) speake unto my selfe
For him poore Soule. The proudest of you all,
Have beene beholding to him in his life:
Yet none of you, would once begge for his life.
O God! I feare thy justice will take hold
On me, and you; and mine, and yours for this.
Come Hastings helpe me to my Closset.
Ah poore Clarence. Exeunt some with K. & Queen.
Rich. This is the fruits of rashnes: Markt you not,
How that the Kindred of the Queene
Look'd pale, when they did heare of Clarence death?
O! they did urge it still unto the King,
God will revenge it. Come Lords will you goe,
To comfort Edward with our company?
Buc. We wait upon your Grace. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter the old Dutchesse of Yorke, with the two children of Clarence.

Edw. Good Grandam tell us, is our Father dead?
Duch. No Boy.
Daugh. Why do you weepe so oft? And beat your Brest?
And cry, O Clarence, my unhappy Sonne?
Boy. Why do you looke on us, and shake your head,
And call us Orphans, Wretches, Castawayes,
If that our Noble Father were alive?
Dut. My pretty Cousins, you mistake me both,
I do lament the sicknesse of the King,
As loath to lose him, not your Fathers death:
It were lost sorrow to waile one that's lost.
Boy. Then you conclude, (my Grandam) he is dead:
The King mine Vnckle is to blame for it.
God will revenge it, whom I will importune
With earnest prayers, all to that effect.
Daugh. And so will I.
Dut. Peace children, peace, the King doth love you wel.
Incapable and shallow Innocents,
You cannot guesse who caus'd your Fathers death.
Boy. Grandam we can: for my good Vnckle Gloster

Told me, the King provok'd to it by the Queene, Devis'd impeachments to imprison him;
And when my Vnckle told me so, he wept,
And pittied me, and kindly kist my cheek:
Bad me rely on him, as on my Father,
And he would love me deerely as a childe.
Dut. Ah! that deceit should steale such gentle shape,
And with a vertuous Vizer hide deepe vice.
He is my sonne, I, and therein my shame,
Yet from my dugges, he drew not this deceit.
Boy. Thinke you my Vnckle did dissemble Grandam?
Dut. I Boy.
Boy. I cannot thinke it. Harke, what noise is this?

Enter the Queene with her haire about her eares, Rivers & Dorset after her.

Qu. Ah! who shall hinder me to waile and weepe?
To chide my Fortune, and torment my Selfe.
He joyne with blacke despaire against my Soule,
And to my selfe become an enemy.
Dut. What meanes this Scene of rude impatience?
Qu. To make an act of Tragicke violence.
Edward my Lord, thy Sonne, our King is dead.
Why grow the Branches, when the Roote is gone?
Why wither not the leaves that want their sap?
If you will live, Lament: if dye, be breefe,
That our swift winged Soules may catch the Kings,
Or like obedient Subjects follow him,
To his new kingdome of ne're-changing night.
Dut. Ah, so much interest have I in thy sorrow,
As I had Title in thy Noble Husband:
I have bewept a worthy Husbonds death,
And liv'd with looking on his Images:
But now two Mirrors of his Princely semblance,
Are crack'd in pieces, by malignant death,
And I for comfort, have but one false Glasse,
That grieves me, when I see my shame in him.
Thou art a Widdow: yet thou art a Mother,
And hast the comfort of thy Children left,
But death hath snatch'd my Husband from mine Armes,
And pluckt two Crutches from my feeble hands,
Clarence, and Edward. O, what cause have I, (Thine being but a moiety of my moane)
To over-go thy woes, and drowne my cries.
Boy. Ah Aunt! you wept not for your Fathers death:
How can we ayde you with our Kindred teares?
Daugh. Our fatherlesse distresse was left unmoan'd,
Your widdow-dolour, likewise be unwept.
Qu. Give me no helpe in Lamentation,
I am not barren to bring forth complaints:
All Springs reduce their currents to mine eyes,
That I being govern'd by the waterie Moone,
May send forth plenteous teares to drowne the World.
Ah, for my Husband, for my deere Lord Edward.
Chil. Ah for our Father, for our deere Lord Clarence.
Dut. Alas for both, both mine Edward and Clarence.
Qu. What stay had I but Edward? and hee's gone.
Chil. What stay had we but Clarence? and he's gone.
Dut. What stayes had I but they? and they are gone.
Qu. Was never widdow had so deere a losse.
Chil. Were never Orphans had so deere a losse.
Dut. Was never Mother had so deere a losse.
Alas! I am the Mother of these Greefes.
Their woes are parcell'd, mine is generall.
She for an Edward weepes, and so do I:

I for a Clarence weepe, so doth not she :
These Babes for Clarence weepe, so doe not they.
Alas ! you three, on me threefold distrest :
Powre all your teares, I am your sorrowes Nurse,
And I will pamper it with Lamentation.

Der. Comfort deere Mother, God is much displeas'd,
That you take with unthankfulness his doing.
In common worldly things, 'tis call'd ungratefull,
With dull unwillingnesse to repay a debt,
Which with a bounteous hand was kindly lent :
Much more to be thus opposite with heaven,
For it requires the Royall debt it lent you.

Rivers. Madam, bethinke you like a carefull Mother
Of the young Prince your sonne : send straight for him,
Let him be Crown'd, in him your comfort lives.
Drowne desperate sorrow in dead Edwards grave,
And plant your joyes in living Edwards Throne.

Enter Richard, Buckingham, Derby, Hastings, and Ratcliffe.

Rich. Sister have comfort, all of us have cause
To waile the dimming of our shining Starre :
But none can helpe our harmes by wayling them.
Madam, my Mother, I do cry you mercy,
I did not see your Grace. Humbly on my knee,
I crave your Blessing.

Dut. God blesse thee, and put meekenesse in thy breast,
Love Charity, Obedience, and true Dutie.

Rich. Amen, and make me die a good old man,
That is the butt-end of a Mothers blessing ;
I marvell that her Grace did leave it out.

Buc. You cloudy-Princes, & hart-forowing-Peeres,
That beare this heave mutuell load of Moane,
Now cheere each other, in each others Love :
Though we have spent our Harvest of this King,
We are to reape the harvest of his Sonne.
The broken rancour of your high-swolne hates,
But lately splintred, knit, and joyn'd together,
Must gently be preserv'd, cherisht, and kept :
Me seemeth good, that with some little Traine,
Forthwith from Ludlow, the young Prince be fet
Hither to London, to be crown'd our King.

Rivers. Why with some little Traine,
My Lord of Buckingham?

Buc. Marry my Lord, least by a multitude,
The new-heal'd wound of Malice should breake out,
Which would be so much the more dangerous,
By how much the estate is greene, and yet ungovern'd,
Where every Horse beares his commanding Reine,
And may direct his course as please himselfe,
As well the feare of harme, as harme apparant,
In my opinion, ought to be prevented.

Rich. I hope the King made peace with all of us,
And the compact is firme, and true in me.

Riv. And so in me, and so (I thinke) in all,
Yet since it is but greene, it should be put
To no apparant likelihood of breach,
Which haply by much company might be urg'd :
Therefore I say with Noble Buckingham,
That it is meete so few should fetch the Prince.

Hast. And so say I.

Rich. Then be it so, and go we to determine
Who they shall be that shal post to London.
Madam, and you my Sister, will you go
To give your censures in this businesse?

Exeunt.

Manent Buckingham, and Richard.

Buc. My Lord, who ever journies to the Prince,
For Gods sake let not us two stay at home :
For by the way, Ile sort occasion,
As Index to the story we late talk'd of,
To part the Queenes proud Kindred from the Prince.
Rich. My other selfe, my Counsailes Consistory,
My Oracle, My Prophet, my deare Cosin,
I, as a childe, will go by thy direction,
Toward London then, for wee'l not stay behinde. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter one Citizen at one doore, and another at the other.

1. Cit. Good morrow Neighbour, whither away so fast?

2. Cit. I promise you I hardly know my selfe:
Hear you the Newes abroad?

1. Yes, the King is dead.

2. Ill newes byrlady, seldome comes the better :
I feare, I feare, 'twill prove a giddy world.

Enter another Citizen.

3. Neighbours, God speed.

1. Give you good morrow sir.

3. Doth the newes hold of good King Edwards death?

2. I sir, it is too true, God helpe the while.

3. Then Masters looke to see a troublous world.

1. No, no, by Gods good grace, his Son shall reigne.

3. Woe to that Land that's govern'd by a Childe.

2. In him there is a hope of Government.

Which in his nonage, counsell under him,
And in his full and ripened yeares, himselfe
No doubt shall then, and till then governe well.

1. So stood the state when Henry the sixt
Was crown'd in Paris, but at nine months old.

3. Stood the State so? No, no, good friends, God wot
For then this Land was famously enrich'd
With politike grave Counsell ; then the King
Had vertuous Vnkles to protect his Grace.

1. Why so hath this, both by his Father and Mother.

3. Better it were they all came by his Father :
Or by his Father there were none at all :
For emulation, who shall now be neereft,
Will touch us all too neere, if God prevent not.
O full of danger is the Duke of Gloster,
And the Queenes Sons, and Brothers, haught and proud:
And were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,
This sickly Land, might solace as before.

1. Come, come, we feare the worst : all will be well.

3. When Clouds are seen, wisemen put on their cloakes;
When great leaves fall, then Winter is at hand ;
When the Sun sets, who doth not looke for night ?
Vntimely stormes, make men expect a Dearth :
All may be well ; but if God sort it so,
'Tis more then we deserve, or I expect.

2. Truly, the hearts of men are full of feare :
You cannot reason (almost) with a man,
That lookes not heavily, and full of dread.

3. Before the dayes of Change, still is it so,
By a divine instinct, mens mindes mistrust

Enfuine

Pursuing danger: as by prooffe wee see
The Water swell before a boyst'rous storme:
But leave it all to God, Whither away?

- 2 Marry we were sent for to the Iustices.
- 3 And so was I: Ile beare you company.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Arch-bishop, yong Yorke, the Queene, and the Dutchesse.

Arch. Last night I heard they lay at Stony Stratford,
And at Northampton they do rest to night:
To-morrow, or next day, they will be heere.

Dut. I long with all my heart to see the Prince:
I hope he is much growne since last I saw him.

Qu. But I heare no, they say my sonne of Yorke
Ha's almost overtane him in his growth.

Yor. I Mother, but I would not have it so.

Dut. Why my good Cofin, it is good to grow.

Yor. Grandam, one night as we did sit at Supper,
My Vnkle Rivers saik'd how I did grow
More then my Brother. I quoth my Vnkle Glouster, Small Herbes have grace, great Weeds do grow apace.
And since, me thinkes I would not grow so fast,
Because sweet Flowres are slow, and Weeds make hast.

Dut. Good faith, good faith, the saying did not hold
In him that did object the same to thee.

He was the wretched'st thing when he was yong,
So long a growing, and so leisurely,
That if his rule were true, he should be gracious.

Yor. And so no doubt he is, my gracious Madam.

Dut. I hope he is, but yet let Mothers doubt.

Yor. Now by my troth, if I had beene remembred,
I could have given my Vnckles Grace, a flout,
To touch his growth, neerer then he toucht mine.

Dut. How my yong Yorke,
I prythee let me heare it.

Yor. Marry (they say) my Vnkle grew so fast,
That he could gnaw a crut at two houres old,
Twas full two yeares ere I could get a tooth.
Grandam, this would have beene a byting Iest.

Dut. I prythee pretty Yorke, who told thee this?

Yor. Grandam, his Nurse.

Dut. His Nurse? why she was dead, ere y<sup>e</sup> wast borne.

Yor. If'twere not she, I cannot tell who told me.

Qu. A parlous Boy: go to, you are too shrew'd.

Dut. Good Madam, be not angry with the Childe.

Qu. Pitchers have eares.

Enter a Messenger.

Arch. Heere comes a Messenger: What Newes?

Mes. Such newes my Lord, as greeves me to report.

Qu. How doth the Prince?

Mes. Well Madam, and in health.

Dut. What is thy Newes?

Mes. Lord Rivers, and Lord Grey,

Are sent to Pomfret, and with them,

Sir Thomas Vaughan, Prisoners.

Dut. Who hath committed them?

Mes. The mighty Dukes, Glouster and Buckingham.

Arch. For what offence?

Mes. The summe of all I can, I have disclos'd:
Why, or for what, the Nobles were committed,
Is all unknowne to me, my gracious Lord.

Qu. Aye me! I see the ruine of my House:
The Tyger now hath seiz'd the gentle Hinde,
Insulting Tiranny beginnes to Iutt
Vpon the innocent and awelke Throne:
Welcome Destruction, Blood, and Massacre,
I see (as in a Map) the end of all.

Dut. Accursed, and unquiet wrangling dayes,
How many of you have mine eyes beheld?
My Husband lost his life, to get the Crowne,
And often up and downe my sonnes were tolt,
For me to joy, and weepe, their gaine and losse.
And being seated, and Domesticke broyles
Cleane over-blowne, themselves (the Conquerors,)
Make warre upon themselves, Brother to Brother;
Bloud to bloud, selfe against selfe: O preposterous
And franticke outrage, end thy damned spleene,
Or let me dye, to looke on earth no more.

Qu. Come, come my Boy, we will to Sanctuary.
Madam, farewell.

Dut. Stay, I will go with you.

Qu. You have no cause.

Arch. My gracious Lady go,
And thither beare your Treasure and your Goods,
For my part, Ile resigne unto your Grace
The Seale I keepe, and so betide it me,
As well I tender you, and all of yours.
Go, Ile conduct you to the Sanctuary.

Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

The Trumpets sound.

Enter yong Prince, the Dukes of Gloucester, and Buckingham, Lord Cardinall, with others.

Buc. Welcome sweet Prince to London,
To your Chamber.

Rich. Welcome deere Cofin, my thoughts Sovereigne
The weary way hath made you Melancholly.

Prin. No Vnkle, but our crosses on the way,
Have made it tedious, wearisome, and heavy.
I want more Vnckles heere to welcome me.

Rich. Sweet Prince, the untainted vertue of your yeers
Hath not yet div'd into the Worlds deceit:
No more can you distinguish of a man,
Then of his outward shew, which God he knowes,
Seldome or never jumpeth with the heart.
Those Vnckles which you want, were dangerous:
Your Grace attended to their Sugred words,
But look'd not on the poison of their hearts:
God keepe you from them, and from such false Friends.

Prin. God keepe me from false Friends,
But they were none.

Rich. My Lord, the Major of London comes to greet
you.

Enter Lord Major.

Lo. Major. God blesse your Grace, with health and happy dayes.

Prin. I thanke you, good my Lord, and thank you all:

I thought my Mother, and my Brother Yorke,
Would long ere this, have met us on the way.
Fie, what a Slug is Hastings, that he comes not
To tell us, whether they will come, or no.

Enter Lord Hastings.

Buck. And in good time, heere comes the sweating
Lord.

Prince. Welcome, my Lord: what, will our Mother come?

Hast. On what occasion God he knowes, not I,
The Queene your Mother, and your Brother Yorke,
Have taken Sanctuary: The tender Prince
Would faine have come with me, to meet your Grace,
But by his Mother was perforce with-held.

Buc. Fie, what an indirect and peevish course
Is this of hers? Lord Cardinall will your Grace
Perswade the Queene, to send the Duke of Yorke
Vnto his Princely Brother presently?
If she deny, Lord Hastings you goe with him,
And from her jealous Armes pluck him perforce.

Car. My Lord of Buckingham, if my weake Oratory
Can from his Mother winne the Duke of Yorke,
Anon expect him here: but if she be obdurate
To milde entreaties, God forbid
We should infringe the holy Priviledge
Of blessed Sanctuary: not for all this Land,
Would I be guilty of so great a sinne.

Buc. You are too fencelesse obstinate, my Lord,
Too ceremonious, and traditionall.
Weigh it but with the grossnesse of this Age,
You breake not Sanctuary, in seizing him:
The benefit thereof is alwayes granted
To those, whose dealings have deserv'd the place,
And those who have the wit to clayme the place:
This Prince hath neither claim'd it, nor deserv'd it,
Therefore, in mine opinion, cannot have it.
Then taking him from thence, that is not there,
You breake no Priviledge, nor Charter there:
Oft have I heard of Sanctuary men,
But Sanctuary children, ne're till now.

Car. My Lord, you shall o're-rule my mind for once.
Come on, Lord Hastings, will you goe with me?

Hast. I goe, my Lord. Exit Cardinall and Hastings.

Prin. Good Lords, make all the speedy hast you may.
Say, Vnckle Glocester, if our Brother come,
Where shall we sojorne, till our Coronation?

Glo. Where it think't best unto your Royall selfe.
If I may counsaile you, some day or two
Your Highnesse shall repose you at the Tower:
Then where you please, and shall be thought most fit
For your best health, and recreation.

Prin. I doe not like the Tower, of any place:
Did Julius Caesar build that place, my Lord?

Buc. He did, my gracious Lord, begin that place,
Which since, succeeding Ages have re-edify'd.

Prin. Is it upon record? or else reported
Successively from age to age, he built it?

Buc. Vpon record, my gracious Lord.

Prin. But say, my Lord, it were not registred, Methinkes the truth should live from age to age,
As 'twere retayl'd to all posterity,
Even to the generall ending day.

Glo. So wise, so young, they say doe never live long.

Prin. What say you, Vnckle?

Glo. I say, without Characters, Fame lives long.
Thus, like the formall Vice, Iniquity,
I moralize two meanings in one word.

Prin. That Julius Caesar was a famous man;
With what his Valour did enrich his Wit;
His Wit set downe, to make his Valour live:
Death makes no Conquest of his Conqueror,
For now he lives in Fame, though not in Life.
He tell you what, my Cousin Buckingham.

Buc. What, my gracious Lord?

Prin. And if I live untill I be a man,
He win our ancient Right in France againe,
Or dye a Souldier, as I liv'd a King.

Glo. Short Summers lightly have a forward Spring.

Enter young Yorke, Hastings, and Cardinall.

Buck. Now in good time, heere comes the Duke of Yorke.

Prince. Richard of Yorke, how fares our Noble Brother?

Yor. Well, my deare Lord, so must I call you now.

Prin. I, Brother, to our griefe as it is yours:
Too late he dy'd, that might have kept that Title,
Which by his death hath lost much Majesty.

Glo. How fares our Cousin, Noble Lord of Yorke?

Yor. I thanke you, gentle Vnckle. O my Lord,
You said, that idle Weeds are fast in growth:
The Prince, my Brother, hath out-growne me farre.

Glo. He hath, my Lord.

Yor. And therefore is he idle?

Glo. Oh my faire Cousin, I must not say so.

Yor. Then he is more beholding to you, then I.

Glo. He may command me as my Sovereigne,
But you have power in me, as in a Kinsman.

Yor. I pray you, Vnckle, give me this Dagger.

Glo. My Dagger, little Cousin? with all my heart.

Prin. A Begger, Brother?

Yor. Of my kind Vnckle, that I know will give,
And being a Toy, it is no griefe to give.

Glo. A greater gift then that, He give my Cousin.

Yor. A greater gift? O, that's the Sword to it.

Glo. I, gentle Cousin, were it light enough.

Yor. O then I see, you will part but with light gifts,
In weightier things you'll say a Begger nay.

Glo. It is too weighty for your Grace to weare.

Yor. I weigh it lightly, were it heavier.

Glo. What, would you have my Weapon, little Lord?

Yor. I would that I might thanke you, as you call me.

Glo. How?

Yor. Little.

Prin. My Lord of Yorke will still be crosse in talke:
Vnckle, your Grace knowes how to beare with him.

Yor. You meane to beare me, not to beare with me:
Vnckle, my Brother mockes both you and me,
Because that I am little, like an Ape,
He thinks that you should beare me on your shoulders.

Buc. With what a sharpe provided wit he reasons:
To mitigate the scorne he gives his Vnckle,
He prettily and aptly taunts himselfe:
So cunning, and so young, is wondrous full.

Glo. My Lord, wilt please you passe along?
My selfe, and my good Cousin Buckingham,
Will to your Mother, to entreat of her
To meet you at the Tower, and welcome you.

Yor. What,

Tor. What, will you goe unto the Tower, my Lord?

Prin. My Lord Protector will have it so.

Tor. I shall not sleepe in quiet at the Tower.

Glo. Why, what should you feare?

Tor. Marry, my Vnckle Clarence angry Ghost:
My Grandam told me he was murther'd there.

Prin. I feare no Vnckles dead.

Glo. Nor none that live, I hope.

Prin. And if they live, I hope I need not feare.
But come my Lord: and with a heavy heart,
Thinking on them, goe I unto the Tower.

Exeunt Prince, Torke, Hastings, and Dorset.

Manent Richard, Buckingham, and Catesby.

Buc. Thinke you, my Lord, this little prating Torke
Was not incensed by his subtil Mother,
To taunt and scorne you thus opprobriously?

Glo. No doubt, no doubt: Oh 'tis a perillous Boy,
Bold, quicke, ingenious, forward, capable:
Hee is all the Mothers, from the top to toe.

Buc. Well, let them rest: Come hither Catesby,
Thou art sworne as deeply to effect what we intend,
As closely to conceale what we impart:
Thou know'st our reasons urg'd upon the way,
What think'st thou? is it not an easy matter,
To make William Lord Hastings of our minde,
For the installment of this Noble Duke
In the Seat Royall of this famous Ile?

Cates. He for his fathers sake so loves the Prince,
That he will not be wonne to ought against him.

Buc. What think'st thou then of Stanley? Will not hee?

Cates. Hee will doe all in all as Hastings doth.

Buc. Well then, no more but this:
Goe gentle Catesby, and as it were farre off,
Sound thou Lord Hastings,
How he doth stand affected to our purpose,
And summon him to morrow to the Tower,
To sit about the Coronation.

If thou do'st finde him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons:
If he be leaden, ycie, cold, unwilling,
Bethou so too, and so breake off the talke,
And give us notice of his inclination:
For we to morrow hold divided Councils,
Wherein thy selfe shalt highly be employ'd.

Rich. Commend me to Lord William: tell him (Catesby)
His ancient Knot of dangerous Adversaries
To morrow are let blood at Pomfret Castle,
And bid my Lord, for joy of this good newes,
Give Mistresse Shore one gentle Kisse the more.

Buc. Good Catesby, goe effect this businesse soundly:

Cates. My good Lords both, with all the heed I can.

Rich. Shall we heare from you, Catesby, ere we sleepe?

Cates. You shall, my Lord.

Rich. At Crosby House, there shall you find us both:

Exit Catesby.

Buc. Now, my Lord,
What shall wee doe, if wee perceive
Lord Hastings will not yeeld to our Complots?

Rich. Chop off his Head:

Something wee will determine:

And looke when I am King, claime thou of me
The Earledome of Hereford, and all the moveables
Whereof the King, my Brother, was posselt.

Buc. Ile claime that promise at your Graces hand.

Rich. And looke to have it yeelded with all kindnesse.
Come, let us suppe betimes, that afterwards
Wee may digest our complots in some forme.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter a Messenger to the Doore of Hastings.

Mes. My Lord, my Lord.

Hast. Who knockes?

Mes. One from the Lord Stanley.

Hast. What is't a Clocke?

Mes. Vpon the stroke of foure.

Enter Lords Hastings,

Hast. Cannot my Lord Stanley sleepe these tedious Nights?

Mes. So it appeares, by that I have to say:
First, he commends him to your Noble selfe.

Hast. What then?

Mes. Then certifies your Lordship, that this Night
He dreamt, the Bore had rased off his Helme:
Besides, he sayes there are two Councils kept;
And that may be determin'd at the one,
Which may make you and him to rue at th'other.
Therefore he sends to know your Lordships pleasure,
If you will presently take Horse with him,
And with all speed post with him toward the North,
To shun the danger that his Soule diuines.

Hast. Goe fellow, goe returne unto thy Lord,
Bid him not feare the separated Council:
His Honnor and my selfe are at the one,
And at the other, is my good friend Catesby;
Where nothing can proceede, that toucheth us,
Whereof I shall not have intelligence:
Tell him his Feares are shallow, without instance.
And for his Dreames, I wonder hee's so simple,
To trust the mock'ry of unquiet slumbers.
To flye the Bore, before the Bore pursues,
Were to incense the Bore to follow us,
And make pursuit, where he did meane no chase.
Goe, bid thy Master rise, and come to me,
And we will both together to the Tower,
Where he shall see the Bore will use us kindly.

Mes. Ile goe, my Lord, and tell him what you say.

Exit.

Enter Catesby.

Cates. Many good morrowes to my Noble Lord.

Hast. Good morrow Catesby, you are early stirring:
What newes, what newes, in this our tott'ring State?

Cates. It is a reeling World indeed, my Lord:
And I beleeve will never stand upright,
Till Richard weare the Garland of the Realme.

Hast. How weare the Garland?
Doe'st thou meane the Crowne?

Cates. I, my good Lord.

Ha. Ile have this Crown of mine cut fro my shoulders,
Before Ile see the Crowne so foule mis-plac'd:
But canst thou guesse, that he doth ayme at it?

Cates. I, on my life, and hopes to find you forward,
Vpon his party, for the gaine thereof:
And thereupon he sends you this good newes,
That this same very day your enemies,
The Kindred of the Queene, must dye at Pomfret.

Hast. Indeed I am no mourner for that newes,
Because they have beene still my aduersaries:
But, that Ile give my voice on Richards side,
To barre my Maisters Heires, in true Descent,
God knowes I will not doe it, to the death.

Cates. God keepe your Lordship in that gracious minde.

Hast. But I shall laugh at this a twelve-month hence,
That they which brought me in my Maisters hare,
I live to looke upon their Tragedy.

Well Catesby, ere a fort-night make me older,
Ile send some packing, that yet thinke not on't.

Cates. 'Tis a vile thing to dye, my gracious Lord,
When men are unprepar'd, and looke not for it.

Hast. O monstrous, monstrous! and so falls it out
With Rivers, Vaughan, Grey; and so 'twill doe
With some men else, that thinke themselves as safe
As thou and I, who (as thou know'st) are deare
To Princely Richard, and Buckingham.

Cates. The Princes both make high account of you,
For they account his Head upon the Bridge.

Hast. I know they doe, and I have well deserv'd it.

Enter Lord Stanley.

Come on, come on, where is your Bore-speare man?
Feare you the Bore, and goe so unprovided?

Stan. My Lord good morrow, good morrow Catesby:
You may jest on, but by the holy Rood,
I doe not like these severall Counsels, I.

Hast. My Lord, I hold my Life as deare as yours,
And never in my dayes, I doe protest,
Was it so precious to me, as 'tis now:
Thinke you, but that I know our state secure,
I would be so triumphant as I am?

St. The Lords at Pomfret, when they rode from Londō,
Were jocund, and suppos'd their states were sure,
And they indeed had no cause to mistrust:
But yet you see, how soone the Day o're-cast.
This sudden stab of Rancour I misdoubt:
Pray God (I say) I prove a needlesse Coward.
What, shall we toward the Tower? the day is spent.

Hast. Come, come, have with you:
Wot you what, my Lord,
To day the Lords you talke of, are beheaded.

St. They, for their truth, might better wear their Heads,
Then some that have accus'd them, weare their Hats.
But come, my Lord, let's away.

Enter a Pursuivant.

Hast. Goe on before, Ile talke with this good fellow.

Exit Lord Stanley, and Catesby.

How now, Sirrha? how goes the World with thee?

Purs. The better, that your Lordship please to aske.

Hast. I tell thee man, 'tis better with me now,
Then when thou met'st me last, where now we meet:
Then was I going Prisoner to the Tower,
By the suggestion of the Queenes Allyes.
But now I tell thee (keepe it to thy selfe)
This day those Enemies are put to death,

And I in better state then ere I was.

Purs. God hold it, to your Honors good content.

Hast. Gramercy fellow: there drinke that for me.
Throwes him his Purse.

Purs. I thanke your Honor.

Exit Pursuivant.

Enter a Priest.

Priest. Well met, my Lord, I am glad to see your Honor.

Hast. I thanke thee, good Sir John, with all my heart.
I am in your debt, for your last Exercise:

Come the next Sabbath, and I will content you.

Priest. Ile wait upon your Lordship.

Enter Buckingham.

Buc. What, talking with a Priest, Lord Chamberlain?
Your friends at Pomfret, they doe need the Priest,
Your Honor hath no thriving worke in hand.

Hast. Good faith, and when I met this holy man,
The men you talke of, came into my minde.
What, goe you toward the Tower?

Buc. I doe, my Lord, but long I cannot stay there:
I shall retorne before your Lordship thence.

Hast. Nay like enough, for I stay Dinner there.

Buc. And Supper too, although thou know'st it not.
Come, will you goe?

Hast. Ile wait upon your Lordship.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Sir Richard Ratcliffe, with Halberds, carrying the Nobles to death at Pomfret.

Rivers. Sir Richard Ratcliffe, let me tell thee this,
To day shalt thou behold a Subject dy,
For truth, for Duty, and for Loyalty.

Grey. God blesse the Prince from all the Pack of you,
A Knot you are, of damned Blood-suckers.

Vaugh. You live, that shall cry woe for this heereafter.

Rat. Dispatch, the limit of your Lives is out,

Riv. O Pomfret, Pomfret! O thou bloody Prison!
Fatale and ominous to Noble Peeres:

Within the guilty Closure of thy Walls,
Richard the Second here was hackt to death:

And for more slander to thy dismall Seat,
We give to thee our guiltlesse blood to drinke.

Grey. Now Margarets Curse is false upon our Heads,
When shee exclaim'd on Hastings, you, and I,
For standing by, when Richard stab'd her Sonne.

Riv. Then curs'd shee Richard,

Then curs'd shee Buckingham,

Then curs'd shee Hastings. Oh remember God,

To heare her prayer for them, as now for us:

And for my Sister, and her Princely Sonnes,

Be satisfy'd, deare God, with our true blood,

Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt.

Rat. Make halte, the houre of death is now expir'd,

Riv. Come Grey, come Vaughan, let us heere embrace,
Farewell, untill we meet againe in Heaven.

Exeunt.

Scena

Scena Quarta.

Enter Buckingham, Darby, Hastings, Bishop of Ely, Norfolke, Ratcliffe, Lovell, with others,
at a Table.

Hast. Now Noble Peere, the cause why we are met,
Is to determine of the Coronation:

In Gods Name speake, when is the Royall day?

Buc. Is all things ready for the Royall time?

Darb. It is, and wants but nomination.

Ely. To morrow then I judge a happy day.

Buc. Who knows the Lord Protectors mind herein?
Who is most inward with the Noble Duke?

Ely. Your Grace, we thinke, should soonest know his minde.

Buc. We know each others Faces: for our Hearts,
He knowes no more of mine, then I of yours,
Or I of his, my Lord, then you of mine:
Lord Hastings, you and he are neere in love.

Hast. I thanke his Grace, I know he loves me well:
But for his purpose in the Coronation,
I have not founded him, nor he deliver'd
His gracious pleasure any way therein:
But you, my Honorable Lord, may name the time,
And in the Dukes behalfe Ile give my Voice,
Which I presume hee'll take in gentle part.

Enter Gloucester.

Ely. In happy time, here comes the Duke himselfe.

Rich. My Noble Lords, and Cousins all, good morrow:
I have beene long a sleeper: but I trust,
My absence doth neglect no great designe,
Which by my presence might have beene concluded.

Buc. Had you not come upon your Q my Lord,
William, Lord Hastings, had pronounc'd your part;
I meane your Voice, for Crowning of the King.

Rich. Then my Lord Hastings, no man might be bolder,
His Lordship knowes me well, and loves me well.
My Lord of Ely, when I was last in Holborne,
I saw good Strawberries in your Garden there,
I doe beseech you, send for some of them.

Ely. Mary and will, my Lord, with all my heart.

Exit Bishop.

Rich. Cousin of Buckingham, a word with you.
Catesby hath founded Hastings in our businesse,
And findes the testy Gentleman so hot,
That he will lose his Head, ere give consent
His Maisters Child, as worshipfully he tearmes it, Shall lose the Royaltie of Englands Throne.

Buc. Withdraw your selfe a while, Ile goe with you.

Exeunt.

Dar. We have not yet set downe this day of Triumph:
To morrow, in my judgement, is too sudden,
For I my selfe am not so well provided,
As else I would be, were the day prolong'd.

Enter the Bishop of Ely.

Ely. Where is my Lord, the Duke of Gloster?
I have sent for these Strawberries.

Ha. His Grace looks cheerfully & smooth this morning,

There's some conceit or other likes him well,
When that he bids good morrow with such spirit.
I thinke there's never a man in Christendome
Can lesse hide his love, or hate, then hee,
For by his Face straight shall you know his Heart.

Darb. What of his Heart perceive you in his Face,
By any livelyhood he shew'd to day?

Hast. Mary that with no man here he is offended:
For were he, he had shewne it in his Lookes.

Enter Richard, and Buckingham.

Rich. I pray you all, tell me what they deserve,
That doe conspire my death with divelliſh Plots
Of damned Witchcraft, and that have prevail'd
Vpon my Body with their Hellish Charmes.

Hast. The tender love I beare your Grace, my Lord,
Makes me most forward, in this Princely presence,
To doome th' Offendors, whosoe're they be:
I say, my Lord, they have deserved death.

Rich. Then be your eyes the witnesse of their evill,
Looke how I am bewitch'd: behold, mine Arme
Is like a blasted Sapling, wither'd up:
And this is Edwards Wife, that monstrous Witch,
Conforted with that Harlot, Strumpet Shore,
That by their Witchcraft thus have marked me.

Hast. If they have done this deed, my Noble Lord.

Rich. If thou Protector of this damned Strumpet,
Talk'ſt thou to me of Ifs, thou art a Traytor,
Off with his Head; now by Saint Paul I sweare,
I will not dine, untill I see the same.

Lovell and Ratcliffe, looke that it be done:

Exeunt.

The rest that love me, rise, and follow me.

Manent: Lovell and Ratcliffe, with the Lord Hastings.

Hast. Woe, woe for England, not a whit for me,
For I, too fond, might have prevented this:
Stanley did dreame, the Bore did rowse our Helmes,
And I did scorne it, and disdaine to flye:
Three times to day my Foot-Cloth-Horse did stumble,
And started, when he look'd upon the Tower,
As loth to beare me to the slaughter-house.

O now I need the Priest, that spake to me:
I now repent I told the Pursuivant,

As too triumphing, how mine Enemies
To day at Pomfret bloodily were butcher'd,
And I my selfe secure, in grace and favour.

Oh Margaret, Margaret, now thy heavy Curse
Is lighted on poore Hastings wretched Head.

Ra. Come, come, dispatch, the Duke would be at dinner:
Make a short Shrift, he longs to see your Head.

Hast. O momentary grace of mortall men,
Which we more hunt for, then the grace of God!
Who builds his hope in ayre of your good Lookes,
Lives like a drunken Saylor on a Mast,
Ready with every Nod to tumble downe,
Into the fatall Bowels of the Deepe.

Lov. Come, come, dispatch, 'tis bootlesse to exclaime.

Hast. O bloody Richard: miserable England,
I prophcey the fearefull't time to thee;
That ever wretched Age hath look'd upon.
Come, leade me to the Block, beare him my Head,
They smile at me, who shortly shall be dead.

Exeunt.

Enter

Enter Richard, and Buckingham, in rotten Armour, marvellous ill-favoured.

Richard. Come Cousin,
Canst thou quake, and change thy colour,
Murder thy breath in middle of a word,
And then againe begin, and stop againe,
As if thou were distraught, and mad with terror?

Buc. Tut, I can counterfeite the deepe Tragedian, Speake, and looke backe, and prie on every side,
Tremble and start at wagging of a Straw:
Intending deepe suspition, gantly Lookes:
Are at my service, like enforced Smiles;
And both are ready in their Offices,
At any time to grace my Stratagemes.
But what, is Catesby, gone?

Rich. He is, and see he brings the Maior along.

Enter the Major, and Catesby.

Buck. Lord Major.

Rich. Looke to the Draw-Bridge there.

Buc. Hearke, a Drumme.

Rich. Catesby, o're-looke the Walls.

Buc. Lord Major, the reason we have sent.

Rich. Looke back, defend thee, here are Enemies.

Buc. God and our Innocency defend, and guard us.

Enter Lovell and Ratcliffe, with Hastings Head.

Rich. Be patient, they are friends: Ratcliffe, and Lovell.

Lov. Here is the Head of that ignoble Traitor,
The dangerous and unsuspected Hastings.

Rich. So deare I lov'd the man, that I must weepe:
I tooke him for the plainest harmlesse Creature,
That breath'd upon the Earth, a Christian:
Made him my Booke, wherein my Soule recorded
The History of all her secret thoughts.
So smooth he daw'd his Vice with shew of Vertue,
That his apparant open Guilt omitted,
I meane his Conversation with Shores Wife,
He liv'd from all attainder of suspects.

Buc. Well, well, he was the covertst sheltred Traitor
That ever liv'd.

Would you imagine, or almost beleave,
Wert not, that by great preservation
We live to tell it, that the subtil Traitor
This day had plotted, in the Councell-House,
To murder me, and my good Lord of Gloster.

Ma. Had he done so?

Rich. What? thinke you we are Turkes, or Infidels?
Or that we would, against the forme of Law,
Proceed thus rashly in the Villaines death,
But that the extreme perill of the case,
The Peace of England, and our Persons safety,
Enforc'd us to this Execution.

Ma. Now faire befall you, he deserv'd his death,
And your good Graces both have well proceeded,
To warne false Traitors from the like Attempts.

Buc. I never look'd for better at his hands,
After he once fell in with Mistresse Shore:
Yet had we not determin'd he should dye,
Vntill your Lordship came to see his end,
Which now the loving haste of these our friends,
Something against our meanings, have prevented;
Because, my Lord, I would have had you heard
The Traitor speake, and timorously confesse
The manner and the purpose of his Treasons:

That you might well have signify'd the same
Vnto the Citizens, who haply may
Misconster us in him, and waile his death.

Ma. But, my good Lord, your Graces words shall serve,
As well as I had seene, and heard him speake:
And doe not doubt, right Noble Princes both,
But Ile acquaint our dutious Citizens
With all your just proceedings in this case.

Rich. And to that end we wish'd your Lordship here,
T'avoid the Censures of the carping World.

Bu. Which since you come too late of our intent,
Yet witnesse what you heare we did intend:
And so, my good Lord Major, we bid farewell.

Exit Major.

Rich. Goe after, after, Cousin Buckingham.
The Major towards Guild-Hall hyes him in all poste:
There, at your meetest vantage of the time,
Inferre the Bastardy of Edwards Children:
Tell them, how Edward put to death a Citizen,
Onely for saying, he would make his Sonne
Heire to the Crowne, meaning indeed his House,
Which, by the Signe thereof, was tearmed so.
Moreover, urge his hatefull Luxury,
And beastiall appetite in change of Lust,
Which stretcht unto their Servants, Daughter, Wives,
Even where his raging eye, or savage heart,
Without controll, lusted to make a prey.

Nay for a need, thus faire come neere my Person:
Tell them, when that my Mother went with Child
Of that infatiate Edward, Noble Torke,
My Princely Father, then had Warres in France,
And by true computation of the time,
Found, that the Issue was not his begot:
Which well appeared in his Lincaments,
Being nothing like the Noble Duke, my Father:
Yet touch this sparingly, as 'twere farre off,
Because, my Lord, you know my Mother lives.

Buc. Doubt not, my Lord, Ile play the Orator,
As if the Golden Fee, for which I plead,
Were for my selfe: and so, my Lord, adue.

Rich. If you thrive wel, bring them to Baynards Castle,
Where you shall finde me well accompanied
With reverend Fathers, and well-learned Bishops.

Buc. I goe, and towards three or foure a Clocke Looke for the Newes that the Guild-Hall affords.

Exit Buckingham.

Rich. Goe Lovell with all speed to Doctor Shaw,

Goe thou to Fryer Peuker, bid them both
Meet me within this houre at Baynards Castle.

Now will I goe to take some privy order,
To draw the Brats of Clarence out of sight,
And to give order, that no manner person
Have any time recourse unto the Princes.

Exit.

Exeunt.

Enter a Scrivener.

Scr. Here is the Indictment of the good Lord Hastings,
Which in a set Hand fairely is engross'd,
That it may be to day read or'e in Paules.
And marke how well the sequell hangs together:
Eleven houres I have spent to write it over,
For yester-night by Catesby was it sent me,
The Precedent was full as long a doing,
And yet within these five houres Hastings liv'd,
Vntainted, unexamin'd, free, at liberty.
Here's a good World the while; who is so grosse,
That cannot see this palpable device?

Yet

Yet who so bold, but sayes he sees it not?
Bad is the World, and all will come to nought,
When such ill dealing must be seene in thought.

Exit.

Enter Richard and Buckingham at severall Doores.

Rich. How now, how now, what say the Citizens?
Buck. Now by the holy Mother of our Lord,
The Citizens are mum, say not a word.

Rich. Toucht you the Bastardy of Edwards Children?

Buc. I did, with his Contract with Lady Lucy,
And his Contract by Deputy in France,
Th'unsatiated greedinesse of his desire,
And his enforcement of the City Wives,
His Tyranny for Trifles, his owne Bastardy,
As being got, your Father then in France,
And his resemblance, being not like the Duke.
Withall, I did inferre your Lineaments,
Being the right Idea of your Father,
Both in your forme, and Noblenesse of Minde:
Layd open all your Victories in Scotland,
Your Discipline in Warre, Wisdome in Peace,
Your Bounty, Vertue, faire Humility:
Indeed, left nothing fitting for your purpose,
Untoucht, or slightly handled in discourse.
And when my Oratory drew toward end,
I bid them that did love their Countries good,
Cry, God save Richard, Englands Royall King.

Rich. And did they so?

Buc. No, so God helpe me, they spake not a word,
But like dumbe Statues, or breathing Stones,
Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale:
Which when I saw, I reprehended them,
And ask'd the Major, what meant this wilfull silence?
His answer was, the people were not used
To be spoke to, but by the Recorder.
Then he was urg'd to tell my Tale againe:
Thus sayth the Duke, thus hath the Duke inferr'd,
But nothing spoke, in warrant from himselfe.
When he had done, some followers of mine owne,
At lower end of the Hall, hurld up their Caps,
And some tenne voyces cry'd, God save King Richard:
And thus I tooke the vantage of those few.
Thanks gentle Citizens, and friends, quoth I,
This generall applaude, and chearefull shewt,
Argues your wisdome, and your love to Richard:
And even here brake off, and came away.

Rich. What tongue-lesse Blockes were they,
Would they not speake?
Will not the Major then, and his Brethren, come?

Buc. The Major is here at hand, intend some feare,
Be not you spoke with, but by mighty suite:
And looke you get a Prayer-Booke in your hand,
And stand betweene two Church-men, good my Lord,
For on that ground Ile make a holy Descent:
And be not easily wonne to our requests,
Play the Maids part, still answer nay, and take it.

Rich. I goe: and if you plead as well for them,
As I can say nay to thee for my selfe,
No doubt we bring it to a happy issue.

Buc. Go, go up to the Leads, the Lord Major knocks.

Enter the Major, and Citizens.

Welcome, my Lord, I dance attendance here,
I thinke the Duke will not be spoke withall.

Enter Catesby.

Buc. Now Catesby, what sayes your Lord to my request?

Cates. He doth entreat your Grace, my Noble Lord,
To visit him to morrow, or next day:
He is within, with two right reverend Fathers,
Divinely bent to Meditation,
And in no Worldly suites would he be mov'd,
To draw him from his holy Exercise.

Buc. Returne, good Catesby, to the gracious Duke,
Tell him, my selfe, the Major and Aldermen,
In deepe designs, in matter of great moment,
No lesse importing then our generall good,
Are come to have some conference with his Grace.

Cates. Ile signifie so much unto him straight. Exit.

Buc. Ah ha, my Lord, this Prince is not an Edward,
He is not lulling on a lewd Love-Bed:

But on his Knees, at Meditation:
Not dallying with a Brace of Curtizans,
But meditating with two deepe Divines:
Not sleeping, to engrosse his idle Body,
But praying, to enrich his watchfull Soule.
Happy were England, would this vertuous Prince
Take on his Grace the Sovereignty thereof.
But sure I feare we shall not winne him to it.

Major. Marry God defend his Grace should say us nay.

Buc. I feare he will; here Catesby comes againe.

Enter Catesby.

Now Catesby, what sayes his Grace?

Cates. He wonders to what end you have assembled
Such troopes of Citizens, to come to him.
His Grace not being warn'd thereof before:
He feares, my Lord, you meane no good to him.

Buc. Sorry I am, my Noble Cousin should Suspect me, that I meane no good to him:
By Heaven, we come to him in perfitt love,
And so once more returne, and tell his Grace. Exit.
When holy and devout Religious men
Are at their Beades, 'tis much to draw them thence,
So sweet is zealous Contemplation.

Enter Richard aloft, betweene two Bishops.

Ma. See where his Grace stands, tween two Clergy me.

Buc. Two Props of Vertue, for a Christian Prince,
To stay him from the fall of Vanity:
And see a Booke of Prayer in his hand,
True Ornaments to know a holy man.
Famous Plantagenet, most gracious Prince,
Lend favourable eare to our requests,
And pardon us the interruption
Of thy Devotion, and right Christian Zeale.

Rich. My Lord, there needes no such Apology:
I doe beseech your Grace to pardon me,
Who earnest in the service of God,
Deferr'd the visitation of my friends.

But leaving this, what is your Graces pleasure?

Buc. Even that (I hope) which pleaseth God above,
And all good men, of this ungovern'd Ile.

Rich. I doe suspect I have done some offence,
That semes disgracious in the Cities eye,
And that you come to reprehend my ignorance.

Buc. You

Buc. You have, my Lord:

Would it might please your Grace,
On our entreaties, to amend your fault.

Rich. Else wherefore breathe I in a Christian Land.

Buc. Know then, it is your fault, that you resigne
The Supreme Seat, the Throne Majestically,
The Sceptred Office of your Ancestors,
Your State of Fortune, and your Deaw of Birth,
The Lineall Glory of your Royall House,
To the corruption of a blemisht Stock:
Whiles in the mildnesse of your sleepe thoughts,
(Which here we waken to our Countries good,)
The Noble Ile doth want his proper Limmes:
His Face defac'd with skarres of Infamy,
His Royall Stock grafft with ignoble Plants,
And almost shouldred in the swallowing Gulfe
Of darke Forgetfulnesse, and deepe Oblivion.
Which to recure, we heartily folicite
Your gracious selfe to take on you the charge
And Kingly Governement of this your Land:
Not as Protector, Steward, Substitute,
Or lowly Factor, for anothers gaine;
But as successefully, from Blood to Blood,
Your Right of Birth,, your Empry, your owne.
For this, conforred with the Citizens,
Your very Worshipfull and loving friends,
And by their vehement instigation,
In this iust Cause come I to move your Grace.

Rich. I cannot tell, if to depart in silence,
Or bitterly to speake in your reproofe,
Best fitteth my Degree, or your Condition.
For not to answer, you might haply thinke,
Tongue-ty'd Ambition, not replying, yeelded
To beare the Golden Yoake of Soveraigntie,
Which fondly you would here impose on me.
If to reprove you for this suit of yours,
So season'd with your faithfull love to me,
Then on the other side I check'd my friends.
Therefore to speake, and to avoid the first,
And then in speaking, not to incurre the last,
Definitively thus I answer you.
Your love deserves my thanks, but my desert
Vnmeritable, shunnes your high request.
First, if all Obstacles were cut away,
And that my Path were even to the Crowne,
As the ripe Revenue, and due of Birth:
Yet so much is my poverty of spirit,
So mighty, and so many my defects,
That I would rather hide me from my Greatnesse,
Being a Barke to brooke no mighty Sea,
Then in my Greatnesse covet to be hid,
And in the vapour of my Glory smother'd.
But God be thank'd, there is no need of me,
And much I need to helpe you, were there need:
The Royall Tree hath left us Royall Fruit,
Which mellow'd by the stealing howres of time,
Will well become the Seat of Majesty,
And make us (no doubt) happy by his Reigne.
On him I lay that, you would lay on me,
The Right and Fortune of his happy Starres,
Which God defend that I should wring from him.

Buc. My Lord, this argues Conscience in your Grace,
But the respects thereof are nice, and triviall,
All circumstances well considered.
You say, that Edward is your Brothers Sonne,
So say we too, but not by Edwards Wife:

For first was he contract to Lady Lucy,
Your Mother lives a Witnesse to his Vow;
And afterward by substitute betroth'd
To Bona, Sister to the King of France.
These both put off, a poore Petitioner,
A Care-cras'd Mother to a many Sonnes,
A Beauty-waining, and distressed Widow,
Even in the after-noone of her best dayes,
Made prize and purchase of his wanton Eye,
Seduc'd the pich, and height of his degree,
To base declension, and loath'd Bigamie.
By her, in his unlawfull Bed, he got
This Edward, whom our Manners call the Prince.
More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that for reverence to some alive,
I give a sparing limit to my Tongue.
Then good, my Lord, take to your Royall selfe
This proffer'd benefit of Dignity:
If not to blesse us and the Land withall,
Yet to draw forth your Noble Ancestry
From the corruption of abusing times,
Vnto a Lineall true derived course.

Maio. Do good my Lord, your Citizens entreat you.

Buc. Refuse not, mighty Lord, this proffer'd love.

Cates. O make them joyfull, grant their lawfull suit.

Rich. Alas, why would you heape this Care on me?
I am unfit for State, and Majesty:
I doe beseech you take it not amisse,
I cannot, nor I will not yeeld to you.

Buc. If you refuse it, as in love and zeale,
Loth to depose the Child-your Brothers Sonne,
As well we know your tenderesse of heart,
And gentle, kinde, effeminate remorse,
Which we have noted in you to your Kindred,
And equally indeede to all Estates:
Yet know, where you accept our suit, or no,
Your Brothers Sonne shall never reigne our King,
But we will plant some other in the Throne,
To the disgrace and downe-fall of your House:
And in this resolution here we leave you.

Come Citizens, we will entreat no more. Exeunt.

Cates. Call him againe, sweet Prince, accept their suit:
If you deny them, all the Land will rue it.

Rich. Will you enforce me to a world of Cares?
Call them againe, I am not made of Stones,
But penetrable to your kinde entreaties,
Albeit against my Conscience and my Soule.

Enter Buckingham, and the rest.
Cousin of Buckingham, and sage grave men,
Since you will buckle fortune on my back,
To beare her burthen, whether, I will or no,
I must have patience to endure the Load:
But if black Scandall, or foule-fac'd Reproach,
Attend the sequell of your Imposition,
Your meere enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and staynes thereof,
For God doth know, and you may partly see,
How farre I am from the desire of this.

Maio. God blesse your Grace, wee see it, and will say it.

Rich. In saying so, you shall but say the truth.

Buc. Then I salute you with this Royall Title, Long live King Richard, Englands worthy King.

All. Amen.

Buc. To morrow may it please you to be Crown'd?

Rich. Even when you please, for you will have it so.
Buck. To

Buc. To morrow then we will attend your Grace,
And so most joyfully we take our leave.
Rich. Come, let us to our holy Worke againe.
Farewell my Cousins, farewell gentle friends. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scæna Prima.

Enter the Queene, Anne Duchesse of Gloucester, the Duchesse of Yorke, and Marquesse Dorset,

Duch. Yorke. Who meetes us heere?
My Neece Plantagenet,
Led in the hand of her kind Aunt of Gloster?
Now, for my Life, shee's wandring to the Tower,
On pure hearts love, to greet the tender Prince.
Daughter, well met.

An. God give your Graces both a happy
And a joyfull time of day.

Qu. As much to you, good Sister: whither away?

An. No farther then the Tower, and as I guesse,
Vpon the like devotion as your selves,
To gratulate the gentle Princes there.

Qu. Kind Sister thanks, wee'll enter all together:

Enter the Lieutenant.

And in good time, here the Lieutenant comes.

Maister Lieutenant, pray you, by your leave,
How doth the Prince, and my young Sonne of Yorke?

Lien. Right well, deare Madame: by your patience,
I may not suffer you to visit them,
The King hath strictly charg'd the contrary.

Qu. The King? who's that?

Lien. I meane, the Lord Protector.

Qu. The Lord protect him from that Kingly Title.
Hath be set bounds betweene their love, and me?
I am their Mother, who shall barre me from them?

Duch. Yorke. I am their Fathers Mother, I will see them.

An. Their Aunt I am in law, in love their Mother:
Then bring me to their sights, Ile beare thy blame,
And take thy Office from thee, on my perill.

Lien. No, Madame, no, I may not leave it so:
I am bound by Oath, and therefore pardon me.

Exit Lieutenant.

Enter Stanley.

Stan. Let me but meet you Ladies one howre hence,
And Ile salute your Grace of Yorke as Mother,
And reverend looker on of two faire Queenes.
Come Madame, you must straight to Westminster,
There to be crowned Richards Royall Queene.

Qu. Ah, cut my Lace asunder,
That my pent heart may have some scope to beat,
Or else I woone with this dead-killing newes.

An. Despightfull tidings, O unpleasing newes.

Dorf. Be of good cheare: Mother, how fares your Grace?

Qu. O Dorfet, speake not to me, get thee gone,
Death and Destruction dogges thee at thy heeles,
Thy Mothers Name is ominous to Children.
If thou wilt out-strip Death, goe crosse the Seas,

And live with Richmond, from the reach of Hell.
Goe hye thee, hye thee from this slaughter-house,
Lest thou encrease the number of the dead,
And make me dye the thrall of Margarets Curse,
Nor Mother, Wife, nor Englands counted Queene.

Stan. Full of wise care, is this your counsaile, Madame:
Take all the swift advantage of the howres:
You shall have Letters from me to my Sonne,
In your behalfe, to meet you on the way:
Be not ta'ne tardy by unwise delay.

Duch. Yor. O ill dispersing Winde of Misery,
O my accursed Wombe, the Bed of Death:
A Cockatrice hast thou hatcht to the World,
Whose vnavoided Eye is murtherous.

Stan. Come, Madame, come, I in all haste was sent.

An. And I with all unwillingnesse will goe.
O would to God, that the inclusive Verge
Of Golden Mettall, that must round my Brow,
Were red hot Steele, to seare me to the Braines,
Anoynted let me be with deadly Venome,
And dye ere men can say, God save the Queene.

Qu. Goe, goe, poore soule, I envie not thy glory,
To feed my humor, with thy selfe no harme.

An. No: why? When he that is my Husband now,
Came to me, as I follow'd Henries Corse,
When scarce the blood was well washt from his hands,
Which issued from my other Angell Husband,
And that deare Saint, which then I weeping follow'd:
O, when I say, I look'd on Richards Face,
This was my Wish: Be thou (quoth I) accurst,
For making me, so young, so old a Widow:
And when thou wed'st, let sorrow haunt thy Bed:
And be thy Wife, if any be so mad,
More miserable, by the Life of thee,
Then thou hast made me, by my deare Lords death.
Loe, ere I can repeat this Curse againe,
Within so small a time, my Womans heart
Grossely grew captive to his honey words,
And prov'd the subject of mine owne Soules Curse,
Which hitherto hath held mine eyes from rest:
For never yet one howre in his Bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleepe,
But with his timorous Dreames was still awak'd.
Besides, he hates me for my Father Warwicke,
And will (no doubt) shortly be rid of me.

Qu. Poore heart a dieu, I pittie thy complaining.

An. No more, then with my soule I mourne for yours.

Dorf. Farewell, thou wofull welcommer of glory.

Anne. Adieu, poore soule, that tak'st thy leave
of it,

Duch. Yorke. Go to Richmond, to Dorfet, to Anne, to the Queene, and good fortune guide thee,
Go thou to Richard, and good Angels tend thee,
Go thou to Sanctuary, and good thoughts possesse thee;
I to my Grave, where peace and rest lye with mee.
Eighty odde yeeres of sorrow have I seene,
And each howres joy wrackt with a weeke of teene.

Qu. Stay, yet looke backe with me unto the Tower.
Pitty, you ancient Stones, those tender Babes,
Whom Envie hath immur'd within your Walls,
Rough Cradle for such little pretty ones,
Rude ragged Nurse, old fullen Play-fellow,
For tender Princes: use my Babies well;
So foolish Sorrowes bids your Stones farewell.

Exeunt.

Sound

Scena Secunda.

Sound a Sonnet. Enter Richard in pompe, Buckingham, Catesby, Ratcliffe, Lovel.

Rich. Stand all apart. Cousin of Buckingham.

Buck. My gracious Sovereigne.

Rich. Give me thy hand. Sound.

Thus high, by thy advice, and thy assistance,
Is King Richard seated:

But shall we weare these Glories for a day?
Or shall they last, and we rejoyce in them?

Buc. Still live they, and for ever let them last.

Rich. Ah Buckingham, now doe I play the Touch,
To try if thou be currant Gold indeed:

Young Edward lives, thinke now what I would speake.

Buck. Say on my loving Lord.

Rich. Why Buckingham, I say I would be King.

Buc. Why so you are, my thrice-renowned Lord.

Rich. Ha? am I King? 'tis so: but Edward lives.

Buc. True, Noble Prince.

Rich. O bitter consequence!

That Edward still should live true Noble Prince.

Cousin, thou wast not wont to be so dull.

Shall I be plaine? I wish the Bastards dead,

And I would have it suddenly perform'd.

What say'st thou now? speake suddenly, be briefe.

Buc. Your Grace may doe your pleasure.

Rich. Tut, tut, thou art all Ice, thy kindnesse freezes:

Say, have I thy consent, that they shall dye?

Buc. Give me some little breath, some pawse, deare Lord,
Before I positively speake in this:

I will resolve you herein presently. Exit Buck.

Cates. The King is angry, see he gnawes his Lippe.

Rich. I will converse with Iron-witted Fooles,
And unrespective Boyes: none are for me,
That looke into me with considerate eyes,
High-reaching Buckingham growes circumspect.
Boy.

Page. My Lord.

Rich. Know'st thou not any, whom corrupting Gold
Will tempt unto a close exploit of Death?

Page. I know a discontented Gentleman,
Whose humble meanes match not his haughty spirit:
Gold were as good as twenty Orators,
And will (no doubt) tempt him to any thing.

Rich. What is his Name?

Page. His Name, my Lord, is Tirrell.

Rich. I partly know the man: goe call him hither, Boy. Exit.

The deepe revolving witty Buckingham,
No more shall be the neighbor to my counsailes.
Hath he so long held out with me, untyr'd,
And stops he now for breath? Well, be it so.

Enter Stanley.

How now, Lord Stanley, what's the newes?

Stanley. Know my loving Lord, the Marquesse Dorset
As I heare, is fled to Richmond,
In the parts where he abides.

Rich. Come hither Catesby, rumor it abroad,
That Anne my Wife is very grievous sicke,

I will take order for her keeping close.

Inquire me out some meane poore Gentleman,
Whom I will marry straight to Clarence Daughter:
The Boy is foolish, and I feare not him.

Looke how thou dream'st: I say agine, give out,
That Anne, my Queene, is sicke, and like to dye.

About it, for it stands me much upon

To stop all hopes, whose growth may damage me.

I must be married to my Brothers Daughter,
Or else my Kingdome stands on brittle Glasse:

Murther her Brothers, and then marry her,

Vncertaine way of gaine. But I am in

So farre in blood, that sinne will pluck on sinne,
Teare-falling Pitty dwells not in this Eye.

Enter Tyrrel.

Is thy Name Tyrrel?

Tyr. James Tyrrel, and your most obedient subject.

Rich. Art thou indeed?

Tyr. Prove me, my gracious Lord.

Rich. Dar'st thou resolve to kill a friend of mine?

Tyr. Please you:

But I had rather kill two enemies.

Rich. Why then thou hast it: two deepe enemies,
Foes to my Rest, and my sweet sleepes disturbers,
Are they that I would have thee deale upon:

Tyrrel, I meane those Bastards in the Tower.

Tyr. Let me have open meanes to come to them,
And soone Ile rid you from the feare of them.

Rich. Thou sing'st sweet Musique:

Hearke, come hither Tyrrel,

Goe by this token: rise, and lend thine Eare, Whisper.
There is no more but so: say it is done,

And I will love thee, and preferre thee for it.

Tyr. I will dispatch it straight. Exit.

Enter Buckingham.

Buc. My Lord, I have consider'd in my minde,
The late request that you did sound me in.

Rich. Well, let that rest: Dorset is fled to Richmond.

Buc. I heare the newes, my Lord.

Rich. Stanley, hee is your Wives Sonne: well, looke unto it.

Buc. My Lord, I clayme the gift, my due by promise,
For which your Honor and your Faith is pawn'd
Th' Earledome of Hereford, and the moveables,
Which you have promised I shall possesse.

Rich. Stanley looke to your Wife: if she convey Letters to Richmond, you shall answer it.

Buc. What sayes your Highnesse to my just request?

Rich. I doe remember me, Henry the Sixt
Did prophecy, that Richmond should be King,
When Richmond was a little peevish Boy.
A King perhaps.

Buc. May it please you to resolve me in my suit.

Rich. Thou troublest me, I am not in the veine. Exit.

Buc. And is it thus? repayes he my deepe service
With such contempt? made I him King for this?
O let me thinke on Hastings, and be gone
To Brecknock, while my fearefull Head is on. Exit.

Enter Tyrrel.

Tyr. The tyrantous and bloody Act is done,
The most arch deed of pittious massacre

That

That ever yet this Land was guilty of:
Dighton and Forrest, whom I did suborne
 To do this peece of ruthfull Butchery,
 Albeit they were flesht Villaines, bloody Dogges,
 Melted with tendernesse, and milde compassion,
 Wept like to Children, in their deaths sad Story.
 O thus (quoth Dighton) lay the gentle Babes:
 Thus, thus (quoth Forrest) girdling one another
 Within their Alabaster innocent Armes:
 Their lips were foure red Roses on a stalke,
 And in their Summer Beauty kist each other.
 A Booke of Prayers on their pillow lay,
 Which one (quoth Forrest) almost chang'd my minde:
 But oh the Divell, there the Villaine stopt:
 When Dighton thus told on, we smothered
 The most replenished sweet worke of nature,
 That from the prime Creation ere she framed.
 Hence both are gone with Conscience and Remorse,
 They could not speake, and so I left them both,
 To beare these tydings to the bloody King.

Enter Richard.

And heere he comes. All health my Sovereigne Lord.

Rich. Kinde Tirrell, am I happy in thy Newes.

Tir. If to have done the thing you gave in charge,
 Beget your happinesse, be happy then,
 For it is done.

Rich. But did'st thou see them dead?

Tir. I did my Lord.

Rich. And buried gentle Tirrell?

Tir. The Chaplaine of the Tower hath buried them,
 But where (to say the truth) I do not know.

Rich. Come to me Tirrell soone, and after Supper,
 When thou there shalt tell the processe of their death.
 Meane time, but thinke how I may do thee good,
 And be inheritor of thy desire.
 Farewell till then.

Tir. I humbly take leave.

Rich. The Sonne of Clarence have I pent up close,
 His daughter meanly have I matcht in marriage,
 The Sonnes of Edward sleepe in Abrahams bosome,
 And Anne my wife hath bid this world good night.
 Now for I know the Britaine Richmond aymes
 At yong Elizabeth my Brothers daughter,
 And by that knot lookes proudly on the Crowne,
 To her go I, a jolly thriving wooer.

Enter Ratcliffe.

Rat. My Lord.

Rich. Good or bad newes, that thou com'st in so bluntly?

Rat. Bad news my Lord, Mourton is fled to Richmond,
 And Buckingham backt with the hardy Welshmen
 Is in the field, and still his power encreaseth.

Rich. Ely with Richmond troubles me more neere,
 Then Buckingham and his rash levied Strength.
 Come, I have learn'd, that fearfull commenting
 Is leaden servitor to dull delay.

Delay leades impotent and Snail-pac'd Beggery:

Then fiery expedition be my wing,
 Loves Mercury, and Herald for a King:

Go muster men: My counsaile is my Sheeld,
 We must be breese, when Traitors brave the Field.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter old Lucene Margaret.

Mar. So now prosperity begins to mellow,
 And drop into the rotten mouth of death:
 Heere in these Confinnes slyly have I lurkt;
 To watch the waining of mine enemies.
 A dire induction, am I witnesse to,
 And will to France, hoping the consequence
 Will prove as bitter, blacke, and Tragicall.
 Withdraw thee wretched Margaret, who comes heere?

Enter Dutchesse and Lucene.

Lu. Ah my poore Princes I ah my tender Babes!
 My unblowne Flowers, new appearing sweets:
 If yet your gentle soules flye in the Ayre,
 And be not fixt in doome perpetuall,
 Hover about me with your ayery wings,
 And heare your mothers Lamentation.

Mar. Hover about her, say that right for right
 Hath dim'd your Infant morne, to Aged night.

Dut. So many miseries have craz'd my voyce,
 That my woe-wearied tongue is still and mute.
Edward Plantagenet, why art thou dead?

Mar. Plantagenet doth quit Plantagenet,
Edward for Edward, payes a dying debt.

Lu. Wilt thou, O God, flye from such gentle Lambs,
 And throw them in the intrailles of the Wolfe?
 Why didst thou sleepe, when such a deed was done?

Mar. When holy Henry dyed, and my swee Sonne.

Dut. Dead life, blind sight, poore mortall living ghost,
 Woes Scene, Worlds shame, Graves due, by life usurpt,
 Breefe abstract and record of tedious dayes,
 Rest thy unrest on Englands lawfull earth,
 Vnlawfully made drunke with innocent blood.

Lu. Ah that thou would'st assoone affoord a Grave,
 As thou canst yeeld a melancholly seate:
 Then would I hide my bones, not rest them heere,
 Ah who hath any cause to mourne but wee?

Mar. If ancient sorrow be most reverent,
 Give mine the benefit of signeury,
 And let my greefes frowne on the upper hand
 If sorrow can admit Society.

I had an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him:

I had a Husband, till a Richard kill'd him:

Thou had'st an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him:

Thou had'st a Richard, till a Richard kill'd him.

Dut. I had a Richard too, and thou did'st kill him;
 I had a Rutland too, thou holp'st to kill him.

Mar. Thou had'st a Clarence too,
 And Richard kill'd him.

From forth the kennell of thy wombe hath crept
 A Hell-hound that doth hunt us all to death:
 That Dogge, that had his teeth before his eyes,
 To worry Lambes, and lap their gentle blood:
 That foule defacer of Gods handy worke:
 That reignes in gauled eyes of weeping soules:
 That excellent grand Tyrant of the earth,
 Thy wombe let loose to chase us to our graves.
 O upright, just, and true-disposing God,
 How do I thanke thee, that this carnall Curre

Preyes

Preyes on the issue of his Mothers body,
And makes her Pue-fellow with others mone.
Dut. Oh Harries wife, triumph not in my woes:
God witnesse with me, I have wept for thine.

Mar. Beare with me: I am hungry for revenge,
And now I cloy me with beholding it.
Thy Edward he is dead, that kill'd my Edward,
The other Edward dead, to quit my Edward:
Yong Yorke, he is but boote, because both they Matcht not the high perfection of my losse.
Thy Clarence he is dead, that stab'd my Edward,
And the beholders of this franticke play,
Th'adulterate Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Gray,
Vntimely smother'd in their dusky Graves.
Richard yet lives, Hels blacke Intelligencer,
Onely reserv'd their Factor, to buy soules,
And send then thither: But at hand, at hand
Insues his pittious and unpittied end.
Earth gapes, Hell burnes, Fiends roare, Saints pray,
To have him sodainly convey'd from hence:
Cancell his bond of life, deere God I pray,
That I may live and say, The Dogge is dead.

Qu. O thou did'st prophesie, the time would come,
That I should wish for thee to helpe me curse
That bottel'd Spider, that foule bunch-back'd Toad.

Mar. I call'd thee then, vaine flourish of my fortune:
I call'd thee then, poore Shadow, painted Queene,
The presentation of but what I was;
The flattering Index of a direfull Pageant;
One heav'd a high, to be hurl'd downe below:
A Mother onely mockt with two faire Babes;
A dreame of what thou wast, a garish Flagge
To be the ayne of every dangerous Shot;
A signe of Dignity, a Breach, a Bubbie:
A Queene in least, onely to fill the Scene.
Where is thy Husband now? Where be thy Brothers?
Where be thy two Sonnes? Wherein dost thou Ioy?
Who sues, and kneeles, and sayes, God save the Queene?
Where be the bending Peeres that flattered thee?
Where be the thronging Troopes that followed thee?
Decline all this, and see what now thou art:
For happy Wife, a most distressed Widdow:
For joyfull Mother, one that wailes the name:
For one being sued to, one that humbly sues:
For Queene, a very Caytiffe, crown'd with care:
For she that scorn'd at me, now scorn'd of me:
For she being feared of all, now fearing one:
For she commanding all, obey'd of none.
Thus hath the course of Iustice whirl'd about,
And left thee but a very prey to time,
Having no more but Thought of what thou wast,
To torture thee the more, being what thou art,
Thou didst usurpe my place, and dost thou not Vsurpethe just proportion of my Sorrow?
Now thy proud Necke, beares halfe my burthen'd yoke,
From which, even heere I slip my wearied head,
And leave the burthen of it all, on thee.
Farewell *Yorke*s wife, and Queene of sad mischance,
These English woes, shall make me smile in France.

Qu. O thou well skill'd in Curtes, stay a-while,
And teach me how to curse mine enemies.

Mar. Forbeare to sleepe the night, and fast the day:
Compare dead happinesse, with living woe:
Thinke that thy Babes were sweeter then they were,
And he that slew them fowler then he is:
Bett'ring thy losse, makes the bad causer worse,

Revolving this, will teach thee how to Curse.

Qu. My word are dull, O quicken them with thine.

Mar. Thy woes will make them sharpe,
And pierce like mine. Exit Margaret.

Dut. Why should calamity be full of words?
Qu. Windy Attornies to their Cliens Woes,
Ayery succeders of intestine joyes,
Poore breathing Orators of miseries,
Let them have scope, though what they will impart,
Helpe nothing els, yet do they ease the hart.

Dut. If so then, be not Tongue-ty'd; go with me,
And in the breath of bitter words, let's smother
My damned Son, that thy two sweet Sonnes smother'd
The Trumpet sounds, be copious in exclaines.

Enter King Richard, and his Traine.

Rich. Who intercepts me in my Expedition?

Dut. O she, that might have intercepted thee
By strangling thee in her accursed wombe,
From all the slaughters (Wretch) that thou hast done.

Qu. Hid'st thou that For head with a Golden Crowne
Where't should be branded, if that right were right?
The slaughter of the Prince that ow'd that Crowne,
And the dyre death of my poore Sonnes, and Brothers.
Tell me thou Villaine-slave, where are my Children?

Dut. Thou Toad thou Toade,
Where is thy Brother Clarence?
And little Ned Plantagenet his Sonnet?

Qu. Where is the gentie Rivers, Vaughan, Gray?

Dut. Where is kinde Hastings?

Rich. A flourish Trumpets, strike Alarum Drummes:
Let not the Heavens heare these Tell-tale women
Raile on the Lords Anointed. Strike I say.

Flourish.

Alarums.

Either be patient, and intreat me sayre,
Or with the clamorous report of Warre,
Thus will I drowne your exclamations.

Dut. Art thou my Sonne?

Rich. I, I thanke God, my Father, and your selfe:

Dut. Then patiently heare my impatience.

Rich. Madam, I have a touch of your condition,
That cannot brooke the accent of reproofe.

Dut. O let me speake.

Rich. Do then, but lie not heare.

Dut. I will be milde, and gentle in my words.

Rich. And bicefe (good Mother) for I am in hast.

Dut. Art thou so hasty? I have staid for thee (God knowes) in torment and in agony.

Rich. And came I not at last to comfort you?

Dut. No by the holy Rood, thou know'st it well,
Thou cam'st on earth, to make the earth my Hell.

A greevous burthen was thy Birth to me,
Tetchy and wayward was thy Infancy.

Thy School-daies frightfull, desp'rate, wilde, and furious:

Thy prime of Manhood, daring, bold, and venturous:

Thy Age confirm'd, proud, subtle, slye, and bloody,

More milde, but yet more harmfull, Kinde in hatred:

What comfortable houre caus't thou name,

That ever grac'd me with thy company?

Rich. Faith none, but Humphrey Hower,

That call'd your Grace

To Breakefast once, forth of my company.

If I be so disgracious in your eye,

Let me march on, and not offend you Madam.

Strike up the Drumme.

Dut. I prythee heare me speake.

Rich.

Rich. You speake too bitterly.

Dut. Heare me a word :

For I shall never speake to thee againe.

Rich. So.

Dut. Either thou wilt dye, by Gods iust ordinance

Ere from this warre thou turne a Conqueror :

Or I with griefe and extreame Age shall perish,

And never more behold thy face againe.

Therefore take with thee my most greivous Curse,

Which in the day of Battell tyre thee more

Then all the compleat Armour that thou wear'st.

My Prayers on the aduerse party fight,

And there the little soules of Edwards Children,

Whisper the Spirits of thine Enemies,

And promise them Successe and Victory :

Bloudy thou art, bloudy will be thy end :

Shame serves thy life; and doth thy death attend. Exit.

Quee. Though far more cause, yet much lesse spirit to Abides in me, I say Amen to her. (curse)

Rich. Stay Madam, I must talke a word with you.

Quee. I have no more sonnes of the Royall blood

For thee to slaughter. For my Daughters (Richard)

They shall be praying Nunnes, not weeping Queenes :

And therefore leuell not to hit their lives.

Rich. You have a daughter call'd Elizabeth,

Vertuous and Faire, Royall and Gracious.

Quee. And must she dye for this? O let her live,

And let corrupt her Manners, staine her Beauty,

Slander my selfe, as false to Edwards bed :

Throw over her the vaile of infamy,

So she may live unscar'd of bleeding slaughter,

I will confesse she was not Edwards daughter.

Rich. Wrong not her Byrth, she is a Royall Princeesse.

Quee. To save her life, Ile say she is not so.

Rich. Her life is safest onely in her byrth.

Quee. And onely in that safety, dyed her Brothers.

Rich. Loe at their Birth, good starres were opposite.

Quee. No, to their lives, ill friends were contrary.

Rich. Allunavoyded is the doome of Destiny.

Quee. True : when avoyded grace makes Destiny.

My Babes were destin'd to a fairer death,

If grace had blest thee with a fairer life.

Rich. You speake as if that I had slaine my Cosins?

Quee. Cosins indeed, and by their Vnckle couzend,

Of Comfort, Kingdome, Kindred, Freedome, Life,

Whose hand soever lanch'd their tender hearts,

Thy head (all indirectly) gave direction.

No doubt the murd'rous Knife was dull and blunt,

Till it was whetted on thy stone-hard heart,

To revell in the Intrailes of my Lambes.

But that still use of griefe, makes wilde griefe tame,

My tongue should to thy eares not name my Boyes,

Till that my Nayles were anchor'd in thine eyes :

And I in such a desp'rate Bay of death,

Like a poore Barke, of sailes and tackling reft,

Rush all to peeces on thy Rocky bosome.

Rich. Madam, so thrive I in my enterprize

And dangerous successe of bloody warres,

As I intend more good to you and yours,

Then ever you and yours by me were harm'd.

Quee. What good is cover'd with the face of heaven,

To be discovered, that can doe me good?

Rich. Th'advancement of your children, gentle Lady

Quee. Vp to some Scaffold, there to lose their heads.

Rich. Vnto the dignity and height of Fortune,

The high Imperiall Type of this earths glory.

Quee. Flatter my sorrow with report of it :

Tell me, what State, what Dignity, what Honor,

Canst thou devise to any child of mine.

Rich. Even all I have ; I, and my selfe and all,

Will I withall indow a child of thine :

So in the Lethe of thy angry soule,

Thou drowne the sad remembrance of those wrongs,

Which thou supposedst I have done to thee.

Quee. Be breife, least that the proceffe of thy kindnesse

Last longer telling then thy kindnesse date.

Rich. Then know,

That from my Soule, I love thy Daughter.

Quee. My daughters Mother thinkes it with her soule.

Rich. What doe you thinke?

Quee. That thou dost love my daughter from thy soule

So from thy soules love didst thou love her Brothers,

And from my hearts love, I doe thanke thee for it.

Rich. Be not so hasty to confound my meaning :

I meane that with my soule I love thy daughter,

And doe intend to make her Queene of England.

Quee. Well then, who dost thou mean shall be her King.

Rich. Even he that makes her Queene.

Who else should be?

Quee. What, thou?

Rich. Even so : How thinke you of it?

Quee. How canst thou wooe her?

Rich. That I would learne of you,

As one being best acquainted with her humour.

Quee. And wilt thou learne of me?

Rich. Madam, with all my heart.

Quee. Send to her by the man that slew her brothers,

A paire of bleeding hearts: thereon ingrave

Edward and York, then haply will she weepe :

Therefore present to her, as sometime Margaret

Did to thy father, sleept in Rutlands blood,

A hand-kerchiefe, which say to her did dreynie

The purple sappe from her sweet brothers body,

And bid her wipe her weeping eyes withall.

If this inducement move her not to love,

Send her a Letter of thy Noble deeds :

Tell her, thou mad'st away her Vnckle Clarence,

Her Vnckle Rivers, I (and for her sake)

Rich. You mocke me Madam, this is not the way

To win your daughter,

Quee. There is no other way,

Vnlesse thou could'st put on some other shape,

And not be Richard, that hath done all this.

Rich. Say that I did all this for love of her.

Quee. Nay then indeed she cannot choose but hate thee,

Having bought love, with such a bloody spoile.

Rich. Looke what is done, cannot be now amended :

Men shall deale unadvisedly sometimes,

Which after-houres gives leysure to repent.

If I did take the Kingdome from your Sonnes,

To make amends, Ile give it to your daughter :

If I have kill'd the issue of your wombe,

To quicken your encrease, I will beget

Mine issue of your blood, upon your daughter :

A Grandams name is little lesse in love,

Then is the doting Title of a Mother ;

They are as Children but one step below,

Even of your mettall, of your very blood :

Of all one paine, save for a night of groanes

Endur'd of her, for whom you bid like sorrow.

Your Children were vexation to your youth,

But mine shall be a comfort to your Age,
The losse you have, is but a Sonne being King,
And by that losse, your Daughter is made Queene.

I cannot make you what amends I would,
Therefore accept such kindnesse as I can.

Dorset your Sonne, that with a fearefull soule
Leads discontented steppes in Forraine soyle,
This faire Alliance, quickly shall call home
To high Promotions, and great Dignity.

The King that calles your beauteous daughter wife,
Familiarly shall call thy Dorset, brother :

Againe shall you be Mother to a King :
And all the Ruines of distressefull Times,

Repair'd with double Riches of Content.

What? we have many goodly dayes to see :

The liquid drops of Teares that you have shed,
Shall come againe, transform'd to Orient Pearle,

Advantaging their Love, with interest

Often-times double gaine of happinesse.

Goe then (my Mother) to thy Daughter goe,
Make bold her bashfull yeares, with your experience,

Prepare her eares to heare a Wooers Tale.

Put in her tender heart, th'aspiring Flame
Of Golden Sovereignty : Acquaint the Princeesse

With the sweet silent houres of Marriage joyes ;

And when this Arme of mine hath chaltited

The petty Rebell, dull-brain'd Buckingham,

Bound with Triumphant Gariands will I come,

And leade thy daughter to a Conquerors bed :

To whom I will retaille my Conquest wonne,

And she shall be sole Victoreesse, Cæsars Cesar.

Que. What were I best to say, her Fathers brother
Would be her Lord? Or shall I say her Vnkle?

Or he that slew her Brothers, and her Vnkles?

Vnder what Title shall I wooe for thee,

That God, the Law, my Honor, and her Love,

Can make seeme pleasing to her tender yeeres?

Rich. Inferre faire Englands peace by this Alliance.

Qu. Which she shall purchase with still lasting warre.

Rich. Tell her, the King that may command, intreats.

Qu. That at her hands, which the kings King forbids

Rich. Say she shall be a high and mighty Queene.

Qu. To waile the Title, as her Mother doth.

Rich. Say I will love her everlastingly.

Qu. But how long shall that title ever last?

Rich. Sweetly in force, unto her faire lives end.

Qu. But how long fairely shall her sweet life last?

Rich. As long as heaven and Nature lengthens it.

Qu. As long as hell and Richard likes of it.

Rich. Say, I her Sovereigne, am her Subject low.

Qu. But she your Subject, lothes such Sovereignty.

Rich. Be eloquent in my behalfe to her.

Qu. An honest tale speeds best, being plainly told.

Rich. Then plainly to her, tell my loving tale.

Qu. Plaine and not honest, is too harsh a style.

Rich. Your Reasons are too shallow, and too quicke.

Qu. O no, my Reasons are too deepe and dead,

Too deepe and dead (poore Infants) in their graves,

Harpe on it still shall I, till heart-strings breake.

Rich. Harpe not on that string Madam, that is past.

Now by my George, my Garter, and my Crowne.

Que. Prophan'd, dishonor'd, and the third usurpt.

Rich. I sweare.

Que. By nothing, for this is no Oath:

Thy George prophan'd, hath lost his Lordly honor;

Thy Garter blemish'd, pawn'd his Kingly Vertue;

Thy Crowne usurp'd, disgrac'd his Kingly Glory:
If something thou wouldst sweare to be believ'd,
Sweare then by something, that thou hast not wrong'd.

Rich. Then by my selfe.

Qu. Thy selfe, is selfe-misus'd.

Rich. Now by the World.

Qu. 'Tis full of thy foule wrongs.

Rich. My Fathers death.

Qu. Thy life hath it dishonor'd.

Rich. Why then, by Heaven.

Que. Heavens wrong is most of all:

If thou didst feare to breake an Oath with him,

The vnity the King my husband made,

Thou hadst not broken, nor my brothers died.

If thou hadst fear'd to breake an oath by him,

Th'imperiall mettall, circling now thy head,

Had grac'd the tender temples of my child,

And both the Princes had beene breathing heere,

Which now two tender Bed-folowes for dust,

Thy broken Faith hath made the prey for Wormes.

What canst thou sweare by now?

Rich. The time to come.

Que. That thou hast wronged in the time ore-past:

For I my selfe have many teares to wash

Heereafter time, for time past, wrong'd by thee.

The Children live, whose Fathers thou hast slaughter'd,

Vngovern'd youth, to waile it with their age:

The Parents live, whose Children thou hast butcher'd,

Old barren Plants, to waile it with their Age.

Sweare not by time to come, for that thou hast

Misus'd ere vs'd, by times ill-vs'd repast.

Rich. As I intend to prosper, and repent:

So thrive I in my dangerous Affaires

Of hostile Armes: My selfe, my selfe confound:

Heaven, and Fortune barre me happy houres:

Day, yeeld me not thy light? nor Night, thy rest.

Be opposite all Planets of good lucke

To my proceeding, if with deepe hearts love,

Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts,

I tender not thy beautilous Princely daughter.

In her, consists my happinesse, and thine:

Without her, followes to my selfe, and thee,

Her selfe, the Land, and many a Christian soule,

Death, Desolation, Ruine, and Decay:

It cannot be avoyded, but by this:

It will not be avoyded, but by this.

Therefore deare Mother (I must call you so)

Be the Attorney of my love to her:

Pleade what I will be, not what I have beene;

Not my deserts, but what I will deserve:

Vnge the Necessity and state of times,

And be not peevish found, in great Designes.

Que. Shall I be tempted of the divell thus?

Rich. I, if the Divell tempt you to doe good.

Que. Shall I forget my selfe, to be my selfe?

Rich. I, if your selves remembrance wrong your selfe.

Que. Yet thou didst kill my Children.

Rich. But in your daughters wombe I bury them.

Where in that Nest of Spicery they will breed

Selves of themselves, to your recomforture.

Que. Shall I goe win my daughter to thy will?

Rich. And be a happy Mother by the deed.

Que. I goe, write to me very shortly,

And you shall understand from me her mind. Exit Que.

Rich. Beare her my true loves kisse, and so farewell.

Relenting Foole, and shallow-changing Woman.

How now, what newes?

Enter Ratcliffe.

Rat. Most mighty Sovereigne, on the Westerne Coast
Rideth a puissant Navy: to our Shores
Throng many doubtfull hollow-hearted friends,
Vnarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them backe.
Tis thought, that Richmond is their Admirall:
And there they hull, expecting but the ayde
Of Buckingham, to welcome them ashore.

Rich. Some light-foot friend post to the Duke of Norfolke
Ratcliffe thy selfe, or Catesby, where is he?

Cat. Here, my good Lord.

Rich. Catesby, flye to the Duke.

Cat. I will, my Lord, with all convenient haste,

Rich. Catesby come hither, poste to Salisbury.

When thou com'st thither: Dull unmindfull Villaine.

Why stay'st thou here, and go'st not to the Duke?

Cat. First, mighty Liege, tell me your highnesse pleasure
What from your Grace I shall deliver to him.

Rich. O true, good Catesby, bid him levy straight
The greatest strength and power that he can make,
And meet me suddenly at Salisbury.

Cat. I goe.

Exit.

Rat. What, may it please you, shall I doe at Salisbury?

Rich. Why, what would'st thou doe there, before I goe?

Rat. Your highnesse told me I should poste before.

Rich. My mind is chang'd:

Enter Lord Stanley.

Stanley, what newes with you?

Sta. None, good my Liege, to please you with the hea-
Nor none so bad, but well may be reported. (ring,

Rich. Hoyday, a Riddle, neither good nor bad:

What need'st thou runne so many miles about,

When thou mayest tell thy tale the neereſt way?

Once more, what newes?

Stan. Richmond is on the Seas.

Rich. There let him sinke, and be the Seas on him,
White-liver'd Runnagate, what doth he there?

Stan. I know not, mighty Sovereigne, but by guesse.

Rich. Well, as you guesse.

Stan. Stir'd up by Dorset, Buckingham, and Morton.
He makes for England, here to clayme the Crowne.

Rich. Is the Chayre empty? is the Sword unfway'd?
Is the King dead? the Empire unposseſt?

What heire of Yorke is there alive, but we?

And who is Englands King, but great Yorke's heire?

Then tell me, what makes he upon the Seas?

Stan. Vnlesse for that, my Liege, I cannot guesse.

Rich. Vnlesse for that he comes to be your Liege,
You cannot guesse wherefore the Welchman comes.

Thou wilt revolt, and flye to him, I feare.

Stan. No, my good Lord, therefore mistrust me not.

Rich. Where is thy Power then, to beat him backe?

Where be thy Tenants, and thy followers?

Are they not now upon the Westerne Shore,
Safe-conducting the Rebels from their Shippes?

Stanley. No, my good Lord, my friends are in the North.

Rich. Cold friends to me: what doe they in the North,
When they should serve their Sovereigne in the West?

Stan. They have not beene commanded, mighty King
Pleaseth your Majesty to give me leave,
Ile muster up my friends, and meet your Grace,
Where, and what time your Majesty shall please.

Rich. I, thou would'st be gone, to joyne with Richmond:
But Ile not trust thee.

Stan. Most mighty Sovereigne,
You have no cause to hold my friendship doubtfull,
I never was, nor never will be false.

Rich. Goe then, and muster men: but leave behind
Your Sonne George Stanley: looke your heart be firme,
Or else his heads assurance is but fraile.

Stan. So deale with him, as I prove true to you.

Exit Stanley.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My gracious Sovereigne, now in Devonshire,
As I by friends am well advertised,
Sir Edward Courtney, and the haughty Prelate,
Bishop of Exeter, his elder Brother,
With many more Confederates, are in armes.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. In Kent, my Liege, the Guilfords are in Armes,
And every houre more Competitors
Flocke to the Rebels, and their power growes strong.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. My Lord, the Army of great Buckingham.

Rich. Out on ye, Owles, nothing but Songs of Death.
He striketh him.

There, take thou that, till thou bring better newes,

Mess. The newes I have to tell your Majesty,
Is, that by sudden Floods, and fall of Waters,
Buckingham's Army is dispers'd and scatter'd,
And he himſelfe wandred away alone,
No man knowes whither.

Rich. I cry thee mercy;
There is my Purse, to cure that Blow of thine.
Hath any well-advised friend proclaym'd
Reward to him that brings the Traytor in?

Mess. Such Proclamation hath beene made, my Lord.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. Sir Thomas Lovell, and Lord Marquess Dorset,
'Tis said, my Leige, in Yorkshire are in Armes:
But this good comfort bring I to your Highnesse,
The Brittaine Navy is dispers'd by Tempest.
Richmond in Dorsetshire sent out a Boat
Vnto the shore, to aske those on the Bankes,
If they were his Assistants, yea, or no?
Who answer'd him, they came from Buckingham,
Vpon his party: he mistrusting them,
Hoys'd sayle, and made his course againe for Brittaine.

Rich. March on, march on, since we are up in Armes,
If not to fight with forraine Enemies,
Yet to beat downe these Rebels here at home.

Enter Catesby.

Cat. My Liege, the Duke of Buckingham is taken,
That is the best newes, that the Earle of Richmond

Is with a mighty power Landed at Milford,
Is colder Newes, but yet they must be told.

Rich. Away towards Salisbury, while we reason here,
A Royall battell might be wonne and lost :
Some one take order Buckingham be brought To Salisbury, the rest march on with me. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Derby, and Sir Christopher.

Der. Sir Christopher, tell Richmond this from me,
That in the sty of the most deadly Bore,
My Sonne George Stanley is frankt up in hold :
If I revolt, off goes yong Georges head,
The feare of that, holds off my present ayde.
So get thee gone : commend me to thy Lord.
Withall say, that the Queene hath heartily consented
He should espouse Elizabeth her daughter.

But tell me, where is Princely Richmond now ?

Chri. At Penbroke, or at Hertford West in Wales.

Der. What men of Name resort to him.

Chri. Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned Souldier,
Sir Gilbert Talbot, Sir William Stanley,
Oxford, redoubted Pembroke, Sir James Blunt,
And Rice ap Thomas, with a valiant Crew,
And many other of great name and worth :
And towards London doe they bend their power,
If by the way they be not fought withall.

Der. Well hye thee to thy Lord : I kisse his hand,
My Letter will resolve him of my mind-
Farewell. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Buckingham with Halberds, led to Execution.

Buc. Will not King Richard let me speake with him ?

Sher. No my good Lord, therefore be patient.

Buc. Hastings, and Edwards children, Gray and Rivers,
Holy King Henry, and thy faire Sonne Edward,
Vaughan, and all that have miscarried
By under-hand corrupted foule injustice.
If that your moody discontented soules,
Doe through the clouds behold this present houre,
Euen for revenge mocke my destruction.
This is All-soules day (Fellow) is it not ?

Sher. It is.

Buc. Why then All-soules day, is my bodies doomsday
This is the day, which in King Edwards time
I wish'd might fall on me, when I was found
Falsse to his Children, and his Wives Allies.
This is the day, wherein I wish't to fall
By the falsse Faith of him whom most I trusted.
This, this All-soules day to my fearfull Soule,
Is the determin'd respite of my wrongs :
That high All-seer, which I dallied with,

Hath turn'd my fained Prayer on my head,
And given in earnest, what I begg'd in jest.
Thus doth he force the swords of wicked men
To turne their owne points in their Masters bosomes.
Thus Margarets curse falles heavy on my necke :
When he (quoth she) shall split thy heart with sorrow,
Remember Margaret was a Prophetesse :
Come leade me Officers to the blocke of shame,
Wrong hath but wrong, and blame the due of blame.
Exeunt Buckingham with Officers.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Richmond, Oxford, Blunt, Herbert, and others, with drum and colours.

Richm. Fellowes in Armes, and my most loving Friends
Bruis'd underneath the yoke of Tyranny,
Thus farre into the bowels of the Land,
Have we marcht on without impediment ;
And here receive we from our Father Stanley
Lines of faire comfort and encouragement :
The wretched, bloody, and usurping Boare,
(That spoyl'd your Summer Fields, and fruitfull Vines)
Swilles your warm blood like wash, & makes his trough
In your embowel'd bosomes : This foule Swine
Is now even in the Center of this Ile,
Ne're to the Towne of Leicester, as we learne :
From Tamworth thither, is but one dayes march.
In Gods name cheereiy on, couragious Friends,
To reape the Harvest of perpetuall peace,
By this one bloody tryall of sharpe Warre.

Oxf. Every mans Conscience is a thousand men,
To fight against this guilty Homicide.

Her. I doubt not but his Friends will turne to us.

Blun. He hath no friends, but what are friends for feare
Which in his deereft need will flye from him.

Richm. All for our vantage, then in Gods name march,
True hope is swift, and flies with Swallowes wings,
Kings it makes Gods, and meaner creatures Kings.
Exeunt Omnes.

Enter King Richard in Armes with Norfolk, Ratcliffe, and the Earle of Surrey.

Rich. Here pitch our Tent, even here in Bosworth field;
My Lord of Surrey, why looke you so sad ?

Sur. My heart is ten times lighter then my looks.

Rich. My Lord of Norfolk.

Nor. Heere most gracious Liege.

Rich. Norfolk, we must have knockes :
Ha, must we not ?

Nor. We must both give and take my loving Lord.

Rich. Vp with my Tent, here will I lye to night,
But where to morrow ? Well, all's one for that.
Who hath defcried the number of the Traitors ?

Nor. Six or seven thousand is their utmost power.

Rich. Why our Battalia trebbles that account :
Besides, the Kings name is a Tower of strength,
Which they upon the aduerse Faction want.
Vp with the Tent : Come Noble Gentlemen,
Let us survey the vantage of the ground.
Call for some men of sound direction :

Let's lacke no Discipline. make no delay,
For Lords, to morrow is a busie day.

Exeunt.

Enter Richmond, Sir William Brandon, Oxford, and Dorset.

Rich. The weary Sunne, hath made a Golden set,
And by the bright Tract of his fiery Carre,
Gives token of a goodly day to morrow.
Sir William Brandon, you shall beare my Standard:
Give me some Inke and Paper in my Tent:
He draw the Forme and Modell of our Battaile,
Lime each Leader to his severall Charge,
And part in just proportion our small Power.
My Lord of Oxford, you Sir William Brandon,
And you Sir Walter Herbert stay with me:
The Earle of Pembroke keeps his Regiment;
Good Captaine Blunt, beare my goodnight to him,
And by the second houre in the Morning,
Desire the Earle to see me in my Tent:

Yet one thing more (good Captaine) doe for me:
Where is Lord Stanley quarter'd, doe you know?

Blunt. Unless I have mistane his Colours much,
(Which well I am assur'd I have not done)
His Regiment lyes haile a Mile at least
South, from the mighty Power of the King.

Rich. If without perill it be possible,
Sweet Blunt, make some good meanes to speak with him
And give him from me, this most needfull Note.

Blunt. Vpon my selfe, my Lord. He undertake it,
And so God give you quiet rest to night.

Rich. Good night good Captaine Blunt:
Come Gentlemen,
Let us consult upon to morrowes Businesse;
Into my Tent, the Dew is rawe and cold.

They withdraw into the Tent.

Enter Richard, Ratcliffe, Norfolk, and Catesby.

Rich. What is't a Clocke?

Cat. It's Supper time my Lord, it's nine a Clocke.

King. I will not sup to night,

Give me some Inke and Paper:

What, is my Beaver easier then it was?

And all my Armour laid into my Tent?

Cat. It is my Liege: and all things are in readinesse.

Rich. Good Norfolk, hie thee to thy charge,
Vse carefull Watch, choose trusty Centinels.

Nor. I see my Lord.

Rich. Stir with the Larke to morrow, gentle Norfolk.

Nor. I warrant you my Lord.

Exit.

Rich. Ratcliffe.

Rat. My Lord.

Rich. Send out a Pursuivant at Armes
To Stanley's Regiment: bid him bring his power
Before Sun-rising, least his Sonne George fall
Into the blind Cave of eternall night.
Fill me a Bowle of Wine: Give me a Watch,
Saddle white Surrey for the field to morrow:
Look that my staves be found, & not too heavy. Ratcliffe.

Rat. My Lord.

Rich. Saw'st the melancholly Lord Northumberland?

Rat. Thomas the Earle of Surrey, and himselfe,
Much about Cock shut time, from Troope to Troope
Went through the Army, chearing up the Souldiers.

King. So, I am satisfied: Give me a Bowle of Wine,
I have not that Alacrity of Spirit,

Nor cheere of Mind that I was wont to have.
Set it downe. Is Inke and Paper ready?

Rat. It is my Lord.

Rich. Bid my Guard watch. Leave me.

Ratcliffe. about the mid of night come to my Tent
And helpe to arme me. Leave me I say. Exit Ratcliffe.

Enter Derby to Richmond in his Tent.

Derb. Fortune, and Victory sit on thy Helme.

Richm. All comfort that the darke night can afford,
Be to thy person, Noble Father in Law.

Tell me, how fares our Noble Mother?

Der. I by Attourney, blesse thee from thy Mother,
Who prays continually for Richmonds good:
So much for that. The silent houres steale on,
And flaky darkenesse breakes within the East.

In briebe, for so the season bids us be,
Prepare thy Battell early in the Morning,
And put thy Fortune to th' Arbitrement
Of bloody stroakes, and mortall staring Warre:

I, as I may, that which I would, I cannot,
With best advantage will deceive the time,
And ayde thee in this doubtfull shooke of Armes.

But on thy side I may not be too forward,
Least being seene, thy Brother, tender George
Be executed in his fathers fight.

Farewell: the leysure, and the fearefull time
Cuts off the ceremonious Vowes of Love,
And ample enterchange of sweet Discourse,
Which so long sundred Friends should dwell upon:
God give us leysure for these rites of Love.

Once more Adieu, be valiant, and speed well.

Richm. Good Lords conduct him to his Regiment:
He strive with troubled noyse, to take a Nap.
Left leaden slumber peize me downe to morrow,
When I should mount with wings of Victory:
Once more, good night kinde Lords and Gentlemen.

O thou, whose Captaine I account my selfe,
Looke on my Forces with a gracious eye:
Put in their hands thy bruising Irons of wrath,
That they may crush downe with a heavy fall,
Th' usurping Helms of our Adversaries:
Make us thy ministers of Chastisement,
That we may praise thee in thy victory:
To thee I do commend my watchful soule,
Ere I let fall the windowes of mine eyes:
Sleeping, and waking, oh defend me still. Sleepes.

Enter the Ghost of Prince Edward, Sonne to Henry the sixth.

Gh. to Ri. Let me sit heavy on thy soule to morrow:
Thinke how thou stab'st me in my prime of youth
At Teukesbury; Despaire therefore, and dye.

Ghost to Richm. Be chearefull Richmond,
For the wronged Soules
Of butcher'd Princes, fight in thy behalfe:
King Henries issue Richmond comforts thee.

Enter the Ghost of Henry the sixth.

Ghost. When I was mortall, my Anointed body
By thee was punched full of holes;
Thinke on the Tower, and me: Despaire, and dye,
Henry the sixth, bids thee despaire and dye.

To Richm. Vertuous and holy be thou Conqueror:
Harry that prophesied thou should'st be King,
Doth comfort thee in sleepe: Live, and flourish.

Enter the Ghost of Clarence.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy in thy soule to morrow.
I that was wash'd to death with Fullsome Wine :
Poore Clarence by thy guile betray'd to death :
To morrow in the battell thinke on me,
And fall thy edgelesse Sword, despaire and dye.
To Richm. Thou off-spring of the house of Lancaster
The wronged heyres of Yorke doe pray for thee,
Good Angels guard thy battell, Live and Flourish.
Enter the Ghosts of Rivers, Gray, and Vaughan.
Riv. Let me sit heavy in thy soule to morrow,
Rivers, that dy'd at Pomfret : despaire, and dye.
Grey. Thinke upon Grey, and let thy soule despaire.
Vaugh. Thinke upon Vaughan, and with guilty feare
Let fall thy Lance, despaire and dye.

All to Richm. Awake.

And thinke our wrongs in Richards Bosome,
Will conquer. Awake, and win the day.

Enter the Ghost of Lord Hastings.

Ghost. Bloody and guilty : guilty awake,
And in a bloody Battell end thy dayes.
Thinke on Lord Hastings; despaire, and dye.

Hast. To Richm. Quiet untroubled soule,
Awake, awake :
Arme, fight, and conquer, for faire Englands sake.

Enter the Ghosts of the two yong Princes.

Ghosts. Dreame on thy Cousins
Smothered in the Tower :
Let us be laid within thy bosome Richard,
And weigh thee downe to ruine, shame, and death.
Thy Nephewes soule bids thee despaire and dye.

Ghosts to Richm. Sleepe Richmond,
Sleepe in Peace, and wake in joy,
Good Angels guard thee from the Boares annoy,
Live, and beget a happy race of Kings.
Edwards unhappy Sonnes, doe bid thee flourish :

Enter the Ghost of Anne, his Wife.

Ghost to Rich. Richard, thy Wife,
That wretched Anne thy Wife,
That never slept a quiet houre with thee,
Now filles thy sleepe with perturbations,
To morrow in the Battaile, thinke on me,
And fall thy edgelesse Sword, despaire and dye.

Ghost to Richm. Thou quiet soule,
Sleepe thou a quiet sleepe:
Dreame of Successe, and happy Victory,
Thy Adversaries Wife doth pray for thee.

Enter the Ghosts of Buckingham.

Ghost to Rich. The first was I
That help'd thee to the Crowne :
The last was I that felt thy Tyranny.
O, in the bataile thinke on Buckingham,
And dye in terror of thy guiltinesse.
Dreame on, dreame on, of bloody deeds and death,
Fainting despaire; despairing yeeld thy breath,

Ghost to Richm. I dyed for hope
Ere I could lend thee Ayde ;
But cheere thy heart, and be thou not dismayde :
God, and good Angels fight on Richmonds side,
And Richard fall in height of all his pride.

Richard starts out of his dreame.

Rich. Give me another horse, bind up my Wounds :
Have mercy Iesu. Soft, I did but dreame.
O coward Conscience ! how dost thou afflict me ?
The Lights burne blew. It is not dead midnight,
Cold fearefull drops stand on my trembling flesh

What ? doe I feare my Selfe ? There's none else by,
Richard loves Richard, that is, I am I.
Is there a Murtherer heere? No ; Yes, I am :
Then flye ? What from my selfe ? Great reason : why ?
Left I Revenge. What ? my selfe upon my selfe ?
Alacke, I love my selfe. Wherefore ? For any good
That I my selfe, have done unto my selfe ?
O no. Alas, I rather hate my selfe,
For hatefull Deeds committed by my selfe.
I am a villaine : yet I Lye, I am not.
Foole, of thy selfe speake well : Foole doe not flatter.
My Conscience hath a thousand severall Tongues,
And every Tongue brings in a severall Tale,
And every Tale condemnes me for a Villaine ;
Perjury, in the high'st Degree,
Murther, sterne murther, in the dyr'st degree,
All severall sinnes, all us'd in each degree,
Throng all to'th Barre, crying all, Guilty, Guilty,
I shall despaire, there is no Creatuees loves me ;
And if I dye, no soule shall pittie me.
Nay, wherefore should they ? Since that I my selfe,
Finde in my selfe, no pittie to my selfe.
Me thought, the soules of all that I had murther'd
Came to my Tent, and every one did threat
To morrowes vengeance on the head of Richard.

Enter Ratcliffe.

Rat. My Lord.

King. Who's there ?

Rat. Ratcliffe my Lord, 'tis I: the early Village Cocke
Hath twice done salutation to the Morne,
Your friends are up, and buckle on their Armour.

King. O Ratcliffe, I feare, I feare.

Rat. Nay good my Lord, be not affraid of Shadows.

King. By the Apostle Paul, shadowes to night
Have stroke more terror to the soule of Richard.
Then can the substance of ten thousand Souldiers
Armed in prooffe, and led by shallow Richmond.
'Tis not yet neere day. Come goe with me,
Vnder our Tents ; Ile play the Ease-dropper,
To heare if any meane to shrinke from me.

Exeunt Richard and Ratcliffe,

Enter the Lords to Richmond sitting in his Tent.

Lords. Good morrow Richmond.

Rich. Cry you mercy Lords, and watchfull Gentlemen
That you have tane a tardy sluggard heere ?

Lords. How have you slept my Lord ?

Rich. The sweetest sleepe,
And fairest boading Dreames,
That ever entred in a drowsie head,
Have I since your departure had my Lords.
Me thought their soules, whose bodies Richard murther'd
Came to my Tent, and cried on Victory :
I promise you my heart is very jecond,
In the remembrance of so faire a dreame,
How farre into the Morning is it Lords ?

Lord. Vpon the stroke of foure.

Rich. Why then 'tis time to Arme, and give direction.

His Oration to his Souldiers.

More then I have said, loving Countrymen,
The leysure and inforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell upon : yet remember this,

God

God, and our good cause, fight upon our side,
The Prayers of holy Saints and wronged soules,
Like high rear'd Bulwarkes, stand before our Faces, (Richard except) those whom we fight against,
Had rather have us winne, then him they follow.
For, what is he they follow? Truly Gentlemen,
A bloody Tyrant, and a Homicide:
One rais'd in blood, and one in blood establish'd;
One that made meanes to come by what he hath,
And slaughter'd those that were the meanes to help him:
A base foule Stone, made precious by the soyle
Of Englands Chaire, where he is falsely set:
One that hath ever beene Gods Enemy.
Then if you fight against Gods Enemy,
God will in justice ward you as his Souldiers.
If you doe sweare to put a Tyrant downe,
You sleepe in peace, the Tyrant being slaine:
If you doe fight against your Countries Foes,
Your Countries Fat shall pay your paines the hyre.
If you doe fight in safegard of your wives,
Your wives shall welcome home the Conquerors.
If you doe free your Children from the Sword,
Your Childrens Children quits it in your Age.
Then in the name of God and all these rights,
Advance your Standards, draw your willing Swords.
For me, the ranfome of my bold attempt,
Shall be this cold Corpes on the earth's cold face.
But if I thrive, the gaine of my attempt,
The least of you shall share his part thereof.
Sound Drummes and Trumpet boldly, and cheerefully,
God, and Saint George, Richmond, and Victory.

Enter King Richard, Ratcliffe, and Catesby.

King. What said Northumberland as touching Richmond?

Ratc. That he was never trained up in Armes.

King. He said the truth: and what said Surrey then?

Ratc. He smil'd and said, the better for our purpose.

King. He was in the right, and so indeed it is.

Tell the clocke there. Clockes strikes.

Give me a Kalender: who saw the Sunne to day?

Ratc. Not I my Lord.

King. Then he disdaines to shine: for by the Booke
He should have brav'd the East an houre agoe,
A blacke day will it be to somebody. Ratcliffe.

Ratc. My Lord.

King. The Sun will not be seene to day,
The sky doth frowne, and lowre upon our Army.
I would these dewy teares were from the ground.
Not shine to day? Why, what is that to me
More then to Richmond? For the selfe-same Heaven
That frownes on me, looks sadly upon him.

Enter Norfolk.

Nor. Arme, arme, my Lord: the foe vaunts in the field.

King. Come, bustle, bustle. Caparison my horse.
Call up Lord Stanley, bid him bring his power,
I will leade forth my Souldiers to the plaine,
And thus my Battell shall be ordred.
My foreward shall be drawne in length,
Consisting equally of Horse and Foot:
Our Archers shall be placed in the mid'st;
John Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Earle of Surrey,
Shall have the leading of the Foot and horse.
They thus directed, we will follow

In the maine Battell, whose puissance on either side
Shall be well-wing'd with our cheifest Horse:
This, and Saint George to boot.

What think'st thou Norfolk?

Nor. A good direction warlike Sovereigne,
This found I on my Tent this Morning.

Lockey of Norfolk, be not so bold,

For Dickon thy maister is bought and sold.

King. A thing devised by the Enemy.

Goe Gentlemen, every man to his Charge,
Let not our babling Dreames affright our soules:
For conscience is a word that Cowards use,
Devis'd at first to keepe the strong in awe,
Our strong armes be our Conscience, Swords our Law.
March on, joyne bravely, let us too't peli mell,
If not to heaven, then hand in hand to hell.
What shall I say more then I have inferr'd?
Remember whom you are to cope withall,
A sort of Vagabonds, Rascals, Run-awayes,
A scum of Brittaines, and base Lackey Pezants,
Whom their o're-cloyed Country vomits forth
To desperate Adventares, and assur'd Destruction.
You sleeping safe, they bring you to unrest:
You having Lands, and blest with beauteous wives,
They would restrain the one, distaine the other.
And who doth leade them, but a paltry Fellow?
Long kept in Britaine at our Mothers cost,
A Milke-sop, one that never in his life
Felt so much cold, as over shooes in Snow:
Let's whip these straglers o're the Seas againe,
Lash hence these over-weening Raggies of France,
These famish'd Beggars, weary of their lives,
Who (but for dreaming on this fond exploit)
For want of meanes (poore Rats) had hang'd themselves.

If we be conquered, let men conquer us,
And not these bastard Brittaines, whom our Fathers
Have in their owne Land beaten, bobb'd, and thump'd,
And on Record, left them the heires of shame.
Shall these enjoy our Lands? Iye with our Wives?
Ravish our daughters? Drum as farre off.

Hearke, I heare their Drumme,
Right Gentlemen of England, fight boldly yeomen,
Draw Archers, draw your Arrowes to the head,
Spurre your proud Horses hard, and ride in blood,
Amaze the welkin with your broken staves.

Enter a Messenger.

What sayes Lord Stanley, will he bring his power?

Mes. My Lord, he doth deny to come.

King. Off with his sonne Georges head.

Nor. My Lord, the Enemy is past the Marsh:
After the battaile, let George Stanley dye.

King. A thousand hearts are great within my bosome.
Advance our Standards, set upon our Foes,
Onr Ancient word of Courage, faire Saint George
Inspire us with the spleene of fiery Dragons:
Vpon them, Victory sits on our helpes.

Alarm, excursions. Enter Catesby.

Car. Rescue my Lord of Norfolk,
Rescue, Rescue:

The King enacts more wonders then a map,
Daring an opposite to every danger:
His horse is slaine, and all on foot he fights,
Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death:
Rescue faire Lord, or else the day is lost.

Alarums.

Enter

Enter Richard.

Rich. A horse, a horse, my Kingdome for a horse.

Cate. Withdraw my Lord, he helpe you to a horse.

Rich. Slave, I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the Dye :
I thinke there be fixe Richmonds in the field,
Five have I slaine to day, in stead of him.
A horse, a horse, my Kingdome for a horse.

Alarm. *Enter Richard and Richmond, they fight,
Richard is slaine.*

Retreat, and Flouriſh. Enter Richmond, Derby bearing the Crowne, with divers other Lords.

Richm. God and your Armes
Be prais'd Victorious Friends ;
The day is ours, the bloody Dogge is dead.

Der. Courageous Richmond,
Well hast thou acquit thee : Lo, e,
Heere these long usurped Royalties,
From the dead Temples of this bloody Wretch,
Have I pluck'd off, to grace thy Browes withall.
Weare it, and make much of it.

Richm. Great God of Heaven, say Amen to all.
But tell me, is yong George Stanley living ?

Der. He is my Lord, and safe in Leicester Towne, Whither (if you please) we may withdraw us.

Richm. What men of name are slaine on either side ?

Der. John Duke of Norfolk, Walter Lord Ferris, Sir Robert Brokenbury, and Sir William Brandon.

Richm. Interre their Bodies, as become their Births,
Proclaime a pardon to the Souldiers fled,
That in submission will returne to us,
And then as we have tane the Sacrament,
We will unite the White Rose, and the Red.
Smile Heaven upon this faire Conjunction,
That long have frown'd upon their Enmity :
What Traitor heares me, and sayes not Amen ?
England hath long beene mad, and scarr'd her selfe ;
The brother blindly shed the Brothers blood ;
The father, rashly slaughtered his owne Sonne ;
The Sonnes compell'd, beene Butcher to the Sire :
All this divided Torke and Lancaster,
Divided, in their dire Division.
O now, let Richmond and Elizabeth;
The true Succeeders of each Royall house,
By Gods faire ordinance, conjoyne together :
And let thy Heires (God if thy will be so)
Enrich the time to come, with Smooth-fac'd Peace,
With smiling Plenty, and faire Prosperous dayes.
Abate the edge of Traitors, Gracious Lord,
That would reduce these bloody dayes againe,
And make poore England weepe in Streames of Blood :
Let them not live to taste this Lands increase,
That would with Treason, wound this faire Lands peace
Now Civill wounds are stopp'd, Peace lives agen ;
That she may long live here, God say, Amen. Exeunt.

The Famous History of the Life of King HENRY the Eighth.

THE PROLOGUE.

Come no more to make you laugh; Things now,
That beare a Weighty, and a Serious Brow,
Sad, high, and working, fall of State and Woe:
Such Noble Scenes, as draw the Eye to flow
We now present. Those that can Pitty, heere
May (if they thinke it well) let fall a Teare,
The Subject will deserve it. Such as give
Their Money out of hope they may beleewe,
May heere find Truth too. Those that come to see
Only a show or two, and so agree,
The Play may passe: If they be still, and willing,
He undertake may see away their shilling
Richly in two short houres, Onely they
That come to heare a Merry, Bawdy Play,
A noyse of Targets: Or to see a Fellow
In a long Motley Coate, garded with Yellow,

Will be deceiv'd. For gentle Hearers, know
To ranke our chosen Truth with such a show
As Foole, and Fight is, beside forseyting
Our owne Braines, and the Opinion that we bring
To make that onely true, we now intend,
Will leave us never an understanding Friend.
Therefore, for Goodnesse sake, and as you are knowne
The First and Happiest Hearers of the Towne,
Be sad, as we would make ye. Thinke ye see
The very Persons of our Noble Story,
As they were Living: Thinke you see, them Great,
And follow'd with the generall throng, and sweat
Of thousand Friends: then, in a moment, see
How soone this Mightinesse, meets Misery:
And if you can be merry then, Ile say,
A Man may weeps upon his Wedding day.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

*Enter the Duke of Norfolke at one doore. At the other,
the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Aburgavenny.*

Buckingham.

Bood morrow, and well met. How have yee
Since last we saw in France? (done)
Nor. I thanke your Grace:
Heathfull, and ever since a fresh Admirer
Of what I saw there.

Buck. An untimely Ague
Staid me a Prisoner in my Chamber, when Those Sunnes of Glory, those two Lights of Men
Met in the vale of Arde

Nor. 'Twixt Guynes and Arde,
I was then present, saw them salute on Horsebacke,
Beheld them when they lighted, how they clung
In their Embracement, as they grew together,
Which had they,
What foure Thron'd ones could have weigh'd
Such a compounded one?

Buck. All the whole time
I was my Chambers Prisoner.

Nor. Then you lost
The view of earthly glory: Men might say
Till this time Pompe was single, but now married
To one above it selfe. Each following day
Became the next dayes master, till the last
Made former Wonders, it's, To day the French,
All Clinquant all in Gold, like Heathens Gods
Shone downe the English; and to morrow, they Made Britaine, India: Every man that stood, Shew'd like a Mine. Their Dwarfish Pages were
As Cherubins, all gilt: the Madams too,
Not us'd to toyle, did almost sweate to beare
The Pride upon them, that their very labour
Was to them, as a Painting. Now this Maske
Was cry'de incompareable; and th'ensuing night
Made it a foole, and beggar. The two Kings
Equall in lustre, were now best, now worst
As presence did present them: him in eye,
Still him in praise, and being present both,
'Twas said they saw but one, and no Discerner
Durst wagge his Tongue in censure, when these Sunnes
(For so they phrased 'em) by their Heralds challeng'd
The Noble spirits to Armes, they did performe

Beyond

Beyond thoughts Compass'd, that former fabulous Story
Being now scene, possible enough, got credit
That Bevis was believ'd.

Buc. Oh you goe farre.

Nor. As I belong to worship, and affect
In honor, honesty, the tract of ev'ry thing,
Would by a good Discourser lose some life,
Which Actions selfe, was tongue to.

Buc. All was Royall,
To the disposing of it nought rebell'd,
Order gave each thing view. The Office did
Distinctly his full Function: who did guide,
I meane who set the Body, and the Limbes
Of this great Sport together?

Nor. As you guesse:
Once certes, that promises no Element
In such a businesse.

Buc. I pray you who, my Lord?

Nor. Al this was ordred by the good Discretion
Of the right Reverend Cardinall of Yorke.

Buc. The divell speed him: No mans Pye is freed
From his Ambitious finger. What had he
To doe in these fierce Vanities? I wonder,
That such a Keech can with his very bulke
Take up the Rayes o'th'beneficiall Sun;
And keepe it from the Earth.

Nor. Surely Sir,
There's in him stuffe, that put's him to these ends:
For being not propt by Auncestry, whose grace
Chalkes Successors their way; nor call'd upon
For high feats done to'th' Crowne; neither Allied
To eminent Assistants; but Spider-like
Out of his selfe-drawing Web. O! gives us note,
The force of his owne merit makes his way,
A guift that heaven gives for him, which buyes
A place next to the King.

Abur. I cannot tell
What heaven hath given him: let some Graver eye
Pierce into that, but I can see his Pride
Peepe through each part of him: whence ha's he that,
If not from Heil? the devill is a Niggard,
Or ha's given all before, and he begins
A new hell in himselfe.

Buc. Why the divell,
Vpon this French going out, tooke he upon him
(Without the privy o'th' King) t'appoint
Who should attend on him? He makes up the File
Of all the Gentry; for the most part such
To whom as great a Charge, as little Honor
He meant to lay upon: and his owne Letter
The Honourable Boord of Councell, out
Must fetch him in, he Papers.

Abur. I doe know
Kinsmen of mine, three at the least, that have
By this, so sicken'd their Estates, that never
They shall abound as formerly.

Buc. O many
Have broke their backes with laying Mannors on 'em
For this great Journey. What did this vanity
But minister communication of
A most poore issue.

Nor. Greevingly I thinke,
The Peace betweene the French and us, not valeswes
The Cost that did conclude it.

Buc. Every man,
After the hideous storme that follow'd, was

A thing inspir'd, and not consulting, broke
Into a generall Prophecie; That this Tempest
Dashing the Garment of this Peace, aboaded
The sodaine breach on't.

Nor. Which is budded out.
For France hath flaw'd the League, and hath attach'd
Our Merchants goods at Burdeaux.

Abur. Is it therefore
Th' Ambassador is silenc'd?

Nor. Marry is't.

Abur. A proper Title of a Peace, and purchas'd
At a superfluous rate.

Buc. Why all this Businesse
Our Reverend Cardinall carried.

Nor. Like it your Grace,
The State takes notice of the private difference
Betwixt you, and the Cardinall. I advise you (And take it from a heart, that wishes towards your Honor, and plenteous safety) that you reade
The Cardinals Malice, and his Potency
Together; To consider further, that What his high Hatred would effect, wants not A Minister in his Power. You know his Nature,
That he's Revengefull; and I know, his Sword
Hath a sharpe edge: It's long, and't may be said
It reaches farre, and where'twill not extend,
Thither he darts it. Bosome up my counsell,
You'll find it wholesome. Loe, where comes that Rocke
That I advise your shunning.

Enter Cardinall Wolsey, the Purse borne before him, certaine of the Guard, and two Secretaries with Papers: The Cardinall in his passage, fixeth his eye on Buckingham and Buckingham on him, both full of disdain.

Car. The Duke of Buckinghams Surveyor? Ha?
Where's his Examination?

Secr. Here so please you.

Car. Is he in person, ready?

Secr. I, please your Grace.

Car. Well, we shall then know more, and Buckingham
Shall lessen this bigge looke.

Exeunt Cardinall and his Train.

Buc. This Butchers Curre is venom'd-mouth'd, and I
Have not the power to muzzle him, therefore best
Not wake him in his slumber. A Beggars booke,
Out-worths a Nobles blood.

Nor. What are you chaff'd?
Aske God for Temp'rance, that's th'appliance onely
Which your disease requires.

Buc. I reade in's lookes
Matter against me, and his eye revil'd
Me as his abject object, at this instant
He bores me with sometricke; He's gone to'th' King:
He follow, and out-stare him.

Nor. Stay my Lord,
And let your Reason with your Choller question
What 'tis you goe about: to climbe steepe hilles Requires slow pace at first. Anger is like
A full hot Horle, who being allow'd his way
Selfe-mettle tyres him: Not a man in England
Can advise me like you: Be to your selfe,
As you would to your Friend.

Buc. He to the King,
And from a mouth of Honor, quite cry downe

This

This Ipſwich fellowes inſolence ; or proclaime,
There's difference in no perſons.

Norſ. Be adviſ'd ;
Heat not a Furnace for your foe ſo hot
That it doe ſinge your ſelfe. We may out-runne
By violent ſwiftneſſe that which we run at ;
And loſe by over-running : know you not,
The fire that mounts the liquor til't run ore,
In ſeeming to augment it, waſts it : be adviſ'd ;
I ſay againe, there is no Engliſh ſoule
More ſtronger to direſt you then your ſelfe :
If with the ſap of reaſon you would quench,
Or but allay the fire of paſſion.

Buc. Sir,
I am thankfull to you, and Ile goe along
By your preſcription : but this top-proud fellow,
Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but
From ſincere motions, by intelligence,
And proofes as cleere as Founts in Iuly, when We ſee each graine of gravell ; I doe know
To be corrupt and treaſonous.

Norſ. Say not treaſonous.
Buc. To th' King Ile ſay't, and make my vouch as ſtrong
As ſhore of Rocke : attend. This holy Foxe,
Or Wolfe, or both (for he is equall ray'nous
As he is ſubtile, and as prone to miſchiefe,
As able to perform't) his minde, and place
Infecting one another, yea reciprocally,
Only to ſhew his pompe, as well in France,
As here at home, ſuggeſts the King our Maſter
To this laſt coſtly Treaty : Th' interview,
That ſwallowed ſo much treaſure, and like a glaſſe
Did breake it h' wrenching.

Norſ. Faith, and ſo it did.
Buc. Pray give me favour Sir: This cunning Cardinal
The Articles o'th' Combination drew
As himſelfe pleaſ'd ; and they were ratified
As he cride thus let be, to as much end,
As give a Crutch to th' dead. But our Count-Cardinall
Has done this, and 'tis well: for worthy Wolſey
(Who cannot erre) he did it. Now this followes, (Which as I take it, is a kind of Puppy
To th' old dam Treason) Charles the Emperour, Vnder pretence to ſee the Queene his Aunt,
(For twas indeed his colour, but he came
To whiſper Wolſey) here makes viſitation,
His feares were that the Interview betwixt
England and France, might through their amity
Breed him ſome prejudice ; for from this League,
Peep'd harmes that menac'd him. He Privily
Deales with our Cardinall, and as I troa
Which I doe well ; for I am ſure the Emperour
Paid ere he promis'd, whereby his Suit was granted
Ere it was ask'd. But when the way was made
And pay'd with gold: the Emperour thus deſir'd,
That he would pleaſe to alter the Kings courſe,
And breake the forſaid peace. Let the King know
(As ſoone he ſhall by me) that thus the Cardinall
Does buy and ſell his honour as he pleaſes,
And for his owne advantage.

Nor. I am ſorry
To heare this of him; and could wiſh he were Something miſtaken in't.

Buck. No, not a ſyllable :
I doe pronounce him in that very ſhape
He ſhall appeare in proofe.

Enter Brandon, a Sergeant at Armes before him, and two or three of the Guard.

Brandon. Your Office Sergeant : execute it.
Sergeant Sir,
My Lord the Duke of Buckingham, and Earle
Of Hertford, Stafford and Northampton, I
Arreſt thee of high Treason, in the name
Of our moſt Sovereigne King.

Buc. Loe you my Lord,
The net has falne upon me, I ſhall periſh
Vnder device, and practiſe.

Bran. I am ſorry,
To ſee you tane from liberty, to looke on
The buſines preſent. 'Tis his highneſſe pleaſure
You ſhall to th' Tower.

Buck. It will helpe me nothing
To plead mine Innocence ; for that dye is on me
Which makes my whit't part, black. The will of Heav'n
Be done in this and all things : I obey.
O my Lord Aburgany : Fare you well.

Bran. Nay, he muſt beare you company. The King
Is pleas'd you ſhall to th' Tower, till you know,
How he determines further.

Abur. As the Duke ſaid,
The will of heaven be done, and the Kings pleaſure
By me obey'd.

Bran. Here is a warrant from
The King, t'attach Lord Mountacute, and the bodies
Of the Dukes Confefſor, John de la Car,
One Gilbert Pecke, his Councellour.

Buck. So, ſo ;
Theſe are the limbes o'th' Plot .no more I hope.

Bra. A Monke o'th' Chartreux.

Buck. O Michaell Hopkins.

Bra. He.

Buck. My Surveyor is falſe ; The ore-great Cardinall
Hath ſhew'd him gold ; my life is ſpand already :
I am the ſhadow of poore Buckingham,
Whoſe Figure even this inſtant Clowd puts on,
By Darkning my cleere Sunne. My Lords farewell. Exe.

Scena Secunda.

Cornets. Enter King Henry, leaning on the Cardinalls ſhoul-der: the Nobles, and Sir Thomas Lovell: the Cardinall places himſelfe under the Kings feete on his right ſide.

King. My life it ſelfe, and the beſt heart of it,
Thankes you for this great care : I ſtood i'th' levell
Of a full-charg'd confederacy, and give thankes
To you that choak'd it. Let be cald before us
That Gentleman of Buckingham, in perſon,
Ile heare him his confeſſions juſtifie,
And point by point the Treasons his Maſter,
He ſhall againe relate.

A noyſe with crying roome for the Queene, uſher'd by the Duke of Norfolke. Enter the Queene, Norfolke and Suffolke : ſhe kneels. King riſeth from his State, takes her up, kiſſes and placeth her by him.

Quee. Nay, we muſt longer kneele ; I am a Suitor.

King. Arife, and take place by us ; halfe your Suit
Never name to us ; you have halfe our power :

The other moiety ere you aske is given,
Repeat your will, and take it.

Quee. Thanke your Majesty
That you would love your selfe, and in that love
Not unconsidered leave your honor, nor
The dignity of your Office; is the point
Of my Petition.

King. Lady mine proceed.

Quee. I am solicited not by a few,
And those of true condition; That your Subjects
Are in great grievance; There have beene Commissions
Sent downe among 'em, which hath flaw'd the heart
Of all their Loyalties; wherein, although
My good Lord Cardinall, they vent reproches
Most bitterly on you, as putter on
Of these exactions: yet the King, our Master (not Whose Honor heaven shield from soile; even he escapes
Language unmannerly; yea, such which breakes
The sides of loyalty, and almost appeares
In lowd Rebellion.

Nor. Not almost appeares,
It doth appeare; for, upon these Taxations,
The Clothiers all not able to maintaine
The many to them longing, have put off
The Spinners, Carders, Fullers, Weavers, who Unfit for other life, compeld by hunger
And lacke of other meanes, in desperate manner
Daring th'euent to th'teeth, are all in uprore,
And danger serves among them.

King. Taxation?
Wherein? and what Taxation? My Lord Cardinall,
You that are blam'd for it alike with us,
Know you of this Taxation?

Card. Please you Sir,
I know but of a single part in ought Pertaines to th'State: and front but in that file
Where others tell steps with me.

Quee. No, my Lord?
You know no more then others? But you frame
Things that are knowne alike, which are not wholsome
To those which would not know them, and yet must Perforce be their acquaintance. These exactions (Whereof my Sovereigne would have note) they are Most pestilent to th'hearing, and to beare 'em,
The Backe is Sacrifice to th'load; They say
They are devis'd by you, or else you suffer
Too hard an exclamation.

King. Still Exaction:
The nature of it, in what kind let's know,
Is this Exaction?

Quee. I am much too venturous
Intempting of your patience, but amboldned
Vnder your promis'd pardon. The subjects grieve
Comes through Commissions, which compels from each
The sixt part of his Substance, to belevied
Without delay; and the pretence for this
Is nam'd, your warres in France: this makes bold mouths
Tongues spit their duties out, and cold hearts freeze
Allegeance in them; their curses now
Live where their prayers did: and it's come to passe,
This tractable obedience is a Slave
To each incensed Will: I would your Highnesse
Would give it quicke consideration; for
There is no primer basenesse.

King. By my life,
This is against our pleasure.

Card. And for me,
I have no further gone in this, then by
A single voyce, and that not past me, but
By learned approbation of the judges: if I am
Traduc'd by ignorant Tongues, which neither know
My faculties nor person, yet will be
The Chronicles of my doing: Let me say,
'Tis but the fate of Place, and the rough Brake
That Vertue must goe through: we must not stint
Our necessary actions, in the feare
To cope malicious Censurers, which ever,
As ravenous Fishes doe a Vessell follow
That is new trim'd; but benefit no further
Then vainly longing. What we oft doe best,
By sicke interpreters (or ce weak e ones) is
Not ours, or not allow'd; what worst, as oft
Hitting a grosser quality, is cride up
For our best Act: if we shall stand still,
In feare our motion will be mock'd, or carp'd at,
We should take roote here, where we sir;
Or sir State Statues onely.

King. Things done well,
And with a care, exempt themselves from feare:
Things done without example, in their issue
Are to be fear'd. Have you a President
Of this Commission? I beleve, not any.
We must not rend our Subjects from our Lawes,
And sticke them in our Will. Sixt part of each?
A trembling Contribution; why we take
From every Tree, lop, barke, and part o' th' Timber:
And though we leave it with a roote thus hackt,
The Ayre will drinke the Sap. To every County
Where this is question'd, send our Letters, with Free pardon to each man that has deny'de
The force of this Commission: pray looke too't;
I put it to your care.

Card. A word with you.
Let there be Letters writ to every Shire,
Of the Kings grace and pardon: the greived Commons
Hardly conceive of me. Let it be nois'd,
That through our Intercession, this Revokement
And pardon comes: I shall anon advise you Further in the proceeding. Exit Secret.

Enter Surveyor.

Quee. I am sorry, that the Duke of Buckingham
Is run in your displeasure.

King. It grieves many:
The Gentleman is Learn'd, and a most rare Speaker,
To Nature none more bound, his trayning such,
That he may furnish and instruct great Teachers,
And never seeke for ayde out of himselfe: yet see,
When these so Noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind growing once corrupt,
They turne to vicious formes, ten times more vgly
Then ever they were faire. This man so compleat,
Who was enrold 'mongst wonders; and when we Almost with ravish'd listning, could not find
His houre of speech, a minute: He, (my Lady)
Hath into monstrous habits put the Graces
That once were his, and is become as blacke,
As if betmeard in hell. Sit by Vs, you shall heare
(This was his Gentleman in trust) of him
Things to strike Honour sad. Bid him recount
The fote-recited practises, whereof
We cannot feele too little, heare too much.

Card.

Card. Stand forth & with bold spirit relate what you
Most like a careful Subject have collected
Out of the Duke of Buckingham.

Kin. Speake freely.

Sur. First, it was usuall with him; every day
It should infect his Speech: That if the King
Should without issue dye; hee'l carry it so
To make the Scepter his. These very words
I've heard him utter to his Sonne in Law,
Lord Aburgany, to whom by oth he menac'd
Revenge upon the Cardinall.

Card. Please your Highnesse, note
This dangerous conception in this point,
Not friended by his wish to your High person;
His will is most malignant, and it stretches
Beyond you to your friends.

Queen. My learned Lord Cardinall, Deliver all with Charity.

Kin. Speake on;

How grounded he his Title to the Crowne
Upon our faile; to this poynt hast thou heard him,
At any time speake ought?

Sur. He was brought to this,
By a vaine Prophecie of Nicholas Henton.

Kin. What was that Henton?

Sur. Sir, a Chartreux Fryer,
His Confessor, who fed him every minute
With words of Sovereignty.

Kin. How know'st thou this?

Sur. Not long before your Highnesse sped to France,
The Duke being at the Rose, within the Parish
Saint Laurence Poultney, did of me demand
What was the speech among the Londoners,
Concerning the French Journey. I replide,
Men feare the French would prove perfidious
To the Kings danger: presently, the Duke
Said, 'twas the feare indeed, and that he doubted
Twould prove the verity of certaine words
Spoke by a holy Monke, that oft, sayes he,
Hath sent to me, wishing me to permit
John de la Car, my Chaplaine, a choyce howre
To heare from him a matter of some moment:
Whom after under the Commissions Seale,
He solemnly had sworne, that what he spoke
My Chaplaine to no Creature living, but
To me, should utter, with demure Confidence,
This pausingly ensu'd; neither the King nor's Heyres (Tell you the Duke) shall prosper, bid him strive
To the love o'th' Commonalty, the Duke
Shall governe England.

Queen. If I know you well,
You were the Dukes Surveyor, and lost your Office
On the complaint o'th' Tenants; take good heed
You charge not in your spleene a Noble person,
And spoyle your Noble Soule; I say, take heed;
Yes, heartily beseech you.

Kin. Let him on. Goe forward.

Sur. On my Soule, Ile speake but truth.
Hold my Lord the Duke, by th' Divels illusions
The Monke might be deceiv'd, and that 'twas dangerous
For this to ruminate on this so farre, untill
It forg'd him some designe, which being beleev'd
It was much like to doe: He answer'd, Tush,
It can doe me no damage; adding further,
That had the King in his last Sicknesse faild,
The Cardinals and Sir Thomas Lovells heads

Should have gone off.

Kin. Ha? What, so rancke? Ah, ha,
There's mischief in this man; canst thou say further?

Sir. I can my Liedge.

Kin. Proceed.

Sur. Being at Greenwich,
After your Highnesse had reprov'd the Duke
About Sir William Blumer.

(vant,

Kin. I remember of such a time, being my sworn ser-
The Duke retin'd him his. But on: what hence?

Sur. If (quoth he) I for this had beene committed,
As to the Tower, I thought; I would have plaid
The Part my Father meant to act upon
Th' Vsurper Richard, who being at Salisbury,
Made suit to come in's presence; which if granted,
(As he made semblance of his duty) would
Have put his knife into him.

Kin. A Gyant Traytor,

Card. Now Madam, may his Highnesse live in freedome,
And this man out of Prison.

Queen. God mend all.

(say'st?

Kin. Ther's somthing more would out of thee; what

Sur. After the Duke his Father, with the knife
He stretch'd him, and with one hand on his dagger,
Another spread on's breast, mounting his eyes,
He did discharge a horrible Oath, whose tenor
Was, were he evill us'd, he would outgoe
His Father, by as much as a performance
Do's an irrefolute purpose.

Kin. There's his period,
To sheath his knife in us: he is attach'd,
Call him to present tryall: if he may
Finde mercy in the Law, 'tis his; if none,
Let him nor seek't of us: By day and night
Hee's Traytor to th' height.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter L. Chamberlaine and L. Sandys.

L.Ch. Is't possible the spels of France should juggle Men into such strange Mysteries?

L.San. New cuttomes,
Though they be never so ridiculous,
(Nay let 'em be unmanly) yet are follow'd.

L.Ch. As farre as I see, all the good our English.
Have got by the late Voyage, is but meerely
A fit or two o'th' face, (but they are shrewd ones)
For when they hold 'em, you would sweare directly
Their very noses had been Councillours
To Pepin or Clotharius, they keepe State so.

L.San. They have all new legs,
And lame ones; one would take it,
That never see 'em pace before, the Spaven
A Spring-halt reign'd among 'em.

L.Ch. Death my Lord,
Their cloathes are after such a Pagan cut too't,
That sure th' have worne out Christendome: how now?
What newes, Sir Thomas Lovell?

Enter Sir Thomas Lovell.

Lovell. Faith my Lord,
I heare of none but the new Proclamation,
That's clapt upon the Court Gate.

L. Cham. What is't for?

Low. The reformation of our travel'd Gallants,
That fill the Court with quarrels, talke, and Taylors,

L. Cham. I'm glad 'tis there;
Now I would pray our Monfieurs
To thinke an English Courtier may be wise,
And never see the Louure.

Low. They must eyther
(For so run the Conditions) leave those remnants
Of Foole and Feather, that they got in France,
With all their honourable points of ignorance
Pertaining thereunto; as Fights and Fire-workes, Abusing better men then they can be
Out of a forreigne wisedome, renounccing cleane
The faith they have in Tennis and tall Stockings,
Short blistred Breeches and those types of Travell;
And understand againe like honest men,
Or pack to their old Playfellowes; there I take it,
They may Cum Privilegio, weare away
The Lag end of their lewdnesse, and be laugh'd at.

L. San. 'Tis time to give him Phyficke, their diseases
Are growne so catching.

L. Cham. What a losse our Ladies
Will have of these trim vanities?

Lovell. I marry,
There will be woe indeed Lords, the flye whorsons
Have got a speeding trick to lay downe Ladies.
A French Song, and a Fiddle, ha's no Fellow.

L. San. The Divell fiddle 'em.
I am glad they are going,
For sure there's no converting of 'em: now
An honest Country Lord as I am, beaten
A long time out of play, may bring his plaine song,
And have an houre of hearing, and by'r Lady
Held currant Musicke too.

L. Cham. Well said Lord Sands,
Your Colts tooth is not cast yet?

L. San. No my Lord,
Nor shalt not while I have a stumpe.

L. Cham. Sir Thomas,
Whither were you a going?

Low. To the Cardinals;
Your Lordship is a guest too.

L. Cham. O, 'tis true;
This night he makes a Supper and a great one,
To many Lords and Ladies; there will be
The Beauty of this Kingdome Ile assure you.

Low. That Churchman
Beares a bounteous minde indeed,
A hand as fruitfull as the Land that feeds us,
His dewes fall every where.

L. Cham. No doubt hee's Noble;
He had a blacke mouth that said other of him.

L. San. He may my Lord,
Ha's wherewithall in him;
Sparing would shew a worse sinne, then ill Doctrine.
Men of his way, should be most liberall,
They are set heere for examples.

L. Cham. True they are so;
But few now give so great ones:
My Barge staves;
Your Lordship shall along: Come, good Sir Thomas,
We shall be late else, which I would not be,
For I was spoke to, with Sir Henry Guilford
This night to be Comptrollers.

L. San. I am your Lordships.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Hoboyes. A small Table under a State for the Cardinal, longer Table for the Guests. Then Enter Anne Bullen, and divers other Ladies, & Gentlemen, as Guests at one Doore; at another Doore enter
Sir Henry Guilford.

S. Hen. Guilf. Ladyes,
A generall welcome from his Grace
Salutes ye all; This Night he dedicates
To faire content, and you: None heere he hopes
In all this Noble Bevy, has brought with her
One care abroad: he would have all as merry:
As first, good Company, good wine, good welcome,
Can make good people.

Enter L. Chamberlaine, L. Sands, and Lovell.
O my Lord, y'are tardy;
The very thought of this faire Company,
Clapt wings to me.

Cham. You are young Sir Harry Guilford.
San. Sir Thomas Lovell, had the Cardinal
But halfe my Lay-thoughts in him, some of these Should finde a running Banket, ere they rested,
I thinke would better please 'em: by my life,
They are a sweet society of faire ones.

Lov. O that your Lordship were but now Confessor,
To one or two of these.

San. I would I were,
They should finde easie penance,
Lov. Faith how easie?

San. As easie as a downe Bed would afford it.

Cham. Sweet Ladies will it please you sit; Sir Harry Place you that side, Ile take the charge of this:
His Grace is entring. Nay, you must not freeze,
Two women plac'd together, makes cold weather:
My Lord Sands, you are one will keepe 'em waking:
Pray sit betweene these Ladies.

San. By my faith,
And thanke your Lordship: by your Leave sweet Ladies
If I chance to talke a little wilde, forgive me:
I had it from my Father.

An. Bul. Was he mad Sir?

San. O very mad, exceeding mad, in love too;
But he would bite none, just as I doe now,
He would Kisse you Twenty with a breath.

Cham. Well said my Lord:
So now y'are fairely seated: Gentlemen,
The pennance lyes on you; if these faire Ladies
Passe away frowning.

San. For my little Cure,
Let me alone.

Hoboyes. Enter Cardinal Wolfey, and takes his State.
Card. Y'are welcome my faire Guests; that noble Lady
Or Gentleman that is not freely merry
Is not my Fiend. This to confirme my welcome,
And to you all good health.

San. Your Grace is Noble,
Let me have such a Bowle may hold my thanks,
And save me so much talking,

Card. My Lord Sands.

I am beholding to you : cheere your neighbour :
Ladies you are not merry ; Gentlemen,
Whose fault is this ?

Saw. The red wine first must rise
In their faire cheekes my Lord, then we shall have 'em,
Talke us to silence.

An. Bn. You are a merry Gamster
My Lord Sands.

Saw. Yes, if I make my play :
Heer's to your Ladiship, and pledge it Madam :
For 'tis to such a thing.

An. B. You cannot shew me.

Drum and Trumpet, Chambers discharg'd.

Saw. I told your Grace, they would talke anon.

Card. What's that ?

Cham. Looke out there, some of ye.

Card. What warlike voyce.

And to what end is this ? Nay, Ladies, feare not ;
By all the lawes of Warre y'are priviledg'd.

Enter a Servant.

Cham. How now, what is't ?

Serv. A noble troupe of Strangers,
For so they seeme ; th' have left their Barge and landed,
And hither make, as great Embassadors
From forraigne Princes.

Card. Good Lord Chamberlaine,
Go, give 'em welcome; you can speake the French tongue
And pray receive 'em Nobly, and conduct 'em
Into our presence, where this heaven of beauty
Shall shine at full upon them. Some attend him.

All rise, and Tables remov'd.

You have now a broken Banket, but wee'l mend it.
A good digestion to you all; and once more
I shewre a welcome on ye: welcome all.

Hobbes. Enter King and others as Maskers, habited like Shepheards, usher'd by the Lord Chamberlaine. They passe directly before the Cardinall, and gracefully salute him.

A noble Company : what are their pleasures ?

Cham. Because they speake no English, thus they praid
To tell your Grace : That having heard by fame
Of this so Noble and so faire assembly,
This night to meet heere, they could doe no lesse,
(Out of the great respect they beare to beauty )
But leave their Flockes, and under your faire conduct
Crave leave to view these Ladies, and entreat
An houre of Revels with 'em.

Card. Say, Lord Chamberlaine,
They have done my poore house grace :
For which I pay 'em a thousand thankses,
And pray 'em take their pleasures.

Choose Ladies, King and Anne Bullen.

King. The fairest hand I ever touch'd : O Beauty, Till now I never knew thee.

Musicke, Dance.

Card. My Lord.

Cham. Your Grace.

Card. Pray tell 'em thus much from me :
There should be one amongst 'em by his person
More worthy this place then my selfe, to whom
(If I but knew him) with my love and duty
I would surrender it.

Whisper.

Cham. I will my Lord.

Card. What say they ?

Cham. Such a one, they all confesse
There is indeed, which they would have your Grace
Find out, and he will take it.

Card. Let me see then,
By all your good leaves Gentlemen ; heere Ile make
My royall choyce.

Kin. Ye have found him Cardinall,
You hold a faire Assembly ; you doe well Lord.
You are a Churchman, or Ile tell you Cardinall,
I should judge now unhappily.

Card. I am glad
Your Grace is growne so pleasant.

Kin. My Lord Chamberlaine, prethee come hither, what faire Ladie's that ?

Cham. An't please your Grace,
Sir Thomas Bullens Daughter, the Viscount Rochford,
One of her Highnesse women.

Kin. By Heaven she is a dainty one, Sweet heart,
I were unmanerly to take you out,
And not to kisse you. A health Gentlemen,
Let it goe round.

Card. Sir Thomas Lovell, is the Banket ready I'th' Privy Chamber ?

Lov. Yes, my Lord.

Card. Your Grace
I feare, with dancing is a little heated.

Kin. I feare too much.

Card. There's fresher ayre my Lord,
In the next Chamber.

Kin. Lead in your Ladies ev'ry one : Sweet Partner,
I must not yet forsake you : Let's be merry,
Good my Lord Cardinall: I have halfe a dozen healths,
To drinke to these faire Ladies, and a measure
To lead 'em once againe, and then let's dreame
Who's best in favour . Let the Musicke knock it.

Exeunt with Trumpets.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter two Gentlemen at severall Doores.

1. Whither away so fast ?

2. O, God save ye :

Ev'n to the Hall, to heare what shall becoms
Of the great Duke of Buckingham.

1. Ile save you

That labour Sir. All's now done but the Ceremony
Of bringing backe the Prisoner.

2. Were you there ?

1. Yes indeed was I.

2. Pray speake what ha's happen'd.

1. You may guesse quickly what.

2. Is he found guilty ?

1. Yes truly is he,
And condemn'd upon't.

2. I am sorry fort.

1. So are a number more.

2. But pray how past it ?

1. Ile tell you in a little. The great Duke
Came to the Bar ; where, to his accusations
He pleaded still nor guilty, and alleadged
Many sharpe reasons to defeat the Law.
The Kings Attorney on the contrary;
Vrg'd on the Examinations, proofes, confessions

Of divers witnesses, which the Duke desir'd
To him brought viva voce to his face ;
At which appear'd against him, his Surveyor,
Sir Gilbert Pecke his Chancellour, and John Car,
Confessor to him, with that Divell Monke,
Hopkins, that made this mischief.

2. That was he
That fed him with his prophecies.

1. The same,
All these accus'd him strongly which he faine
Would have flung from him ; but indeed he could not ;
And so his Peeres upon this evidence,
Have found him guilty of high Treason. Much
He spoke, and learnedly for life : But all
Was either pittied in him, or forgotten.

2. After all this, how did he beare himselfe ?

1. When he was brought agen to th' Bar, to heare
His Knell rung out, his Iudgement, he was stir'd
With such an Agony, he sweat extreemly,
And something spoke in choller, ill, and hasty :
But he fell to himselfe againe, and sweetly,
In all the rest shew'd a most Noble patience.

2. I doe not thinke he feares death.

1. Sure he does not,
He never was so womanish, the cause
He may a little grieve at.

2. Certainly,
The Cardinall is the end of this.

1. Tis likely,
By all conjectures : First Kildares Attendure ;
Then Deputy of Ireland, who remov'd,
Earle Surrey was sent thither, and in hast too,
Least he should helpe his Father.

2. That trick of State
Was a deepe envious one.

1. At his returne,
No doubt he will requite it ; this is noted
(And generally) who ever the King favours,
The Cardinall instantly will finde employment,
And farre enough from Court too.

2. All the Commons
Hate him perniciously, and o' my Conscience
With him ten faddom deepe ; This Duke as much
They love and doate on : call him bounteous Buckingham,
The Mirror of all courtesie.

Enter Buckingham from his Arraignement. Tipstaves before him, the Axe with the edge towards him, Halberds on each side, accompanied with Sir Thomas Lovell ; Sir Nicholas Vaux, Walter Sands, and common people, &c.

1. Stay there Sir,
And see the noble ruin'd man you speake of.

2. Let's stand close and behold him.

Buck. All good people,
You that thus have come to pittie me ;
Heare what I say, and then goe home and lose me.
I have this day receiv'd a Traitors judgement,
And by that name must dye ; yet Heaven beare witnesse,
And if I have a Conscience, let it sinke me,
Even as the Axe falls, if I be not faithfull.
The Law I beare no mallice for my death,
T'has done upon the premises, but justice :
But those that sought it, I could wish more Christians :
(Be what they will) I heartily forgiue 'em ;
Yet let 'em looke they glorie not in mischief ;

Nor build their evils on the graves of great men ;
For then, my guiltlesse blood must cry against 'em.
For further life in this world I ne're hope,
Nor will I sue, although the King have mercies
More then I dare make faults.

You few that lov'd me,
And dare be bold to weepe for Buckingham,
His Noble Friends and Fellowes ; whom to leave
Is onely bitter to him, onely dying :

Goe with me like good Angels to my end,
And as the long divorce of Steele falls on me,
Make of your Prayers one sweet Sacrifice,
And lift my Soule to Heaven.

Leade on a Gods name.

Lovell. I doe beseech your Grace, for charity
If ever any malice in your heart

Were hid against me, now to forgive me frankly.

Buck. Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you
As I would be forgiven : I forgive all.

There cannot be those numberlesse offences
Gainst me, that I cannot take peace with :
No blacke envy shall make my Grave.

Commend me to his Grace :

And if he speake of Buckingham ; pray tell him,
You met him halfe in Heaven : my vowes and prayers
Yet are the Kings ; and till my Soule forsake,
Shall cry for blessings on him. May he live
Longer then I have time to tell his yeares ;
Ever belov'd and loving, may his Rule be ;
And when old Time shal leade him to his end,
Goodnesse and he, fill up one Monument.

Lov. To th' water side I must conduct your Grace ;
Then give my Charge up to Sir Nicholas Vaux,
Who undertakes you to your end.

Vaux. Prepare there,
The Duke is comming : See the Barge be ready,
And fit it with such furniture as suites
The Greatnesse of his person.

Buck. Nay, Sir Nicholas,
Let it alone ; my state now will but mocke me.
When I came hither, I was Lord High Constable,
And Duke of Buckingham : now, poore Edward Bohun,
Yet I am richer then my bale Accusers,
That never knew what Truth meant : I now seale it ;
And with that blood will make 'em one day groane for't.
My noble Father Henry of Buckingham.

Who first rais'd head against Viurping Richard,
Flying for succour to his Servant Banister,
Being distrest ; was by that wretch betraid,
And without Tryall, fell ; Gods peace be with him.
Henry the Seaventh succeeding, truly pittying
My Fathers losse ; like a most Royall Prince
Restor'd me to my Honours : and out of ruines
Made my Name once more Noble. Now his Sonne,
Henry the Eight, Life, Honour, Name and all
That made me happy ; at one stroke ha's taken
For ever from the World. I had my Tryall,
And must needs say a Noble one ; which makes me
A little happier then my wretched Father :
Yet thus farre we are one in Fortunes, both Fell by our Servants, by those Men we lov'd most :
A most unnaturall and faithlesse Service.
Heaven ha's an end in all : yet, you that heare me,
This from a dying man receive as certaine :
Where you are liberall of your loves and Counsels,
Be sure you be not loose ; for those you make friends,

And

And give your hearts to; when they once perceive
The least rub in your fortunes, fall away
Like water from ye, never found againe
But where they meane to sinke ye: all good people
Pray for me, I must now forsake ye; the last houre
Of my long weary life is come upon me:
Farewell; and when you would say something that is sad,
Speake how I fell.
I have done; and God forgive me.

Exeunt Duke and Trainee.

1. O, this is full of pittie; Sir, it cal
I feare, too many curses on their heads
That were the Authors.
2. If the Duke be guiltlesse,
'Tis full of woe: yet I can give you inckling
Of an ensuing evill, if it fall,
Greater then this.

1. Good Angels keepe it from us:
What may it be? you doe not doubt my faith Sir?
2. This Secret is so weighty, 'twill require
A strong faith to conceale it.

1. Let me have it;
I doe not talke much.

2. I am confident;
You shall Sir: Did you not of late dayes heare
A buzzing of a Separation
Betweene the King and Katherine?

1. Yes, but it held not;
For when the King once heard it, out of anger
He sent command to the Lord Mayor straight
To stop the rumor; and allay those tongues
That durst disperse it.

2. But that slander Sir,
Is found a truth now: for it growes agen
Fresher then e're it was; and held for certaine
The King will venture at it. Either the Cardinall,
Or some about him neere, have out of malice
To the good Queene, posselt him with a scruple
That will undoe her: To confirme this too,
Cardinall Campeius is arriv'd, and lately,
As all thinke for this businesse.

1. 'Tis the Cardinall;
And meere to revenge him on the Emperour,
For not bestowing on him at his asking,
The Archbishopricke of Toledo, this is purpos'd.

2. I thinke
You have hit the marke; but is't not cruell,
That she should feele the smart of this: the Cardinall
Will have his will, and she must fall.

1. 'Tis wofull.
Wee are too open heere to argue this:
Let's thinke in private more.

Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Lord Chamberlaine, reading this Letter.

MY Lord, the Hor(es your Lordship sent for, with all the care I had, I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnish'd.
They were young and handsome, and of the best breed in the North. When they were ready to set out for London, a man of my Lord Cardinalls, by Commission, and maine power tooke em from me, with this reason: his master would be serv'd before a Subject, if not before the King, which stop'd our mouths

Sir.

I feare he will indeede; well, let him have them; hee will have all I thinke.

Enter to the Lord Chamberlaine, the Dukes of Norfolke and Suffolke.

Norf. Well met my Lord Chamberlaine.

Cham. Good day to both your Graces.

Suff. How is the King employ'd?

Cham. I left him Private,
Full of sad thoughts and troubles.

Norf. What's the cause?

Cham. It seemes the Marriage with his Brothers Wife
Ha's crept too neere his Conscience.

Suff. No, his Conscience
Ha's crept too neere another Ladie.

Norf. 'Tis so;
This is the Cardinalls doing: The King-Cardinall,
That blinde Priest, like the eldest Sonne of Fortune,
Turnes what he list. The King will know him one day.

Suff. Pray God he doe,
Hee's never know himselfe else.

Norf. How holily he workes in all his businesse,
And with what zeale? For now he has crackt the League
Between us & the Emperour (the Queens great Nephew)
He dives into the Kings Soule, and there scatters
Dangers, doubts, wringing of the Conscience,
Feares, and despaires, and all these for his Marriage.
And out of all these, to restore the King,
He counsels a Divorce, a losse of her

That like a Jewell, ha's hung twenty yeares
About his necke, yet never lost her lustre;
Of her that loves him with that excellence,
That Angels love good men with: Even of her,
That when the greatest stroke of Fortune falls
Will blesse the King: and is not this course pious?

Cham. Heaven keep me from such counsel: tis most true,
These newes are every where, every tongue speakes 'em,
And every true heart weepes for't. All that dare
Looke into these affaires, see this maine end,
The French Kings Sister. Heaven will one day open
The Kings eyes, that so long have slept upon
This bold bad man.

Suff. And free us from his slavery.

Norf. We had need pray,
And heartily, for our deliverance;
Or this imperious man will worke us all
From Princes into Pages: all mens honours
Lielike one lump before him, to be fashion'd
Into what pitch he please.

Suff. For me, my Lords,
I love him not, nor feare him, there's my Creede:
As I am made without him, to Ile stand,
If the King please: his Curses and his blessings
Touch me alike: th' are breath I not beleve in.
I knew him, and I know him: so I leave him
To him that made him proud; the Pope.

Norf. Let's in;
And with some other businesse, put the King
From these sad thoughts, that work too much upon him:
My Lord, youle beare us company?

Cham. Excuse me,
The King ha's sent me elsewhere: Besides
You'l finde a most unfit time to disturbe him:
Health to your Lordships.

Norfolke. Thanks my Good Lord Chamberlaine.
Exit Lord Chamberlaine, and the King drawes the Curtaine
and sits reading pensively.

Suff. How sad he lookes; sure he is much afflicted.

Kin. Who's there? Ha?

Norff. Pray God he be not angry. (selves)

Kin. Who's there I say? How dare you thrust your Into my private Meditations?
Who am I? Ha?

Norff. A gracious King, that pardons all offences
Malice ne're meant; Our breach of Duty this way,
Is businesse of Estate; in which, we come
To know your Royall pleasure.

Kin. Ye are too bold:

Go to; Ile make ye know your times of businesse:
Is this an howre for temporall affaires? Ha?

Enter Wolsey and Campeius with a Commission.

Who's there? my good Lord Cardinall? O my Wolsey,
The quiet of my wounded Conscience;
Thou art a cure fit for the King; you'r welcome
Most learned Reverend Sir, into our Kingdome,
Vse us, and it: my good Lord, have great care,
I be not found a Talker.

Wol. Sir, you cannot;

I would your Grace would give us but an houre
Of private conference.

Kin. We are busie; goe.

Nor. This Priest ha's no pride in him?

Suff. Not to speake of:

I would not be so sicke though for his place:
But this cannot continue.

Norff. If it doe, Ile venture one heave at him.

Suf. I another.

Exeunt Norfolke, and Suffolke.

Wol. Your Grace ha's given a President of wisdom
Above all Princes, in committing freely
Your scruple to the voyce of Christendome:
Who can be angry now? What Envy reach you?
The Spaniard tide by blood and favour to her,
Must now confesse, if they have any goodnesse,
The Tryall, just and Noble. All the Clearkes,
(I meane the learned ones in Christian Kingdomes)
Have their free voyces. Rome (the Nurse of Iudgement, Invited by your Noble selfe hath sent
One generall Tongue unto us. This good man,
This just and learned Priest, Cardinall Campeius
Whom once more, I present unto your Highnesse.

Kin. And once more in mine armes I bid him welcome,
And thanke the holy Conclave for their loves,
They have sent me such a Man, I would have wish'd for.

Cam. Your Grace must needs deserve all strangers loves
You are so Noble: To your Highnesse hand
I tender my Commission; by whose vertue,
The Court of Rome commanding: You my Lord
Cardinall of Yorke, are joyn'd with me their Servant,
In the unparciall judging of this Businesse. (ted)

Kin. Two equall men: The Queene shall be acquaint-Forthwith for what you come. Where's Gardiner?

Wol. I know your Majesty, ha's alwayes lov'd her
So deere in heart, not to deny her that
A Woman of lesse Place might aske by Law;
Schollers allow'd freely to argue for her.

Kin. I, and the best she shall have; and my favour
To him that does best, God forbid else: Cardinall, Prethee call Gardiner to me, my new Secretary,
I find him a fit fellow.

Enter Gardiner.

Wol. Give me your hand: much joy & favour to you.
You are the Kings now.

Gard. But to be commanded

For ever by your Grace, whose hand ha's rais'd me.

Kin. Come hither Gardiner.

Walkes and whispers.

Cam. My Lord of Yorke, was not one Doctor Pace
In this mans place before him?

Wol. Yes, he was.

Cam. Was he not held a learned man?

Wol. Yes surely.

Cam. Beleeve me, there's an ill opinion spread then Even of your selfe Lord Cardinall.

Wol. How? of me?

Cam. They will not sticke to say, you envie him;
And fearing he would rise (he was so vertuous)
Kept him a forraigne man still, which so greev'd him;
That he ran mad, and dide.

Wol. Heav'ns peace be with him:

That's Christian care enough: for living Murmurers,
There's places of rebuke. He was a Foole;
For he would needs be vertuous. That good Fellow,
If I command him followes my appointment,
I will have none so neere else. Learne this Brother,
We live not to be grip'd by meaner persons.

Kin. Deliver this with modesty to th' Queene.

Exit Gardiner.

The most convenient place, that I can thinke of
For such receipt of Learning, is Blacke-Fryers:
There ye shall meete about this waighty businesse.
My Wolsey, see it furnish'd. O my Lord,
Would it not grieve an able man to leave
So sweet a Bedfellow? But Conscience, Conscience;
O 'tis a tender place, and I muste leave her. Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Anne Bullen, and an old Lady.

An. Not for that neither; here's the pang that pinches.
His Highnesse, having liv'd so long with her, and she
So good a Lady, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce dishonour of her; by my life,
She never knew harme-doing: Oh, now after
So many courses of the Sun enthroned,
Still growing in a Majesty and pompe, the which
To leave, a thousand fold more bitter, then
'Tis sweet at first t'acquire. After this Proesse,
To give her the avaunt, it is a pitty
Would move a Monster.

Old La. Hearts of most hard temper
Melt and lament for her,

An. Oh Gods will, much better
She ne're had knowne pompe; though't be temporall,
Yet if that quarrell, Fortune, do divorce
It from the bearer, 'tis a sufferance, panging
As soule and bodies severing.

Old La. Alas poore Lady,
Shee's stranger now againe.

An. So much the more
Must pitty drop upon her; verily
I sweare, tis better to be lowly borne,

And

And range with humble livers in Content,
Then to be perk'd up in a glistering griefe,
And weare a golden sorrow.

Old L. Our content
Is our best having.

Anne. By my troth, and Maidenhead,
I would not be a Queene.

Old L. Beshrew me, I would,
And venture Maidenhead for't, and so would you
For all this spice of your Hipocrisie;
You that have so faire parts of Woman on you,
Have (too) a Womans heart, which ever yet
Affected Eminence, Wealth, Sovereignty;
Which, to say sooth, are Blessings; and which gifts
(Saving your mincing) the capacity
Of your soft Chiverell Conscience, would receive,
If you might please to stretch it.

An. Nay, good troth.

Old L. Yes troth, & troth: you would not be a Queen?

An. No, not for all the riches under Heaven.

Old L. 'Tis strange; a three pence bow'd now would hire Old as I am, to Queene it: but I pray you, (me,
What thinke you of a Dutchesse? Have you limbs
To beare that load of Title?

An. No in truth.

Old L. Then you are weakly made, plucke off a little,
I would not be a young Count in your way,
For more then blushing comes to: If your backe
Cannot vouchsafe this burthen, 'tis too weake
Ever to get a Boy.

An. How you doe talke;
I sweare againe, I would not be a Queene,
For all the world.

Old L. In faith for little England
You'll venture an emballing: I my selfe
Would for Carnarvanshire, although there long'd
No more to th' Crowne but that: Lo, who comes here?

Enter Lord Chamberlaine.

(know

L. Cham. Good morrow Ladies; what wer't worth to
The secret of your conference?

An. My good Lord,
Not your demand; it vales not your asking:
Our Mistris Sorrowes we were pittying.

Cham. It was a gentle businesse and becomming
The action of good women, there is hope
All will be well.

An. Now I pray God, Amen.

Cham. You beare a gentle minde, & heav'nly blessings
Follow such Creatures. That you may, faire Lady Perceive I speake sincerely, and high notes
Tane of your many vertues; the Kings Majesty
Commends his good opinion of you, to you; and Doe's purpose honour to you no lesse flowing,
Then Marchionesse of Pembrooke; to which Title,
A Thousand pound a yeare, Annuall support,
Out of his Grace, he addes,

An. I doe not know
What kinde of my obedience, I should tender;
More then my All, is nothing: Nor my Prayers
Are not words duely hallowed; nor my Wishes
More worth then empty vanities: yet Prayers & Wishes
Are all I can returne. Beseech your Lordship,
Vouchsafe to speake my thanks, and my obedience,
As from a blushing Handmaid, to his Highnesse;
Whose health and Royalty I pray for.

Cham Lady;

I shall not faile t' approve the faire conceit
The King hath of you. I have perus'd her well,
Beauty and Honour in her are so mingled,
That they have caught the King: and who knowes yet
But from this Lady, may proceed a Iemme,
To lighten all this Ile? I le to the King,
And say I spoke with you.

Exit Lord Chamberlaine.

An. My honour'd Lord.

Old L. Why this it is: See, see,
I have beene begging sixteene yeares in Court (Am yet a Courtier beggerly) nor could Come pat betwixt too early, and too late
For any suit of pounds: and you, (oh fate)
A very fresh Fish heere; fye, fye, fye upon
This compell'd fortune: have your mouth fild up,
Before you open it.

An. This is strange to me.

Old L. How tastes it? Is it bitter? Forty pence, no:
There was a Lady once (tis an old Story)
That would not be a Queene, that would she not
For all the mud in Egypt; have you heard it?

An. Come you are pleasant.

Old L. With your Theame, I could O're-mount the Larke: The Marchionesse of Pembrooke?
A thousand pounds a yeare, for pure respect?
No other obligation? by my Life,
That promises mo thousands: Honours traine
Is longer then his fore-skirt; by this time
I know your backe will beare a Dutchesse. Say,
Are you not stronger then you were?

An. Good Lady,

Make your selfe mirth with your particular fancy,
And leave me out on't. Would I had no being
If this salute my blood ajot; it faints me
To thinke what followes.

The Queene is comfortlesse, and we forgetfull
In our long absence: pray doe not deliver,
What heere y' have heard to her.

Old L. What doe you thinke me — Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Trumpets, Sonnet, and Cornets.

Enter two Vergers, with short silver wands; next them two Scribes in the habite of Doctors: after them, the Bishop of Canterbury alone; after him, the Bishops of Lincoln, Ely, Rochester, and S. Asaph: Next them, with some small distance, followes a Gentleman bearing the Purse, with the great Seale, and a Cardinals Hat: Then two Priests, bearing each a Silver Crosse: Then a Gentleman Usher bareheaded, accompanied with a Sergeant at Armes, bearing a Silver Mace: Then two Gentlemen bearing two great Silver Pillers: After them, side by side, the two Cardinals, two Noble men, with the Sword and Mace. The King takes place under the Cloth of State. The two Cardinals sit under him as Iudges. The Queene takes place some distance from the King. The Bishops place themselves on each side the Court in manner of a Consistory: Below them the Scribes. The Lords sit next the Bishops. The rest of the Attendants stand in convenient order about the Stage.

Card.

Car. Whil'st our Commission from Rome is read,
Let silence be commanded.

King. What's the need?
It hath already publickly bene read,
And on all sides th' Authority allow'd,
You may then spare that time.

Car. Bee't so, proceed.

Scri. Say, Henry K. of England, come into the Court.

Crier. Henry King of England, &c.

King. Heere.

Scribe. Say, Katherine Queene of England,
Come into the Court.

Cries. Katherine Queene of England, &c.

The Queene makes no answer, rises out of her Chaire, goes about the Court, comes to the King, and kneeles at his Feete. Then speaks.

Sir, I desire you do me right and Iustice,
And to bestow your pittie on me; for
I am a most poore Woman, and a stranger,
Borne out of your Dominions: having heere
No Iudge indifferent, nor no more assurance
Of equall Friendship and Proceeding. Alas Sir:
In what have I offended you? What cause
Hath my behaviour given to your displeasure,
That thus you should proceed to put me off,
And take your good grace from me? Heaven witnesse,
I have bene to you a true and humble Wife,
At all times to your will conformable:
Ever in feare to kindle your Dislike,
Yea, subject to your Countenance: Glad, or sorry,
As I saw it inclin'd? when was the houre
I ever contradicted your Desire?
Or made it not mine too? Or which of your Friends
Have I not strove to love, although I knew
He were mine Enemy? What Friend of mine,
That had to him deriv'd your Anger, did I Continue in my Liking? Nay, gave notice
He was from thence discharg'd? Sir, call to minde,
That I have bene your Wife, in this Obedience,
Vpward of twenty yeares, and have bene blest
With many Children by you. If in the course
And proceffe of this time you can report,
And prove it too, against mine Honour aught;
My bond to Wedlocke, or my love and Duty
Against your Sacred Person; in Gods name
Turne me away: and let fowl'st Contempt
Shut doore upon me, and so give me up
To the sharpest kinde of Iustice. Please you, Sir,
The King your Father, was reputed for
A Prince most Prudent; and an excellent
And unmatched Wit, and Iudgement, Ferdinand
My Father, King of Spaine, was reckon'd one
The wisest Prince, that there had reign'd, by many
A yeare before. It is not to be question'd,
That they had gather'd a wise Councell to them
Of every Realme, that did debate this Businesse,
Who deem'd our Marriage lawful. Wherefore I humbly
Beseech you Sir, to spare me, till I may
Be by my Friends in Spaine, advis'd; whose Counsaile
I will implore. If not, i'th' name of God
Your pleasure be fulfill'd.

Wol. You have heere Lady.

(And of your choice) these reverend Fathers, men
Of singular Integrity, and Learning;
Yea, the elect o'th' Land, who are assembled
To plead your Cause. It shall be therefore bootlesse,

That longer you desire the Court, as well
For your owne quiet, as to rectifie
What is unsetled in the King.

Camp. His Grace

Hath spoken well, and justly: Therefore Madam,
It's fit this Royall Session do proceed,
And that (without delay) their Arguments
Be now produc'd, and heard.

Qu. Lord Cardinall, to you I speake.

Wol. Your pleasure, Madam.

Qu. Sir, I am about to weepe; but thinking that
We are a Queene (or long have dream'd so) certaine
The daughter of a King, my drops of teares,
He turne to sparkes of fire.

Wol. Be patient yet.

Qu. I will, when you are humble; Nay before,
Or God will punish me. I do beleieve (Induc'd by potent Circumstances) that
You are mine Enemy, and make my Challenge.
You shall not be my Iudge. For it is you
Have blowne this Coale, betwixt my Lord, and me;
(Which Gods dew quench) therefore, I say againe,
I utterly abhorre; yea, from my Soule
Refuse you for my Iudge, whom yet once more
I hold my most malicious Foe, and thinke not
At all a Friend to truth.

Wol. I do professe

You speake not like your selfe: who ever yet
Have stood to Charity: and displayd th' effects
Of disposition gentle, and of wisdom, e,
Ore-topping womans powre. Madam, you do me wrong
I have no Spleene against you, nor injustice
For you, or any: how farre I have proceeded,
Or how farre further (Shall) is warranted
By a Commission from the Consistory;
Yea, the whole Consistorie of Rome. You charge me,
That I have blowne this Coale: I do deny it,
The King is present: If it be knowne to him,
That I gainsay my Deed, how may he wound,
And worthily my Falshehood, yea, as much
As you have done my Truth. If he know
That I am free of your Report, he knowes
I am not of your wrong. Therefore in him
It lies to cure me, and the cure is to Remove these thoughts from you. The which before
His Highnesse shall speake in, I do beseech
You (gracious Madam) to unthinke your speaking,
And to say no more.

Quee. My Lord, my Lord,

I am a simple woman, much too weake
To oppose your cunning. Yare meeke, & humble-mouth'd,
You signe your place, and Calling, in full seeming,
With Meekenesse and Humilitie: But your Heart
Is cram'd with Arrogance, Spleene, and Pride.
You have by Fortune, and his Highnesse favors,
Gone slightly o're lowe steppes, and now are mounted
Where Powres are your Retainers, and your words
(Domestickes to you) serve your will; as't please
Your selfe pronounce their Office. I must tell you,
You tender more your persons Honor, then
Your high profession Spirituall. That agen
I do refuse you for my Iudge, and heere
Before you all, Appeal unto the Pope,
To bring my whole Cause fore his Holinesse,
And to be judg'd by him.

She Curtsies to the King, and offers to depart.

Camp.

Camp. The Queene is obstinate,
Stubborne to Iustice, apt to accuse it, and Disdainfull to be tri'd by't; tis not well.
Shee's going away.

Kin. Call her againe.

Crier. Katherine. Q. of England, come into the Court.

Gent. Vth. Madam, you are cald backe.

Que. What need you note it? pray you keep your way,
When you are cald returne. Now the Lord helpe,
They vex me past my patience, pray you passe on;
I will not tarry: no, nor ever more
Vpon this businesse my appearance make,
In any of their Courts.

Exit Queene, and her Attendants.

Kin. Goe thy wayes Kate,

That man i'th' world, who shall report he ha's
A better Wife, let him in nought be trusted,
For speaking false in that; Thou art alone
(If thy rare qualities, sweet gentlenesse,
Thy meeknesse Saint-like, Wife-like Government,
Obeying in commanding, and thy parts
Soveraigne and Pious, could speake thee out)
The Queene of earthly Queenes: Shee's Noble borne:
And like her true Nobility, she ha's
Carried her selfe towards me.

Wol. Most gracious Sir,

In humblest manner I require your Highnesse,
That it shall please you to declare in hearing
Of all these eares (for where I am rob'd and bound,
There must I be unloos'd, although not there
At once, and fully satisfide) whether ever I Did broach this busines to your Highnes, or Laid any scruple in your way which might Induce you to the question on't: or euer
Have to you, but with thanks to God for such A Royall Lady, spake one, the least word that might Be to the prejudice of her present State,
Or touch of her good Person?

Kin. My Lord Cardinall,

I doe excuse you; yea, upon mine Honour,
I free you from't: You are not to be taught
That you have many enemies, that know not
Why they are so, but like the Village Curres, Bark when their fellowes doe. By some of these
The Queene is put in anger; y'are excus'd:
But will you be more justifi'd? You ever
Have with'd the sleeping of this busines, never desir'd
It to be stir'd; but oft have hindred, of t
The passages made toward it; on my Honour,
I speake my good Lord Cardinall to this point;
And thus farre cleare him.

Now, what mov'd me too't,

I will be bold with time and your attention: (too't:
Then marke th' inducement. Thus it came; give heede
My Conscience first receiv'd a tendernesse,
Scruple, and pricke, on certaine Speeches utter'd
By th' Bishop of Bayon, then French Embassador,
Who had bene hither sent on the debating
And Marriage 'twixt the Duke of Orleans, and
Our Daughter Mary: I'th' Progresse of this businesse,
Ere a determinate resolution, hee
(I meane the Bishop) did requite a respite,
Wherein he might the King his Lord advertise,
Whether our daughter were legitimate,
Respecting this our Marriage with the Dowager,
Sometimes our Brothers Wife. This respite shooke

The bosome of my Conscience, enter'd me;
Yea with a splitting power, and made to tremble
The region of my Breast; which forc'd such way,
That many maz'd considerings, did throng
And prest in with this Caution: First, me thought
I stood not in the smile of Heaven, who had Commanded Nature, that my Ladies wombe
If it conceiv'd a male-child by me, should Doe no more Offices of life too't; then
The Grave does to th' dead: For her Male Issue,
Or di'de where they were made, or shortly after
This world had ayr'd them. Hence I tooke a thought,
This was a iudgement on me, that my Kingdome
(Well worthy the best Heyre o'th' World) should not Be glad in't by me. Then followes, that I weigh'd the danger which my Realmes stood in
By this my Issues faile, and that gave to me
Many a groaning throw: thus hulling in
The wilde Sea of my Conscience, I did steere Toward this remedy, whereupon we are Now present heere together: that's to say,
I meant to rectifie my Conscience, which
I then did feeble full sicke, and yet not well,
By all the reverend Fathers of the Land,
And Doctors learn'd. First I began in private,
With you my Lord of Lincolne; you remember
How under my oppression I did reeke
When I first mov'd you.

B. Lin. Very well my Ledge.

Kin. I have spoke long, be pleas'd your selfe to say:
How farre you satisfide me.

Lin. So please your Highnesse,
The question did at first so stagger me,
Bearing a state of mighty moment in't,
And consequence of dread, that I committed
The daringst Counsaile which I had to doubt,
And did intreat your Highnesse in this course,
Which you are running heere.

Kin. I then mov'd you,

My Lord of Canterbury, and got your leave
To make this present Summons unsolicited.
I left no reverend person in this Court,
But by particular consent proceeded
Vnder your hands and Seales: therefore goe on,
For no dislike i'th' world against the person
Of our good Queene; but the sharpe thorny points
Of my alleged reasons, drives this forward:
Prove but our Marriage lawfull, by my Life
And Kingly Dignity, we are contented
To weare our mortall State to come, with her,
(Katherine our Queene) before the prime Creature
That's Parragon'd o'th' World

Camp. So please your Highnesse,
The Queene being absent, 'tis a needfull fitnesse,
That we adiourne this Court further day;
Meane while must be an earnest motion
Made to the Queene to call backe her Appeale
She intends unto his holinesse.

Kin. I may perceive

These Cardinals trifle with me: I abhorre
This dilatory sloth, and trickes of Rome.
My learn'd and welbelov'd Servant Crammer,
Prethee returne, with thy approach: I know,
My comfort comes along: breake up the Court;
I say, set on.

Exeunt, in manner as they enter'd.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Queene and her Women as at worke.

Queen. Take thy Lute wench,
My Soule growes sad with troubles,
Sing, and disperse 'em if thou canst: leave working:

SONG.

O Rpheus with his Lute made Trees,
And the Mountaine tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing.
To his Musicke, Plants and Flowers
Ever spring; as Sunne and Showres,
There had made a lasting Spring.
Every thing that heard him play,
Even the Billowes of the Sea,
Hung their heads, and then lay by.
In sweet Musicke is such Art,
Killing care; and grieve of heart,
Fall asleepe, or hearing dye.

Enter a Gentleman.

Queen. How now?

Gent. And't please your Grace, the two great Cardinals Wait in the presence.

Queen. Would they speake with me?

Gent. They wil'd me say so Madam.

Queen. Pray their Graces.

To come neere: what can be their businesse
With me, a poore weake woman, false from favour,
I doe not like their comming; now I thinke on't,
They should be good men, their affaires are righteous,
But all Hoods, make not Monkes.

Enter the two Cardinalls, Wolsey & Campian.

Wol. Peace to your Highnesse.

Queen. Your Graces find me heere part of a Houwife, (I would be all) against the worst may happen:
What are your pleasures with me, reverend Lords?

Wol. May it please you Noble Madam, to withdraw
Into your private Chamber; we shall give you
The full cause of our comming.

Queen. Speake it heere.

There's nothing I have done yet o' my Conscience
Deserves a Corner: would all other Women
Could speake this with as free a Soule as I doe,
My Lords, I care not (so much I am happy Above a number) if my actions
Were tri'de by ev'ry tongue, ev'ry eye saw 'em,
Envy and base opinion set against 'em,
I know my life so even. If your busines
Seeke me out, and that way I am Wife in;
Out with it boldly: Truth loves open dealing.

Card. Tanta est erga te mentis integritas (Regina serenissima.)

Queen. Good my Lord, no Latin;
I am not such a Truant since my comming,
As not to know the Language I have liv'd in: (ous:
A strange Tongue makes my cause more strange, suspiti-
Pray speake in English; heere are some will thanke you,
If you speake truth, for their poore Mistisake;
Beleeve me she ha's had much wrong. Lord Cardinall,
The willin' st sinne I ever yet committed,
May be absolv'd in English.

Card. Noble Lady,

I am sorry my integrity should breed,
(And service to his Majesty and you)
So deepe suspicion, where all faith was meant;
We come not by the way of Accusation,
To taint that honour every good Tongue blesses;
Nor to betray you any way to sorrow;
You have too much good Lady: But to know
How you stand minded in the waighty difference
Betweene the King and you, and to deliver (Like free and honest men) our just opinions,
And comforts to your cause.

Camp. Most honour'd Madam,
My Lord of Yorke, out of his Noble nature,
Zeale and obedience he still bore your Grace,
Forgetting (like a good man) your late Censure
Both of his truth and him (which was too farre)
Offers, as I doe, in a signe of peace,
His Service, and his Counsell.

Queen. To betray me.

My Lords, I thanke you both for your good wills,
Ye speake like honest men, (pray God ye prove so)
But how to make ye sodainly an Answer
In such a point of weight, so neere mine Honour,
(More neere my Life I feare) with my weake wit;
And to such men of gravity and learning;
In truth I know not. I was set at worke,
Among my Maids, full little (God knowes) looking Either for such men, or such businesse;
For her sake that I have beene, for I feele
The last fit of my Greatnesse; good your Graces
Let me have time and Counsell for my Cause:
Alas, I am a Woman friendlesse, hopelesse.

Wol. Madam,

You wrong the Kings love with these feares,
Your hopes and friends are infinite.

Queen. In England,

But little for my profit: can you thinke Lords,
That any English man dare give me Counsell?
Or be a knowne friend 'gainst Highnesse pleasure,
(Though he be growne so desperate to be honest)
And live a Subject? Nay forfooth my friends,
They that must weigh out my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not heere,
They are (as all my other comforts) far hence
In mine owne Country Lords.

Camp. I would your Grace

Would leave your griefes, and take my Counsell.

Queen. How Sir?

Camp. Put your maine cause into the Kings protection,
Hee's loving and most gracious. 'Twill be much,
Both for your Honour better, and your Cause:
For if the tryall of the Law o'retake ye,
You'l part away disgrac'd.

Wol. He tels you rightly.

Queen. Ye tell me what ye wish for both, my ruine:
Is this your Christian Counsell? Out upon ye.
Heaven is above all yet; there sits a Iudge,
That no King can corrupt.

Camp. Your rage mistakes us.

Queen. The more shame for ye; holy men I thought ye,
Vpon my Soule two reverend Cardinall Vertues:
But Cardinall Sins, and hollow hearts I feare ye:
Mend 'em for shame my Lords: Is this your comfort?
The Cordiall that ye bring a wretched Lady?
A woman lost among ye, laugh't at, scorn'd?
I will not wish ye halfe my miseries,

I have more Charity. But say I warn'd ye ;
Take heed, for heavens sake take heed, least at once
The burthen of my sorrowes, fall upon ye.

Car. Madam, this is a meere distraction,
You turne the good we offer, into envy.

Quee. Ye turne me into nothing. Woe upon ye,
And all such false professors. Would you have me
(If you have any iustice, any Pitty,
If ye be any thing but Churchmens habits )
Put my sicke cause into his hands, that hates me ?
Alas, ha's banisht me his bed already,
His Love, too long ago. I am old my Lords,
And all the fellowship I hold now with him
Is onely by Obedience. What can happen
To me, above this wretchednesse ? All your Studies
Make me a Curse, like this:

Camp. Your feares are worse.

Qu. Have I liv'd thus long (let me speake my selfe, Since Vertue findes no friends) a Wife a true one ?
A Woman (I dare say without Vainglory)
Never yet branded with suspition ?
Have I, with all my full Affections
Still met the King? Lov'd him next Heav'n? Obey'd him?
Bin (out of fondnesse) superstitious to him ?
Almost forgot my Prayres to content him ?
And am I thus rewarded ? 'Tis not well Lords.
Bring me a constant woman to her husband,
One that ne're dream'd a loy, beyond his pleasure ;
And to that Woman (when she has done most)
Yet will I adde an honor ; a great Patience.

Car. Madam, you wander from the good
We ayme at.

Quee. My Lord,
I dare not make my selfe so guilty,
To give up willingly that Noble Title
Your Master wed me to ; nothing but death
Shall e're divorce my Dignities.

Card. Pray heare me.

Qu. Would I had never trod this English Earth,
Or felt the Flatteries that grow upon it :
Ye have Angels Faces ; but Heaven knowes your hearts.
What shall become of me now, wretched Lady ?
I am the most unhappy Woman living.
Alas (poore Wenches ) where are now your Fortunes ?
Shipwrack'd upon a Kingdome, where no Pitty,
No Friends, no Hope, no Kindred weepe for me?
Almost no Grave allow'd me ? Like the Lilly
That once was Mistris of the Field, and flourish'd,
He hang my head, and perish.

Car. If your Grace
Could but be brought to know, our ends are honest,
You'd feele more comfort. Why shold we (good Lady)
Vpon what cause wrong you? Alas, our Places,
The way of our Profession is against it ;
We are to Cure such sorrowes, not to sowe 'em.
For goodnesse sake, consider what you doe,
How you may hurt your selfe : I, utterly
Grow from the Kings Acquaintance, by this Carriage.
The hearts of Princes kisse Obedience,
So much they love it. But to stubborne Spirits,
They swell and grow, as terrible as stormes.
I know you have a Gentle, Noble temper,
A Soule as even as a Calme ; Pray thinke us,
Those we professe, Peace-makers, Friends, and Servants.

Camp. Madam, you'l finde it so :
You wrong your Vertues

With these weake Womens feares. A Noble Spirit
As yours was, put into you, ever casts
Such doubts as false Coine from it. The King loves you, Beware you loofe it not : For us (if you please
To trust us in your businesse) we are ready
To use our utmost Studies, in your service.

Qu. Do what ye will, my Lords :
And pray forgive me ;
If I have us'd my selfe unmannerly,
You know I am a Woman lacking wit
To make a seemely answer to such persons.
Pray do my service to his Majestie,
He ha's my heart yet, and shall have my Prayers
While I shall have my life. Come reverend Fathers, Bestow your Councels on me. She now begges
That little thought when she set footing heere,
She should have bought her Dignities so deere Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter the Duke of Norfolk, Duke of Suffolke, Lord Surrey, and Lord Chamberlaine.

Norf. If you will now unite in your Complaints,
And force them with a Constancy, the Cardinall
Cannot stand under them. If you omit
The offer of this time, I cannot promise,
But that you shall sustaine moe new disgraces,
With these you beare already.

Sur. I am joyfull
To meete the least occasion, that may give me
Remembrance of my Father-in-Law the Duke,
To be reveng'd on him.

Suf. Which of the Peeres
Have uncontent'd gone by him, or at least
Strangely neglected ? When did he regard
The stampe of Noblenesse in any person
Out of himselfe ?

Cham. My Lords, you speake your pleasures :
What he deserves of you and me, I know :
What we can do to him (though now the time Gives way to us) I much feare. If you cannot Barre his accessse to 'ch' King, never attempt
Any thing on him : for he hath a witchcraft
Over the King in's Tongue.

Nor. O feare him not,
His spell in that is out : the King hath found
Matter against him, that for ever marres
The Hony of his Language. No, he's settled
(Not to come off) in his displeasure.

Sur. Sir,
I should be glad to heare such Newes as this Once every houre.

Nor. Beleeve it, this is true.
In the Divorce, his contrarie proceedings
Are all unfolded: wherein he appears,
As I would wish mine Enemy.

Sur. How came
His practises to light ?

Suf. Most strangely.

Sur. O how? how?

Suf. The Cardinals Letters to the Pope miscarried,
And

And come to th' eye o'th' King, wherein was read
How that the Cardinall did intreat his Holinesse
To stay the Iudgement o'th' Divorce; for if
It did take place, I do (quoth he) perceiue
My King is tangled in affection, to A Creature of the Queenes, Lady Anne Bullen.

Sur. Ha's the King this?

Suf. Beleeve it.

Sur. Will this worke?

Cham. The King in this perceives him, how he coasts
And hedges his owne way. But in this point,
All his trickes founder, and he brings his Physicke
After his patients death; the King already Hath married the faire Lady.

Sur. Would he had.

Suf. May you be happy in your wish my Lord,
For I professe you have it.

Sur. Now all my joy
Trace the Conjunction.

Suf. My Amen too't.

Nor. All mens.

Suf. There's order given for her Coronation:
Marry this is yet but yong, and may be left
To some eares unrecounted. But my Lords
She is a gallant Creature, and compleate
In minde and feature, I perswade me, from her
Will fall some blessing to this Land, which shall
In it be memoriz'd.

Sur. But will the King
Disgest this Letter of the Cardinals?
The Lord forbid.

Nor. Marry Amen.

Suf. No, no:

There be moe Waspes that buz about his Nose,
Will make this sting the sooner. Cardinall Campeius,
Is stolne away to Rome, hath tane no leave,
Ha's left the cause to'th' King unhandled, and
Is posted as the Agent of our Cardinall,
To second all his plot: I do assure you,
The King cry'de Ha, at this.

Cham. Now God incense him,
And let him cry Ha, lowder.

Nor. But my Lord
When returns Cranmer?

Suf. He is return'd in his opinions, which Have satisfied the King for his Divorce,
Together with all famous Colledges
Almost in Christendome: shortly (I beleeve)
His second Marriage shall be publish'd, and
Her Coronation. Katherine no more
Shall be call'd Queene, but Princess Dowager,
And Widdow to Prince Arthur.

Nor. This same Cranmer's
A worthy Fellow, and hath tane much paine
In the Kings businesse.

Suf. He ha's, and we shall see him
For it, an Arch-bishop.

Nor. So I heare.

Suf. 'Tis so.

Enter Wolsey and Cromwell.

The Cardinall.

Nor. Observe, observe, hee's moody.

Car. The Packet Cromwell,
Gav't you the King?

Crom. To his owne hand, in's Bed-chamber.

Card. Look'd he o'th' inside of the Paper?

Crom. Presently

He did unseale them, and the first he view'd,
He did it with a Serious minde: a heede
Was in his countenance. You he bade
Attend him heere this Morning.

Card. Is he ready to come abroad?

Crom. I thinke by this he is.

Card. Leave me a while.

Exit Cromwell.

It shall be to the Dutches of Alanfon,
The French Kings Sister; He shall marry her.
Anne Bullen? No: Ile no Anne Bullens for him,
There's more in't then faire Visage. Bullen?
No, wee'l no Bullens: Speedily I wish
To heare from Rome. The Marchionesse of Penbroke?

Nor. He's discontented.

Suf. May be he heares the King
Does whet his Anger to him.

Sur. Sharpe enough,
Lord for thy Iustice.

Car. The late Queenes Gentlewoman?
A Knights Daughter
To be her Mistris Mistris? The Queenes, Queene?
This Candle burnes not cleere, 'tis I must snuffe it,
Then out it goes. What though I know her vertuous
And well deserving? yet I know her for A spleeny Lutheran, and not wholsome to
Our cause, that she should lye i'th' bosome of Our hard rul'd King. Againe, there is sprung up
An Heretique, an Arch-one; Cranmer, one
Hath crawl'd into the favour of the King,
And is his Oracle.

Nor. He is vex'd at something.

Enter King, reading of a Scedule.

Sur. I would'twer something y' would fret the string,
The Master-cord on's heart.

Suf. The King, the King.

King. What piles of Wealth hath he accumulated
To his owne portion? And what expence by'th'houre Seemes to flow from him? How, i'th' name of Thrift Does he rake this together? Now my Lords,
Saw you the Cardinall?

Nor. My Lord, we have Stood heere observing him. Some strange Commotion
Is in his braine: He bites his lip and starts,
Stops on a sodaine, lookes upon the ground,
Then layes his finger on his Temple: straight
Springs out into fast gate, then stops againe,
Strikes his brest hard, and anon, he calts
His eye against the Moone: in most strange Postures
We have seene him set himselfe.

King. It may well be,
There is a mutiny in's mind. This morning,
Papers of State he sent me, to peruse
As I requir'd: and wot you what I found
There (on my Conscience put unwittingly)
Forsooth an inventorie, thus importing
The severall parcels of his Plate, his Treasure, Rich stufes and Ornaments of Household, which I finde at such proud Rate, that it out-speakes
Possession of a Subject.

Nor. It's heavens will,
Some Spirit put this paper in the Packet,
To blesse your eye withall.

King. If we did thinke

His

His Contemplations were above the earth,
And fixt on spirituall object, he should still Dwell in his Musings, but I am affraid
His Thinkings are below the Moone, not worth
His serious considering.

King takes his Seat, whispers Lovell, who goes to the Cardinall.

Car. Heaven forgive me,
Ever God bleſſe your Highneſſe.

King. Good my Lord,
You are full of Heavenly ſtuſſe, and beare the Inventory,
Of your beſt Graces, in your minde, the which
You were now running o're: you have ſcarſe time
To ſteale from Spirituall leysure, a brieſe ſpan
To keepe your earthly Audit, ſure in that I deeme you an ill Husband, and am glad
To have you thercin my Companion.

Car. Sir,
For Holy Offices I have a time; a time
To thinke upon the part of buſineſſe, which I beare i'th' State: and Nature does require
Her times of preſervation, which perforce
I her fraile ſonne, among' ſt my Brethren mortall, Muſt give my tendance to.

King. You have ſaid well.

Car. And ever may your Highneſſe yoake together,
(As I will lend you cauſe) my doing well,
With my well ſaying.

King. 'Tis well ſaid agen,
And 'tis a kinde of good deece to ſay well,
And yet words are no deeds. My Father lov'd you,
He ſaid he did, and with his deed did Crowne
His word upon you. Since I had my Office,
I have kept you next my Heart, have not alone
Imploy'd you where high Profits might come home,
But par'd my preſent Havings, to beſtow
My Bounties upon you.

Car. What ſhould this meane?

Sir. The Lord increaſe this buſineſſe.

King. Have I not made you
The prime man of the State? I pray you tell me,
If what I now pronounce, you have found true:
And if you may confeſſe it, ſay withall
If you are bound to us, or no. What ſay you?

Car. My Sovraigne, I confeſſe your Royall graces
Shew'd on me daily, have bene more then could
My ſtudied purpoſes require, which went Beyond all mans endeavors. My endeavors,
Have ever come too ſhort of my Deſires,
Yet fill'd with my Abilities: Mine owne ends
Have bene ſo, that ever more they pointed To'th' good of your moſt Sacred Perſon, and
The profit of the State. For your great Graces
Heap'd upon me (poore Vnderſerver) I
Can nothing render but Allegiant thanks,
My Prayres to heaven for you; my Loyalty
Which ever ha's, and ever ſhall be growing;
Till death (that Winter) kill it.

King. Fairely answer'd:

A Loyall, and obedient Subject is Therein illuſtrated; the Honor of it
Does pay the Act of it, as i'th' contrary
The foulneſſe is the puniſhment. I preſume,
That as my hand ha's open'd Bounty to you,
My heart drop'd Love, my powre rain'd Honor, more
On you, then any: So your Hand, and Heart,

Your Braine; and every Function of your power,
Should, notwithstanding that your bond of duty,
As 'twere in Loves particular, be more
To me your Friend, then any.

Car. I do profeſſe,
That for your Highneſſe good, I ever labour'd
More then mine owne: that am, have, and will be (Though all the world ſhould cracke their duty to you,
And throw it from their Soule, though perils did Abound, as thicke as thought could make 'em, and Appeare in formes more horrid) yet my Duty,
As doth a Rocke againſt the chiding Flood,
Should the approach of this wilde River breake,
And ſtand unſhaken yours.

King. 'Tis Nobly ſpoken;
Take notice Lords, he ha's a Loyall beſt,
For you have ſcene him open't. Read o're this,
And after this, and then to Breakfast with What appetite you have.

Exit King, frowning upon the Cardinall, the Nobles throng after him ſmiling, and whiſpering.

Car. What ſhould this meane?

What ſodaine Anger's this? How have I reap'd it?
He parted Frowning from me, as if Ruine
Leap'd from his Eyes. So looks the chafed Lyon
Vpon the daring Huntſman that has gail'd him:
Then makes him nothing. I muſt reade this paper:
I feare the Story of his Anger. 'Tis ſo:
This paper ha's undone me: 'Tis th' Accompt
Of all that world of Wealth I have drawne together
For mine owne ends, (Indeed to gaine the Popedome
And ſee my Friends in Rome.) O Negligence!
Fit for a Foole to fall by: What croſſe Divell
Made me put this maine Secret in the Packet
I ſent the King? Is there no way to cure this?
No new device to beate this from his Braines?
I know 'twill ſtirre him ſtrongly; yet I know
A way, if it take right, in ſpight of Fortune
Will bring me off againe. What's this? To th' Pope?
The Letter (as I live) with all the Buſineſſe
I writ to's Holineſſe. Nay then, farewell:
I have touch'd the higheſt point of all my Greatneſſe,
And from that full Meridian of my Glory,
I haſte now to my Setting, I ſhall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the Evening,
And no man ſee me more.

Enter to Woolſey, the Dukes of Norfolke and Suffolke, the Earle of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlaine.

Nor. Heare the Kings pleaſure Cardinall,
Who commands you
To render up the Great Seale preſently
Into our hands, and to Confine your ſelfe
To Aſher-houſe, my Lord of Wincheſters,
Till you heare further from his Highneſſe.

Car. Stay:

Where's your Commiſſion? Lords, words cannot carry Authority ſo weighty.

Suf. Who dare croſſe 'em,

Bearing the Kings will from his mouth expreſſely?

Car. Till I finde more then will, or words to do it,
(I meane your malice) know, Officious Lords,
I dare, and muſt deny it. Now I feele
Of what courſe Mettle ye are molded, Envy;
How eagerly ye follow my Diſgraces

As if it fed ye, and how sleeke and wanton
Ye appeare in every thing may bring my ruine?
Follow your envious courtes, men of Malice;
You have Christian warrant for 'em, and no doubt
In time will finde their fit Rewards. That Seale
You aske with such a Violence, the King
(Mine, and your Maister) with his owne hand, gave me:
Bad me enjoy it, with the Place, and Honors
During my life; and to confirme his Goodnesse,
Tide it by Letters Patents. Now, who'll take it?

Sur. The King that gave it.

Car. It must be himselfe then.

Sur. Thou art a proud Traitor, Priest.

Car. Proud Lord, thou lye'st:

Within these forty houres, Surrey durst better
Have burnt that Tongue, then saide so.

Sur. Thy Ambition

(Thou Scarler sinne) robb'd this bewailing Land
Of Noble Buckingham, my Father in-Law,
The heads of all thy Brother-Cardinals,
(With thee, and all thy best parts bound together)
Weigh'd not a haire of his. Plague of your policy,
You sent me Deputy for Ireland,
Farre from his succour; from the King, from all
That might have mercy on the fault, thou gav'st him:
Whil'st your great Goodnesse, out of holy pittie,
Absolv'd him with an Axe.

Vol. This, and all else

This talking Lord can lay upon my credit,
I answer, is most false. The Duke by Law Found his deserts. How innocent I was
From any private malice in his end,
His Noble Iury, and foule Cause can witnesse.
If I lov'd many words, Lord, I should tell you,
You have as little Honesty, as Honor,
That in the way of Loyalty, and Truth,
Toward the King, my ever Royall Maister,
Dare mate a sounder man then Surry can be,
And all that love his follies.

Sur. By my Soule,
Your long Coat (Priest) protects you,
Thou should'st feele
My Sword i'th' life blood of thee else. My Lords,
Can ye endure to heare this Arrogance?
And from this Fellow? If we live thus tamely,
To be thus laded by a peece of Scarlet,
Farewell Nobility: let his Grace go forward,
And dare us with his Cap, like Larkes.

Car. All Goodnesse

Is poison to thy Stomacke.

Sur. Yes, that goodnesse
Of gleaning all the Lands wealth into one,
Into your owne hands (Card'nall) by Extortion:
The goodnesse of your intercepted Packets
You writ to'th Pope, against the King: your goodnesse
Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious.
My Lord of Norfolke, as you are truly Noble,
As you respect the common good, the State
Of our despis'd Nobility, our Issues,
(Who if he live, will scarce be Gentlemen)
Produce the grand-somme of his sinnes, the Articles
Collected from his life. Ile startle you
Worsethen the Sacring Bell, when the browne Wench
Lay kissing in your Armes, Lord Cardinall.

Car. How much me thinkes, I could despise this man,
But that I am bound in Charity against it.

Nor. Those Articles, my Lord, are in the Kings hands:
But thus much, they are foule ones.

Vol. So much fairer

And spotlesse, shall mine Innocence arise,
When the King knowes my Truth.

Sur. This cannot save you:

I thanke my Memory, I yet remember
Some of these Articles, and out they shall.
Now, if you can blush, and cry guilty Cardinall,
You'll shew a little Honesty.

Vol. Speake on Sir,

I dare your worst Objections: If I blush,
It is to see a Nobleman want manners.

Sur. I had rather want those, then my head;
Have at you.

First, that without the Kings assent or knowledge,
You wrought to be a Legate, by which power
You main'd the Iurisdiction of all Bishops.

Nor. Then, That in all you writ to Rome, or else
To Forraigne Princes, Ego & Rex meus,
Was still inscrib'd: in which you brought the King
To be your Servant.

Suf. Then, that without the knowledge
Either of King or Councell, when you went Ambassador to the Emperour, you made bold
To carry into Flanders, the Great Seale.

Sur. Item, You sent a large Commission
To Gregory de Cassado, to conclude
Without the Kings will, or the States allowance,
A League betweene his Highnesse, and Ferrara.

Suf. That out of meere Ambition, you have caus'd
Your holy-Hat to be stamp't on the Kings Coine.

Sur. Then, that you have sent innumerable substance,
(by what meanes got, I leave to your owne conscience)
To furnish Rome, and to prepare the wayes
You have for Dignities, to the meere undoing
Of all the Kingdome. Many more there are,
Which since they are of you, and odious,
I will not taint my mouth with.

Cham. O my Lord,
Presse not a falling man too farre: 'tis Vertue:
His faults lye open to the Lawes, let them
(Not you) correct him. My heart weepes to see him
So little, of his great Selfe.

Sur. I forgive him.

Suf. Lord Cardinall, the Kings further pleasure is,
Because all those things you have done of late
By your power Legantive within this Kingdome,
Fall into'th' compasse of a Premunire;
That therefore such a Writ be sued against you,
To forfeit all your Goods, Lands, Tenements,
Castles, and whatsoever, and to be Out of the Kings protection. This is my Charge.

Nor. And so wee'll leave you to your Meditations
How to live better. For your stubborn answer
About the giuing backe the Great Seale to us,
The King shall know it, and (no doubt) shall thanke you.
So fare you well, my little good Lord Cardinall.

Exeunt all but Wolsey.

Vol. So farewell, to the little good you beare me.
Farewell? A long farewell to all my Greatnesse.
This is the state of Man; to day he puts forth
The tender Leaves of hopes, to morrow Blossomes,
And beares his blushing Honors thicke upon him:
The third day, comes a Frost; a killing Frost,
And when he thinkes, good easie man, full surely

His Greatnesse is a ripening, nippes his roote,
And then he fals as I do. I have ventur'd
Like little wanton Boyes that swim on bladders:
This many Summers in a Sea of Glory,
But farre beyond my depth: my high-blowne Pride
At length broke under me, and now ha's left me
Weary, and old with Service, to the mercy
Of a rude streame, that must for ever hide me.
Vaine pompe, and glory of this World, I hate ye,
I feele my heart new open'd. Oh how wretched
Is that poore man, that hangs on Princes favours?
There is betwixt that smile we would aspire to,
That sweet Aspect of Princes, and their ruine,
More pangs, and feares then warres, or women have;
And when he falles, he falles like Lucifer,
Never to hope againe.

Enter Cromwell, standing amazed.

Why how now Cromwell?

Crom. I have no power to speake Sir.]

Car. What, amaz'd

At my misfortunes? Can the Spirit wonder
A great man should decline. Nay, and you weep
I am false indeed.

Crom. How does your Grace.

Card. Why well:

Never so truly happy, my good Cromwell,
I know my selfe now, and I feele within me,
A peace above all earthly Dignities,
A still, and quiet Conscience. The King ha's cur'd me,
I humbly thanke his Grace: and from these shoulders
These ruin'd Pillar, out of pittie, taken
A load, would sinke a Navy, (too much Honor.)
O'tis a burden Cromwell, 'tis a burden
Too heavy for a man, that hopes for Heaven.

Crom. I am glad your Grace,
Ha's made that right use of it.

Card. I hope I have:
I am able now (me thinkes)
(Out of a Fortitude of Soule, I feele)
To endure more Miseries, and greater farre
Then my Weake-hearted Enemies, dare offer.
What Newes abroad?

Crom. The heaviest, and the worst,
Is your displeasure with the King.

Card. God blesse him.

Crom. The next is, that Sir Thomas Moore is chosen
Lord Chancellor, in your place.

Card. That's somewhat sodain.
But he's a Learned man. May he continue
Long in his Highnesse favour, and do Iustice
For Truths-sake, and his Conscience; that his bones,
When he ha's run his course, and sleepes in Blessings,
May have a Tombe of Orphants teares wept on him.
What more?

Crom. That Cranmer is return'd with welcome;
Install'd Lord Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

Card. That's Newes indeed.

Crom. Last, that the Lady Anne,
Whom the King hath in secrecy long married,
This day was view'd in open, as his Queene,
Going to Chappell: and the voice is now
Onely about her Corronation.

Card. There was the waight that pull'd me downe.
O Cromwell,
The King ha's gone beyond me: All my Glories
In that one woman, I have lost for ever.

No Sun, shall ever usher forth mine Honors,
Or gilde againe the Noble Troopes that waighted
Vpon my smiles. Go get thee from me Cromwel,
I am a poore false man, unworthy now
To be thy Lord, and Maister. Seeke the King
(That Sun, I pray may never set) I have told him,
What, and how true thou art; he will advance thee:
Some little memory of me, will stirre him
(I know his Noble Nature) not to let Thy hopefull service perish too. Good Cromwell
Neglect him not; make use now, and provide
For thine owne future safety.

Crom. O my Lord,

Must I then leave you? Must I needes forgo
So good, so Noble, and so true a Maister?
Beare witness, all that have not hearts of Iron,
With what a sorrow Cromwel leaves his Lord.
The King shall have my service; but my prayers
For ever, and for ever shall be yours.

Card. Cromwel, I did not thinke to shed a teare
In all my Miseries: But thou hast forc'd me
(Out of thy honest truth) to play the Woman.
Let's dry our eyes: And thus farre heare me Cromwel,
And when I am forgotten, as I shall be,
And sleepe in dull cold Marble, where no mention
Of me, more must be heard of: Say I taught thee;
Say Wolsey, that once trod the wayes of Glory,
And founded all the Depths, and Shoales of Honor,
Found thee a way (out of his wracke) to rise in:
A sure, and safe one, though thy Maister must it.
Marke but my Fall, and that that Ruin'd me:
Cromwel, I charge thee, fling away Ambition,
By that sinne fell the Angels: how can man then
(The Image of his Maker) hope to win by it?
Love thy selfe last, cherish those hearts that hate thee:
Corruption wins not more then Honesty,
Still in thy right hand, carry gentle Peace
To silence envious Tongues. Be just, and feare not:
Let all the ends thou aym'st at, be thy Countries,
Thy Gods, and Truths. Then if thou fall'st (O Cromwell)
Thou fall'st a blessed Martyr.

Serve the King: And prythee leade me in:
There take an Inventory of all I have,
To the last peny, 'tis the Kings. My Robe,
And my Integrity to Heaven, is all,
I dare now call mine owne. O Cromwel, Cromwel
Had I but serv'd my God, with halfe the Zeale
I serv'd my King: he would not in mine Age
Have left me naked to mine Enemies,

Crom. Good Sir, have patience.

Card. So I have. Farewell

The Hopes of Court, my Hopes in Heaven do dwell.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scæna Prima.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting one another.

1 Y're well met once againe.

2 So are you.

1 You come to take your stand heere, and behold
The Lady Anne, passe from her Corronation.

y 2

2 'Tis

2 'Tis all my businesse. At our last encounter,
The Duke of Buckingham came from his Triall.

1 'Tis very true. But that time offer'd sorrow,
This generall joy.

2 'Tis well: The Citizens
I am sure have shewne at full their Royall minds,
As let'em have their rights, they are ever forward
In Celebration of this day with Shewes,
Pageants, and Sights of Honor.

1 Never greater,
Nor Ile assure you better taken Sir.

2 May I be bold to aske what that containes,
That Paper in your hands.

1 Yes, 'tis the List
Of those that claime their Offices this day,
By custome of the Coronation.
The Duke of Suffolke is the first, and claimes
To be high Steward; Next the Duke of Norfolk,
He to be Earle Marshall: you may reade the rest.

1 I thank you Sir: Had I not knowne those customes,
I should have beene beholding to your Paper:
But I beseech you, what's become of Katherine
The Princess Dowager? How goes her businesse?

1 That I can tell you too. The Archbishop Of Canterbury, accompanied with other
Learned, and Reverend Fathers of his Order,
Held a late Court at Dunstable; sixe miles off
From Amptill, where the Princess lay, to which
She was often cyted by them, but appear'd not:
And to be short, for not Appearance, and
The Kings late Scruple, by the maine assent
Of all these Learned men, she was divorc'd,
And the late Marriage made of none effect:
Since which, she was remov'd to Kymmilton,
Where she remains now sicke.

2 Alas good Lady.
The Trumpets sound: Stand close,
The Queene is comming.

Ho-boys.

The Order of the Coronation.

- 1 A lively Flourish of Trumpets.
  - 2 Then two Judges.
  - 3 Lord Chancellor, with Purse and Mace before him.
  - 4 Quiristers singing. Musicke
  - 5 Maior of London, bearing the Mace. Then Garter, in his Coate of Armes, and on his head he wore a Gilt Copper Crowne.
  - 6 Marquesse Dorset, bearing a Scepter of Gold, on his head, a Demy Coronall of Gold. With him, the Earle of Surrey bearing the Rod of Silver with the Dove, Crowned with an Earles Coronet. Collars of Esses.
  - 7 Duke of Suffolke, in his Robe of Estate, his Coronet on his head, bearing a long white Wand, as High Steward. With him, the Duke of Norfolk, with the Rod of Marshallship, a Coronet on his head. Collars of Esses.
  - 8 A Canopy, borne by foure of the Cinque-Ports, under it the Queene in her Robe, in her haire, richly adorned with Pearls, Crowned. On each side her, the Bishops of London and Winchester.
  - 9 The Old Dutchesse of Norfolk, in a Coronall of Gold, wrought with Flowers, bearing the Queenes Train.
  - 10 Certaine Ladies or Countesses, with plaine Circlets of Gold, without Flowers.
- Exeunt, first passing over the Stage in Order and State, and then, A great Flourish of Trumpets.

2 A Royall Trainee beleve me: These I know:
Who's that that beares the Scepter?

1 Marquesse Dorset,
And that the Earle of Surrey, with the Rod.

2 A bold brave Gentleman. That should be The Duke of Suffolke.

1 'Tis the same: high Steward.

2 And that my Lord of Norfolk?

1 Yes.

2 Heaven blesse thee,
Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on.
Sir, as I have a Soule, she is an Angell;
Our King ha's all the Indies in his Armes,
And more, and richer, when he straines that Lady,
I cannot blame his Conscience.

1 They that beare
The Cloath of Honor over her, are foure Barons
Of the Cinque-Ports.

2 Those men are happy,
And so are all, are neere her.
I take it, she that carries up the Trainee,
Is that old Noble Lady, Dutchesse of Norfolk.

1 It is, and all the rest are Countesses.

2 Their Coronets say so. These are Starres indeed,
And sometimes falling ones.

2 No more of that.

Enter a third Gentleman.

1 God save you Sir. Where have you bin broiling?
3 Among the crow'd i'th' Abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more: I am stifled
With the meere ranknesse of their joy.

2 You saw the Ceremony?

3 That I did.

1 How was it?

3 Well worth the seeing.

2 Good Sir, speake it to us?

3 As well as I am able. The rich streame
Of Lords, and Ladies, having brought the Queene
To a prepar'd place in the Quire, fell off
A distance from her; while her Grace sat downe
To rest a while, some halfe an houre, or so,
In a rich Chaire of State, opposing freely
The Beauty of her Person to the People.
Beleeve me Sir, she is the goodliest Woman
That ever lay by man: which when the people
Had the full view of, such a noyse arose,
As the shrowdes make at Sea, in a stiffe Tempest,
As lowd, and to as many Tunes. Hats, Cloakes,
(Doublets, I thinke) flew up, and had their Faces
Bin loose, this day they had beene lost. Such joy
I never saw before. Great belly'd women,
That had not halfe a weeke to go, like Rammes
In the old time of Warre, would shake the prease
And make'em reele before'em. No man living
Could say this is my wife there, all were woven
So strangely in one peece.

2 But what follow'd?

3 At length, her Grace rose, and with modest paces
Came to the Altar, where she kneel'd, and Saint-like
Cast her faire eyes to Heaven, and pray'd devoutly.
Then rose againe, and bow'd her to the people:
When by the Arch-bishop of Canterbury,
She had all the Royall makings of a Queene;
As holy Oyle, Edward Confessors Crowne,
The Rod, and Bird of Peace, and all such Emblemes
Laid Nobly on her: which perform'd, the Quire

With

With all the choysest Musicke of the Kingdome,
Together sung Te Deum. So she parted,
And with the same full State pac'd backe againe
To Yorke-Place, where the Feast is held.

1 Sir.
You must no more call it Yorke-place, that's past:
For since the Cardinall fell, that Titles lost,
'Tis now the Kings, and call'd White-Hall.

3 I know it:
But 'tis so lately alter'd, that the old name
Is fresh about me.

2 What two Reverend Byshops
Were those that went on each side of the Queene?

3 Stokeley and Gardiner, the one of Winchester,
Newly preferr'd from the Kings Secretary:
The other London.

2 He of Wincester
Is held no great good lover of the Archbishop,
The vertuous Crammer.

3 All the Land knowes that:
How ever, yet there is no great breach, when it comes Crammer will finde a Friend will not shrinke from him.

2 Who may that be, I pray you.

3 Thomas Cromwell,
A man in much esteeme with th' King, and truly
A worthy Friend. The King ha's made him
Maister o' th' Iewell House,
And one already of the Privy Councell.

2 He will deserve more.

3 Yes without all doubt.
Come Gentlemen ye shall go my way,
Which is to th' Court, and there ye shall be my Guests:
Something I can command. As I walke thither,
He tell ye more.

Both. You may command us Sir.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Katherine Dowager, sicke, lead betweene Griffith, her Gentleman Vsher, and Patience her Woman.

Griff. How do's your Grace?

Kath. O Griffith, sicke to death:

My Legges like loaded Branches bow to th' Earth,
Willing to leave their burthen: Reach a Chaire,
So now (me thinkes) I feele a little ease.
Didst thou not tell me Griffith, as thou lead'st me,
That the great Childe of Honor, Cardinall Wolsey.
Was dead?

Griff. Yes Madam: but I thinke your Grace
Out of the paine you suffer'd, gave no eare too't.

Kath. Pre'thee good Griffith, tell me how he dy'de.
If well, he slept before me happily
For my example.

Griff. Well, the voice goes Madam,
For after the stout Earle Northumberland
Arrested him at Yorke, and brought him forward
As a man sorely tainted, to his Answer,
He fell sicke sodainly, and grew so ill
He could not sit his Mule.

Kath. Alas poore man.

Griff. At last, with easie Rodes he came to Leicester,

Lodg'd in the Abbey; where the reverend Abbot
With all his Covent, honorably receiv'd him;
To whom he gave these words. O Father Abbot,
An old man, broken with the stormes of State,
Is come to lay his weary bones among ye:

Give him a little earth for Charity.
So went to bed; where eagerly his sicknesse
Pursv'd him still, and three nights after this,
About the houre of eight, which he himselve
Foretold should be his last, full Repentance,
Continuall Meditations, Teares, and Sorrowes,
He give his Honors to the world agen,
His blessed part to Heaven, and slept in peace.

Kath. So may he rest,

His faults lye on him:
Yet thus farre Griffith, give me leave to speake him,
And yet with Charity. He was, a man
Of an unbounded stomacke, ever ranking
Himselfe with Princes. One that by suggestion
Ty'de all the Kingdome. Symony, was faire play,
His owne Opinion was his Law. I'th' presence
He would say untruths, and be ever double
Both in his words, and meaning. He was never (But where he meant to Ruine) pittifull.
His Promises, were as he then was, Mighty:
But his performance, as he is now, Nothing:
Of his owne body he was ill, and gave
The Clergy ill example.

Griff. Noble Madam:

Mens evill manners, live in Brasse, their Vertues
We write in Water. May it please your Highnesse
To heare me speake his good now?

Kath. Yes good Griffith,

I were malicious else.

Griff. This Cardinall.

Though from an humble Stocke, undoubtedly Was fashion'd to much Honor. From his Cradle
He was a Scholler, and a ripe, and good one:
Exceeding wise, faire spoken, and perswading:
Lofty, and sower to them that lov'd him not:
But to those men that fought him, sweet as Summer.
And though he were unsatisfied in getting,
(Which was a sinne) yet in bestowing, Madam,
He was most Princely: Ever witnesse for him
Those twinnes of Learning, that he rais'd in you,
Ipswich and Oxford: one of which, fell with him,
Unwilling to out-live the good that did it.
The other (though unfinish'd) yet so Famous,
So excellent in Art, and still so rising,
That Christendome shall ever speake his Vertue.
His Overthrow, heap'd Happinesse upon him:
For then, and not till then, he felt himselfe,
And found the Blessednesse of being little.
And to adde greater Honors to his Age
Then man could give him; he dy'de, fearing God.

Kath. After my death, I wish no other Herald,
No other speaker of my living Actions,
To keepe mine Honor, from Corruption,
But such an honest Chronicler as Griffith.
Whom I most hated Living, thou hast made me
With thy Religious Truth, and Modesty,
(Now in his Ashes) Honor: Peace be with him.
Patience, be neere me still, and set me lower.
I have not long to trouble thee. Good Griffith,
Cause the Musicians play me that sad note
I nam'd my Knell; whilst I sit meditating.

On that Coelestiall Harmony I go too.

Sad and solemn Musicke.

Grif. She is asleepe: Good wench, let's fit down quiet,
For feare we wake her. Softly, gentle Patience.

The Vision.

Enter solemnly tripping one after another, sixe Personages, clad in white Robes, wearing on their heades Garlands of Bayes, and golden Vizards on their faces, Branches of Bayes or Palme in their hands. They first Conge unto her, then Dance: and at certaine Changes, the first two hold a spare Garland over her Head, at which the other foure make reverend Curtsies. Then the two that held the Garland, deliver the same to the other next two, who observe the same order in their Charges, and holding the Garland over her head. Which done, they deliver the same Garland to the last two: who likewise observe the same Order. At which (as it were by inspiration) she makes (in her sleepe) signes of rejoycing, & holdeth up her hands to heaven. And so, in their Dancing vanish, carrying the Garland with them. The Musicke continues.

Kath. Spirits of peace, where are ye? Are ye all gone?
And leave me heere in wretchednesse, behinde ye?

Grif. Madam, we are heere.

Kath. It is not you I call for,
Saw ye none enter since I slept?

Grif. None, Madam.

Kath. No? Saw you not even now a blessed Troope Invite me to a Banquet, whose bright faces
Cast a thousand beames upon me, like the Sun?
They promis'd me eternall Happinesse,
And brought me Garlands (Griffith) which I feele
I am not worthy yet to weare: I shall assuredly.

Grif. I am most joyfull Madam, such good dreames Possesse your Fancy.

Kath. Bid the Musicke leave,
They are harsh and heavy to me. Musicke ceases.

Pati. Do you note
How much her Grace is alter'd on the sodaine?
How long her face is drawne? How pale she lookes,
And of an earthy cold? Marke her eyes?

Grif. She is going Wench. Pray, pray.

Pati. Heaven comfort her.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. And't like your Grace ———

Kat. You are a sawcy Fellow,
Deserve we no more Reverence?

Grif. You are too blame,
Knowing she will not loose her wonted Greatnesse
To use so rude behaujour. Go to, kneele.

Mes. I humbly do entreat your Highnesse pardon,
My haile made me unmannerly. There is staying
A Gentleman sent from the King, to see you.

Kath. Admit him entrance Griffith. But this Fellow Let me ne're see againe. Exit Messeng.

Enter Lord Capuchius.

If my sight faile not,
You should be Lord Ambassador from the Emperor,
My Royall Nephew, and your name Capuchius.

Cap. Madam the same. Your Servant.

Kath. O my Lord,
The Times and Titles now are alter'd strangely
With me, since first you knew me.
But I pray you,
What is your pleasure with me?

Cap. Noble Lady,

First mine owne service to your Grace, the next
The Kings request, that I would visit you,
Who grieves much for your weaknesse, and by me
Sends you his Princely Commendations,
And heartily entreats you take good comfort.

Kath. O my good Lord, that comfort comes too late,
'Tis like a Pardon after Execution;
That gentle Physicke given in time, had cur'd me:
But now I am past all Comforts heere, but Prayers.
How does his Highnesse?

Cap. Madam, in good health.

Kath. So may he ever do, and ever flourish,
When I shall dwell with Wormes, and my poore name
Banish'd the Kingdome. Patience, is that Letter
I caus'd you write, yet sent away?

Pati. No Madam.

Kath. Sir, I most humbly pray you to deliver
This to my Lord the King.

Cap. Most willingly Madam.

Kath. In which I have commended to his goodnesse
The Modell of our chaste loves: his yong daughter,
The dewes of Heaven fall thicke in Blessings on her,
Beseeching him to give her vertuous breeding.
She is yong, and of a Noble modest Nature,
I hope she will deserve well, and a little
To love her for her Mothers sake: that lov'd him:
Heaven knowes how deerely.

My next poore Petition
Is, that his Noble Grace would have some pittie
Vpon my wretched women, that so long
Have follow'd both my Fortunes, faithfully,
Of which there is not one, I dare avow
(And now I should not lye) but will deserve
For Vertue, and true Beauty of the Soule,
For honesty, and decent Carriage
A right good Husband (let him be a Noble)
And sure those men are happy that shall have 'em.
The last is for my men, they are the poorest,
(But poverty could never draw 'em from me)
That they may have their wages, duly paid 'em,
And something over to remember me by.
If Heaven had pleas'd to have given me longer life
And able meanes, we had not parted thus.
These are the whole Contents, and good my Lord,
By that you love, he deereft in this world,
As you wish Christian peace to soules departed,
Stand these poore peoples Friend, and urge the King
To do me this last right.

Cap. By Heaven I will.

Or let me loose the fashion of a man.

Kath. I thanke you honest Lord. Remember me
In all humility unto his Highnesse:
Say his long trouble now is passing
Out of this world. Tell him in death I blest him
(For so I will) mine eyes grow dimme. Farewell
My Lord. Griffith farewell. Nay Patience,
You must not leave me yet. I must to bed,
Call in more women. When I am dead, 'good Wench,
Let me be us'd with Honor; strew me over
With Maiden Flowers, that all the world may know
I was a chaste Wife, to my Grave: Embalme me,
Then lay me forth (although unqueen'd) yet like
A Queene, and Daughter to a King enterre me.
I can no more.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, a Page with a Torch before him, met by Sir Thomas Lovell.

Gard. It's one a clocke Boy, is't not.

Boy. It hath strooke.

Gard. These should be houres for necessities, Not for delights: Times to repayre our Nature With comforting repose, and not for us To waste these times. Good houre of night Sir Thomas: Whether so late?

Lov. Came you from the King, my Lord?

Gard. I did Sir Thomas, and left him at Primero With the Duke of Suffolke.

Lov. I must to him too

Before he go to bed. He take my leave.

Gard. Not yet Sir Thomas Lovell: what's the matter? It seemes you are in hast: and if there be No great offence belongs too't, give your Friend Some touch of your late businesse: Affaires that walke (As they say Spirits do) at midnight, have In them a wilder Nature, then the businesse That seekes dispatch by day.

Lov. My Lord, I love you; And durst commend a secret to your care Much waightier then this worke. The Queens in Labor They lay in great Extremity, and fear'd Shee'l with the Labour, end.

Gard. The fruite she goe with I pray for heartily, that it may finde Good time, and live: but for the Stocke Sir Thomas, I wish it grubb'd up now.

Lov. Me thinks I could Cry the Amen, and yet my Conscience sayes Shee's a good Creature, and sweet-Lady do's Deserve our better wishes.

Gard. But Sir, Sir. Heare me Sir Thomas, y'are a Gentleman Of mine owne way. I know you Wise, Religious, And let me tell you, it will ne're be well, 'Twill not Sir Thomas Lovell, tak't of me, Till Cranmer Cromwell, her two hands, and shee Sleepe in their Graves.

Lov. Now Sir, you speake of two The most remark'd in Kingdome: as for Cromwel, Beside that of the Jewell-House, is made Maister O'th Rolles, and the Kings Secretary. Further Sir, Stands in the gap and Trade of moe Preferments, With which the Lime will loade him. Th' Archbyshop Is the Kings hand, and tongue, and who dare speake One syllable against him?

Gard. Yes, yes, Sir Thomas, There are that Dare, and I my selfe have ventur'd To speake my minde of him: and indeed this day, Sir (I may tell it you) I thinke I have Incens'd the Lords o'th' Councell, that he is (For so I know he is, they know he is) A most Arch-Heretique, a Pestilence That does infect the Land: with which, they moved Have broken with the King, who hath so farre Given care to our Complaint, of his great Grace. And Princely Care, fore-seeing those fell Mischiefs,

Our Reasons layd before him, hath commanded To morrow Morning to the Councell Boord He be convented. He's a ranke weed Sir Thomas, And we must root him out: From your Affaires I hinder you too long: Good night, Sir Thomas.

Exit Gardiner and Page.

Lov. Many good nights, my Lord, I rest your servant.

Enter King and Suffolke.

King. Charles, I will play no more to night, My mindes not on't, you are too hard for me.

Suf. Sir, I did never win of you before.

King. But little Charles, Nor shall not when my Fancies on my play. Now Lovel, from the Queene what is the Newes, Lov. I could not personally deliver to her What you commanded me, but by her woman, I sent your Message, who return'd her thanks In the great'st humblenesse, and desir'd your Highnesse Most hartily to pray for her.

King. What say'st thou? Ha? To pray for her? What, is she crying out?

Lov. So said her woman, and that her suffrance made Almost each pang, a death.

King. Alas good Lady.

Suf. God safely quit her of her Burthen, and With gentle Travaile, to the gladding of Your Highnesse with an Heire.

King. 'Tis midnight Charles, Prythee to bed, and in thy Prayers remember Th' estate of my poore Queene. Leave me alone, For I must thinke of that, which company Would not be friendly to.

Suf. I wish your Highnesse A quiet night, and my good Mistris will Remember in my Prayers.

King. Charles good night. Well Sir, what followes?

Exit Suffolke.

Enter Sir Anthony Denny.

Den. Sir, I haue brought my Lord the Arch-byshop, As you commanded me.

King. Ha? Canterbury?

Den. I my good Lord

King. Tis true: where is he Denny?

Den. He attends your Highnesse pleasure.

King. Bring him to Vs.

Lov. This is about that, which the Byshop spake, I am happily come hither.

Enter Cranmer and Denny.

King. Avoid the Gallery. Lovell seemeth so stay. Ha? I have laid. Be gone.

Exeunt Lovell and Denny.

Cran. I am fearefull: Wherefore frownes he thus? Tis his Aspect of Terror. All's not well.

King. How now my Lord? You do desire to know wherefore I sent for you.

Cran. It is my duty T'attend your Highnesse pleasure.

King. Pray you arise My good and gracious Lord of Canterbury: Come, you and I must walke a turne together: I have Newes to tell you.

Come, come, give me your hand. Ah my good Lord, I greeve at what I speake, And am right sorry to repeat what followes. I have, and most unwillingly of late

Heard

Heard many greivous. I do say my Lord
Greivous complaints of you; which being consider'd;
Have mov'd Vs. and our Councell, that you shall
This Morning come before us, where I know
You cannot with such freedome purge your selfe;
But that till further Triall, in those Charges
Which will require your Answer, you must take
Your patience to you, and be well contented
To make your house our Towre: you, a Brother of us
It fits we thus proceed, or else no witnesse
Would come against you.

Cran. I humbly thanke your Highnesse,
And am right glad to catch this good occasion
Most throughly to be winnowed, where my Chaffe
And Corne shall flye asunder. For I know
There's none stands under more calumnious tongues,
Then I my selfe, poore man.

Kin. Stand up, good Canterbury,
Thy Truth, and thy Integrity is rooted
In us thy Friend. Give me thy hand, stand up,
Prythee let's walke. Now by my Holydame,
What manner of man are you? My Lord, I look'd
You would have given me your Petition, that I should have tane some paines, to bring together
Your selfe, and your Accusers, and to have heard you Without indurance further.

Cran. Most dread Liege,
The good I stand on, is my Truth and Honesty:
If they shall faile, I with mine Enemies
Will triumph o're my person, which I waigh not,
Being of those Vertues vacant. I feare nothing
What can be said against me.

Kin. Know you not
How your state stands i'th' world, with the whole world?
Your Enemies are many, and not small; their practises
Must beare the same proportion, and not ever
The Iustice and the Truth o'th' question carries
The dew o'th' Verdict with it; at what ease
Might corrupt mindes procure, Knaves as corrupt
To sweare against you: Such things have bene done.
You are Potently oppos'd, and with a Malice
Of as great Size. Weene you of better lucke,
I meane in periur'd Witnesse, then your Maister,
Whose Minister you are, whiles heere he liv'd Vpon this naughty Earth? Go to, go to,
You take a Precipice for no leape of danger,
Ane woore your owne destruction.

Cran. God, and your Majesty Protect mine innocence, or I fall into
The trap is laid for me.

Kin. Be of good cheere,
They shall no more prevaile, then we give way to:
Keepe comfort to you, and this Morning see
You do appeare before them. If they shall chance
In charging you with matters, to commit you:
The best perswasions to the contrary
Faile not to use; and with what vehemency
Th' occasion shall instruct you. If intreaties
Will render you no remedy, this Ring
Deliver them, and your Appeale to us
There make before them. Looke, the Goodman weeps:
He's honest on mine Honor. Gods blest Mother,
I sweare he is true-hearted, and a soule
None better in my Kingdome. Get you gone,
And do as I have bid you. Exit Cranmer.
He ha's strangled all his Language in his teares.

Enter Olde Lady.

Gent. within. Come backe: what meane you?
Lady. Ile not come backe, the tydings that I bring
Will make my boldnesse, manners. Now good Angels
Fly o're thy Royall head, and shade thy person
Vnder their blessed wings.

Kin. Now by thy lookes
I gesse thy Message. Is the Queene deliver'd?
Say I, and of a boy.

Lady. I, I my Liege;
And of a lovely Boy; the God of heaven
Both now, and ever blesse her: 'Tis a Gyrle
Promises Boyes heereafter. Sir, your Queene
Desires your Visitation, and to be Acquainted with this stranger; 'tis as like you,
As Cherry, is to Cherry.

King. Lovell.

Lov. Sir.

King. Give her an hundred Markes.
Ile to the Queene. Exit King.

Lad. An hundred Markes? By this light, Ile ha more.
An ordinary Groome is for such payment.
I will have more, or scold it out of him.
Said I for this, the Gyrle was like to him? Ile
Have more, or else unsay't: and now, while 'tis hot, Ile put it to the issue. Exit Lady.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury.

Cran. I hope I am not too late, and yet the Gentleman
That was sent to me from the Councell, pray'd me
To make great hast. All fast? What meanes this? Ho?
Who waites there? Sure you know me?

Enter Keeper.

Keeper. Yes, my Lord:
But yet I cannot helpe you.

Cran. Why?

Keeper. Your Grace must waight till you be call'd for.

Enter Doctor Butts.

Cran. So.

Butts. This is a Peice of Malice: I am glad
I came this way so happily. The King
Shall understand it presently. Exit Butts.

Cran. 'Tis Butts.

The Kings Physitian, as he past along
How earnestly he cast his eyes upon me:
Pray heaven he found not my disgrace: for certaine
This is of purpose laid by some that hate me,
(God turne their hearts, I never sought their malice)
To quench mine Honor; they would shame to make me
Wait else at doore: a follow Councillor
'Mong Boyes, Groomes, and Lackeyes.
But their pleasures
Must be fulfill'd, and I attend with patience.

Enter the King, and Butts. at a Windowe above.

Butts. Ile shew your Grace the strangest sight.
King. What's that Butts?

Butts.

Butts. I thinke your Highnesse saw this many a day.

King. Body a me: where is it?

Butts. There my Lord:

The high promotion of his Grace of Canterbury,
Who holds his State at dore 'mongst Purlevants,
Pages, and Foot-boyes.

King. Ha? 'Tis he indeed.

Is this the Honour they doe one another?

'Tis well there's one above 'em yet; I had thought
They had parted so much honesty among 'em,
At least good manners; as not thus to suffer
A man of his Place, and so neere our favour
To dance attendance on their Lordships pleasures,
And at the dore too, like a Post with Packets:
By holy Mary (Butts) there's knavery;
Let 'em alone, and draw the Curtaine close:
We shall heare more anon.

Chan. Speake to the businesse, M. Secretary;

Why are we met in Councell?

Crom. Please your Honours,

The chiefe cause concernes his Grace of Canterbury.

Gard. Ha's he had knowledge of it?

Crom. Yes.

Nor. Who waits there?

Keep. Without my Noble Lords?

Gard. Yes.

Keep. My Lord Archbishop:

And ha's done halfe an houre to know your pleasures.

Chan. Let him come in.

Keep. Your Grace may enter now.

Cromwell approaches the Councell Table.

Chan. My good Lord Archbishop, I'm very sorry
To sit heere at this present, and behold
That Chayre stand empty: But we all are men
In our owne natures fraile, and capable
Of our flesh, few are Angels; out of which frailty
And want of wisdom, you that best should teach us,
Have misdeemean'd your selfe, and not a little:
Toward the King first, then his Lawes, in filling
The whole Realme, by your teaching & your Chaplaines
(For so we are inform'd) with new opinions,
Divers and dangerous; which are Heresies;
And not reform'd, may prove pernicious.

Gard. Which Reformation must be sodaine too
My Noble Lords, for those that tame wild Horses,
Pace 'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle;
But stop their mouthes with stubborn Bits & spurre 'em,
Till they obey the manage. If wee suffer
Out of our easinesse and churdishe pittie
To one mans Honour, this contagious sicknesse;
Farewell all Physicke; and what followes then?
Commotions, uprores, with a generall Taint
Of the whole State; as of late dayes our neighbours,
The upper Germany can deerely witnesse:
Yet freshly pittied in our memories.

Crom. My good Lords; Hitherto, in all the Progresse
Both of my Life and Office, I have labour'd,
And with no little study, that my teaching

And the strong course of my Authority,
Might goe one way; and safely; and the end
Was ever to doe well: nor is there living,
(I speake it with a single heart, my Lords)
A man that more deteils, more stirres against,
Both in his private Conscience, and his place,
Defacers of a publique peace then I doe:
Pray Heaven the King may never find a heart
With lesse Allegiance in it. Men that make Envy, and crooked malice, nourishment;
Dare bite the best. I doe beseech your Lordships,
That in this case of Iustice, my Accusers,
Be what they will, may stand forth face to face,
And freely urge against me.

Suff. Nay, my Lord,
That cannot be; you are a Counsellor,
And by that vertue no man dare accuse you. (ment,

Gard. My Lord, because we have businesse of more mo-
We will be short with you. 'Tis his Highnesse pleasure
And our content, for better tryall of you,
From hence you be committed to the Tower,
Where being but a private man againe,
You shall know many dare accuse you boldly,
More then (I feare) you are provided for.

Crom. Ah my good Lord of Winchester: I thanke you,
You are alwayes my good Friend, if your will passe,
I shall both finde your Lordship, Iudge and Iuror,
You are so mercifull. I see your end,
'Tis my undoing. Love and meekenesse, Lord
Become a Churchman, better then Ambition:
Win straying Soules with modesty againe,
Cast none away. That I shall clere my selfe,
Lay all the weight ye can upon my patience,
I make as little doubt as you doe conscience,
In doing dayly wrongs. I could say more,
But reverence to your calling, makes me modest.

Gard. My Lord, my Lord, you are a Sectary,
That's the plaine truth; your painted glosse discovers
To men that understand you, words and weaknesse.

Crom. My Lord of Winchester, y'are a little,
By your good favour, too sharpe; Men so Noble,
How ever faulty, yet should finde respect
For what they have beene: 'tis a cruelty,
To load a falling man.

Gard. Good M: Secretary,
I cry your Honour mercy; you may worst
Of all this Table say so.

Crom. Why my Lord?

Gard. Doe not I know you for a Favourer
Of this new Sect? ye are not sound.

Crom. Not sound?

Gard. Not sound I say.

Crom. Would you were halfe so honest:
Mens prayers then would seeke you, not their feares.

Gard. I shall remember this bold Language.

Crom. Doe.

Remember your bold life too.

Chan. This is too much;
Forbeare for shame my Lords.

Gard. I have done.

Crom. And I.

Chan. Then thus for you my Lord, it stands agreed
I take it, by all voyces: That forthwith,
You be convoid to th' Tower a Prisoner;
There to remaine till the Kings further pleasure
Be knowne unto us: are you all agreed Lords.

All. We are.

Cran. Is there no other way of mercy,
But I must needs to th' Tower my Lords?

Gard. Whar other,
Would you expect? You are strangely troublesome:
Let some o'th' Guard be ready there.

Enter the Guard.

Cran. For me?
Must I goe like a Traitor thither?

Gard. Receive him,
And see him safe i'th' Tower.

Cran. Stay good my Lords,
I have a little yet to say. Looke there my Lords,
By vertue of that Ring, I take my cause
Out of the gripes of cruell men, and give it
To a most Noble Iudge, the King my Maister.

Cham. This is the Kings Ring.

Sur. 'Tis no counterfeit.

Suff. 'Tis the right Ring, by Heav'n: I told ye all,
When we first put this dangerous stone a rowling,
'Twould fall upon our selves.

Norf. Doe you thinke my Lords
The King will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd?

Cham. 'Tis now too certaine;
How much more is his Life in valve with him?
Would I were fairely out on't.

Crom. My mind gave me,
In seeking tales and Informations
Against this man, whose honesty the Divell
And his diciples onely enuy at,
Ye blew the fire that burnes ye: now have at ye.

Enter King frowning on them, takes his Seate,

Gard. Dread Sovereigne.

How much are we bound to Heaven,
In dayly thanks; that gave us such a Prince;
Not onely good and wise, but most religious:
One that in all obedience, makes the Church
The cheefe ay me of his Honour, and to strengthen
That holy duty out of deare respect,
His Royall selfe in Iudgement comes to heare
The cause betwixt her, and this great offender.

Kin. You were ever good at sodaine Commendations Bishop of Winchester. But know I come not
To heare such flattery now, and in my presence,
They are too thin, and base to hide offences,
To me you cannot reach. You play the Spaniell,
And thinke with wagging of your tongue to win me:
But whatsoere thou tak'st me for; I'm sure
Thou hast a cruell Nature and a bloody.

Good man sit downe: Now let me see the proudest
Hee, that dares most, but wag his finger at thee.
By all that's holy, he had better starve,
Then but once thinke his place becomes thee not.

Sur. May it please your Grace; ———

Kin. No Sir, it doe's not please me,
I had thought, I had had men of some understanding,
And wisdom of my Councell; but I finde none:
Was it discretion Lords, to let this man,
This good man (few of you deserue that Title)
This honest man, wait like a lowlie Foot-boy
At Chamberdore? and one, as great as you are?
Why, what a shame was this? Did my Commission
Bid ye so farre forget your selves? I gave ye Power, as he was a Counsellour to try him,

Not as a Groome: There's some of ye, I see,
More out of Malice then Integrity,
Would trye him to the utmost, had ye meane,
Which ye shall never have while I live.

Chan. Thus farre
My most dread Sovereigne, may it like your Grace,
To let my tongue excuse all. What was purpos'd Concerning his Imprisonment, was rather (If there be faith in men) meant for his Tryall,
And faire purgation to the world then malice,
I'm sure in me.

Kin. Well, well my Lords respect him,
Take him, and use him well; hee's worthy of it.
I will say thus much for him, if a Prince
May be beholding to a Subject; I
Am for his love and service, so to him.
Make me no more adoe, but all embrace him;
Be friends for shame my Lords: My Lord of Canterbury
I have a Suite which you must not deny mee.
That is, a faire young Maid that yet wants Baptisme,
You must be Godfather, and answere for her.

Cran. The greatest Monarch now alive may glory
In such an honour: how may I deserve it,
That am a poore and humble Subject to you?

Kin. Come, come my Lord, you'd spare your spoones;
You shall have two noble Partners with you: the olde Duchesse of Norfolke, and Lady Marquesse Dorset: will these please you?

Once more my Lord of Winchester, I charge you
Embrace, and love this man.

Gard. With a true heart,
And Brothers love I doe it.

Cran. And let Heaven
Witnesse how deare, I hold this Confirmation. (heart)

Kin. Good Man, those joyfull teares shew thy true
The common voice I see is verified
Of thee, which sayes thus: Doe my Lord of Canterbury
A shrewd turne, and hee's your friend for ever:
Come Lords, we trifle time away: I long
To have this young one made a Christian.
As I have made ye one Lords, one remaine:
So I grow stronger, you more Honour gaine. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Noyse and Tumult within: Enter Porter and his man.

Port. You'll leane your noife anon ye Rascals: doe you take the Court for Parish Garden: ye rude Slaves, leave your gaping:

Within. Good M. Porter I belong to th' Larder.

Por. Belong to th' Gallowes, and be hang'd ye Rogue,
Is this a place to roate in? Fetch me a dozen Crab-tree staves, and strong ones; these are but switches to em:
He scratch your heads; you must be seeing Christenings?
Do you looke for Ale, and Cakes heere, you rude Raskalls?

Man. Pray Sir be patient; 'tis as much impossible,
Vnlesse wee sweepe'em from the dore with Cannons,
To scatter'em, as 'tis to make'em sleepe
On May-day Morning, which will never be:
We may is well push against Powles as stirre'em.

Por. How got they in, and be hang'd?

Man.

Man. Alas I know not, how gets the Tide in?
As much as one found Cudgell of foure foote,
(You see the poore remainder) could distribute,
I made no spare Sir.

Port. You did nothing Sir.

Man. I am not Sampson, nor Sir Guy, nor Colebrand,
To mow 'em downe before me: but if I spar'd any
That had a head to hit, either young or old,
He or she, Cuckold or Cuckold-maker;
Let me ne're hope to see a Chine againe,
And that I would not for a Cow, God save her.

Wish. Do you heare M, Porter?

Port. I shall be with you presently, good M. Puppy.
Keepe the dore close Sir ha.

Man. What would you have me doe?

Port. What should you doe,
But knock 'em downe by th' dozens? Is this More fields to muster in? Or have wee some strange Indian with the great Toole, come to Court, the women so besiege us?
Blesse me, what a fry of Fornication is at dore? On my Christian Conscience this one Christening will beget a thousand, here will be Father, God-father, and all together.

Man. The Spóones will be the bigger Sir: There is a fellow somewhat neere the doore, he should be a Bras-ier by his face, for o' my conscience twenty of the Dogdayes now reigne in's Nose; all that stand about him are under the Line, they need no other pennance: that Fire-Drake did I hit three times on the head, and three times was his Nose discharged against mee; hee stands there like a Morter-piece to blow us. There was a Habberda-shers Wife of small wit, neere him, that rail'd upon me, till her pinck'd porrenger fell off her head, for kindling such a combustion in the State. I mist the Meteor once, and hit that Woman, who cryed out Clubbes, when I might see from farre, some forty Truncheoners draw to her succour, which were the hope o'th' Strond where she was quartered; they fell on, I made good my place; at length they came to th' broome staffe to me, I defide 'em still, when sodainly a File of Boyes behind 'em, loose shot, deliver'd such a showre of Pibbles, that I was faine to draw mine Honour in, and let 'em win the Worke, the Divell was amongst 'em I thinke surely.

Port. These are the youths that thunder at a Playhouse, and fight for bitten Apples, that no Audience but the tribulation of Tower Hill, or the Limbes of Limehouse, their deare Brothers are able to endure. I have some of 'em in Limbo Patrum, and there they are like to dance these three dayes; besides the running Banquet of two Beadles, that is to come.

Enter Lord Chamberlaine.

Cham. Mercy o'me: what a Multitude are heere?
They grow still too; from all Parts they are comming,
As if we kept a Faire heere? Where are these Porters?
These lazy knaves? Y'have made fine hand fellowes?
Theres a trim rabble let in: are all these Your faithfull friends o'th' Suburbs? We shall have Great store of roome no doubt, left for the Ladies,
When they passe backe from the Christening?

Port. And't please your Honour,
We are but men, and what so many may doe,
Not being torne a pieces, we have done:
An Army cannot rule 'em.

Cha. As I live,
If the King blame me for't; Ile lay ye all

By th' heeles, and sodainly: and on your heads
Clap round Fines for neglect. y'are lazy knaves,
And heere ye lye baiting of Bombards, when Ye should doe Service. Harke the Trumpets sound,
Th'are come already from the Christening.
Go breake among the preasse, and finde a way out
To let the Troope passe fairely; or Ile finde
A Marshalliey, shall hold ye play these two Monthes,

Port. Make way there, for the Princesse.

Man. You great fellow,
Stand close up, or Ile make your head ake.

Port. You i'th' Chamblet, get up o'th' raile,
Ile pecke you o're the pales else.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Trumpets sounding: Then two Aldermen, L. Maior, Garter, Crammer, Duke of Norfolk with his Marshals Staffs, Duke of Suffolke, two Noblemen, bearing great standing Bowles for the Christening Guis: Then foure Noblemen bearing a Canopy, under which the Dutchesse of Norfolk, Godmother, bearing the Childe richly habited in a Mantle, &c. Traine borne by a Lady: Then followes the Marchionesse Dorset, the other Godmother, and Ladies. The Troope passe once about the Stage, and Garter speakes.

Gart. Heaven

From thy endlesse goodnesse, send prosperous life,
Long, and ever happy, to the high and Mighty
Princesse of England Elizabeth.

Flourish. Enter King and Guard.

Cran. And to your Royall Grace, & the good Queene,
My Noble Partners, and my selfe thus pray
All comfort, joy in this most gracious Lady,
Heaven ever laid up to make Parents happy,
May hourly fall upon ye.

King. Thanke you good Lord Archbishop:
What is her Name?

Cran. Elizabeth.

King. Stand up Lord,
With this Kisse, take my Blessing: God protect thee,
Into whose hand, I give thy Life.

Cran. Amen.

King. My Noble Gossips, y'have beene too Prodiggall,
I thanke ye heartily: So shall this Lady,
When she ha's so much English.

Cran. Let me speake Sir,
For Heaven now bids me; and the words I utter,
Let none thinke Flattery; for they'l finde 'em Truth.
This Royall Infant, Heaven still move about her;
Though in her Cradle; yet now promises
Vpon this Land a thousand thousand Blessings,
Which Time shall bring to ripenesse: She shall be,
(But few now living can behold that goodnesse)
A Patterne to all Princes living with her,
And all that shall succeed: Saba was never More covetous of Wisedome, and faire Vertue
Then this pure Soule shall be. All Princely Graces
That mould up a mighty Piece as this is,
With all the Vertues that attend the good,
Shall still be doubled on her. Truth shall Nurse her,

Holy

Holy and Heavenly thoughts still Counsell her:
 She shall be lov'd and fear'd. Her owne shall blesse her;
 Her Foes shake like a Field of beaten Corne,
 And hang their heads with sorrow:
 Good growes with her.
 In her dayes, Every Man shall eate in safety,
 Vnder his owne Vine what he plants; and sing
 The merry Songs of Peace to all his Neighbours,
 God shall be truly knowne, and those about her,
 From her shall read the perfect way of Honour,
 And by those claime their greatnesse; not by Blood.
 Nor shall this peace sleepe with her: But as when
 The Bird of Wonder dyes, the Mayden Phoenix,
 Her Ashes new create another Heyre,
 As great in admiration as her selfe.
 So shall she leave her Blessednesse to One,
 (When Heaven shal cal her from this clowd of darknes)
 Who, from the sacred Ashes of her Honour
 Shall Star-like rise, as great in fame as she was,
 And so stand fix'd. Peace, Plenty, Love, Truth, Terror,
 That were the Servants to this chosen Infant,
 Shall then be his, and like a Vine grow to him;
 Where ever the bright Sunne of Heaven shall shine,
 His Honor, and the greatnesse of his name,
 Shall be, and make new Nations. He shall flourish,

And like a Mountaine Cedar, reach his branches,
 To all the Plaines about him: Our Childrens Children
 Shall see this, and blesse Heaven.

King. Thou speakest wonders.

Cran. She shall be to the happinesse of England,
 An aged Princeesse; many dayes shall see her,
 And yet no day without a deed to Crowne it.
 Would I had knowne no more: But she must dye,
 She must, the Saints must have her; yet a Virgin,
 A most unspotted Lilly shall she passe
 To th'ground, and all the World shall mourne her.

King. O Lord Archbithop
 Thou hast made me now a man, never before
 This happy Child, did I get any thing.
 This Oracle of comfort, ha's so pleas'd me,
 That when I am in Heaven, I shall desire
 To see what this Child does, and praise my Maker,
 I thanke ye all. To you my good Lord Maior,
 And you good Brethren, I am much beholding:
 I have receiv'd much Honour by your presence,
 And ye shall find me thankfull. Leade the way Lords,
 Ye must all see the Queene, and she must thanke ye,
 She will be sicke els. This day, no man thinke
 'Has businesse at his house; for all shall stay:
 This little-One shall make it Holy-day.

Exeunt.

THE EPILOGVE.

TIs ten to one, this Play can never please
 All that are heere: Some come to take their case,
 And sleepe an Act or two; but those we feare
 W'have frighted with our Trumpets: so 'tis cleare, They'l say it's naught. Others to heare the City
 Abus'd extreemly, and to cry that's witty,
 Which we have not done neither; that I feare

All the expected good w'are like to heare,
 For this Play at this time, is onely in
 The mercifull construction of good women
 For such a one we shew'd em: If they smile,
 And say twill doe; I know w'it bin a while,
 All the best men are ours; for 'tis ill hap,
 If they hold, when their Ladies bid'em clap.

FINIS.

The Prologue:

IN Troy there lyes the Scane : from Jles of Greece
The Princes Orgillous, their high blood chaf'd,
Have to the Port of Athens sent their shippes
Fraught with the ministers and instruments
Of cruell Warre : Sixty and nine that wore
Their Crownets Regall, from th' Athenian Bay
Put forth toward Phrygia, and their vow is made
To ransacke Troy, within whose strong Immures
The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus Queene,
With wanton Paris sleepes, and that's the Quarrell.
To Tenedos they come,
And the deepe-drawing Barkes doe there disgorge
Their Warlike frautage : now on Dardan Plaines
The fresh and yet unbruised Greekes doe pitch
Their brave Pavillions. Priams six-gated City,
Dardan and Timbria, Helias, Chetas, Troien,
And Antenonidus with massy Staples
And corresponsive and fulfilling Bolts
Stirre up the Sonnes of Troy,
Now Expectation tickling skittish spirits,
On one and other side, Troian and Greeke,
Sets all on hazard. And hither am I come,
A Prologue arm'd, but not in confidence
Of Authors pen, or Actors voyce ; but suited
In like conditions, as our Argument ;
To tell you (faire Beholders) that our Play
Leapes ore the vaunt and firstlings of those broyles,
Beginning in the middle : starting thence away,
To what may be digested in a Play :
Like, or find fault, doe as your pleasures are,
Now good, or bad, 'tis but the chance of Warre.

THE TRAGEDIE OF Troilus and Cressida.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Pandarus and Troilus.

Troilus.

 All here my Varlet, Ile unarme againe.
Why should I warre without the wals of Troy
That finde such cruell battell here within?
Each Troian that is master of his heart,
Let him to field, Troilus alas hath none.

Pan. Will this geere ne're be mended? (strength,

Troy. The Greekes are strong, and skilfull to their Fierce to their skill, and to their fiercenesse Valiant:
But I am weaker then a womans teare:
Tamer then sleepe, fonder then ignorance;
Lesse valiant then the Virgin in the night,
And skillelesse as unpractis'd infancy.

Pan. Well, I have told you enough of this: For my part, Ile not meddle nor make no farther. He that will have a Cake out of the Wheate, must needs tarry the grinding.

Troy. Have I not tarried?

Pan. I the grinding; but you must tarry the boulting.

Troy. Have I not tarried?

Pan. I the boulting; but you must tarry the leav'ning.

Troy. Still have I tarried.

Pan. I, to the leavening: but heeres yet in the word hereafter, the Kneading, the making of the Cake, the heating of the Oven, and the Baking; nay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to burne your lips.

Troy. Patience her selfe, what Goddesse ere she be,
Doth lesser blench at sufferance, then I doe:

At Priams Royall Table I sit;
And when faire Cressid comes into my thoughts,
So (Traitor) then she comes, when she is thence.

Pan. Well:

She look'd yesternight fairer, then ever I saw her looke,
Or any woman else.

Troy. I was about to tell thee, when my heart,
As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twaine,
Least Hector, or my father should perceive me:
I have (as when the Sunne doth light a-scorne)
Buried this sigh, in wrinkle of a smile:
But sorrow, that is couch'd in seeming gladnesse,
Is like that mirth, Fate turnes to sudden sadnesse.

Pan. And her haire were not somewhat darker then
Helens, well goe to, there were no more comparison be-twene the Women. But for my part she is my Kinswoman, I would not (as they tearme it) praise it, but I would some-body had heard her talke yesterday as I did: I will not dispraise your sifter Cassandra's wit, but—

Troy. Oh Pandarus! I tell thee Pandarus;
When I doe tell thee, there my hopes lye drown'd:
Reply not in how many Fadomes deepe
They lye indrench'd. I tell thee, I am mad
In Cressids love. Thou answer'st she is Faire, Powr't in the open Vicer of my heart,
Her Eyes, her Haire, her Cheeke, her Gate, her Voyce, Handlest in thy discourse. O that her Hand
(In whose comparision, all whips are Inke)
Writing their owne reproach; to whose soft seizure,
The Cignets Downe is harsh, and spirit of Sense
Hard as the palme of Ploughman. This thou tel'st me;
As true thou tel'st me, when I say I love her:
But saying thus, instead of Oyle and Balme,
Thou lai'st in every gash that love hath given me,
The Knife that made it.

Pan. I speake no more then truth.

Troy. Thou do'st not speake so much.

Pan. Faith, Ile not meddle in't. Let her be as she is, if she be faire, 'tis the better for her: and she be not, she ha's the mends in her owne hands.

Troy. Good Pandarus; How now Pandarus?

Pan. I have had my Labour for my travell, ill thought on of her, and ill thought on of you: Gone betweene and betweene, but small thanks for my labour.

Troy. What art thou angry Pandarus? what with me?

Pan. Because she's Kinne to me, therefore she's not so faire as Helen, and she were not kin to me, she would be as faire on Friday, as Helen is on Sunday. But what care I? I care not and she were a Blacke-a-Moore, 'tis all one to me.

Troy. Say I she is not faire?

Pan. I doe not care whether you doe or no. She's a Foole to stay behind her Father: Let her to the Greekes, and so Ile tell her the next time I see her: for my part, Ile meddle nor make no more i'th'matter.

Troy. Pandarus?

Pan. Not I.

Troy. Sweet Pandarus.

Pan. Pray you speake no more to me, I will leave all as I found it, and there an end. Exit Pand.

Sound Alarm.

Tro. Peace you ungracious Clamors, peace rude sounds,
Fooles on both sides, Helen must needs be faire,
When with your bloud you daily paint her thus.

I cannot fight upon this Argument :
It is too starv'd a subject for my Sword,
But Pandarus : O gods ! How doe you plague me ?
I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar,
And he's as teacy to be woo'd to woe,
As she is stubborne, chaste, against all suite.
Tell me Apollo for thy Daphnes Love
What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we :
Her bed is India, there she lyes, a Pearle,
Betweene our Ilium, and where she resides
Let it be cald the mild and wandring flood,
Our selfe the Merchant, and this sayling Pandar,
Our doubtfull hope, our convoy and our Barke.

Alarum. Enter Aeneas.

Aeneas. How now Prince Troilus ?

Wherefore not afield ?

Troy. Because not there ; this womans answer forts,
For womanish it is to be from thence :

What newes Aeneas from the field to day ?

Aeneas. That Paris is returned home, and hurt.

Troy. By whom Aeneas ?

Aeneas. Troilus by Meneclaus.

Troy. Let Paris bleed, 'tis but a scar to scorne.

Paris is gor'd with Meneclaus horne. Alarum.

Aeneas. Hearke what good sport is out of Towne to day.

Troy. Better at home, if would I might were may ;
But to the sport abroad, are you bound thither ?

Aeneas. In all swift hast.

Troy. Come goe we then together.

Exeunt.

Enter Cressid and her man.

Cre. Who were those went by ?

Man. Queene Hecuba, and Hellen.

Cre. And whither goe they ?

Man. Vp to the Easterne Tower,
Whose height commands as subject all the vale,
To see the battell ; Hector whose patience,
Is a Vertue fixt, to day was mov'd :
He chides Andromache, and strooke his Armorer,
And like as there were husbandry in Warre
Before the Sunne rose, he was harvest light,
And to the field goe's he ; where every flower
Did as a Prophet weepe what it foresaw,
In Hectors wrath.

Cre. What was his cause of anger ?

Man. The noife goe's this ;
There is among the Greekes,
A Lord of Trojan blood, Nephew to Hector,
They call him Ajax.

Cre. Good ; and what of him ?

Man. They say he is a very man per se and stands alone.

Cre. So doe all men, unlesse they are drunke, sicke, or have no legges.

Man. This man Lady, hath rob'b many beasts of their particular additions, he is as valiant as the Lyon, churlish as the Beare, slow as the Elephant : a man into whom nature hath so crowded humors, that his valour is crusht into folly, his folly sauced with discretion : there is no man hath a vertue, that he hath not a glimpse of, nor a man an attaint, but he carries some staine of it. He is melancholy without cause and merry against the haire, he hath the joynts of every thing, but every thing so out of joynt, that he is a gowty Briareus, many hands and no use ; or purblind Argus, all eyes and no sight.

Cre. But how should this man that makes me smile, make Hector angry ?

Man. They say he yesterday cop'd Hector in the battell and strooke him down, the disdain & shame whereof, hath ever since kept Hector fasting and waking.

Enter Pandarus.

Cre. Who comes here ?

Man. Madam, your Vncle Pandarus.

Cre. Hectors a gallant man.

Man. As may be in the world Lady.

Pan. What's that ? what's that ?

Cre. Good morrow Vncle Pandarus.

Pan. Good morrow Cozen Cressid : what doe you talke of ? good morrow Alexander : how doe you Cozen ? when were you at Ilium ?

Cre. This morning Vncle.

Pan. What were you talking of when I came ? Was Hector arm'd and gone ere ye came to Ilium ? Helen was not up ? was she ?

Cre. Hector was gone, but Helen was not up.

Pan. E'ne so ; Hector was stirring early.

Cre. That were we talking of, and of his anger :

Pan. Was he angry ?

Cre. So he sayes here.

Pan. True he was so ; I know the cause too, heele lay about him to day I can tell them that, and there's Troilus will not come farre behind him, let them take heede of Troilus ; I can tell them that too.

Cre. What is he angry too ?

Pan. Who Troilus ?

Troilus is the better man of the two.

Cre. Oh Jupiter ; there's no comparifon.

Pan. What not betweene Troilus and Hector ? doe you know a man if you see him ?

Cre. I, if I ever saw him before and knew him.

Pan. Well I say Troilus is Troilus.

Cre. Then you say as I say,

For I am sure he is not Hector.

Pan. No nor Hector is not Troilus in some degrees.

Cre. 'Tis just, to each of them he is himselfe.

Pan. Himselfe ? alas poore Troilus I would he were.

Cre. So he is.

Pan. Condition I had gone bare-foote to India.

Cre. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himselfe ? no ? he's not himselfe, would a were himselfe ; well, the gods are above, time must friend or end : well Troilus well, I would my heart were in her boddy ; no, Hector is not a better man then Troilus.

Cre. Excuse me,

Pan. He is elder.

Cre. Pardon me, pardon me.

Pan. Th'others not come too't, you shall tell me another tale when th'others come too't : Hector shall not have his will this yeere.

Cre. He shall not neede it if he have his owne,

Pan. Nor his qualities.

Cre. No matter.

Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cre. I would not become him, his own's better.

Pan. You have no judgement Nece ; Hellen her selfe swore th'other day, that Troilus for a browne favour (for so 'tis I must confesse) not browne neither.

Cre. No, but browne.

Pan. Faith to say truth, browne and not browne.

Cre. To say the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She prais'd his complexion above Paris.

Cre. Why Paris hath colour inough.

Pan. So he has.

Cre. Then Troilus should have too much, if she prais'd him

him above, his complexion is higher then his, he having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion. I had as lieve Hellens golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper note.

Pan. I sweare to you,

I thinke Hellen loves him better then Paris.

Cre. Then she's a merry Greeke indeed.

Pan. Nay I am sure she does, she came to him th' other day into the compast window, and you know he has not past three or foure haire on his chinne.

Cre. Indeed a Tapsters Arithmetique may soone bring his particulars therein, to a totall.

Pand. Why he is very yong, and yet will he within three pound lift as much as his brother Hector.

Cre. Is he so young a man, and so old a lifter?

Pan. But to proove to you that Hellen loves him, she came and puts me her white hand to his cloven chin.

Cre. Iuno have mercy, how came it cloven?

Pan. Why, you know 'tis dimpled, I thinke his smyling becomes him better then any man in all Phrigia.

Cre. Oh he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Does he not?

Cre. Oh yes, and 'twere a clow'd in Autumne.

Pan. Why goe to then, but to prove to you that Hellen loves Troilus.

Cre. Troilus will stand to the Proove, if youle proove it so.

Pan. Troilus? why he esteemes her no more then I esteeme an addle egge.

Cre. If you love an addle egge as well as you love an idle head, you would eate chickens i'th' shell.

Pan. I cannot chuse but laugh to thinke how she tickled his chin, indeed she has a marvel's white hand I must needs confesse.

Cre. Without the racke.

Pan. And she takes upon her to spye a white haire on his chinne.

Cre. Alas poore chin? many a wart is richer.

Pand. But there was such laughing, Queene Hecuba laught that her eyes ran ore.

Cre. With Milstones.

Pan. And Cassandra laught.

Cre. But there was more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes: did her eyes run ore too?

Pan. And Hector laught.

Cre. At what was all this laughing?

Pand. Marry at the white haire that Hellen spied on Troilus chin.

Cre. And t'had beene a greene haire, I should have laught too.

Pand. They laught not so much at the haire, as at his pretty answer.

Cre. What was his answer?

Pan. Quoth she, here's but two and fifty haire on your chinne; and one of them is white.

Cre. This is her question.

Pand. That's true, make no question of that: two and fifty haire quoth hee, and one white, that white haire is my Father, and all the rest are his Sonnes. Iupiter quoth she, which of these haire is Paris my husband? The forked one quoth he, pluckt out and give it him: but there was such laughing, and Hellen so blusht, and Paris so chaft, and all the rest so laught, that it past.

Cre. So let it now, For is has beene a great wile going by.

Pan. Well Cozen, I told you a thing yesterday, thinke on't.

Cre. So I doe.

Pand. Ile be sworne 'tis true, he will weepe you an 'twere a man borne in Aprill.

Sound a retreat.

Cre. And Ile spring up in his teares, an 'twere a nettle against May.

Pan. Harke they are comming from the field, shall we stand up here and see them, as they passe toward Illium? good Neece doe, sweet Neece Cressida.

Cre. At your pleasure.

Pan. Heere, heere, here's an excellent place, here we may see most bravely, Ile tell you them all by their names, as they passe by, but marke Troilus above the rest.

Enter Aeneas.

Cre. Speake not so low'd.

Pan. That's Aeneas, is not that a brave man, he's one of the flowers of Troy I can tell you, but marke Troilus, you shall see anon.

Cre. Who's that? Enter Antenor.

Pan. That's Antenor, he has a shrew'd wit I can tell you, and he's a man good inough, he's one o'th' soundest judgement in Troy whosoever, and a proper man of perlon: when comes Troilus? Ile shew you Troilus anon, if he see me, you shall see him nod at me.

Cre. Will he give you the nod?

Pan. You shall see.

Cre. If he doe, the rich shall have more.

Enter Hector.

Pan. That's Hector, that, that, looke you, that there's a fellow. Goe thy way Hector, there's a brave man Neece, O brave Hector! Looke how he looks? there's a countenance; ist not a brave man?

Cre. O brave man!

Pan. Is a not? It does a mans heart good, looke you what hackes are on his Helmet, looke you yonder, doe you see? Looke you there? There's no jesting, laying on, tak't off, who will, as they say, there be hackes.

Cre. Be those with swords?

Enter Paris.

Pan. Swords, any thing he cares not, and the divell, come to him, it's all one, by Godslid it does ones heart good. Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris: looke yee yonder Neece, ist not a gallant man too, ist not? Why this is brave now: who said he came hurt home to day? He's not hurt, why this will doe Hellens heart good now, ha? Would I could see Troilus now, you shall Troilus anon.

Cre. Whose that?

Enter Hellenus.

Pan. That's Hellenus, I marvell where Troilus is, that's Hellenus, I thinke he went not forth to day: that's Hellenus.

Cre. Can Hellenus fight Vncle?

Pan. Hellenus no: yes heele fight indifferent well, I marvell where Troilus; harke, doe you not heare the people cry Troilus? Hellenus is a Priest.

Cre. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

Enter Troilus.

Pan. Where? Yonder? That's Dioxophobus. 'Tis Troilus! There's a man Neece, hem; Brave Troilus the Prince of Chivalry.

Cre. Peace, for shame peace.

Pand. Marke him, note him: O brave Troilus: looke well upon him Neece, looke you how his Sword is blou-died, and his Helme more hackt then Hectors, and how he looks!

lookes, and how he goes, O admirable youth! he ne're saw three and twenty. Goe thy way Troilus, goe thy way, had I a sister were a Grace, or a daughter a Goddesse, he should take his choyce. O admirable man! Paris?
Paris is durt to him, and I warrant, Hellen to change, would give money to boot.

Enter common Souldiers.

Cres. Heere come more.

Pan. Asles, fooles, dolts, chaffe and bran, chaffe and bran; porridge after meat. I could live and dye i'th'eyes of Troilus. Ne're looke, ne're looke; the Eagles are gone, Crows and Dawes, Crows and Dawes: I had rather be such a man as Troilus, then Agamemnon, and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greekes Achilles, a better, man then Troilus.

Pan. Achilles? a Dray-man, a Porter, a very Camell.

Cres. Well, well.

Pan. Well, well? Why have you any discretion? have you any eyes? Doe you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, vertue, youth, liberality, and so forth: the Spice, and salt that seasons a man?

Cres. I, a minc'd man, and then to be bak'd with no Date in the pye, for then the mans dates out.

Pan. You are such another woman, one knowes not at what ward you lye.

Cres. Vpon my backe, to defend my belly; vpon my wit, to defend my wiles; vpon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty; my Maske, to defend my beauty, and you to defend all these: and at all these wards I lye, at a thousand warches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.

Cres. Nay Ile watch you for that, and that's one of the cheefest of them too; if I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for telling how I tooke the blow, unlesse it twell past hiding, and then is past watching.

Enter Boy.

Pan. Your are such another.

Boy. Sir, my Lord would instantly speake with you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your owne house.

Pan. Good Boy tell him I come, I doubt he be hurt.
Fare ye well good Necce.

Cres. Adieu Vnkle.

Pan. Ile be with you Necce by and by.

Cres. To bring Vnkle.

Pan. I, a token from Troilus.

Cres. By the same token, you are a Bawd. Exit Pan.
Words, vovues, gifts, teares, and loves full sacrifice,
He offers in anothers enterprise:

But more in Troilus thousand fold I see,
Then in the glasse of Pandar's praise may be;
Yet hold I off. Women are Angels wooing,
Things won are done, the soules joy lyes in dooing:
That she belov'd, knowes nought, that knowes not this:
Men prize the thing ungain'd, more then it is.

That she was never yet, that ever knew
Love goe so sweet, as when desire did sue:
Therefore this maxime out of love I teach;
"Achievement, is command: ungain'd, beseech."
That though my hearts Contents firme love doth beare,
Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appeare. Exit.

Sonet. Enter Agamemnon, Nestor, Ulysses, Diomedes, Menelaus, with others.

Agam. Princes:

What griefe hath set the Iaundies on your cheekes?
The ample proposition that hopes makes
In all designes, begun on earth below
Fayles in the promist largeness: cheekes and disasters
Grow in the veines of actions highest rear'd.
As knots by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the sound Pine, and diverts his Graine
Tortive and errant from his course of growth.
Nor Princes, is it matter new to us,
That we come short of our suppose so farre,
That after seven yeares siege, yet Troy walles stand,
Sith every action that hath gone before,
Whereof we have Record, triall did draw
Bias and thwart, not answering the ayme.
And that unbodied figure of the thought
That gave't surmised shape. Why then (you Princes)
Doe you with cheekes abash'd, behold our workes,
And thinke them shame, which are (indeed) nought else
But the protractive trials of great Iove,
To finde persiftive constancy in men?
The fineness of which Mettall is not found
In Fortunes love: for then, the Bold and Coward,
The Wise and foole, the Artist, and un-read,
The hard and soft, seeme all afin'd, and kin.
But in the Wind and Tempest of her frowne,
Distinction with a lowd and powrefull fan,
Puffing at all, winnowes the light away;
And what hath masse, or matter by it selfe,
Lies rich in Vertue, and unmingled.

Nest. With due Oblevance of thy godly feat,
Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply
Thy lateit words.

In the reproofe of Chance,
Lies the true proofe of men: The Sea being smooth,
How many shallow bauble Boates dare saile
Vpon her patient brest, making their way
With those of Noble bulke?
But let the Russian Boreas once enrage
The gentle Thetis, and anon behold
The strong ribb'd Barke through liquid mountains cut's
Bounding betweene the two moyft Elements
Like Persus Horse. Where's then the sawcy Boate, Whose weake untimber'd sides but even now
Co-rival'd Greatnesse? Either to harbour fled,
Or made a Toste for Neptune. Even so,
Doth valours shew, and valours worth divide
In stormes of Fortune.
For, in her ray and brightnesse,
The Heard hath more annoyance by the Brize
Then by the Tyger: But, when the splitting winde
Makes flexible the knees of knotted Oakes,
And flies fled under shade, why then
The thing of Courage,
As rowz'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize,
And with an accent tun'd in selfe-same key,
Retypes to chiding Fortune.

Uly. Agamemnon.

Thou great Commander, Nerve, and Bone of Greece,
Heart of our Numbers, soule, and onely spirit,
In whom the tempers, and the mindes of all
Should be shut up; Heare what Ulysses speakes,
Besides th'applause and approbation
The which (most mighty) for thy place and may,

And thou most reverend for thy stretcht-out life,
I give to both your speeches : which were such,
As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in Brasse : and such againe
As venerable Nestor (hatch'd in Silver)
Should with a bond of ayre, strong as the Axletree
On which the Heavens ride, knit all Greekes eares
To his experienc'd tongue : yet let it please both (Thou Great, and Wise) to heare Vlysses speake.

Aga. Speake Prince of Ithaca, and be't of lesse expect ;
That matter needlesse of importlesse burthren
Divide thy lips : then we are confident
When ranke Thersites opens his Masticke jawes,
We shall heare Musicke, Wit, and Oracle.

Vlyss. Troy yet upon his basis had beene downe,
And the great Hectors sword had lack'd a Master
But for these instances.
The specialty of Rule hath beene neglected ;
And looke how many Grecian Tents do stand
Hollow upon this Plaine, so many hollow Factions.
When that the Generall is not like the Hive,
To whom the Forragers shall all repaire,
What Hony is expected ? Degree being vizarded,
Th'unworthiest shewes as fairely in the Maske.
The Heavens themselves, the Planets, and this Center,
Observe degree, priority, and place,
Insisture, course, proportion, reason, forme,
Office, and custome, in all line of Order :
And therefore is the glorious Planet Sol
In noble eminence, enthron'd and sphear'd
Amidst the other, whose med'cinable eye
Corrects the ill Aspects of Planets evill,
And posits like the Command'ment of a King,
Sans checke, to good and bad. But when the Planets
In evill mixture to disorder wander,
What Plagues, and what portents, what mutiny ?
What raging of the Sea ? shaking of Earth ?
Commotion in the Windes ? Frights, changes, horrors,
Divert, and cracke, rend and deracinate
The unity, and married calme of States
Quite from their fixure ? O, when degree is shak'd,
(Which is the Ladder to all high designs)
The enterprize is sicke. How could Communities,
Degrees in Schooles, and brother-hoods in Cities,
Peacefull Commerce from dividable shores,
The primogenitive, and due of Byrth,
Prerogative of Age, Crownes, Scepters, Lawrels,
(But by degree) stand in Authentique place ?
Take but degree away, un-tune that string,
And hearke what Discord followes : each thing meets
In meere oppugnancy. The bounded Waters,
Should lift their bosomes higher then the Shores,
And make a soppe of all this solid Globe :
Strength should be Lord of imbecility,
And the rude Sonne should strike his father dead :
Force should be right, or rather, right and wrong,
(Betweene whose endlesse jarre, justice resides)
Should loose their names, and so should justice too.
Then every thing includes it selfe in Power,
Power into Will, Will into Appetite,
And Appetite (an univerfall Wolfe,
So doubly seconded with Will, and Power)
Must make perforce an univerfall prey,
And last, eat up himselfe.
Great Agamemnon ;
This Chaos, when degree is suffocate,

Followes the choaking :

And this neglect of Degree, is it
That by a pace goes backward in a purpose
It hath to climbe. The Generall's disdain'd
By him one step below ; he, by the next,
That next, by him beneath : so every step
Exempl'd by the first pace that is sicke
Of his Superiour, growes to an envious Feaver
Of pale, and bloodlesse Emulation.
And 'tis this Feaver that keepes Troy on foote,
Not her owne sinewes. To end a tale of length,
Troy in our weakenesse lives, not in her strength.

Nest. Most wisely hath Vlysses here discover'd
The Feaver, whereof all our power is sicke.

Aga. The Nature of the sicknesse found (Vlysses)
What is the remedy ?

Vlyss. The great Achilles, whom Opinion crownes,
The linew, and the fore-hand of our Hoste,
Having his eare full of his airy Fame,
Growes dainty of his worth, and in his Tent
Lyes mocking our designs. With him, Patroclus, Vpon a lazy Bed, the live-long day
Breake scurrill jests,
And with ridiculous and aukward action,
(Which Slanderer, he imitation call's)
He Pageants us. Sometime great Agamemnon,
Thy topleesse deputation he puts on ;
And like a strutting Player, whose conceit
Lies in his Ham-string, and doth thinke it rich
To heare the wooden Dialogue and found
Twixt his stretcht footing, and the Scaffoldage, (Such to-be-pitted, and ore-rested seeming
He acts thy Greatnesse in :) and when he speakes,
'Tis like a Chime a mending. With tearmes unsquard,
Which from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Wound seeme Hyperboles. At this fustie stuffe,
The large Achilles (on his prest-bed lolling)
From his deepe Chest, laughes out a lowd applause, Cries excellent, 'tis Agamemnon just.
Now play me Nestor ; hum, and stroke thy beard
As he, being drest to some Oration,
That's done, as neere as the extreamest ends
Of paralels ; as like, as Vulcan and his wife,
Yet good Achilles still cryes excellent,
'Tis Nestor right. Now play him (me) Patroclus,
Arming to answer in a night-Alarme,
And then (forsooth) the faint defects of Age
Must be the Scene of myrth, to cough, and spit,
And with a paltie fumbling on his Gorget,
Shake in and out the Rivet : and at this sport
Sir Valour dies ; cries, O enough Patroclus,
Or, give me ribs of Steele, I shall split all
In pleasure of my spleene. And in this fashion,
All our abilityes, gifts, natures, shapes,
Severalls and generalls of grace exact,
Archievements, plots, orders, preventions,
Excitements to the field, or speech for truce,
Successe or losse, what is, or is not, serves
As stuffe for these two, to make paradoxes.

Nest. And in the imitation of these twaine,
Who (as Vlysses sayes) Opinion crownes
With an Imperiall voyce, many are infect :
Ajax is growne selfe-will'd, and beares his head
In such a reyne, in full as proud a place
As broad Achilles, and keepes his Tent like him ;
Makes factious Feasts, railes on our state of Warre

Bold

Bold as an Oracle, and sets Thersites

A slave (whose Gall coines slanders like a Mint,) To match us in comparisons with dirt, To weaken and discredit our exposure, How ranke soever rounded in with danger.

Uly. They take our Policy, and call it Cowardice, Count Wisedome as no member of the Warre, Fore-stall prescience, and esteeme no acte But that of hand: The still and mentall parts, That doe contrive how many hands shall strike When fittest calls them on, and know by measure Of their observant toyle, the Enemies waight, Why this hath not a fingers dignity: They call this Bed-work, Mapp'ry, Closet-Warre: So that the Ramme that batters downe the wall, For the great swing and rudenesse of his poize, They place before his hand that made the Engine, Or those that with the finenesse of their soules, By Reason guide his execution.

Nest. Let this be granted, and Achilles horse Makes many Thetis sonnes.

Tucket

Aga. What Trumpet? Looke Menelaus.

Men. From Troy. Enter Aeneas.

Aga. What would you fore our Tent?

Ane. Is this great Agamemnons Tent, I pray you?

Aga. Even this.

Ane. May one that is a Herald, and a Prince, Doe a faire message to his Kingly cares?

Aga. With surety stronger then Achilles arme, Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one voyce Call Agamemnon Head and Generall.

Ane. Faire leave, and large security. How may A stranger to those most Imperiall lookes, Know them from eyes of other Mortals?

Aga. How?

Ane. I: I aske, that I might waken reverence, And on the cheek be ready with a blush Modest as morning, when the coldly eyes The youthfull Phœbus:

Which is that God in office guiding men?

Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon.

Aga. This Trojan scornes us, or the men of Troy Are ceremonious Courtiers.

Ane. Courtiers as free, as debonnaire; unarm'd, As bending Angels: that's their Fame, in peace: But when they would seeme Souldiers, they have galls, Good armes, strong joynts, true swords, and loves accord Nothing so full of heart. But peace Aeneas,

Peace Trojan, lay thy finger on thy lips, The worthinesse of praise distaines his worth:

If that he prais'd himselfe, bring the praise forth,

What the repining enemy commends, That breath fame blowes, that praise sole pure transcends

Aga. Sir, you of Troy, call you your selfe Aeneas?

Ane. I Greeke, that is my name.

Aga. What's your affayre I pray you?

Ane. Sir pardon, 'tis for Agamemnons cares.

Aga. He heares nought privately

That comes from Troy.

Ane. Nor I from Troy come not to whisper him,

I bring a Trumpet to awake his eare,

To set his sence on the attentive bent,

And then to speake.

Aga. Speake frankly as the winde,

It is not Agamemnons sleeping houre;

That thou shalt know Trojan he is awake,

He tels thee so himselfe.

Ane. Trumpet blow loud.

Send thy brasse voyce through all these lazy Tents, And every Greeke of mettle, let him know, What Troy meanes fairely; shall be spoke aloud.

The Trumpets sound.

We have great Agamemnon, heere in Troy, A Prince call'd Hector, Priam is his Father: Who in this dull and long-continew'd Truce Is rusty growne. He bad me take a Trumpet, And to this purpose speake: Kings, Princes, Lords, If there be one among'st the fayr't of Greece, That holds his Honor higher then his ease, That seekes his praise, more then he feares his perill, That knowes his Valour, and knowes not his feare, That loves his Mistris more then in confession, (With truant vowes to her owne lips he loves) And dare avow her Beauty, and her Worth, In other armes then hers: to him this Challenge. Hector, in view of Troyans, and of Greekes, Shall make it good, or doe his best to doe it. He hath a Lady, wiser, fairer, truer, Then ever Greeke did compasse in his armes, And will to morrow with his Trumpet call, Midway betweene your Tents, and walles of Troy, To rowze a Grecian that is true in love. If any come, Hector shall honour him: If none, he'll say in Troy when he retyres, The Grecian Dames are sun-burnt, and not worth The splinter of a Lance: Even so much.

Aga. This shall be told our Lovers, Lord Aeneas.

If none of them have soule in such a kind, We left them all at home: But we are Souldiers, And may that Souldier a meere recreant prove, That meanes not, hath not, or is not in love: If then one is, or hath, or meanes to be, That one meets Hector, if none, Ile be he.

Nes. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man When Hectors Grandfire suckt; he is old now, But if there be not in our Grecian mould, One Noble man, that hath one sparke of fire To answer for his Love; tell him from me, Ile hide my Silver beard in a Gold Beaver, And in my Vantbrace put this wither'd browne, And meeting him, will tell him, that my Lady Was fayrer then his Grandame, and as chaste As may be in the world: his youth in flood, Ile pawne this truth with my three drops of blood.

Ane. Now heavens forbid such scarcity of youth.

Vlis. Amen.

Aga. Faire Lord Aeneas,

Let me touch your hand:

To our Pavillion shall I leade you first:

Achilles shall have word of this intent,

So shall each Lord of Greece from Tent to Tent;

Your selfe shall Feast with us before you goe,

And finde the welcome of a Noble Foe.

Exeunt.

Moment Vlis, and Nestor.

Vlis. Nestor.

Nes. What sayes Vlysses?

Vlis. I have a young conception in my braine, Be you my time to bring it to some shape.

Nes. What is't?

Vlis. This 'tis:

Blunt wedges rive hard knots: the seeded Pride That hath to this maturity blowne up

In ranke Achilles, must or now be crompt,
Or (shedding) breed a Nursery of like evill
To over-bulke usall.

Nest. Well, and how?

Vlis. This challenge that the gallant Hector sends,
How ever it is spred in generall name,
Relates in purpose onely to Achilles.

Nest. The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,
Whose grossenesse little charracters summe up,
And in the publication make no straine,
But that Achilles, were his braine as barren
As bankes of Lybia, though (Apollo knowes)
'Tis dry enough, will with great speede of judgement,
I, with celerity, finde Hectors purpose
Pointing on him.

Vlis. And wake him to the answer, thinke you?

Nest. Yes, 'tis most meet; whom may you else oppose
That can from Hector bring his Honor off,
If not Achilles; though't be a sportfull Combate,
Yet in this triall, much opinion dwels.
For heere the Troyans taste our deer't repute
With their fin't Pallate: and trust to me Vlysses,
Our imputation shall be oddely poiz'd
In this wilde action. For the successe
(Although particular) shall give a scantling
Of good or bad, unto the Generall:
And in such Indexes, although small prickes
To their subsequent Volumes, there is seene
The baby figure of the Gyant-masse
Of things to come at large. It is suppos'd,
He that meets Hector, issues from our choyse;
And choyse being mutuall acte of all our soules,
Makes Merit her election, and doth boyle
As 'twere, from forth us all: a man distill'd
Out of our Vertues; who miscarrying,
What heart from hence receives the cong'ring part
To steale a strong opinion to themselves
Which entertain'd, Limbes are his instruments,
In no lesse working, then are Swords and Bowes
Directive by the Limbes.

Vlis. Give pardon to my speech:
Therefore 'tis meet, Achilles meet not Hector:
Let us (like Merchants) shew our fowlest Wares,
And thinke perchance they'll sell: if not,
The luster of the better yet to shew,
Shall shew the better. Doe not consent,
That ever Hector and Achilles meete:
For both our Honour, and our Shame in this,
Are dogg'd with two strange Followers.

Nest. I see them not with my old eyes: what are they?

Vlis. What glory our Achilles shares from Hector,
(Were he not proud) we all should weare with him:
But he already is too insolent,
And we were better parch in Affricke Sunne,
Then in the pride and salt scorne of his eyes,
Should he scape Hector faire. If he were foyld,
Why then we did our maine opinion crush
In taint of our best man. No, make a Lott'ry,
And by device let blockish Ajax draw
The sort to fight with Hector: Among our selves,
Give him allowance as the worthier man,
For that will physicke the great Myrmidon
Who broyles in lowd applause, and make him fall
His Crest, that prouder then blew Iris bends.
If the dull brainlesse Ajax come safe off,
Wee'll dresse him up in voyces: if he faile,

Yet goe we under our opinion still,
That we have better men. But hit or misse,
Our projects life this shape of sence assumes,
Ajax imploy'd, pluckes downe Achilles Plumes.

Nest. Now Vlysses, I begin to relish thy advice,
And I will give a taste of it forthwith
To Agamemnon, goe we to him straight;
Two Curses shall tame each other, Pride alone
Must tarre the Mastiffes on, as 'twere their bone. Exeunt.

Enter Ajax, and Therisites.

Aja. Therisites?

Ther. Agamemnon, how if he had Biles (full) all over generally.

Aja. Therisites?

Ther. And those Byles did runne, say so; did not the Generall run, were not that a botchy core?

Aja. Dogge.

Ther. Then there would come some matter from him:
I see none now.

Aja. Thou Bitch-Wolfes-Sonne, canst thou not heare?
Feele then. Strikes him.

Ther. The plague of Greece upon thee thou Mungrell beefe-witted Lord.

Aja. Speake then you whinid't leavenspeake, I will beate thee into handsonnesse.

Ther. I shall sooner raile thee into wit and holinesse:
but I thinke thy horse will sooner con an Oration, then thou learne a prayer without booke: Thou canst strikes, canst thou? A red Murren o'th thy lades trickes.

Aju. Toads stoole, learne me the Proclamation.

Ther. Doe't thou thinke I have no sence thou strik't

Aja. The Proclamation. (me thus?)

Ther. Thou art proclam'd a foole, I thinke.

Aja. Doe not Porpentine, doe not: my fingers itch.

Ther. I would thou didst itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee, I would make thee the lothsom't scab in Greece.

Aja. I say the Proclamation.

Ther. Thou grumblest and railest every houre on Achilles, and thou art as full of envy at his greatnesse, as Caberus is at Proserpina's beauty. I, that thou bark't at him.

Aja. Mistresse Therisites.

Ther. Thou should'st strike him.

Aja. Coblofe.

Ther. He would pun thee into shivers with his fist, as a Sailor breakes a bisket.

Aja. You horson Curre. Ther. Doe, doe.

Aja. Thou stoole for a Witch.

Ther. I, doe, doe, thou sodden-witted Lord: thou hast no more braine then I have in mine elbowes: An Asinico may tutor thee. Thou scurvey valiant Assie, thou art here but to thresh Troyans, and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit, like a Barbarian slave. If thou use to beat me, I will begin at thy heele, and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels thou.

Aja. You dogge.

Ther. You scurvey Lord.

Aja. You Curre.

Ther. Mars his Ideot: do rudenesse, doe Camell, do, do.

Enter Achilles, and Patroclus.

Achil. Why how now Ajax? wherefore do you this?
How now Therisites? what's the matter man?

Ther. You see him there, doe you?

Achil. I, what's the matter.

Ther. Nay looke upon him.

Achil. So I doe: what's the matter?

Ther.

Ther. Nay but regard him well.

Achil. Well, why I doe so.

Ther. But yet you looke not well upon him: for who some ever you take him to be, he is Ajax.

Achil. I know that foole.

Ther. I, but that foole knowes not himselfe.

Ajax. Therefore I beate thee.

Ther. Lo, lo, lo, lo, what modicums of wit he utters: his evasions have eares thus long. I have bobb'd his Braine more then he has beate my bones: I will buy nine Sparrowes for a peny, and his Piometer is not worth the ninth part of a Sparrow. This Lord (Achilles) Ajax who weares his wit in his belly, and his guttes in his head, Ile tell you what I say of him.

Achil. What?

Ther. I say this Ajax——

Achil. Nay good Ajax.

Ther. Has not so much wit.——

Achil. Nay I must hold you.

Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's Needle, for whom he comes to fight.

Achil. Peace foole.

Ther. I would have peace and quietnesse, but the foole will not: he there, that he, looke you there.

Ajax. O thou damn'd Curre, I shall——

Achil. Will you set you wit to a Fooles?

Ther. No I warrant you, for a fooles will shame it.

Pat. Good words Thersites.

Achil. What's the quarrell?

Ajax. I bad thee vile Owle, goe learne me the tenure of the Proclamation, and he railes upon me.

Ther. I serve thee not.

Ajax. Well, goe to, goe to.

Ther. I serve heere voluntary.

Achil. Your last service was sufferance, 'twas not voluntary, no man is beaten voluntary: Ajax was heere the voluntary, and you as under an Impresse.

Ther. Ene so, a great deale of your wit too lyes in your sinnewes, or else there be Liars: Hector shall have a great catch, if he knocke out either of your braines, he were as good cracke a fusty nut with no kernell.

Achil. What with me too Thersites?

Ther. There's Ulysses, and old Nestor, whose Wit was mouldy ere their Grandfirs had nailes on their toes, yoke you like draft-Oxen, and make you plough up the waire.

Achil. What? what?

Ther. Yes good sooth, to Achilles, to Ajax, to——

Ajax. I shall cut out your tongue.

Ther. 'Tis no matter, I shall speake as much as thou afterwards.

Pat. No more words Thersites.

Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles Brooch bids me, shall I?

Achil. There's for you Patroclus.

Ther. I will see you hang'd like Clotpoles ere I come any more to your Tents; I will keepe where there is wit flurring, and leave the faction of fooles. Exit.

Pat. A good riddance.

Achil. Marry this Sir is proclaim'd through al our host,
That Hector by the fift houre of the Sunne,
Will with a Trumpet, 'twixt our Tents and Troy
Tomorrow morning call some Knight to Armes,
That hath a stomacke, and such a one that dare
Maintaine I know not what: 'tis trash. Farewell.

Ajax. Farewell? who shall answer him?

Achil. I know not, 'tis put to Lottry: otherwise

He knew his man.

Aja. O meaning you, I will goe learne more of it. Exit.

Enter Priam, Hector, Troilus, Paris, and Helenus.

Pri. After so many houres, lives, speeches spent,
Thus once againe sayes Nestor from the Greekes,
Deliver Helen, and all damage else
(As honour, losse of time, travaile, expence,
Wounds, friends, and what else deere that is consum'd
In not digestion of this cormorant Warre)
Shall be stroke off. Hector, what say you too't.

Hect. Though no man lesser feares the Greekes then I,
As farre as touches my particular: yet dread Priam,
There is no Lady of more softer bowels,
More spungy, to sucke in the sense of feare,
More ready to cry out, who knowes what followes
Then Hector is: the wound of peace is surety,
Surety secure: but modest doubt is cal'd
The Beacon of the wise: the tent that searches
To'th' bottome of the worst. Let Helen goe.
Since the first sword was drawne about this question,
Every tythe soule 'mongst many thousand dismes,
Hath beene as deere as Hellen: I meane of ours:
If we have lost so many tenths of ours
To guard a thing not ours, nor worth to us
(Had it our name) the valew of one ten;
What merit's in that reason which denies
The yeelding of her up?

Troy. Fye, fie, my Brother;
Weigh you the worth and honour of a King
(So great as our dread Father) in a Scale
Of common Ounces? Will you with Counters summe
The past proportion of his infinite?
And buckle in a waste most fathomlesse,
With spannes and inches so diminutive,
As feares and reasons? Fye for godly shame?

Hel. No marvell though you bite so sharpe at reasons,
You are empty of them, should not our father
Beare the great sway of his affaires with reasons,
Because your speech hath none that tells him so?

Troy. You are for dreames and slumbers brother Priest,
You furre your gloves with reason: here are your reasons
You know an enemy intends you harme.
You know, a sword imploy'd is perillous,
And reason flies the object of all harme,
Who marvels then when Helenus beholds
A Grecian and his sword, if he doe set
The very wings of reason to his heeles:
Or like a Starre disorb'd. Nay, if we talke of reason,
And flye like chidden Mercury from Iove,
Let's shut our gates and sleepe: Manhood and Honor
Shold have hard hearts, would they but fat their thoughts
With this cramm'd reason: reason and respect,
Makes Lovers pale, and lustyhood deject.

Hect. Brother, she is not worth
What she doth cost the holding.

Troy. What's aught, but as 'tis valew'd?

Hect. But value dwels not in particular will,
It holds his estimate and dignity
As well, wherein 'tis precious of it selfe,
As in the prizer: 'Tis made Idolatry,
To make the service greater then the god,
And the will dotes that is inclineable
To what infectiously it selfe affects,
Without some image of th'affected merit.

Troy. I take to day a Wife, and my election
Is led on in the conduct of my will;

My will enkindled by mine eyes and eares,
Two traded Pylots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of Will, and Iudgement. How may I avoyde
(Although my will distaste what it elected)
The Wife I chose, there can be no evasion
To blench from this, and to stand firme by honour.
We turne not backe the Silkes upon the Merchant
When we have spoyl'd them; nor the remainder Viands
We doe not throw in unrespective place,
Because we now ate full. It was thought meete
Paris should doe some vengeance on the Greekes;
Your breath of full consent bellied his Sailes,
The Seas and Windes (old Wranglers) tooke a Truce,
And did him service; he touch'd the Ports desir'd,
And for an old Aunt whom the Greekes held Captive,
He brought a Grecian Queen, whose youth & freshnesse
Wrinkles Apollos, and makes stale the morning.
Why keepe we her? the Greecians keepe our Aunt:
Is she worth keeping? Why she is a Pearle,
Whose price hath launch'd above a thousand Ships,
And turn'd Crown'd Kings to Merchants.
If you'll avouch, 'twas wisedome Paris went,
(As you must needs, for you all cride, Go, goe:)
If you'll confesse, he brought home Noble prize,
(As you must needs, for you all clapt your hands)
And cride inestimable; why doe you now
The issue of your proper Wisedomes rate,
And doe a deed that Fortune never did?
Begger the estimation which you priz'd,
Richer when Sea and Land? O Theft most base!
That we have stolne what we doe feare to keepe.
But Theeves unworthy of a thing so stolne,
That in their Country did them that disgrace,
We feare to warrant in our Native place.

Enter Cassandra with her haire about her eares.

Cas. Cry Troyans, cry.

Priam. What noyse? what shreeke is this?

Troy. 'Tis our mad sister, I doe know her voyce.

Cas. Cry Troyans.

Hec. It is Cassandra.

Cas. Cry Troyans cry; lend me ten thousand eyes;
And I will fill them with Prophetick teares.

Hec. Peace sister, peace.

Cas. Virgins, and Boyes; mid-age and wrinkled old,
Soft infancy, that nothing can but cry,
Adde to my clamour: let us pay betimes
A moiety of that masse of moane to come.
Cry Troyans cry, practise your eyes with teares,
Troy must not be, nor goodly Ilion stand,
Our fire-brand Brother Paris burnes us all.
Cry Troyans cry, a Helen and a woe;
Cry, cry, Troy burnes, or else let Helen goe. Exit.

Hec. Now youthfull Troilus, doe not these hie strains
Of divination in our Sister, worke
Some touches of remorse? Or is your bloud
So madly hot, that no discourse of reason,
Nor feare of bad successe in a bad cause,
Can qualifie the same?

Troy. Why brother Hector,
We may not thinke the justnesse of each acte
Such, and no other then event doth forme it,
Nor once deject the courage of our minds;
Because Cassandra's mad, her brainicke raptures
Cannot distaste the goodnesse of a quarrell,

Which hath our severall Honours all engag'd
To make it gracious. For my private part,
I am no more touch'd, then all Priams sonnes,
And love forbid there should be done among'ft us
Such things as might offend the weakeft spleene;
To fight for, and maintaine.

Par. Else might the world convince of levity,
As well my under-takings as your counsels:
But I attest the gods, your full consent
Gave wings to my propension, and cut off
All feares attending on to dire a project.
For what (alas) can these my single armes?
What propugnation is in one mans valour
To stand the push and enmity of those
This quarrell would excite? Yet I protest,
Were I alone to passe the difficulties,
And had as ample power, as I have will,
Paris should ne're retract what he hath done,
Nor faint in the pursuite.

Pri. Paris, you speake
Like one be-fotted on your sweet delights;
You have the Hony still, but these the Gall,
So to be valiant, is no praise at all.

Par. Sir, I propose not meere to my selfe,
The pleasures such a beauty brings with it:
But I would have the soyle of her faire Rape
Wip'd off in honourable keeping her.
What Treason were it to the ransack'd Queene,
Disgrace to your great worths, and shame to me,
Now to deliver her possession up
On termes of base compulsion? Can it be,
That so degenerate a straine as this,
Should once set foot in your generous bosomes?
There not the meanest spirit on our party,
Without a heart to dare, or sword to draw,
When Helen is detended: nor none so Noble,
Whose life were ill bestow'd, or death unfam'd,
Where Helen is the subject. Then (I say)
Well may we fight for her, whom we know well,
The worlds large spaces cannot parallell:

Hec. Paris and Troilus, you have both said well:
And on the cause and question now in hand,
Have glaz'd, but superficially; not much
Unlike young men, whom Aristotle thought
Unfit to heare Morall Philosophy,
The Reasons you alledge, doe more conduce
To the hot passion of distemp' red blood,
Then to make up a free determination
'Twixt right and wrong: For pleasure, and revenge,
Have eares more deafe then Adders, to the voyce
Of any true decision. Nature craves
All dues be rendred to their Owners; now
What neerer debt in all humanity,
Then Wife is to the Husband? If this law
Of Nature be corrupted through affection,
And that great mindes of partiall indulgence;
To their benumbed wilis resist the same,
There is a Law in each well-ordred Nation,
To curbe those raging appetites that are
Most disobedient and refractory.
If Helen then be wife to Sparta's King
(As it is knowne she is) these Morall Lawes
Of Nature, and of Nation, speake aloud
To haue her backe return'd. Thus to persist
In doing wrong, extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heavy. Hectors opinion

Is this in way of truth: yet nere the lesse,
My spritely brethren, I propend to you
In resolution to keepe Helen still;
For 'tis a cause that hath no meane dependance,
Vpon our joynt and severall dignities.

Troy. Why? there you toucht the life of our designe:
Were it not glory that we more affected,
Then the performance of our heaving spleenes,
I would not with a drop of Troian blood,
Spent more in her defence. But worthy Hector,
She is a theame of honor and renowne,
A source to valiant and magnanimous deeds,
Whose present courage may beate downe our foes,
And fame in time to come canonize us.
For I presume brave Hector would not lose
So rich advantage of a promis'd glory,
As smiles upon the fore-head of this action,
For the wide worlds renew.

Hect. I am yours,
You valiant off-spring of great Priamus,
I have a roisting challenge sent among'st
The dull and factious nobles of the Greekes?
Will strike amazement to their drowfie spirits,
I was advertiz'd, their Great generall slept,
Whil'st emulation in the army crept:
This I presume will wake him.

Exeunt.

Enter Thersites solus.

Now now Thersites? what lost in the Labyrinth of thy fury? shall the Elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beates me, and I raile at him: O worthy satisfaction, would it were otherwise: that I could beate him, whil't he rail'd at me: Sfoote, Ile learne to conjure and raise Divels, but Ile see some issue of my spitefull execrations. Then ther's Achilles, a rare Enginer. If Troy be not taken till these two undermine it, the wals will stand till they fall of themselves, O thou great thunder-darter of Olympus, forget that thou art Iove the King of gods: and Mercury, loose all the Serpentine craft of thy Caduceus, if thou take not that little little lesse then little wit from them that they have, which short-arm'd ignorance it selfe knowes, is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumvention deliver a Fly from a Spider, without drawing the massie Irons and cutting the web: after this, the vengeance on the whole Camp, or rather the bone-ach, for that me thinkes is the curse dependant on those that warre for a placket. I have said my prayers and divell, envy, say Amen: What ho?
my Lord Achilles?

Enter Patroclus.

Patr. Who's there? Thersites. Good Thersites come in and raile.

Ther. If I could have remembred a guilt counterfeit, thou would'st not have slipt out of my contemplation, but it is no matter, thy selfe upon thy selfe. The common curse of mankind, folly and ignorance be thine in great renew; heaven blesse thee from a Tutor, and Discipline come not nere thee. Let thy blod be thy direction till thy death, then if she that layes thee out sayes thou art a faire coarfe, Ile be sworne and sworne upon't she never throwd any but Lazars, Amen. Wher's Achilles?

Patr. What art thou devout? wast thou in a prayer?

Ther. I, the heavens heare me.

Enter Achilles.

Achiel. Who's there?

Patr. Thersites, my Lord.

Achil. Where, where, art thou come? why my cheefe, my digestion, why hast thou not serv'd thy selfe into my Table, so many meales? Come, what's Agamemnon?

Ther. Thy Commander Achilles; then tell me Patro-clus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy Lord Thersites: then tell me I pray thee, what's thy selfe?

Ther. Thy knower Patroclus: then tell me Patroclus
what art thou?

Patr. Thou maist tell that know'st.

Achil. O tell, tell.

Ther. Ile decline the whole question: Agamemnon commands Achilles, Achilles is my Lord, I am Patroclus know-er, and Patroclus is a foole.

Patr. Yourascall.

Ther. Peace foole, I have not done.

Achil. He is a priviledg'd man, proceede Thersites.

Ther. Agamemnon is a foole, Achilles is a foole, Ther-sites is a foole, and as afore said, Patroclus is a foole.

Achil. Derive this: come?

Ther. Agamemnon is a foole to offer to command Achilles, Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon, Thersites is a foole to serve such a foole: and Patroclus is a foole positieve.

Patr. Why am I a foole?

Enter Agamemnon, Vlisses, Nestor, Diomedes,
Ajax, and Chalcas.

Ther. Make that demand to the Creator, it suffices me thou art. Looke you, who comes here?

Achil. Patroclus, Ile speake with no body: come in with me Thersites. Exit.

Ther. Heere is such patchery, such jugling, and such knavery: all the argument is a Cuckold and a Whore, a good quarrell to draw emulations factions, and bleed to death upon: Now the dry Sarpego on the subject, and Warre and Lechery confound all.

Agam. Where is Achilles?

Patr. Within his Tent, but ill dispos'd my Lord.

Agam. Let it be knowne to him that we are here:
He sent our Messengers, and we lay by
Our appertainments, visiting of him:
Let him be told of, least perchance he thinke
We dare not move the question of our place,
Or know not what we are.

Patr. I shall so say to him.

Vlis. We saw him at the opening of his Tent,
He is not sicke.

Aia. Yes, Lyon sicke, sicke of a proud heart: you may call it Melancholly if you will favour the man, but by my head, 'tis pride; but why, why, let him show us the cause?
A word my Lord.

Nes. What moves Ajax thusto bay at him?

Vlis. Achilles hath inveigled his Foole from him.

Nes. Who, Thersites.

Vlis. He.

Nes. Then will Ajax lacke matter, if he have lost his Argument.

Vlis. No, you see he is his argument that has his argument Achilles.

Nes. All the better, their faction is more our wish then their faction; but it was a strong counsell that a Foole could disunite.

Vlis. The amity that wisdome knits not, folly may easily vntie.

Enter Patroclus.

Heere

Here comes Patroclus.

Nest. No Achilles with him?

Vliss. The Elephant hath joynts, but none for curtesie;
His legges are legges for necessity, not for flight.

Patro. Achilles bids me say, he is much sorry:
If any thing more then your sport and pleasure,
Did move your greatnesse, and this noble State,
To call upon him; he hopes it is no other,
But for your health, and your digestion sake;
An after Dinner breath.

Aga. Heare you Patroclus:

We are too well acquainted with these answers:
But his evasion wing'd thus swift with scorne,
Cannot outflye our apprehensions.
Much attribute he hath, and much the reason,
Why we ascribe it to him, yet all his vertues,
(Not vertuously of his owne part beheld)
Doe in our eyes, begin to lose their glosse;
And like faire Fruit in an unholsome dish,
Are like to rot untasted; goe and tell him,
We come to speake with him; and you shall not sinne,
If you doe say, we thinke him over proud,
And under honest: in selfe assumption greater (selfe.
Then in the note of iudgement: and worthier then him-
Here tends the savage strangenesse he puts on,
Disguise the holy strength of their command:
And under write in an observing kind
His humorous predominance, yea watch
His pettish lines, his ebs, his flowes, as if
The passage and whole carriage of this action
Rode on his tyde. Goe tell him this, and adde,
That if he over-hold his price so much,
Wee'll none of him; but let him, like an Engin
Not portable, lye under this report.
Bring action hither, this cannot goe to warre:
A stirring Dwarf, we doe allowance give,
Before a sleeping Gyant: tell him so.

Pat. I shall, and bring his answer presently.

Aga. In second voyce wee'll not be satisfied,
We come to speake with him, Vlisses enter you.

Exit Vlisses.

Ajax. What is he more then another?

Aga. No more then what he thinkes he is.

Ajax. Is he so much, doe you not thinke, he thinkes himselfe a better man then I am?

Aga. No question.

Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and say he is?

Aga. No, Noble Ajax, you are as strong, as valiant, as wife, no lesse noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.

Ajax. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what it is.

Aga. Your mind is the cleerer Ajax, and your vertues the fairer; he that is proud, eates up himselfe; Pride is his owne Glasse, his owne trumpet, his owne Chronicle, and what ever praises it selfe but in the deed, deuoures the deede in the praise.

Enter Vlisses.

Ajax. I doe hate a proud man, as I hate the ingendring of Toades.

Nest. Yet he loves himselfe: is't not strange?

Vliss. Achilles will not to the field to morrow,

Aga. What's his excuse?

Vliss. He doth relye on none,

But carries on the streame of his dispose,
Without obseruance or respect of any,

In will peculiar, and in selfe admission.

Aga. Why, will he not upon our faire request,
Vntent his person, and share the ayre with us?

Vliss. Things small as nothing, for requests sake, only
He makes important: posselt he is with greatnesse,
And speakes not to himselfe, but with a pride
That quarrels at selfe-breath. Imagin'd wroth
Holds in his bloud such swolne and hot discourse,
That twixt his mentall and his active parts,
Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages,
And batters gainst it selfe; what should I say?
He is so plaguy proud, that the death tokens of it,
Cry no recovery.

Aga. Let Ajax goe to him.

Deare Lord, goe you and greete him in his Tent;
'Tis said he holds you well, and will be led
At your request a little from himselfe.

Vliss. O Agamemnon, let it not be so.

Wee'll consecrate the steps that Ajax makes,
When they goe from Achilles; shall the proud Lord,
That bastes his arrogance with his owne seame,
And never suffers matter of the world,
Enter his thoughts: save such as doe reuolue
And ruminat himselfe. Shall he be worshipt,
Of that we hold an Idoll, more then he?
No, this thrice worthy and right valiant Lord,
Must not so staule his Palme, nobly acquir'd,
Nor by my will asubingate his merit,
As amply titled as Achilles is: by going to Achilles,
That were to enlard his fat already, pride,
And adde more Colesto Cancer, when he burnes
With entertaining great Hiperion.

This L. goe to him? Iupiter forbid,
And say in thunder, Achilles goe to him.

Nest. O this is well, he rubs the veine of him.

Dio. And how his silence drinckes up this applause.

Aja. If I goe to him, with my armed fist, Ile path him ore the face.

Aga. Q no, you shall not goe.

Aja. And a be proud with me, ile phee his pride: let me goe to him.

Vliss. Not for the worth that hangs upon our quarrell.

Aja. A paultry insolent fellow.

Nest. How he describes himselfe.

Aja. Can he not be sociable?

Vliss. The Raven chides blacknesse.

Aja. Ile let his humors blood.

Aga. He will be the Physitian that should be the patient.

Aja. And all men were a my minde.

Vliss. Wit would be out of fashion.

Aja. A should not beare it so, a should eate Swords first: shall pride carry it?

Nest. And 'twould, you'd carry halfe.

Vliss. A would, have ren sharres.

Aja. I will knede him, Ile make him supple, he's not yet through warme.

Nest. Force him with praises, poure in, poure in: his ambition is dry.

Vliss. My L. you feede too much on this dislike.

Nest. Our noble Generall, doe not doe so.

Dio. You must prepare to fight without Achilles.

Vliss. Why, 'tis this naming of him doth him harme.
Heere is a man, but 'tis before his face,
I will be silent.

Nest. Wherefore should you so?

He

He is not emulous, as Achilles is.

Uly. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.

Aia. A horson dog, that shall palter thus with us, would he were a Troian.

Nest. What a vice were it in Aiax now —

Uly. If he were proud.

Dio. Or covetous of praise.

Uly. I, or surly borne.

Dio. Or strange, or selfe affected.

Uly. Thank the heavens L, thou art of sweet composure;

Prayse him that got thee, she that gave thee sucke :

Fame be thy Tutor, and thy parts of pature

Thrice fam'd beyond, beyond all erudition ;

But he that disciplin'd thy armes to fight,

Let Mars devide Eternity in twaine,

And give him halfe, and for thy vigor,

Bull-bearing Milo his addition yeelede

To sinnowie Aiax : I will not praisethy wisedome,

Which like a bourne, a pale, a shore confines

Thy spacious and dilated parts ; here's Nestor

Instructed by the Antiquary times :

He must, he is, he cannot but be wise.

But pardon Father Nestor, were your dayes

As greene as Aiax, and your braine so temper'd,

You should not have the eminence of him,

But he as Aiax.

Aia. Shall I call you Father ?

Uly. I my good Sonne.

Dio. Be rul'd by him Lord Aiax.

Uly. There is notarrying here, the Hart Achilles

Keepes thicker : please it our Generall :

To call together all this state of warre,

Fresh Kings are come to Troy ; to morrow

We must with all our maine of power stand fast :

And here's a Lord, (come Knights from East to West,

And cull their flowre,) Aiax shall cope the best.

Ag. Goe we to Counsaile, let Achilles sleepe ;

Light Botes may faile swift, though greater bulkes draw deepe. Exeunt. Musicke sounds within.

Enter Pandarus and a Servant.

Pan. Friend, you, pray you a word : Doe not you follow the yong Lord Paris ?

Ser. I sir, When he goes before me.

Pan. You depend upon him I meane ?

Ser. Sir, I doe depend upon the Lord.

Pan. You depend upon anoble Gentleman : I must needs praise him.

Ser. The Lord be praised.

Pa. You know me, doe you not ?

Ser. Faith sir, superficially.

Pa. Friend know me better, I am the Lord Pandarus.

Ser. I hope I shall know your honour better.

Pa. I doe desire it.

Ser. You are in the state of Grace ?

Pa. Grace, not so friend, honour and Lordship are my title : What Musique is this ?

Ser. I doe but partly know sir : it is Musicke in parts.

Pa. Know you the Musitians.

Ser. Wholly sir.

Pa. Who play they to ?

Ser. To the hearers sir.

Pa. At whose pleasure friend ?

Ser. At mine sir, and theirs that love Musicke.

Pa. Command, I meane friend.

Ser. Who shall I command sir ?

Pa. Friend, we understand not one another : I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning. At whose request doe these men play ?

Ser. That's too't indeede sir : marry sir, at the request of Paris my L. who's there in person ; with him the mortall Venus, the heart blood of beauty, loves invisible soule.

Pa. Who ? my Cousin Cressida.

Ser. No, sir, Helen, could you not finde out that by her attributes ?

Pa. It should seeme fellow, that thou hast not seen the Lady Cressida. I come to speake with Paris from the Prince Troilus : I will make a complementall assault upon him, for my businesse seethes.

Ser. Sudden businesse, there's a stewed phrase indeede.

Enter Paris and Helena.

Pan. Faire be to you my Lord, and to all this faire company : faire desires in all faire measure fairely guide them, especially to you faire Queene, faire thoughts bee your faire pillow.

Hel. Deere L. you are full of faire words.

Pan. You speake your faire pleasure sweet Queene : faire Prince, here is good broken Musicke.

Par. You have broken it cozen : and by my life you shall make it whole againe, you shall peece it out with a peece of your performance. Nest. he is full of harmony.

Pan. Truly Lady no.

Hel. O sir.

Pan. Rude in sooth, in good sooth very rude.

Paris. Well said my Lord : well, you say so in fits,

Pan. I have businesse to my Lord, deere Queene : my Lord will you vouchsafe me a word ?

Hel. Nay, this shall not hedge us out, weele heare you sing certainly.

Pan. Well sweete Queene you are pleasant with mee, but, marry thus my Lord, my deere Lord, and most esteemed friend your brother Troilus.

Hel. My Lord Pandarus, hony sweete Lord,

Pan. Go to sweete Queene, goe to. Commends himselfe most affectionately to you.

Hel. You shall not bob us out of our melody : If you doe, our melancholly upon your head.

Pan. Sweete Queene, sweete Queene, that's a sweete Queene I faith —

Hel. And to make a sweet Lady sad, is a sowre offence.

Pan. Nay, that shall not serve your turne, that shall it not in truth la. Nay, I care not for such words, no, no. And my Lord he desires you, that if the King call for him at Supper, you will make this excuse.

Hel. My Lord Pandarus ?

Pan. What sayes my sweete Queene, my very, very sweete Queene ?

Par. What exploit's in hand, were sups he to night ?

Hel. Nay but my Lord ?

Pan. What sayes my sweete Queene ? my cozen will fall out with you.

Hel. You must not know where he sups.

Pan. With my disposer Cressida.

Pan. No, no ; no such matter, you are wide, come your disposer is sicke.

Par. Well, Ile make excuse.

Pan. I good my Lord : why should you say Cressida ? no, your poore disposer's sicke.

Par. I spie.

b b

Pan. You

Pan. You spie, what doe you spie? come, give me an Instrument now sweete Queene.

Hel. Why this is kindly done?

Pan. My Neece is horrible in love with a thing you have sweet Queene.

Hel. She shall have it my Lord, if it be not my Lord Paris.

Pan. Hee? no sheele none of him, they two are twaine.

Hel. Falling in after falling out, may make them three.

Pan. Come, come, Ile heare no more of this, Ile sing you a song now.

Hel. I, I, prethee now: by my troth sweet Lord thou hast a fine fore-head.

Pan. I you may, you may.

Hel. Let thy song be love: this love will undoe us all. Oh Cupid, Cupid, Cupid.

Pan. Love? I that it shall yfaith.

Par. I, good now love, love, nothing but love.

Pan. In good troth it begins so.

Love, love, nothing but love, still more:

For O loves Bow,

Shootes both Bucke and Doe:

The Shaft confounds not that it wounds,
But tickles still the sore:

These Lovers cry, oh ho they dye;

Yet that which seemes they wound to kill,

Doth turne oh ho, to ha ha he:

So dying love lives still,

O ho a while, but ha ha ha;

O ho grones out for ha ha ha—hey ho.

Hel. In love yfaith to the very tip of the nose.

Par. He eates nothing but doves love, and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deedes, and hot deedes is love.

Pan. Is this the generation of love? Hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deedes, why they are Vipers, is Love a generation of Vipers?

Sweete Lord whose a field to day?

Par. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Anthenor, and all the gallantry of Troy. I would faine have arm'd to day, but my Nell would not have it so.

How chance my brother Troilus went not?

Hel. He hangs the lippe at something; yon know all Lord Pandarus?

Pan. Not I hony sweete Queene: I long to heare how they sped to day:

Youle remember your brothers excuse?

Par. To a hayre.

Pan. Farewell sweete Queene.

Hel. Commend me to your Neece.

Pan. I will sweete Queene.

Sound a retreat.

Par. They're come from field: let us to Priams Hall To greete the warriors. Sweet Helen, I must wooe you, To helpe unarme our Hector: his stubborne buckles, With these your white enchanting fingers toucht, Shall more obey then to the edge of Steele, Or force of Greekish sinewes, you shall doe more Then all the Iland Kings, disarme great Hector.

Hel. 'Twill make us proud to be your servant Paris: Yea what he shall receive of us in duetic, Gives us more palme in beauty then we have: Yea overshines our selfe.

Sweete above thought I love thee.

Exeunt.

Enter Pandarus and Troilus Man.

Pan. How now, where's thy Master, at my Cousen Cressidas?

Man. No sir, he staves for you to conduct him thither.

Enter Troilus.

Pan. O here he comes: How now, how now?

Troy. Sirra walke off.

Pan. Have you seene my Cousin?

Troy. No Pandarus: I stalke about her doore Like a strange soule upon the Stigian bankes Staying for waftage. O be thou my Charon, And give me swift transportance to those fields, Where I may wallow in the Lilly beds Propos'd for the deserfer. O gentle Pandarus, From Cupids shoulder plucke his painted wings, And flye with me to Cressid.

Pan. Walke here ith' Orchard, Ile bring her straight.

Exit Pandarus.

Troy. I am giddy; expectation whirles me round, Th' imaginary relish is so sweete, That it inchantes my sence: what will it be When that the watry pallats taste indeede Loves thrice reputed Nectar? Death I feare me Sounding destruction, or some joy too fine, Too subtile, potent, and too sharpe in sweetnesse, For the capacite of my ruder powers; I feare it much, and I doe feare besides, That I shall loose distinction in my joyes, As doth a battaile, when they charge on heapes The enemy flying.

Enter Pandarus.

Pan. Shee's making her ready, sheele come straight; you must be witty now, she does so blush & fetches her winge so short, as if she were fraid with a sprite: Ile fetch her; it is the prettiest villaine, she fetches her breath so short as a new tane Sparrow.

Exit Pand.

Troy. Even such a passion doth embrace my bosome: My heart beates thicker then a feavorous pulse, And all my powers doe their bestowing loose, Like vassalage at unawarres encountring The eye of Majesty.

Enter Pandarus and Cressida.

Pan. Come, come, what neede you blush? Shames a babie; here she is now, sweare the oathes now to her, that you have sworne to me. What are you gone againe, you must be watcht ere you be made tame, must you? come your wayes, come your wayes, and you draw backward weele put you ith' files: why do you not speak to her? Come draw this curtaine, & let's see your picture. Alasse the day, how loath you are to offend day light? and 'twere darke you'd close sooner. So, so, rub on, and kisse the mistresse; how now, a kisse in fec-farme? build there Carpenter; the ayre is sweete. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out ere I part you. The Faulcon, as the Tercell, for all the Ducksith River: go to, go to.

Troy. You have bereft me of all words Lady.

Pan. Words pay no debts; give her deedes: but sheele bereave you 'oth' deedes too, if shee call your activity in question: what billing againe? here's in witness where of the Parties interchangeably. Come in, come in, Ile go get a fire.

Exit Pand.

Cres. Will you walke in my Lord?

Troy. O Cressida, how often have I wisht me thus?

Cres. Wisht my Lord? the gods grant? O my Lord.

Troy. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abruption: what too curious dreg espies my sweet Lady in the fountaine of our love?

Cres. More

Cres. More dregs then water, if my teares have eyes.

Troy. Feares make divels of Cherubins, they never see truly.

Cres. Blind feare, that seeing reason leads, findes safer footing, then blinde reason, stumbling without feare : to feare the worst, oft cures the worfe.

Troy. Oh let my Lady apprehend no feare, In all Cupids Pageant there is presented no monster.

Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither ?

Troy. Nothing but their undertakings, when we vow to weepe seas, live in fire, eat rockes, tame Tygers, thinking it harder for our Mistresse to devise imposition enough, then for us to undergoe any difficultie imposed. This is the monstrousitie in love (Lady,) that the will is infinite, and the execution confin'd; that the desire is boundlesse, and the act a slave to limit.

Cres. They say all lovers sweare more performance then they are able, and yet reserve an ability that they never performe: vowing more then the perfection of ten; and discharging lesse then the tenth part of one. They that have the voyce of Lyons, and the act of Hares : are they not monsters ?

Troy. Are there such ? such are not we : Praise us as we are tasted, allow us as we prove : our head shall goe bare till merit crowne it : no perfection in reversion shall have a praise in present : wee will not name desert before his birth, and being borne his addition shall be humble : few words to faire faith. Troilus shall be such to Cressida, as what envy can say worst, shall be a mocke for his truth ; and what truth can speake truest, not truer then Troilus.

Cres. Will you walke in my Lord ?

Enter Pandarus.

Pan. What blushing still ? have you not done talking yet ?

Cres. Well Vnckle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thanke you for that : if my Lord get a Boy of you, youle give him me : be true to my Lord, if he flinch, chide me for it.

Troy. You know now your hostages : your Vnckles word and my firme faith.

Pan. Nay, Ile give my word for her too : our kindred though they be long ere they are wooed, they are constant being wonne : they are Burres I can tell you, they'le sticke where they are throwne.

Cres. Boldnesse comes to me now, and brings mee heart : Prince Troilus, I have lov'd you night and day, for many weary moneths.

Troy. Why was my Cressida then so hard to win ?

Cres. Hard to seeme won : but I was won my Lord With the first glance that ever : pardon me, If I confesse much you will play the tyrant :

I love you now, but not till now so much

But I might master it ; in faith I lye:

My thoughts were like unbridled children, growne

Too head-strong for their mother : see we fooles,

Why have I blab'd ? who shall be true to us

When we are so unsecret to our selves ?

But though I lov'd you well, I wooed you not,

And yet good faith I wisht my selfe a man ;

Or that the women had mens priviledge

Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue,

For in this rapture I shall surely speake

The thing I shall repent : see, see, your silence

Comming in dumbnesse, from my weakenesse drawes

My soule of counsell from me. Stop my mouth.

Troy. And shall, albeit sweete Musicke issues thence.

Pan. Pretty yfaith.

Cres. My Lord I doe beseech you pardon me,

'Twas not my purpose thus to beg a kisse :

I am asham'd ; O Heavens, what have I done !

For this time will I take my leave my Lord.

Troy. Your leave sweet Cressida ?

Pan. Leave ! and you take leavetill to morrow morning.

Cres. Pray you content you.

Troy. What offends you Lady ?

Cres. Sir mine owne company.

Troy. You cannot shun your selfe.

Cres. Let me goe and try :

I have a kinde of selfe resides with you :

But an unkinde selfe, that it selfe will leave,

To be anothers foole. Where is my wit ?

I would be gone : I speake I know not what.

Troy. Well know they what they speake, that speake so wisely.

Cres. Perchance my Lord, I shew more craft then love,

And fell so roundly to a large confession,

To Angle for your thoughts : but you are wise,

Or else you love not : for to be wise and love,

Exceedes mans might, that dwels with gods above.

Troy. O that I thought it could be in a woman :

And if it can, I will presume in you,

To feede for aye her lampe and flames of love,

To keepe her constancie in plight and youth,

Out-living beauties outward, with a minde

That doth renew swifter then blood decays :

Or that perswasion could but thus convince me,

That my integritie and truth to you,

Might be affronted with the match and waight

Of such a winnowed puritie in love :

How were I then up-lifted ! but alas,

I am as true, as truths simplicitie,

And simpler then the infancie of truth.

Cres. In that Ile warre with you.

Troy. O vertuous fight,

When right with right wars, who shall be most right ?

True swaines in love, shall in the world to come

Approve their truths by Troilus when their rimes,

Full of protest, of oath and big compare

Want smiles : truth tir'd with iteration,

As true as steele, as plantage to the Moone :

As Sunne to day, as Turtle to her mate :

As Iron to Adamant : as Earth to th' Center :

Yet after all comparisons of truth,

(As truths authenticke author to be cited)

As true as Troilus, shall crowne up the Verse,

And sanctifie the numbers.

Cres. Prophet may you be :

If I be false, or swerve a haire from truth,

When time is old and hath forgot it selfe :

When water-drops have worne the stones of Troy;

And blinde oblivion swallow'd Cities up;

And mightie States characterlesse are grated

To dustie nothing ; yet let memory,

From false to false, among false Maides in love.

Vpbraid my falsehood, when they've said as false,

As Aire, as Water, as Winde, as sandie earth;

As Foxe to Lambe ; as Wolfe to Heifers Calfe ;

Pard to the Hind, or Stepdame to her Sonne ;

Yea, let them say, to sticke the heart of falsehood,

As false as Cressid.

Pand. Go to, a bargain made : seale it, seale it, Ile be the witnesse, here I hold your hand : here my Cousins, if ever you prove false one to another, since I have taken such paines to bring you together, let all pittifull goers betweene be cal'd to the worlds end after my name : call them all Panders ; let all constant men be Troylusses, all false women Cressids, and all brokers betweene, Panders : say, Amen.

Troy. Amen.

Cress. Amen.

Pan. Amen.

Whereupon I will shew you a Chamber, which bed, because it shall not speake of your prettie encounters, presse it to death : away.

And Cupid grant all tong-tide Maidens heere, Bed, Chamber, and Pander, to provide this geere. Exeunt.

Enter Vlysses, Diomedes, Nestor, Agamemnon, Menelaus and Calcas.

Cal. Now Princes for the service I have done you, Th'advantage of the time prompts me aloud, To call for recompence : appeare it to your minde, That through the sight I beare in things to love, I have abandon'd Troy, left my possession, Incur'd a Traytors name, expos'd my selfe, From certaine and possesse conveniences, To doubtfull fortunes, sequestering from me all That time, acquaintance, custome and condition, Made tame, and most familiar to my nature : And here to doe you service am become, As new into the world, strange, unacquainted. I doe beseech you, as in way of taste, To give me now a little benefit : Out of those many registred in promise, Which you say, live to come in my behalfe.

Agam. What would'st thou of us Trojan ? make demand ?

Cal. You have a Troian prisoner, cal'd Antenor, Yesterday tooke : Troy holds him very deere. Oft have you (often have you, thanks therefore) Desir'd my Cressid in right great exchange. Whom Troy hath still deni'd : but this Antenor, I know is such a wrest in their affaires, That their negotiations all must slacke, Wanting his mannage : and they will almost, Give us a Prince of blood, a Sonne of Priam, In change of him. Let him be sent great Princes, And he shall buy my Daughter : and her presence, Shall quite strike off all service I have done, In most accepted paine.

Aga. Let Diomedes beare him, And bring us Cressid hither : Calcas shall have What he requests of us : good Diomed Furnish you fairely for this enterchange ; Withall bring word, if Hector will to morrow Be answer'd in his challenge. Ajax is ready.

Dio. This shall I undertake, and 'tis a burthen Which I am proud to beare. Exit.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus in their Tent.

Vlis. Achilles stands i'th entrance of his Tent ; Please it our Generall to passe strangely by him, As if he were forgot : and Princes all, Lay negligent and loose regard upon him ; I will come last, 'tis like hee'l question me,

Why such unplausive eyes are bent ? why turn'd on him ? If so, I have derision medicinable, To use betweene your strangeness and his pride, Which his owne will shall have desire to drinke ; It may doe good, pride hath no other glasse To show it selfe, but pride : for supple knees, Feede arrogance, and are the proud mans fees.

Agam. Weele execute your purpose, and put on A forme of strangeness as we passe along, So doe each Lord, and either greete him not, Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more, Then if not lookt on. I will leade the way.

Achil. What comes the Generall to speake with me ? You know my minde, Ile fight no more 'gainst Troy.

Aga. What sayes Achilles, would he ought with us ?

Nes. Would you my Lord ought with the Generall ?

Achil. No.

Nes. Nothing my Lord.

Aga. The better.

Achil. Good day, good day.

Men. How doe you ? how doe you ?

Achi. What does the Cuckold scorne me ?

Ajax. How now Patroclus ?

Achil. Good morrow Ajax ?

Ajax. Ha.

Achil. Good morrow.

Ajax. I, and good next day too. Exeunt.

Achil. What meane these fellowes ? know they not Achilles ?

Patr. They passe strangely : they were us'd to bend, To send their smiles before them to Achilles : To come as humbly as they us'd to creepe to holy Altars.

Achil. What am I poore of late ? 'Tis certaine, greatnesse once false out with fortune, Must fall out with men too : what the declin'd is, He shall as soone reade in the eyes of others, As feeble in his owne fall : for men like butter-flies, Shew not their mealie wings, but to the Summer ; And not a man for being simple man, Hath any honor ; but honor'd by those honours That are without him ; as place, riches, favour, Prizes of accident, as oft as merit : Which when they fall (as being slippery standers) The love that leand on them as slippery too, Doth on plucke downe another, and together Dye in the fall, But 'tis not so with me ; Fortune and I are friends, I doe enjoy At ample point all that I did possesse, Save these mens lookes : who do me thinkes finde out Something not worth in me such rich beholding, As they have often given. Here is Vlysses, Ile interrupt his reading : how now Vlysses ?

Vlis. Now great Thetis Sonne.

Achil. What are you reading ?

Vlis. A strange fellow here

Writes me, that man, how dearly ever parted, How much in having, or without, or in, Cannot make boast to have that which he hath ; Nor fees not what he owes, but by reflection : As when his vertues shining upon others, Heate them, and they retort that heate againe To the first giver.

Achil. This is not strange Vlysses : The beautie that is borne here in the face, The bearer knowes not, but commends it selfe, Not going from it selfe : but eye to eye oppos'd,

Salutes

Salutes each other with each others forme.
For speculation turnes not to it selfe,
Till it hath travail'd and is married there
Where it may see it selfe; this is not strange at all.

Uly. I doe not straine it at the position,
It is familiar; but at the Authors drift,
Who in his circumstance, expressly proves
That no man is the Lord of any thing, (Though in and of him there is much consisting,) Till he communicate his parts to others:
Nor doth he of himselfe know them for ought,
Till he behold them formed in th' applause,
Where they are extended: who like an arch reverberates
The voice againe; or like a gate of Steele,
Fronting the Sunne, receives and renders backe
His figure, and his heate. I was much rapt in this,
And apprehended here immediately
The unknowne Ajax;

Heavens what a man is there: a very Horse, (are
That has he knowes not what Nature, what things there
Most abject in regard, and deare in use.
What things againe most deere in the esteeme,
And poore in worth: now shall we see to morrow,
An act that very chance doth throw upon him?
Ajax renown'd? O heavens, what some men doe,
While some men leave to doe!
How some men creepe in skittish fortunes hall,
Whiles others play the Ideots in her eyes:
How one man eats into anothers pride,
While pride is feasting in his wantonnesse
To see these Grecian Lords; why, even already,
They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder,
As if his foote were on brave Hectors brest,
And great Troy shrinking.

Achil. I doe beleve it:
For they pass by me, as misers doe by beggars,
Neither gave to me good word, nor good look:
What are my deedes for got?

Uly. Time hath (my Lord) a wallet at his backe,
Wherein he puts almes for oblivion:
A great siz'd monster of ingratitude:
Those scraps are good deedes past,
Which are devour'd as fast as they are made,
Forgot as soone as done: perseverance, deere my Lord,
Keepes honour bright: to have done, is to hang Quite out of fashion, like a rustie male,
In monumentall mockerie: take the instant way,
For honor travels in a straight so narrow,
Where one but goes a breast, keepe then the path:
For emulation hath a thousand Sonnes,
That one by one pursue; if you give way,
Or hedge aside from the direct forth right;
Like to an entred Tyde, they all rush by,
And leave you hindmost;
Or like a gallant Horse falne in first ranke,
Lye there for pavement to the abject, neere
Ore-run and trampled on: then what they doe in present,
Though lesse then yours in past, must ore-top yours:
For time is like a fashionable Hoste,
That slightly shakes his parting Guest by th' hand;
And with his armes out-stretcht, as he would flye,
Grasps in the commer: the welcome ever smiles,
And farewells goes out sighing: O let not vertue seeke
Remuneration for the thing it was: for beautie, wit,
High birth, vigor of bone, desert in service,
Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all

To envious and calumniating time:

One touch of nature makes the whole world kin:
That all with one consent praise new borne gaudes,
Though they are made and moulded of things past,
And goe to dust, that is a little gilt,
More laud then gilt ore dusted.
The present eye praises the present object:
Then marveile not thou great and compleat man,
That all the Greeces begin to worship Ajax;
Since things in motion 'gin to catch the eye,
Then what not stirs: the cry went out on thee,
And still it might, and yet it may againe,
If thou wouldst not entombe thy selfe alive,
And case thy reputation in thy Tent;
Whose glorious deedes, but in these fields of late,
Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,
And drave great Mars to faction.

Achil. Of this my privacie,
I have strong reasons.

Uly. But 'gainst your privacie.
The reasons are more potent and heroycall:
'Tis knowne Achilles, that you are in love
With one of Priams daughters.

Achil. Ha? knowne?

Uly. Is that a wonder?
The providence that's in a watchfull State,
Knowes almost every graine of Plutoes gold;
Findes bottome in th' uncomprehensive deepes;
Keepes place with thought; and almost like the gods,
Does thoughts unvaile in their dumbe cradles:
There is a myserie (with whom relation Durst never meddle) in the soule of state;
Which hath an operation more divine,
Then breath or pen can give expresseure to:
All the commerce that you have had with Troy,
As perfectly is ours, as yours, my Lord.
And better would it fit Achilles much;
To throw downe Hector then Polixena.
But it must grieve young Pirrhus now at home,
When faire shall in her land sound her trumpe;
And all the Greekish Girles shall tripping sing,
Great Hectors sister did Achilles winne;
But our great Ajax bravely beate downe him.
Farewell my Lord: I as your lover speake;
The foole slides ore the Ice that you should breake.

Patr. To this effect Achilles have I mov'd you;
A woman impudent and mannish growne,
Is not more loth'd, then an effeminate man,
In time of action: I stand condemn'd for this;
They thinke my little stomacke to the warre,
And your great love to me, restraines you thus:
Sweete, rouse your selfe; and the weake wanton Cupid
Shall from your necke unloose his amorous fould,
And like a dew-drop from the Lyons mane,
Be shooke to ayrie ayre.

Achil. Shall Ajax fight with Hector?

Patr. I, and perhaps receive much honor by him.

Achil. I see my reputation is at stake,
My fame is shrewdly gored.

Patr. O then beware:

Those wounds heale ill, that men doe give themselves:
Omission to doe what is necessary,
Seales a commission to a blanke of danger,
And danger like an ague subtly raints
Even then when we sit idely in the sunne.

Achil. Goe call Thersites hither sweet Patroclus,

He send the foole to Ajax, and desire him
 To invite the Trojan Lords after the Combat
 To see us here unarm'd : I have a womans longing,
 An appetite that I am sicke withall,
 To see great Hector in the weedes of peace; Enter Thersites.
 To talke with him, and to behold his visage,
 Even to my full of view. A labour-fav'd.

Ther. A wonder.

Achil. What?

Ther. Ajax goes up and downe the field, asking for himselfe.

Achil. How so?

Ther. Hee must fight singly to morrow with Hector, and is so prophetically proud of an heroicall cudgelling, that he raves in saying nothing.

Achil. How can that be?

Ther. Why he stalkes up and downe like a Peacock, a stride and a stand: ruminates like an hostesse, that hath no Arithmetique but her braine to set downe her reckoning: bites his lip with a politique regard, as who should say, there were wit in his head and two'd out; and so there is: but it lyes as coldly in him, as fire in a flint, which will not shew without knocking. The mans undone for ever; for if Hector breake not his necke i'th' combat, heele break't himselfe in vaine-glory. Hee knowes not me: I said, good morrow Ajax; And hee replies, thanks Agamemnon. What thinke you of this man, that takes me for the Generall? Hee's growne a very land-fish, languagelesse, a monster: a plague of opinion, a man may weare it on both sides like a leather Jerkin.

Achil. Thou must be my Ambassador to him Thersites.

Ther. Who, I: why, heele answer nobody: he professes not answering; speaking is for beggers: he weares his tongue in's armes: I will put on his presence; let Patroclus make his demands to me, you shall see the Pageant of Ajax.

Achil. To him Patroclus, tell him, I humbly desire the valiant Ajax, to invite the most valorous Hector, to come unarm'd to my Tent, and to procure safe conduct for his person, of the magnanimous and most illustrious, fixe or Seaven times honour'd Captaine, Generall of the Grecian Armie Agamemnon, &c. doe this.

Patro. Iove bleesse great Ajax.

Ther. Hum.

Patro. I come from the worthy Achilles.

Ther. Ha?

Patro. Who most humbly desires you to invite Hector to his Tent.

Ther. Hum.

Patro. And to procure safe conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon?

Patro. I my Lord.

Ther. Ha?

Patro. What say you too't.

Ther. God buy you with all my heart.

Patro. Your answer sir.

Ther. If to morrow be a faire day, by eleven a clocke it will goe one way or other; howsoever, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

Patro. Your answer sir.

Ther. Fare you well with all my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?

Ther. No, but he's out a tune thus: what musicke will be in when Hector has knockt out his braines, I know not: but I am sure none, unlesse the Fidler Apollo get his finewest to make catlings on.

Achil. Come, thou shalt beare a Letter to him straight.

Ther. Let me carry another to his Horse; for that's the more capable creature.

Achil. My minde is troubled like a Fountaine stir'd, And I my selfe see not the bottome of it.

Ther. Would the Fountaine of your minde were cleere againe, that I might water an Asse at it: I had rather be a Ticke in a Sheepe, then such a valiant ignorance.

Enter at one doore Aeneas with a Torch, at another Paris, Deiphobus, Antenor, Diomed the Grecian, with Torches.

Patr. See hoa, who is that there?

Deiph. It is the Lord Aeneas.

Aene. Is the Prince there in person?

Had I so good occasion to lye long
 As you Prince Paris, nothing but heavenly businesse,
 Should rob my bed-mate of my company.

Diom. That's my minde too: good morrow Lord Aeneas.

Par. A valiant Greeke Aeneas, take his hand, Witnesse the processe of your speech within; You told how Diomed, in a whole weeke by dayes Did haunt you in the Field.

Aene. Health to you valiant sir; During all question of the gentle truce: But when I meete you arm'd, as blacke defiance, As heart can thinke, or courage execute.

Diom. The one and other Diomed embraces, Our blouds are now in calme; and so long health: But when contention, and occasion meete, By Iove, He play the hunter for thy life, With all my force, pursuite and pollicy.

Aene. And thou shalt hunt a Lyon that will flye With his face backward, in humane gentlenesse: Welcome to Troy; now by Anchises life, Welcome indeede: by Venus hand I sweare, No man alive can love in such a fort, The thing he meanes to kill, more excellently.

Diom. We sympathize. Iove let Aeneas live (If to my sword his fate be not the glory) A thousand compleat courses of the Sunne, But in mine emulous honor let him dye: With every joynt a wound, and that to morrow.

Aene. We know each other well.

Diom. We doe, and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most, despightful'st gentle greeting; The noblest hatefull love, that ere I heard of. What businesse Lord so early?

Aene. I was sent for to the King; but why, I know not.

Par. His purpose meets you; it was to bring this Greek To Calchas's house: and there to render him, For the enfrued Antenor, the faire Cressid: Lets have your company; or if you please, Haste there before us, I constantly doe thinke (Or rather call my thought a certaine knowledge) My brother Troilus lodges there to night. Rouse him, and give him note of our approach, With the whole quality whereof, I feare We shall be much unwelcome.

Aene. That I assure you:

Troilus had rather Troy were borne to Greece, Then Cressid borne from Troy.

Par. There

Par. There is no helpe:

The bitter disposition of the time will have it so
On Lord, wee follow you.

Eno. Good morrow all.

Exit Eneas

Par. And tell me noble Diomed; faith tell me true,
Even in the soule of sound good fellowship,
Who in your thoughts merits faire Helen most?
My selfe, or Menelaus?

Diom. Both alike.

He merits well to have her, that doth seeke her,
Not making any scruple of her soylure,
With such a hell of paine, and world of charge.
And you as well to keepe her, that defend her,
Not pallating the taste of her dishonour,
With such a costly losse of wealth and friends;
Helike a puling Cuckold, would drinke up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed peece:
You like a letcher, out of whorish loynes,
Are pleas'd to breede out your inheritors:
Both merits poyz'd, each weighs no lesse nor more,
But he as he, which heavier for a whore.

Par. You are too bitter to your country-woman.

Di. Shee's bitter to her country: heare me Paris,
For every false drop in her bawdy veines,
A Grecians life hath funke: for every scruple
Of her contaminated carrion weight,
A Troian hath beene slaine. Since she could speake,
She hath not given so many good words breath,
As for her Greekes and Troians suffred death.

Par. Faire Diomed, you doe as chapmen doe,
Dispraise the thing that you desire to buy:
But we in silence hold this vertue well;
Weele not commend, what we intend to sell.
Here lyes our way.

Exeunt.

Enter Troilus and Cressida.

Troy. Deere, trouble not your selfe: the morne is cold.

Cres. Then sweet my Lord, Ile call my Vnckle down;
He shall unbolt the Gates.

Troy. Trouble him not:
To bed, to bed: sleepe kill those pretty eyes,
And give as soft attachment to thy fences,
As Infants empty of all thought.

Cres. Good morrow then.

Troy. I prithee now to bed.

Cres. Are you a weary of me?

Troy. O Cressida! but that the busie day
Wak't by the Larke, hath rouz'd the ribald Crowes,
And dreaming night will hide our eyes no longer:
I would not from thee.

Cres. Night hath beene too briefe. (staves,

Troy. Beshrew the witch! with venomous wights she
As hidiously as hell; but flies the graspes of love,
With wings more momentary, swifter then thought:
You will catch colde and curse me.

Cres. Prithee tarry, you men will never tarry;
O foolish Cressid, I might have still held off,
And then you would have tarried. Hearke ther's one up.

Pand. within. What's all the doores open here?

Troy. It is your Vnckle. Enter Pandarus.

Cres. A petillence on him: now will he be mocking:
I shall have such a life

Pan. How now, how now? how goe maiden-heads?

Heare you Maide: wher's my coz Cressid?

Cres. Go hang your self, you naughty mocking Vnckle:

You bring me to doe—and then you floute me too.

Pan. To do what? to do what? let her say what:

What have I brought you to doe?

Cres. Come, come, beshrew your heart: youle nere be good, nor suffer others.

Pan. Ha, ha: alas poore wretch: a poore Chippockia, hast not slept to night? would he not (a naughty man) let it sleepe: a bug-beare take him. One knocks.

Cres. Did not I tell you? would he were knockt ith' head. Who's that at doore? good Vncke goe and see.
My Lord, come you againe into my Chamber:
You smile and mocke me, as if I meant naughtily.

Troy. Ha, ha.

Cres. Come you are deceiv'd, I thinke of no such thing.
How earnestly they knocke: pray you come in. Knocks.
I would not for halfe Troy have you seene here. Exeunt.

Pan. Who's there? what's the matter? will you beate downe the doore? How now, what's the matter?

Eno. Good morrow Lord, good morrow.

Pan. Who's there, my Lord Eneas? by my troth I know you not: what newes with you so early?

Eno. Is not Prince Troilus here?

Pan. Here? what should he doe here?

Eno. Come he is here, my Lord, doe not deny him:
It doth import him much to speake with me.

Pan. Is he here say you? 'tis more than I know, Ile be sworne: For my owne part I came in late: what should he doe here?

Eno. Who, nay then: Come, come, youle doe him wrong, ere y'are ware: youle be so true to him, to bee false to him: Doe not you know of him, but yet goe fetch him hither, goe.

Enter Troilus.

Troy. How now, what's the matter?

Eno. My Lord, I scarce have leisure to salute you,
My matter is so rash: there is at hand,
Paris your brother, and Deiphobus,
The Grecian Diomed, and our Anthenor
Deliver'd to us, and for him forth-with,
Ere the first sacrifice, within this houre,
We must give up to Diomedes hand
The Lady Cressida.

Troy. Is it concluded so?

Eno. By Priam, an the generall state of Troy,
They are at hand, and ready to affect it,

Troy. How may achievements mocke me;
I will goe meete them: and my Lord Eneas,
We met by chance: you did not find me here.

Eno. Good, good, my Lord, the secrets of nature
Have not more gift in taciturnity. Exeunt.

Enter Pandarus and Cressid.

Pan. Is't possible? no sooner got but lost: the divell take Anthenor; the yong Prince will goe mad: a plague upon Anthenor; I would they had brok's necke.

Cres. How now? what's the matter? who was heere?

Pan. Ah, ha!

Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? where's my Lord?
gone? tell me sweet Vnckle, what's the matter?

Pan. Would I were as deepe under the earth as I am
above.

Cres. O the gods! what's the matter?

Pan. Prethee get thee in: would thou hadst ne're been borne; I knew thou wouldst be his death. O poore Gentleman: a plague upon Anthenor.

Cres.

Cres. Good Vnckle I beseech you, on my knees, I beseech you what's the matter?

Pan. Thou must be gone wench, thou must be gone; thou art chang'd for Antenor: thou must to thy Father, and be gone from Troilus: 'twill be his death: 'twill be his baine, he cannot beare it.

Cres. O you immortall gods! I will not goe.

Pan. Thou must.

Cres. I will not Vnckle: I have forgot my Father: I know no touch of consanguinitie:

No kin, no love, no bloud, no foule, so neere me,
As the sweet Troilus: O you gods diuine!
Make Cressida name the very crowne of fallhood!
If ever she leave Troilus: time, and death,
Do to this body what extremitie you can;
But the strong base and building of my love,
Is as the very Center of the earth,
Drawing all things to it. I will goe in and weepe.

Pan. Doe, doe.

Cres. Teare my bright haire, and scratch my praised cheekes,
Cracke my cleere voyce with sobs, and breake my heart
With founding Troilus. I will not goe from Troy. Exeunt.

Enter Paris, Troilus, Aeneas, Deiphobus, Antenor and Diomedes.

Par. It is great morning, and the houre prefix
Of her deliverie to this valiant Greeke
Comes fast upon: good my brother Troilus,
Tell you the Lady what she is to doe,
And haile her to the purpose.

Troy. Walke in to her house:
He bring her to the Grecian presently;
And to his hand, when I deliver her,
Thinke it an Altar, and thy brother Troilus
A Priest, there offering to it his heart.

Par. I know what 'tis to love,
And would, as I shall pittie, I could helpe.
Please you walke in, my Lords. Exeunt.

Enter Pandarus and Cressid.

Pan. Be moderate, be moderate.

Cres. Why tell you me of moderation?
The griefe is fine, full perfect that I taste,
And no lesse in a sense as strong
As that which causeth it. How can I moderate it?
If I could temporise with my affection,
Or brew it to a weake and colder pallat,
The like alaiment could I give my griefe:
My love admits no qualifying crosse: Enter Troilus
No more my griefe, in such a precious losse.

Pan. Here, here, here, he comes, a sweet ducke.

Cres. O Troilus, Troilus!

Pan. What a paire of spectacles is here? let me embrace too: oh heart, as the goodly saying is; O heart, heauie heart, why fittest thou without breaking? where he answers againe; because thou canst not ease thy smart by friendship, nor by speaking: there was never a truer rime; let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have neede of such a Verse: we see it, we see it: how now Lambs?

Troy. Cressid: I love thee in so strange a puritie;
That the best gods, as angry with my fancie,
More bright in zeale, then the devotion which Cold lips blow to their Deities: take thee from me.

Cres. Have the gods envie?

Pan. I, I, I, 'tis too plaine a case.

Cres. And is it true, that I must goe from Troy?

Troy. A hatefull truth.

Cres. What, and from Troilus too?

Troy. From Troy, and Troilus.

Cres. Ist possible?

Troy. And sodainely, where injurie of chance Puts backe leave-taking, justles roughly by
All time of pause; rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoyndure: forcibly prevents
Our lockt embrasures; strangles our deere vowes,
Even in the birth of our owne laboring breath.
We two that with so many thousand sighes
Did buy each other, must poorely sell our selves,
With the rude brevitie and discharge of our Injurious time; now with a robbers haste
Crams his rich theeuerie up, he knowes not how.
As many farewels as be stars in heaven,
With distinct breath, and consign'd kisses to them,
He fumbles up a loose adiew:

And scants us with a single famisht kisse,
Dittasting with the salt of broken teares, Enter Aeneas.
Aeneas within. My Lord, is the Lady ready?

Troy. Hearke, you are call'd: some say the genius so
Cries, come to him that instantly must dye.
Bid them have patience: she shall come anon.

Pan. Where are my teares? raine, to lay this winde, or my heart will be blowne up by the root.

Cres. I must then to the Grecians?

Troy. No remedy.

Cres. A wofull Cressid'mongst the merry Greekes.

Troy. When shall we see againe?

Hear me my love: be thou but true of heart.

Cres. I true? how now? what wicked deeme is this?

Troy. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly,
For it is parting from us:

I speake not, be thou true, as fearing thee:
For I will throw my Glove to death himselfe,
That there's no maculation in thy heart:
But be thou true, say I, to fashion in
My sequent protestation: be thou true,
And I will see thee.

Cres. O you shall be expos'd, my Lord to dangers
As infinite, as imminent: but Ile be true.

Troy. And Ile grow friend with danger;
Weare this Sleeve.

Cres. And you this Glove.
When shall I see you?

Troy. I will corrupt the Grecian Centinels,
To give thee nightly visitation.
But yet be true.

Cres. O heavens: be true againe?

Troy. Hear why I speake it; Love:
The Grecian youths are full of qualitie,
Their loving well compos'd, with gift of nature,
Flowing and swelling ore with Arts and exercise:
How novelties may move, and parts with person.
Alas, a kinde of godly jealousy;
Which I beseech you call a vertuous sinne:
Makes me affraid.

Cres. O heavens, you loue me not!

Troy. Dye I a villaine then:
In this I doe not call your faith in question
So mainely as my merit: I cannot sing,
Nor heele the high Lavolt: nor sweeten talke:
Nor play at subtrill games; faire vertues all;

To which the Grecians are most prompt and pregnant :
But I can tell that in each grace of these,
There lurkes a still and dumb-discourfivè divell,
That tempts most cunningly : but be not tempted.

Cres. Doe not thinke I will :

Troy. No, but something may be done that we will not :

And sometimes we are divels to our selves,
When we wil tempt the frailtie of our powers,
Presuming on their changefull potencie,

Aeneas within. Nay, good my Lord ?

Troy. Come kisse, and let us part.

Paris within. Brother Troilus ?

Troy. Good brother come you hither,
And bring Aeneas and the Grecian with you.

Cres. My Lord, will you be true ?

Exit.

Troy. Who I ? alas it is my vice, my fault :
Whiles other fish with craft for great opinion,
I, with great truth, catch meere simplicitie ;
Whil'st some with cunning guild their copper crownes,
With truth and plainnesse I doe weare mine bare.

Enter the Greekes.

Feare not my truth ; the morrall of my wit
Is plaine and true, ther's all the reach of it.
Welcome sir Diomed, here is the Lady
Which for Antenor, we deliver you.
At the port (Lord) Ile give her to thy hand,
And by the way possesse thee what she is.
Entreate her faire ; and by my soule, faire Greeke,
If ere thou stand at mercy of my Sword,
Name Cressida, and thy life shall be as safe
As Priam is in Illion ?

Diom. Faire Lady Cressida, Soplease you, save the thanks this Prince expects :
The lustre in your eye, heaven in your cheek,
Pleades your faire visage, and to Diomed
You shall be miltresse, and command him wholly.

Troy. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously,
To shame the seale of my petition towards,
I praising her. I tell thee Lord of Greece :
She is as farre high soaring o're thy praises,
As thou unworthy to be cal'd her servant :
I charge thee use her well, even for my charge :
For by the dreadfull Pluto, if thou doest not,
(Though the great bulke Achilles be thy guard)
Ile cut thy thy throate.

Diom. Oh be not mov'd Prince Troilus ;
Let me be priviledg'd by my place and message,
To be a speaker free ; when I am hence,
Ile answer to my lust : and know my Lord ;
Ile nothing doe on charge : to her owne worth
She shall be priz'd : but that you say be't so ;
Ile speake it in my spirit and honor, no.

Troy. Come to the Port. Ile tell thee Diomed,
This brave, shall oft make thee to hide thy head :
Lady, give me your hand, and as we walke,
To our owne selves bend we our needfull talke.

Sound Trumpet.

Par. Harke, Hectors Trumpet.

Aene. How have we spent this morning
The Prince must thinke me tardy and remisse,
That swore to ride before him in the field.

Par. 'Tis Troilus fault : come, come, to field with him.

Exeunt.

Diom. Let us make ready straight.

Aene. Yea, with a bridegroomes fresh alacritie

Let us addresse to tend on Hectors heeles :
The glory of our Troy doth this day lye
On his faire worth, and single Chivalry.

Enter Ajax armed, Achilles, Patroclus, Agamemnon, Menelaus, Ulysses, Nestor, Calcas, &c.

Aga. Here art thou in apointment fresh and faire
Anticipating time. With starting courage,
Give with thy Trumpet a lowd note to Troy :
Thou dreadfull Ajax, that the appaok'd are
May pierce the head of the great Combatant,
And hale him hither.

Aja. Thou, Trumpet, ther's my purse ;
Now cracke thy lungs and split thy brasen pipe :
Blow villaine, till thy sphered Bias cheek
Out-swell the collicke of puffed Aquilon :
Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spout blood :
Thou blowest for Hector.

Ulys. No Trumpet answers.

Achil. 'Tis but early dayes,

Enter Dio. Cres.

Aga. Is not young Diomed with Calcas daughter ?

Ulys. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gate,
He rises on the toe : that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Aga. Is this the Lady Cressida ?

Dio. Even she.

Aga. Most deerely welcome to the Greekes, sweete Lady.

Nest. Our Generall doth salute you with a kisse.

Ulys. Yet is your kindenesse but particular ; 'twere better she were kist in generall.

Nest. And very courtly counsell : Ile begin. So much for Nestor.

Achil. Ile take that winter from you lips : faire Lady
Achilles bids you welcome.

Mene. I had good argument for kissing once.

Patro. But that's no argument for kissing now ;
For thus pop't Paris in his hardiment.

Ulys. Oh deadly gall, and theame of all our scornes,
For which we looke our heads, to gild his hornes.

Patro. The first was Menelaus kisse, this mine :
Patroclus kisses you.

Mene. Oh this is trim.

Patr. Paris and I kisse evermore for him.

Mene. Ile have my kisse fir : Lady by your leave.

Cres. In kissing doe you render, or receive.

Patr. Both take and give.

Cres. Ile make my match to live,
The kisse you take is better then you give : therefore no kisse.

Mene. Ile give you boote, Ile give you three for one.

Cres. You are an odde man, give even, or give none.

Mene. An odde man Lady, every man is odde.

Cres. No, Paris is not ; for you know 'tis true,
That you are odde, and he is even with you.

Mene. You fillip me a'th' head.

Cres. No, Ile be sworne.

Ulys. It were no match, your naile against his horne :
May I sweet Lady beg a kisse of you ?

Cres. You may.

Ulys. I doe desire it.

Cres. Why begge then ?

Ulys. Why then for Venus sake, give me a kisse :
When Hellen is a maid againe, and his——

Cres. I am your debtor, claime it when 'tis due.

Ulys. Never's

Vly. Never's my day, and then a kisse of you.

Diom. Lady a word, Ile bring you to your Father.

Nest. A woman of quicke sence.

Vly. Fie, fie, upon her:

Ther's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip;
Nay, her tooke speaks, her wanton spirites looke out
At every joynt, and motive of her body:
Oh these encounters so glib of tongue,
That give a coasting welcome ere it comes;
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts,
To every tickling reader: set them downe,
For fluttish spoiles of opportunitie;
And daughters of the game.

Exeunt.

Enter all of Troy, Hector, Paris, Aeneas, Helenus, and Attendants.

All. The Troians Trumpet.

Aga. Yonder comes the troope.

Aene. Haile all you state of Greece: what shall be done
To him that victorie commands? or doe you purpose,
A victor shall be knowne: will you the Knights
Shall to the edge of all extremitie
Pursue each other; or shall be devided
By any voice, or order of the field: Hector bad aske?

Aga. Which way would Hector have it?

Aene. He cares not, hee'll obey conditions.

Aga. 'Tis done like Hector, but securely done,
A little proudly, and great deale disprizing
The Knight oppos'd.

Aene. If not Achilles sir, what is your name?

Achil. If not Achilles, nothing.

Aene. Therefore Achilles: but what ere, know this,
In the extremity of great and little:
Valour and pride excell themselves in Hector;
The one almost as infinite as all;
The other blanke as nothing: weigh him well:
And that which looks like pride, is curtesie:
This Ajax is halfe made of Hectors blood,
In love whereof, halfe Hector stayes at home:
Halfe heart, halfe hand, halfe Hector, comes to seeke
This blended Knight, halfe Trojan, and halfe Greeke.

Achil. A maiden battaile then? O I perceive you.

Aga. Here is sir, Diomed: goe gentle Knight, Stand by our Ajax: as you and Lord Aeneas
Consent upon the order of their fight,
So be it; either to the uttermost,
Or else a breach: the Combatants being kin,
Halfe stints their strife, before their strokes begin.

Vly. They are oppos'd already,

Aga. What Trojan is that same that looks so heavy?

Vly. The youngest Sonne of Priam;

And a true Knight; they call him Troilus;
Nor yet mature, yet matchlesse, firme of word,
Speaking in deedes, and deedelesse in his tongue;
Not soone provok't, nor being provok't, soone calm'd;
His heart and hand both open, and both free
For what he has, he gives; what thinks, he shewes;
Yet gives he not till judgement guide his bounty,
Nor dignifies an impaire thought with breath:
Manly as Hector, but more dangerous;
For Hector in his blaze of wrath subscribes
To tender objects; but he, in heate of action
Is more vindicative then jealous love.
They call him Troilus; and on him erect,
A second hope, as fairely built as Hector.
Thus saies Aeneas, one that knowes the youth,
Even to his inches: and with private soule,

Did in great Illion thus translate him to me.

Alarm.

Aga. They are in action.

Nest. Now Ajax hold thine owne.

Troy. Hector, thou sleep'st, awake thee.

Aga. His blowes are wel dispos'd there Ajax. trumpets

Diom. You must no more. cease.

Aene. Princes enough, so please you.

Aja. I am not warme yet, let us fight againe.

Diom. As Hector pleases.

Hect. Why then will I no more;

Thou art great Lord, my Fathers sisters Sonne;
A coufen german to great Priams seede:
The obligation of our blood forbids
A gorie emulation 'twixt us twaine:
Were thy commixion, Greeke and Trojan so,
That thou could'st say, this hand is Grecian all,
And this is Trojan: the sinewes of this Legge,
All Greeke, and this all Troy: my Mothers blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bounds in my fathers: by love multipotent,
Thou should'st not beare from me a Greekish member
Wherein my sword had not impressure made
Of our ranke feud: but the just gods gainsay,
That any drop thou borrow'st from thy mother,
My sacred Aunt, should by my mortall Sword
Be drained. Let me embrace thee Ajax:
By him that thunders, thou hast lusty armes;
Hector would have them fall upon him thus,
Cozen all honor to thee.

Aja. I thanke thee Hector:

Thou art too gentle, and too free a man:
I came to kill thee Cozen, and beare hence
A great addition, earned in thy death.

Hect. Not Neoptolemus so mirabile,
On whose bright crest, fame with her lowd'st (Oyes)
Cries, This is he; could promise to himselfe,
A thought of added honor, torne from Hector.

Aene. There is expectance here from both the sides,
What further you will doe?

Hect. We'll answer it:

The due is embracement: Ajax farewell,

Ajax. If I might in entreaties finde successe,
As I did I have the chance: I would desire
My famous Cousin to our Grecian Tents.

Diom. 'Tis Agamemmons wish, and great Achilles
Doth long to see unarm'd the valiant Hector.

Hec. Aeneas, call my brother Troilus to me:
And signifie this loving interview
To the expectors of our Trojan part:
Desire them home. Give me thy hand, my Cousin:
I will goe eate with thee, and see your Knights.

Enter Agamemnon and the rest.

Aja. Great Agamemnon comes to meete us here.

Hec. The worthiest of them, tell me name by name:
But for Achilles, mine owne serching eyes
Shall finde him by his large and portly size.

Aga. Worthy of Armes: as welcome as to one,
That would be rid of such an enemy.
But that's no welcome: understand more cleere
What's past and what's to come, is strew'd with huskes
And formelesse ruine of oblivion:
But in this extant moment, faith and troth,
Strain'd purely from all hollow bias drawing:
Bids thee with most divine integritie,
From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome.

Hec. I thanke thee most imperious Agamemnon.

Aga. My

Ag. My well-fam'd Lord of Troy, no lesse to you.

Men. Let me confirme my Princely brothers greeting,
You brace of warlike brothers, welcome hither.

Hec. Whom must we answer?

Ent. The Noble Menelaus.

Hec. O, you my Lord, by Mars his gauntlet thanks,
Mocke not, that I affect th' untraded Oath,
Your quondam wife swears still by Venus Glove
Shee's well, but bad me not commend her to you.

Men. Name her not now sir, she's a deadly Theame:

Hec. O pardon, I offend.

Nest. I have (thou gallant Trojan) scene thee oft Labouring for destiny, make cruell way
Through ranks of Greekish youth: and I have seen thee
As hot as Perseus, spurre thy Phrygian Steed,
And scene thee scorning forfeits and subduments,
When thou hast hung thy advanced sword i' th' ayre,
Not letting it decline on the declined:
That I have said unto my standers by,
Loe Jupiter is yonder, dealing life.

And I have scene thee pause, and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greekes have hem'd thee in,
Like an Olympian wrestling. This have I scene,
But this thy countenance (till lockt in Steele)
I never saw till now. I knew thy Grandfire,
And once fought with him; he was a Souldier good,
But by great Mars (the captaine of us all,)
Never like thee. Let an old man embrace thee,
And (worthy Warrior) welcome to our Tents.

Ene. 'Tis the old Nestor.

Hec. Let me embrace thee good old Chronicle,
That hast so long walk'd hand in hand with time:
Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to claspe thee.

Ne. I would my armes could match thee in contention
As they contend with thee in courtesie.

Hec. I would they could.

Nest. Ha? by this white beard I'd fight with thee to morrow. Well, welcom, welcome: I have seen the time.

Uly. I wonder now, how yonder City stands,
When we have here her Base and pillar by us.

Hec. I know your favour Lord Vlysses well.
Ah sir, there's many a Greeke and Trojan dead;
Since first I saw your selfe, and Diomed
In Illion, on your Greekish Embassie.

Vly. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue,
My prophesie is but halfe his journey yet;
For yonder wals that partly front your towne,
Yond Towers, whose wanton tops do busse the clouds,
Must kisse their owne feet.

Hec. I must not beleve you:
There they stand yet: and modestly I thinke,
The fall of every Prygian stone will cost
A drop of Grecian blood: the end crownes all,
And that old common Arbitrator, Time,
Will one day end it.

Vly. So to him we leave it.
Most gentle, and most valiant Hector, welcome;
After the Generall, I beseech you next
To feast with me, and see me at my Tent.

Achil. I shall forestall thee Lord Vlysses, thou:
Now Hector I have fed mine eyes on thee,
I have with exact view perus'd thee Hector,
And quoted joynt by joynt.

Hec. Is this Achilles?

Achil. I am Achilles.

Hec. Stand faire I prythee, let me looke on thee.

Achil. Behold thy fill.

Hec. Nay, I have done already.

Achil. Thou art too breefe, I will the second time,
As I would buy thee, view thee, limbe by limbe.

Hec. O like a booke of sport thou'lt read me ore:
But there's more in me then thou understand'st.
Why dost thou so oppresse me with thine eye?

Achil. Tell me you Heavens, in which part of his body
Shall I destroy him? Whether there, or there, or there,
That I may give the locall wound a name,
And make distinct the very breach, where-out
Hectors great spirit flew. Answer me heavens.

Hec. It would discredit the blest gods, proud man,
To answer such a question: Stand againe;
Think'st thou to catch my life so pleasantly,
As to prenominate in nice conjecture
Where thou wilt hit me dead?

Achil. I tell thee yea.

Hec. Wert thou the Oracle to tell me so,
I'd not beleve thee: henceforth guard thee well,
For Ile not kill thee there, nor there, nor there,
But by the forge that stythied Mars his helme,
Ile kill thee every where, yea, ore and ore.
You wisest Grecians, pardon me this bragge,
His insolence drawes folly from my lips,
But Ile endeavour deeds to match these words,
Or may I never —

Atax. Do not chafe thee Cofin:
And you Achilles, let these threats alone
Till accident, or purpose bring you too't.
You may have every day enough of Hector
If you have stomacke. The generall state I feare,
Can scarce intreat you to be odde with him.

Hec. I pray you let us see you in the field,
We have had pelting Warres since you refus'd
The Grecians cause.

Achil. Dost thou intreat me Hector?
To morrow do I meete thee fell as death,
To night, all Friends.

Hec. Thy hands upon that match.

Ag. First, all you Peeres of Greece go to my Tent,
There in the full convive you: Afterwards,
As Hectors leisure, and your bounties shall Concurre together, severally intreat him.
Beate lowd the Taborines, let the Trumpets blow.
That this great Souldier may his welcome know. Exeunt.

Troy. My Lord Vlysses, tell me I beseech you,
In what place of the Field doth Calcas keepe?

Vly. At Menelaus Tent, most princely Troilus,
There Diomed doth feast with him to night,
Who neither lookes on heaven, nor on earth,
But gives all gaze and bent of amorous view
On the faire Cressida.

Troy. Shall I (sweet Lord) be bound to thee so much,
After we part from Agamemnons Tent,
To bring me thither?

Vly. You shall command me sir:
As gentle tell me, of what Honour was
This Cressida in Troy, had shee no Lover there
That walles her absence?

Troy. O sir, to such as boasting shew their scarres,
A mocke is due: will you walke on my Lord?
She was belov'd, she lov'd; she is, and dooth.
But still sweet Love is food for Fortunes tooth. Exeunt.

Enter Achilles, and Patroclus.

Achil. Ile heat his blood with Greekish wine to night,
Which

Which with my Semitar Ile coole to morrow :

Patroclus, let us Feast him to the hight.

Pat. Heere comes Thersites. Enter Thersites.

Achil. How now, thou core of Envy ?

Thou crusty batch of Nature, what's the newes ?

Ther. Why thou picture of what thou seem'st, & Idoll of Ideot-worshippers, here's a Letter for thee.

Achil. From whence, Fragment ?

Ther. Why thou full dish of Foole, from Troy.

Pat. Who keeps the Tent now ?

Ther. The Surgeons box, or the patients wound.

Patr. Well said adversity, and what need these tricks ?

Ther. Prythee be silent boy, I profit not by thy talke, thou art thought to be Achilles male Varlot.

Patro. Male Varlot you Rogue ? What's that ?

Ther. Why his masculine Whore. Now the rotten diseases of the South, guts-gripping Ruptures, Catarres, Loades a gravell i'th' backs, Lethargies, cold Palsies, and the like, take and take againe, such preposterous discoveries.

Pat. Why thou damnable box of envy thou, what mean'st thou to curse thus ?

Ther. Do I curse thee ?

Patr. Why no, you ruinous But, you whorson indistinguishable Curre.

Ther. No ? why art thou then exasperate, thou idle, immateriall skeine of Sleyd filke ; thou greene Sarcenet flap for a fore eye, thou tossell of a Prodigals purse thou : Ah how the poore world is pestred with such water-flies, diminutives of Nature.

Pat. Out gall.

Ther. Finch Egge.

Ach. My sweet Patroclus, I am th' warted quite From my great purpose in to morrowes battell : Heere is a Letter from Queene Hecuba, A token from her daughter, my faire Love, Both taxing me, and gaging me to keepe An Oath that I have sworne. I will not breake it, Fall Greeke, faile Fame, Honor or go, or stay, My maior vow lyes heere ; this Ile obey : Come, come Thersites, helpe to trim my Tent, This night in banquetting must all be spent. Away Patroclus. Exit.

Ther. With too much bloud, and too little Brain, these two may run mad : but if with too much braine, and too little blood, they do, Ile be a curer of madmen. Heere's Agamemnon, an honest fellow enough, and one that loves Quailles, but he has not so much Braine as care-wax ; and the goodly transformation of Iupiter there his Brother, the Bull, the primative Statue, and oblique memoriall of Cuckolds, a thrifty shooing-horne in a chaine, hanging at his Brothers legge, to what forme but that he is, should wit larded with malice, and malice forced with wit, turne him to : to an Asse were nothing, hee is both Asse and Oxe ; to an Oxe were nothing, hee is both Oxe and Asse : to be a Dogge, a Mule, a Cat, a Fitchew, a Toade, a Lizard, an Owle, a Puttocke, or a Herring without a Roe, I would not care : but to be Menelaus, I would conspire against Destiny. Aske me not what I would be, if I were not Thersites : for I care not to bee the lowse of a Lazar, so I were not Menelaus. Hoy-day spirits and fires.

Enter Hector, Ajax, Agamemnon, Vlysses, Nestor, Diomed, with Lights.

Ag. We go wrong, we go wrong.

Ajax. No yonder 'tis, there where we see the light.

Hect. I trouble you.

Ajax. No, not a whit.

Enter Achilles.

Vlyss. Heere comes himselfe to guide you ?

Achil. Welcome brave Hector, welcome Princes all.

Agam. So now faire Prince of Troy, I bid goodnight, Ajax commands the guard to tend on you.

Hect. Thanks, and goodnight to the Greeks generall.

Men. Good night my Lord.

Hect. Goodnight sweet Lord Menelaus.

Ther. Sweet draught : sweet quoth-a ? sweet sinke, sweet sure.

Achil. Goodnight and welcom, both at once, to those that go, or tarry.

Ag. Goodnight.

Achil. Old Nestor tarries, and you too Diomed, Keepe Hector company an houre, or two.

Dis. I cannot Lord, I have important businesse, The tide whereof is now, goodnight great Hector.

Hect. Give me your hand.

Vlyss. Follow his Torch, he goes to Chalcas Tent, Ile keepe you company.

Troy. Sweet sir, you honour me.

Hect. And so good night.

Achil. Come, come, enter my Tent. Exeunt.

Ther. That same Diomed's a false-hearted Rogue, a most unjust Knave ; I will no more trust him when hee leeres, then I will a Serpent when he hisses : he will spend his mouth & promise, like Brabler the Hound ; but when he performes, Astronomers foretell it, that it is prodigious, there will come some change : the Sunne borrowes of the Moone when Diomed keepes his word. I will rather leave to see Hector, then not to dogge him : they say, he keepes a Troyan Drab, and uses the Traitour Chalcas his tent. Ile after ——— Nothing but Letcherie ? All incontinent Varlets. Exeunt.

Enter Diomed,

Dio. What are you up here ho ? speake ?

Chal. Who calls ?

Dio. Diomed, Chalcas (I thinke wher's you Daughter ?

Chal. She comes to you.

Enter Troilus and Ulysses.

Ulyss. Stand where the Torch may not discover us.

Enter Cressid.

Troy. Cressid come forth to him.

Dio. How now my charge ?

Cres. Now my sweet gardian : hearke a word with you.

Troy. Yea, so familiar ?

Ulyss. She will sing any man at first sight.

Ther. And any man may finde her, if he can take her life : she's noted.

Dio. Will you remember ?

Cres. Remember ? yes.

Dio. Nay, but doe then ; and let your minde be coupled with your words.

Troy. What should she remember ?

Vlyss. List ?

Cres. Sweet hony Greeke, tempt me no more to folly.

Ther. Roguery.

Dio. Nay then :

Cres. Ile tell you what.

Dio. Fo, to, come tell a pin, you are a forsworne —

Cres. In faith I cannot : what would you have me doe ?

Ther. A juggling trick, to be secretly open.

Dio. What did you sweare you would bestow on me ?

Cres. I prethee doe not hold me to mine oath. Bid me doe any thing but that sweet Greeke.

Dio. Good

Dio. Good night.

Troy. Hold patience.

Ulis. How now Troian?

Cres. Diomed.

Dio. No, no, good night: Ile be your foole no more.

Troy. Thy better must.

Cres. Hearke one word in your eare.

Troy. O plague and madnesse!

Ulis. You are moved Prince, let us depart I pray you,

Left your displeasure should enlarge it selfe

To wrathfull tearmes: this place is dangerous;

The time right deadly: I beseech you goe

Troy. Behold, I pray you.

Ulis. Nay, good my Lord goe off:

You flow to great distraction: come my Lord?

Troy. I pray thee stay?

Ulis. You have not patience, come.

Troy. I pray you stay? by hell and all hells torments,

I will not speake a word.

Dio. And so good night.

Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.

Troy. Dost that grieve thee? O withered truth!

Ulis. Why, how now Lord?

Troy. By love I will be patient.

Cres. Gardian? why Greeke?

Dio. Fo, fo, adew, you palter.

Cres. In faith I doe not: come hither once againe.

Ulis. You shake my Lord at something; will you goe?

You will breake out.

Troy. She stroakes his cheek.

Ulis. Come, come.

Troy. Nay stay, by love I will not speake a word.

There is betwene my will, and all offences,

A guard of patience, stay a little while.

Ther. How the divell Luxury with his fat rumpe and Potato finger, tickles these together: frye lechery, frye,

Dio. But will you then?

Cres. In faith I will goe; never trust me else.

Dio. Give me some token for the surety of it.

Cres. Ile fetch you one.

Ulis. You have sworne patience.

Troy. Feare me not sweete Lord.

I will not be my selfe, nor have cognition

Of what I feele: I am all patience.

Enter Cressida.

Ther. Now the pledge, now, now, now.

Cres. Here Diomed, keepe this Sleeve.

Troy. O beauty! where is thy Faith?

Ulis. My Lord.

Troy. I will be patient, outwardly I will.

Cres. You looke upon that Sleeve? behold it well:

He lov'd me: O false wench: give't me againe.

Dio. Whose was't?

Cres. It is no matter now I have't againe.

I will not meete with you to morrow night:

I prythee Diomed visite me no more.

Ther. Now she sharpens: well said Whetstone.

Dio. I shall have it.

Cres. What, this?

Dio. I that.

Cres. O all you gods! O pretty, pretty pledge;

Thy Maister now lies thinking in his bed

Of thee and me, and sighes, and takes my Glove,

And gives memoriall dainty kisses to it;

As I kisse thee.

Dio. Nay, doe not snatch it from me.

Cres. He that takes that, takes my heart withall.

Dio. I had your heart before, this followes it.

Troy. I did sweare patience.

Cres. You shall not have it Diomed: faith you shall not Ile giue you something else.

Dio. I will have this: whose was it?

Cres. It is no matter.

Dio. Come tell me whose it was?

Cres. Twas one that lov'd me better then you will,
But now you have it, take it.

Dio. Whose was it?

Cres. By all Dianas waiting women yonder.
And by her selfe, I will not tell you whose.

Dio. To morrow will I weare it on my Helme,
And grieve his spirit that dares not challenge it.

Tro. Wert thou the divell, and wor't it on thy horne,
It should be challeng'd.

Cres. Well, well, tis done, tis past; and yet it is not:
I will not keepe my word.

Dio. Why then farewell,
Thou never shalt mocke Diomed againe.

Cres. You shalt not goe: one cannot speake a word;
But it strait starts you.

Dio. I doe not like this fooling.

Ther. Nor I by Pluto: but that that likes not me, pleases me best.

Dio. What shall I come? the houre.

Cres. I, come: O love! doe, come: I shall be plagu'd.

Dio. Farewell till then.

Exit.

Cres. Good night? I prythee come:

Troilus farewell! one eye yet lookes on thee,

But with my heart, the other eye, doth see-

Ah poore our sexe; this fault in us I finde:

The errour of our eye, directs our minde.

What errour leads, must erre: O then conclude,

Mindes swai'd by eyes, are full of turpitude.

Exit.

Ther. A prooffe of strength she could not publish more;
Vnlesse she say, my minde is now turn'd whore.

Ulis. Al's done my Lord.

Troy. It is.

Ulis. Why stay we then?

Troy To make a recordation to my soule
Of every syllable that here was spoke;

But if I tell how these two did coact;

Shall I not lie, in publishing a truth?

Sith yet there is a credence in my heart:

An esperance so obstinately strong,

That doth invert that rest of eyes and eares;

As if thole organs had deceptious functions,

Created onely to calumniate.

Was Cressid here?

Ulis. I cannot conjure Trojan,

Troy. She was not sure.

Ulis. Most sure she was.

Troy. Why my negation hath no taste of madnesse?

Ulis. Nor mine my Lord: Cressid was here but now.

Troy. Let it not be beleev'd for womanhood:

Thinke we had mothers; doe not give advantage

To stubborn Criticks, apt without a theame

For depravation, to square the generall sex

By Cressids rule. Rather thinke this not Cressid.

Ulis. What hath she done Prince, that can soyle our mothers?

Troy. Nothing at all, unlesse that this were she.

Ther. Will he swagger himselfe out on's owne eyes?

Troy. This she? no, this is Diomedes Cressida:

If beauty have a soule, this is not she:

bb

If

If soules guide vowes; if vowes are sanctimony;
If sanctimony be the gods delight:
If there be rule in unity it selfe,

This is not she: O madnesse of discourse!
That cause sets up, with; and against thy selfe,
By foule authority: where reason can revolt
Without perdition, and losse assume all reason,
Without revolt. This is, and is not Cressid:
Within my soule, there doth conduce a fight
Of this strange nature, that a thing inseparate,
Divides more wider then the skie and earth:
And yet the spacious bredth of this division,
Admits no Orifice for a point as subtle,
As Ariachnes broken woofe to enter:
Instance, O instance! strong as Plutoes gates:
Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heaven;
Instance O instance, strong as heaven it selfe:
The bonds of heaven are slipt, dissolv'd, and loos'd:
And with another knot five finger tied,
The fractions of her faith, orts of her love:
The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy reliques,
Of her ore-eaten faith, are bound to Diomed.

Uly. May worthy Troilus be halfe attached
With that which here his passion doth expresse?

Troy. I Greeke, and that shall be divulged well
In Characters, as red as Mars his heart
Inflam'd with Venus; never did yong man fancy
With so eternall, and so fixt a soule.
Hearke Greek: as much as I doe Cressida love;
So much by weight, hate I her Diomed,
That Sleeve is mine, that heele beare in his Helme:
Were it a Caske compos'd by Vulcans skill,
My Sword should bite it: Not the dreadfull spout,
Which Shipmen doe the Hurricano call,
Constring'd in masse by the almighty Fenne,
Shall dizzie with more clamour Neptunes eare
In his discent; then shall my prompted sword,
Falling on Diomed.

Ther. Heele tickle it for his concupy.

Troy. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false, false:
Let all untruths stand by thy stained name,
And theyle seeme glorious.

Uly. O containe your selfe:
Your passion drawes eares hither.

Enter Aeneas.

En. I have beene seeking you this houre my Lord:
Hector by this is arming him in Troy.

Ajax your Guard, stales to conduct yon home.

Troy. Have with you Prince: my curteous Lord adew:
Farewell revolted faire: and Diomed,
Stand fast, and weare a Cattle on thy head.

Uly. Ile bring you to the Gates.

Troy. Accept distracted thanks.

Exeunt Troilus, Aeneas, and Ulysses.

Ther. Would I could meete that roague Diomed, I would croke like a Raven: I would bode, I would bode:
Patroclus will give me any thing for the intelligence of this whore: the Parrot will not do more for an Almond, then he for a commodious drab: Lechery, lechery, still warres and lechery, nothing else holds fashion, A burning divell, take them. Exit.

Enter Hector and Andromache.

And. When was my Lord so much ungently temper'd,
To stop his eares against admonishment?
Vname, vname, and doe not fight to day.

Hec. You traine me to offend you: get you gone.

By the everlasting gods, Ile goe.

And. My dreames will sure prove ominous to the day.
Hec. No more I say. Enter Cassandra.

Cas. Where is my brother Hector?

And. Here sister, arm'd, and bloody in intent:
Comfort with me in loud and deere petition:
Pursue we him on knees: for I have dreamt
Of bloody turbulence; and this whole night
Hath nothing beene but shapes, and formes of slaughter.

Cas. O, tis true.

Hec. Ho? bid my Trumpet sound.

Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother.

Hec. Begon I say: the gods have heard me sweare.

Cas. The gods are deafe to hot, and peevish vowes;
They are polluted offerings, more abhord
Then spotted Livers in the sacrifice.

And. O be perswaded, doe not count it holy,
To hurt by being just; it is as lawfull:
For we would count give much to as violent thefts,
And rob in the behalfe of charity.

Cas. It is the purpose that makes strong the vowe;
But vowes to every purpose must not hold:
Vname sweete Hector.

Hec. Hold you still I say;

Mine honour keeps the weather of my fate:
Life every man holds deere, but the deere man
Holds honor farre more precious-deere, then life.

Enter Troilus.

How now yong man: mean'st thou to fight to day?

And. Cassandra, call my father to perswade.

Exit Cassandra.

Hec. No faith yong Troilus; doffe thy harnesse youth:
I am to day with vaine of Chivalry?

Let grow thy Sinews till their knots be strong;
And tempt not yet the brush of the warre.
Vname thee, goe, and doubt thou not braue boy,
Ile stand to day, for thee, and me, and Troy.

Troy. Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you;
Which better fits a Lyon, then a man.

Hec. What vice is that? good Troilus chide me for it.

Troy. When many times the captive Grecian fals,
Even in the fanne and winde of your faire Sword:
You bid them rite, and live.

Hec. O tis faire play.

Troy. Fooies play, by heaven Hector.

Hec. How now? how now?

Troy. For th'love of all the gods
Let's leave the Hermit Pitty with our Mothers;
And when we have our Armors buckled on,
The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords,
Spur them to ructull worke, reine them from ruth.

Hec. Fi savage, sic.

Troy. Hector, then tis warres.

Hec. Troilus, I would not have you fight to day.

Troy. Who should with-hold me?
Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars,
Beckning with fiery trunchion my retire;
Not Priamus, and Hecuba on knees;
Their eyes ore-galled with recourse of teares;
Nor you my brother, with your true sword drawne
Oppos'd to hinder me, should stop my way:
But by my ruine.

Enter Priam and Cassandra.

Cas. Lay hold upon him Priam, hold him fast:
He is thy crutch; now if thou loose thy stay,
Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee,

Fall all together.

Priam. Come Hector, come, goe backe:
Thy wife hath dreamt: thy mother hath had visions;
Cassandra doth foresee; and I my selfe,
Am like a Prophet suddenly enrapt,
to tell thee that this day is ominous:
Therefore come backe.

Hel. Aeneas is a field,
And I do stand engag'd to many Greekes,
Even in the faith of valour, to appeare
This morning to them.

Priam. I, but thou shalt not goe,

Hel. I must not breake my faith:
You know me dutifull, therefore deare sir,
Let me not shame respect; but give me leave
To take that course by your consent and voice,
Which you doe here forbid me, Royall Priam.

Cas. O Priam, yeelde not to him.

And. Doe not deere father.

Hel. Andromache I am offended with you:
Vpon the love you beare me, get you in.

Exit Andromache.

Troy. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girle,
Makes all these bodements.

Cas. O farewell, deere Hector:
Looke how thou die'st; looke how thy eye turnes pale:
Looke how thy wounds doe bleede at many vents:
Hearke how Troy roares; ho Hecuba cries out;
How poore Andromache shrills her dolour forth;
Behold distraction, frensy, and amazement,
Like witlesse Antickes one another meete,
And all cry Hector, Hectors dead: O Hector!

Troy. Away.

Cas. Farewell: yes, soft: Hector I take my leave;
Thou do'st thy selfe, and all our Troy deceive. Exit.

Hec. You are amaz'd, my Liege, at her exclaime:
Goe in and cheere the Towne, weeke forth and fight:
Doe deedes of praise, and tell you them at night.

Priam. Farewell: the gods with safety stand about thee.

Alarum.

Troy. They are at it, hearke: proud Diomed, beleeve
I come to loose my arme, or winne my sleeve.

Enter Pandar.

Pad. Doe you heare my Lord? do you heare?

Troy. What now?

Pad. Here's a Letter come from yond poore girle.

Troy. Let me reade.

Pad. A whorson tifficke, a whorson rascally tifficke, so troubles me: and the foolish fortune of this girle, and what one thing, what another, that I shall leave you one oth's dayes; and I have a rheume in mine eyes too, and such an ache in my bones: that unlesse a man were curst,
I cannot tell what to thinke on't. What sayes she there?

Troy. Words, words, meere words, no matter from the heart:

The effect doth operate another way.
Goe winde to winde, there turne and change together:
My love with words and errors still she feedes;
But edifies another with her deedes.

Pad. Why, but heare you?

Troy. Hence brother lachy; ignomy and shame
Pursue thy life, and live aye with thy name.

Alarum.

Exeunt.

Enter Therites in excursion.

Ther. Now they are clapper-clawing one another, Ile goe looke on: that dissembling abominable varlet Diomed, has got that same scurvy, dotting, foolish yong knaves Sleeve of Troy, there in his Helme: I would faine see them meet; that, that same yong Trojan asse, that loves the whore there, might send that Greekish whore-mai-sterly villaine, with the Sleeve, backe to the dissembling luxurious drabbe, of a sleevelsse errant. O'th' tother side, the pollicy of those crafty swearing rascals; that stole old Mouse-eaten dry cheete, Nestor: and that same dogfoxe Ulysses is not prov'd worth a Black-berry. They let me up in pollicy, that mungrill curre Ajax, against that dogge of asbad a kinde, Achilles. And now is the curre
Ajax prouder then the curre Achilles, and will not arme to day. Whereupon, the Grecians began to proclaime barbarisme; and pollicy growes into an ill opinion.

Enter Diomed and Troilus.

Soft, heere comes Sleeve, and th' other.

Troy. Flye not: for should'st thou take the River Stix,
I would swim after.

Diom. Thou do'st miscall retire:
I doe not flye; but advantageous care
Withdrew me from the oddes of multitude:
Have at thee?

Ther. Hold thy whore Grecian: now for thy whore Troian: Now the Sleeve, now the Sleeve.

Enter Hector.

Hel. What art thou Greek? art thou for Hectors match?
Art thou of blood, and honour?

Ther. No, no: I am a rascal: a scurvy railing knave: a very filthy roague.

Hec. I doe beleeve thee, live.

Ther. God a mercy, that thou wilt beleeve me; but a plagve breake thy necke—for frightening me: what become of the wenching rogues? I thinke they have swallowed one another. I would laugh at that miracle—yet in a sort, lechery eates it selfe: Ile seeke them.

Exit.

Enter Diomed and Servant.

Dis. Goe, goe, my servant, take thou Troilus Horse;
Present the faire Steede to my Lady Cressid:
Fellow, commend my service to her beauty:
Tell her, I have chastis'd the amorous Trojan.
And am her Knight by prooffe.

Ser. I goe my Lord. Enter Agamemnon.

Ag. Renew, renew, the fierce Polidamus
Hath beare downe Menon: bastard Margarelon
Hath Doreus prisoner.

And stands Colossus-wise waving his beame,
Vpon the pashed courses of the Kings:
Epistropus and Cedus, Polixenes is slaine:
Amphimachus, and Thous deadly hurt:
Patroclus tane or slaine, and Palamedes
Sore hurt and bruised; the dreadfull Sagittary
Appauls our numbers, haste we Diomed
To re-enforcement, or we perish all.

Enter Nestor.

Nest. Goe beare Patroclus body to Achilles,
And bid the snail-pac'd Ajax arme for shame,
There is a thousand Hectors in the field:
Now here he fights on Galathea his Horse,
And there lacks worke: anon he's therea foote,
And there they flye or dye, like scaled sculs,

bb 2

Before

Before the belching Whale; then is he yonder,
And there the straying Greekes, ripe for his edge,
Fall downe before him, like the mowers swath;
Here, there, and every where, he leaves and takes;
Dexterity so obaying appetite,
That what he will he does, and does so much,
That prooffe is call'd impossibility.

Enter Vlysses.

Vlyss. Oh, courage, courage Princes: great Achilles
Is arming, weeping, curling, vowing vengeance;
Patroclus wounds have rouz'd his drowzie bloud,
Together with his mangled Myrmidons,
That noselesse, handlelesse, hackt and chipt, come to him;
Crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend,
And foames at mouth, and he is arm'd, and at it:
Roaring for Troilus; who hath done to day,
Mad and fantasticke execution;
Engaging and redeeming of himselfe,
With such a carelesse force, and forcelesse care,
As if that luck in very spight of cunning, bad him win al.

Enter Ajax.

Aia. Troilus, thou coward Troilus. Exit.

Dio. I, there, there.

Nest. So, so, we draw together. Exit.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Where is this Hector?

Come, come, thou boy-queller, shew thy face:
Know what it is to meete Achilles angry.

Hector, wher's Hector? I will none but Hector. Exit.

Enter Ajax.

Aia. Troilus, thou coward Troilus, shew thy head.

Enter Diomed.

Diom. Troilus, I say, wher's Troilus?

Aia. What would'st thou?

Dio. I would correct him.

Aia. Were I the Generall,
Thou should'st have my office,
Ere that correction: Troilus I say, what Troilus?

Enter Troilus.

Troy. Oh tritour Diomed!

Turne thy false face thou traytor,
And pay thy life thou owest me for my horse.

Dio. Ha art thou there?

Aia. Ile fight with him alone, stand Diomed.

Dio. He is my prize, I will not looke upon.

Troy. Come both you cogging Greekes, have at you both. Exit Troilus.

Enter Hector.

Hect. Yea Troilus? O well fought my yongest Brother.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Now doe I see thee; have at thee Hector.

Hect. Pause if thou wilt.

Achil. I doe disdaine thy curtesie, proud Trojan;
Be happy that my armes are out of use:
My rest and negligence befriend thee now,
But thou anon shalt heare of me againe:
Till when, goe seeke thy fortune.

Hect. Fare thee well:

I would have beene much more a fresher man,
Had I expected thee: how now my Brother?

Enter Troilus.

Troy. Ajax hath tane Aeneas; shall it be?
No, by the flame of yonder glorious heaven,
He shall not carray him: Ile be tane too,
Or bring him off: Fate heare me what I say;

I wreake not, though thou end my life to day. Exit.

Enter one in Armour.

Hect. Stand, stand, thou Greeke,

Thou art a goodly marke:

No? wilt thou not? I like thy armour well,

Ile frush it, and unlooke the rivets all,

But Ile be maister of it: wilt thou not beaft abide?

Why then flye on, Ile hunt thee for thy hide. Exit.

Enter Achilles with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me you my Myrmidons:

Marke what I say; attend me where I wheele:

Strike not a stroake, but kepe your selves in breath;

And when I have the bloody Hector found,

Empale him with your weapons round about:

In fellest manner execute your armes

Follow me sirs, and my proceeding eye;

It is decreed, Hector the great must dye. Exit.

Enter Therites, Menelaus, and Paris

Ther. The Cuckold and the Cuckold-maker are at it:
now bull, now dogge, lowe; Paris lowe; now my double hen'd sparrow; low Paris, lowe; the bull has the game:
ware hornes ho?

Exit Paris and Menelaus.

Enter Bastard.

Bast. Turne slave and fight.

Ther. What art thou?

Bast. A Bastard Sonne of Priams.

Ther. I am a Bastard too, I love Bastards, I am a Ba stard begot, Bastard instructed, Bastard in minde, Bastard in valour, in every thing illegitimate: one Beare will not bite another, and wherefore should one Bastard take heede, the quarrel's most ominous to us: if the Sonne of a whore fight for a whore, he tempts judgement: farewell Bastard.

Bast. The divell take the coward. Exeunt.

Enter Hector.

Hec. Most putrified core so faire without:
Thy goodly armour thus hath cost thy life.
Now is my dares worke done; Ile take good breath:
Rest Sword, thou hast thy fill of bloud and death.

Enter Achilles and his Myrmidons.

Achil. Looke Hector how the Sunne begins to set:
How ugly night comes breathing at his heeles,
Even with the vaile and darking of the Sunne.
To close the day up, Hector's life is done.

Hect. I am unarm'd, for-goe this, vantage Greeke.

Achil. Strike fellowes strike, this is the man I seeke.

So Illion fall thou: now Troy sinke downe:

Here lyes thy heart, thy sinewes, and thy bone.

On Myrmidons, cry you all a maine,

Achilles hath the mighty Hector slaine. Retreat.

Hearke, a retreat upon our Grecian part.

Gree. The Trojan Trumpets sounds the like my Lord.

Achi. The dragon wing of night ore-spreads the earth

And stickler-like the Armies seperates

My halfe supt Sword, that frankly would have fed,

Pleas'd with this dainty bitt: thus goes to bed.

Come, tye his body to my horses taylor:

Along the field, I will the Trojan traile. Exeunt.

Sound Retreat. Shout.

Enter Agamemnon, Ajax, Menelaus, Nestor, Diomed, and the rest marching.

Aga. Hearke, hearke, what shout is that?
Nest. Peace Drums.

Sol Achilles

Sold. Achilles, Achilles, Hector's slaine, Achilles.

Dis. The bruite is Hector's slaine, and by Achilles.

Asa. If it be so, yet bragge let it be:

Great Hector was a man as good as he.

Agam. Martch patiently along; let one be sent

To pray Achilles see us at our Tent.

If in his death the gods have us befriended,

Great Troy is ours, and our sharpe wars are ended.

Exeunt.

Enter Aeneas, Paris, Amthenor and Deiphobus.

Ane. Stand hee, yet are we maisters of the field,

Never goe home; here starve we out the night.

Enter Troilus.

Troy. Hector is slaine.

All Hector? the gods forbid.

Troy. Hee's dead: and at the murderers Horses taile,

In beaulty fort, drag'd through the shamefull Field,

Frowne on you heavens, effect your rage with speede:

Sit gods upon your throanes, and smile at Troy.

I say at once, let your brieft plagues be mercy,

And linger not our sure destructions on,

Ane. My Lord, you doe discomfortall the Hoste.

Troy. You understand me not, that tell me so:

I doe not speake of flight, of feare, of death,

But dare all imminence that gods and men,

Addresse their dangers in. Hector is gone:

Who shall tell Priam so for Hecuba;

Let him that will a screechoule aye be call'd,

Goe in to Troy, and say there, Hector's dead:

There is a word will Priam turne to stone;

Make wels, and Nobes of the maides and wives;

Coole statues of the youth: and in a word,

Scarre Troy out of it selfe. But martch away,

Hector is dead: there is no more to say.

Stay yet: you vile abhominable Tents,

Thus proudly pight upon our Phrygian plaines:

Let Titan rise as early as he dare,

Ile through, and through you; & thou great siz'd coward:

No space of Earth shall funder our two hates,

Ile haunt thee, like a wicked conscience still,

That mouldeth goblins swift as frensies thoughts.

Strike a free match to Troy, with comfort goe:

Hope of revenge, shall hide our inward woe.

Enter Pandarus.

Pand. But heare you? heare you?

Troy. Hence brother, lacky, ignomy, and shame

Perfuethy life, and live aye with thy name.

Exeunt.

Pa. A goodly medicine for mine a kingbones: oh world, world, world! thus is the poore agent dispisde: Oh trai-

tours and bawdes; how earnestly are you set aworke, and how ill requited? why should our indeavour be so desir'd, and the performance so loath'd? What Verfe for it? what instance for it? let me see

Full merrily the humble Bee doth sing,

Till he hath lost his hony, and his sting.

And being once subdu'd in armed taile,

Sweete hony, and sweete notes together faile.

Good traders in the flesh, set this in your painted cloathes

As many as be heere of Panders hall,

Your eyes halfe out, weepe out at Pandar's fall:

Or if you cannot weepe, yet give some grones;

Though not for me, yet for your akingbones:

Brethren and sisters of the hold-dore trade,

Some two months hence, my will shall here be made:

It should be now, but that my feare is this:

Some galled Goose of Winchester would hiss:

Till then, Ile sweare, and seeke about for eases;

And at that time be queath you my diseases.

Exeunt.

FIN IS.

The Tragedy of Coriolanus:

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter a Company of Mutinous Citizens, with Staves, Clubs, and other weapons.

1. Citizen.

BEfore we proceed any further, heare me speake.

All. Speake, speake.

1. Cit. You are all resolv'd rather to dy then to famish?

All. resolv'd, resolv'd.

1. Cit. First you know, Caius Martius is chiefe enemy to the people.

All. We know't.

1. Cit. Let us kill him, and wee'l have Corne at our owne price. Is't a Verdict?

All. No more talking on't, Let it be done, away, away

2. Cit. One word, good Citizens

1. Cit. We are accounted poore Citizens, the Patricians good: what Authority sursets one, would relevee us, If they would yelde us but the superfluity while it were wholsome, we might guesse they releev'd us humanely: But they thinke we are too deere, the leannes that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance, our sufferance is againe to them. Let us revenge this with our Pikes, ere we become Raks. For the Gods know, I speake this in hunger for Bread, not in thirst for Revenge.

2. Cit. Would you proccede especially against Caius Martius.

All. Against him first: He's a very dog to the Commonalty.

2. Cit. Consider you what Services he ha's done for his Country?

1. Cit. Very well, and could be content to give him good report for't, but that hee payes himselfe with being proud.

All. Nay, but speake not maliciously.

1. Cit. I say unto you, what he hath done Famously, he did it to that end: though soft conscienc'd men can be content to say it was for his Countrey, he did it to please his Mother, and to be partly proud, which he is, even to the altitude of his vertue.

2. Cit. What he cannot helpe in his Nature, you account a Vice in him: You must in no way say he is courteous.

1. Cit. If I must not, I neede not be barren of Accusations he hath faults (with surplus) to tyre in repetition.

Shows within.

What shows are those? The other side a'th City is risen: why stay we prating heere? To th' Capitoll.

All. Come, come.

1. Cit. Soft, who comes heere?

Enter Menenius Agrippa.

2. Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa, one that hath alwayes lov'd the people.

1. Cit. He's one honest enough, would al the rest were so.

Men. What workes my COUNTRYMEN in hand? Where go you with your Bats and Clubs? The matter Speake I pray you.

2. Cit. Our busines is not unknowne to th' Senat, they have had inkling this fortnight what we intend to do, now wee'l shew em in deeds: they say poore Suiters have strong breaths, they shal know we have strong armstoo.

Men. Why Maisters, my good Friends, mine honest Neighbours, will you undo your selves?

2. Cit. We cannot Sir, we are undone already.

Men. I tell you Friends, most charitable care Have the Patricians of you for your wants. Your suffering in this dearth, you may as well Strike at the Heaven with your staves, as lift them Against the Roman State, whose course will on The way it takes: cracking ten thousand Curbes Of more strong linkd asunder, then can ever Appeare in your impediment. For the Dearth, The Gods, not the Patricians make it, and Your knees to them (not armes) must helpe. Alacke, You are transported by Calamity Thether, where more attends you, and you slander The Helmes o'th State; who care for you like Fathers, When you curse them, as Enemies.

2. Cit. Care for us? True indeed, they nere car'd for us yer. Suffer us to famish, and their Store-houses cram'd with Graine: Make Edicts for Vsury, to support Vsurers; repeale daily any wholsome Act established against the rich, and provide more piercing Statutes daily, to chaine up and restraine the poore. If the Warres eate us not uppe, they will, and ther's all the love they beare us.

Men. Either you must Confesse your selves wondrous Malicious, Or be accus'd of Folly. I shall tell you A pretty Tale, it may be you have heard it, But since it serves my purpose, I will venture To scale't a little more.

2. Cit. Well, Ile heare it Sir: yet you must not thinke To fobbe' off our disgrace with a tale: But and't please you deliver.

Men. There was a time, when all the bodies members Rebell'd against the Belly; thus accus'd it: That onely like a Gulfe it did remaine

I'th

It's midd'le a th'body, idle and unactive,
Still cubbordering the Viand, never bearing
Like labour with the rest, where th'other Instruments
Did see, and heare, devise, instruct, walke, feele,
And mutually participate, did minister
Vnto the appetite, and affection common
Of the whole body, the Belly answer.

2 Cit. Well sir, what answer made the Belly.

Men. Sir, I shall tell you with a kinde of Smile,
Which ne're came from the Lungs, but even thus:
For looke you I may make the belly Smile,
As well as speake, it tantingly replied
To th'discontented Members, the mutinous parts
That envied his receite: even so most fitly,
As you maligne our Senators, for that
They are not such as you.

2 Cit. Your Bellies answer: What
The Kingly crown'd head, the vigilant eye,
The Counsaillor Heart, the Arme our Souldier,
Our Steed the Legge, the Tongue our Trumpeter;
With other Muniments and petty helpes
In this our Fabricke, if that they

Men. What then? Foreme, this Fellow speakes.
What then? What then?

2 Cit. Should by the Cormorant belly be restrain'd,
Who is the sinke a th'body.

Men. Well, what then?

2 Cit. The former Agent, if they did complaine,
What could the Belly answer?

Men. I will tell you,
If you'll bestow a small (of what you have little)
Patience awhile; you'll heare the Bellies answer.

2 Cit. Y're long about it.

Men. Note me this good Friend;
Your most grave Belly was deliberate,
Not rash like his Accusers and thus answered
True is it my Incorporate Friends (quoth he)
That I receive the generall Food at first
Which you do live upon: and fit it is,
Because I am the Store-house, and the Shop
Of the whole Body. But, if you do remember,
I send it through the Rivers of your blood
Even to the Court, the Heart, to th' teate o'th Braine,
And through the Crankes and Offices of man,
The strongest Nerves, and small inferiour Veines
From me receive that naturall competency
Whereby they live. And though that all at once
(You my good Friends, this sayes the Belly) marke me.

2 Cit. I sir, well, well.

Men. Though all at once, cannot See what I do deliver out to each,
Yet I can make my Awdit up, that all
From me do backe receive the Flowre of all,
And leave me but the Bran. What say you toot?

2 Cit. It was an answer, how apply you this?

Men. The Senators of Rome, are this good Belly,
And you the mutinous Members: For examine
Their Counsailes, and their Care; digest things rightly,
Touching the Weale a'th Common, you shall finde
No publique benefit which you receive
But it proceeds, or comes from them to you,
And no way from your selves. What do you thinke?
You, the great Toe of this Assembly?

2 Cit. I the great Toe? Why the great Toe?

Men. For that being one o'th lowest, basest, poorest
Of this most wise Rebellion, thou goest formost:

Thou Rascall, that art worst in blood to run;
Lead'st first to win some vantage.
But make you ready your stiffe bats and clubs,
Rome, and her Rats, are at the point of battel,
The one side must have baile.

Enter Caius Martius.

Hayle, Noble Martius.

Mar. Thanks. What's the matter you dissentious rogues
That rubbing the poore Itch of your Opinion,
Make your selves Scabs.

2 Cit. We have ever your good word.

Mar. He that will give good words to thee, will flatter
Beneath abhorring. What would you have, you Curres,
That like nor Peace, nor Warre? The one affrights you,
The other makes you proud. He that trusts to you,
Where he should finde you Lyons, findes you Hares:
Where Foxes, Geese you are: No surer, no,
Then is the coale of fire upon the Ice,
Or Hailstone in the Sun. Your Vertue is,
To make him worthy, whose offence suddnes him,
And curse that Iustice did it. Who deserves Greatnesse, Deserves your Hate: and your Affections are
A sickmans Appetite; who desires most that Which would encrease his evill. He that depends
Vpon your favours, swimmes with finnes of Leade,
And hewes downe Oakes, with rushes. Hang ye: trust ye?
With every Minute you do change a Minde,
And call him Noble, that was now your Hate:
Him vilde, that was your Garland. What's the matter,
That in these severall places of the City,
You cry against the Noble Senate, who (Vnder the Gods) keepe you in awe, which else
Would feede on one another? What's their seeking?

Men. For Corne at their owne rates, whereof they say
The City is well stor'd.

Men. Hang 'em: They say?

They'll sit by th' fire, and presume to know
Whats done it'h Capitoll: Who's like to rise,
Who thrives, and who declines: Side factions, & give out
Conjecturall Marriages, making parties strong,
And feebling such as stand not in their liking,
Below their cobled Shooes. They say thers grain enough?
Would the Nobility lay aside their ruth,
And let me use my Sword, I'de make a Quarry
With thousands of these quarter'd slaves, as high
As I could picke my Lance.

Men. Nay these are almost thoroughly perswaded:
For though abundantly they lacke discretion
Yet are they passing Cowardly. But I beseech you,
What sayes the other Troope?

Mar. They are dissolv'd: Hang 'em;
They said they were an hungry, sigh'd forth Proverbs
That Hunger-broke stone wals: that dogges must eate
That meate was made for mouths. That the gods sent not Corne for the Richmen onely: With these shreds
They vented their Complaining, which being answer'd
And a petition granted them, a strange one,
To breake the heart of generosity,
And make bold power looke pale, they threw their caps
As they would hang them on the hornes a'th Moone, Shooting their Emulation.

Men. What is graunted them?

Mar. Five Tributes to defend their vulgar wisdoms
Of their owne choice. One's Iunius Brutus,
Sicinius velutus, and I know not. Sdeath,

The

Therabbe should have first unroo't the City
Ere so prevail'd with me; it will in time
Win upon power, and throw forth greater Theames
For Infurrections arguing.

Menen. This is strange.

Mar. Go get you home you Fragments.

Enter a Messenger hastily.

Mes. Where's Caius Martius?

Mar. Heere: whats the matter?

Mes. The newes is sir, the Volcies are in Armes.

Mar. I am glad on't, then we shall ha meanes to vent
Our musty superfluity. See our best Elders.

Enter Sicinius Velutus, Annulus Brutus Cominius, Titus Lartius, with other Senators.

1. Sen. Martius tis true, that you have lately told us,
The Volces are in Armes.

Mar. They have a Leader,

Tullus Aufidius that will put you toot:

I siene in envying his Nobility:

And were I any thing but what I am,

I would wish me onely he.

Com. You have fought together?

Mar. Were halfe to halfe the world by th'cares, & he Vpon my party, Ide revolt to make Onely my warres with him. He is a Lion
That I am proud to hunt.

1. Sen. Then worthy Martius,
Attend upon Cominius to these Warres.

Com. It is your former promise.

Mar. Sir it is,

And I am constant: Titus Lucius, thou
Shalt see me once more strike at Tullus face.
What art thou stiffe? Stand'st out?

Tit. No Caius Martius,
He leane upon one Crutch, and fight with tother;
Ere stay behinde this Businesse.

Men. Oh true-bred.

Sen. Your company to'th'Capitoll, where I know
Our greatest Friends attend us.

Tit. Lead you on: Follow Cominius, we must followe
you, right worthy you Priority.

Com. Noble Martius.

Sen. Hence to your homes, be gone.

Mar. Nay let them follow,

The Volces have much Corne: take these Rats thither,
To gnaw their Garners. Worshipfull Mutiners,
Your valour puts well forth: Pray follow. Exeunt.

Citizens scale away. Manent Sicin, & Brutus.

Sicin. Was ever man so proud as is this Martius?

Brut. He has no equall.

Sic. When we were chosen Tribunes for the people.

Brut. Mark'd you his lip and eyes.

Sic. Nay, but his tapnts.

Brut. Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the Gods.

Sic. Bemocke the modest Moone.

Brut. The present Warres devoure him, he is growne
Too proud to be so valiant.

Sicin. Such a Nature, tickled with good successe, dis-daines the shadow which he treads on at noone, but I do wonder, his insolence can brooke to be commanded under Cominius?

Brut. Fame, at the which he aymes,
In whom already he is well grac'd, cannot Better he held, nor more attain'd then by

A place below the first: for what miscarries
Shall be the Generals fault, though he performe
To th'v'tmost of a man, and giddy censure
Will then cry out of Martius: Oh, if he Had borne the businesse.

Sic. Besides, if things go well,
Opinion that so stickes on Martius, shall
Of his demerits rob Cominius.

Brut. Come: halfe all Cominius Honors are to Martius
Though Martius earn'd them not: and all his faults
To Martius shall be Honors, though indeed
In ought he merit not.

Sic. Let's hence, and heare
How the dispatch is made, and in what fashion
More then his singularity, he goes
Vpon this present Action.

Brut. Let's along. Exeunt.

Enter Tullus Aufidius with Senators of Coriolus.

1. Sen. So, your opinion is Aufidius.
That they of Rome are entred in our Countaies,
And know how we proceede,

Auf. Is it not yours?

What ever hath bin thought one in this State
That could be brought to bodily act, ere Rome
Had circumvention: tis not foure dayes gone
Since I heard thence, these are the words, I thinke
I have the Letter heere: yes, heere it is;
They have prest a power, but it is not knowne
Whether for East or West: the Death is great,
The people Mutinous: And it is rumour'd
Cominius, Martius your old Enemy
(Who is of Rome worse hated then of you)
And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman,
These three leade on this Preparation
Whether tis bent: most likely, tis for you:
Consider of it.

1. Sen. Our Armie's in the Field:
We never yet made doubt but Rome was ready
To answer us.

Auf. Nor did you thinke it folly,
To keepe your great pretences vayl'd, till when
They needs must shew themselves, which in the hatching
It seem'd appear'd to Rome. By the discovery,
We shall be shortned in our ayme, which was
To take in many Townes, ere (almost) Rome
Should know we were a-foot.

2. Sen. Noble Aufidius,
Take your commission, hye you to your Bands,
Let us alone to guard Coriolus
If they set downe before's: for the remove Bring up your Army: but (I thinke) you'll finde
Th'have not prepar'd for us.

Auf. O doubt not that,
I speake from Certainties. Nay more,
Some parcels of their Power are forth already,
And onely hitherward. I leave your Honors.
If we, and Caius Martius chance to meete,
Tis sworne betweene us, we shall ever strike
Till one can do no more.

All. The Gods assist you.

Auf. And keepe your Honors safe.

1. Sen. Farewell.

2. Sen. Farewell.

All. Farewell. Exeunt omnes

Enter

*Enter Volunna and Virgilia, mother and wife to Martius:
They set them downe on two lowe stools and some.*

Voln. I pray you daughter sing, or expresse your selfe in a more comfortable sort: If my Sonne were my Husband, I should freelier rejoyce in that absence wherein he wonne Honor, then in the embracements of his Bed, where he would shew most love. When yet hee was but tender-bodied, and the onely Sonne of my womb; when youth with comelinesse pluck'd all gaze his way; when for a day of Kings entreaties, a Mother should not sel him an houre from her beholding; I considering how Honour would become such a person, that it was no better then Picture-like to hang by th' wall, if renowne made it not stirre, was pleas'd to let him seeke danger, where he was like to finde fame: To a cruell Warre I sent him, from whence he return'd, his browes bound with Oake. I tell thee Daughter, I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a Man-child, then now in first seeing he had proved himselfe a man.

Virg. But had he died in the Businesse Madame, how then?

Volun. Then his good report should have beene my Sonne, I therein would have found issue. Heare me: professe sincerely, had I a dozen sons each in my love alike, and none lesse deere then thine, and my good Martius, I had rather had eleven dye Nobly for their Countrey, then one voluptuously surfeit out of Action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the Lady Valeria is come to visit you.

Virg. Befeech you give me leave to retire my selfe.

Volun. Indeed you shali not:

Me thinkes, I heare hither your Husbands Drumme:
See him plucke Aufidius downe by th' haire:

(As children from a Beare) the Volces shunning him:

Me thinkes, I see him stampe thus, and call thus,

Come on you Cowards, you were got in feare

Though you were borne in Rome; his bloody brow

With his mail'd hand, then wiping, forth he goes

Like to a Haruest man, thats task'd to mowe

Or all, or loose his hye.

Virg. His bloody Brow? Oh Jupiter, no blood.

Volun. Away you Foole; it more becomes a man

Then gilt his Trophy. The breasts of Hecuba

When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier

Then Hectors forehead, when it spit forth blood

At Grecian swordes Contending: tell Valeria

Weare fit to bid her welcome.

Exit Gent.

Vir. Heavens blesse my Lord from tell Aufidius.

Vol. Hee'l beat Aufidius head below his knee,
And treade upon his necke.

Enter Valeria with an Usher, and a Gentlewoman.

Val. My Ladies both good day to you.

Vol. Sweet Madam.

Vir. I am glad to see your Ladyship.

Val. How do you both? You are manifest house-keepers. What are you sowing heere? A fine spotte in good faith. How does your little Sonne?

Vir. I thanke your Ladyship: Well good Madam.

Vol. He had rather see the swordes, and heare a Drum, then looke upon his Schoollmaster.

Val. A my word the Fathers Sonne: Ile sweare tis a very pretty boy. A my troth, I look'd upon him a Wen-day halfe an houre together: ha's such a confirm'd countenance. I saw him run after a gilded Butterfly, and when he caught it, he let it go againe, and after it againe, and over and over he comes, and up againe: catcht it againe: or whether his fall enrag'd him, or how twas, he did so set his teeth, and teare it. Oh, I warrant how he mammockt it.

Vol. One on's Fathers moods.

Val. Indæd la, tis a Noble childe.

Virg. A Cracke Madam.

Val. Come, lay aside your stitchery, I must have you play the idle Huswife with me this after noone.

Virg. No (good Madam)

I will not out of doores.

Val. Not out of doores?

Volun. She shall, the shall.

Vir. Indeed no, by your patience; Ile not over the threshold, till my Lord returne from the Warres.

Val. Fye, you confine your selfe most unreasonably: Come, you must go visit the good Lady that lyes in.

Virg. I will wish her speedy strength, and visite her with my prayers: but I cannot go thither.

Volun. Why I pray you.

Virg. Tis not to save labour, nor that I want love.

Val. You would be another Penelope: yet they say, all the yearne she spun in Ulysses absence, did but fill Athica full of Mothes. Come, I would your Cambrick were sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pitty. Come you sha'l go with us.

Virg. No good Madam, pardon me, indeed I will not foorth.

Val. In truth la go with me, and Ile tell you excellent newes of your Husband.

Vir. Oh good Madam, there can be none yet.

Val. Verily I do not iest with you: there came newes from him last night.

Vir. Indeed Madam.

Val. In earnest it's true; I heard a Senatour speake it. Thus it is: the Volcies have an Army forth, against whom Cominius the Generall is gone, with one part of our Roman power. Your Lord, and Titus Lartius, are set down before their City Corioli, they nothing doubt prevailing, and to make it breefe Warres. This is true on mine Honor, and so I pray go with us.

Vir. Give me excuse good Madame, I will obey you in every thing heereafter.

Val. Let her alone Lady, as she is now: She will but disease our better mirth.

Val. In troth I thinke she would:

Fare you well then. Come good sweet Lady.

Prythee Virgilia turne thy solemnnesse out a doore, And go along with us.

Virg. No

At a word Madam; Indeed I must not, I wish you much mirth.

Val. Well, then farewell.

Exeunt Ladies.

Enter Martius, Titus Lartius, with Drumme and Colours, with Captaines and Souldiers, as before the City Corioli: to them a Messenger.

Mart. Yonder comes Newes: A Wager they have met.

Lar. My horse to yours, no.

Mar. Tis done.

Lar. Agreed.

Mar.

Mar. Say, ha's our Generall met the Enemy?

Mess. They lye in view, but have not spoke as yet.

Lar. So, the good Horse is mine.

Mart. Ile buy him of you.

Lar. No, Ile not sel, nor give him: Lend you him I wil
For halfe a hundred yeares: Summon the Towne.

Mar. How farre off lie these Armies?

Mess. Within this mile and halfe.

Mar. Then shall we heare their Larum, & they Ours.
Now Mars, I prythee make us quicke in worke,
That we with smoaking swords may march from hence
To helpe our fielded Friends. Come, blow thy blast-

They Sound a Parley: Enter two Senators with others on the Walles of Coriolanus.

Tullus Aufidius, is he within your Walles?

1. Senat. No, nor a man that feares you lesse then he,
That's lesser then a little: Drum a farre off.

Hearke, our Drummes
Are bringing forth our youth: Wee'l breake our Walles
Rather then they shall pound us up our Gates,
Which yet seeme shut, we have but pin'd with Ruffles,
They'le open of themselves. Harke you, farre off

There is Aufidius. Lift what worke he makes Amongst your cloven Army.

Mar. Oh they are at it

Lar. Their noise be our instruction. Ladders ho.

Enter the Army of the Volces.

Mar. They feare us not, but issue for'h their City.
Now put your Shields before your hearts, and fight
With hearts more prooffe then Shields.
Advance brave Titus,
They do disdain us much beyond our Thoughts,
Which makes me sweat with wrath. Come on my follows
He that retires, Ile take him for a Volce,
And he shall feele mine edge.

Alarum, the Romans are beat back to their Trenches

Enter Martins Cursing.

Mar. All the contagion of the South, light on you,
You shames of Rome: you Heard of Byles and Plagues
Plaister you o're, that you may be abhorr'd
Farther then scene, and one infect another
Against the Winde a mile: you soules of Geese,
That beare the shapes of men, how have you run
From Slaves, that Apes would beate; Pluto and Hell,
All hurt behinde, backes red, and faces pale
With flight and agued feare, mend and charge home,
Or by the fires of heaven, Ile leave the Foe,
And make my Warres on you: Looke too't: Come on,
If you'l stand fast, wee'l beate them to their Wives,
As they us to our Trenches followed.

Another Alarum, and Martins follows them to gates, and is shut in.

So, now the gates are ope: now prove good Seconds,
Tis for the followers, Fortune widens them,
Not for the flyers: Marke me, and do the like.

Enter the Gates.

1. Sol. Foole-hardinesse, not I.

2. Sol. Nor I.

1. Sol. See they have shut him in. Alarum continues

All. To th' pot I warrant him. Enter Titus Lartius.

Tit. What is become of Martins?

All. Slaine (Sir) doubtlesse.

1. Sol. Following the Flyers at the very heeles,

With them he enters: who upon the sodaine
Clapt to their Gates he is himselfe alone,
To answer all the City.

Lar. Oh Noble Fellow!

Who sensibly out-dares his sencelesse Sword,
And when it bowes, stand'st up: Thou art left Martins,
A Carbuncle intire: as big as thou art
Weare not so rich a Iewel. Thou was't a Souldier
Even to Calves wish, not fierce and terrible
Onely in strokes, but with thy grim lookes, and
The Thunder-like percussion of thy sounds
Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the World
Were feavourous, and did tremble.

Enter Martins bleeding, assaulted by the Enemy.

1. Sol. Looke Sir.

Lar. O tis Martins.

Ler's fetch him off, or make remaine alike.

They fight, and all enter the City.

Enter certaine Romanes with spoiles.

1. Rom. This will I carry to Rome.

2. Rom. And I this.

3. Rom. A Murrain on't, I tooke this for Silver. Exeunt.

Alarum continues still a farre off.

Enter Martins, and Titus with a Trumpet.

Mar. See heere these movers, that do prize their hours
At a crack'd Drachme: Cushions, Leaden Spoones, Irons of a Doit, Dublets that Hangmen would Bury with those that wore them. These base slaves,
Ere yet the fight be done, packe up, downe with them.
And harke, what noise the Generall makes: To him
There is the man of my soules hate, Aufidius, Piercing our Romanes: Then Valiant Titus take Convenient Numbers to make good the City,
Whil'st I with those that have the spirit, will haffe
To helpe Cominius.

Lar. Worthy Sir, thou bleed'st,
Thy exercise hath bin too violent,
For a second course of Fight.

Mar. Sir, praise me not:

My worke hath yet not warm'd me. Fare you well:
The blood I drop, is rather Physicall

Then dangerous to me. To Aufidius thus, I will appeare

Lar. Now the faire Goddesse Fortune, (and fight.)
Fall deepe in love with thee, and her great charmes
Misguide thy Opposers swords, Bold Gentleman: Prosperity be thy Page.

Mar. Thy Friend no lesse.

Then those she placeth highest: So farewell.

Lar. Thou worthiest Martins,
Go sound thy Trumpet in the Market place,
Call thither all the Officers a'th Towne,
Where they shall know our minde. Away. Exeunt.

Enter Cominius as it were in retire, with soldiers.

Com. Breath you my friends, wel fought, we are come
Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands,
Nor Cowardly in retire: Beleeve me Sirs,
We shall be charg'd againe. Whiles we have strooke
By interims and conveying gufts, we have heard
The Charges of our Friends. The Roman Gods,
Leade their successes, as we wish our owne,
That both our powers, with smiling Fronts encountering,
May give you thankfull Sacrifice. Thy Newes? (off.)

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. The Citizens of Coriolanus have yssued,
And given to Lartius and to Martins Battaile:

I saw our party to their Trenches driven,
And then I came away.

Com. Though thou speakest truth,
Me thinkes thou speak'st not well. How long is't since?

Mes. Above an houre, my Lord.

Com. Tis not a mile: briefly we heard their drummes.
How could'st thou in a mile confound an houre,
And bring thy Newes so late?

Mes. Spies of the Volces
Held me in chace, that I was forc'd to wheele
Three or foure miles about, else had I fir
Halfe an houre since brought my report.

Enter Martins.

Com. Whose yonder,
That doe's appeare as he were Fleed? O Gods,
He has the itampe of Martins, and I have Before time seene him thus.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. The Shepherd knowes not Thunder from a Taber,
More then I know the sound of Martins Tongue
From every meaner man.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. I, if you come not in the blood of others,
But mantled in your owne.

Mar. Oh! let me clip ye
I Armes as found, as when I woo'd in heart;
As merry, as when our Nuptiall day was done,
And Tapers burnt to Bedward.

Com. Flower of Warriors, how i't with Titus Lartius?

Mar. As with a man busied about Decrees:
Condemning some to death, and some to exile,
Ransoming him, or pitying, threatening th' other;
Holding Coriolus in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning Grey-hound in the Leash,
To let him ship at will.

Com. Where is that Slave,
Which told me they had beate you to your Trenches?
Where is he? Call him hither.

Mar. Let him alone,
He did informe the truth: but for our Gentlemen,
The common file, (a plague Tribunes for them)
The Mouse ne're shunn'd the Cat, as they did budge
From Rascals worfe then they.

Com. But how prevail'd you?

Mar. Will the time serve to tell, I do not thinke:
Where is the enemy? Are you Lords a th' Field?
If not, why cease you till you are so?

Com. Martins, we have at disadvantage fought,
And did retye to win our propose.

Mar. How lies their Battell? Know you on what side
They have plac'd their men of trust?

Com. As I guesse Martins,
Their Bands i'th Vaward are the Antients
Of their best trust: O're them Aufidius,
Their very heart of Hope.

Mar. I do beseech you,
By all the Battails wherein we have fought,
By th' Blood we have shed together,
By th' Vowes we have made
To endure Friends, that you directly set me
Against Aufidius, and his Antients,
And that you not delay the present (but Filling the aire with Swords advanc'd) and Darts,
We prove this very houre.

Com. Though I could wish,

You were conducted to a gentle Bath,
And Balmes applyed to you, yet dare I never Deny your asking, take your choice of those
That best can ayde your action.

Mar. Those are they
That most are willing; if any such be heere;
(As it were sinne to doubt) that love this painting
Wherein you see me smear'd, if any feare
Lessen his person, then an ill report:
If any thinke, brave death out-weighes bad life,
And that his Countries deerer then himselfe,
Let him alone. Or so many so minded,
Wave thusto expresse his disposition,
And follow Martins.

They all shout and wave their swords, take him up in their Armes, and cast up their Caps.

Oh me alone, make you a sword of me:
If these shewes be not outward which of you
But is foure Volces? None of you, but is Able to beare against the great Aufidius
A Shiels, as hard as his. A certaine number (Though thanks to all) must I select from all:
The rest shall beare the businesse in some other fight
(As cause will be obey'd:) please you to Martch,
And foure shall quickly draw out my Command,
Which men are best inclin'd.

Com. Martch on my Fellowes:
Make good this ostentation, and you shall Divide in all, with us.

Exeunt.

Titus Lartius, having set a guard upon Coriolus, going with Drum and Trumpet toward Cominius, and Caius Mar-tius, Enters with a Lieutenant, other Souldiours, and a Scent.

Lar. So, let the Ports be guarded; keepe your Duties
As I have set them downe. If I do send, dispatch
Those Centuries to our ayd, the rest will serve
For a short holding, if we loose the Field,
We cannot keepe the Towne.

Lieu. Feare not our care Sir.

Lar. Hence; and shut your gates upon's:
Our Guider come, to th' Roman Campe conduct us. Exit.
Alarm, as in Battaille.

Enter Martins and Aufidius at severall doores.

Mar. Ile fight with none but thee, for I do hate thee
Worse then a Promise-breaker.

Auf. We hate alike:

Not Affrike ownes a Serpent I abhorre
More then thy Fame and Envy: Fix thy foot.

Mar. Let the first Budger dye the others Slave,
And the Gods doome him after.

Auf. If I flye Martins, hollow me like a Hare.

Mar. Within these three houres Tullus
Alone I fought in your Coriolus walles,
And made what worke I pleas'd: Tis not my blood,
Wherein thou seest me maskt, for thy Revenge
Wrench up thy power to th' highest.

Auf. Wert thou the Hector,
That was the whip of your bragg'd Progeny,
Thou should'st not scape me heere.

Heere they fight, and certaine Volces come in the ayde of Aufid. Martins fights til they be driven in breathles.
Officious and not valiant, you have sham'd me
In your condemned Seconds.

Flourish

Flourish. Alarum. A Retreat is sounded. Enter at one Doore Cominius, with the Romanes: At another Doore Martius, with his Arme in a Scarfe.

Com. If I should tell thee o're this thy dayes Worke, Thou't not beleewe thy deeds: but Ile report it, Where Senators shall mingle teares with smiles, Where great Patricians shall attend, and shrug, I'th'end admire: where Ladies shall be frighted, And gladly quak'd, heare more: where the dull Tribunes, That with the fusty Plebeians, hate thine Honors, Shall say against their hearts, We thanke the Gods Our Rome hath such a Souldier. Yet cam'st thou to a Morfell of this Feast, Having fully din'd before.

Enter Titus with his Power, from the Pursuit.

Titus Lartius. Oh Generall:
Here is the Steed, wee the Caparison:
Hadst thou behold——

Mar. Pray now, no more:
My Mother, who ha's a Charter to extoll her Bloud,
When she do's praise me, grieves me:
I have done as you have done, that's what I can,
Induc'd as you have beene, that's for my Countrey:
He that ha's but effected his good will,
Hath overta'ne mine Act.

Com. You shall not be the Grave of your deserving,
Rome must know the value of her owne:
Twere a Concealment worse then a Theft,
No lesse then a Traducement,
To hide your doings, and to silence that,
Which to the spire, and top of praises vouch'd,
Would seeme but modest: therefore I beseech you,
In signe of what you are, not to reward
What you have done, before our Army heare me.

Mar. I have some Wounds upon me, and they smart
To heare themselves remembred.

Com. Should they not:
Well might they fester 'gainst Ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death: of all the Horses,
Whereof we have ta'ne good, and good store of all,
The Treasure in this field atchieved, and City,
We render you the Tenth, to be ta'ne forth,
Before the common distribution,
At your onely choise.

Mar. I thanke you Generall:
But cannot make my heart consent to take
A Bribe, to pay my Sword: I doe refuse it,
And stand upon my common part with those,
That have beheld the doing.

A long flourish. They all cry, Martius, Martius, cast up their Caps and Lances: Cominius and Lartius stand bare.

Ma. May these same Instruments, which you prophane.
Never sound more: when Drums and Trumpets shall I'th' field prove flatterers, let Cours and Cities be Made all of false-fac'd soothing:
When Steele growes soft, as the Parasites Silke,
Let him be made an Overture for th'Warres:
No more I say, for that I have not wash'd

My Nose that bled, or foyl'd some debile Wretch,
Which without note, here's many else have done,
You shoot me forth in acclamations hyperbolicall,
As if I lov'd my little should be dieted
In prayes, sawc't with Lies.

Com. Too modest are you:
More cruell to your good report, then gratefull
To us, that give you truly: by your patience,
If against your selfe you be incens'd, wee'le put you (Like one that meanes his proper harme) in Manacles,
Then reason safely with you: Therefore be it knowne,
As to us, to all the World, That Caius Martius
Weares this Warres Garland: in token of the which,
My Noble Steed, knowne to the Campe, I give him,
With all his trim belonging; and from this time,
For what he did before Coriolus, call him,
With all th'appause and Clamor of the Host.
Marcus Caius Coriolanus. Beare th'addition Nobly ever!

Flourish. Trumpets sound, and Drums.

Omnes. Marcus Caius Coriolanus.

Mar. I will goe wash:
And when my Face is faire, you shall perceive
Whether I blush, or no: howbeit, I thanke you.
I meane to stride your Steed, and at all times
To under-crest your good Addition,
To th'fairenesse of my power.

Com. So, to our Tent:
Where ere we doe repose us, we will write
To Rome of our successe: you Titus Lartius
Must to Coriolus backe, send us to Rome
The best, with whom we may articulate,
For their owne good, and ours.

Lar. I shall, my Lord.

Mar. The Gods begin to mocke me:
I that now refus'd most Princely gifts,
Am bound to begge of my Lord Generall.

Com. Tak't, tis yours: what is't?

Mar. I sometime lay here in Coriolus,
At a poore mans house: he us'd me kindly.
He cry'd to me: I saw him Prisoner:
But then Auffidius was within my view,
And Wrath o're-whelm'd my pitty: I request you
To give my poore Host freedome.

Com. Oh well begg'd:
Were he the Butcher of my Sonne, he should Be free, as is the Winde: deliver him, Titus.

Lar. Martius, his Name.

Mar. By Iupiter forgot:
I am weary, yea my memory is tyr'd:
Have we no Wine here?

Com. Goe we to our Tent:
The blood upon your Visage dryes, tis time
It should be lookt to: come.

Exeunt.

A flourish. Cornets. Enter Tullus Auffidius blondy, with two or three Souldiors.

An. The Towne is ta'ne,
Soul. I will be deliver'd backe on good Condition.
Auf. Condition?

I would I were a Roman, for I cannot,
Being a Volce, be, that I am. Condition?
What good Condition can a Treaty finde
I'th' part that is at mercy? five times, Martius,
I have fought with thee; so often hast thou beat me:
And would'st doe so, I thinke, should we encounter

And often as we eate. By the Elements,
If ere againe I meet him beard to beard,
He's mine, or I am his: Mine Emulation
Hath not that honor in't it had: For where
I thought to crush him in an equall Force,
True Sword to Sword: Ile potche at him some way,
Or wrath, or Craft may get him.

Sol. He's the divell.

Ans. Bolder, though not so subtle: my valors poison'd,
With onely suffering staine by him: for him
Shall flye out of it selfe, nor sleepe; nor sanctuary,
Being naked, sicke; nor Phane, nor Capitoll,
The Prayers of Priests, nor times of Sacrifice:
Embarquements all of Fury, shall lift up
Their rotten Priveledge, and Custome 'gainst
My hate to Martius. Where I finde him, were it
At home, upon my brothers Guard, even there
Against the hospitable Canon, would I
Wash my fierce hand in's heart. Goe you to th' City, Learne how 'tis held, and what they are that must Be Hostages for Rome.

Sol. Will not you goe?

Ans. I am attended at the Cyprus grove. I pray you
(Tis South the City Mills) bring me word thither
How the world goes: that to the pace of it
I may spurre on my journey.

Sol. I shall sir.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Menenius with the two Tribunes of the people, Sicinius & Brutus.

Men. The Augurer tels me, we shall have Newes to night.

Br. Good or bad?

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Martius.

Sic. Nature teaches Beasts to know their friends.

Men. Pray you, who does the Wolfe love?

Sic. The Lambe.

Men. I, to devour him, as the hungry Plebeians would the Noble Martius.

Br. He's a Lambe indeed, that baes like a Beare.

Men. He's a Beare indeed, that lives like a Lambe.
You two are old men, tell me one thing that I shall aske
you.

Both. Well sir.

Men. In what enormity is Martius poore in, that you two have not in abundance?

Br. He's poore in no one fault, but stor'd withall.

Sic. Especially in Pride.

Br. And topping all others in boast.

Men. This is strange now: Doe you two know, how you are censured here in the City, I meane of us a thright hand File, doe you?

Both. Why? how are we censur'd?

Men. Because you talke of Pride now, will you not be angry?

Both. Well, well sir, well.

Men. Why 'tis no great matter; for a very little theefe of Occasion, will rob you of a great deale of Patience:

Give your dispositions the reines, and be angry at your pleasures (at the least) if you take it as a pleasure to you, in being so; you blame Martius for being proud.

Br. We doe it not alone, sir.

Men. I know you can doe very little alone, for your helpes are many, or else your actions would grow wondrous single: your abilities are too Infant-like; for doing much alone. You talke of Pride: Oh, that you could turne your eyes toward the Napes of your neckes, and make but an interiour survey of your good selves. Oh that you could!

Both. What then sir?

Men. Why then you should discover a brace of unmeriting, proud, violent, testy Magistrates (alias Fooles)
as any in Rome.

Sic. Menenius, you are knowne well enough too.

Men. I am knowne to be a humorous Patritian, and one that loves a cup of hot Wine, with not a drop of alaying Tiber in't: Said, to be something imperfect in favouring the first complaint, hasty and Tinder-like upon, to triviall motion: One, that converses more with the Buttocke of the night, then with the forehead of the morning. What I thinke, I utter, and spend my malice in my breath. Meeting two such Weales men as you are (I cannot call your Licurgusses) if the drinke you give me, touch my Palat adversly, I make a crooked face at it. I can say, your Worshippes have deliver'd the matter well, when I finde the Assle in compound, with the Major part of your syllables. And though I must be content to beare with those, that say you are reverend grave, yet they lye deadly, that tell you have good faces; if you see this in the Map of my Microcosme, fellowes it that I am known well enough too? What harme can your beesome Con-spectuities gleane out of this Charracter, if I be knowne well enough too?

Br. Come sir come, we know you will enough.

Men. You know neither me, your selves, nor any thing: you are ambitious, for poore knaves cappes and legges: you weare out a good wholesome Forenoone, in hearing a cause betweene an Orendge wife, and a Forset-seller, and then rejourne the Controversie of three-pence to a second day of Audience. When you are hearing a matter betweene party and party, if you chance to bee pinch'd with the Collicke: you make faces like Mummers, set up the bloody Flagge against all Patience, and inroaring for a Chamber-pot, dismiss the Controversie bleeding, the more intangled by your hearing: All the peace you make in their Cause, is calling both the parties
Knaves. You are a payre of strange ones.

Br. Come, come, you are well understood to be a perfecter gyber for the Table, then a necessary Benchet in the Capitoll.

Men. Our very Priests must become Mockers, if they shall encounter such ridiculous Subjects as you are, when you speake best unto the purpose. It is not worth the wagging of your Beards, and your Beards deserve not so honorable a grave, as to stiffe a Butchers Cushion, or to be intomb'd in an Asses Packe-saddle; yet you must bee saying, Martius is proud: who in a cheape estimation, is worth all your predecessors, since Dencalion, though peradventure some of the best of 'em were hereditary hang-men. God den to your Worships, more of your conversation would infect my braine; being the Heard-men of the Beastly Plebeians. I will be bold to take my leave of you.

Brutus, and Sicinius.

d d

Aside.

Enter

Enter Volunmia, and Valeria.

How now (my as faire as Noble) Ladyes, and the Moone were the Earthly; no Nobler; whither doe you follow your Eyes so fast?

Volun. Honorable Menenius, my Boy Martius approaches: for the love of Juno let's goe.

Menen. Ha? Martius comming home?

Volun. I, worthy Menenius, and with most prosperous approbation.

Menen. Take my Cappe Iupiter, and I thanke thee: hoo, Martius comming home?

2. Ladies. Nay, 'tis true.

Volun. Looke, here's a Letter from him, the State hath another, his Wife another, and (I thinke) there's one at home for you.

Menen. I will make my very house reele to night: A Letter for me?

Virgil. Yes certaine, there's a Letter for you, I saw't.

Menen. A Letter for me? it gives me an Estate of seven yeeres health; in which time, I will make a Lippe at the Physician: The most soveraigne Prescription in Galen, is but Emperickcutique; and to this Preservative, of no better report then a Horse-drench. Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded?

Virgil. Oh no, no, no.

Volun. Oh, he is wounded, I thanke the gods for't.

Menen. So doe I too, if it be not too much: brings a Victorie in his Pocket? the wounds become him.

Volun. On's Browes: Menenius, he comes the third time home with the Oaken Garland.

Menen. Ha's he disciplin'd Aufidius soundly?

Volun. Titus Lartius writes, they fought together, but Aufidius got off.

Menen. And'twas time for him too, He warrant him that: and he had stay'd by him, I wold not have beene so fiddious'd, for all the Chests in Coriolus, and the Gold that's in them. Is the Senate posselt of this?

Volun. Good Ladies let's goe. Yes, yes, yes: The Senate ha's Letters from the Generall, wherein he gives my Sonne the whole Name of the Warre: he hath in this action out-done his former deeds doubly.

Valer. In troth, there's wondrous things spoke of him.

Menen. Wondrous: I, I warrant you, and not without his true purchasing.

Virgil. The gods grant them true.

Volun. True? pow waw.

Menen. True? He be sworn they are true: where is he wounded, God save your good Worships? Martius is comming home: he ha's more cause to be proud: where is he wounded?

Volun. It's Shoulder, and it's left Arme: there will be large Cicatrices to shew the People, when he shall stand for his place: he received in the repulse of Tarquin seven hurts it's Body.

Menen. One it's Necke, and two it's Thigh, there's nine that I know,

Volun. He had, before this last Expedition, twenty five Wounds upon him.

Menen. Now it's twenty seven; every gash was an Enemies Grave, Hearke, the Trumpets.

A shout, and Flourish.

Volun. These are the Vshers of Martius:

Before him, he carries Noyse;
And behinde him, he leaves Teares:

Death, that darke Spirit, in's nervy Arme doth lye,
Which being advanc'd, declines, and then men dye.

A Sonet. Trumpets sound.

Enter Cominius the Generall, and Titus Lartius: between them Coriolanus, crown'd with an Oaken Garland, with Captaines and Souldiers, and a Herald.

Hera. Know Rome, that all alone Martius did fight Within Coriolus Gates: where he hath wonne, With Fame, a Name to Martius Caius:

These in honor follows Martius Caius, Coriolanus.
Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus.

Sound. Flourish.

All. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus,

Corio. No more of this, it does offend my heart; pray now no more.

Com. Looke, Sir, your Mother.

Corio. Oh! you have, I know, petition'd all the gods for my prosperity. Kneeles.

Volun. Nay, my good Souldier, up:

My gentle Martius, worthy Caius,
And by deed-atchieving Honor newly nam'd,
What is it (Coriolanus) must I call thee?
But oh, thy Wife.

Corio. My gracious silence, haile:
Would'st thou have laugh'd, had I come Coffin'd home,
That weep'st to see me triumph? Ah my deare,
Such eyes the Widowes in Coriolus weare,
And Mothers that lacke Sonnes.

Menen. Now the gods Crowne thee.

Com. And live you yet? Oh my sweet Lady, pardon.

Volun. I know not where to turne.

Oh welcome home: and welcome Generall,
And y'are welcome all.

Menen. A hundred thousand Welcomes:

I could weepe, and I could laugh,
I am light, and heavy; welcome:
A Curie begin at very root on's heart,
That is not glad to see thee.

You are three, that Rome should dote on:
Yet by the faith of men, we have
Some old Crab-trees here at home,
That will not be grafted to your Rellish.
Yet welcome Warriors:

We call a Nettle, but a Nettle;
And the faults of fooles, but folly.

Com. Ever right.

Cor. Menenius, ever, ever.

Hera. Give way there, and goe on.

Cor. Your Hand, and yours?

Ere in our owne house I doe shade my head,
The good Patricians must be visited,
From whom I have receiv'd not onely greetings,
But with them, change of honors.

Volun. I have lived,
To see inherited my very Wishes,
And the Buildings of my Fancy:
Onely there's one thing wanting,
Which (I doubt not) but our Rome
Will cast upon thee.

Cor. Know, good Mother,
I had rather be their servant in my way,
Ten way with them in theirs.

Com. On, to the Capitoll. Flourish. Cornet.
Exeunt in State, as before.

Enter Brutus and Sicinius.

Brn. All tongues speake of him, and the bleared fights
Are spectacled to see him. Your prattling Nurse
Into a rapture lets her Baby cry,
While she chats him: the Kitchen Malkin pinnes
Her richest Lockram 'bout her reechy necke,
Clambring the Walls to eye him:
Stalls, Bulkes, Windowes, are smother'd up,
Leades fill'd, and Ridges hors'd
With variable Complexions; all agreeing
In earnestnesse to see him: feld-showne Flamins
Doe presse among the popular Throngs, and puffe
To winne a vulgar station: our veyl'd Dames
Commit the Warre of White and Damaske
To their nicely gawded Cheekes, toth'wanton spoyle
Of Phœbus burning Kisses: such a poother,
As if that whatsoever God, who leades him,
Were flyly crept into his humane powers,
And gave him gracefull posture.

Sicm. On the suddaine, I warrant him Consull.

Brn. Then our Office may, during his power, goe leepe.

Sici. He cannot temp'rately transport his honors,
From where he should begin, and end, but will Lose those he hath wonne.

Brn. In that there's comfort.

Sicm. Doubt not,
The Commoners, for whom we stand, but they Vpon their ancient mallice, will forget
With the least cause, these his new honors,
Which that he will give them, make I as little question,
As he is proud to doo't.

Brn. I heard him sweare
Were he to stand for Consull, never would he Appare i'th' Market place, nor on him put
The Naples Vesture of humility,
Nor shewing (as the manner is) his Wounds
Toth'people, begge their stinking Breaths.

Sici. 'Tis right.

Brn. It was his word:
Oh he would misse it, rather then carry it,
But by the suite of the Gentry to him,
And the desire of the Nobles.

Sici. I wish no better, then have him hold that purpose, and to put it in execution.

Brn. 'Tis most like he will.

Sici. It shall be to him then, as our good wilks; a sure destruction.

Brn. So it must fall out
To him, or our Authorities, for an end.
We must suggest the People, in what hatred
He still hath held them: that to's power he would Have made them Mules, silenc'd their Pleaders,
And disproportioned their Freedomes, holding them,
In humane Action, and Capacity,
Of no more Soule, nor fittest for the world,
Then Cammels in their Warre, who have their Provand
Onely for bearing Burthens, and sore blowes
For sinking under them.

Sici. This (as you say) suggested,
At some time, when his soaring insolence
Shall reach the People, which time shall not want,
If he be put upon't, and that's as easie,
As to set Dogges on Sheepe, will be his fire

To kindle their dry Stubble: and their Blaze
Shall darken him for ever.

Enter a Messenger.

Brn. What's the matter?

Mess. You are sent for to the Capitall:
'Tis thought, that Martius shall be Consull:
I have seene the dumbe men throng to see him,
And the blind to heare him speak: Matrons stong Gloves,
Ladies and Maids their Scarfes, and Handkerchers,
Vpon him as he pass'd: the Nobles bended
As to Ioves Statue, and the Commons made
A Shower, and Thunder, with their Caps, and Showts:
I never saw the like.

Brn. Let's to the Capitoll,
And carry with us eares and eyes forth'time,
But hearts for the event.

Sici. Have with you.

Exeunt.

Enter two Officers, to lay Cushions, as it were,
in the Capitall.

1. Off. Come, come, they are almost here: how many stand for Consulships?

2. Off. Three, they say: but 'tis thought of every one
Coriolanus will carry it.

1. Off. That's a brave fellow: but he's vengeance proud, and loves not the common people.

2. Off. 'Faith, there hath beene many great men that, have flatter'd the people, who ne're loved them; and there be many that they have loved, they know not wherefore:
so that if they love they know not why, they hate upon no better a ground. Therefore, for Coriolanus neither to care whether they love, or hate him, manifests the true knowledge he has in their disposition, and out of his Noble carelesnesse lets them plainly see't.

1. Off. If he did not care whether he had their love, or no, he wou'd indifferently, 'twixt doing them neither good, nor harme: but he seeks their hate with greater devotion, then they can render it him; and leaves nothing undone, that may fully discover him their opposite. Now to seeme to affect the mallice and displeasure of the People, is as bad, as that which he dislikes, to flatter them for their love.

2. Off. He hath deserved worthily of his Countrey, and his ascent is not by such easie degrees as those, who having beene supple and courteous to the People, Bon-netted, without any further deed, to have them at all into their estimation, and report: but he hath so planted his honors in their Eyes, and his actions in their hearts, that for their Tongues to be silent, and not confesse so much, were a kinde of ingratfull injury: to report other wise, were a Mallice, that giving it selfe the Lye, would plucke reprooffe and rebuke from every Eare that heard it.

1. Off. No more of him, he's a worthy man: make way, they are coming.

A Sonnet. Enter the Patricians, and the Tribunes of the People, Lictors before them; Coriolanus, Menenius, Cominius the Consull: Sicinius and
Brutus take their places by themselves.

Coriolanus stands.

Men. Having determin'd of the Volces,
And to send for Titus Lartius: it remaines,
As the maine Point of this our after-meeting,

To gratifie his Noble service; that hath
Thus stood for his Country. Therefor please you;
Most reverend and grave Elders, to desire
The present Consull, and last Generall,
In our well-found Successes, to report
A little of that worthy Worke, perform'd
By Martius Caius Coriolanus: whom
We met here, both to thanke; and to remember,
With honors like himselfe.

Sen. Speake, good Cominius:
Leave nothing out for length; and make us thinke
Rather our states defective for requirall,
Then we to stretch it out. Masters a'th' People,
We doe request your kindest eare: and after
Your loving motion toward the common Body,
To yeeld what passes here.

Sicin. We are convented upon a pleasing Treaty, and have hearts inclinable to honor and advance the Theame of our Assembly.

Brn. Which the rather we shall be blest to doe, if he remember a kinder value of the People, then he hath hereto priz'd them at.

Men. That's off, that's off: I would you rather had been silent: Please you to heare Cominius speake?

Brn. Most willingly: but yet my Caution was more pertinent then the rebuke you give it.

Men. He loves your People, but tye him not to be their Bedfellow: Worthy Cominius speake.

Coriolanus rises, and offers to goe away.
Nay, keepe your place.

Senat. Sir Coriolanus: never shame to heare
What you have Nobly done.

Corio. Your honors pardon:
I had rather have my Wounds to heale againe,
Then heare say how I got them.

Brn. Sir, I hope my words dis-bench'd you not?

Corio. No Sir: yes oft,
When blowes have made me stay, I fled from words.
You sooth'd not, therefore hurt not: but your people,
I love them as they weigh——

Men. Pray now sit downe.

Corio. I had rather have one scratch my Head i'th' Sun,
When the Alarum were struck, then idly sit
To heare my Nothings monster'd. Exit Coriolanus.

Men. Masters of the People,
Your multiplying Spawne, how can he flatter?
That's thousand to one good one, when you now see
He had rather venture all his Limbes for honor,
Then on ones Eares to heare it. Proceed Cominius.

Com. I shall lacke voyce: the deeds of Coriolanus
Sould not be utter'd feebly: it is held,
That Valour is the chiefeest Vertue, And Most dignifies the haver: if it be,
The man I speake of, cannot in the World
Be singly counter-poys'd. At sixteene yeeres,
When Tarquin made a Head for Rome, he fought
Beyond the marke of others: our then Dictator,
Whom with all praise I point at, saw him fight,
When with his Amazonian Shinne he drove
The brizled Lipbes before him: he bestrid
An o're-prest Roman, and i'th' Consuls view
Slew three Opposers: Tarquins selfe he met,
And struke him on his Knee: in that dayes feates,
When he might a'th' Woman in the Scene,
He prov'd best man i'th' field, and for his meed
Was Brow-bound with the Oake. His Pupil-age

Man-entred thus, he wated like a Sea,
And in the brunt of seventeene Battailes since,
He lurcht all Swords o'th' Garland: for this last,
Before, and in Coriolus, let me say
I cannot speake him home: he stopt the flyers,
And by his rare example made the Coward
Turne terror into sport: as Waves before
A Vessell under sayle, so men obey'd,
And fell below his Stem: his Sword (Deaths stampe)
Where it did marke, it tooke from face to foot:
He was a thing of Blood, whose every motion
Was trim'd with dying Cryes: alone he entred
The mortall Gate o'th' City, which he painted
With shunlesse defamy: aydelesse came off.
And with a sudden re-inforcement struke
Coriolus like a Planet: now all's this,
When by and by the dinne of Warre gan pierce
His ready sence: then straight his doubled spirit
Requickned what in flesh was fatigate,
And to the Battaille came he, where he did Runne recking o're the lives of men, as if
'Twere a perpetuall spoyle; and till we call'd
Both field and Citty ours, he never stood
To ease his brest with painting.

Men. Worthy man.

Senat. Hee cannot but with measure fit the honors which we devise him.

Com. Our spoyles he kickt at,
And look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common Mucke o'th' World: he covets lesse
Then Misery it selfe would give, rewards his deeds
With doing them, and is content
To spend the time, to end it.

Men. He's righe Noble, let him be call'd for:

Senat. Call Coriolanus.

Off. He doth appeare.

Enter Coriolanus.

Men. The Senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd to make thee Consull.

Corio. I doe owe them still my life, and Services.

Men. It then remaines, that you doe speake to the People.

Corio. I doe beseech you,
Let me o're-leape that custome; for I cannot Put on the Gowne, stand naked, and entreat them
For my Wounds sake, to give their fufferage:
Please you that I may passe this doing.

Sicin. Sir, the People must have their Voyces:
Neither will they bate one jot of Ceremony.

Men. Put them not too'r:
Pray you goe fit you to the Custome,
And take to you, as your Predecessors have,
Your honor with your forme.

Corio. It is a part that I shall blush in acting,
And might well be taken from the People.

Brn. Marke you that.

Corio. To brag unto them, thus I did, and thus Shew them th'unaking Skarres, which I should hide,
As if I had receiv'd them for the hyre
Of their breath onely.

Men. Doe not stand upon't:
We recommend to you Tridunes of the People
Our purpose to them, and to our Noble Consull:
Wish we all Ioy, and honor'

Senat.

Senat. To Coriolanus come all joy and honor.

Flourish Cornets.

Then Exeunt. Marcus Sicinius and Brutus.

Brut. You see how he intends to use the people.

Sicinius. May they perceive's intent: he will require them As if he did contemne what he requested, Should be in them to give.

Brut. Come, we'll informe them Of our proceedings heere on th' Market place, I know they doe attend us.

Enter seven or eight Citizens.

1. Cit. Once if he doe require our voyces, we ought not to deny him,

2. Cit. We may Sir if we will.

3. Cit. We have power in our selves to doe it, but it is a power that we have no power to doe: For, if he shew us his wounds, and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds, and speake for them: So if he tell us his Noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous, and for the multitude to be ingratefull, were to make a Monster of the multitude; of the which, we being members, should bring our selves to be monstrous members.

1. Cit. And to make us no better thought of a little helpe will serve: for once we stood up about the Corne, he himselfe stucke not to call us the many-headed Multitude.

3. Cit. We have beene call'd so of many, not that our heads are some browne, some blacke, some Abram, some bald; but that our wits are so diversly Coulor'd; and truly I thinke, if all our wits were to issue out of one Scull, they would flye East, West, North, South, and their consent of one direct way, should be at once to all the points a'th Compasse.

2. Cit. Thinke you so? Which way doe you judge my wit would flye.

3. Cit. Nay your wit will not so soone out as another mans will, 'tis strongly wedg'd up in a blockhead: but if it were at liberty, 'twould sure Southward.

2. Cit. Why that way?

3. Cit. To loofe it selfe in a Fogge, where being three parts melted away with rotten Dewes, the forth would returne for Conscience sake, to helpe to get thee a Wife.

2. Cit. You are never without your trickes, you may, you may.

3. Cit. Are you all resolv'd to give your voyces? But that's no matter, the greater part carries it, I say. If he would incline to the people, there was never a worthier man.

Enter Coriolanus in a gowne of Humility, with Menenius.

Heere he comes, and in the Gowne of humility, marke his behaviour: we are not to stay al together, but to come by him where he stands, by ones, by twoes, by & threes. He's to make his requests by particulars, wherein every one of us ha's a single Honor, in giving him our owne voyces with our owne tongues, therefore follow me, and he direct you how you shall goe by him.

All. Content, content.

Men. Oh Sir, you are not right; have you not known The worthiest men have don't?

Corio. What must I say, I pray Sir?

Plague upon't, I cannot bring

My tongue to such a pace. Looke Sir, my wounds, I got them in my Countries Service, when Some certaine of your Brethren roar'd, and ranne

From th'noise of our owne Drummes,

Men. Oh me the gods, you must not speake of that, You must desire them to thinke upon you,

Corio. Thinke upon me? Hang'em, I would they would forget me, like the Vertues Which our Divines lose by em.

Men. You'll marre all, Ile leave you: Pray you speake to em, I pray you In wholesome manner.

Exit.

Enter three of the Citizens.

Corio. Bid them wash their Faces, And keepe their teeth cleane: So heere comes a brace, You know the cause (Sir) of my standing heere.

3. Cit. We do Sir, tell us what hath brought you too't.

Corio. Mine owne desert.

2. Cit. Your owne desert.

Corio. I, no mine owne desire.

3. Cit. How not your owne desire?

Corio. No Sir 'twas never my desire yet to trouble the poore with begging.

3. Cit. You must thinke if we give you any thing, we hope to gaine by you.

Corio. Well then I pray, your price a'th Consulship.

1. Cit. The price is, to aske it kindly,

Corio. Kindly sir, I pray let me ha't: I have wounds to shew you, which shall be yours in private: your good voyce Sir, what say you?

2. Cit. You shall ha't worthy Sir.

Corio. A match Sir, theres in all two worthy voyces begg'd: I have your Almcs, Adieu.

3. Cit. But this is something odde.

2. Cit. And twere to give againe: but tis no matter.

Exeunt. Enter two other Citizens.

Corio. Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voyces, that I may be Consul, I have heere the Customary Gowne.

1. You have deserved Nobly of your Country, and you have not deserved Nobly.

Corio. Your Enigma.

1. You have beene a scourge to her enemies, you have bin a Rod to her Friends, you have not indeed loved the Common people.

Corio. You should account me the more Vertuous, that I have not bin common in my Love, I will fit flatter my sworne Brother the people to earne a deerer estimation of them, 'tis a condition they account gentle: & since the wisdom of their choyce, is rather to have my hat, then my heart, I will practice the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeily, that is sir, I will counterfet the bewichment of some popular man, and give it bountifull to the desires: Therefore beseech you, I may be Consul.

2. We hope to find you our friend: and therefore give you our voyces heartily.

1. You have received many wounds for your Country.

Corio. I will not Scale your knowledge with shewing them. I will make much of your voyces, and so trouble you no farther.

Both. The gods give you joy Sir heartily.

Corio. Most sweet Voyces:

Better it is to dye, better to sterve, Then crave the hire, which first we doe deserve.

Why in this Woolvisg gowne should I stand heere, To begge of Hob and Dicke, that does appeere

Their needlesse Vouches: Custome calls me too't.
 What Custome wills in all things, should we doo't?
 The Dust on antique Time would lye unswept,
 And mountainous Error be too highly heapt,
 For Truth to o're-peere: Rather then foole it so,
 Let the high Office and the Honor goe
 To one that would doe thus. I am halfe through,
 The one part suffered, the other will Idoe.

Enter three Citizens more.

Here come moe Voyces.

Your Voyces? for your Voyces I have fought,
 Watcht for your Voyces: for your Voyces, beare
 Of Wounds, two dozen odde: Battailles thrice six
 I have seene, and heard of: for your voyces,
 Have done many things, some lesse, some more:
 Your Voyces? indeed I would be Consull.

1 Cit. He ha's done Nobly, and cannot goe without any honest mans Voyce.

2 Cit. Therefore let him be Consull: the Gods give him joy, and make him good friend to the people.

All. Amen, Amen. God save thee, Noble Consull.

Corio. Worthy Voyces.

Enter Menenius, with Brutus and Sicinius.

Men. You have stood your Limitation:
 And the Tribunes endue you with the Peoples Voyce,
 Remaines, that in th' Officiall Markes invested,
 You anon doe meet the Senate.

Corio. Is this done?

Sici. The Custome of Request you have discharg'd:
 The People doe admit you and are summon'd
 To meet anon, upon your approbation.

Corio. Where? at the Senate-house?

Sici. There, Coriolanus.

Corio. May I change these Garments?

Sici. You may Sir.

Corio. That Ile straight do: and knowing my selfe againe Repayre toth' Senate-house.

Men. Ile keepe you company. Will you along?

Brut. We stay here for the People.

Sicio. Fare you well. Exeunt Coriol. and Men.

He ha's it now: and by his Lookes, me thinkes,

*Tis warme at's heart.

Brut. With a proud heart he wore his humble Weeds:
 Will you dismiss the People?

Enter the Plebeians.

Sici. How now, my Masters, have you chose this man?

1 Cit. He ha's our Voyces, Sir.

Brut. We pray the Gods, he may deserve your loves.

2 Cit. Amen, Sir: so my poore unworthy notice,
 He mockt us, when he begg'd our Voyces.

3 Cit. Certainly, he flowted us downe-right.

1 Cit. No, 'tis his kind of speech, he did not mocke us.

2 Cit. Not one amongst us, save your selfe, but sayes.

He us'd us scornfully: he should have shew'd us
 His Markes of Merit, Wounds receiv'd for's Countrey.

Sici. Why so he did, I am sure.

All. No, no; no man saw 'em.

3 Cit. He said he had Wounds,

Which he could shew in private:

And with his Hat, thus waving it in scorne,

I would be Consull, sayes he: aged Custome,

But by your Voyces, will not so permit me.

Your Voyces therefore: when we granted that,
 Here was, I thanke you for your Voyces, thanke you.

Your most sweet Voyces: now you have left your Voyces
 I have no further with you. Was not this mockery?

Sici. Why either were you ignorant to see't?
 Or seeing it, of such Childish friendlinesse,
 To yeeld your Voyces?

Brut. Could you not have told him,
 As you were lesson'd; When he had no Power,
 But was a petty servant to the State,
 He was your Enemy, ever spake against
 Your Liberties, and the Charters that you beare
 I'th' Body of the Weale: and now arriving
 A place of Potency, and sway o'th' State
 If he should still malignantly remaine
 Fast Foe toth' Plebeij, your Voyces might Be Curses to your selves. You should have said,
 That as his worthy deeds did clayme no lesse
 Then what he stood for: so his gracious nature
 Would thinke upon you, for your Voyces, and Translate his Mallice towards you, into Love,
 Standing your friendly Lord.

Sici. Thus to have said,
 As you were fore-advis'd, had toucht his Spirit,
 And try'd his inclination: from him pluckt,
 Either his gracious Promise, which you might
 As cause had call'd you up, have held him to;
 Or else it would have gall'd his furly nature;
 Which easily endures not Article,
 Tying him to ought, so putting him to Rage,
 You should have ta'ne th' advantage of his Choller,
 And pass'd him unelected.

Brut. Did you perceive,
 He did sollicit you in free Contempt.
 When he did need your Loves: and doe you thinke,
 That his Contempt shall not be bruising to you,
 When he hath power to crush? Why, had your Bodies
 No heart among you? Or had you Tongues, to cry
 Against the Rectorship of judgement?

Sici. Have you, ere now, deny'd the asker:
 And now againe, of him that did not aske, but mocke,
 Bestow your su'd-for Tongues?

3 Cit. He's not confirm'd, we may deny him yet.

2 Cit. And will deny him:

Ile have five hundred Voyces of that sound,

1 Cit. I twice five hundred, & their friends, to piec't 'em

Brut. Get you hence instantly, and tell those friends,
 They have chose a Consull, that will from them take
 Their Liberties, make them of no more Voyce
 Then Dogges, that are as often beat for barking,
 As therefore kept to doe so.

Sici. Let them assemble: and on a safer judgement,
 All revoke your ignorant election: Enforce his Pride,
 And his old Hate unto you: besides, forget not
 With what Contempt he wore the humble Weed,
 How in his Suit he scorn'd you: but your Loves,
 Thinking upon his Services, tooke from you
 Th'apprehension of his present portance,
 Which most gibingly, ungravely, he did fashion
 After the inveterate Hate he beares you.

Brut. Lay a fault on us, your Tribunes,
 That we labour'd (no impediment betweene)
 But that you must cast your Election on him.

Sici. Say you chose him, more after our commandment,
 Then as guided by your owne true affections, and that
 Your minds pre-occupi'd with what you rather must do
 Then what you should made you against the graine
 To Voyce him Consull. Lay the fault on us.

Brut.

Brn. I, spare us not : Say, we read Lectures to you,
How youngly he began to serve his Country,
How long continued, and what stocke he springs of,
The Noble house o'th' Martians : from whence came
That Ancus Martius, Numa's Daughters Sonne :
Who after great Hostilius here was King,
Of the same house Publius and Quintus were,
That our best Water, brought by Conduits hither,
And Nobly nam'd, so twice being Censor,
Was his great Ancestor.

Sici. One thus descended,
That hath beside well in his person wrought,
To be set high in place, we did commend
To your remembrances : but you have found,
Scaling his present, bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy ; and revoke
Your suddaine approbation.

Brn. Say you ne're had don't,
(Harpe on that still) but by our putting on :
And presently, when you have drawne your number,
Repaire toth' Capitoll,

All. We will so: almost all repent in their election.
Exeunt Plebeians.

Brn. Let them goe on :
This Mutiny were better put in hazard,
Then stay past doubt, for greater :
If, as his nature is, he fall in rage
With their refusal, both observe and answer
The vantage of his anger.

Sici. Toth' Capitoll, come :
We will be there before the streame o'th' People :
And this shall seeme, as partly 'tis, their owne,
Which we have goaded on-ward. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius.

Cornets. Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, all the Gentry,
Cominius Titus Lartius, and other Senators.

Corio. Tullus Aufidius then had made new head.
Lart. He had my Lord, and that it was which caus'd
Our swifter Composition.

Corio. So then the Volces stand but as at first,
Ready when time shall prompt them, to make roade
Vpon's againe.

Com. They are worne (Lord Confull) so,
That we shall hardly in our ages see
Their Banners wave againe.

Corio. Saw you Aufidius ?

Lart. On safegard he came to me, and did curse
Against the Volces, for they had so vildly
Yeked the Towne : he is rettyred to Antium,

Corio. Spoke he of me ?

Lart. He did, my Lord.

Corio. How ? what ?

Lart. How often he had met you Sword to Sword :
That of all things upon the Earth, he hated
Your person most : That he would pawne his fortunes
To hopelesse restitution, so he might Be call'd your Vanquisher.

Corio. At Antium lives he ?

Lart. At Antium.

Corio. I wish I had a cause to seeke him there,
To oppose his hatred fully. Welcome home.

Enter Sicinius, and Brutus.

Behold, these are the Tribunes of the People,
The Tongues o'th' Common Mouth, I doe despise them :

For they doe pranke them in Authority,
Against all Noble sufferance.

Sici. Passe no further.

Corio. Hah ? what is that ?

Brn. It will be dangerous to goe on-No further.

Corio. What makes this change ?

Men. The matter ?

Com. Hath he not pass'd the Noble, and the Commons ?

Brn. Cominius, no.

Corio. Have I had Childrens Voyces ?

Senat. Tribunes give way, he shall toth' Market place,

Brn. The People are incens'd against him.

Sici. Stop, or all will fall in broyle.

Corio. Are these your heard ?

Must these have Voyces, that can yeeld them now,
And straight disclaim their tongues ? what are your Offices
You being their Mouthes, why rule you not their Teeth ?
Have you not set them on ?

Men. Be calme, be calme.

Corio. It is a purpos'd thing, and growes by Plot,
To curbe the will of the Nobility :
Suffer't, and live with such as cannot rule,
Nor ever will be ruled.

Brn. Call't not a Plot :

The People cry you mockt them : and of late,
When Corne was given them gratis, you repin'd,
Scandal'd the Suppliants : for the People, calld them
Time-pleasers, flatterers, foes to Noblenesse.

Corio. Why this was knowne before.

Brn. Not to them all.

Corio. Have you informd them sithence ?

Brn. How ? I informe them ?

Com. You are like to doe such businesse.

Brn. Not unlike each way to better yours.

Corio. Why then should I be Confull ? by yond Clouds
Let me deserve so ill as you, and make me
Your fellow tribune.

Sici. You shew too much of that,
For which the People stirre : if you will passe
To where you are bound, you must enquire your way,
Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit,
Or never be so Noble as a Confull,
Nor yoake with him for Tribune.

Men. Lets be calme.

Com. The People are abus'd : set on, this paltring Becomes not Rome : nor ha's Coriolanus
Deserv'd this so dishonour'd Rub, layd falsely
Ith plaine Way of his Merit.

Corio. Tell me of Corne ! this was my speech,
And I will speakt againe.

Men. Not now, not now.

Senat. Not in this heat, Sir, now.

Corio. Now as I live, I will.

My Nobler friends, I crave their pardons :
For the mutable ranke-lented Meyny,
Let them regard me, as I doe not flatter,
And therein behold themselves : I say againe,
In soothing them, we nourish gainst our Senate
The Cockle of Rebellion, Insolence, Sedition,
Which we our selves have plowed for, sowed, & scatterd,
By mingling them with us, the honor'd Number,
Who lacke not Vertue, no, nor Power, but that
Which they have given to Beggars.

Men. Well, no more.

Senat. No more words, we beseech you.

Corio. How ? no more ?

As for my Country, I have shed my blood,
Not fearing outward force: So shall my Lungs.
Coin words till their decay, against those Meazels
Which we disdain should Tetter us, yet sought
The very way to catch them.

Brn. You speake a'th' people, as if you were a god,
To punish; Not a man of of their infirmity.

Sicin. 'Twere well we let the people know't.

Men. What, what? his Choller?

Cor. Choller? Were I as patient as the midnight sleep
By Iove, twould be my minde.

Sicin. It is a minde that shall remaine a poison
Where it is: not poyson any further.

Corio. Shall remaine?

Here you this Triton of the Minnonnes? Marke you
His absolute Shall?

Com. Twas from the Cannon.

Corio. Shall? O God! but most unwise Patricians: why
You grave, but wreakelesse Senators, have you thus Given Hidra heere to choose an Officer,
That with his peremptory Shall, being but
The horne, and noise o'th' Monsters, wants not spirit
To say, he'll turne your Current in a ditch,
And make your Channell his? if he have power,
Then vale your ignorance: if none, awake
Your dangerous Lenity: if you are Learn'd,
Be not as common Fooles; if you are not,
Let them have Cushions by you. You are Plebeians,
If they be Senators: and they are no lesse,
When both your voyces blended, the great'st taste
Most pallates theirs. They choose their Magistrate,
And such a one as he, who puts his Shall,
His popular Shall, against a graver Bench
Then ever frown'd in Greece. By Iove himselfe,
It makes the Consuls base; and my soule akes
To know, when two Authorities are up,
Neither Supream; how soone confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of Both, and take
The one by th' other.

Com. Well, on to'th' Market place.

Com. Who ever gave that Counsell, to give forth
The Corne a'th' Store-house gratis, as twas us'd Sometime in Greece.

Men. Well, well, no more of that.

Cor. Though there the people had more absolute powre
I say the norisht disobediences fed, the ruin of the State.

Brn. Why shall the people give
One that speakes thus, their voyce?

Corio. Ile give my Reasons,
More worthe then their Voyces. They know the Corne
Was not our recompence, resting well assur'd
They ne're did service for't, being prest to'th' Warre,
Even when the Navell of the State was touch'd,
They would not thred the Gates: This kind of Service
Did not deserve Corne gratis. Being i'th' Warre,
Thare Mutinies and Revolts, wherein they shew'd
Most Valour spoke not for them. Th' Accusation
Which they have often made against the Senate,
All cause unborne, could never be the Native
Of our so franke Donation. Well, what then?
How shall this Bosome-multiplied, digest
The Senates Courtesie? Let deeds expresse
What's like to be their words. We did request it,
We are the greater pole, and in true feare
They gave us our demands. Thus we debase
The Nature of our Seats, and make the Rabble

Call our Cares, Feares; which will in time
Breake ope the Lockes a'th' Senate, and bring in The Crowes to pecke the Eagles.

Men. Come enough.

Brn. Enough, with over measure.

Corio. No, take more.

What may be sworne by, both Divine and humane,
Seale what I end withall. This double worship,
Whereon part do's disdain with cause, the other
Insult without all season: where Gentry, Title, wisdome
Cannot conclude, but by the yea and no
Of generall ignorance, it must omit:
Recall Necessities, and give way the while
To unstable Slightnesse: Purpose so barr'd, it followes,
Nothing is done to purpose. Therefore beseech you,
You that will be lesse fearefull, then discreet,
That love the Fundamentall part of State
More then you doubt the change oft: That preferre
A Noble life, before a Long, and Wish,
To jumpe a Body with a dangerous Physicke,
That's sure of death without it: at once plucke out
The Multitudinous Tongue, let them not lick
The sweet which is their poyson. Your dishonor
Mangles true judgement, and bereaves the State,
Of that Integrity which should becom't:
Not having the power to doe the good it would
For th'ill which doth controul't.

Brn. Has said enough.

Sicin. Ha's spoken like a Traitor, and shall answer
As Traitors doe.

Corio. Thou wretch, despight ore-whelme thee:
What should the people doe with these bald Tribunes?
On whom depending, their obedience failes
To'th' greater Bench, in a Rebellion:
When what's not meet, but what must be, was Law,
Then were they chosen: in a better houre,
Let what is meet, be said it must be meet,
And throw their power i'th' dust.

Brn. Manifest treason.

Sicin. This a Consul? No.

Enter an Edile.

Brn. The Ediles hoe; Let him be apprehended:

Sicin. Goe call the people, in whole name my Selfe,
Attach thee as a Traitorous Innovator:
A Foe to'th' publike Weale. Obey I charge thee,
And follow to thine answer.

Corio. Hence old Goat.

All. We'll Surety him.

Com. Ag'd sir, hands off.

Corio. Hence rotten thing, or I shall shakethy bones
Out of thy Garments.

Sicin. Helpe ye Citizens.

Enter a rabble of Plebians with the Ediles.

Men. On both sides more respect.

Sicin. Heere's he, that would take from you all your power.

Brn. Seize him Ediles.

All. Downe with him, downe with him:

2 Sen. Weapons, weapons, weapons:

They all bustle about Coriolanus.

Tribunes, Patricians, Citizens: what hoe:
Sicinius, Brutus, Coriolanus, Citizens.

All. Peace, peace, peace, stay, hold, peace.

Men. What is about to be? I am out of Breath, Confusions ne're, I cannot speake. You Tribunes
To'th' people: Coriolanus, patience: speake good Sicinius.

Sicin. Heare me, People peace.

All. Let's heare our Tribune: peace, speake, speake, speake.

Sicin. You are at point to lose your Liberties:

Martius would have all from you; Martius, Whom late you have nam'd for Consull.

Men. Fye, fie, fie, this is the way to kindle, not to quench.

Senat. To unbuild the City, and to lay all flat.

Sicin. What is the City, but the People?

All. True, the People are the City.

Brut. By the consent of all, we were establish'd the Peoples Magistrates.

All. You so remaine.

Men. And so are like to doe.

Com. That is the way to lay the City flat,

To bring the Roofe to the Foundation, And bury all, which yet distinctly raunges In heapes, and piles of Ruine.

Sicin. This deserves death.

Brut. Or let us stand to our Authority, Or let us lose it: we doe here pronounce, Vpon the part o'th' People, in whose power We were elected theirs, Martius is worthy Of present Death.

Sicin. Therefore lay hold of him:

Beare him toth' Rocke Tarpeian, and from thence Into destruction cast him.

Brut. Aediles seize him.

All Ple. Yeeld Martius, yeeld.

Men. Heare me one word, beseech you Tribunes, heare me but a word.

Aediles. Peace, peace.

Men. Be that you seeme, truly your Countries friend, And temperately proceed to what you would Thus violently redresse.

Brut. Sir, those cold wayes,

That seeme like prudent helpees, are very poysonous, Where the Disease is violent. Lay hands upon him, And beare him to the Rocke. Corio. drawes his Sword.

Corio. No, Ile dye here:

There's some among you have beheld me fighting, Come try upon your selves, what you have seene me.

Men. Downe with that Sword, Tribunes withdraw a while.

Brut. Lay hands upon him.

Men. Helpe Martius, helpe: you that be noble, helpe him young and old.

All. Downe with him, downe with him. Exeunt.

In this Mutiny, the Tribunes, the Aediles, and the People are beat in.

Men. Goe, get you to our House: be gone, away, All will be naught else.

Senat. Get you gone.

Com. Stand fast, we have as many friends as enemies.

Men. Shall it be put to that?

Senat. The gods forbid:

I prethee noble friend, home to thy house,

Leave us to cure this Cause.

Men. For tis a Sore upon us.

You cannot Tent your selfe: begon, beseech you.

Com. Come Sir, along with us.

Men. I would they were Barbarians, as they are, Though in Rome litter'd: not Romans, as they are not, Though calved i'th' Porch o'th' Capitoll:

Be gone, put not your worthy Rage into your Tongue,

One time will owe another.

Com. On faire ground, I could beat forty of them.

Men. I could my selfe take up a Brace o'th' best of them, yea, the two Tribunes.

Com. But now t's oddes beyond Arithmeticke, And Manhood is call'd Foolry, when it stands Against a falling Fabricke. Will you hence, Before the Tagge returne? whose Rage doth rend Like interrupted Waters, and ore-beare What they are us'd to beare.

Men. Pray you be gone:

Ile try whether my old Wit be in request With those that have but little: this must be patcht With Cloth of any Colour.

Com. Nay, come away.

Exeunt Coriolanus and Cominius.

Patri. This man ha's marr'd his fortune.

Men. His nature is too noble for the World: He would not flatter Neptune for his Trident, Or Ioue, for's power to thunder: his heart's his Mouth: What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent, And being angry, does forget that ever He heard the Name of death. A Noise within. Here's goodly worke.

Patri. I would they were a bed.

Men. I would they were in Tyber.

What the vengeance, could he not speake 'em faire?

Enter Brutus, and Sicinius with the rabble againe.

Sicin. Where is this Viper,

That would depopulate the city, & be every man himself?

Men. You worthy Tribunes.

Sicin. He shall be throwne downe the Tarpeian rocke With rigorous hands: he hath resisted Law, And therefore Law shall scorne him further Triall Then the severity of the publike Power, Which he so sets at naught.

1 Cit. He shall well know the Noble Tribunes are The peoples mouths, and we their hands.

All. He shall sure out.

Men. Sir, sir.

Sicin. Peace.

Men. Do nor cry havocke, where you should but hunt With modest warrant.

Sicin. Sir, how com'st that you have holpe To mske this rescue?

Men. Heare me speake? As I doe know

The Consuls worthinesse, so can I name his Faults.

Sicin. Consull? what Consull?

Men. The Consull Coriolanus.

Brut. He Consull.

All. No, no, no, no, no.

Men. If by the Tribunes leave,

And yours good people, I may be heard, I would crave a word or two, The which shall turne you to no further harme, Then so much losse of time.

Sicin. Speake briefly then,

For we are peremptory to dispatch This Viporous Traitor: to eject him hence Were but one danger, and to keepe him heere Our certaine death: therefore it is decreed, He dyes to night.

Men. Now the good gods forbid, That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude Towards her deserved Children, is enroll'd In Ioves owne Booke, like an unnaturall Dam Should now eate up her owne.

Sicin.

Sicin. He's a Disease that must be cut away.

Men. Oh he's a Limbe, that ha's but a Disease Mortall, to cut it off: to cure it, easie. What ha's he done to Rome, that's worthy death? Killing our Enemies, the blood he hath lost (Which I dare vouch, is more then that he hath By many an Ounce) he dropp'd it for his Country: And what is left, to loose it by his Countrey, Were to us all that doo', and suffer it A brand to th'enda'th World.

Sicin. This is cleane kamme,

Bru. Meerely awry:

When he did loue his Country, it honour'd him.

Men. The service of the foote Being once gangren'd, is not then respected For what before it was.

Bru. We'll heare no more:

Pursue him to his house, and plucke him thence, Least his infection being of caching nature, Spread further.

Men. One word more, one word: This Tiger-footed-rage, when it shall find The harme of unskan'd swiftnesse, will (too late) Tye Leaden pounds too's heeles. Proceed by Proceffe, Least parties (as he is belov'd) breake out, And sacke great Rome with Romanes.

Bru. If it were so?

Sicin. What doe ye talke? Have we not had a taste of his Obedience? Our Ediles smot; our selves resisted come.

Men. Consider this: He ha's beene bred i'th' Warres Since a could draw a Sword, and is ill-school'd In boulded Language: Meale and Bran together He throwes without distinction. Give me leave, Ile goe to him, and undertake to bring him in peace, Where he shall answer by a lawfull Forme (In peace) to his utmost perill.

I. Sen. Noble Tribunes, It is the humane way; the other course Will prove too bloody: and the end of it, Vnknowne to the beginning.

Sic. Noble Menenius, be you then as the peoples officer: Masters, lay downe your Weapons.

Bru. Goe not home.

Sicin. Meet on the Market place: we'll attend you there Where if you bring not Martius, we'll proceede In our first way.

Men. Ile bring him to you. Let me desire your company: he must come, Or what is worst will follow.

Sena. Pray you let's to him.

Exeunt Omnes.

Enter Coriolanus with Nobles.

Corio. Let them pull all about mine cares, present me Death on the Wheele, or at wilde Horses heeles, Or pile ten hilles on the Tarpeian Rocke, That the precipitation might downe stretch Below the beame of sight; yet will I still Be thus to them.

Enter Volumnia.

Noble. You doe the Nobler.

Corio. I muse my Mother Do's not approue me further, who was wont To call them Wollen Vassalles, things created To buy and sell with Groats, to shew bare heads In Congregations, to yawne, be still, and wonder; When one but of my ordinance stood up

To speake of Peace, or Warre, I talke of you, Why did you wish me milder? Would you have me False to my Nature? Rather say, I play The man I am.

Volum. Oh sir, sir, sir.

I would have had you put your power well on Before you had worne it out.

Corio. Let goe.

Vol. You might have beene enough the man you are, With striving lesse to be so. Lesser had beene The things of your dispositions, if You had not shew'd them how ye were dispos'd Ere they lack'd power to crosse you.

Corio. Let them hang.

Volum. I, and burne too.

Enter Menenius with the Senators.

Men. Come, come, you have bin too rough, something too rough: you must returne, and mend it.

Sen. There's no remedy, Vnlesse by not so doing, our good City Cleave in the midd't, and perish.

Volum. Pray be counsaill'd; I have a heart as little apt as yours, But yet a braine, that leads my use of Anger To better vantage.

Meno. Well said, Noble woman: Before he should thus stoop to th'heart, but that The violent fit a'th'time craves it as Physicke For the whole State; I would put mine Armour on, Which I can scarcely beare.

Corio. What must I doe?

Men. Returne to th' Tribunes.

Corio. Well, what then? what then?

Men. Repent, what you have spoke.

Corio. For them, I cannot doe it to the Gods, Must I then doo't to them?

Volum. You are too absolute, Though therein you can never be too Noble, But when extremities speake. I have heard you say, Honor and Policy, like unsever'd friends, P'th' Warre doe grow together: Grant that, and tell me In Peace, what each of them by th'other loose, That they combine not there?

Corio. Tush, tush.

Men. A good demand.

Volum. If it be honor in your Warres, to seeme The same you are not, which for your best ends You adopt your policy: How is it lesse or worse That it shall hold Companionship in Peace With honor, as in Warre; since that to both It stands in like request.

Corio. Why force you this?

Volum. Because, that

Now it lyes you on to speake to th'people: Not by your owne instruction, nor by th'matter Which your heart prompts you to, but with such words That are but roated in your Tongue; Though but Bastards, and Syllables Of no allowance, to your bosomes truth. Now, this no more dishonors you at all, Then to take in a Towne with gentle words, Which else would put you to your fortune, and The hazard of much blood; I would dissemble with my Nature, where My fortunes and my Friends at stake, requir'd I should doe so in honor. I am in this

Your

Your Wife, your Sonne : These Senators, the Nobles,
And you, will rather shew our generall Lowts,
How you can frowne, then spend a fawne upon 'em,
For the inheritance of their loves, and safegard
Of what that want might ruine.

Men. Noble Lady,

Come goe with us, speake faire : you may salve so,
Not what is dangerous present; but the losse
Of what is past.

Volum. I prethee now, my Sonnie,
Goe to them, with this Bonnet in thy hand,
And thus farre having stretcht it (here be with them)
Thy Knee bussing the stones : for in such businesse
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th'ignorant
More learned then the eares, waving thy head,
Which often thus correcting thy stout heart,
Now humble as the ripest Mulberry,
That will not hold the handling : or say to them,
Thou art their Souldier, and being bred in broyles
Hast not the soft way, which thou dost confesse
Were fit for thee to use, as they to clayme,
In asking their good loves, but thou wilt frame
Thy selfe (forsooth) hereafter theirs so farre,
As thou hast power and person.

Men. This but done,

Even as she speakes, why their hearts were yours :
For they have Pardons, being ask'd, as free,
As words to little purpose.

Volum. Prethee now,
Goe, and be rul'd : although I know thou hadst rather Follow thine Enemy in a fiery Gulfe,
Then flatter him in a Bower, Enter Cominius,
Here is Cominius.

Com. I have beene i'th' Market place; and Sir 'tis fit
You make strong party, or defend your selfe
By calmnesse, or by absence: all's in anger.

Men. Onely faire speech.

Com. I thinke 'twill serve, if he can thereto frame his spirit.

Volum. He must and will :
Prethee now say you will, and goe about it.

Corio. Must I goe shew them my unbarb'd Sconce?
Must I with my bale Tongue give to my Noble heart
A Lye, that it must beare well? I will doo't :
Yet were there but this single Plot, to loote
This Mould of Martius, they to dust should grinde it,
And throw't against the Winde. Toth' Market place :
You have put me now to such a part, which never
I shall discharge toth' Life.

Com. Come, come, we'll prompt you.

Volum. I prethee now sweet Son, as thou hast said
My praises made thee first a Souldier : so
To have my praise for this, performe a part
Thou hast not done before.

Corio. Well, I must doo't :
Away my disposition, and possesse me
Some Harlots spirit : My throat of Warre be turn'd,
Which quier'd with my Drumme into a Pipe,
Small as an Eunuch, or the Virgin voyce
That Babies lull a-sleepe : The smiles of Knaves
Tent in my cheekes, and Schoole-boyes Teares take up
The Glasses of my fight : A Beggars Tongue
Make motion through my Lips, and my Arm'd knees
Who bow'd but in my Stirrop, bend like his
That hath receiv'd an Almes. I will not doo't,
Least I surcease to honor mine owne truth,

And by my bodies action, teach my Mind
A most inherent Basenesse.

Volum. At thy choyce then :

To begge of thee, it is my more dis-honor,
Then thou of them. Come all to ruine, let Thy Mother rather feele thy Pride, then feare
Thy dangerous Stoutnesse : for I mocke at death
With as bigge heart as thou. Doe as thou list,
Thy Valiantnesse was mine, thou suck't it from me :
But owne thy Pride thy selfe.

Corio. Pray be content :

Mother, I am going to the Market place :
Chide me no more. Ile Mountebanke their Loves,
Cogge their hearts from them, and come home belov'd
Of all the Trades in Rome. Looke, I am going :
Commend me to my Wife, Ile returne Consull,
Or never trust to what my Tongue can doe
I'th way of Flattery further.

Volum. Doe your will.

Exit Volumina.

Com. Away, the Tribunes doe attend you : arme your
To answer mildely : for they are prepar'd
With Accusations, as I heare more strong
Then are upon you yet.

Corio. The word is, Mildely. Pray you let us goe,
Let them accuse me by invention : I
Will answere in mine Honor.

Men. I, but mildly.

Corio. Well mildly be it then, Mildly.

Exeunt.

Enter Sicinius and Brutus.

Bru. In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannicall power : if he evade us there,
Inforce him with his envy to the people,
And that the Spoile got on the Antians
Was ne're distributed: What, will he come?

Enter an Edile.

Edile. He's coming.

Bru. How accompanied?

Edil. With old Menenius, and those Senators
That alwayes favour'd him.

Sicin. Have you a Catalogue
Of all the Voices that we have procur'd, set downe by'th (Pole?)

Edil. I have : 'tis ready,

Sicin. Have you collected them by Tribes?

Edil. I have : 'tis ready

Sicin. Assemble presently the people hither :
And when they heare me say, it shall be so,
I'th' right and strength a'th' Commons : be it either
For death, for Fine, or Banishment, then let them
If I say Fine, cry Fine ; if Death, cry Death,
Insisting on the old prerogative
And power i'th Truth a'th Cause.

Edile. I shall informe them.

Bru. And when such time they have begun to cry,
Let them not cease, but with a dinne confus'd ;
Inforce the present Execution
Of what we chance to Sentence.

Edil. Very well.

Sicin. Make them be strong, and ready for this hint
When we shall hap to giv't them.

Bru. Goe about it,

Put him to Choller straite, he hath beene us'd
Ever to conquer, and to have his worth
Of contradiction. Being once chaft, he cannot Be rein'd againe to Temperance; then he speakes

What's

What's in his heart, and that is there which looks
With us to breake his necke.

Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, and Cominius, with others.

Sicin. Well, heere he comes.

Men. Calmely, I doe beseech you.

Corio. I, as an Hostler, that for th'poorest peece
Will beare the Knave by'th Volume :
Th'honor'd goddes
Keepe Rome in safety, and the Chaires of justice
Supplied with worthy men, plant love amongst you,
Through our large Temples with the shewes of peace
And not our streets with Warre.

I Sen. Amen, Amen.

Mene. A Noble wish.

Enter the Edile with the Plebeians.

Sicin. Draw neere ye people.

Edile. Lift to your Tribunes. Audience ;
Peace I say.

Corio. First heare me speake.

Both Tri. Well, say : Peace hoe.

Corio. Shall I be charg'd no further then this present?
Must all determine heere?

Sici. I doe demand,
If you submit you to the peoples voyces,
Allow their Officers, and are content
To suffer lawfull Censure for such faults
As shall be prov'd upon you.

Corio. I am content,

Mene. Loe Citizens, he sayes he is Content:
The warlike Service he ha's done, consider ; Thinke
Vpon the wounds his body beares, which shew
Like Graves i'th holy Church-yard.

Corio. Scratches with Briars, scarres to move Laughter onely.

Men. Consider further :
That when he speakes not like a Citizen,
You find him like a Souldier : doe not take
His rougher Actions for malicious sounds :
But as I say, such as become a Soldier,
Rather then envy you.

Com. Well, well, no more.

Corio. What is the matter,
That being past for Consull with full voyce :
I am so dishonour'd, that the very houre
You take it off againe?

Sici. Answer to us.

Corio. Say then : 'tis true, I ought so.

Sici. We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd Office, and to winde
Your selfe into a power tyrannicall,
For which you are a Traitor to the people.

Corio. How? Traitor?

Mene. Nay temperately: your promise.

Corio. The fires i'th'lowest hell, Fould in the people :
Call me their Traitor, thou injurious Tribune.
Within thine eyes sate twenty thousand deaths
In thy hands clutcht : as many Millions in Thy lying tongue, both numbers. I would say
Thou lyest unto thee, with a voyce as free,
As I doe pray the gods.

Sicin. Marke you this people?

All. To'th'Rocke with him.

Sicin. Peace :

We neede not put new matter to his charge :
What you have seene him doe, and heard him speake :

Beating your Officers, cursing your selves,
Opposing Lawes with stroakes, and here defying
Those whose great power must try him,
Even this so criminall, and in such capitall kinde,
Deserves th'extreamest death.

Brn. But since he hath serv'd well for Rome.

Corio. What doe you prate of Service?

Brut. I talke of that, that know it.

Corio. You?

Mene. Is this the promise that you made your mother?

Com. Know, I pray you.

Corio. He know no further :

Let them pronounce the steepe Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, Fleaing, pent to linger
But with a graine a day, I would not buy
Their mercy, at the price of one faire word,
Nor checke my Courage for what they can give,
To have't with saying, Good morrow.

Sicin. For that he ha's
(As much as in him lyes) from time to time
Envi'd against the people ; seeking meanes
To plucke away their power : as now at last,
Given Hostile strokes, and that not in the presence
Of dreaded justice, but on the Ministers
That doe distribute it. In the name a'th'people,
And in the power of us the Tribunes, we (Ev'n from this instant) banish him our City
In perill of precipitation
From off the Rocke Tarpeian, never more
To enter our Rome gates. I'th'peoples name,
I say it shall be so.

All. It shall be so, it shall be so : let him away :
He's banish'd, and it shall be so.

Com. Heare me my Masters, and my common friends.

Sicin. He's sentenc'd : No more hearing.

Com. Let me speake :

I have beene Consull, and can shew from Rome
Her Enemies markes upon me. I doe loue
My Countries good, with a respect more tender,
More holy, and profound, then mine owne life,
My deere Wives estimate, her wombes encrease,
And treasure of my Loynes : then if I would Speake that.

Sicin. We know your drift. Speake what?

Brn. There's no more to be said, but he is banish'd
As Enemy to the people, and his Countrey.
It shall be so.

All. It shall be so, it shall be so.

Corio. You common cry of Curs, whose breath I hate,
As reeke a'th'rotten Fennes : whose Loves I prize,
As the dead Carcasses of unburied men,
That doe corrupt my Ayre : I banish you,
And heere remaine with your uncertainty.
Let every feeble Rumor shake your hearts :
Your Enemies, with nodding of their Plumes
Fan you into despaire : Have the power still
To banish your Defenders, till at length
Your ignorance (which findes not till it feelles,
Making but reservation of your selves,
Still your owne Foes) deliver you
As most abated Captives, to some Nation
That wonne you without blowes, despising
For you the City. Thus I turne my backe ;
There is a world elsewhere.

Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius, with Cumalijs.
They all shout, and throw up their Caps.

Edile

Edile. The peoples Enemy is gone, is gone.

Al. Our enemy is banish'd, he is gone : Hoo, oo.

Sicin. Go see him out at Gates, and follow him
As he hath follow'd you, with all despight
Give him deserv'd vexation. Let a guard
Attend us through the City.

Al. Come, come, lets see him out at the gates, come:
The gods preserve our Noble Tribunes, come. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Coriolanus, Volumnia, Virgilia, Menenius, Cominius with the young Nobility of Rome.

Corio. Come leave your teares: a brief farwel: the beaft
With many heads butts me away. Nay Mother,
Where is your ancient Courage? You were us'd
To say, Extremitie was the trier of spirits,
That common chances, common men could beare,
That when the Sea was calme, all Boates alike
Shew'd Mastership in floating. Fortunes blowes,
When most strooke home, being gentle wounded, craves
A Noble cunning. You were us'd to load me
With Precepts that would make invincible
The heart that conn'd them.

Virg. Oh heavens! O heavens!

Corio. Nay, I prythee woman.

Vol. Now the Red Pestilence strike all Trades in Rome,
And Occupations perish.

Corio. What, what, what:

I shall be lov'd when I am lack'd. Nay Mother,
Reforme that spirit, when you were wont to say,
If you had beene the Wife of Hercules,
Of his Labours you'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband so much sweate. Cominius,
Droope not, Adieu: Farewell my Wife, my Mother,
He do well yet. Thou old and and true Menenius,
Thy teares are saltier then a yonger mans,
And venomous to thine eyes. My (sometime) Generall,
I have seene the Sterne, and thou hast oft beheld
Heart-hardning spectacles. Tell these sad women,
'Tis fond to waile inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at'em. My Mother, you wot well
My hazards still have beene your solace, and Believ't not lightly, though I goe alone
Like to a lonely Dragon, that his Fenne
Makes fear'd, and talk'd of more then seene: your Sonne
Will or exceed the Common, or be caught
With cautelous baits and practice.

Volum. My first sonne,
Whither will you go? Take good Cominius
With thee a while: Determine on some cour se
More then a wilde exposure, to each chance
That starts i'th' way before thee.

Corio. O the gods!

Com. He follow thee a Moneth, devise with thee
Where thou shalt rest, that thou may' st heare of us,
And we of thee. So if the time thrust forth
A cause for thy Repeale, we shall not send Ore the vast world, to seeke a single man,
And loose advantage, which doth ever coole
Th' absence of the needer.

Corio. Fare ye well:

Thou hast yeares upon thee, and thou art too full

Of the warres surfets, to go rove with one
That's yet unbruis'd: bring me but out at gate.
Come my sweet wife, my dearest Mother, and
My Friends of Noble touch: when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you come:
While I remaine above the ground, you shall Heare from me still, and never of me ought
But what is like me formerly.

Menen. That's worthily

As any eare can heare. Come, let's not weepe,
If I could shake off but one seven yeeres
From these old armes and legges, by the good gods
I'd with thee evere foot.

Corio. Give me thy hand, come. Exeunt.

Enter the two Tribunes, Sicinius, and Brutus, with the Edile.

Sicin. Bid them all home, he's gone: aod wee'l no further,
The Nobility are vexed, whom we see have sided
In his behalfe.

Brut. Now we have shewne our power,
Let us seeme humbler after it is done,
Then when it was a dooing.

Sicin. Bid them home: say their great enemy is gone,
And they, stand in their ancient strength.

Brut. Dismiss them home. Here comes his Mother.

Enter Volumnia, Virgilia, and Menenius.

Sicin. Let's not meet her.

Brut. Why?

Sicin. They say shee's mad.

Brut. They have tane note of us: keepe on your way.

Volum. Oh y'are well met:

Th' hoorded plague a'th' gods requit your love.

Menen. Peace, peace, be not so loud.

Volum. If that I could for weeping, you should heare,
Nay, and you shall heare some. Will you be gone?

Virg. You shall stay too: I would I had the power
To say so to my Husband.

Sicin. Are you mankinde?

Volum. I foole, is that a shame, Note but this Foole,
Was not a man my Father? Had'st thou Foxship
To banish him that strooke more blowes for Rome
Then thou hast spok en words.

Sicin. Oh blessed Heavens!

Volum. Moe Noble blowes, then ever thou wise words.
And for Rome's good He tell thee what: yet goe:
Nay but thou shalt stay too: I would my Sonne
Were in Arabia, and thy Tribe before him,
His good Sword in his hand.

Sicin. What then?

Virg. What then? Hee'd make an end of thy posterity.

Volum. Bastards, and all.

Good man, the Wounds that he does beare for Rome!

Menen. Come, come, peace.

Sicin. I would he had continued to his Country
As he began, and not unknit himselfe
The noble knot he made.

Brut. I would he had.

Volum. I would he had? 'Twas you incens'd the rable.
Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those Mysteries which heaven
Will not have earth to know.

Brut. Pray let's go.

Volum. Now pray sir get you gone.
You have done a brave deede: Ere you go, heare this:
As farre as doth the Capitoll exceede
The meanest house in Rome; so farre my Sonne

c c

This

This Ladies Husband heere ; this (do you see)
Whom you have banish'd, does exceed you all.

Bru. Well, well, wee'll leave you.

Sicin. Why stay you to be baited
With one that wants her Wits. Exit Tribunes.

Volum. Take my Prayers with you.
I would the Gods had nothing else to do,
But to confirme my Curses. Could I meete 'em
But once a day, it would unclogge my heart
Of what lyes heavy too't.

Mene. You have told them home,
And by my troth you have cause : you'l suppe with me.

Volum. Angers my Meate : I suppe upon my selfe,
And so shall sterue with Feeding : Come, let's go,
Leave this faint-puling, and lament as I do,
In Anger, Iuno-like : Come, come, come. Exeunt

Mene. Fic, fie, fie. Exit.

Enter a Roman, and a Volce.

Rom. I know you well sir, and you know me : your name I thinke is Adrian.

Volce. It is so sir, truly I have forgot you.

Rom. I am a Roman, and my Services are as you are against 'em. Know you me yet.

Volce. Nicanor : no,

Rom. The same sir,

Volce. You had more Beard when I last saw you, but your Favour is well appeard by your Tongue- What's the Newes in Rome : I have a Note from the Volcean state to finde you out here. You have well saved mee a dayes journey.

Rom. There hath beene in Rome straunge Insurrections : The people, against the Senatours, Patricians, and Nobles.

Vol. Hath bin ; is it ended then ? Our state thinks not so, they are in a most warlike preparation, & hope to come upon them, in the heate of their division

Rom. The maine blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame againe. For the Nobles receive so to heart, the Banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptnesse, to take all power from the people, and to plucke from them their Tribunes for ever.
This lyes glowing I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out.

Vol. Coriolanus Banisht ?

Rom. Banish'd sir.

Vol. You will be welcome with this intelligence Nicanor.

Rom. The day serves well for them now. I have heard it saide, the fittest time to corrupt a mans Wife, is when shee's false out with her Husband. Your Noble Tullus Aufidius will appeare well in these Warres, his great Opposer Coriolanus being now in no request of his coun-trei.

Volce. He cannot choose : I am most fortunate, thus accidentally to encounter you. You have ended my Businesse, and I will merrily accompany you home.

Rom. I shall betweene this and Supper, tell you most strange things from Rome : all tending to the good of their Adverliaries. Have you an Army ready say you ?

Vol. A most Royall one. The Centurions, and their charges distinctly billeted already in th' entertainment, and to be on foot at an houres warning.

Rom. I am joyfull to heare of their readinesse, and am the man I thinke, that shall set them in present Action. So sir, heartly well met, and most glad of your Company.

Volce. You take my part from me sir, I have the most cause to be glad of yours.

Rom. Well let us go together. Exeunt.

Enter Coriolanus in meane Apparell, Dis-guis'd, and muffled.

Corio. A goodly City is this Antium. Citty,
'Tis I that made thy Widdowes : Many an heyre
Of these faire Edifices for my Warres
Have I heard groane, and drop : Then know me now,
Least that thy Wives with Spits, an Boyes with stones
In puny Battell slay me. Save you sir.

Enter a Citizen.

Cit. And you.

Corio. Direct me, if it be your will, where great Auf-idius lies : Is he in Antium ?

Cit. He is and Feasts the Nobles of the State, at his house this night.

Corio. Which is his house, beseech you ?

Cit. This heere before you.

Corio. Thanke you sir, farewell. Exit Citizen

Oh World, thy slippery turnes ! Friends now fast sworn,
Whose double botomes seene weare on heart,
Whose Houres, whose Bed, whose Meale and Exercise
Are still together : who Twine (as 'twere) in Love,
Vnsparable, shall within this houre,
On a distention of a Doit, breake out
To birterest Enmity : So fellest Foes,
Whose passions, and whose Plots have broke their sleepe
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an Egge, shall grow deere friends
And inter-joyne their yssues. So with me,
My Birth-lace have I, and my lover upon
This Enemie Towne Ile enter, if he slay me
He does faire Iustice : if he give me way, Ile do his Country Service. Exit.

Musicke plays. Enter a Servingman.

1 Ser. Wine, Wine, Wine : What service is heere ? I thinke our Fellowes are a sleepe.

Enter another Serving man.

2 Ser. Where's Cotus : my M. calls for him : Comm. Exit
Enter Coriolanus.

Corio. A goodly house :

The Feast smels : but I appeare not like a Guest.

Enter the first Servingman.

1 Ser. What would you have Friend ? whence are you ?
Here's no place for you : Pray go to the doore ? Exit.

Corio. I have deserv'd no better entertainment, in being Coriolanus. Enter second Servant.

2 Ser. Whence are you sir ? Ha's : the Porter his eyes in his head, that he gives enterance to such Companions ?
Pray get you out.

Corio. Away.

2 Ser. Away ? Get you away.

Corio. Now th' troublesome.

2 Ser. Are you so brave : Ile have you talkt with anon
Enter 3 Servingman, the 1 meets him.

3 What Fellowes this ?

1 A strange one as ever I look'd on : I cannot get him out o'th house : Prythee call my Master to him.

3 What have you to do here fellow ? Pray you avoid the house.

Corio. Let me but stand, I will not hurt your Harth,

3 What are you.

Corio. A Gentleman.

3 A maru'llous poore one.

Corio. True, so I am,

3 Pray you poore Gentleman, take up some other station,

tion heere's no place for you, pray you avoid : Come,
Corio. Follow your Function, go, and batten on colde
Pushes him away from him.

3 What you will not ? Prythee tell my Master what a strange Guest he ha's here.

2 And I shall.

Exit second Servingman.

3 Where dwel'st thou ?

Corio. Vnder the Canopy.

3 Vnder the Canopy ?

Corio. I.

3 Where's that ?

Corio. I'th City of Kites and Crows:

3 I'th City of Kites and Crows. What an Assc it is, then thou dwel'st with Dawes too ?

Corio. No, I serve not thy Master.

3 How sir? Do you meddle with my Master ?

Corio. I, tis an honest service, then to meddle with thy Mistris: Thou prat'st, and prat'st, serve with thy trencher: Hence.

Beates him away

Enter Aufidius with the Servingman.

Auf. Where is this Fellow ?

Here sir, I'de have beaten him like a dogge, but for disturbing the Lords within.

Auf. Whence com'st thou? What woldst y? Thy name?
 Why speak'st not? Speake man: what's thy name?

Corio. If Tullus not yet thou know'st me, and seeing me, dost not thinke me for the man I am, necessitie commands me name my selfe.

Auf. What is thy name ?

Corio. A name unmusically to the Volcians eares,
 And harsh in sound to thine,

Auf. Say, what's thy name ?

Thou hast a Grim appearance, and thy Face
 Beares a Commanne in't: Though thy Tackles torne,
 Thou shew'st a noble Vessell: What's thy name?

Corio. Prepare thy brow to frowne: knowst y me yet ?

Auf. I know thee not? Thy Name?

Corio. My name is Caius Marcius, who hath done
 To thee particularly, and to all the Volces
 Great hurt and Mischiefe: thereto witnessse may
 My Surname Coriolanus. The painefull Service,
 The extreame Dangers, and the droppes of Blood
 Shed for thy thanklesse Country are requitted:
 But with that Surname, a good memorie
 And witnessse of the Malice and Displeasure
 Which thou could'st beare me, only that name remaines.
 The Cruelty and Envy of the people.
 Permitted by our dastard Nobles, who
 Have all forsooke me, hath devour'd the rest:
 And suffer'd me by th' voyce of Slaves to be Hoop'd out of Rome. Now this extremity,
 Hath brought me to thy Harth, not out of hope (Mistake me not) to save my life: for if I had fear'd death, of all the Men i'th' World
 I would have voided thee. But in meere spight
 To be full quit of those my banishers,
 And I before thee heere: Then if thou hast
 A heart of wreak in thee, that wilt revenge
 Thine owne particular wrongs, and stop those maimes
 Of shame seene through thy Country, speed thee straight
 And make my misery serve thy turne: So use it,
 That my revengefull Services may prove
 As benefis to thee- For I will fight
 Against my Cankred Country, with the spleene
 Of all the under Fiends. But if so be,
 Thou dar'st not this and that to prove more Fortunes

Th' art tyr'd, then in a word, I also am
 Longer to live most wearie: and present
 My throat to thee, and to thy Ancient Malice:
 Which not to cut, would shew thee but a Fooole,
 Since I have ever followed thee with hate,
 Drawne Tunnes of Blood out of thy Countrie brest,
 And cannot live but to thy shame, unlesse
 It be to doe thee service.

Auf. Oh Martius, Martius;

Each word thou hast spoke, hath weeded from my heart
 A roote of Ancient Envy. If Iupiter
 Should from yond clowd speake divine things,
 And say 'tis true; I'de not beleevethem more
 Then thee all-Noble Martius. Let me twine Mine armes about that body, where against
 My grained Ash an hundred times hath broke,
 And scarr'd the Moone with splinters: heere I cleep
 The Anvile of my Sword, and do contest
 As hotly, and as Nobly with thy Love,
 As ever in Ambitious strength, I did
 Contend against thy Valour. Know thou first,
 I lov'd the Maid I married: never man
 Sigh'd truer breath. But that I see thee heere
 Thou Noble thing, more dances my rapt heart,
 Then when I first my wedded Mistris saw
 Bestrid my Threshhold. Why, thou Mars I tell thee,
 We have a Power on foote: and I had purpose
 Once more to hew thy Target from thy Brawne,
 Or loose mine Arme for't: Thou hast beate me out
 Twelve severall times, and I have nightly since Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thy selfe and me:
 We have beene downe together in my sleepe,
 Vnbuckling Helmes, fitting each others Throat,
 And wak'd halfe dead with nothing. Worthy Martius
 Had we no other quarrell else to Rome, but that Thou art thence Banish'd, we would muster all
 From twelve, to seventie: and powring Warre
 Into the bowels of ungratefull Rome,
 Like a bold Flood o're-beate. Oh come, go in,
 And take our Friendly Senators by th' hands
 Who now are heere, taking their leaves of me,
 Who am prepar'd against your Territories;
 Though not for Rome it selfe.

Corio. You blesse me Gods.

Auf. Therefore most absolute Sir, if thou wilt have
 The leading of thine owne Revenges, take
 Th' one halfe of my Commission, and set downe
 As best thou art experienc'd, since thou know'st
 Thy Countries strength and weaknesse, thine own waies
 Whether to knocke against the Gates of Rome,
 Or rudely visit them in parts remote,
 To fright them, ere destroy. But come in,
 Let me comment thee first, to those that shall Say yea to thy desires. A thousand welcomes,
 And more a Friend then ere an Enemy,
 Yet Martius that was much. Your hand: most welcome.

Exeunt.

Enter two of the Servingmen.

1 Heere's a strange alteration?

2 By my hand, I had thought to have stroken him with a Cudgell, and yet my minde gave me, his cloathes made a false report of him.

1 What an Arme he has, he turn'd me about with his finger and his thumbe, as one would set up a Top.

2 Nay, I knew by his face that there was some-thing in him. He had sir, a kinde of face me thought. I cannot tell

tell how to terme it.

1 He had so, looking as it were, would I were hang'd but I thought there was more in him, then I could think.

2. So did I, Ile be sworne: He is simply the rarest man i'th' world.

1 I thinke he is: but a greater soldier then he, You wot one.

2 Who my Master?

1 Nay, it's no matter for that.

2 Worth six on him.

1 Nay not so neither: but I take him to be the greater Souldiour.

2 Faith looke you, one cannot tell how to say that: for the defence of a Towne, our Generall is excellent.

1 I, and for an assault too.

Enter the third Servingman.

3 Oh Slaves, I can tell you Newes, News you Rascals

Both. What, what, what? Let's partake.

3 I would not be a Roman of all Nations; I had as live bea condemn'd man.

Both. Wherefore? Wherefore?

3 Why here's he that was wont to thwacke our Generall, Caius Martius.

1 Why do you say, thwacke our Generall?

3 I do not say thwacke our Generall, but he was alwayes good enough for him

2 Come we are fellowes and friends: he was ever too hard for him, I have heard him say so himselfe.

1 He was too hard for him directly, to say the Troth on't before Coriolanus; he scotcht him, and notcht him like a Carbinado.

2 And hee had bin Cannibally given, hee might have boyl'd and eaten him too.

1 But more of thy Newes.

3 Why he is so made on heere within, as if he were Son and Heire to Mars, set at upper end o'th' Table: No question askt him by any of the Senators, but they stand bald before him. Our Generall himselfe makes a Mistris of him, Sanctifies himselfe with's hand, and turnes up the white o'th' eye to his discourse. But the bottome of the Newes is, our Generall is cut i'th' middle, & but one halfe of what he was yesterday. For the other ha's halfe, by the intreaty and grant of the whole Table. Hee'l go hee sayes, and sole the Porter of Rome Gates by th' eares. He will mowe all downe before him, and leave his passage poul'd.

2 And he's as like to do't as any man I can imagine.

3 Doo't? he will doo't: for look you sir, he has as many Friends as Enemies: which Friends sir as it were, durst not (looke you sir) shew themselves (as we terme it) his Friends, whilest he's in Directitude.

1 Directitude? Whats that?

3 But when they shall see sir, his Crest up againe, and the man in blood, they will out of their Burroughes (like Conies after Raine) and revell all with him.

1 But when goes this forward?

3 To-morrow, to day, presently, you shall have the Drum strooke up this afternoone: 'Tis as it were a parcel of their Feast, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips.

2 Why then we shall have a stirring World againe: This peace is nothing, but to rust Iron, encrease Taylors, and breed Ballad-makers.

1 Let me have Warre say I, it exceeds peace as farre as day do's night: It's sprightly walking, audible, and full of Vent. Peace, is a very Apoplexy, Lethargie, mull'd, deafe, sleepe, insensible, a getter of more bastard Children, then warres a destroyer of men.

2 'Tis so, and as warres in some sort may bee said to be a Ravisher, so it cannot be denied, but peace is a great maker of Cuckolds.

1 I, and it makes men hate one another.

3 Reason, because they then lesse neede one another: The Warres for my money. I hope to see Romanes as cheape as Volcians. They are rising, they are rising.

Both. In, in, in, in.

Exeunt.

Enter the two Tribunes, Sicinius, and Brutus.

Sicinius. We heare not of him, neither need we feare him, His remedies are tame, the present peace, And quietnesse of the people, which before Were in wilde hurry. Heere do we make his Friends Blush, that the world goes well: who rather had, Though they themselves did suffer by't, behold Dissentious numbers pestring streets, then see Our Tradesmen singing in their shops, and going About their Functions friendly.

Enter Menenius.

Brutus. We stood too't in good time. Is this Menenius?

Sicinius. 'Tis he, 'tis he: O he is grown most kind of late: Haile Sir.

Mene. Haile to you both.

Sicinius. Your Coriolanus is not much mist, but with his Friends: the Common wealth doth stand, and so would do, were he more angry at it.

Mene. All's well, and might have beene much better, if he could have temporiz'd.

Sicinius. Where is he, heare you?

Mene. Nay I heare nothing:

His Mother and his wife, heare nothing from him.

Enter three or foure Citizens.

All. The Gods preserve you both.

Sicinius. Gooden our Neighbours.

Brutus. Gooden to you all, gooden to you all.

I Our selves, our wives, and children, on our knees, Are bound to pray for you both.

Sicinius. Live, and thrive.

Brutus. Farewell kinde Neighbours:

We wisht Coriolanus had lov'd you as we did.

All. Now the Gods keepe you.

Both Tri. Farewell, farewell.

Exeunt Citizens

Sicinius. This is a happier and more comely time, Then when these Fellowes ran about the streets, Crying Confusion.

Brutus. Caius Martius was

A worthy Officer i'th' Warre, but Insolent, O're come with pride, Ambitious, past all thinking. Selfe-loving.

Sicinius. And affecting one sole Throne, without assistance

Mene. I thinke not so.

Sicinius. We should by this to all our Lamentation, If he had gone forth Counsell, found it so.

Brutus. The Gods have well prevented it, and Rome Sits safe and still, without him.

Enter an Edile.

Edile. Worthy Tribunes,

There is a Slave whom we have put in prison, Reports the Volces with two severall Powers Are entred in the Roman Territories, And with the deepest malice of the Warre, Destroy, what lies before 'em.

Mene. 'Tis Anfidius,

Who hearing of our Martius Banishment, Thrusts forth his hornes againe into the world Which were In-shell'd, when Martius stood for Rome, And

And durst not once peepe out.

Sicin. Come, what talke you of Martius.

Brn. Go see this Rumorer whipt, it cannot be,
The Volces dare breake with us.

Mene. Cannot be?

We have record, that very well it can,
And three examples of the like, hath beene
Within my Age. But reason with the fellow
Before you punish him, where he heard this,
Least you shall chance to whip your Information,
And beate the Messenger, who bids beware
Of what is to be dreaded.

Sicin. Tell not me : I know this cannot be.

Brn. Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mef. The Nobles in great earnestnesse are going
All to the Senate-houle : some newes is comming
That turnes their Countenances.

Sicin. 'Tis this Slave :

Go whip him fore the peoples eyes : His raising,
Nothing but his report.

Mef. Yes worthy Sir,

The Slaves report is seconded, and more
More fearfull is deliver'd.

Sicin. What more fearefull?

Mef. It is spoke freely out of many mouths,
How probable I do not know, that Martius
Joyn'd with Aufidius, leads a power 'gainst Rome,
And vowes Revenge as spacious, as betweene
The yong'lt and oldest thing.

Sicin. This is most likely,

Brn. Rais'd onely, that the weaker fort may with Good Martius home againe.

Sicin. The very trick on't.

Mene. This is unlikely,
He, and Aufidius can no more attone
Then violent't Contrariety.

Enter Messenger.

Mef. You are sent for to the Senate :
A fearefull Army, led by Caius Marius,
Associated with Aufidius Rages
Vpon our Territories, and have already O're-borne their way, consum'd with fire, and tooke
What lay before them.

Enter Cominius.

Com. Oh you have made good worke.

Mene. What newes? What newes?

Com. You have help to ravish your owne daughters, &
To melt the City Leades upon your pates,
To see your Wives dishonour'd to your Noses.

Mene. What's the newes? What's the newes?

Com. Your Temples burned in their Ciment, and Your Franchises, whereon you stood, confin'd
Into an Augors boare.

Mene. Pray now the newes :

You have made faire worke I feare me : pray your newes,
If Martius should be joyn'd with Volceans.

Com. If? He is their God, he leads them like a thing
Made by some other Deity then Nature,
That shapen man Better : and they foilow him
Against us Brats, with no lesse Confidence,
Then Boyes pursuing Summer Butter-flies,
Or Butchers killing Flyes.

Mene. You have made good worke,
You and your Apron men : you, that stood so much Vpon the voyce of occupation, and

The breath of Garlike-eaters.

Com. Hee'll shake your Rome about your eares.

Mene. As Herculus did shake downe Mellow Fruite :
You have made faire worke.

Brn. But is this true sir?

Com. I, and you'll looke pale

Before you finde it other. All the Regions
Do smilingly Revolt, and who resists
Are mock'd for valiant Ignorance,
And perish constant Fooles : who is't can blame him?
Your Enemies and his, finde something in him.

Mene. We are all undone, unlesse
The Noble man have mercy.

Com. Who shall aske it?

The Tribunes cannot doo't for shame ; the people
Deserve such pittie of him, as the Wolfe
Doe's of the Shepheards : For his best Friends, if they Should say be good to Rome, they charg'd him, even
As those should do that had deserv'd his hate,
And therein shew'd like Enemies.

Me. 'Tis true, if he were putting to my house, the brand
That should consume it, I have not the face
To say, beseech you cease. You have made faire hands,
You and your Crafts, you have crafted faire.

Com. You have brought A Trembling upon Rome, such as was never S'incapable of helpe:

Tri. Say not, we brought it.

Mene. How? Was't we? We lov'd him,
But like Beasts, and Cowardly Nobles,
Gave way unto your Clusters, who did hoot
Him out o'th' City.

Com. Bvt I feare

They'l roare him in againe. Tullus Aufidius,
The second name of men, obeyes his points
As if he were his Officer : Desperation,
Is all the policy, Strength, and Defence
That Rome can make against them.

Enter a Troope of Citizens.

Mene. Heere come the Clusters.

And is Aufidius with him? You are they
That made the Ayre unwholsome, when you cast
Your stinking, greasie Caps, in hooting
At Coriolanus Exile. How he's comming,
And not a haire upon a Souldiers head
Which will not prove a whip : As many Coxcombes
As you threw Caps up, will he tumble downe,
And pay you for your voyces. 'Tis no matter,
If he could burne us all into one coale,
We have deserv'd it.

Omnes. Faith, we heare fearfull Newes.

1 Cit. For mine owne part,

When I said banish him, I said 'twas pittie.

2 And so did I.

2 And so did I : and to say the truth, so did very many of us, that we did we did for the best, and though we willingly consented to his Banishment, yet it was against our will.

Com. Y'are goodly things, you Voyces.

Mene. You have made you good worke
You and your cry. Shalt to the Capitoll?

Com. Oh I, what else?

Exeunt both

Sicin. Go Masters get you home, be not dismayd,
These are a Side, that would be glad to have
This true, which they so seeme to feare. Go home,
And shew no signe of Feare.

1 Cit. The Gods bee good to us: Come Masters let's home, I ever said we were i'th wrong, when we banish'd him.

2 Cit. So did we all, But come, let's home. Exit. Cit.

Brn. I do not like this Newes.

Sicin. Nor I.

Brn. Let's to the Capitoll: would halfe my wealth Would by this for a lye.

Sicin. Pray let's go.

Exeunt Tribunes.

Enter Aufidius with his Lieutenant.

Auf. Do they still flye to'th Roman?

Lien. I do not know what Witchcraft's in him: but Your Soldiers use him as the grace'fore meate, Their talke at Table, and their Thanks at end, And you are darkned in this action Sir, Even by your owne.

Auf. I cannot helpe it now, Vnlesse by using meanes I lame the foote Of our designe. He beares himselfe more proudly, Even to my person, then I thought he would When first I did embrace him. Yet his Nature In that's no Changeling, and I must excuse What cannot be amended.

Lien. Yet I wish Sir, (I meane for your perticular) you had not Ioynd in Commission with him: but either have borne The action of your selfe, or else to him, had left it soly.

Auf. I understand thee well; and be thou sure When he shall come to his account, he knowes not What I can urge against him, although it seemes And so he thinks, and is no lesse apparant To th' vulgar eye, that he beares all things fairely: And shewes good Husbandry for the Volcean State, Fights Dragon-like, and does atcheeve as soone As draw his Sword: yet he hath left undone That which shall breake his necke, or hazard mine. When ere we come to our account.

Lien. Sir, I beseech you, think you he'll carry Rome?

Auf. All places yeeld to him ere he sits downe, And the Nobility of Rome are his: The Senator and patricians love him too: The tribunes are no Soldiers: and their people Will be as rash in the repeale, as hasty To expell him thence. I thinke hee'll be to Rome As is the Aspray to the Fish, who takes it By Sovereignty of Nature. First, he was A Noble servant to them, but he could not Carry his Honors even: whether 'twas Pride Which out of dayly Fortune ever taints The happy man; whether defect of judgement, To faile in the disposing of those chances Which he was Lord of: or whether Nature, Not to be other then one thing, not mooving From th' Caske to th' Cushion: but commanding peace Even with the same austerity and garbe, As he controll'd the warre. But one of these (As he hath spices of them all) not all, For I dare so farre free him, made him fear'd, So hated, and so banish'd: but he ha's a Merit To choake it in the utterance: So our Vertues, Lie in th' interpretation of the time, And power unto it selfe most commendable, Hath not a Tombe so evident as a Chaire To extoll what it hath done.

One fire drives out one fire; one Naile, one Naile; Rights by rights fouler, strengths by strengths do faile.

Come let's away: when Cainus Rome is thine, Thou art poor't of al; then shortly art thou mine. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Menenius, Cominius, Sicinius, Brutus, the two Tribunes, with others.

Menen. No, Ile not go: you heare what he hath said Which was sometime his Generall: who loved him In a most deere particular. He call'd me Father: But what o'that? Go you that banish'd him A mile before his Tent, fall downe and kneele The way into his mercy: Nay, if he coy'd To heare Cominius speake, Ile keepe at home.

Com. He would not seeme to know me.

Menen. Do you heare?

Com. Yet one time he did call me by my name: I urg'd our old acquaintance, and the drops That we have bled together. Coriolanus He would not answer to: Forbad all Names, He was a kinde of Nothing, Titlelesse, Till he had forg'd himselfe a name a'th' fire Of burning Rome.

Menen. Why so: you have made good worke: A paire of Tribunes, that have wrack'd for Rome, To make Coales cheape: A Noble memory.

Com. I minded him, how Royall 'twas to pardon When it was lesse expected. He replied It was a bare petition of a State To one whom they had punish'd.

Menen. Very well, could he say lesse?

Com. I offered to awaken his regard For's private Friends. His answere to me was He could not stay to picke them, in a pile Of noysome musty Chaffe. He said, 'twas folly For one poore graine or two, to leave unburnt And still to note th' offence.

Menen. For one poore graine or two? I am one of those: his Mother, Wife, his Childe, And this brave Fellow too: we are the Graines, You are the musty Chaffe, and you are smelt Above the Moone. We must be burnt for you.

Sicin. Nay, pray be patient: If you refuse your ayde In this so never-needed helpe, yet do not Vpbraid's with our distresse. But sure if you Would be your Countries Pleader, your good tongue More then the instant Armie we can make Might stop our Countryman.

Menen. No: Ile not meddle.

Sicin. Pray you go to him.

Menen. What should I do?

Brn. Onely make triall what your Love can do, For Rome, towards Martius.

Mene. Well, and say that Martius returne me, As Cominius is return'd, unheard: what then? But as a discontented Friend, griefe-shot With his unkindnesse: Say't be so?

Sicin. Yet your good will Must have that thanks from Rome, after the measure As you intended well.

Mene. Ile undertak't: I thinke hee'll heare me. Yet to bite his lip, And humme at good Cominius, much unhearts me.

He was not taken well, he had not din'd,
The Veines unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
We powt upon the Morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we have stufft
These Pipes; and these Conveyances of our blood
With Wine and Feeding, we have suppler Soules
Then in our Priest-like Fasts: therefore Ile watch him
Till he be dieted to my request,
And then Ile set upon him.

Brw. You know the very rode into his kindnesse,
And cannot lose your way.

Mene. Good faith Ile prove him,
Speed how it will. I shall ere long, have knowledge
Of my successe. Exit.

Com. Hee'l never heare him.

Scin. Not.

Com. I tell you, he doe's sit in Gold, his eye
Red as 'twould burne Rome: and his Injury
The Gaoler to his pittie. I kneel'd before him,
'Twas very faintly he said Rise: dismist me
Thus with his speechlesse hand. What he would do
He sent in writing after me: what he would not,
Bound with an Oath to yeeld to his conditions:
So that all hope is vaine, unlesse his Noble Mother,
And his Wife, who (as I heare) meane to solícite him
For mercy to his Country: therefore let's hence,
And with our faire intreaties hast them on. Exeunt.

Enter Menenius to the Watchor Guard.

Wat. Stay: whence are you?

Wat. Stand, and go backe.

Mo. You guard like men, 'tis well. But by your leave,
I am an Officer of State, & come to speake with Coriolanus.

I From whence? Mene. From Rome.

I You may not passe, you must returne: our Generall will no more heare from thence.

2 You'll see your Rome embrac'd with fire, before You'll speake with Coriolanus.

Mene. Good my Friends,
If you have heard your Generall talke of Rome,
And of his Friends there, it is Lots to Blankes,
My name hath touch't your eares: it is Menenius.

1 Be it so, go back: the vertue of your name,
Is not heere passable.

Mene. I tell thee Fellow,
Thy Generall is my Lover: I have beene
The booke of his good Acts, whence men have read
His Fame unparalell'd, happely amplified:
For I have ever uerified my Friends,
(Of whom hee's cheefe) with all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer: Nay, sometimes,
Like to a Bowle upon a subtile ground
I have tumbled pat the throw: and in his praise
Have (almost) stamp't the Leasing. Therefore Fellow,
I must have leave to passe.

1 Faith Sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalfe, as you have uttered words in your owne, you should not passe heere: no, though it were as vertuous to lye, as to live chastly. Therefore go backe.

Mene. Fry the fellow, remember my name is Menenius, always factionary on the party of your Generall.

2 Howsoever you have bin his Lier, as you say you have, I am one that telling true under him, must say you cannot passe. Therefore go backe.

Mene. Ha's he din'd can't thou tell? For I would not speake with him, till after dinner.

1 You are a Roman, are you?

Mene. I am as thy Generall is.

1 Then you should hate Rome, as he do's. Can you, when you have pusht out your gates, the very Defender of them, and in a uiolent populer ignorance, given your enemy your shield, thinke to front his reveng's with the easie groanes of old women, the Virginall Palms of your daughters, or with the pallied intercession of such a decay'd Dotant as you seeme to be? Can you think to blow out the intended fire, your City is ready to flame in, with such weake breath as this? No, you are deceiv'd, therefore backe to Rome, and prepare for your execution: you are condemn'd, our Generall has sworne you out of reprieve and pardon.

Mene. Sirra, if the Captaine knew I were heere,
He would use me with estimation.

1 Come, my Captaine knowes you not.

Mene. I meane thy Generall.

1 My Generall cares not for you. Backe I say, go: least
I let forth your halfe pinte of blood. Backe, that's the utmost of your having, backe.

Mene. Nay but Fellow, Fellow.

Enter Coriolanus with Aufidius.

Corio. What's the matter?

Mene. Now you Companion: Ile say an arrant for you:
you shall know now that I am in estimation: you shall perceive, that a lacke gardant cannot office me from my Son Coriolanus, guesse but my entertainment with him: if thou stand'st not i'th state of hanging, or of some death more long in Spectatorship, and crueller in suffering, behold now presently, and swoond for what's to come upon thee. The glorious Gods sit in hourelly Synod about thy particular prosperity, and love thee no worse then thy old Father Menenius do's. O my Son, my Son! thou art preparing fire for us: looke thee, heere's water to quench it.
I was hardly moved to come to thee: but being assured none but my selfe could moue thee, I have beene blowne out of your Gates with fighes: and conjure thee to pardon Rome, and thy petitionary Countrimen. The good Gods asswage thy wrath, and turne the dregs of it, upon this Varlet heere: This, who like a blocke hath denyed my access to thee.

Corio. Away.

Mene. How? Away?

Corio. Wife, Mother, Child, I know not. My affaires
Are Servanted to others: Though I owe
My revenge properly, my remission lies
In Volcean breasts. That we have beene familiar, Ingrate forgetfulnesse shall poison rather
Then pittie: Note how much, therefore be gone.
Mine cares against your suites, are stronger then
Your gates against my force. Yet for I loved thee,
Take this along, I writ it for thy sake,
And would have sent it. Another word Menenius,
I will not heare thee speake. This man Aufidius
Was my belov'd in Rome: yet thou behold'st.

Auf. You keepe a constant temper. Exeunt.

Manent the Guard and Menenius.

1 Now sir, is your name Menenius?

2 'Tis a spell you see of much power:
You know the way home againe:

1 Do you heare how we are shent for keeping your greatnesse backe?

2 What cause do you thinke I have to swoond?

Mene. I neither care for th' world, nor your Generall for such things as you, I can scarce thinke ther's any, y'are so flight. He that hath a will to dye by himselfe, feares it not

not from another : Let your Generall do his worst. For you, bee that you are, long ; and your misery encrease with your age. I say to you, as I was said to, Away. Exit.

1. A Noble Fellow I warrant him,

2 The worthy Fellow is our General. He's the Rocke, The Oake not to be winde-shaken. Exit Watch.

Enter Coriolanus and Aufidius.

Corio. We will before the walls of Rome to morrow Set downe our Hoast. My partner in this Action, You must report to th' Volcian Lords, how plainly I have borne this Businesse.

Auf. Onely their ends you have respected. Stopt your eares against the generall suite of Rome: Never admitted a privat whisper, no not with such friends That thought them sure of you.

Corio. This last old man, Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome, Lov'd me, above the measure of a Father, Nay godded me indeed. Their latest refuge Was to send him : for whose old love I have (Though I shew'd sowrely to him) once more offer'd The first Conditions which they did refuse, And cannot now accept, to grace him onely, That thought he could do more : A very little I have yeelded to. Fresh Embassies, and Suites, Nor from the State, nor private friends hereafter Will I lend care to. Ha ? what shout is this? Shout within Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow In the same time 'tis made ? I will not.

Enter Virgilia, Volunna, Valeria, young Martins; with Attendants.

My wife comes formost, then the honour'd mould Wherein this trunke was fram'd, and in her hand The Graundchilde to her blood. But out affection, All bond and priviledge of nature breake; Let it be Vertuous to be Obstinate.

What is that Curt'sie worth ? Or those Doves eyes, Which can make Gods forsworne ? I melt and am not Offstronger earth then others : my Mother bowes, As if Olympus to a Mole-hill should In supplication Nod : and my young Boy Hath an aspect of intercession, which Great Nature cries, Deny not. Let the Volces Plough Rome, and harrow Italy, Ile never Be such a Gosling to obey instinct : but stand As if a man were Author of himself, & knew no other kin

Virgil. My Lord and Husband.

Corio. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.

Virg. The sorrow that delivers us thus chang'd, Makes you thinke so.

Corio. Like a dull Actor now, I have forgot my part, And I am out, even to a full Disgrace. Best of my Flesh, Forgive my Tyranny : but do not say, For that forgive our Romans. O a kisse Long as my Exile, sweet as my Revenge ! Now by the jealous Queene of Heaven, that kisse I carried from thee deare; and my true Lippe Hath Virgin'd it ere since. You Gods, I pray, And the most Noble Mother of the world Leave unsaluted : Sinke my knee i'th' earth; Kneels Of thy deepe duty, more impression shew Then that of common Sonnes.

Volun. Oh stand up blest ! Whil'st with no softer Cushion then the Flint I kneele before thee, and unproperly Shew duty as mistaken, all this while, Betweene the Childe, and Parent.

Corio. What's this ? your knees to me ? To your Corrected Sonne ?

Then let the Pibbles on the hungry beach Fillop the Starres : Then, let the mutinous windes Strike the proud Cedars 'gainst the fiery Sun : Murd'ring Impossibility, to make What cannot be, slight worke.

Volun. Thou art my Warriour, I hope to frame thee Do you know this Lady ?

Corio. The Noble Sister of Publicola; The Moone of Rome : Chaste as the Ifficle That's curdied by the Frost, from purest Snow, And hangs on Diana's Temple : Deere Valeria.

Volun. This is a poore Epitome of yours, Which by th' interpretation of full time, May shew like all your selfe.

Corio. The God of Souldiers : With the consent of supream Love, informe Thy thoughts with Noblenesse, that thou mayst prove To shame invulnerable, and strike i'th Warres Like a great Sea-marke standing every flaw, And saving those that eye thee,

Volun. Your knee, Sirrah.

Corio. That's my brave Boy.

Volun. Even he, your wife, this Ladie, and my selfe, Are Sutors to you.

Corio. I beseech you peace : Or if yould aske remember this before ; The thing I have forsworne to graunt, may never Be held by you denials. Do not bid me Dismiss my Soldiers, or capitulate Againe, with Rome's Mechanickes. Tell me not Wherein I seeme unnaturall : Desire not t'allay My Rages and Revenges, with your colder reasons.

Volun. Oh no more, no more : You have said you will not grant us any thing : For we have nothing else to aske, but that Which you deny already : yet we will aske, That if you faile in our request, the blame May hang upon your hardnesse, therefore heare us.

Corio. Aufidius, and you Volces marke, for wee'l Heare nought from Rome in private. Your request ?

Volun. Should we be silent & not speak, our Raiment And state of Bodies would bewray what life We have led since thy Exile. Thinke with thy selfe, How more unfortunate then living women Are we come hither ; since that thy sight, which should Make our eies flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts, Constraines them weepe, and shake with feare & sorrow, Making the Mother, wife, and Childe to see, The Sonne, the Husband, and the Father tearing His Countries Bowels out ; and to poore we Thine enmities most capitall : Thou barr'st us Our prayers to the Gods, which is a comfort That all but we enjoy. For how can we ? Alas ! how can we, for our Country pray ? Where to we are bound, together with thy victory : Where to we are bound : Alacke, or we must loose The Countrie our deere Nurse, or else thy person Our comfort in the Country. We must finde An evident Calamity, though we had Our wish, which side should win. For either thou Must as a Forraine Recreant be led With Manacles through our streets, or else Triumphantly treade on thy Countries ruine,

And

And beare the Palme, for having bravely shed
Thy Wife and Childrens blood: For my selfe, Sonne,
I purpose not to waite on Fortune, till
These warres determine: if I cannot perswade thee,
Rather to shew a Noble grace to both parts,
Then seeke the end of one; thou shalt no sooner
March to assault thy Country, then to treade
(Trust too't, thou shalt not) on thy Mothers wombe
That brought thee to this world.

Virg. I, and mine, that brought you forth this boy,
To keepe your name living to time.

Boy. A shall not tread on me: He run away
Till I am bigger, but then He fight.

Corio. Not of a womans tendernesse to be,
Requires nor Childe, nor womans face to see:
I have sate too long.

Volm. Nay, go not from us thus:
If it were so, that our request did tend
To save the Romanes, thereby to destroy
The Volces whom you serve, you might condemne us
As poysonous of your Honour. No, our suite
Is that you reconcile them: While the Volces
May say, this mercy we have shew'd: the Romanes,
This we receiv'd, and each in either side
Give the All-haile to thee, and cry be Blest
For making up this peace. Thou know'st (great Sonne)
The end of Warres uncertaine: but this certaine,
That if thou conquer Rome, the benefit
Which thou shalt thereby reape, is such a name
Whose repetition will be dogg'd with Curses:
Whose Chronicle thus writ, The man was Noble,
But with his last Attempt, he wip'd it out:
Destroy'd his Country, and his name remaines
To th' insuing Age, abhorr'd. Speake to me Son:
Thou hast affected the five straines of Honor,
To imitate the graces of the Gods.

To teare with Thunder the wide Cheekes a'th' Ayre,
And yet to change thy Sulphure with a Boul.
That should but rive an Oake. Why do'st not speake?
Think'st thou it honourable for a Noble man
Still to remember wrongs? Daughter, speake you:
He cares not for your weeping. Speake thou Boy,
Perhaps thy childishnesse will move him more
Then can our Reasons. There is no man in the world
More bound to's Mother, yet here he let's me prate
Like one i'th' Stockes. Thou hast never in thy life,
Shew'd thy deere Mother any curtesie,
When she (poore Hen) fond of no second brood,
Ha's cluck'd thee to the Warres, and safely home
Loden with Honour. Say my Request's unjust,
And spurne me backe: But, if it be not so
Thou art not honest, and the Gods will plague thee
That thou restrain'st from me the Duty, which
To a Mothers part belongs. He turnes away:
Down Ladies: let us shame him with our knees
To his sur-name Coriolanus longs more pride
Then pitty to our Prayers. Downe: an end,
This is the last. So, we will home to Rome,
And dye among our Neighbours: Nay, behold's,
This Boy that cannot tell what he would have,
But kneeles, and holds up hands for fellowship,
Doe's reason our Petition with more strength
Then thou hast to deny't. Come, let us go:
This Fellow had a Volcean to his Mother:
His Wife is in Coriolus, and his Childe
Like him by chance: yet give us our dispatch:

I am husht untill our City be a fire, & then He speak a little
Holds her by the hand silent.

Corio. O Mother, Mother!
What have you done? Behold, the Heavens do ope,
The Gods looke downe, and this unnaturall Scene
They laugh at. Oh my Mother, Mother: Oh!
You have wonne a happy Victory to Rome.
But for your Sonne, beleeve it: Oh beleeve it,
Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd,
If not most mortall to him. But let it come:

Auffidius, though I cannot make true Warres,
He frame convenient peace. Now good Auffidius,
Were you in my steed, would you have heard
A mother lesse? or granted lesse Auffidius?

Auf. I was mou'd withall.

Corio. I dare be sworne you were:
And fir, it is no little thing to make
Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But (good fir)
What peace you'l make, advise me: For my part,
He not to Rome, He backe with you, and pray you Stand to me in this cause. O Mother! Wife!

Auf. I am glad thou hast set thy mercy, & thy Honor
At difference in thee: Out of that He worke
My selfe a former Fortune.

Corio. I by and by; But we will drinke together:
And you shall beare
A better witnesse backe then words, which we
On like conditions, will haue counter-seal'd.
Come enter with us: Ladies you deserve
To have a Temple built you: All the Swords
In Italy, and her Confederate Armes
Could not have made this peace.

Exeunt.

Enter Menenius and Sicinius. (Stone?)

Mene. See you yon'd Coin a'th Capitol, yon'd corner
Sicin. Why what of that?

Mene. If it be possible for you to displace it with your little finger, there is some hope the Ladies of Rome, especially his Mother, may prevaile with him. But I say, there is no hope in't, our throats are sentenc'd, and stay upon execution.

Sicin. Is't possible, that so short a time can alter the condition of a man.

Mene. There is difference between a Grub & a Butterfly, yet your Butterfly was a Grub: this Martius, is growne from Man to Dragon: He has wings, hee's more then a creeping thing.

Sicin. He lov'd his Mother deerely.

Mene. So did he me: and he no more remembers his Mother now, then an eight yeare old horse. The rartnesse of his face, sowres ripe Grapes. When he walks, he moves like an Engine, and the ground shrinks before his Treading. He is able to pierce a Corset with his eye: Talkes like a knell, and his hum is a Battery. He sits in his State asa thing made for Alexander. What he bids be done, is finisht with his bidding. He wants nothing of a God but Eternitie, and a Heaven to Throne in.

Sicin. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.

Mene. I paint him in the Character. Mark what mercy his Mother shall bring from him: There is no more mercy in him, then there is milke in a male-Tyger, that shall our poore City finde: and all this is long of you.

Sicin. The Gods be good unto us.

Mene. No, in such a case the Gods will not be good unto us. When we banish'd him, we respect not them:
and he returning to breake our necks, they respect not us.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes.

Mef. Sir, if you'd save your life flye to your House,
The Plebeians have got your Fellow Tribune,
And hale him up and downe; all swearing, if
The Romane Ladies bring not comfort home,
They'l give him death by Inches.

Enter another Messenger.

Sicin. What's the Newes? (prevayl'd,

Mef. Good Newes, good newes, the Ladies have
The Volcians are dislodg'd, and Martius gone:
A merrier day did never yet greet Rome,
No, not th' expulsion of the Tarquins.

Sicin. Friend, art thou certaine this is true?
Is't most certaine.

Mef. As certaine as I know the Sun is fire:
Where have you lurk'd that you make doubt of it:
Ne're through an Arch so hurried the blowne Tide
As the recomfited through th' gates. Why harke you?

Trumpets, Hoboyes, Drums beate, altogether.

The Trumpets, Sack-buts, Plalteries and Fifes,
Tabors, and Symboles, and the shewing Romans,
Make the Sunne dance. Hearke yon, A shout within

Mene. This is good Newes:
I will go meete the Ladies. This Volumna,
Is worth of Consuls, Senators, Patricians,
A City full: Of Tribunes such as you,
A Sea and Land full: you have pray'd well to day:
This Morning, for ten thousand of your throates,
I'de not have given a doitt. Harke, how they joy.

Sound still with the Shouts.

Sicin. First, the Gods bleffe you for your tydings:
Next, accept my thankfulness.

Mef. Sir, we have all great cause to give great thanks.

Sicin. They are neere the City.

Mef. Almost at point to enter.

Sicin. Wee'l meet them, and helpe the joy. Exeunt.

Enter two Senators, with Ladies, passing over the Stage, with other Lords.

Sens. Behold our Patronnesse, the life of Rome:
Call all your Tribes together, praise the Gods,
And make triumphant fires, strow Flowers before them:
Vnshoot the noise that banish'd Martius;
Repeale him, with the welcome of his Mother:
Cry welcome Ladies, welcome.

All. Welcome Ladies, welcome. Exeunt.

A Flourish with Drummes & Trumpets.

Enter Tullius Aufidius, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the Lords a'th' City, I am heere:
Deliver them this Paper: having read it,
Bid them repaire to th' Market place, where I
Even in theirs, and in the Commons eares
Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse;
The City Ports by this hath enter'd, and Intends t'appeare before the People, hoping
To purge himselfe with words. Dispatch.

Enter 3 or 4 Conspirators of Aufidius Faction.
Most Welcome.

1. Con. How is it with our Generall?

Auf. Even so, as with a man by his owne Almes im-poyson'd, and with his Charity flaine.

2. Con. Most Noble Sir, If you do hold the same intent Wherein you wisht us parties: Wee'l deliver you
Of your great danger.

Auf. Sir, I cannot tell,

We must proceed as we do finde the People.

3. Con. The people will remaine uncertaine, whilst 'Twixt you there's difference: but the fall of either
Makes the Survivor heyre of all.

Auf. I know it:

And my pretext to strike at him, admits
A good construction. I rais'd him, and I pawn'd
Mine Honor for his truth: who being so heighten'd,
He watered his new Plants with dewes of Flatterie,
Seducing so my Friends: and to this end,
He bowd his Nature, never knowne before,
But to be rough, unswayable, and free.

3. Consp. Sir, his stoutnesse
When he did stand for Consull, which he lost
By lacke of stooping,

Auf. That I would have spoke of:
Being banish'd for't, he came unto my Harth,
Presented to my knife his Throat: I tooke him,
Made him joynt-servant with me: Gave him way
In all his owne desires: Nay, let him choose
Out of my Files, his projects, to accomplish
My best and freshest men, serv'd his diuinelements
In mine owne person: hope to reape the Fame
Which he did end all his; and tooke some pride
To do my feile this wrong; Till at the last
I seem'd his Follower, nor Partner; and
He wadg'd me with his Countenance, as if I had bin Mercenary.

1. Con. So he did my Lord:
The Army marvyled at it, and in the last,
When he had carried Rome, and that we look'd
For no lesse Spoile, then Glory.

Auf. There was it:
For which my sinewes shall be stretcht upon him,
At a few drops of Womens rhowme, which are
As cheape as Lies; he sold the Blood and Labour
Of our great Action; therefore shall he dye,
And Ile renew me in his fall. But hearke,

Drummes and Trumpets sounds, with great shouts of the people.

1. Con. Your Native Towne you ente'd like a Poste,
And had no welcomes home, but he returnes
Splitting the Ayre with noyse,

2. Con. And patient Fooles,
Whose children he hath flaine, their base throats teare
With giving him glorie.

3. Con. Therefore at your vantage,
Ere he expresse himselfe, or move the people
With what he would say, let him feele your Sword:
Which he will second, when he lies along
After your way. His Tale pronounc'd, shall bury His Reasons, with his Body.

Auf. Say no more. Heere come the Lords,
Enter the Lords of the City.

All Lords. You are most welcome home.

Auf. I have not deserv'd it.
But worthy Lords, have you with heede perused
What I have written to you?

All. We have.

1. Lord. And greeve to heare't:
What faults he made before the last, I thinke
Might have found easie Fines: But there to end
Where he was to begin, and give away
The benefit of our Levies, answering us
With our owne charge: making a Treatie, where
There was a yeelding; this admits no excuse.

Auf.

Ans. He approaches, you shall heare him.
Enter Coriolanus marching with Drumme. and Colours. The Commoners being with him.

Corio. Haile Lords, I am return'd, your Souldier :
No more infected with my countries love
Then when I parted hence : but still subsisting
Vnder your great Command. You are to know,
That prosperously I have attempted, and
With bloody passage led your Warres, even to
The gates of Rome: Our spoiles we have brought home
Doth more then counterpoize a full third part
Thee charges of the Action. We have made peace
With no lesse Honour to the Antiates
Then shame to th' Romaines. And we heare deliver Subscrib'd by th' Consuls, and Patricians, Together with the Scale a th' Senat, what
We have compounded on.

Ans. Read it not Noble Lords,
But tell the Traitor in the highest degree
He hath abus'd your Powers.

Corio. Traitor? How now?

Ans. I Traitor, Martius.

Corio. Martius?

Ans. I Martius, Caius Martius: Do'it thou thinke
Ile grace thee with that Robbery, thy stolne name
Coriolanus in Coriolus?

You Lords and Heads a th' State, perfidiously
He ha's betray'd your businesse, and given up
For certaine drops of Salt, your City Rome :
I say your City to his Wife and Mother,
Breaking his Oath and Resolution, like
A twist of rotten Silke, never admitting Counsaile a th' warre : But at his Nurfes teares
He whin'd and roar'd away your Victorie,
That Pages blush'd at him, and men of heart
Look'd wond'ring each at others.

Corio. Hear'lt thou Mars?

Ans. Name not the God, thou boy of Teares.

Corio. Ha?

Ans. No more.

Corio. Measurelesse Lyar thou hast made my heart
Too great for what contains it. Boy? Oh Slave,
Pardon me Lords, 'tis the first time that ever
I was forc'd to scould. Your judgements my grave Lords Must give this Curre the Lye : and his owne Notion,
Who weares my stripes imprest upon him, that Must beare my beating to his Grave, shall joyne
To thrust the Lye unto him.

1 Lord. Peace both, and heare me speake.

Corio. Cut me too peeces Volces men and Lads, Staine all your edges on me. Boy, false Hound :
If you have writ your Annales true, 'tis there,
That like an Eagle in a Dove-coat, I

Flatter'd your Volcians in Coriolus.

Alone I did it, Boy!

Ans. Why Noble Lords,
Will you be put in minde of his blinde Fortune,
Which was your shame, by this unholy Braggart?
'Fore your owne eyes, and eares?

All Consp. Let him dye for't.

All People. Teare him to peeces, do it presently :
He kill'd my Sonne, my daughter, he kill'd my Cosine
Marcus, he kill'd my Father.

2 Lord. Peace hoe : no outrage, peace :
The man is Noble, and his Fame folds in
This Orbe o' th' earth: His last offences to us
Shall have Iudicious hearing. Stand Auffidius,
And trouble not the peace.

Corio. O that I had him, with six *Auffidius*ses, or more:
His Tribe to use my lawfull Sword.

Ans. Insolent Villaine.

All Consp. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him.

Draw both the Conspirators, and kills Martius, who fallles, Auffidius stands on him.

Lords. Hold, hold, hold, hold.

Ans. My Noble Masters, heare me speake.

1 Lord. O Tullus.

2 Lord. Thou hast done a deed, whereat
Valour will weepe.

3 Lord. Tread not upon him Masters, all be quiet,
Put up your Swords.

Ans. My Lords.

When you shall know (as in this Rage
Provok'd by him, you cannot) the great danger
Which this mans life did owe you, you'l rejoyce
That he is thus cut off. Please it your Honours
To call me to your Senate, Ile deliver
My selfe your loyall Servant, or endure
Your heaviest Censure.

1 Lord. Beare from hence his body,
And mourne you for him. Let him be regarded As the most Noble Coarse, that ever Herald
Did follow to his Vrne.

2 Lord. His owne impatience,
Takes from Auffidius a great part of blame :
Let's make the Best of it.

Ans. My Rage is gone,
And I am stricke with sorrow. Take him up :
Helpe three a th' chiefest Souldiers; Ile be one.
Beate thou the Drumme that it speake mournfully :
Traile your steele Pikes. Though in this City hee
Hath widdowed and unchilded many a one,
Which to this houre bewaile the Injury.
Yet hee shall have a Noble memory. Assist.

Exeunt bearing the Body of Martius. A dead March Sounded.

The Lamentable Tragedy of Titus Andronicus.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter the Tribunes and Senators aloft. And then enter Saturninus and his Followers at one doore, and Bassianus and his Followers at the other, with Drum & Colours.

Saturninus.

Noble Patricians, Patrons of my right,
Defend the justice of my Cause with Armes.
And Country-men, my loving Followers,
Pleade my Successive Title with your Swords.

I was the first borne Sonne, that was the last
That wore the Imperiall Diadem of Rome:
Then let my Fathers Honours live in me,
Nor wrong mine Age with this indignitie.

Bassianus. Romaines, Friends, Followers,
Favovrrers of my Right:

If ever Bassianus, Cæsars Sonne,
Were gracious in the eyes of Royall Rome,
Keepe then this passage to the Capitoll:
And suffer not Dishonour to approach
Th' Imperiall Seate to Vertue: consecrate
To Iustice, Continence, and Nobility:
But let Desert in pure Election shine;
And Romanes, fight for Freedome in your Choice.

Enter Marcus Andronicus aloft with the Crowne.

Princes, that strive by Factions, and my Friends,
Ambitiously for Rule and Emperie:
Know, that the people of Rome for whom we stand
A speciall Party, have by Common voyce
In Election for the Romane Emperie,
Chosen Andronicus, Sur-named Pius,
For many good and great deserts to Rome.
A Nobler man, a braver Warriour,
Lives not this day within the City Walles.
He by the Senate is accited home
From weary Warres agrinst the barbarous Gothes,
That with his Sonnes (a terror to our Foes)
Hath yoked a Nation strong, train'd up in Armes.
Ten yeares are spent, since first he undertooke
This Cause of Rome, and chasticed with armes
Our Enemies pride. Five times he hath return'd
Bleeding to Rome, bearing his Valiant Sonnes
In Coffins from the Field.
And now at last, laden with Honours Spoyles,
Returns the good Andronicus to Rome,
Renowned Titus, flourishing in Armes.

Let us intreat, by Honour of his Name
Whom (worthily) yon would have now succede,
And in the Capitoll and Senates right,
Whom you pretend to honor and adore,
That you withdraw you, and abate your Strength,
Dismiss your Followers, and as Suiters should,
Pleade your Deserts in Peace and Humbleness.

Saturnine. How fayre the Tribune speakes,
To calme my thoughts.

Bassia. Marcus Andronicus, so I do asse
In thy uprightnesse and Integrity:
And so I Love and honor thee, and thine,
Thy Noble Brother Titus, and his Sonnes,
And Her (to whom my thoughts are humbled all)
Gracious Lavinia, Romes rich Ornament,
That I will heere dismiss my loving Friends:
And to my Fortunes, and the Peoples Favour,
Commit my Cause in ballance to be weigh'd,

Ex. Souldiers.

Saturnine. Friends, that have beene
Thus forward in my Right,
I thanke you all, and heere Dismiss you all,
And to the Love and Favour of my Countrey,
Commit my Selfe, my Person, and the Cause:
Rome, be as just and gracious unto me,
As I am confident and kinde to thee.
Open the Gates, and let me in.

Bassia. Tribunes, and me, a poore Competitor.

They go up into the Senat house.

Enter a Captaine.

Cap. Romanes make way: the good Andronicus,
Patron of Vertue, Romes best Champion,
Successefull in the Battailles that he fights,
With Honour and with Fortune is return'd,
From whence he circumscribed with his Sword,
And brought to yoke the Enemies of Rome.

Sound Drummes and Trumpets. And then enter two of Titus Sonnes; After them, two men bearing a Coffin covered with blacke, then two other Sonnes. After them, Titus Andronicus, and then Tamora the Queene of Gothes, & her two Sonnes (Hiron and Demetrius, with Aaron the Mooore, and others, as many as can bee: They set downe the Coffin, and Titus speakes.

Andronicus. Haile Rome: Victorious in thy Mourning Weedes:

Loc,

Loe as the Barke that hath discharg'd his fraught,
Returns with precious lading to the Bay,
From whence at first she weigh'd her Anchorage:
Commeth Andronicus bound with Lawrell bowes,
To resalute his Country with his teares,
Teares of true joy for his returne to Rome,
Thou great defender of this Capitoll,
Stand gracious to the Rites that we intend.
Romaines, of five and twenty Valiant Sonnes,
Halfe of the number that King Prism had,
Behold the poore remaines alive and dead!
These that Survive, let Rome reward with Love:
These that I bring unto their latest home,
With buriall amongst their Auncestors.
Heere Gothes have given me leave to sheath my Sword:
Titus unkinde, and carelesse of thine owne,
Why suffer'st thou thy Sonnes unburied yet,
To hover on the dreadfull shore of Stix?
Make way to lay them by their Bretheren.

They open the Tombe.

There greeke in silence as the dead are wont,
And sleepe in peace, slaine in your Countries warres:
Of sacred receptacle of my joyes,
Sweet Cell of vertue and Nobility,
How many Sonnes of mine hast thou in store,
That thou wilt never render to me more?

Luc. Give us the proudest prisoner of the Gothes,
That we may hew his limbes, and on a pile
Ad manus fratrum, sacrifice his flesh:

Before this earthly prison of their bones,
That so the shadowes be not unappeas'd,
Nor we disturb'd with prodigies on earth.

Tit. I give him you, the Noblest that Survives,
The eldest Son of this distressed Queene.

Tam. Stay Romaine Bretheren, gracious Conqueror, Victorious Titus, true the teares I shed,
A Mothers teares in passion for her sonne:
And if thy Sonnes were ever deere to thee,
Oh thinke my sonnes to be as deere to mee.
Sufficeth not, that we are brought to Rome
To beautifie thy Triumphs, and returne
Captive to thee, and to thy Romaine yoke,
But must my Sonnes be slaughtred in the streetes,
For Valiant doings in their Countries cause?
O! If to fight for King and Common-weale,
Were piety in thine, it is in these:

Andronicus, slaine not thy Tombe with blood.

Wilt thou draw neere the nature of the Gods?
Draw neere them then in being mercifull,
Sweet mercy is Nobilitie true badge,

Thrice Noble Titus, spare my first borne sonne,

Tu. Patient your selfe Madam, and pardon me.

These are the Brethren, whom you Gothes behold

Alive and dead, and for their Bretheren slaine,

Religiously they aske a sacrifice:

To this your sonne is markt, and die he must,

To appease their groaning shadowes that are gone.

Luc. Away with him, and make a fire straight,

And with our Swords upon a pile of wood,

Let's hew his limbes till they be cleane consum'd.

Exit Sonnes with Alarbus.

Tam. O cruell irreligious piety.

Chi. Was ever Scythia halfe so barbarous?

Dem. Oppose me Scythia to ambitious Rome,

Alarbus goe to rest, and we survive,
To tremble under Titus threatening lookes,
Then Madam stand resolv'd, but hope withall,
The selfe same Gods that arm'd the Queene of Troy
With opportunity of sharpe revenge
Vpon the Thracian Tyrant in his Tent,
May favour Tamora the Queene of Gothes,
(When Gothes were Gothes, and Tamora was Queene)
To quit the bloody wrongs upon her foes.

Enter the Sonnes of Andronicus againe.

Luc. See Lord and Father, how we have perform'd
Our Romaine rites, Alarbus limbs are lopt,
And intrals feede the sacrificizing fire,
Whose smoke like incense doth perfume the skie.
Remaineth nought but to interre our Brethren,
And with low'd Larums welcome them to Rome.

Tit. Let it be so, and let Andronicus
Make this his latest farewell to their soules.

Then Sound Trumpets, and lay the Coffins in the Tombe.
In peace and Honour rest you heere my Sonnes,
Romes readiest Champions, repose you heere in rest,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps:
Heere lurks no Treason, heere no envie swels,
Heere grow no damned grudges, heere no stormes,
No noise, but silence and Eternall sleepe,
In peace and Honour rest you heere my Sonnes.

Enter Lavinia.

Lav. In peace and Honour, live Lord Titus long,
My Noble Lord and Father, live in Fame:
Loe at this Tombe my tributary teares,
I render for my Bretherens Obsequies:
And at thy feete I kneele, with teares of joy
Shed on the earth for thy returne to Rome.
O blesse me heere with thy victorious hand,
Whose Fortune Romes best Citizens applaud.

Tit. Kind Rome,
That hast thus lovingly reserv'd
The Cordiall of mine age to glad my hart,
Lavinia live, out-live thy Fathers dayes:
And Fames eternall date for vertues praise.

Mar. Long live Lord Titus, my beloved brother,
Gracious Triumpher in the eyes of Rome.

Tit. Thankes Gentle Tribune,
Noble brother Marcus.

Mar. And welcome. Nephews from succesfull wars,
You that survive and you that sleepe in Fame:
Faile Lords your Fortunes are all alike in all,
That in your Countries service drew your Swords.
But safer Triumph is this Funerall Pompe,
That hath aspir'd to Solons Happines,
And Triumphs over chaunce in honours bed.
Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome,
Whose friend in justice thou hast ever bene,
Send thee by me their Tribune and their trust,
This Palliament of white and spotlesse Hue,
And name thee in Election for the Empire,
With these our late deceased Emperours Sonnes:
Be Candidatus then, and put it on,
And helpe to set a head on headlesse Rome.

Tit. A better head her Glorious body fits,
Then his that shakes for age and feeblenesse:

ff

What

What should I d'on this Robe and trouble you,
Be cholen with proclamations to day,
To morrow yeeld up rule, resigne my life,
And set abroad new businesse for you all.
Rome I have bene thy Souldier forty yeares,
And led my Countries strength successfully,
And buried one, and twenty Valiant Somes,
Knighted in Field, slaine manfully in Armes,
In right and Service of their Noble Country:
Give me a staffe of Honour for mine age,
But not a Scepter to controule the world,
Vpright he held it Lords, that held it last.

Mar. Titus, thou shalt obtaine and aske the Empiry.

Sat. Proud and ambitious Tribune can'st thou tell?

Titus. Patience Prince Saturninus.

Sat. Romaines do me right.

Patricians draw your Swords, and sheath them not Till Saturninus be Romes Emperour:

Andronicus would thou wert shipt to hell,
Rather then rob me of the peoples hearts.

Luc. Proud Saturnine, interrupter of the good
That Noble minded Titus means to thee.

Tit. Content thee Prince, I will restore to thee
The peoples hearts, and weane them from themselves.

Bass. Andronicus, I do not flatter thee
But Honour thee, and will doe till I die:
My Faction if thou strengthen with thy Friend?
I will most thankfull be, and thanks to men
Of Noble mindes, is Honourable Meede.

Tit. People of Rome, and Noble Tribunes heere,
I aske your voices and your Suffrages,
Will you bestow them friendly on Andronicus?

Tribu. To gratifie the good Andronicus,
And Gratulate his safe returne to Rome,
The people will accept whom he admits.

Tit. Tribunes I thanke you, and this sure I make,
That you Create your Emperours eldest sonne,
Lord Saturnine, whose Vertues will I hope,
Reflect on Rome as Tytans Rayes on earth,
And ripen Iustice in this Common-weale:
Then if you will elect by my advise,
Crowne him, and say: Long live our Emperour.

Mar. An. With Voices and applause of every sort, Patricians and Plebeians we Create
Lord Saturninus Romes Great Emperour.
And say, Long live our Emperour Saturnine.

A long Flourish till they come downe.

Sat. Titus Andronicus, for thy Favours done,
To us in our Election this day,
I give thee thanks in part of thy Deserts,
And will with Deeds requite thy gentlenesse:
And for an Onset Titus to advance
Thy Name, and Honourable Family,
Lavinia will I make my Empresse,
Romes Royall Mistris, Mistris of my heart
And in the Sacred Pantheon her espouse:
Tell me Andronicus doth this motion please thee?

Tit. It doth my worthy Lord, and in this match,
I hold me Highly Honoured of your Grace,
And heere in sight of Rome, to Saturnine,
King and Commander of our Common-weale,
The Wide-worlds Emperour, do I Consecrate,
My Sword, my Chariot, and my Prisoners,
Presents well Worthy Romes Imperiall Lord:
Receive them then, the Tribute that I owe,
Mine Honours Ensignes humbled at my feete.

Sat. Thanks Noble Titus, Father of my life,
How proud I am of thee, and of thy gifts
Rome shall record, and when I do forget
The least of these unspeakable Deserts,
Romans forget your Fealty to me.

Tit. Now Madame are you prisoner to an Emperour,
To him that for your Honour and your State,
Will use you Nobly and your followers.

Sat. A goodly Lady, trust me of the Hue
That I would choose, were I to choose a new:
Cleere up Faire Queene that cloudy countenance,
Though chance of warre

Hath wrought this change of cheere,
Thou com'st not to be made a scorne in Rome:
Princely shall be thy usage every way.

Rest on my word, and let not discontent
Daunt all your hopes: Madam he comforts you,
Can you make you Greater then the Queene of Gothes?
Lavinia you are not displeas'd with this?

Lan. Not I my Lord, sith true Nobility,
Warrants these words in Princely curtesie.

Sat. Thanks sweete Lavinia, Romans let us goe:
Ransomlesse heere we set our Prisoners free,
Proclaime our Honors Lords with Trumpe and Drum.

Bass. Lord Titus by your leave, this Maid is mine.

Tit. How sir? Are you in earnest then my Lord?

Bass. I Noble Titus, and resolu'd withall,
To doe my selfe this reason, and this right.

Marc. Suum cuique, is our Romane Iustice,
This Prince in Iustice ceazeth but his owne.

Luc. And that he will and shall, if Lucius live.

Tit. Traytors avant, where is the Emperours Guard?
Treason my Lord, Lavinia is surpris'd.

Sat. Surpris'd, by whom?

Bass. By him that justly may Beare his Betroth'd, from all the world away.

Mut. Brothers helpe to convey her hence away,
And with my Sword Ile keepe this doore safe.

Tit. Follow my Lord, and Ile soone bring her backe.

Mut. My Lord you passe not heere.

Tit. What villaine Boy, bar'st me my way in Rome?

Mut. Helpe Lucius helpe. He kills him.

Luc. My Lord you are unjust, and more then so,
In wrongfull quarrell, you have slaine your son.

Tit. Nor thou, nor he are any sonnes of mine.
My sonnes would never so dishonour me.

Traitor restore Lavinia to the Emperour.

Luc. Dead if you will, but not to be his wife,
That is anothers lawfull promis'd Love.

Enter aloft the Emperour with Tamora and her two sonnes and Aaron the Moore.

Emp. No Titus, no, the Emperour needs her not,
Nor her, nor thee, nor any of thy stocke:
Ile trust by Leisure him that mocks me once.
Thee never: nor thy Trayterous haughty sonnes,
Confederates all, thus to dishonour me.

Was there none els in Rome to make a stale of
But Saturnine? Full well Andronicus

Agree these Deeds, with that proud bragge of thine,
That said'st, I beg'd the Empire at thy hands.

Tit. O monstrous, what reproachfull words are these?

Sat. But goe thy wayes, goe give that changing peece,
To him that flourish't for her with his Sword:

A Valiant sonne in-law thou shalt enjoy:
One, fit to bandy with thy lawlesse Sonnes,

To ruffle in the Common-wealth of Rome.

Tit. These words are Razors to my wounded heart.

Sat. And therefore lovely Tamora Queene of Gothes,
That like the stately Phoebe mong'rt her Nymphs
Dost over-shine the Gallant'st Dames of Rome,
If thou be pleas'd with this my sodaine choise,
Behold I choose thee Tamora for my Bride,
And will Create thee Empreffe of Rome.

Speake Queene of Goths dost thou applaud my choise?
And heere I sweare by all the Romaine Gods,
Sith Priest and Holy-water are so neere,
And Tapers burne so bright, and every thing
In readinesse for Hymeneus stand,
I will not resalute the streets of Rome,
Or climbe my Pallace, till from forth this place,
I leade espous'd my Bride along with me,

Tamo. And heere in sight of heaven to Rome I sweare,
If Saturnine advance the Queene of Gothes,
She will a Hand-maid be to his desires,
A loving Nurse, a Mother to his youth.

Sat. Ascend Faire Queene,
Pantheon Lords, accompany
Your Noble Emperour and his lovely Bride,
Sent by the heavens for Prince Saturnine,
Whose wisdom hath her Fortune Conquered,
There shall we Consummate our Spousall rites.

Exeunt omnes,

Tit. I am not bid to waite upon this Bride:
Titus when we'r't thou went to walke alone,
Dishonoured thus and Challenged of wrongs?

Enter Marcus and Titus Sonnes.

Mar. O Titus see! O see what thou hast done!
In a bad quarrell, flaine a Vertuous sonne.

Tit. No foolish Tribune, no: No sonne of mine,
Northou, nor these Confederates in the deed,
That hath dishonoured all our Family,
Unworthy brother, and unworthy Sonnes.

Luc. But let us give him buriall as becomes:
Give Mutius buriall with our Bretheren.

Tit. Traitors away, he rest's not in this Tombe:
This Monument five hundred yeares hath stood,
Which I have Sumptuously re-edified:
Heere none but Souldiers, and Romes Servitors,
Repose in Fame: None basely flaine in braules,
Bury him where you can, he comes not heere.

Mar. My Lord this is impiety in you,
My Nephew Mutius deeds do plead for him,
He must be buried with his bretheren.

Titus two Sonnes speakes.

And shall, or him we will accompany.

Ti. And shall! What villaine was it spake that word?

Titus sonne speakes.

He that would vouch'd it in any place but heere.

Ti. What would you bury him in my despight?

Mar. No Noble Titus but intreat of thee,
To pardon Mutius, and to bury him.

Ti. Marcus, Even thou hast stroke upon my Crest,
And with these Boyes mine Honour thou hast wounded,
My foes I doe repute you every one.

So trouble me no more, but get you gone.

1. Son. He is not himselfe, let us withdraw.

2. Son. Not I tell Mutius bones be buried.

The Brother and the sonnes kneele.

Mar. Brother, for in that name doth nature plea'd.

2. Son. Father, and in that name doth nature speake.

Ti. Speake thou no more if all the rest will speede.

Mar. Renowned Titus more then halfe my soule.

Luc. Deare Father, soule and substance of us all.

Mar. Suffer thy brother Marcus to interre
His Noble Nephew heere in vertues nest,
That died in Honour and Lavinia's cause.
Thou art a Romaine, be not barbarous:
The Greekes upon advise did bury Ajax
That slew himselfe: And Laertes sonne,
Did graciously plead for his Funerals:
Let not young Mutius then that wist thy joy,
Be bar'd his entrance heere.

Ti. Rise Marcus, rise,
The dismall'st day is this that ere I saw,
To be dishonored by my Sonnes in Rome:
Well, bury him, and bury me the next.

They put him in the Tombe.

Luc. There lie thy bones sweet Mutius with thy Till we with Trophies do adorne thy Tombe. (friends)

They all kneele and say.

No man shed teares for Noble Mutius,
He lives in Fame, that di'd in vertues cause.

Exit.

Mar. My Lord to step out of these sudden dumps,
How comes it that the subtil Queene of Gothes,
Is of a sodaine thus advanc'd in Rome?

Ti. I know not Marcus: but I know it is,
(Whether by devise or no): he heavens can tell,
Is she not then beholding to the man,
That brought her for this high good turne so farre?
Yes, and will Nobly him remunerate.

Flourish.

*Enter the Emperor, Tamora, and her two sons, with the Moore at one doore. Enter at the other doore Bassianus and

Sat. So Bassianus, you have plaid your prize,
God give you joy fir of your Gallant Bride.

Bas. And you of yours my Lord: I say no more,
Nor wish no lesse, and so I take my leave.

Sat. Traitor, if Rome have law, or we have power,
Thou and thy Faction shall repent this Rape.

Bas. Rape call you it my Lord, to seise my owne,
My true betrothed Love, and now my wife?
But let the lawes of Rome determine all,
Meane while I am posselt of that is mine.

Sat. Tis good fir: you are very short with us,
But if we live, wee be as sharpe with you.

Bas. My Lord, what I have done as best I may,
Answer I must, and shall do with my life,
Onely thus much I give your Grace to know,
By all the duties that I owe to Rome,
This Noble Gentleman Lord Titus heere,
Is in opinion and in honour wrong'd,
That in the rescue of Lavinia,

With his owne hand did slay his youngest Son,
In zeale to you and highly mov'd to wrath,
To be controul'd in that he frankly gave:
Receive him then to favour Saturnine,
That hath exprest himselfe in all his deeds,
A Father and a friend to thee, and Rome.

Ti. Prince Bassianus leave to plead my Deeds,
Tis thou, and those, that have dishonoured me,
Rome and the righteous heavens be my judge;
How have I lov'd and Honour'd Saturnine.

Tam. My worthy Lord if ever Tamora,

ff 2

Were

Were gracious in those Princely eyes of thine,
Then heare me speake indifferently for all:
And at my sute (sweet) pardon what is past.

Sat. What Madam, be dishonoured openly,
And basely put it up without revenge?

Tam. Not so my Lord,
The Gods of Rome for-fend,
I should be Authour to dishonour you,
But on mine honour dare, I undertake
For good Lord Titus innocence in all:
Whose fury not dissembled speakes his griefes:
Then at my sute looke graciously on him,
Loose not so noble a friend on vaine suppose,
Nor with fowre looks afflict his gentle heart.
My Lord, be rul'd by me, be wonne at last,
Dissemble all your griefes and discontents,
You are but newly planted in your Throne,
Least then the people, and Patricians too,
Vpon a iust survey take Titus, part,
And so supplant us for ingratitude,
Which Rome reputes to be a hainous sinne.
Yeeld at intreats, and then let me alone:
He finde a day to massacre them all,
And race their faction, and their familie,
The cruell Father, and his trayt'rous sonnes,
To whom I sued for my deare sonnes life.
And make them know what tis to let a Queene
Kneele in the streetes, and beg for grace in vaine.
Come, come, sweet Emperour, (come Andronicus)
Take up this good old man, and cheere the heart,
That dies in tempest of thy angry frowne.

Sat. Rise Titus, rise,
My Empresse hath prevail'd.

Tit. I thanke your Majesty,
And her my Lord.
These words, these looks,
Infuse new life in me.

Tam. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,
A Roman now adopted happily:
And must advise the Emperour for his good,
This day all quarrels die Andronicus.
And let it be mine honour good my Lord,
That I have reconcil'd your friends and you,
For you Prince Bassianus, I have past
My word and promise to the Emperour,
That you will be more milde and tractable.
And feare not Lords:

And you Lavinia,
By my advise all humbled on your knees,
You shall aske pardon of his Majesty.

Son. We doe,
And vow to heaven, and to his Highnes,
That what we did, was mildly, as we might,
Tending our sisters honour and our owne.

Mar. That on mine honour heere I do protest.

Sat. Away and talke not, trouble us no more.

Tam. Nay, nay,
Sweet Emperour, we must all be friends,
The Tribune and his Nephews kneele for grace,
I wil not be denied, sweet heart looke back.

Sat. Marcus,
For thy sake and thy brothers heere,
And at my lovely Tamora's intreats,
I doe remit these young mens baynous faults.
Stand up: Lavinia, though you left me like a churle,
I found a friend, and sure as death I sware,

I would not part a Batchellour from the Priest.
Come, if the Emperours Court can feast two Brides,
You are my guest Lavinia, and your friends:
This day shall be a Love-day Tamora.

Tit. To morrow and it please your Majesty,
To hunt the Panther and the Heart with me,
With horne and Hound,

Weele give your Grace Bon jour,

Sat. Be it so Titus, and Gramercy too.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Aron alone.

Aron. Now climbeth Tamora Olympus toppe,
Safe out of Fortunes shot, and sits aloft,
Secure of Thunders cracke or lightning flash,
Advanc'd above pale envies threatning reach:
As when the golden Sunne salutes the morne,
And having gilt the Ocean with his beames,
Gallops the Zodiacke in his glistering Coach,
And over-lookes the highest piercing hills:
So Tamora.

Vpon her wit doth earthly honour waite,
And vertue stoopes and trembles at her frowne.
Then Aron arme the heart, and fit thy thoughts,
To mount aloft with thy Emperiall Mistris,
And mount her pitch, whom thou in triumph long
Hast prisoner held, fettred in amorous chaines,
And faster bound to Arons charming eyes,
Then is Prometheus ti'deto Caucasus.
Away with slavish weedes, and idle thoughts,
I will be bright and shine in Pearle and Gold,
To waite upon this new made Empresse,
To waite said I? To wanton with this Queene,
This Goddesse, this Samiramis, this Queene,
This Syren, that will charme Romes Saturnine,
And see his shipwracke, and his Common weales:
Holla, what storme is this?

Enter Chiron and Demetrius braving.

Dem. Chiron thy yeeres want wit, thy wit wants edge
And manners to intru'd where I am grac'd,
And may for ought thou know't affected be.

Chi. Demetrius, thou doo'st over-weene in all,
And so in this, to beare me downe with braves,
Tis not the difference of a yeere or two
Makes me lesse gracious, or thee moore fortunate:
I am as able, and as fit, as thou,
To serve, and to deserve my Mistris grace,
And that my sword upon thee shall approve,
And plead my passions for Lavinia's love.

Ar. Clubs, clubs, these lovers will not keep the peace.
Dem. Why Boy, although our mother (unadvised)
Gave you a daunsing Rapier by your side,
Are you so desperate growne to threat your friends?
Goe to: have your Lath glued within your sheath,
Till you know better how to handle it.

Chi. Meane while sir, with the little skill I have,
Full well shalt thou perceive how much I dare.

Dem. I Boy, grow ye so brave?

They draw.

Ar. Why now Lords?
So nere the Emperours Pallace dare you draw,

And

And maintaine such a quarrell openly?
Full well I wote, the ground of all this grudge.
I would not for a million of Gold,
The cause were knowe to them it most concernes.
Nor would your noble mother for much more
Be so dishonored in the Court of Rome.
For shame put up.

Dem. Not I, till I have sheath'd
My rapier in his bosome, and withall
Thrust these reprochfull speeches downe his throat,
That he hath breath'd in my dishonour heere.

Chi. For that I am prepar'd, and full resolv'd,
Foule spoken Coward,
That thundrest with thy tongue,
And with thy weapon nothing dar'st performe.

Ar. A way I say.
Now by the Gods that warlike Gothes adore,
This pretty brable will undoo us all:
Why Lords, and thinke you not how dangerous
It is to set upon a Princes right?
What is Lavinia then become so loose,
Or Bassianus so degenerate,
That for her love such quarrels may be broacht,
Without controulement, Iustice, or revenge?
Young Lords beware, and should the Empresse know,
This discord ground, the musicke would not please.

Chi. I care not I, knew she and all the world,
I love Lavinia more then all the world,

Dem. Youngling,
Learne thou to make some meaner choile,
Lavinia is thine elder brothers hope.

Ar. Why are ye mad? Or know ye not in Rome,
How furious and impatient they be,
And cannot brooke Competitors in love?
I tell you Lords, you doe but plot your deaths,
By this devise.

Chi. Aron, a thousand deaths would I propose,
To atchieve her whom I do love.

Ar. To atchieve her, how?

Dem. Why, mak'st thou it so strange?
Shee is a woman, therefore may be woo'd
Shee is a woman, therefore may be wonne,
Shee is Lavinia therefore must be lov'd.
What man, more water glideth by the Mill
Then wots the Miller of, and easie it is
Of a cut loafer to steale a shive we know:
Though Bassianus be the Emperours brother,
Better then he have yett worne Vulcanus badge.

Ar. I, and as good as Saturninus may.

Dem. Then why should he dispaire that knowes to
With words, faire looks, and liberality: (court it
What hast not thou full often stricke a Doe,
And borne her cleanly by the Keepers nose?

Ar. Why then it seemes some certaine snatch or so
Would serve your turnes.

Chi. I so the turne were served:

Dem. Aron thou hast hit it.

Ar. Would you had hit it too,
Then should not we be tir'd with this adoo:
Why harke yee, harke yee, and are you such fooles,
To square for this? Would it offend you then?

Chi. Faith not me.

Dem. Nor me, so I were one.

Ar. For shame be friends, and joyne for that you iar:
Tis pollicy, and stratageme must doe
That you affect, and so must you resolve,

That what you cannot as you would atchieve,
You must perforce accomplish as you may:
Take this of me, Lucrece was not more chaste
Then this Lavinia, Bassianus love,
A speedier course this lingring languishment
Must we pursue, and I have found the path:
My Lords, a solemne hunting is in hand.
There will the lovely Roman Ladies troope:
The Forrest walkes are wide and spacious,
And many unfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kinde for rape and villainy:
Single you thither then this dainty Doe.
And strike her home by force, if not by words:
This way or not at all, stand you in hope.
Come, come, our Empresse with her sacred wit
To villainy and vengeance consecrate,
Will we acquaint with all that we intend,
And she shall file our engines with advise,
That will not suffer you to square your selves,
But to your wishes height advance you both.
The Emperours Court is like the house of Fame,
The pallace full of tongues, of eyes, of eares:
The Woods are ruthlesse, dreadfull, deafe, and dull:
There speake, and strike brave Boyes, & take your turnes.
There serve your lusts, shadow'd from heavens eye,
And revell in Lavinia's Treasury.

Chi. Thy counsell Lad sinells of no cowardise.

Dem. Sifas aut nefas, till I finde the streames;
To coole this heat, a Charme to calme their fits,
Per Stigia, per manes Uchor.

Exeunt.

Enter Titus Andronicus and his three sonnes, making a noise with boundes and hornes, and Marcus.

Tit. The hunt is up, the morne is bright and gray,
The fields are fragrant, and the Woods are greene,
Vncouple heere, and let us make a bay,
And wake the Emperour, and his lovely Bride,
And rouse the Prince, and ring a hunters peale,
That all the Court may eccho with the noise.
Sonnes let it be your charge, as it is ours,
To attend the Emperours person carefully:
I have bene troubled in my sleepe this night,
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd.

Winde Hornes.

Heere a cry of boundes, and winde hornes in a peale, then Enter Saturninus, Tamora, Bassianus, Lavinia, Chiron, Demetrius, and their Attendants.

Ti. Many good morrowes to your Majesty,
Madam to you as many and as good.
I promised your Grace, a Hunters peale.

Sat. And you have rung it lustily my Lords,
Some what too earely for new married Ladies.

Bas. Lavinia, how say you?

Lav. I say no:

I have bene awake two houres and more.

Sat. Come on then, horse and Chariots let us have,
And to our sport: Madam, now shall ye see,
Our Romaine hunting.

Mar. I have dogges my Lord,
Will rouse the proudest Panther in the Chase,
And clime the highest Promontory top.

Tit. And I have horse will follow where the game
Makes away, and runne like Swallowes ore the plaine

ff 3

Dem. Chiron

Dem. Chiron we hunt not we, with Horse nor Hound,
But hope to plucke a dainty Doe to ground. Exeunt.

Enter Aron alone.

Ar. He that had wit, would thinke that I had none,
To bury so much Gold under a Tree,
And never after to inherit it.
Let him that thinks of me so abjectly,
Know that this Gold must coine a stratageme,
Which cunningly effected, will beget
A very excellent peece of villany:
And so repose sweet Gold for their unrest,
That have their Almes out of the Empresse Chest.

Enter Tamora to the Moore.

Tam. My lovely Aron,
Wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing doth make a Glee-full boast?
The Birds chaunt melody on every bush,
The Snake lies rolled in the chearefull Sunne,
The Greene leaves quiver with the cooling winde,
And make a cheker'd shadow on the ground:
Vnder their sweet shade, Aron let us sit,
And while the babling Echo mock's the Hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well tun'd-Hornes,
As a double hunt were heard at once,
Let us sit downe, and marke their yelping noise:
And after conflict, such as was suppos'd,
The wandering Prince and Dido once enjoy'd,
When with a happy storme they were surpris'd,
And Curtain'd with a Counsaile-keeping Cave,
We may each wreathed in the others armes,
(Our pastimes done) possesse a Golden slumber,
Whiles Hounds and Hornes, and sweet Melodious Birds
Be unto us, as is a Nurses Song
Of Lullaby, to bring her Babe asleepe.

Ar. Madame,
Though Venus governe your desires,
Saturne is Dominator over mine:
What signifies my deadly standing eye,
My silence, and my Cloudy Melancholy,
My fleece of Woolly haire, that now uncurls,
Even as an Adder when she doth unrowle
To do some fatall execution?
No Madam, these are no Veneriall signes,
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand,
Blood, and revenge, are Hammering in my head,
Harke Tamora, the Empresse of my Soule,
Which never hopes more heaven, then rests in thee,
This is the day of Doome for Bassianus;
His Philomel must loose her tongue to day,
Thy Sonnes make Pillage of her Chastity,
And wash their hands in Bassianus blood.
Seest thou this Letter, take it up I pray thee,
And give the King this fatall plotted Scrowle,
Now question me no more, we are espied,
Heere comes a parcell of our hopefull Booty,
Which dreads not yet their lives destruction.

Enter Bassianus and Lavinia.

Tam. Ah my sweet Moore:
Sweeter to me then life.

Ar. No more great Empresse, Bassianus comes,
Be crosse with him, and Ile goe fetch thy Sonnes
To backe thy quarrell what so ere they be.

Bas. Whom have we heere?
Romes Royall Empresse,

Vnfurnisht of our well befeeming troop?
Or is it Dian habited like her,
Who hath abandoned her holy Groves,
To see the generall Hunting in this Forrest?

Tam. Sawcy controller of our private steps:
Had I the power, that some say Dian had,
Thy Temples should be planted presently.
With Hornes, as was Aetons, and the Hounds
Should drive upon his new transformed limbes,
Vnmannerly Intruder as thou art.

Lau. Vnder your patience gentle Empresse,
Tis thought you have a goodly gift in Horning,
And to be doubted, that your Moore and you
Are singled forth to try experiments:
Love sheld your husband from his Hounds to day,
Tis pittie they should take him for a Stag.

Bas. Beleeeve me Queene, your swarth Cymmerian,
Doth make your Honour of his bodies Hue,
Spotted, detested, and abominable.
Why are you sequestred from all your traine?
Dismounted from your Snow-white goodly Steed,
And wandred hither to an obscure plot,
Accompanied with a barbarous Moore,
If foule desire had not conducted you?

Lau. And being intercepted in your sport,
Great reason that my Noble Lord, be rated
For Saucinesse, I pray you let us hence,
And let her joy her Raven coloured love,
This valley fits the purpose passing well.

Bas. The King my brother shall have notice of this.

Lau. I, for these slips have made him noted long,
Good King, to be so mightily abused.

Tam. Why have I patience to endure all this?

Enter Chiron and Demetrius.

Dem. How now deere Sovereigne
And our gracious Mother,
Why doth your Highnes looke so pale and wan?
Tam. Have I not reason thinke you to looke pale?
These two have tic'd me hither to this place,
A barren, detested vale you see it is.
The Trees (though Sommer) yet forlorne and leane,
Ore-come with Mosse, and balefull Mistleto.
Heere never shines the Sonne, heere nothing breeds,
Vnlesse the nightly Owle, or fatall Raven
And when they shew'd me this abhorred pit,
They told me, heere at dead time of the night,
A thousand Fiends, a thousand hissing Snakes,
Ten thousand swelling Toades, as many Vrchins,
Would make such fearefull and confused cries,
As any mortall body hearing it,
Should straite fall mad, or else die suddenly.
No sooner had they told this hellish tale,
But strait they told me they would binde me heere,
Vnto the body of a dismal yew,
And leave me to this miserable death.
And then they call'd me foule Adulteresse,
Lascivious Goth, and all the bitterest tearmes
That ever eare did heare to such effect.
And had you not by wondrous fortune come,
This vengeance on me had they executed:
Revenge it, as you love your Mothers life,
Or be ye not henceforth cal'd my Children.

Dem. This is a witnesse that I am thy Sonne. Sab him.

Chi. And this for me,
Strook home to shew my strength.

Lau. I come Semiramis, nay Barbarous Tamora,

For

For no name fits thy nature but thy owne.

Tam. Give me thy poygnard: you shal know my boyes
Your Mothers hand shall right your Mothers wrong.

Dem. Stay Madam heere is more belongs to her,
First thrash the Corne, then after burne the straw:
This Minion stood upon her chastity,
Vpon her Nuptiall vow, her loyalty.
And with that painted hope she braves your Mightinesse,
And shall she carry this unto her grave?

Chi. And if she doe,
I would I were an Eunuch.

Drag hence her husband to some secret hole,
And make his dead Trinke-Pillow to our lust.

Tam. But when ye have the hony ye desire,
Let not this Waspe out-live us both to sting.

Chi. I warrant you Madam we will make that sure:
Come Mistris, now perforce we will enjoy,
That nice-preserved honesty of yours.

Lav. Oh Tamora, thou bear'st a woman face.

Tam. I will not heare her speake, away with her.

Lav. Sweet Lords intreat her heare me but a word.

Dem. Listen faire Madam, let it be your glory
To see her teares, but be your heart to them,
As unrelenting flint to drops of raine.

Lav. When did the Tigers young-ones teach the dam?
O doe not learne her wrath, she taught it thee,
The milke thou suck'st from her did turne to Marble,
Even at thy Teat thou had'st thy Tyranny,
Yet every Mother breeds not Sonnes alike,
Do thou intreat her shew a woman pittie.

Chi. What,
Would'st thou have me prove my selfe a bastard?

Lav. Tis true,
The Raven doth not hatch a Larke,
Yet have I heard, Oh could I finde it now,
The Lion mov'd with pittie, did indure
To have his Princely pawes par'd all away.
Some say, that Ravens foster forlorne children,
The while't their owne birds famish in their nests:
Oh be to me though thy hard heart say no,
Nothing so kind but something pittifull.

Tam. I know not what it meanes, away with her.

Lav. Oh let me teach thee for my Fathers sake,
That gave thee life when well he might have flaine thee:
Be not obdurate, open thy deafe eares.

Tam. Had'st thou in person nere offended me,
Even for his sake am I now pittilesse:
Remember Boyes I pow'd forth teares in vaine,
To save your brother from the sacrifice,
But fierce Andronicus would not relent,
Therefore away with her, and use her as you will,
The worse to her, the better lov'd of me.

Lav. Oh Tamora,
Be call'd a gentle Queene,
And with thine owne hands kill me in this place,
For tis not life that I have beg'd so long,
Poore I was flaine, when Bassianus dy'd.

What beg'st thou then? fond woman, let me go?

Lav. Tis present death I beg, and one thing more,
That woman hood denies my tongue to tell:
Oh keepe me from their worse then killing lust,
And tumble me into some loathsome pit,
Where never mans eye may behold my body,
Doe this, and be a charitable murderer.

Tam. So should I rob my sweet Sonnes of their fee,
No, let them satisfie their lust on thee.

Dem. Away,
For thou hast staid us heere too long.

Lav. No grace.
No woman hood? Ah beastly creature,
The blot and enemy to our generall name,
Confusion all —

Chi. Nay then ile stop your mouth:
Bring thou her husband,
This is the Hole where Aron bid us hide him. Exeunt.

Tam. Farewell my Sonnes, see that you make her sure,
Nere let my heart know merry cheere indeed,
Till all the Andronici be made away:
Now will I hence to seeke my lovely Moore,
And let my spleenfull Sonnes this Trull defoure. Exit.

Enter Aron with two of Titus Sonnes.

Aron. Come on my Lords, the better foote before,
Straight will I bring you to the lothsome pit,
Where I espied the Panther fast asleepe.

Quin. My sight is very dull what ere it bodes.

Mar. And mine I promise you, were it not for shame,
Well could I leave our sport to sleepe a while.

Quin. What art thou fallen?
What subtle Hole is this,
Whose mouth is covered with Rude growing Briers,
Vpon whose leaves are drops of new-shed blood,
As fresh as mornings dew distil'd on flowers,
A very fatall place it seemes to me:
Speake Brother hast thou hurt thee with the fall?

Mar. Oh Brother,
With the dismal'ft object
That ever eye with sight made heart lament.

Ar. Now will I fetch the King to finde them heere,
That he thereby may have a likely ghesse,
How these were they that made away his brother.

Exit Aron.

Mar. Why dost not comfort me and helpe me out,
From this unhallow'd and blood-stained Hole?

Quin. I am surpris'd with an uncouch feare,
A chilling sweat ore-runs my trembling joynts,
My heart suspects more then mine eye can see.

Mar. To prove thou hast a true divining heart,
Aron and thou looke downe into this den,
And see a fearefull sight of blood and death.

Quin. Aron is gone,
And my compassionate heart
Will not permit mine eyes, once to behold
The thing where at it trembles by surmise:
Oh tell me how it is, for nere till now
Was I a child, to feare I know not what.

Mar. Lord Bassianus lies embrewed heere,
All on a heape like to the slaughtred Lambe,
In this detested, darke, blood-drinking pit.

Quin. If it be darke, how doost thou know'tis he?

Mar. Vpon his bloody finger he doth weare
A precious Ring, that lightens all the Hole:
Which like a Taper in some Monument,
Doth shine upon the dead mans earthly cheekes,
And shewes the ragged intrails of the pit:
So pale did shine the Moone on Piramus,
When he by night lay bath'd in Maiden blood:
O Brother helpe me with thy fainting hand,
If feare hath made the faint, as mee it hath,
Out of this fell devouring receptacle,
As hatefull as Coccyus mistie mouth.

Quin. Reach me thy hand, that I may helpe thee out,

Or

Or wanting strength to doe thee so much good,
I may be pluckt into the swallowing wombe,
Of this deepe pit, poore Bassianus grave:
I have no strength to plucke thee to the brinke.

Mar. Nor I no strength to clime without thy helpe.

Quin. Thy hand once more, I will not loose againe,
Till thou art heere aloft, or I below,
Thou can'st not come to me, I come to thee. Both fall in.

Enter the Emperour, Aron the Moore.

Sat. Along with me, Ile see what hope is heere,
And what he is that now is leapt into i.
Say, who art thou that lately did'st descend,
Into this gaping hollow of the earth?

Mar. The unhappy sonne of old Andronicus,
Brought hither in a most unlucky houre,
To finde thy brother Bassianus dead.

Sat. My brother dead I know thou dost but jest,
He and his Lady both are at the Lodge,
Vpon the North-side of this pleasant Chase,
Tis not an houre since I left him there.

Mar. We know not where you left him all alive,
But out alas, heere have we found him dead.

Enter Tamora, Andronicus, and Lucius.

Tam. Where is my Lord the King?

Sat. Heere Tamora, though griev'd with killing griefe.

Tam. Where is thy brother Bassianus?

Sat. Now to the bottome dost thou search my wound,
Poore Bassianus heere lies murdered.

Tam. Then all too late I bring this fatall writ,
The complot of this timelesse Tragedy,
And wonder greatly that mans face can fold.
In pleasing smiles such murderous Tyranny.

She giveth Saturnine a Letter

Saturninus reads the Letter.

*And if we misse to meete him handsomely,
Sweet hunt sman, Bassianus tis we meane,
Doe thou so much as dig the grave for him,
Thou know'st our meaning, looke for thy reward
Among the Nettles at the Elder tree:
Which over-shades the mouth of that same pit:
Where we decreed to bury Bassianus,
Doe this and purchase us thy lasting friends.*

Sat. Oh Tamora, was ever heard the like?
This is the pit, and this the Elder tree,
Looke sirs, if you can finde the huntsman out,
That should have murdered Bassianus heere.

Ar. My gracious Lord heere is the bag of Gold.

Sat. Two of thy whelpes, fell Curs of bloody kind
Have heere bereft my brother of his life:
Sirs drag them from the pit unto the prison,
There let them bide untill we have devis'd
Some never heard-of tortering paine for them.

Tam. What are they in this pit,
Oh wondrous thing!
How easily murder is discovered?

Tit. High Emperour, npon my feeble knee,
I beg this boone, with teares, not lightly shed,
That this fell fault of my accursed Sonnes,
Accursed, if the faults be prou'd in them.

Sat. If it be prov'd you see it is apparant,

Who found this Letter, Tamora was it you?

Tam. Andronicus himselfe did take it up.

Tit. I did my Lord,

Yet let me be their baile.

For by my Fathers reverent Tombe I vow
They shall be ready at your Highnes will,
To answere their iuspition with their lives.

Sat. Thou shalt not baile them, see thou follow me:
Some bring the murdered body, some the murderers,
I let them not speake a word, the guilt is plaine,
For by my soule, were there worse end then death,
That end upon them should be executed.

Tam. Andronicus I will entreat the King,
Feare not thy Sonnes, they shall do well enough.

Tit. Come Lucius come,
Stay not to talke with them.

Exeunt.

Enter the Emperesse Sonnes, with Lavinia, her hands cut off and her tongue cut out, and ravish't.

Dem. So now goe tell and if thy tongue can speake,
Who t'was that cut thy tongue and ravish't thee.

Chi. Write downe thy mind, bewray thy meaning so,
And if thy stumpes will let thee play the Scribe.

Dem. See how with signes and tokens she can scowle.

Chi. Goe home,
Call for sweet water, wash thy hands.

Dem. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to wash.
And so let's leave her to her silent walkes.

Chi. And t'were my cause, I should goe hang my selfe.

Dem. If thou had'st hands to helpe thee knit the cord.

Exeunt.

Winde Hornes.

Enter Marcus from hunting to Lavinia

Who is this, my Neece that flies away so fast?
Cosen a word, where is your husband?
If I do dreame, would all my wealth would wake me,
If I do wake, some Planet strike me downe,
That I may slumber in eternall sleepe.
Speake gentle Neece, what sterne ungentle hands
Hath lopt, and hew'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches, those sweet Ornaments
Whose circkling shadows, Kings have sought to sleep in
And might not gaine so great a happines
As halfe thy Love: Why dost not speake to me?
Alas, a Crimson river of warme blood,
Like to a bubling fountaine stir'd with winde,
Doth rise and fall betwene thy Rosed lips,
Comming and going with thy hony breath.
But sure some Tereus hath deflowered thee,
And least thou should'st detect them, cut thy tongue,
Ah, now thou turn'st away thy face for shame:
And notwithstanding all this losse of blood,
As from a Conduit with their issuing Spouts,
Yet doe thy cheekes looke red as Titans face,
Blushing to be encountred with a Cloud,
Shall I speake for thee? shall I say tis so?
Oh that I knew thy hart, and knew the beast
That I might raile at him to ease my mind.
Sorrow concealed, like an Oven stopt,
Doth burne the heart to Cinders where it is.
Faire Philomela she but lost her tongue,
And in a tedious Sampler sowed her minde.
But lovely Neece, that meane is cut from thee,
A craftier Tereus hast thou met withall,
And he hath cut those pretty fingers off,

That

That could have better sowed then Philomel.
 Oh had the monster scene those Lilly hands,
 Tremble like Aspen leaves upon a Lute,<sup>3</sup>
 And make the silken strings delight to kisse them,
 He would not then have toucht them for his life.
 Or had he heard the heavenly Harmony,
 Which that sweet tongue hath made:
 He would have dropt his knife and fell asleepe,
 As Cerberus at the Thracian Poets feete.
 Come, let us goe, and make thy father blinde,
 For such a sight will blinde a fathers eye.
 One houres storme will drowne the fragrant meades,
 What, will whole months of teares thy Fathers eyes?
 Doe not draw backe, for we will mourne with thee:
 Oh could our morning ease thy misery. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius.

Enter the Iudges and Senators with Titus two sonnes bound, passing on the Stage to the place of execution, and Titus going before pleading.

Ti. Heare me grave fathers, noble Tribunes stay,
 For pittie of mine age, whose youth was spent
 In dangerous warres, whilst you securely slept:
 For all my blood in Romes great quarrell shed,
 For all the frosty nights that I have watcht,
 And for these bitter teares, which now you see,
 Filling the aged wrinkles in my cheekes,
 Be pittifull to my condemned Sonnes,
 Whose soules are not corrupted as tis thought:
 For two and twenty sonnes I never wept,
 Because they died in honours lofty bed.

Andronicus lyeth downe, and the Iudges passe by him.
 For these, the so Tribunes, in the dust I write
 My harts deepe languor, and my soules sad teares:
 Let my teares stench the earths dry appetite.
 My sonnes sweet blood, will make it shame and blush:
 O earth! I will be friend thee more with raine Exeunt.
 That shall distill from these two ancient ruines,
 Then youthfull Aprill shall with all his showres
 In summers drought: Ile drop upon thee still,
 In Winter with warme teares Ile melt the snow
 And keepe eternall spring-time on thy face,
 So thou refuse to drinke my deare sonnes blood.

Enter Lucius, with his weapon drawne.

Oh reverent Tribunes, oh gentle aged men,
 Vnbinde my sonnes, reverse the doome of death,
 And let me say (that never wept before)
 My teares are now prevailing Oratours.

Lu. Oh noble father, you lament in vaine,
 The Tribunes heare you not, no man is by,
 And you recount your sorrowes to a stone.

Ti. Ah Lucius for thy brothers let me plead,
 Grave Tribunes, once more I intreat of you.

Lu. My gracious Lord, no Tribune heares you speake.

Ti. Why tis no matter man, if they did heare
 They would not marke me: oh if they did heare
 They would not pittie me.

Therefore I tell my sorrowes bootles to the stones.

Who though they cannot answere my distresse,
 Yet in some sort they are better then the Tribunes,
 For that they will not intercept my tale;
 When I doe weepe, they humbly at my feete
 Receive my teares, and seeme to weepe with me,
 And were they but attired in grave weedes,
 Rome could afford no Tribune like to these.
 A stone is as soft waxe,
 Tribunes more hard then stones:
 A stone is silent, and offendeth not,
 And Tribunes with their tongues doome men to death.
 But wherefore stand'st thou with thy weapon drawne?
Lu. To rescue my two brothers from their death,
 For which attempt the Iudges have pronounc'd
 My everlasting doome of banishment.

Ti. O happy man, they have befriended thee:
 Why foolish Lucius, dost thou not perceive
 That Rome is but a wilderness of Tigers?
 Tigers must prey, and Rome affords no prey
 But me and mine: how happy art thou then,
 From these devourers to be banished?
 But who comes with our brother Marcus heere?

Enter Marcus and Lavinia.

Mar. Titus, prepare thy noble eyes to weepe,
 Or if not so, thy noble heart to breake:
 I bring consuming sorrow to thine age.

Ti. Will it consume me? Let me see it then.

Mar. This was thy daughter.

Ti. Why Marcus so she is.

Lu. Aye me this object kills me.

Ti. Faint-hearted boy, arise and looke upon her,
 Speake my Lavinia, what accursed hand
 Hath made thee handlelesse in thy Fathers sight?
 What foole hath added water to the Sea?
 Or brought a faggot to bright burning Troy?
 My griefe was at the light before thou cam'st,
 And now like Nylus it disdaineth bounds:
 Give me a sword, Ile chop off my hands too,
 For they have fought for Rome, and all in vaine:
 And they have nur'd this woe,
 In feeding life:

In bootlesse prayer have they bene held up,
 And they have serv'd me to effectlesse use.
 Now all the service I require of them,
 Is that the one will helpe to cut the other:
 Tis well Lavinia, that thou hast no hands,
 For hands to do Rome service, is but vaine.

Lu. Speake gentle sister, who hath martyr'd thee?

Mar. O that delightfull engine of her thoughts,
 That blab'd them with such pleasing eloquence,
 I storne from forth that pretty hollow cage,
 Where like a sweet melodious bird it sung,
 Sweet varied notes inchanting every eare.

Luc. Oh say thou for her,
 Who hath done this deed?

Mar. Oh thus I found her straying in the Parke,
 Seeking to hide herselfe as doth the Deare
 That hath receiv'd some unrecuring wound.

Ti. It was my Deare,
 And he that wounded her,
 Hath hurt me more, then had he kild me dead:
 For now I stand as one upon a Rocke,
 Inviron'd with a wildernesse of Sea.
 Who makes the waxing tide,
 Grow wave by wave,

Expecting

Expecting ever when some envious surge,
Will in his brinish bowels swallow him.
This way to death my wretched sonnes are gone:
Heere stands my other sonne, a banisht man,
And heere my brother weeping at my woes.
But that which gives my soule the greatest spurne,
Is deere Lavinia, dearer then my soule.
Had I but seene thy picture in this plight,
It would have madded me. What shall I doe?
Now I behold thy lively body so?
Thou hast no hands to wipe away thy teares,
Nor tongue to tell me who hath martyr'd thee;
Thy husband he is dead, and for his death
Thy brothers are condemn'd, and dead by this.
Looke Marcus, ah sonne Lucius looke on her:
When I did name her brothers, then fresh teares
Stood on her cheekes, as doth the hony dew,
Vpon a gathred Lillie almost withered,

Mar. Perchance she weepes because they kil'd her husband,
Perchance because she knowes him innocent.

Ti. If they did kill thy husband then be joyfull,
Because the law hath tane revenge on them.
No, no, they would not doe so foule a deede,
Witness the sorrow that their sister makes.
Gentle Lavinia let me kisse thy lips,
Or make some signes how I may do thee ease:
Shall thy good Vncle, and thy brother Lucius,
And thou and I sit round about some Fountaine,
Looking all downwards to behold our cheekes
How they are stain'd in meadows, yet not dry
With miery slime left on them by a flood:
And in the Fountaine shall we gaze so long,
Till the fresh taste be taken from that cleerenes,
And made a brine pit with our bitter teares?
Or shall we cut away our hands like thine?
Or shall we bite our tongues, and in dumbe shewes
Passe the remainder of our hatefull dayes?
What shall we doe? Let us that have our tongues
Plot some devise of further miseries
To make us wondred at in time to come.

Lu. Sweet Father cease your teares, for at your grieve
See how my wretched sister sobs and weeps.

Ma. Patience deere Neece, good Titus drie thine eyes.

Ti. Ah Marcus, Marcus, Brother well I wor, Thy napkin cannot drinke a teare of mine,
For thou poore man hast drown'd it with thine owne.

Lu. Ah my Lavinia I will wipe thy cheekes.

Ti. Marke Marcus marke, I understand her signes,
Had she a tongue to speake, now would she say
That to her brother which I said to thee.
His Napkin with her true teares all bewet,
Can do no service on her sorrowfull cheekes.
Oh what a simpathy of woe is this!
As farre from helpe as Limbo is from blisse.

Enter Aron the Moore alone.

Moore. Titus Andronicus, my Lord the Emperour,
Sends thee this word, that if thou love thy sonnes,
Let Marcus Lucius, or thy selfe old Titus,
Or any one of you, chop off your hand,
And send it to the King: he for the same,
Will send thee hither both thy sonnes alive,
And that shall be the ransome for their fault.

Ti. Oh gracious Emperour, oh gentle Aaron.
Did ever Raven sing so like a Larke,
That gives sweet tydings of the Sunnes uprise?
With all my heart, Ile send the Emperour my hand;
Good Aaron wilt thou help to chop it off?

Lu. Stay Father, for that noble hand of thine.
That hath throwne downe so many enemies,
Shall not be sent: my hand will serve the turne.
My youth can better spare my blood then you,
And therefore mine shall save my brothers lives.

Mar. Which of your hands hath not defended Rome,
And rear'd aloft the bloody Battleaxe,
Writing destruction on the enemies Castle?
Oh none of both but are of high desert:
My hand hath bin but idle, let it serve
To ransome my two nephewes from their death,
Then have I kept it to a worthy end.

Mo. Nay come agree, whose hand shall goe along,
For feare they die before their pardon come.

Mar. My hand shall goe.

Lu. By heaven it shall not goe.

Ti. Sirs sit: ive no more, such withered hearbs as these Are meete for plucking up, and therefore mine.

Lu. Sweet Father, if I shall be thought thy sonne,
Let me redeeme my brothers both from death.

Mar. And for our fathers sake, and mothers care,
Now let me shew a brothers love to thee.

Ti. Agree betweene you, I will spare my hand.

Lu. Then Ile goe fetch an Axe.

Mar. But I will use the Axe.

Exeunt.

Ti. Come hither Aaron, Ile deceive them both,
Lend me thy hand, and I will give thee mine,
Mo. It that be call'd deceit, I will be honest,
And never whilst I live deceive men so:
But Ile deceive you in another sort,
And that you'll say ere halfe an houre passe.

He cuts off Titus hand.

Enter Lucius and Marcus againe.

Ti. Now stay your strife, what shall be, is dispatch:
Good Aaron give his Majesty my hand,
Tell him, it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers: bid him bury it:
More hath it merited: That let it have.
As for my sonnes, say I account of them,
Asiewels purchas'd at an easie price,
And yet deere too, because I bought mine owne.

Aaron. I goe Andronicus, and for thy hand,
Looke by and by to have thy sonnes with thee:
Their heads I meane: Oh how this villany
Doth sat me with the very thought of it.
Let fooles doe good, and faire men call for grace,
Aaron will have his soule blacke like his face.

Exit.

Ti. O here I lift this one hand up to heaven,
And bow this feeble ruine to the earth,
If any power pitties wretched teares,
To that I call: what wilt thou kneele with me?
Doe then deare heart, for heaven shall heare our prayers,
Or with our sighs weele breath the welkin dimme,
And staine the Sun with fogge as sometime cloudes,
When they do hug him in their melting bosomes.

Mar. Oh brother speake with possibilities,
And do not breake into these deepe extreames.

Ti. Is not my sorrow deepe, having no bottom?

Then

Then be my passions botromlesse with them.

Mar. But yet let reason governe thy lament.

Tit. If there were reason for these miseries,
Then into limits could I binde my woes:
When heaven doth weepe, doth not the earth ore flow?
If the windes rage, doth not the Sea wax mad,
Threatning the welkin with his big-swolne face?
And wilt thou have a reason for this coile?
I am the Sea. Harke how her sighes doe blow:
Shee is the weeping welkin, I the earth:
Then must my Sea be moved with her sighes,
Then must my earth with her continuall teares,
Become a deluge: overflow'd and drown'd:
For why, my bowels cannot hide her woes,
But like a drunkard must I vomit them:
Then give me leave, for loosers will have leave,
To ease their stomackes with their bitter tongues,

Enter a messenger with two heads and a hand.

Mes. Worthy Andronicus, ill art thou repaid,
For that good hand thou sent'st the Emperour:
Heere are the heads of thy two noble sonnes.
And heeres thy hand in scorne to thee sent backe:
Thy griefes, their sports: Thy resolution mockt,
That woe is me to thinke upon thy woes,
More then remembrance of my fathers death. Exit.

Mar. Now let hot Aetna coole in Cicily,
And be my heart an ever-burning hell:
These miseries are more then may be borne,
To weepe with them that weepe, doth ease some deale,
But sorrow flouted at, is double death.

Luc. Ah that this sight should make so deep a wound,
And yet detested life not shrinke thereat:
That ever death should let life beare his name,
Where life hath no more interest but to breath.

Mar. Alas poore hart that kisse is comfortlesse,
As frozen water to a starved snake.

Tit. When will this fearefull slumber have an end?

Mar. Now farewell flattery, die Andronicus,
Thou dost not slumber, see thy two sons heads,
Thy warlike hands, thy mangled daughter here:
Thy other banisht sonnes with this deere sight
Strucke pale and bloodlesse, and thy brother I,
Even like a stony Image, cold and numme.
Ah now no more will I controule my griefes,
Rent off thy silver haire, thy other hand
Gnawing with thy teeth, and be this dismall sight
The closing up of our most wretched eyes:
Now is a time to storme, why art thou still?

Tit. Ha, ha, ha.

Mar. Why dost thou laugh? it fits not with this houre.

Tit. Why I have not another teare to shed:
Besides, this sorrow is an enemy,
And would usurpe upon my watry eyes,
And make them blinde with tributary teares,
Then which way shall I finde Revenges Cave?
For these two heads doe seeme to speak to me,
And threat me, I shall never come to blisse,
Till all these mischiefs be returned againe,
Even in their throats that have committed them.
Come let me see what taske I have to doe,
You heavy people, circle me about,
That I may turne me to each one of you,
And sweare unto my soule to right your wrongs.
The vow is made, come Brother take a head,

And in this hand the other will I beare.

Lavinia thou shalt be employd in these things:
Beare thou my hand sweet wench betweene thy teeth:
As for thee boy, goe get thee from my sight,
Thou art an Exile, and thou must not stay,
Hie to the Gothes, and raise an army there,
And if you love me, as I thinke you doe,
Let's kisse and part, for we have much to doe. Exeunt.

Manet Lucius.

Luc. Farewell Andronicus my noble Father:
The woful'st man that ever liv'd in Rome:
Farewell proud Rome, till Lucius come againe,
He loves his pledges dearer then his life:
Farewell Lavinia my noble sister,
O would thou wert as thou to fore hast beene,
But now, nor Lucius nor Lavinia lives
But in oblivion and hatefull griefes:
If Lucius live, he will requit your wrongs,
And make proud Saturninus and his Empresse
Beg at the gates like Tarquin and his Queene.
Now will I to the Gothes and raise a power,
To be reveng'd on Rome and Saturnine. Exit Lucius.

A Banquet.

Enter Andronicus, Marcus, Lavinia, and the Boy.

An. So, so, now sit, and looke you eate no more
Then will preserve just so much strength in us
As will revenge these bitter woes of ours.
Marcus unknit that sorrow-wreathen knot:
Thy Neece an I (poore Creatures) want our hands
And cannot passionate our tenfold griefe,
With fouled Armes. This poore right hand of mine,
Is left to tirranize upon my breast
Who when my heart all mad with misery,
Beats in this hollow prison of my flesh,
Then thus I thumpe it downe.
Thou Map of woe, that thus dost talke in signes,
When thy poore heart beates with out ragious beating,
Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still?
Wound it with sighing gille, kil it with grones:
Or get some little knife betweene thy teeth,
And just against thy heart make thou a hole,
That all the teares that thy poore eyes let fall
May run into that sinke, and soaking in,
Drowne the lamenting foole, in Sea-salt teares.

Mar. Fy brother fy, teach her not thus to lay
Such violent hands upon her tender life.

An. How now! Has sorrow made thee doate already?
Why Marcus, no man should be mad but I:
What violent hands can she lay on her life:
Ah, wherefore dost thou urge the name of hands,
To bid Aeneas tell the tale twice ore
How Troy was burnt, and he made miserable?
O handle not the theame, to talke of hands,
Least we remember still that we have none,
Fie, fie, how Frantiquely I square my talke
As if we should forget we had no hands:
If Marcus did not name the word of hands.
Come, lets fall too, and gentle gille eate this,
Heere is no drinke? Harke Marcus what she sayes,
I can interpret all her martir'd signes,
She saies, she drinke no other drinke but teares
Brew'd with her sorrows: meth'd upon her cheekes,

Speech-

Speechlesse complaint, O I will learne thy thought:
In thy dumb action, will I be as perfect
As begging Hemits in their holy prayers.
Thou shalt not sighe nor hold thy stumps to heaven,
Nor winke, nor nod, nor kneele, nor make a signe,
But I (of these) will wrest an Alphabet,
And by still practice, learne to know thy meaning.

Boy. Good grandfire leave these bitter deepe laments,
Make my Aunt merry, with some pleasing tale.

Mar. Alas, the tender boy in pallion mov'd,
Doth weepe to see his grandsires heavinesse,

An. Peace tender Sapling, thou art made of teares,
And teares will quickly melt thy life away.

Marcus strikes the dish with a knife.

What dost thou strike at Marcus with thy knife.

Mar. At that that I have kill'd my Lord, a Flye

An. Out on the murderour: thou kil'st my heart.
Mine eyes are cloi'd with view of Tirrany:
A deed of death done on the Innocent
Becoms not Titus brother: get thee gone,
I see thou art not for my company:

Mar. Alas (my Lord) I have but kild a flie.

An. But? How: if that Flie had a father and mother?
How would he hang his slender gilded wings
And buz lamenting doings in the ayer,
Poore harmelesse Fly,
That with his pretty buzzing melody,
Came heere to make us merry,
And thou hast kil'd him.

Mar. Pardon me sir,
It was a blacke illfavour'd Fly,
Like to the Empreffe Moore, therefore I kild him.

An. O, o, o,
Then pardon me for reprehending thee,
For thou hast done a Charitable deed:
Give me thy knife, I will insult on him,
Flattering my selfe, as if it were the Moore,
Come hither purposely to poison me.
There's for thy selfe, and thats for Tamora: Ah sirra,
Yet I thinke we are not brought so low,
But that betweene us, we can kill a Fly,
That comes in likenesse of a Cole-blacke Moore.

Mar. Alas poore man, grieve ha's so wrought on him,
He takes false shadowes, for true substances.
And: Come, take away: Lavinia, goe with me,
He to thy cloffet, and goe read with thee
Sad stories, chanced in the times of old.
Come boy, and goe with me, thy sight is young,
And thou shalt read, when mine begin to dazell. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter young Lucius and Lavinia running after him, and the Boy flies from her with his bookes under his arme.

Enter Titus and Marcus.

Boy. Helpe Grandfier helpe, my Aunt Lavinia, Followes me every where I know not why.
Good Vncle Marcus see how swift she comes,
Alas sweet Aunt, I know not what you meane.

Mar. Stand by me Lucius, doe not feare thy Aunt.

Tit. She loves thee boy too well to doe thee harme

Boy. I when my father was in Rome she did.

Ma. What meanes my Neece Lavinia by these signes?
Ti. Feare not Lucius, some what doth she meane?

See Lucius see, how much she makes of thee:
Some whither would she have thee go with her.

Ah boy, Cornelia never with more care
Read to her sonnes, then she hath read to thee,
Sweet Poetry, and Tullies Oratour:

Canst thou not gesse wherefore she plies thee thus?

Boy. My Lord I know not I, nor can I gesse, Vnlesse some fit or frency do possesse her:
For I have heard my Grandfier say full oft,
Extremity of griefes would make men mad.
And I have read that Hecuba of Troy,
Ran mad through sorrow, that made me to feare,
Although my Lord, I know my noble Aunt,
Loues me as deare as ere my mother did,
And would not but in fury fright my youth,
Which made me downe to throw my bookes, and flie
Causles perhaps, but pardon me sweet Aunt,
And Madam, if my Vncle Marcus goe,
I will most willingly attend your Ladyship.

Mar. Lucius I will.

Ti. How now Lavinia, Marcus what meanes this?
Some booke there is that she desires to see,
Which is it girle of these? Open them boy,
But thou art deeper read and better skild,
Come and take choyse of all my Library,
And so beguile thy sorrow, till the heavens
Reveale the damn'd contriver of this deed:
What booke?

Why lifts she up her armes in sequence thus?

Mar. I think she meanes that ther was more then one Confederate in the fact, I more there was:
Or else to heaven she heaves them to revenge.

Ti. Lucius what booke is that she tosseth so?

Boy. Grandfier tis Ovids Metamorphosis,
My mother gave it me,

Mar. For love of her that's gone,
Perhaps she culd it from among the rest.

Ti. Soft, so busily she turnes the leaves.
Helpe her, what would she finde? Lavinia shall I read?
This is the tragicke tale of Philomela?
And treates of Terens treason and his rape,
And rape I feare was roote of thine annoy.

Mar. See brother see, note how she quotes the leaves

Ti. Lavinia, wert thou thus surpriz'd sweet girle, Ravish't and wrong'd as Philomela was?
Forc'd in the ruthlesse, vast, and gloomy woods?
See, see, I such a place there is where we did hunt,
(O had we never, never hunted there)
Patern'd by that the Poet heere describes,
By nature made for murthers and for rapes.

Mar. O Why should nature build so foule a den,
Vnlesse the Gods delight in tragedies?

Ti. Give signes sweet girle, for heere are none but frieds
What Romaine Lord it was durst do the deed?
Or slunk not Saturnine, as Tarquin erst,
That left the Campe to sinne in Lucrece bed.

Mar. Sit downe sweet Neece, brother sit downe by me,
Apollo, Pallas, Iove, or Mercury,
Inspire me that I may this treason finde.
My Lord looke heere, looke heere Lavinia,

He writes his Name with his staffe, and guides it with fete and mouth.

This sandy plot is plaine, guide if thou canst

This

This after me, when I have writ my name,
Without the helpe of any hand at all.
Curst be that heart that forc' st us to this shift:
Write thou good Neece, and heere display at last,
What God will have discovered for revenge,
Heaven guide thy pen to print thy sorrowes plaine.
That we may know the Traytors and the truth.

She takes the staffe in her mouth, and guides it with her stumps and writes.

Tit. Oh doe ye read my Lord what she hath writ?
Supram, Chiron, Demetrius.

Mar. What, what, the lustfull sonnes of Tamora,
Performers of this hainous bloody deed?

Tit. Magni Dominator poli.

Tam lentus audis scelera! tam lentus vides!

Mar. Oh calme thee gentle Lord: Although I know
There is enough written upon this earth,
To stirre a mutiny in the mildest thoughts,
And arme the mindes of infants to exclaimes.
My Lord kneele downe with me: Lavinia kneele,
And kneele sweet boy, the Romaine Hectors hope,
And sweare with me, as with the wofull Feere
And father of that chaste dishonoured Dame,
Lord Innius Brutus sweare for Lucrece rape,
That we will prosecute (by good advise)
Mortall revenge upon these traytorious Gothes,
And see their blood, or dye with this reproach.

Tit. Tis sure enough, and you knew how.
But if you hunt these Beare-whelpes, then beware
The Dam will wake, and if she winde you once,
Shes with the Lyon deeply still in league.
And lulls him whilst she playeth on her backe,
And when he sleepest will she doe what she list.
You are a young huntsman Marcus, let it alone:
And come, I will goe get a leafe of brasse,
And with a Gad of Steele will write these words,
And lay it by: the angry Northerne winde
Will blow these sands like Sibels leaves abroad,
And wheres your lesson then. Boy what say you?

Boy. I say my Lord, that if I were a man,
Their mothers bed-chamber should not be safe,
For these bad bond-men to the yoke of Rome.

Mar. I that's my boy, thy father hath full oft,
For his ungratefull country done the like.

Boy. And Vncle so will I, and if I live.

Tit. Come goe with me into mine Armory,
Lucius Ile fit thee, and withall, my boy
Shall carry from me to the Empresse sonnes,
Presents that I intend to send them both,
Come, come, thou'lt doe thy message, wilt thou not?
Boy. I with my dagger in their bosome. Grandfire:
Tit. No boy not so, Ile teach thee another course,
Lavinia come, Marcus looke to my house,
Lucius and Ile goe brave it at the Court,
I marry will we sit, and wee be waited on. Exeunt.

Mar. O heavens! Can you heare a good man grone
And not relent, or not compashon him?

Marcus attend him in his extasie,
That hath more scars of sorrow in his heart,
Then foe-mens markes upon his batter'd shield,
But yet so just, that he will not revenge,
Revenge the heavens for old Andronicus. Exit.

Enter Aron, Chiron and Demetrius at one dore: and at another dore young Lucius and another, with a bundle of weapons, and verses writ upon them.

Chir. Demetrius heeres the sonne of Lucius,
He hath some message to deliver us.

Aron. I some mad message from his mad Grandfather.

Boy. My Lords, with all the humbleness I may,
I greeete your honours from Andronicus,
And pray the Romane gods confound you both.

Deme. Gramercy lovely Lucius, what's the newes?

Boy. For villaines markt with rape. May it please you,
My Grandfire well advi'd hath sent by me,
The goodliest weapons of his Armory,
To gratifie your honourable youth,
The hope of Rome, for so he bad me say:
And so I doe and with his gifts present
Your Lordships, when ever you have need,
You may be armed and appointed well,
And so I leave you both: like bloody villaines. Exit.

Deme. What's heere? a scrole, and written round about?
Lets see.

Integer vita scelerisque purus, non egit manri jaculis nec ar-cu.

Chir. O tis a verse in Horace, I know it well.
I read it in the Grammer long agoe.

Moore. I just, a verse in Horace: right, you have it,
Now what a thing it is to be an Assle?
Heeres no found jest, th'old man hath found their guilt,
And sends the weapons wrapt about with lines,
That wound (beyond their feeling) to the quicke:
But were our witty Empresse well a foot,
She would applaud Andronicus conceit:
But let her rest, in her unrest a while.
And now young Lords, was't not a happy starre
Led us to Rome strangers, and more then so;
Captives, to be advanced to this height?
It did me good before the Pallace gate,
To brave the Tribune in his brothers hearing.

Deme. But me more good, to see so great a Lord
Basely insinuate, and send us gifts.

Moore. Had he not reason Lord Demetrius?
Did you not use his daughter very friendly?

Deme. I would we had a thousand Romane Dames
At such a bay, by turne to serve out lust.

Chir. A charitable wish, and full of love.

Moore. Heere lack's but you mother for say, Amen.

Chir. And that would she for twenty thousand more.

Deme. Come, let us goe, and pray to all the gods
For our beloved mother in her paines.

Moore. Pray to the devils, the gods have given us over.
Flourish.

Deme. Why doe the Emperors trumpets flourish thus?

Chir. Belike for joy the Emperour hath a sonne.

Deme. Soft, who comes heere?

Enter Nurse with a blacke a Moore child.

Nurse. Good morrow Lords:
O tell me, did you see Aaron the Moore?

Aaron. Well, more or lesse, or ne're a whit at all,
Heere Aaron is, and what with Aaron now?

Nurse. Oh gentle Aaron, we are all undone.
Now helpe, or woe betide thee evermore.

Aaron. Why, what a catterwallow dost thou keepe?
What dost thou wrap and fumble in thine armes?

Nurse. O that which I would hide from heavens eye,
Our Empresse shame, and stately Romes disgrace,
She is delivered Lords, she is delivered.

Aaron. To whom?

Nurse. I meane she is brought a bed?

Aaron. Well God give her good rest.

What hath he sent her ?

Nurse. A devill.

Aaron. Why then she is the devils Dam: a joyfull issue.

Nur. A joylesse, dismall, blacke and, sorrowfull issue,
Heere is the babe as loathsome as a toad,
Amongst the fairest breeders of our clime,
The Empresse sends it thee, thy stampe, thy seale,
And bids thee christen it with thy daggers point.

Aaron. Out you whore, is blacke so base a hue ?
Sweet blowse, you are a beautilous blossome sure.

Deme. Villaine what hast thou done ?

Aaron. That which thou canst not undoe.

Chir. Thou hast undone our mother.

Deme. And therein hellish dog, thou hast undone,
Woe to her chance, and damn'd her loathed choyce,
Accur'd the off-spring of so foule a fiend.

Chir. It shall not live.

Aaron. It shall not dye.

Nurse. Aaron it must, the mother wills it so.

Aaron. What, must it Nurse ? I then let no man but I
Doe execution on my flesh and blood.

Deme. Ile broach the Tadpole on my Rapiers point :

Nurse give it me, my sword shall soone dispatch it.

Aaron. Sooner this sword shall plough thy bowels up.
Stay murtherous villaines, will you kill your brother ?

Now by the burning Tapers of the skye,
That sh'one so brightly when this Boy was got,
He dies upon my Semitars sharpe point,
That touches this my first borne sonne and heire.

I tell you young-lings, not Enceladus

With all his threatning band of Typhons broode,

Nor great Alcides, nor the god of Warre,

Shall ceaze this prey out of his fathers hands :

What, what, ye sanguine shallow hearted Boyes,

Ye white-limb'd wails, ye Ale-house painted signes,

Cole-blacke is better then another hue :

In that it scornes to beare another hue :

For all the water in the Ocean,

Can never turne the Swans blacke legs to write,

Although she lave them hourly in the flood :

Tell the Empresse from me, I am of age

To keepe mine owne, excuse it how she can.

Deme. Wilt thou betray thy noble mistris thus ?

Aaron. My mistris is my mistris: this my selfe,

The vigour, and the picture of my youth :

This, before all the world doe I preferre,

This mawger all the world will I keepe safe,

Or some of you shall smoake for it in Rome.

Deme. By this our mother is for ever sham'd.

Chir. Rome will despise her for this foule escape.

Nur. The Emperour in his rage will doome her death

Chir. I blush to thinke upon this ignominy.

Aaron. Why ther's the priviledge your beauty beares

Eyetrecherous hue, that will betray with blushing

The close énacts and counsells of the heart :

Here's a young Lad fram'd of another leere,

Looke how the blacke slave smiles upon the father ;

As who should say, old Lad I am thine owne.

He is your brother Lords, sensibly fed

Of that selfe blood that first gave life to you;

And from that wombe where you imprisoned were

He is enfranchised and come to light :

Nay he is your brother by the surer side,

Although my seale be stamped in his face.

Nurse. Aaron what shall I say unto the Empresse ?

Deme. Advise thee Aaron, what is to be done,

And we will all subscribe to thy advise :

Save thou the child, so we may all be safe.

Aaron. Then sit we downe and let us all consult.

My sonne and I will have the winde of you :

Keepe there, now talke at pleasure of your safety.

Deme. How many women saw this child of his ?

Aaron. Why so brave Lords, when we all joyne in
I am a Lambe: but if you brave the Moore, (league

The chafed Bore, the mountaine Lyonesse,

The Ocean swells not so at Aaron stormes :

But say againe, how many saw the child ?

Nurse. Cornelia, the midwife, and my selfe,
And none else but the delivered Empresse.

Aaron. The Empresse, the Midwife, and your selfe,

Two may keepe counsell, when the third's away :

Goe to the Empresse, tell her this I said, He kills her

Weekes, weekes, so cries a Pigge prepared to th'spit.

Deme. What mean'st thou Aaron ?

Wherefore did'st thou this ?

Aaron. O Lord sir, 'tis a deed of pollicy ?

Shall she live to betray this guilt of ours :

A long tongu'd babling Gossip ? No Lords no :

And now be it knowne to you my full intent.

Not farre, one Mul-tens my Country-man

His wife but yesternight was brought to bed,

His child is like to her, faire as you are :

Goe packe with him, and give the mother gold,

And tell them both the circumstance of all,

And how by this their Child shall be advanc'd,

And be received for the Emperours heyre,

And substituted in the place of mine,

To calme this tempest whirling in the Court,

And let the Emperour dandle him for his owne.

Harke ye Lords, ye see I have given her physicke,

And you must needs bestow her funerall,

The fields are neere, and you are gallant Groomes :

This done, see that you take no longer dayes

But send the Midwife presently to me.

The Midwife and the Nurse well made away,

Then let the Ladies tattle what they please.

Chir. Aaron I see thou wilt not trust the ayre with se- (crets,

Deme. For this care of Tamora, Her selfe, and hers are highly bound to thee. Exeunt.

Aaron. Now to the Gothes, as swift as Swallow flies,

There to dispose this treasure in mine armes,

And secretly to greeete the Empresse friends :

Come on you thick-lipt-slave, Ile beare you hence,

For it is you that puts us to our shifts :

Ile make you feed on berries, and on rootes,

And feed on curds and whay, and sucke the Goate,

And cabbin in a Cave, and bring you up

To be a warriour, and command a Campe. Exit.

Enter Titus, old Marcus, young Lucius, and other gentlemen

with bowes, and Titus beares the arrows with

Letters on the end of them.

Tis. Come Marcus, come, kinsmen this is the way.

Sir Boy now let me see your Archery,

Looke yee draw home enough, and 'tis there straight :

Terras Astra reliquit, be you remembered Marcus.

She's gone, she's fled, first take you to your tooles,

You Cosens shall goe found the Ocean :

And cast your nets, haply you may find her in the Sea,

Yet theres as little justice as at Land :

No Publius and Sempronius, you must doe it,

'Tis

Tis you must dig with Mattocke, and with Spade,
And pierce the inmost Center of the earth :

Then when you come to Plutoes Region,
I pray you deliver him this petition,
Tell him it is for justice, and for aide,
And that it comes from old Andronicus,
Shaken with sorrowes in ungratefull Rome.
Ah Rome ! Well, well, I made thee miserable,
What time I threw the peoples suffrages
On him that thus doth tyrannize ore me.
Goe get you gone, and pray be carefull all,
And leave you not a man of warre unsearcht,
This wicked Emperour may have shipt her hence,
And kinsmen then we may goe pipe for justice.

Marc. O Publius is not this a heavy case
To see thy Noble Vncle thus distract ?

Pub. Therefore my Lord it highly us concernes,
By day and night t'attend him carefully :
And feede his humour kindly as we may,
Till time beget some carefull remedy.

Marc. Kinsmen, his sorrowes are past remedy.
Ioyne with the Gothes, and with revengefull warre,
Take wreake on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the Traytor Saturnine.

Tit. Publius how now ? how now my masters ?
What have you met with her ?

Publ. No my good Lord, but Pluto sends you word,
If you will have revenge from hell you shall,
Marry for justice she is so imploy'd,
He thinkes with love in heaven, or some where else :
So that perforce you must needs stay a time.

Tit. He doth me wrong to feed me with delayes,
He dive into the burning Lake below,
And pull her out of Acheron by the heeles,
Marcus we are but shrubs, no Cedars we,
No big-bon'd-men, fram'd of the Cyclops size,
But mettall Marcus, Steele to the very backe,
Yet wrung with wrongs more then our backe can beare :
And sith there's no justice in earth nor hell,
We will sollicite heaven, and move the gods
To send downe Iustice for to wreake our wrongs :
Come to this geare, you are a good Archer Marcus.

He gives them the Arrows.

Ad Iovem, thats for you : here ad Apollonem,
Ad Martem, thats for my selfe,
Heere Boy to Pallas, heere to Mercury,
To Saturnine, to Caius, not to Saturnine,
You wereas good to shoote against the winds.
To it Boy, Marcus loose when I bid :
Of my word, I have written to effect,
Theres not a god left unsollicited.

Marc. Kinsmen, shoot all your shafts into the Court,
We will afflict the Emperour in his pride.

Tit. Now maisters draw, Oh well said Lucius :
Good boy in Virgoes lap, give it Pallas.

Marc. My Lord, I ayme a Mile beyond the Moone,
Your letter is with Iupiter by this.

Tit. Ha, ha, Publius, Publius, what hast thou done ?
See see, thou hast shot off one of Taurus hornes.

Marc. This was the sport my Lord, when Publius shot,
The Bull being gal'd, gave Aries such a knocke,
That downe fell both the Rams hornes in the Court,
And who should finde them but the Emperesse villaine :
She laught, and told the Moore he should not choofe
But give them to his Maister for a present.

Tit. Why there it goes, God give your Lordship joy.

Enter the Clowne with a basket and two Pigeons.

Tit. Newes, newes, from heaven.

Marcus the poast is come.

Sirrah, what tydings ? have you any letters ?

Shall I have Iustice, what sayes Iupiter ?

Clow. Ho the libbetmaker, he sayes that he hath taken them downe againe, for the man must not be hang'd till the next weeke.

Tit. But what sayes Iupiter I aske thee ?

Clow. Alas sir I know not Iupiter :
I never dranke with him in all my life.

Tit. Why villaine art not thou the Carrier ?

Clow. I of my Pigeons sir, nothing else.

Tit. Why, didst thou not come from heaven ?

Clow. From heaven ? Alas sir, I never came there, God forbid I should be so bold, to presse to heaven in my young dayes. Why I am going with my pigeons to the Tribunall Plebs, to take up a matter of brawle, betwixt my Vncle, and one of the Emperialls men.

Mar. Why sir, that is as fit as can be to serve for your Oration, and let him deliver the Pigeons to the Emperour from you.

Tit. Tell me, can you deliver an Oration to the Em-perour with a Grace ?

Clow. Nay truly sir, I could never say grace in all my life.

Tit. Sirrah come hither, make no more adoe,
But give your Pigeons to the Emperour.
By me thou shalt have justice at his hands.
Hold, hold, meane while hers money for thy charges.
Give me a pen and inke.

Sirrah, can you with a Grace deliver a Supplication ?

Clow. I sir.

Tit. Then here is a Supplication for you, and when you come to him, at the first approach you must kneele, then kisse his foote, then deliver up your Pigeons, and then looke for your reward. He be at hand sir, see you do it bravely.

Clow. I warrant you sir, let me alone.

Tit. Sirraha hast thou a knife ? Come let me see it.
Heere Marcus fold it in the Oration,
For thou hast made it like an humble Suppliant,
And when thou hast given it the Emperour,
Knocke at my dore, and tell me what he sayes.

Clow. God be with you sir, I will.

Tit. Come Marcus let us goe, Publius follow me.

Exeunt.

Enter Emperour and Emperesse, and her two sonnes, the Emperour brings the Arrows in his hand that Titus shoot at him.

Satur. Why Lords,
What wrongs are these ? was ever scene
An Emperour in Rome thus overborne,
Troubled, Confronted thus, and for the extent
Of equal justice, us'd in such contempt ?
My Lords, you know the mightfull Gods
(How ever these disturbers of our peace
Buz in the peoples eares) there nought hath past,
But even with law against the willfull Sonnes
Of old Andronicus. And what and if
His sorrowes have so overwhelm'd his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wreakes,
His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterneffe ?
And now he writes to heaven for his redresse.
See, heres to love, and this to Mercury,

This to Apollo, this to the god of warre :
Sweet scrowles to flye about the streets of Rome :
What's this but Libelling against the Senate,
And blazoning our injustice every where ?
A goodly humour is it not my Lords ?
As who would say, in Rome no Iustice were.
But if I live, his fained extasies
Shall be no shelter to these outrages :
But he and his shall know, that Iustice lives
In Saturninus health, whom if he sleepe, He'll so awake, as he in fury shall
Cut off the proudest Conspirator that lives.

Tamo. My gracious Lord, my lovely Saturnine,
Lord of my life, Commander of my thoughts,
Calme thee, and beare the faults of Titus age,
Th' effects of sorrow for his valiant Sonnes,
Whose losse hath pier'd him deepe, and scar'd his heart;
And rather comfort his distressed plight,
Then prosecute the meanest or the best
For these contempts. Why thus it shall become High witted Tamora to glose with all :
But Titus, I have touch'd thee to the quicke,
Thy life blood ont : if Aaron now be wife,
Then is all safe, the Anchor's in the Port.

Enter Clowne.

How now good fellow, would'st thou speake with us ?

Clow. Yea forsooth, and your Mistership be Imperiall.

Tam. Empresse I am, but yonder sits the Emperour.

Clow. Tis he; God and Saint Stephen give you good den;
I have brought you a Letter, and a couple of Pigeons here.

Here reads the Letter.

Satur. Goe take him away, and hang him presently.

Clow. How much money must I have ?

Tam. Come sirrah you must be hang'd.

Clow. Hang'd ? bir Lady, then I have brought up a necke to a faire end. Exit.

Satur. Despightfull and intollerable wrongs,
Shall I endure this monstrous villany ?
I know from whence this same devise proceedes :
May this be borne ? As if his traytrous Sonnes,
That dy'd by law for murder of our brother,
Have by my meanes beene butcher'd wrongfully ?
Goe dragge the villaine hither by the haire,
Nor Age, nor Honor, shall shape priviledge :
For this proud mocke, Ile be thy slaughter man :
Sly franticke wretch, that holp'st to make me great,
In hope thy selfe should governe Rome and me.

Enter Nuntius Emillius.

Satur. What newes with thee Emillius ?

Emil. Arme my Lords, Rome never had more cause,
The Gothes have gather'd head, and with a power
Of high resolved men, bent to the spoyle
They hither march amaine, under the conduct
Of Lucius, Sonne to old Andronicus :
Who threats in course of this revenge to doe
As much as ever Coriolanus did,

Satur. Is warlike Lucius Generall of the Gothes ?
These tydings nip me, and I hang the head
As flowers with frost, or grasse beat downe with stormes
I now begin our sorrowes to approach,
Tis he the common people love so much,
My selfe hath often heard them say,
(When I have walked like a priuate man)
That Lucius banishment was wrongfully,
And they have wisht that Lucius were their Emperour.

Tam. Why should you feare ? Is not our City strong ?

Satur. I, but the Cittizens favour Lucius,
And will revolt from me, to succour him.

Tam. King, be thy thoughts imperious like thy name.
Is the Sunne dim'd, that Gnats doe flye in it ?
The Eagle suffers little Birds to sing,
And is not carefull what they meane thereby,
Knowing that with the shadow of his wings,
He can at pleasure stint their melody.
Even so mayest thou, the giddy men of Rome,
Then cheare thy spirit, for know thou Emperour,
I will enchaunt the old Andronicus,
With words more sweet, and yet more dangerous
Then baites to fish, or hony stalkes to sheepe,
When as the one is wounded with the baite,
The other rotted with delicious foode.

King. But he will not entreat his sonne for us.

Tam. If Tamora entreat him, then he will,
For I can smooth and fill his aged eare,
With golden promises, that were his heart
Almost impregnable, his old eares deafe,
Yet should both eare and heart obey my tongue.
Goe thou before to our Embassador,
Say, that the Emperour requests a parly
Of warlike Lucius, and appoint the meeting.

King. Emillius doe this message Honourably.
And if he stand in Hostage for his safety,
Bid him demand what pledge will please him best.

Emil. Your bidding shall I doe effectually. Exit.

Tam. Now will I to that old Andronicus,
And temper him withall the Art I have,
To plucke proud Lucius from the warlike Gothes,
And now sweet Emperour be blithe againe,
And bury all thy feare in my devises.

Satur. Then goe successfully and plead for him. Exit.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Lucius with an Army of Gothes. with Drum and Souldiers.

Luci. Approved warriours, and my faithfull Friends,
I have received Letters from great Rome,
Which signifies what hate they beare their Emperour,
And how desirous of our sight they are.
Therefore great Lords, be as your Titles witnesse,
Imperious and impatient of your wrongs,
And wherein Rome hath done you any scathe,
Let him make treble satisfaction.

Goth. Brave slip, sprung from the Great Andronicus,
Whose name was once our terrour, now our comfort,
Whose high exploits, and honourable Deeds,
Ingratefull Rome requites with foule contempt :
Behold in us, wee follow where thou lead'st,
Like stinging Bees in hottest Sommers day,
Led by their Master to the flowred fields,
And be aveng'd on cursed Tamora :

Omn. And as he saith, so say we all with him.

Luci. I humbly thanke him, and I thanke you all.
But who comes heere, led by a lusty Goth ?

Enter a Goth leading Aaron with his child in his armes.

Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troupes I straid,
To gaze upon a ruinous Monastery,

And

And as I earnestly did fixe mine eye
Vpon the wasted building, suddainely
I heard a child cry underneath a wall:
I made unto the noise, when soone I heard,
The crying babe control'd with this discourſe:
Peace Tawny slave, halfe me, and halfe thy Dam,
Did not thy Hue bewray whose brat thou art?
Had nature lent thee, but thy Mothers looke.
Villaine thou mightst have beene an Emperour.
But where the Bull and Cow are both milk-white,
They never doe beget a cole-blacke-Calf:
Peace, villaine peace, even thus he rates the babe,
For I must beare thee to a trusty Goth,
Who when he knowes thou art the Empreſſe babe,
Will hold thee dearly for thy Mothers sake.
With this, my weapon drawne I rusht upon him,
Surpriz'd him suddainely, and brought him hither
To use, as you thinke needfull of the man.

Luci. Oh worthy Goth, this is the incarnate devill,
That rob'd Andronicus of his good hand:
This is the Pearle that pleas'd your Empreſſe eye,
And heres the Base Fruit of his burning lust.
Say wall-ey'd slave, whether wouldst thou convey
This growing Image of thy fiend-like face?
Why dost not speake? what deafe? no! Not a word?
A halter Souldiers, hang him on this Tree,
And by his side his Fruite of Bastardy.

Aaron. Touch not the Boy, he is of Royall blood,

Luci. Too like the Syre for ever being good.
First hang the Child that he may see it sprall,
A sight to vex the Fathers soule withall.

Aaron. Get me a Ladder Lucius, save the Child,
And beare it from me to the Empreſſe:
If thou doe this, Ile shew thee wondrous things,
That highly may advantage thee to heare;
If thou wilt nor, befall what may befall,
Ile speake no more: but vengeance rot you all.

Luci. Say on, and if it please me which thou speak'st,
Thy child shall live, and I will see it Nourish.

Aaron. And if it please thee? why assure thee Lucius.
I will vex thy soule to heare what I shall speake:
For I must talke of Murthers, Rapes, and Massacres,
Acts of Blacke-night, abominable Deeds,
Complots of Mischiefe, Treason, Villaines
Ruthfull to heare, yet pittiously perform'd,
And this shall all be buried by my death,
Vnlesse thou sweare to me my Child shall live.

Luc. Tell on thy minde,
I say thy Child shall live.

Aaron. Swear that he shall, and then I will begin.

Luci. Who should I sweare by;
Thou beleevest no God,
That graunted, how canst thou beleeve an oath?

Aaron. What if I doe not, as indeed I doe not,
Yet for I know thou art Religious,
And hast a thing within thee, called Conscience,
With twenty Popish trickes and Ceremonies,
Which I have seene thee careful to observe:
Therefore I urge thy oath, for that I know
An Ideot holds his Bauble for a god,
And keepes the oath which by that god he sweares,
To that Ile urge him: therefore thou shalt vow
By that same god, what god so ere it be
That thou adorest, and hast in reverence,
To save my Boy, to nourish and bring him up,
Ore else I will discover nought to thee.

Luci. Even by my god I sweare to thee I will.

Aaron. First know thou,
I begot him on thy Empreſſe.

Luci. Oh most insatiate luxurious woman!

Aaron. Tut Lucius, this was but a deed of Charity,
To that which thou shalt heare of me anon,
Twas her two Sonnes that murdered Bassianus,
They cut thy Sisters tongue, and raviſht her,
And cut her hands off, and trim'd her as thou sawst.

Luci. Oh detestable villaine!
Callst thou that Trimming?

Aaron. Why she was washt, and cut, and trim'd,
And twas trim sport for them that had the doing of it.

Luci. Oh barbarous-beastly villaines like thy selfe!

Aaron. Indeed, I was their Tutor to instruct them,
That Coddling spirit had they from their Mother,
As sure a Card as ever wonne the Set:
That bloody mind I thinke they learn'd of me,
As true a Dog as ever fought at head.

Well, let my Deeds be witnesse of my worth:
I trayn'd thy Bretheren to that guilefull Hole,
Where the dead Corps of Bassianus lay:
I wrote the Letter, that thy Father found,
And hid the Gold within the Letter mention'd.
Confederate with the Queene, and her two Sonnes,
And what not done, that thou hast cause to rue,
Wherein I had no stroke of Mischeife in it.
I plaid the Cheater for thy Fathers hand,
And when I had it, drew my selfe apart,
And almost broke my heart with extreame laughter.
I pried me through the Crevice of a Wall,
When for his hand, he had his two Sonnes heads,
Beheld his teares, and laugh'd so heartily,
That both mine eyes were rainy like to his:
And when I told the Empreſſe of this sport,
She foundered almost at my pleasing tale,
And for my tydings, gave me twenty kisses.

Goth. What canst thou say all this, and never blush?

Aaron. I, like a blacke Dogge, as the saying is.

Luc. Art thou not sorry for these hainous deeds?

Aaron. I, that I had not done a thousand more.

Even now I curse the day, and yet I thinke
Few come within the compasse of my curse,
Wherein I did not some Notorious ill,
As kill a man, or else devise his death,
Raviſh a Maid, or plot the way to doe it,
Accuse some innocent, and forswear my selfe,
Set deadly Enmity betweene two Friends,
Make poore mens Cattell breake their neckes,
Set fire on Barnes and Haystackes in the night,
And bid the Owners quench them with their teares:
Oft have I dig'd up dead men from their graves,
And set them up right at their deere Friends doores,
Even when their sorrow almost was forgot,
And on their skinnies, as on the Barke of Trees,
Have with my knife carved in Romaine Letters,
Let not your sorrow dye, though I am dead.
Tut, I have done a thousand dreadfull things
As willingly, as one would kill a flye,
And nothing greives me heartily indeed,
But that I cannot doe ten thousand more.

Luci. Bring downe the divell, for he must not dye
So sweet a death as hanging presently.

Aaron. If there be divels, would I were a devill,
To live and burne in everlasting fire,
So I might have your company in hell,

But to torment you with my bitter tongue.

Luc. Sirs stop his mouth, and let him speake no more.

Enter Emilius.

Goth. My Lord, there is a Messenger from Rome Desires to be admitted to your presence.

Luc. Let him come neere.

Welcome Emilius, whats the newes from Rome?

Emi. Lord Lucius, and you Princes of the Gothes, The Romaine Emperour greets you all by me, And for he understands you are in Armes, He craves a parly at your Fathers house Willing you to demand your Hostages, And they shall be immediately delivered,

Goth. What sayes our Generall?

Luc. Emilius, let the Emperour give his pledges Vnto my Father, and my Vncle Marcus, And we will come: march away.

Exeunt.

Enter Tamora, and her two Sonnes disguised.

Tam. Thus in this strange, and sad Habillaments, I will encounter with Andronicus, And say, I am Revenge sent from below, To joyne with him and right his hainous wrongs: Knocke at his study where they say he keepes, To ruminare strange plots of dire Revenge, Tell him Revenge is come to joyne with him, And worke confusion on his Enemies.

They knocke and Titus opens his study dore.

Tit. Who doth molest my Contemplation? Is it your trick to make me ope the dore, That so my sad decrees may flye away, And all my study be to no effect? You are deceiv'd, for what I meane to doe, See here in bloody lines I have set downe: And what is written shall be executed.

Tam. Titus, I am come to talke with thee.

Tit. No not a word; how can I grace my talke, Wanting a hand to give it action, Thou hast the ods of me, therefore no more.

Tam. If thou didst know me, Thou wouldst talke with me.

Tit. I am not mad, I know thee well enough, Witnesse this wretched stump, Witnesse these crimson lines, Witnesse these Trenches made by grieve and care, Witnesse the tyring day, and heavy night, Witnesse all sorrow, that I know thee well For our proud Empresse, Mighty Tamora: Is not thy comming for my other hand?

Tam. Know thou sad man, I am not Tamora, She is thy Enemy, and I thy friend, I am Revenge sent from th' infernall Kindome, To ease the gnawing Vulture of thy mind, By working wreakefull vengeance on thy Foes: Come downe and welcome me to this worlds light, Conferre with me of Murder and of Death, There's not a hollow Cave or lurking place, No Vast obscurity. or Misty vale, Where bloody Murther or detested Rape, Can couch for feare, but I will find them out, And in their eares tell them my dreadfull name, Revenge, which makes the foule offenders quake.

Tit. Art thou Revenge? and art thou sent to me, To be a torment to mine Enemies?

Tam. I am, therefore come downe and welcome me.

Tit. Doe me some service ere I come to thee: Loe by thy side where Rape and Murder stands, Now give some surance that thou art Revenge, Stab them, or teare them on thy Chariot wheeles, And then Ile come and be thy Waggoner. And whirle along with thee about the Giobes. Provide the two proper Palfries, blacke as Iet, To hale thy vengefull Waggon swift away, And find out Murder in their guilty Caves. And when thy Car is loaden with their heads, I will dismount, and by the Waggon wheele, Trot like a Servile footeman all day long. Even from Hiperions rising in the East, Vntill his very downefall in the Sea. And day by day Ile doe this heavy taske, So thou destroy Rapine and Murder there.

Tam. I heere are my Ministers, and come with me.

Tit. Are they thy Ministers, what are they call'd?

Tam. Rapine and Murder, therefore called so, Cause they take vengeance of such kind of men.

Tit. Good Lord how like the Empresse Sons they are, And you the Empresse: But we worldly men, Have miserable mad mistaking eyes: Oh sweet Revenge, now doe I come to thee, And if one armes imbracement will content thee, I will imbrace thee in it by and by.

Tam. This closing with him, fits his Lunacy, What ere I forge to feede his braine-sicke fits, Doe you uphold, and maintaine in your speeches, For now he firmly takes me for Revenge, And being Credulous in this mad thought, Ile make him send for Lucius his Sonne, And whilst I at a Banquet hold him sure, Ile find some cunning practise out of hand To scatter and disperse the giddy Gothes, Or at the least make them his Enemies: See heere he comes, and I must play my rheame.

Tit. Long have I beene forlorne, and all for thee, Welcome dread Fury to my woefull house, Rapine and Murther, you are welcome too, How like the Empresse and her Sonnes you are. Well are you fitted, had you but a Moore, Could not all hell afford you such a devill? For well I wote the Empresse never wags; But in her company there is a Moore, And would you represent our Queene aright It were convenient you had such a devill: But welcome as you are, what shall we doe?

Tam. What wouldst thou have us doe Andronicus?

Dem. Shew me a Murtherer, Ile deale with him.

Chir. Shew me a Villaine that hath done a Rape. And I am sent to be reveng'd on him.

Tam. Shew me a thousand that have done thee wrong, And I will be revenged on them all,

Tit. Looke round about the wicked streets of Rome, And when thou findest a man that's like thy selfe, Good Murder stab him, he's a Murtherer. Goe thou with him, and when it is thy hap To find another that is like to thee, Good Rapine stab him, he is a Ravisher. Goe thou with them, and in the Emperours Court, There is a Queene attended by a Moore, Well maist thou know her by thy owne proportion, For up and downe she doth resemble thee, I pray thee doe on them some violent death, They have beene violent to me and mine.

Tamora.

Tam. Well hast thou lesson'd us, this shall we doe.
But would it please the good Andronicus,
To send for Lucius thy thrice Valiant Sonne,
Who leads towards Rome a Band of Warlike Gothes,
And bid him come and Banquet at thy house.
When he is here, even at thy Solemne Feast,
I will bring in the Empreſſe and her Sonnes,
The Emperour himselfe, and all thy Foes,
And at thy mercy shall they stoope, and kneele,
And on them shalt thou case, thy angry heart:
What sayes Andronicus to this devise?

Enter Marcus.

Tit. Marcus my brother, tis sad Titus calis,
Goe gentle Marcus to thy Nephew Lucius,
Thou shalt enquire him out among the Gothes,
Bid him repaire to me, and bring with him
Some of the chiefest Princes of the Gothes,
Bid him encampe his Souldiers where they are,
Tell him the Emperour, and the Empreſſe too,
Feasts at my house, and he shall Feast with them,
This doe thou for my love, and so let him,
As her regards his aged Fathers life.

Mar. This will I doe, and soone returne againe. Exi

Tam. Now will I hence about thy businesse,
And take my Ministers along with me.

Tit. Nay, nay, let Rape and Murder stay with me,
Or else Ile call my Brother backe againe,
And cleave to no revenge but Lucius.

Tam. What say you Boyes, will you bide with him,
Whiles I goe tell my Lord the Emperour.
How I have govern'd our determined jest?
Yeeld to his humour, smooth and speake him faire,
And tarry with him till I turne againe.

Tit. I know them all though they suppose me mad,
And will ore-reach them in their owne devises,
A payre of cursed hell-hounds and their Dam.

Dem. Madam depart at pleasure, leave vs here.

Tam. Farewell Andronicus, revenge now goes
To lay a complot to betray thy Foes.

Tit. I know thou do'st, and sweet revenge farewell.

Chi. Tell us old man, how shall we be imploy'd?

Tit. Tut, I have worke enough for you to doe,
Publius come hither, Caius, and Valentine.

Pub. What is your will?

Tit. Know you these two?

Pub. The Empreſſe Sonnes
I take them, Chiron, Demetrius.

Tit. Fye Publius, fie, thou art too much deceau'd,
The one is Murder, Rape is the others name,
And therefore bind them gentle Publius,
Caius, and Valentine, lay hands on them,
Oft have you heard me wish for such an houre,
And now I find it, therefore bind them sure.

Chi. Villaines forbear, we are the Empreſſe Sonnes.

Pub. And therefore doe we, what we are commanded.
Stop close their mouthes, let them not speake a word,
Is he sure bound, looke that you binde them fast. Exeunt.

Enter Titus Andronicus with a knife, and Lavinia with a Bason.

Tit. Come, come Lavinia, looke, thy Foes are bound,
Sirs stop their mouthes, let them not speake to me,
But let them heare what fearefull words I utter.

Oh Villaines, Chiron, and Demetrius,
Here stands the spring whom you have stain'd with mud
This goodly Sommer with your Winter mixt,
You kil'd her husband, and for that vil'd fault,
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death,
My hand cut off, and made a merry jest,
Both her sweet hands, her Tongue, and that more deere
Then hands or tongue, her spotlesse Chastity,
Inhumane Traytors, you constrain'd and for't.
What would you say, if I should let you speake:
Villaines for shame you could not beg for grace.
Hearke Wretches, how I meane to martyr you,
This one Hand yet it left, to cut you throats,
Whil'st that Lavinia tweene her stumps doth hold:
The Bason that receives your guilty blood.
You know you Mother meanes to feast with me,
And calls herselfe Revenge, and thinkes me mad.
Hearke Villaines, I will grin'd your bones to dust,
And with your blood and it, Ile make a Paste,
And of the Paste a Coffen I will reare,
And make two Pasties of your shamefull heads,
And bid that strumpet your unhallowed Dam,
Like to the earth swallow her owne increase.
This is the Feast, that I have bid her to,
And this the Banquet she shall surfet on,
For worse then Philomel you us'd my Daughter,
And worse then Progne, I will be reveng'd,
Ane now prepare your throats: Lavinia come.
Receive the blood, and when that they are dead
Let me goe grin'd their Bones to powder small,
And with this hatefull Liquor temper it,
And in that Paste let their vild'd Heads be bakte,
Come, come, be ever one officious,
To make this Banket, which I with might prove,
More sterne and bloody then the Centaures Feast.

He cuts their throats.

So now bring them in, for Ile play the Cooke,
And see them ready, gainst the Mother comes. Exeunt

Enter Lucius, Marcus, and the Gothes.

Luc. Vnckle Marcus, since 'tis my Fathers minde
That I repaire to Rome, I am content.

Goth. And ours with thine befall, what fortune will.

Luc. Good Vnckle take you in this barbarous Moore,
This Ravenous Tiger, this accursed devill,
Let him receive no sustenance, fetter him,
Till he be brought unto the Emperours face,
For testimony of his foule proceedings.

And see the Ambush of our Friends be strong,
If ere the Emperour meanes no good to us.

Aaron. Some devill whisper curles in my eare,
And prompt me that my tongue may utter forth,
The Venemous Malice of my swelling heart.

Luc. Away inhumane Dogge, Vnhallowed Slave,
Sirs helpe our Vnckle, to convey him in, Flourish.
The Trumpets shew the Emperour is at hand.

Sound Trumpets. Enter Emperour, and Empreſſe, with Tribunes and others.

Sat. What, hath the Firmament more Suns then one?

Luc. What bootes it the to call thy selfe a Sunne?

Mar. Romes Emperour and Nephew breake the parly
These quarrels must be quietly debated,
The Feast is ready which the carefull Titus,

Hath

Hath ordained to an honourable end,
For Peace, for Love, for League, and good to Rome :
Please you therefore draw nye and take your places.

Satur. Marcus we will.

Hoboyes.

A Table brought in.

Enter Titus like a Cooke, placing the meat on the Table, and Lavinia with a vial over her face.

Titus. Welcome my gracious Lord,
Welcome Dread Queene,
Welcome ye Warlike Gothes, welcome Lucius,
And welcome all : although the cheere be poore,
I will fill your stomackes, please you eat of it.

Sat. Why art thou thus attir'd Andronicus ?

Tit. Because I would be sure to have all well,
To entertaine your Highnesse, and your Empresse.

Tam. We are beholding to you good Andronicus.

Tit. And if your highnesse knew my heart, you were :
My Lord the Emperour resolve me this,
Was it well done of rash Virginus,
To slay his daughter with his owne right hand,
Because she was enfor't, stain'd, and deflowr'd ?

Satur. It was Andronicus.

Tit. Your reason, Mighty Lord ?

Sat. Because the Girle, should not survive her shame,
And by her presence still renew his sorrowes.

Tit. A reason mighty, strong, and effectuell,
A patterne, president, and lively warrant,
For me (most wretched) to performe the like :
Dye, dye, Lavinia, and thy shame with thee,
And with thy shame, thy Fathers sorrow dye.

He kills her.

Sat. What hast thou done, unnaturall and unkind ?

Tit. Kild her for whom my teares have made me blind.
I am as wofull as Virginus was,
And have a thousand times more cause then he.

Sat. What was the ravisht ? tell who did the deed,

Tit. Wilt please you eat,
Wilt please your highnesse feed ?

Tam. Why hast thou slaine thine onely Daughter thus ?

Tit. Not I, twas Chiron, and Demetrius.
They ravisht her, and cut away her tongue,
And they, twas they, that did her all this wrong.

Satur. Goe fetch them hither to us presently.

Tit. Why there they are both, baked in that Pye,
Whereof their Mother daintily hath fed,
Eating the flesh that she herselfe hath bred.
Tis true, tis true, witnesse my knives sharpe point.

He stabs the Empresse.

Satur. Dye franticke wretch, for this accursed deed.

Luc. Can the Sonnes eye, behold his Father bleed ?
Theres meede for meed, death for a deadly deed.

Mar. You sad fac'd men, people and Sonnes of Rome,
By uproore sever'd like a flight of Fowle,
Scattered by windes and high tempestuous guests :
Oh let me teach you how, to knit againe
This scattered Corne, into one mutuall sheafe,
These broken limbs againe into one body.

Goth. Let Rome herselfe be bane unto herselfe,
And she whom mighty kingdoms curse to,
Like a forlorne and desperate castaway,
Doe shamefull execution on her selfe.
But if my frosty signes and chaps of age,
Grave witness of true experience,
Cannot induce you to attend my words,
Speake Romes deere friend, as erst our Ancestor,

When with his solemne tongue he did discourse
To love-sicke Didoes sad attending care,
The story of that balefull burning night,
When subtil Greekes surpriz'd King Priams Troy :
Tell us what Sinon hath bewicht our eares,
Or who hath brought the fatall engine in,
That gives our Troy, our Rome the civill wound.
My heart is not compact of flint nor Steele,
Nor can I utter all our bitter grieve,
But floods of teares will drowne my Oratory,
And breake my very vttrance, even in the time
When it should move you to attend me most,
Lending your kind hand Commiseration.
Heere is a Captaine, let him tell the tale.
Your hearts will throb and weepe to heare him speake.

Luc. This Noble Auditory, be it knowne to you,
That cursed Chiron and Demetrius

Were they that mured our Emperours Brother,
And they it were that ravished our Sister,
For their fell faults our Brothers were beheaded,
Our fathers teares despis'd, and basely couen'd,
Of that true hand that fought Romes quarrell out,
And sent her enemies unto the grave.
Lastly, my selfe unkindly banished,
The gates shut on me, and turn'd weeping out,
To beg reliefe among Romes Enemies,
Who drown'd their enmity in my true teares,
And op'd their armes to imbrace me as a Friend :
And I am turned forth, be it knowne to you,
That have preserv'd her well fare in my blood,
And from her bosome tooke the Enemies point,
Sheathing the Steele in my adventrous body.

Alas you know, I am no Vaunter I,
My scars can witnesse, dumbe although they are,
That my report is just and full of truth :
But soft, me thinks I doe digresse too much,
Cytting my worthlesse praise : Oh pardon me,
For when no friends are by, men praise themselves.

Marc. Now is my turne to speake : Behold this Child,
Of this was Tamora delivered,
The issue of an Irreligious Moore,
Chiefe Architect and plotter of these woes,
The Villaine is alive in Titus house,
And as he is, to witnesse this is true.
Now judge what course had Titus to revenge
These wrongs, unspeakable past patience,
Or more then any living man could beare.
Now you have heard the truth, what say you Romanes ?
Have we done ought amisse ? shew us wherein,
And from the place where you behold us now,
The poore remainder of Andronicus,
Will hand in hand all headlong cast us downe,
And on the ragged stones beat forth our braines,
And make a mutuall closure of our house ;
Speake Romanes speake, and if you say we shall,
Loe hand in hand, Lucius and I will fall.

Emili. Come come, thou reverent man of Rome,
And bring our Emperour gently in thy hand,
Lucius our Emperour : for well I know,
The common voyce doe cry it shall be so.

Mar. Lucius, all haile Romes Royall Emperour, Goe, goe into old Titus sorrowfull house,
And hither hale that misbelieving Moore,
To be adjudg'd some direfull slaughtering death,
As punishment for his most wicked life.
Lucius all haile to Romes gracious Governour.

Lucius

Luc. Thankes gentle Romans, may I governe so,
To heale Rome's harmes, and wipe away her woe.
But gentle people, give me ayme a-while,
For Nature puts me to a heavy raske :
Stand all aloofe, but Vnckle draw you neere,
To shed obsequious teares upon this Trunke :
Oh take this warme kisse on they pale cold lips,
These sorrowfull drops upon thy bloud-flaine face,
The last true Duties of thy Noble Sonne.

Mar. A teare for teare, and loving kisse for kisse,
Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy Lips :
O were the summe of these that I should pay
Countlesse, and infinit yet would I pay them.

Luc. Come hither Boy, come, come, and learne of us
To melt in showres : thy Grandfire lov'd thee well :
Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee :
Sung thee asleepe, his Loving Brest, thy Pillow :
Many a matter hath he told to thee,
Meete, and agreeing with thine Infancy :
In that respect then, like a loving Childe,
Shed yet some small drops from thy tender Spring.
Because kinde Nature doth require it so :
Friends should associate Friends, in Griefe and Woe
Bid him far well, commit him to the Grave,
Doe him that kindnesse, and take leave of him.

Boy. O Grandfire, Grandfire : even with all my heart
Would I weare Dead, so you did Live againe.
O Lord, I cannot speake to him for weeping,
My teares will choke me. if I ope my mouth.

Romanes. You sad Andronici, have done with woes,
Give sentence on this execrable Wretch,
That hath beene breeder of these dire events.

Luc. Set him brest deepe in earth, and famish him :
There let him stand, and rave, and cry for foode :
If any one releeves, or pitties him,
For the offence, he dyes. This is our doome :
Some stay, to see him fastned in the earth.

Aaron. O why should wrath be mute, and fury dumbe ?
I am no Baby I, that with base Prayers
I should repent the Evils I have done.
Ten thousand worse, then ever yet I did,
Would I performe if I might have my will :
If one good Deed in all my life I did,
I doe repent it from my very Soule.

Luc. Some loving Friends convey the Emperor hence,
And give him buriall in his fathers grave.
My Father, and Lavinia, shall forthwith
Be closed in our Households Monument :
As for that heynous Tyger Tamora,
No funerall Rite, nor man in mournfull Weeds :
No mournfull Bell shall ring her Buriall :
But throw her forth to Beast and Birds of prey :
Her life was Beast-like, and devoid of pittie,
And being so, shall have like want of pittie.
See Iustice done on Aaron that damn'd Moore,
For whom, our heavy happie had their beginning :
Then afterwards, to Order well the State,
That like Events, may ne're it Ruinate. Exeunt omnes.

FIN IS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF ROMEO and IVLIET.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Sampson and Gregory, with Swords and Bucklers, of the House of Capulet.

Sampson.

Gregory: A my word we'll not carry coales.

Greg. No, for then we should be Colliers.

Samp. I meane, if we be in choller, we'll draw.

Greg. I, while you live, draw your necke out o'th Collar.

Samp. I strike quickly, being mov'd.

Greg. But thou art not quickly mov'd to strike.

Samp. A dog of the house of Mountague, moves me.

Greg. To move, is to stir: and to be valiant, is to stand:
Therefore, if thou art mov'd, thou runst away.

Samp. A dogge of that house shall move me to stand,
I will take the wall of any Man or Maid of Mountagues.

Greg. That shewes thee weake slave, for the weakest goes to the wall.

Samp. True, and therefore women being the weaker Vessells, are ever thrust to the wall: therefore I will push Mountagues men from the wall, and thrust his Maides to the wall. (their men.)

Greg. The Quarrell is betweene our Masters, and us

Samp. Tis all one, I will shew my selfe a tyrant: when I have fought with the men, I will be civill with the Maids, and cut off their heads.

Greg. The heads of the Maids?

Samp. I, the heads of the maids, or their maiden-heads,
Take it in what sence thou wilt.

Greg. They must take it in sence, that feele it.

Samp. Me they shall feele while I am able to stand:
And tis knowne I am a pretty peece of flesh.

Greg. Tis well thou art not Fish: if thou had'st, thou had'st bene poore Iohn. Draw thy Toole, here comes of the House of the Mountagues.

Enter two other Servingmen.

Samp. My naked weapon is out: quarrel, I wil backe thee

Gre. How? Turne thy backe; and run.

Samp. Feare me not.

Greg. No marry: I feare thee.

Samp. Let us take the Law of our sides: let them begin

Gr. I wil frown as I passe by, & let the take it as they list

Samp. Nay, as they dare. I will bite my Thumbe at them which is a disgrace to them, if they beare it.

Abra. Doe you bite your Thumbe at vs fir?

Samp. I doe bite my Thumbe, fir.

Abra. Doe you bite your Thumbe at us fir?

Samp. Is the Law of our side, if I say I? Gre. No

Samp. No fir, I doe not bite my Thumbe at you fir: but I bite my Thumbe fir.

Greg. Doe you quarrell fir?

Abra. Quarrell fir? no fir.

Samp. If you doe fir, I am for you, I serve, as good a man

Abra. No better?

Samp. Well fir.

Enter Benvolio.

Gre. Say better: here comes one of my masters kinsmen

Samp. Yes, better.

Abra. You Lye.

Samp. Draw if you be men. Gregory, remember thy washing blow. They fight.

Ben. Part Fooles put up your Swords, you know not what you doe.

Enter Tibalt.

Tyba. What art thou drawne, among these heartlesse
Hindes? Turne thee Benvolio, looke upon thy death.

Ben. I doe but keepe the peace, put up thy Sword,
Or manage it to part these men with me.

Tyb. What draw, and talke of peace? I hate the word
As I hate hell, all Mountagues, and thee:
Have at the Coward. Fight.

Enter three or foure Citizens with Clubs.

Offic. Clubs, Bils, and Partifons, strike, beat them down
Downe with the Capulets, downe with the Mountagues.

Enter old Capulet in his Gown, and his Wife.

Cap. What noise is this? Give me my long Sword ho.

Wife. A crutch, a crutch: why call you for a Sword?

Cap. My Sword I say: Old Mountague is come,
And flourishes his Blade in spight of me.

Enter old Mountague, and his wife.

Moun. Thou villaine Capulet. Hold me nor, let me goe.

2. Wife. Thou shalt not stirre a foote to seeke a Foe.

Enter Prince Eskales, with his Train.

Prin. Rebellious Subjects, Enemies to peace,
Prophaners of this Neighbor-stained Steele,
Will they not heare? What hoe, you Men, you Beasts,
That quench the fire of your pernicious Rage,
With purple Fountaines issuing from your Veines:
On paine of Torture, from these bloody hands
Throw your mistemper'd Weapons to the ground,
And heare the Sentence of your moved Prince.
Three civill Broyles, bred of an Ayery word,
By thee old Capulet and Mountague,
Have thrice disturb'd the quiet of our streets,
And make Verona's ancient Citizens
Cast by their Grave befeeming Ornament,
To wield old Partizans, in hands as old,

Cankred

Cankred with peace, to part your Cankred hate,
If ever you disturbe our streets againe,
Your lives shall pay the forfeit of the peace.
For this time all the rest depart away:
You Capulet shall goe along with me,
And Mountague come you this afternoone,
To know our Fathers pleasure in this case:
Toold Free-towne, our common judgement place:
Once more on paine of death, all men depart. Exeunt.

Moun. Who set this ancient quarrell new abroach?
Speake Nephew, were you by, when it began?

Ben. Heere were the servants of your aduerlary,
And yours close fighting ere I did approach,
I drew to part them, in the instant came
The fiery Tibalt, with his sword prepar'd,
Which as he breath'd defiance to my eares,
Heswong about his head, and cut the windes,
Who nothing hurt withall, hift him in scorne.
While we were enterchanging thrusts and blowes,
Came more and more, and fought on part and part,
Till the Prince came, who parted either part.

Wife. O where is Romeo, saw you him to day?
Right glad am I, he was not at this fray.

Ben. Madam, an houre before the worshipt Sun
Peer'd forth the golden window of the East,
A troubled mind drave me to walke abroad,
Where underneath the grove of Sycamour,
That West-ward rooteth from this City side:
Soearely walking did I see your Sonne;
Towards him I made, but he was ware of me,
And stole into the covert of the wood,
I measuring his affections by my owne,
Which then most fought, where most might not be found
Being one too many by my weary selfe,
Persuad my honour, not persuing his
And gladly shunn'd, who gladly fled from me.

Moun. Many a morning hath he there beene seene,
With teares augmenting the fresh mornings dew,
Adding to cloudes, more cloudes with his deepe sighes,
But all so soone as the all-cheering Sunne,
Should in the farthest East begin to draw
The shady Curtaines from Auroras bed,
Away from light itales home my heavy Sonne,
And private in his Chamber pennes himselfe,
Shuts up his windowes, lockes faire day-light out,
And makes himselfe an artificiall night:
Blacke and portentous must this humour prove,
Vnlesse good counsell may the cause remove.

Ben. My Noble Vncle doe you know the cause?

Moun. I neither know it, nor can learne of him.

Ben. Have you importun'd him by any meanes?

Moun. Both by my selfe and many other Friends,
But he his owne affections counseller,
Is to himselfe (I will not say how true)
But to himselfe so secret and so close,
So farre from founding and discovery,
As is the bud bit with an envious worme,
Ere he can spread his sweet leaves to the ayre,
Or dedicate his beauty to the fame.
Could we but learne from whence his sorrowes grow,
We would as willingly give cure, as know.

Enter Romeo.

Ben. See where he comes, so please you step aside,
We know his greivance, or be much denide.

Moun. I would thou wert so happy by thy stay,
To heare true shrift. Come Madam let's away. Exeunt.

Ben. Good morrow Cousin.

Rom. Is the day so young?

Ben. But new strooke nine.

Rom. Aye me, sad houres seeme long:
Was that my Father that went hence so fast?

Ben. It was: what sadnesse lengthens Romeos houres?

Ro. Not having that, which having, makes them short

Ben. In love.

Rom. Out.

Ben. Of love.

Rom. Out of her favour where I am in love.

Ben. Alas that love so gentle in his view,
Should be so tyrannous and rough in prooffe.

Rom. Alas that love, whose view is muffled still,
Should without eyes, see path-ways to his will:

Where shall we dine? O me: what fray was heere?
Yet tell me not, for I have heard it all:

Heres much to doe with hate, but more with love:

Why then, O brawling love, O loving hate,

O any thing, of nothing first create:

O heavy lightnesse, serious vanity,

Mishapen Chaos of wellseeming formes,

Feather of lead, bright smoake, cold fire, sicke health,

Still-waking sleepe, that is not what it is:

This love feeble I, that feeble no love in this.

Doeft thou not laugh?

Ben. No Coze, I rather weepe.

Rom. Good heart, at what?

Ben. At thy good hearts oppression.

Rom. Why such is loves transgression.

Griefes of mine owne lye heavy in my breast,
Which thou wilt propagate to have it preast
With more of thine, this love that thou hast showne,
Doth adde more griefe, to too much of mine owne.

Love, is a smoake made with the fume of sighes,

Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in Lovers eyes,

Being vext, a Sea nourisht with loving teares,

What is it else? a madnesse, most discreet,

A choking gall, and a preserving sweet:

Farewell my Coze.

Ben. Soft I will goe along.

And if you leave me so, you doe me wrong.

Rom. Tut I have lost my selfe, I am not here,

This is not Romeo, he's some other where.

Ben. Tell me in sadnesse, who is that you love?

Rom. What shall I grone and tell thee?

Ben. Grone, why no: but sadly tell me who.

Rom. A sicke man in good sadnesse makes his will:
O, word ill urg'd to one that is so ill:

In sadnesse Cozin, I doe love a woman.

Ben. I aym'd so neare, when I suppos'd you lov'd.

Rom. A right good marke man, and thes faire I love.

Ben. A right faire marke, faire Coze, is soonest hit.

Rom. Well in that hit you misse, sheell not be hit
With Cupids arrow, she hath Dians wit:
And in strong prooffe of chastity well arm'd:
From loves weake childsh Bow, she lives uncharm'd.
She will not stay the siege of loving tearmes
Nor bid th'incounter of assailing eyes.

Nor ope her lap to Saint-seuncing Gold: Idolizing

O she is rich in beauty, onely poore,

That when she dyes, with beauty dyes her store.

Ben. Then she hath sworne, that she will still live chaste?

Rom. She hath, and in that sparing makes huge wast?

For beauty sterv'd with her severity,

Cuts beauty off from all posterity.

She

She is too faire, too wise wisely too faire,
To merit blisse by making me dispaire :
She hath forsworne to love, and in that vow
Doe I live dead, that live to tell it now.

Ben. Be rul'd by me, forget to thinke of her.

Rom. O teach me how I should forget to thinke.

Ben. By giving liberty unto thine eyes,
Examine other beauties. (more,

Rom. Tis the way to call hers (exquisite) in question
These happy masks that kisse faire Ladies browes,
Being blacke, puts us in mind they hide the faire :
He that is strooken blind, cannot forget
The precious treasure of his eye-sight lost :
Shew me a Mistresse that is passing faire:
What doth her beauty serve but as a note,
Where I may reade who past that passing faire.
Farewell thou canst not teach me to forget.

Ben. Ile pay that doctrine, or else dye in debt. Exeunt.

Enter Capulet, County Paris, and the Clowne.

Capu. Mountague is bound as well as I,
In penalty alike, and tis not hard I thinke,
For men so old as we, to keepe the peace.

Par. Of honourable reckning are you both,
And pittie tis you liv'd at ods so long :
But now my Lord, what say you to my sute ?

Capu. But saying ore what I have said before,
My Child is yet a stranger in the world,
Shee hath not scene the change of fourteene yeeres,
Let two more Summers wither in their pride,
Ere we may thinke her ripe to be a Bride.

Par. Younger then she, are happy mothers made.

Capu. And too soone mar'd are those so early made :
Earth up hath swallowed all my hopes but she,
She is the hopefull Lady of my earth :
But wooe her gentle Paris, get her heart,
My will to her consent, is but a part,
And she agree, within her scope of choise,
Lyes my consent, and faire according voyce :
This night I hold an old accustom'd feast,
Whereto I have invited many a Guest,
Such as I love, and you among the store,
One more, most welcome makes my number more :
At my poore house, looke to behold this night,
Earth-treading starres, that make darke heaven light,
Such comfort as doe lusty young men feele,
When well apparel'd Aprill on the heele
Of limping Winter treads, euen such delight
Among fresh Female buds shall you this night
Inherit at my house : heare all, all see :
And like her most, whose merit most shall be :
Which one more view, of many, mine being one,
My stand in number, though in reckning none.
Come, goe with me : goe sirrah trudge about,
Through faire Verona, find those persons out,
Whose names are written there, and to them say,
My house and welcome, on their pleasure stay. Exit.

Ser. Find them out whose names are written. Heert it is written, that the Shoo-maker should meddle with his Yard, and the Tayler with his Last, the Fisher with his Penfill, and the Painter with his Nets. But I am sent to find those persons whose names are writ, and can never find what names the writting person hath here writ (I must to the learned) in good time.

Enter Benvolio, and Romeo.

Ben. Tut man, one fire burnes out anothers burning,
One paine is lesned by anothers anguish :

Turne giddy, and be holpe by backward turning :
One desparate griefe, cures with anothers languish :
Take thou some new infection to the eye,
And the ranke poyson of the old will dye.

Rom. Your Plantan leafe is excellent for that.

Ben. For what I pray thee ?

Rom. For your broken shin.

Ben. Why Romeo art thou mad ?

Rom. Not mad, but bound more then a mad man is:
Shut up in prison, kept without my foode,
Whipt and tormented : and Godden good fellow.

Ser. Godgigoden, I pray sir can you read ?

Rom. I mine owne fortune in my misery.

Ser. Perhaps you have learn'd it without booke :
But I pray can you read any thing you see ?

Rom. I, if I know the Letters and the Language.

Ser. Ye say honestly, rest you merry.

Rom. Stay fellow, I can read.

Hereades the Letter.

Seigneur Martino, and his wife and daughter : County An-selme and his beaution sifers : the Lady widdow of Virvio, Seigneur Placentio, and his lovely Neeces : Mercutio and his brother Valentine, mine uncle Capulet his wife and daughters : my faire Neece Rosaline, Livina, Seigneur Valerio, and his Cosen Tybalt : Lucio and the lovely Helena.

A faire assembly, whither should they come ?

Ser. Vp.

Rom. Whither ? to supper ?

Ser. To our house.

Rom. Whose house ?

Ser. My Maisters.

Rom. Indeed I should have askt you that before.

Ser. Now Ile tell you without asking. My master is the great rich Capulet, and if you be not of the house of Mountagues I pray come and crush a cup of wine. Rest you merry. Exit.

Ben. At this same ancient Feast of Capulets,
Sups the faire Rosaline, whom thou so lovest :
With all the admired Beauties of Verona,
Goe thither and with unattainted eye,
Compare her face with some that I shall show,
And I will make thee thinke thy Swan a Crow.

Rom. When the devout religion of mine eye
Maintaines such falsehood, then turne teares to fire :
And these who often drown'd could never dye,
Transparent Heretiques be burnt for liers.
One fairer then my love ! the all-seeing Sun
Nere saw her match, since first the world begun.

Ben. Tut Tut, you saw her faire, none else being by,
Herselfe poyf'd with herselfe in either eye :
But in that Chrifall scales, let there be waid,
Your Ladies love against some other Maid
That I will show you, shining at this Feast,
And shele shew scant, well, that now shewes best.

Rom. Ile goe along, no such sight to be showne,
But to rejoyce in splendor of mine owne.

Enter Capulets Wife and Nurse.

Wife. Nurse wher's my daughter? call her forth to me.

Nurse. Now by my Maidenhead, at twelve yeare old
I bad her come, what Lamb: what Ladi-bird, God forbid, Where's this Girle? what Juliet ?

Enter Juliet.

Juliet. How now, who calls ?

Nur. Your Mother.

Juliet. Madam I am heere, what is your will ?

Wife. This is the matter : Nurse give leave a while, we must

must talke in secret. Nurse come backe againe, I have remembred me, thou' se heare our counsell. Thou knowest my daughter's of a pretty age.

Nurse. Faith I can tell her age unto an houre.

Wife. Shees not fourteene.

Nurse. Ile lay foureteene of my teeth,

And yet to my teeth be it spoken,

I have but foure, shees not fourteene,

How long is it now to Lammes tide?

Wife. A fortnight and odde dayes.

Nurse. Euen or odde, of all daies in the yeare come Lammes Eue at night shall she be fourteene. Susan and she, God rest all Chritian foules, were of an age. Well Susan is with God, she was too good for me. But as I said on Lammes Eue at night shall she be fourteene, that shall she marie, I remember it well. Tis since the Earth-quake now eleven yeares, and she was wean'd I never shall forget it, of all the daies of the yeare, upon that day: for I had then laid Worme-wood to my Dug sitting in the Sunne under the Dove-house wall, my Lord and you were then at Mantua, nay I doe beare a braine. But as I said, when it did tast the Worme-wood on the niple of my Dugge, and felt it bitter, pretty foole, to see it teachie, and fall out with the Dugge, Shake quoth the Dove-house, 't was no neede I trow to bid mee trudge: and since that time it is eleven yeares, for then she could stand alone, nay bi'th roode she could have runne, and wadled all about: for even the day before she broke her brow, and then my Husband God be with his foule, a was a merrie man, tooke up the Child, yea quoth hee, doest thou fall upon thy face? thou wilt fall backward when thou hast more wit, wilt thou not Juliet? And by my holy-dam, the pretty wretch lefte crying, and said I: to see now how a Iest shall come about. I warrant, & I shall live a thousand yeares, I never should forget it: wilt thou not Juliet quoth he? and pretty foole it flinted, and said I.

Old La. Inough of this I pray the hold thy peace.

Nurse. Yes Madam, yet I cannot chuse but laugh, to thinke it should leave crying, & say I: and yet I warrant it had upon it brow, a bumpe as big as a young Cockrels stone? A perilous knock, and it cryed bitterly. Yea quoth my husband, fall' st vpon thy face, thou wilt fall backward when thou comest to age: wilt thou not Juliet It flinted: and said I.

Jul. And stint thou too I pray the Nurse, say I.

Nurse. Peace I have done: God marke thee to his grace thou was the pretiest Babe that ere I nurs't, and I might live to see thee married once, I have my wish.

Old La. Marry that marry is the very theame

I came to talke of, tell me daughter Juliet,

How stands your disposition to be Married?

Jul. It is an houre that I dreame not of.

Nurse. An houre, were not I thine onely Nurse, I would lay thou hadst suckt wisdome from thy teat.

Old La. Well thinke of marriage now, younger then you were in Parous, Ladies of esteeme,

Are made already Mothers. By my count,

I was your Mother, much upon these yeares

That you are now a maide, thus then in briefe:

The valiant Paris seekes you for his love.

Nurse. A man young Lady, Lady, such a man as all the world. Why hee's a man of waxe.

Old La. Veronas Summer hath not such a flower.

Nurse. Nay hee's a flower, in faith a very flower.

Old La. What say you, can you love the Gentleman?

This night you shall behold him at our Feast,

Read ore the volume of young Paris face,
And find delight, writ there with Beauties pen:
Examine every severall liniament,
And see how one another lends content:
And what obscur'd in this faire volume lies,
Find written in the Margent of hiseyes,
This precious Booke of Love, this unbound Lover,
To Beavtifie him; onely lacks a Cover.
The fish lives in the Sea, and 'tis much pride
For faire without, the faire within to hide:
That Booke in manies eyes doth share the glory,
That in Gold claspes, Lockes in the Golden storie:
So shall you share all that he doth possesse,
By having him, making your selfe no lesse.

Nurse. No lesse, nay bigger: women grow by men.

Old La. Speake briefly, can you like of Paris love.

Jul. Ile looke to like, if looking liking move.

But no more deepe will I endart mine eye,
Then your consent gives strength to make it flye,

Enter a Serving man.

Ser. Madam, the guests are come, supper seru'd up, you cal'd, my young Lady askt for, the Nurse curst in the Pantery, and every thing in extremitie: I must hence to wait, I beseech you follow straight.

Exit.

Mo. We follow thee, Juliet, the Countie staies.

Nurse. Goe Girle, seeke happie nights to happie daies.

Exeunt.

Enter Romeo, Mercutio, Benuolio, with five or sixe other Maskers, Torch-bearers.

Rom. What shall this speech be spoke for our excuse?
Or shall we on without Apologie?

Ben. The date is out of such prolixitie,
Weele have no Cupid, hood winkt with a skarfe,
Bearing a Tartars painted Bow of lath,
Skaring the Ladies like a Crow-keeper.
But let them measure us by what they will.
Weele measure them a measure, and be gone.

Rom. Give me a Torch, I am not for this ambling.
Being but heavy I will beare the light.

Mer. Nay gentle Romeo, we must have you dance.

Rom. Not I beleeve me, you have dancing shooes
With nimble soles, I have a sole of Lead
So stokes me to the ground, I cannot move.

Mer. You are a Lover, borrow Cupids wings,
And soare with them above a common bound.

Rom. I am too sore impeared with his shaft,
To soare with his light feathers, and to bond:
I cannot bound a pitch above dull woe,
Vnder loves heavy burthen doe I sinke.

Hora. And to sinke in it should you burthen love,
Too great oppression for a tender thing.

Rom. Is love a tender thing? it is too rough,
Too rude, too boysterous, and it prickes like thorne.

Mer. If love be rough with you, be rough with love,
Pricke love for pricking, and you beate love downe,
Give me a Case to put my visage in,
A Visor for a Visor, what care I

What curious eye doth quote deformities:
Here are the Beetle-browes shall blush for me.

Ben. Come knocke and enter, and no sooner in,
But every man betake him to his legs.

Rom. A Torch for me, let wantons light of heart
Tickle the fencelesse rushes with their heeles:
For I am proverbd with a Grandfier Phrase,
Ile be a Candle-holder and looke on,
The game was nere so faire, and I am done.

h h

Mer. Tu

Mer. Tut, duns the Mause, the Constables owne word,
If thou art dun, weele draw thee from the mire.
Or save your reverence love, wherein thou stickest
Vp to the eares, come we burne day-light ho.

Rom. Nay that's not so.

Mer. I meane sir I, delay,
We wast our lights in vaine, lights, lights, by day;
Take our good meaning, for our Iudgement sits
Five times in that ere once in our fine wits.

Rom. And we meane well in going to this Maske,
But 'tis no wit to go.

Mer. Why may one aske?

Rom. I dreamt a dreame to night.

Mer. And so did I.

Rom. Well what was yours?

Mer. That dreamers often lie.

Rom. In bed a sleepe while they do dreame things true.

Mer. O then I see Queene Mab hath beene with you:
She is the Fairies Midwife, and she comes in shape no bigger then Agat-stone, on the fore-finger of an Alderman, drawne with a teeme of little Atomies, over mens noses as they lie asleepe: her Waggon Spokes made of long Spinners legs: the Cover of the wings of Grasshoppers, her Trace of the smallest Spiders web, her collars of the Moone shines watry Beames, her Whip of Creckets bone, the Lash of filme, her Waggoner, a small gray coated Gnat, not halfe so bigge as a round little Worme, prickt from the Lazy-finger of a woman. Her Chariot is an épy Hafelnut, made by the loyner Squirrel or old Grub, time out a mind, the Faries Choach-makers: and in this state she gallops night by night, through Louers braines: and then they dreame of Love. On Countries knees, that dreame on Curfies strait: ore Lawiers fingers, who strait dreame on Fees, ore Ladies lips, who strait on kisses dreame, which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues, because their breath with Sweet meats tainted are. Sometime she gallops ore a Courtiers nose, and then dreames he of smelling out a suite: and sometime comes she with a Tith pigs tale, tickling a Parsons nose as he lies asleepe, then he dreams of another Benefice. Sometime she driveth ore a Souldiers necke, and then dreames he of cutting Forraine throats, of Breaches, Ambuscados, Spanish Blades: Of Healths fue Fadome deepe, and then anon drums in his eares, at which he starts and wakes, and being thus frightened, sweares a prayer or two & sleeps againe: this is that very Mab that plats the manes of Horses in the night: and baks the Elflocks in foule sluttish haire, which once untangled, much misfortune bodes.

This is the hag, when Maides lie on their backs,
That presses them, and learns them first to beare,
Making them women of good carriage:
This is she——

Rom. Peace, peace, Mercutio peace,
Thou talk'st of nothing.

Mer. True I talke of dreames:
Which are the children of an idle braine,
Begot of nothing, but vaine phantasie,
Which is as thin of substance as the ayre,
And more inconstant then the wind, who woos
Even now the frozen bosome of the North:
And being anger'd, puffs away from thence,
Turning his side to the dew dropping South.

Ben. This wind you talke of blows vs from our selves,
Supper is done and we shall come too late.

Rom. I feare too early, for my mind misgives,
Some consequence yet hanging in the starres,

Shall bitterly begin his fearefull date
With this nights revels, and expire the tearme
Of a despised life clod'd in my brest:
By some vile forfeit of untimely death,
But he that hath the stirrage of my course,
Direct my sute: on lusty Gentlemen.

Ben. Strike Drum.

They march about the Stage, and Servingmen come forth with their napkin.

Enter Servant.

Ser. Where's Potpan, that he helps not to take away?
He shift a Trencher? he scrape a Trencher.

1. When good manners, shall lye in one or two mens hands, and they unwasht too, 'tis a foule thing.

Ser. Away with the Ioynstooles, remove the Court-cubbord, looke to the plate: good thou, save me a peice of Marchpane, and as thou lovest me, let the Porter let in
Susan Grindstone, and Nell, Anthonie and Potpan.

2. I Boy ready.

Ser. You are lookt for, and cal'd for, askt for, and sought for, in the great Chamber.

1. We cannot be here and there too, chearly Boys,
Be briske a while, and the longer liver take all.

Enter all the Guests and Gentlewomen to the Maskers.

1. Capu. Welcome Gentlemen,
Ladies that have their toes
Vnplagu'd with Cornes, will walke about with you:
Ah me Mistresses, which of you all
Will now deny to dance? She that makes dainty,
She Ile sweare hath Cornes: am I come neare ye now?
Welcome Gentlemen, I have seene the day
That I have worne a Vitor, and could tell
A whispering tale in a faire Ladies eare:
Such as would please: 'tis gone, 'tis gone, 'tis gone,
You are welcome Gentlemen, come Musicians play:

Musicke plaies: and the dance.

A Hall, hall, give roome, and foote it Girles,
More light ye knaves, and turne the Tables up:
And quench the fire, the Roome is growne too hot.
Ah sirrah, this unlookt for sport comes well:
Nay sit, nay sit, good Cozin Capulet,
For you and I are past our dauncing dayes:
How long 'ist now since last your selfe and I
Were in a Maske

2. Capu. Berlady thirty yeares.

1. Capu. What man: 'tis not so much, 'tis not so much,
'Tis since the Nuptiall of Lucentio.
Come Pentecost as quickly as it will,
Some five and twenty yeares, and then we Mask.

2. Cap. 'Tis more, 'tis more, his Sonne is elder sir:
His Sonne is thirty.

3. Cap. Will you tell me that?
His Sonne was but a Ward two yeares agoe.

Rom. What Lady is that which doth in rich the hand
Of yonder Knight?

Ser. I konw not sir.

Rom. O she doth teach the Torches to burne bright:
Her Beauty hangs upon the cheek of night,
Like a rich Jewel in an Aethiops eare:
Beauty too rich for use, for earth too deare:
So shewes a Snowy Dove trooping with Crowses,
As yonder Lady ore her fellowes shewes?
The measure done. Ile watch her place of stand,
And touching hers, make blessed my rude hand.

Did my heart love till now, forswear it fight,
For I never saw true Beauty till this night.

Tib. This by his voyce, should be a Mountague.
Fetch me my Rapier, Boy, what dares the slave
Come hither covered with an antique face,
To scorne and scorne at our Solemnity?
Now by the stocke and Honour of my kin:
To strike him dead I hold in not a sin.

Cap. Why how now kinsman,
Wherefore storme you so?

Tib. Vncle this is a Mountague, our foe:
A Villaine that is hither come in spight,
To scorne at our Solemnity this night.

Cap. Young Romeo is it?

Tib. 'Tis he, that Villian Romeo.

Cap. Content thee gentle Coz, let him alone,
Abears him like a portly Gentleman:
And to say truth, Verona brags of him,
To be a vertuous and well govern'd youth:
I would not for the wealth of all the towne,
Here in my house doe him disparagement:
Therefore be patient, take no note of him,
It is my will, the which if thou respect,
Shew a faire presence, and put off these frownes,
An ill beseeming semblance for a Feast.

Tib. It fits when such a Villaine is a guest,
He not endure him.

Cap. He shall be endur'd.
What Goodmanboy, I say he shall, go to,
Am I the Maister here or you? go to,
Youle not endure him, God shall mend my soule,
Youle make a Mutiny among the Guests:
You will set cocke a hoope, youle be the man?

Tib. Why Vncle 'tis a shame.

Cap. Go to, go to.
You are a sawcy Boy, 'tis so indeed?
This trick may chance to scath you, I know what,
You must contrary me, marry 'tis time.
Well said my hearts, you are a princex, goe,
Be quiet or more light, for shame,
He make you quiet. What, chearely my hearts.

Tib. Patience perforce, with wilfull choler meeting,
Makes my flesh tremble in their different greeting:
I will withdraw, but this intrusion shall
Now seeming sweet, conuert to bitter gall.

Rom. If I prophane with my unworthiest hand,
This holy shrine, the gentle sin is this,
My lips two blushing Pilgrims ready stand,
To smooth that rough touch, with a tender kisse.

Jul. Good Pilgrime,
You do wrong your hand too much,
Which mannerly devotion shewes in this,
For Saints have hands, that Pilgrimes hand, doe touch,
And palme to palme, is holy Palmers kisse.

Rom. Have not Saints lips, and holy Palmers too?

Jul. I Pilgrim, lips that they must use in prayer.

Rom. O then deare Saint let lips do what hands doe,
They pray (graunt thou) least faith turne to dispaire.

Jul. Saints doe not move,
Though graunt for prayers sake.

Rom. Then move not while my prayers effect doe take:
Thus from my lips, by thine my sin is purg'd.

Jul. Then have my lips the sin that they have tooke,

Rom. Sin from my lips! O trespasse sweetly vrg'd:
Give me my sin againe,

Jul. You kisse by 'th' booke.

Nur. Madam your Mother craves a word with you.

Rom. What is her Mother.

Nurse, Marry Batcheler,

Her Mother is the Lady of the house,
And a good Lady, and a wise, and Vertuous,
I Nur't her Daughter that you talke withall:
I tell you, he that can lay hold of her,
Shall have the chincks.

Rom. Is she a Capulet?

O deare account! My life is my foes debt.

Ben. Away, be gone, the sport is at the best.

Rom. I so I feare, the more is my unrest.

Cap. Nay Gentlemen prepare not to be gone,
We have a trifling foolish Banquet towards:
Is it e'ne so? why then I thanke you all.
I thanke you honest Gentlemen, good night:
More Torch'es here come on, then let's to bed.
Ah sirra, by my faie it waxes late.

He to my rest.

Exeunt.

Jul. Come hither Nurse,
What is yond Gentleman:

Nur. The Sonne and Heire of old Tyberio.

Jul. What's he that now is going out of doore?

Nur. Marry that I thinke be young Petruchio.

Jul. What's he that follows here that would not dance?

Nur. I know not.

Jul. Go aske his name; if he be married,
My grave is like to be my wedding bed.

Nur. His name is Romeo, and a Mountague,
The onely Sonne of our great Enemy.

Jul. My onely Lovesprung from my onely hate,
Too early seene, unknow, and knowne, too late,
Prodigious birth of Love it is to me,
That I must love a loathed Enemy.

Nur. What's this? what's this?

Jul. A rime, I learnd even now
Of one I dan't withall.

One calls within, Juliet.

Nur. Anon, anon:
Come let's away, the straungers all are gone.

Exeunt

Chorus:

Now old desire doth in his death-bed lye,
And young affection gapes to be his Heire,
That faire, for which Love gron'd for and would dye,
With tender Juliet matcht, is now not faire.
Now Romeo is beloved, and Loues againe,
A like bewitched by the charme of lookes:
But to his foe suppos'd he must complaine,
And she steale Loves sweet bait from fearefull hookes.
Being held a foe, he may not have accesse
To breath such vowes, as Lovers use to sweare;
And she as much in Love, her meanes much lesse,
To meete her new Beloved any where:
But passion lends them Power, time, meanes to meete,
Temp'ring extremities with extreame sweete.

Enter Romeo alone.

Rom. Can I goe forward when my heart is here?
Turne backe dull earth, and find my Centour out.

Enter Benvolio, with Mercutio.

Ben. Romeo, my Cozen Romeo, Romeo.

Mere. He is wife,

And on my life hath stolne him home to bed.

Ben. He ran this way, and leapt this Orchard wall.

Call good Mercutio:

Nay, He coniure too.

h h 2

Mer

Mer. Romeo, Humours, Madman, Passion, Lover,
 Appeare thou in the likenesse of a fight,
 Speake but one time, and I am satisfied:
 Cry me but ayme, Couply but Love and day,
 Speake to my goship Venus one faire wor,
 One Nickname for her purblind Sonne and her,
 Young Abraham Cupid he that shot so true,
 When King Cophetua lov'd the begger Maid,
 He heareth not, he stirreth not, he moveth not,
 The Ape is dead, and I must coniure him,
 I coniure thee by Rosalines bright eyes,
 By her high forehead, and her Scarlet lip,
 By her fine foote, Straight leg, and Quivering thigh,
 And the Demeanes, that there Adjacent lie,
 That in thy likenesse thou appeare to us.

Ben. And if he heare thee thou wilt anger him.

Mer. This cannot anger him, 't would anger him
 To raise a spirit in his Mistresse circle,
 Of some strange nature, letting it there stand
 Till she had laid it, and conjur'd it downe,
 That were some spight.

My invocation is faire and honest, and in his Mistris name
 I conjure onely but to raise up him.

Ben. Come, he hath hid himselfe among these Trees
 To be contorted with the Humorous night:
 Blind is his Love, and best befits the darke.

Mer. If Love be blind, Love cannot hit the marke,
 Now will he sit under a Medler tree,
 And wish his Mistresse were that kind of Fruite,
 As Maides call Medlers when they laugh alone.
 O Romeo that she were, O that she were
 An open, or thou a Poprin Peare,
Romeo goodnight, Ile to my Truckle bed,
 This Field-bed is too cold for me to sleepe,
 Come shall we go?

Ben. Go then, for 'tis in vaine to seeke him here —
 That meanes not to be found. Exeunt.

Rom. He ieafts at Scarres that never felt a wound,
 But soft, what light through yonder window breaks?
 It is the East, and Juliet is the Sunne,
 Arise faire Sun and kill the envious Moone,
 Who is already sicke and pale with greife,
 That thou her Maid art far more faire then she:
 Be not her Maid since she is envious,
 Her Vestall livery is but sicke and greene,
 And none but fooles do weare it, cast it off:
 It is my Lady, O it is my Love, O that she knew she were,
 She speakes, yet she saies nothing; what of that?
 Her eye discourses, I will answer it:
 I am too bold 'tis not to me she speakes:
 Two of the fairest starres in all the heaven,
 Hauing some businesse do entreat her eyes,
 To twinkle in their Spheres till they returne.
 What if her eyes were there, they in her head,
 The brightnesse of her cheeke would shame those starres,
 As day-light doth a Lampe, her eye in heaven,
 Would through the ayrie Region streame so bright,
 That Birds would sing and thinke it were not night:
 See how she leanes her cheeke upon her hand.
 O that I were a Glove upon that hand.
 That I might touch that cheeke.

Jul. Ay me.

Rom. She speakes.

Oh speake againe bright Angell, for thou art
 As glorious to this night being ore my head,
 As is a winged messenger of heaven

Vnto the white upturned wondering eyes
 Of mortalls that fall backe to gaze on him,
 When he bestrids the lazy puffing Clouds,
 And sailes upon the boosome of the ayre.

Jul. O Romeo, Romeo, wherefore art thou Romeo?
 Deny thy Father and refuse thy name:
 Or if thou wilt not, be but sworne my Love,
 And Ile no longer be a Capulet.

Rom. Shall I here more, or shall I speake at this?
Jul. 'Tis but thy name that is my Enemy:
 Thou art thy selfe, though not a Mountague,
 What's Mountague? it is nor hand nor foote,
 Nor arme, nor face, O be some other name
 Belonging to a man.

Whats in a name? that which we call a Rose,
 By any other word would smell as sweete,
 So Romeo would, were he not Romeo call'd,
 Retaine that deare perfection which he owes,
 Without that title Romeo, doffe thy name,
 And for thy name which is no part of thee,
 Take all my selfe,

Rom. I take thee at thy word:
 Call me but Love, and Ile be new baptiz'd,
 Hence forth I never will be Romeo.

Jul. What man art thou, that thus bescreen'd in night
 So stumlest on my counsell?

Rom. By a name,
 I know not how to tell thee who I am:
 My name deare Saint, is hatefull to my selfe,
 Because it is an Enemy to thee,
 Had I it written, I would teare the word,

Jul. My cares have yet not drunke a hundred words
 Of thy tongues uttering, yet I know the sound.
 Art thou not Romeo, and a Mountague?

Rom. Neither faire Maid, if either thee dislike,
Jul. How cam'st thou hither.

Tell me, and wherefore?
 The Orchard walls are high, and hard to climbe,
 And the place death, considering who thou art,
 If any of my kinsmen find thee here.

Rom. With Loves light wings
 Did I ore-perch these Walls,
 For stony limits cannot hold Love out,
 And what Love can do, that dars Love attempt:
 Therefore thy kinsmen are no stop to me.

Jul. If they doe see thee, they will murther thee.

Rom. Alacke there lies more perill in thine eye;
 Then twenty of their Swords, looke thou but sweete,
 And I am prooffe against their enmity.

Jul. I would not for the world they saw thee here.

Rom. I have nights cloake to hide me from their eyes
 And but thou love me, let them finde me here,
 My life were better ended by their hate,
 Then death proroged wanting of thy Love.

Jul. By whose direction found'st thou out this place?

Rom. By Love that first did prompt me to enquire,
 He lent me counsell, and I lent him eyes,
 I am no Pylot, yet wert thou as far
 As that vast-shore: wash'd with the farthest Sea,
 I should aduenture for such Marchandise,

Jul. Thou knowest the maske of night is on my face,
 Else would a Maiden blush bepaint my cheeke,
 For that which thou hast heard me speake to night,
 Faine would I dwell on forme, faine, faine, deny
 What I have spoke but farewell Complements Doe'st thou Love? O I know thou wilt say I,

And

And I will take thy word, yet if thou swear'st,
Thou maiest prove false at Louers perjuries
They say love laughs, oh gentle Romeo,
If thou dost Love, pronounce it faithfully:
Or if thou thinkest I am too quickly wonne,
Ile frowne and be peruerse, and say thee nay,
So thou wilt wooe: But else not for the world.
In truth faire Mountague I am too fond:
And therefore thou mayest thinke my haviour light,
But trust me Gentleman, Ile prove more true,
Then those that have more coyning to be strange,
I should have beene more strange I must confesse,
But that thou over heard'st ere I was ware
My true Loves passion, therefore pardon me,
And not impute this yeelding to light Love,
Which the darke night hath so discovered,

Rom. Lady, by yonder Moone I vow:
That tips with silver all these Fruite-tree tops.

Jul. O sweare not by the Moone, th'inconstant Moone,
That monthly changes in her circled Orbe,
Least that thy Love prove likewise variable.

Rom. What shall I sweare by?

Jul. Do not sweare at all:

Or if thou wilt sweare by thy gracious selfe,
Which is the God of my Idolatry,
And Ile beleve thee.

Rom. If my hearts deare love——

Jul. Well do not sweare although I ioy in thee,
I have no ioy of this contract to night,
It is too rash, too unadvis'd, too sodden,
Too like the lightning which doth cease to be
Ere, one can say, it lightens, Sweete good night:
This bud of Love by Summers ripening breath,
May prove a beauteous Flower when next we meete:
Goodnight: goodnight, as sweete repose and rest,
Come to thy heart, as that within my breast.

Rom. O wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied?

Jul. What satisfaction can'st thou have to night?

Rom. Th'exchange of thy Loves faithfull vow of mine,

Jul. I gave thee mine before thou did'st request it:
And yet I would it were to give againe,

Rom. Would'st thou withdraw it,
For what purpose Love?

Jul. But to be franke and give it thee againe,
And yet I wish but for the thing I have,
My bounty is as boundlesse as the Sea,
My Love as deepe, the more I give to thee
The more I have, for both are Infinite.
I heare some noyse within deare Love adue.

Cal's within.

Anon good Nurse, sweet Mountague be true:
Stay but a little, I will come againe.

Rom. O blessed blessed night, I am afeard
Being in night, all this is but a dreame,
Too flattering sweet to be substantiall.

Jul. Three words deare Romeo,
And goodnight indeed,
If that thy bent of Love be Honourable,
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to morrow,
By one that Ile procure to come to thee,
Where and what time thou wilt performe the right,
And all my Fortunes at thy foote Ile lay,
And follow thee my Lord throughout the world.

Within: Madam.

I come, anon: but if thou meanest not well,
I do beseech thee.

Within: Madam

(By and by I come)
To cease thy strife, and leave me to my griefe,
To morrow will I send.

Rom. So thrive my soule. —

Jul. A thousand times good night.

Exit.

Rom. A thousand times the worse to want thy light,
Love goes toward Love as schoole-boys from their books
But Love from Love, towards schoole with heavy looks,

Enter Juliet againe.

Jul. Hilt Romeo hilt: O for a Falkners voice,
To lure this Tassell gentle backe againe,
Bondage is hoarse, and may not speake aloud,
Else would I teare the Cave where Eccho lies,
And make her ayry tongue more hoarse, then with
The repetition of my Romeo,

Rom. It is my soule that calls upon my name.
How silver sweete, found Lovers tongues by night,
Like softest Musicke to attending eares.

Jul. Romeo.

Rom. My sweete.

Jul. What a clocke to morrow
Shall I send to thee?

Rom. By the houre of nine.

Jul. I will not faile, 'tistwenty yeares till then,
I have forgot why I did call thee backe,

Rom. Let me stand here till thou remember it.

Jul. I shall forget, to have the still stand there,
Remembring how I Love thy company.

Rom. And Ile still stay, to have thee still forget,
Forgetting any other name but this.

Jul. 'Tis almost morning, I would have thee gone,
And yet no further then a wantons Bird,
That let's it hop a little from his hand,
Like a poore prisoner in his twisted Gyves,
And with a silken thred plucks it againe,
So loving lealous of his liberty.

Rom. I would I were thy bird.

Jul. Sweet so would I,
Yet I should kill thee with much cherishing:
Goodnight, goodnight.

Rom. Parting is such sweete sorrow,
That I shall say goodnight, till it be morrow.

Jul. Sleepe dwell vpon thine eyes, peace in thy breast
Exit.

Rom. Would I were sleepe and peace so sweet to rest,
The gray ey'd morne smiles on the frowning night,
Checking the Easterne Clouds with streaks of light,
And darkenesse fleckel'd like a drunkard reeles,
From forth dayes pathway, made by Titans wheeles.
Hence wil I to my ghostly Friers close Cell,
His helpe to crave, and my deare hap to tell.

Exit.

Enter Frier alone with a basket.

Fri. Now ere the Sun advance his burning eye,
The day to cheere, and nights danke dew to dry,
I must upfill this Oser Cage of ours,
With balefull weedes, and precious iuiced flowers,
The earth that's Natures mother, is her Tombe,
What is her burying grave that is her wombe:
And from her wombe children of divers kind

We sucking on her naturall bosome find:
Many for many vertues excellent:
None but for some, and yet all different.
Omnickle is the powerfull grace that lies
In Plants, Hearbs, stones, and their true qualities:
For nought so vile, that on the earth doth live.
But to the earth some speciall good doth give.
Nor ought so good, but strain'd from that faire vse,
Revolts from true birth, stumbling on abuse.
Vertue it selfe turnes vice being misapplied.
And vice sometime by action dignified.

Enter Romeo.

Within the infant rin'd of this weake flower,
Poyson hath residence, and medicine power:
For this being smelt, with that part cheares each part,
Being tasted slayes all fences with the heart.
Two such oppos'd Kings encampe them still,
In man as well as Hearbs grace and rude will:
And where the worser is predominant,
Full soone the Canker death eateth up that Plant,

Rom. Good morrow Father.

Fri. Benedicite.

What early tongue so sweet salutes them?
Young Sonne, it argues a distemper'd head,
So soone to bid good morrow to thy bed;
Care keeps his watch in every old mans eye,
And where Care lodgeth, sleepe will never lye:
But where unbrused youth with unstuff'd braine
Doth couch his lims, there, golden sleepe doth raigne;
Therefore thy earliness doth me assure,
Thou art uprouz'd with some distemperature;
Or if not so, then here I hit it right.

Our Romeo. hath not beene in bed to night.

Rom. That last is true, the sweeter rest was mine.

Fri. God pardon sin: wast thou with Rosaline?

Rom. With Rosaline, my ghostly Father? No,
I have forgot that name, and that names woe.

Fri. That's my good Son, but where hast thou bin then?

Rom. Ile tell thee ere thou aske it me agen:

I have beene feasting with mine enemy,
Where on a sudden one hath wounded me,
That's by me wounded: both our remedies
Within thy helpe and holy phisicke lies:
I beare no hatred, blessed man: for loe
My intercession likewise steads my foe.

Fri. Be plaine good Son, rest homely in thy drift,
Ridling confession, finds but ridling shrift.

Rom. Then plainly know my hearts deare Love is set,
On the faire daunger of rich Capulet:

As mine on hers, so hers is set on mine;
And all combin'd, save what thou must combine
By holy marriage: when and where, and how,
We met, we wooed, and made exchange of vow:
Ile tell thee as we passe, but this I pray,
That thou consent to marry us to day.

Fri. Holy S, Francis, what a change is here?
Is Rosaline that thou didst Love so deare
So soone forsaken? young mens Love then lies
Not truely in their hearts, but in their eyes.
Iesu Maria, what a deale of brine
Hath wast thy fallow cheekes for Rosaline?
How much salt water throwne away in wast,
To season Love that of it doth not tast.

The Sun not yet thy sighes, from heaven cleares,
Thy old grones yet ring in my auncient eares:
Lo here upon thy cheek the staine doth sit,

Of an old teare that is not washt off yet:

If ere thou wast thy selfe, and these woes thine.

Thou and these woes, were all for Rosaline.

And art thou chang'd? pronounce this sentence then
Women may fall, when there's no strength in men,

Rom. Thou chid'st me oft for loving Rosaline.

Fri. For doting not for loving pupill mine.

Rom. And bad'st me bury Love.

Fri. Not in a grave,

To lay one in another out to have.

Rom. I pray thee chide me not, her I Love now
Doth grace for grace, and Love for Love allow:
The other did not so.

Fri. O she knew well,

Thy Love did read by rote, that could not spell:

But come young waverer, come goe with me,
In one respect. Ile thy assistant be:

For this alliance may so happy prove,

To turne your household rancord to pure Love.

Rom. O let us hence, I stand on sudden haft.

Fri. Wisely and slow, they stumble that run fast.

Exeunt.

Enter Benvolio and Mercutio.

Mer. Where the devile should this Romeo be? came he not home to night?

Ben. Not to his Fathers, I spoke with his man.

Mer. Why that same pale hard-barted wench, that Rosaline torments him so, that he will sure run mad.

Ben. Tybalt, the kinsman to old Capulet, hath sent a Letter to his Fathers house.

Mer. A challenge on my life.

Ben. Romeo will answere it.

Mer. Any man that can write, may answere a Letter.

Ben. Nay he will answere the Letters Maister how he dares, being dared.

Mer. Alas poore Romeo, he is already dead, stab'd with a white wenches blacke eye, runne through the eare with a Love song, the very pinne of his heart, cleft with the blind Bowe-boys-but-shaft, and is he a man to encounter
Tybalt?

Ben. Why what is Tybalt?

Mer. More then Prince of Cats. Oh hee's the Couragi-ous Captaine of Complements: he fights as you sing prick-song, keep time, distance, and proportion, he rests his minnion, one, two, and the third in your bosome: the very butcher of a filke button, a Duellist, a Duellist: a Gentleman of the very first house of the first and second cause: ah
the immortall Passado, the punto rever so, the Hay.

Ben. The what?

Mer. The Pox of such antique lispings affecting phan-tacies, these new tuners of accent: Iesu a very good blade, a very tall man, a very good whore. Why is not this ala-mentable thing Grandiure, that we should be thus afflicted with these strainge flies: these fashion Mongers, these pardon-mee's, who stand so much on the new form, that the cannot sit at ease on the old bench. O their bones, their bones.

Enter Romeo.

Ben. Here comes Romeo, here comes Romeo.

Mer. Without his Roe, like a dried Hering. O flesh, flesh, how art thou fishified? Now is he for the numbers that Petrarch flow'd in: Laura to his Lady was a kitchen wench, marry she had a better Love to berime her: Dido a dowdy, Cleopatra a Gipsie, Hellen and Hero, hildings and harlots: Thisby a gray eie or so, but not to the purpose
Signior Romeo, Bonjour, theres a French salutation to your French

French flop: you gave us the counterfeit fairely last night.
Romeo. Good morrow to you both, what counterfeit did I give you?

Mer. The slip sir, the slip, can you not conceive?

Rom. Pardon Mercutio, my businesse was great, and in such a case as mine, a man may straine courtesie.

Mer. That's as much as to say, such a case as yours constrains a man to bow in the hams.

Rom. Meaning to courtesie.

Mer. Thou hast most kindly hit it.

Rom. A most courteous exposition.

Mer. Nay, I am the very pinck of courtesie.

Rom. Pinke for flower.

Mer. Right.

Rom. Why then is my Pump well flow'r'd.

Mer. Sure wit, follow me this ieast, now till thou hast worne out thy Pump, that when the single sole of it is worne, the ieast may remaine after the wearing, sole-singular.

Rom. O single sol'd ieast,

Soly singular for the singlenesse.

Mer. Come betweene us good Benvolio, my wit faints.

Rom. Swits and spurs,

Swits and spurs, or Ile crie a match.

Mer. Nay, if our wits run the Wild-Goose chase, I am done: For thou hast more of the Wild-Goose in one of thy wits, then I am sure I have in my whole five. Was I with you there for the Goose?

Rom. Thou was never with me for any thing, when thou wast not there for the Goose.

Mer. I will bite thee by the eare for that iest.

Rom. Nay, good Goose bite not.

Mer. Thy wit is a very bitter-sweeting, it is a most sharpe sawce.

Rom. And is it not well serv'd into a sweet-Goose?

Mer. Oh here's a wit of Cheverell, that stretches from an ych narrow, to an eli broad.

Rom. I stretch it out for that word, broad, which added to the Goose, proves the farre and wide, abroad Goose.

Mer. Why is not this better now, then groning for Love, now art thou sociable, now art thou Romeo: now art thou what thou art, by Art as well as by Nature, for this driveling Love is like a great Naturall, that runs lolling up and downe to hide his bable in a hole.

Ben. Stop there, stop there.

Mer. Thou desir'st me to stop in my tale against the

Ben. Thou would'st else have made thy tale large. (haire.

Mer. O thou art deceiv'd, I would have made it short, or I was come to the whole depth of my tale, and meant indeed to occupy the argument no longer.

Enter Nurse and her man.

Rom. Here's goodly geare.
 A sayle, a sayle.

Mer. Two, two: a Shirt and a Smocke.

Nur. Peter?

Peter. Anon.

Nur. My Fan Peter?

Mer. Good Peter to hide her face:
 For her Fans the fairer face?

Nur. God ye good morrow Gentlemen.

Mer. God ye gooden faire Gentlewomen,

Nur. It is gooden?

Mer. 'Tis no lesse I tell you: for the bawdy hand of the Dyall is now upon the pricke of Noone.

Nur. Out upon you: what a man are you?

Rom. One Gentlewoman,
 That God hath made, himselfe to, mar.

Nur. By my troth it is said, for himselfe to, mar quotha Gentleman, can any of you tell me where I may find the young Romeo?

Romeo. I can tell you: but young Romeo will be older when you have found him, then he was when you sought him: I am the youngest of that name, for fault of a worse.

Nur. You say well.

Mer. Yea is the worst well.

Very well tooke. Ifaith, wisely, wisely,

Nur. If you be he sir,

I desire some confidence with you?

Ben. She will envie him to some Supper.

Mer. A baud, a baud, a baud. So ho.

Rom. What hast thou found?

Mer. No Hare sir, unlesse a Hare sir in a Lenten pie, that is something staie and hoare ere it be spent.
 An old Hare heare, and an old Hare hoare is very good meat in Lent.

But a Hare that is hoare is too much for a score, when it hoares ere it be spent.

Romeo. will you come to your Fathers? Weele to dinner thither.

Rom. I will follow you.

Mer. Farewell ancient Lady:

Farewell Lady, Lady, Lady.

Exit. Mercutio, Benvolio.

Nur. I pray you sir, what lawcie Merchant was this that was so full of his ropery?

Rom. A Gentleman Nurse, that loves to here himselfe talke, and will speake more in a minute, then he will stand to in a Moneth.

Nur. And a speake any thing against me, I le take him downe, and a were lustier then he is, and twenty such iacks: and if I cannot, Ile find those that shall: scurvie knave, I am none of his flurt-gills, I am none of his skaines mates and thou must stand by too and suffer every knave to use me at his pleasure.

Pet. I law no man use you at his pleasure: if I had, my weapon should quickly have beene out, I warrant you, I dare draw atloone as another man, if I see occasion in a good quarrell, and the law on my side.

Nur. Now afore God, I am so vext, that every part about me quivers, skurvy knave: pray you sir a word: and as I told you my young Lady bid me enquire you out, what she bid me say I will keepe to my selfe: but first let me tell ye, if ye should lead her in a fook's paradise, as they say, it were a very grosse kind of behaviour, as they say: for the Gentlewomen is yong: and therefore, if you should deale double with her, truly it were an ill thing to be offered to any Gentlewoman, and very weake dealing.

Rom. Nurse commend me to thy Lady and Mistresse, I, protest onto thee —

Nur. Good heart, and Ifaith I will tell her as much: Lord, Lord she will be a ioyfull woman.

Rom. What wilt thou tell her Nurse? thou dost not marke me?

Nur. I will tell her sir, that you do protest, which as I take it, is a Gentleman-like offer. (afterboone,

Rom. Bid her devise some meanes to come to shrift this And there she shall at Frier Lawrence Cell
 Beshriv'd and married: here is for thy paines.

Nur. No truly sir not a penny.

Rom. Goto I say you shall.

Nurse.

Nur. This afternoone fir? well she shall be there.

Ro. And stay thou good Nurse behind the Abbey wall,
Within this houre my man shall be with thee,
And bring the Cords made like a tackled staire,
Which to the high top gallant of my ioy.
Must be my conuoy in the secret night.
Farewell, be trusty and Ile quite thy paines:
Farewell, commend me to thy Miltresse.

Nur. Now God in heaven blesse thee: hark e you fir,

Rom. What saist thou my deare Nurse?

Nurse. Is your man secret, did you nere heare say two may keepe counsell putting one away.

Rom. I warrant thee my man as true as Steele.

Nur. Well fir, my Miltresse is the sweetest Lady, Lord, Lord, when 'twas a little prating thing. O there is a Noble man in Towne one Paris, that would faine lay knife aboard: but she good soule had as leewe see a Toade, a very Toade as see him: I anger her sometimes, and tell her that Paris is the properer man but Ile warrant you, when I say so shee, lookes as pale as any clout in the verfall world.
Doth not Rosemary and Romeo begin both with a letter?

Rom. I Nurse, what of that? Both with an R

Nur. A mocker that's the dogs name. R. is for the no,
I know it begins with some other letter, and she hath the prettiest sententious of it, of you and Rosemary, that it would do you good to heare it.

Rom. Commend me to thy Lady.

Nur. I a thousand times. Peter?

Pet. Anon.

Nur. Before and apace. Exit Nurse and Peter.

Enter Juliet.

Jul. The clocke strooke nine, when I did send the Nurse,
In halfe an houre she promised to returne,
Perchance she cannot meete him: that's not so:
Oh she is lame, Loves Herauid should be thoughts,
Which ten times faster glides then the Sunnes beames,
Driving backe shadowes over lowring hills.
Therefore do nimble Pinion'd Doves draw Love,
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings:
Now is the Sun upon the highmost hill
Of this daies iourney, and from nine till twelve,
I three long houres, yet she is not come:
Had she affections and warme youthfull blood,
She'd be as swift in motion as a ball,
My words would bandy her to my sweete Love,
And his to me, but old folkes,
Many faine as they were dead,
Vnwiely, flow, heavy, and pale as lead.

Enter Nurse.

O God she comes, O hony Nurse what newes?
Hast thou met with him? send thy man away.

Nur. Peter stay at the gate,

Jul. Now good sweet Nurse:

O Lord why lookes thou sad?
Though newes, be sad, yet tell them merrily.
If good thou sham'st the musicke of sweete newes,
By playing it to me, with so sower a face.

Nur. I am a weary, give me leave a while,
Fie how my bones ake, what a iaunt have I had?

Jul. I would thou had'st my bones and I thy newes:
Nay come I pray the speake, good Nurse speake.

Nur. Iesu what hast? can you not stay a while?
Do you not see I am out of breath?

Jul. How art thou out of breath, when thou hast breath
To say to me, that thou art out of breath?
The excuse that thou dost make in this delay,

Is longer then the tale thou dost excuse.
Is thy newes good or bad? answer to that,
Say either and Ile stay the circumstance:
Let me be satisfied, ist good or bad?

Nur. Well, you have made a simple choice, you know not how to chuse a man: Romeo, no not he though his face be better then any mans, yet his legs excels all mens, and for a hand, and a foote, and a bawdy, though they be not to be talkt on, yet they are past compare: he is not the flower of courtesie, but I warrant him as gentle a Lambe: go thy waies wench, serve God, what have you din'd at home.

Jul. No no: but all this did I know before
What saies he of our marriage? what of that?

Nur. Lord how my head akes, what a head have I:
It beates as it would fall in twenty peeces.

My backe a tother side: O my backe, my backe:
Besheew your heart for sending me about
To catch my death with iaunting up and downe.

Jul. Ifaith I am sorry that thou art so ill,
Sweete sweete, sweete Nurse, tell me what saies my Love?

Nur. Your Love sayes like an honest Gentleman,
And a courteous, and a kind, and a handsome,
And I warrant a vertuous: where is your Mother?

Jul. Where is my Mother?
Why she is within where should she be?
How odly thou repli'st:
Your Love saies like an honest Gentleman:
Where is my Mother?

Nur. O Gods Lady deare,
Are you so hot? marry come vp I trow,
Is this the Poultris for my aking bones?
Hence forward do your messages your selfe.

Jul. Heere's such a coile, come what saies Romeo?

Nur. Have you got leave to go to shrift to day?

Jul. I have.

Nur. Then high you hence to Frier Lawrence Cell,
There stiaes a Husband to make you a wife:
Now comes the wanton blood up in your cheekes,
The'le be in Scarlot straight at any newes:
Hie you to Church, I must another way,
To fetch a Ladder by the which your Love:
Must climbe a birds nest Soone when it is darke:
I am the drudge, and toile in your delight:
But you shall beare the burthen soone at night,
Go Ile to dinner, hie you to the Cell.

Jul. Hie to high Fortune, honest Nurse, farewell.

Exeunt.

Enter Frier and Romeo

Fri. So smile the heavens vpon this holy act,
That after houres, with sorrow chide us not.

Rom. Amen, amen, but come what sorrow can,
It cannot counteruaile the exchange of ioy
That one short minute gives me in her sight:
Do thou but close our hands with holy words,
Then Love devouring death do what he dare,
It is enough. I may but call her mine.

Fri. These violent delights have violent ends,
And in their triumph die like fire and powder;
Which as they kisse consume. The sweetest honey
Is loathsome in his owne delicioufnesse,
And in the taste confounds the appetite.
Therefore Love moderately, long Love doth so,
Too swift arrives as tardy as too slow.

Enter Juliet.

Here comes the Lady. Oh so light a foot
Will nere weare out the everlasting flint;

A Lover may bestride the Gossamours,
That ydles in the wanton Summer ayre,
And yet not fall, so light is vanity.

Jul. Good even to my gostly Confessor.

Fri. Romeo shall thanke thee Daughter for us both.

Jul. As much to him, else in his thanks too much.

Rom. Ah Juliet, if the measure of thy ioy
Be heapt like mine, and that thy skill be more
To blason it, then sweeten with thy breath
This neighbour ayre, and let rich musickes tongue,
Vnfold the imagin'd happinesse that both
Receive in either, by this deere encounter.

Jul. Conceit more rich in matter then in words,
Braggs of his substance, not of Ornament:
They are but beggers that can count their worth,
But my true Love is growne to such excesse,
I cannot sum up some of halfe my wealth.

Fri. Come, come with me, & we will make short worke,
For by your leaues, you shall not stay alone,
Till holy Church incorporate two in one. Exeunt.

Enter Mercutio, Benuolio, and men.

Ben. I pray thee good Mercutio lets retire,
The day is hot, the Capulets abroad:
And if we meet, we shall not scape a brawl, for now these hot dayes, is the mad blood stirring

Mer. Thou art like one of those fellowes, that when he enters the confines of a Tauerne, claps me his Sword vpon the Table, and sayes, God send me no need of thee: and by the operation of the second cup, draws him on the Drawer, when indeed there is no need.

Ben. Am I like such a Fellow?

Mer. Come, come, thou art as hot a Iacke in thy mood, as any in Italy: and alioone moved to be moody, and al-
soone moody to be mov'd,

Ben. And what too?

Mer. Nay, and there were two such, we should have none shortly, for one would kill the other: thou, why thou wilt quarrell with a man that hath a haire more, or a haire lesse in his beard, then thou hast: thou wilt quarrell with a man for cracking Nuts, having no other reason, but because thou hast hassell eyes; what eye, but such an eye, would spy out such a quarell? thy head is as full of quarrels, as an egge is full of meat, and yet thy head hath bin beaten as adde as an egge for quarreling: thou hast quarrel'd with a man for cosing in the street, because he hath wakened thy Dog that hath laine asleepe in the Sun. Did'st thou not fall out with a Tailor for wearing his new Doub-let before Easter? with another, for tying his new shooes with old Riband, and yet thou wilt Tutor me from quarrelling?

Ben. And I were so apt to quarrell as thou art, any man should buy the Fee-simple of my life, for an houre and a quarter.

Mer. The Fee-simple? O simple.

Enter Tybalt, Petruchio, and others.

Ben. By my head here come the Capulets,

Mer. By my heede I care not,

Tib. Follow me close, for I will speake to them.
Gentlemen, Good den, a word with one of you.

Mer. And but one word with one of us? couple it with something, make it a word and a blow.

Tib. You shall find me apt enough to that fir, and you will give me occasion.

Mercu. Could you not take some occasion without giving?

Tib. Mercutio thou confort'st with Romeo,

Mer. Consort? what dost thou make us Minstrels? and thou make Minstrels of us, looke to heare nothing but discords: here's my fiddlestick, here's that shall make you dance. Come consort.

Ben. We talke here in the publike haunt of men:
Either withdraw unto some private place,
Or reason coldly of your greivances:
Or else depart, here all eyes gaze on us.

Mer. Mens eyes were made to looke, and let them gaze:
I will not budge for no mans pleasure I.

Enter Romeo.

Tib. Well peace be with you fir, here comes my man.

Mer. But Ile be hang'd fir if he weare your Livery:
Marry goe before to field, heele be your follower,
Your worship in that sence, may call him man.

Tib. Romeo, the Love I beare thee, can afford
No better terme then this. Thou art a Villaine.

Rom. Tibalt, the reason that I have to love thee,
Doth much excuse the appertaining rage
To such a greeting;

Therefore farewell, I see thou know'st me not.

Tib. Boy, this shall not excuse the iniures
That thou hast done me, therefore turne and draw,

Rom. I do protest I never iniur'd thee,
But lov'd thee better then thou can'st devise:
Till thou shalt know the reason of my love,
And so good Capulet, which name I tender
As dearly as my owne, be satisfied.

Mer. O calme, dishonourable, vile submission!
Allastucatho carries is away.

Tibalt, you Rat-catcher, will you walke?

Tib. What woulds thou have with me?

Mer. Good King of Cats, nothing but one of your nine lives, that I meane to make bold withall, and as you shall use me hereafter dry beate the rest of the eight. Will you plucke your Sword out of his Pilcher by the eares? Make hast, least mine be about your eares ere it be out.

Tib. I am for you.

Rom. Gentle Mercutio, put thy Rapier up,

Mer. Come fir, your Passado.

Rom. Draw Benuolio beat downe their weapons:
Gentlemen, for shame forbear this outrage,
Tibalt, Mercutio, the Prince expressely hath Forbidden bandying in Verona streetes.
Hold Tybalt, good Mercutio.

Exit Tybalt

Mer. I am hurt.

A plague of both the houses, I am sped:
Is he gone and hath nothing?

Ben. What art thou hurt?

Mer. I, I, a scratch, a scratch, marry 'tis inough,
Where is my Page? go Villaine fetch a Surgeon,

Rom. Courage man, the hurt cannot be much,

Mer. No: 'tis not so deepe as a well, nor so wide as a Church doore, but 'tis inough, 'twill serue: aske for me tomorrow, and you shall find me a graue man. I am pepper'd
I warrant for this world: a plague of both your houses.
What, a Dog, a Rat, a Mouse, a Cat to scratch a man to death: a Braggart, a Rogue, a Villaine: that fights by the booke of Arichmeticke, why the deu'le came you betweene vs? I was hurt under your arme.

Rom. I thought all for the best.

Mer. Helpe me into some house Benuolio,
Or I shall faint: a plague a both your houses.
They have made wormes meate of me,

I have it, and soundly too your Houses. Exit.

Rom. This Gentleman the Princes neere Allie,
My very Friend hath got his mortall hurt
In my behalfe, my reputation stain'd
With Tybalt's slaunders, Tybalt that an houre
Hath beene my Cozin: O Sweet Juliet,
Thy Beauty hath made me Effeminate,
And in my temper softned Valours Steele.

Enter Benuolio.

Ben. O Romeo, Romeo, brave Mercutio's dead,
That Gallant spirit hath aspir'd the Cloudes,
Which too untimely here did scorne the earth.

Rom. This daies blacke Fate, on mo daies doe depend,
This but begins, the woe others must end.

Enter Tybalt.

Ben. Here comes the Furlous Tybalt backe againe.

Rom. He goes in triumph, and Mercutio slaine?

Away to heaven respective Lenity,
And fire and Fury, be my conduct now.
Now Tybalt take the Villaine backe againe
That late thou gav'st me, for Mercutio's soule,
Is but a little way about our heads,
Staying for thine to keepe him company:
Either thou or I, or both, must goe with him.

Tyb. Thou wretched Boy that didst consort him here,
Shalt with him hence.

Rom. This shall determine that.

They fight. Tybalt falls.

Ben. Romeo, away be gone:
The Citizens are up, and Tybalt slaine,
Stand not amaz'd, the Prince will Doome thee death
If thou art taken: hence, be gone, away.

Rom. O! I am Fortunes foole,

Ben. Why dost thou stay?

Exit Romeo.

Enter Citizens.

Citi. Which way ran he that kild Mercutio?
Tybalt that Murtherer, which way ran he?

Ben. There lies that Tybalt.

Citi. Vp sir go with me:

I charge thee in the Princes name obey.

Enter Prince, old Mountague, Capulet, their Wives and all.

Prin. Where are the vild beginners of this Fray?

Ben. O Noble Prince, I can discover all
The unluckie Mannage of this fatall brall:
There lies the man slaine by young Romeo,
That slew thy kinsman brave Mercutio.

Cap. Wi. Tybalt my Cozin? O my Brothers Child,
O Prince, O Cozin, Husband, O the blood is spild,
Of my deare kinsman, Prince as thou art true,
For blood of ours, shed blood of Mountague.
O Cozin, Cozin,

Prin. Benuolio, who began this Fray?

Ben. Tybalt here slaine, whom Romeo's hand did slay,
Romeo that spoke him faire, bid him bethinke
How nice the Quarrell was, and urg'd withall
Your high displeasure: all this uttered,
With gentle breath, calme looke, knees humbly bow'd
Could not take truce with the unruly spleene
Of Tybalt deafe to peace, but that he Tilts
With Peircing Steele at bold Mercutio's breast,
Who all as hot, turnes deadly point to point,
And with a Martiall scorne, with one hand beates
Cold death aside, and with the other sends
It backe to Tybalt, whose dexterity

Retorts it: Romeo he cries aloud,
Hold Friends, Friends part, and swifter then his tongue,
His able arme, beats downe their fatall points,
And twixt them rushes, underneath whose arme,
An enuious thrust from Tybalt, hit the life
Of stout Mercutio, and then Tybalt fled.
But by and by comes backe to Romeo,
Who had but newly entertained Revenge,
And too't they goe like lightning, for ere I
Could draw to part them, was stout Tybalt slaine:
And as he fell, did Romeo turne and fly:
This is the truth, or let Benuolio die.

Cap. Wi. He is a kinsman to the Mountague,
Affection makes him false, he speakes not true.
Some twenty of them fought in this blacke strife,
And all those twenty could but kill one life.
I beg for Iustice, which thou Prince must give:
Romeo slew Tybalt, Romeo must not live.

Prin. Romeo slew him, he slew Mercutio,
Who now the price of his deare blood doth owe.

Cap. Not Romeo Prince, he was Mercutio's Friend,
His fault concludes but, what the law should end,
The life of Tybalt.

Prin. And for that offence,
Immediately we doe exile him hence:
I have an interest in your hearts proceeding:
My blood for your rude braules doth ly a bleeding.
But Ile Amerce you with so strobg a fine,
That you shall all repent the losse of mine.
I will be deafe to pleading and excuses,
Nor teares, nor prayers shall purchase our abuses.
Therefore use none, let Romeo hence in hast,
Else when he is found, that houre is his last.
Beare hence this body, and attend our will:
Mercy but Murders, pardoning those that kill.

Exeunt.

Enter Juliet alone.

Jul. Gallop apace, you fiery footed steedes,
Toward Phabus lodging, such a Wagoner
As Phaeton would whip you to the west,
And bring in Cloudy night immediately,
Spred thy close Curtaine Love-performing night,
That run-awaies eyes may wincke, and Romeo
Leapt to these armes, untalkt of and unseene,
Lovers can see to doe their Amorous rights,
By their owne Beauties: or if Love be blind,
It best agrees with night: come civill night,
Thou sober suted Matron all in blacke,
And learne me how to loose a winnig match,
Plaid for a paire of stainlesse Maidenheads,
Hood my unman'd blood bayting in my Cheekes,
With thy blacke mantle, till strange Love grow bold,
Thinke true Love acted simple modesty:
Come night, come Romeo, come thou day in night,
For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night,
Whiter then new Snow on a Ravens backe:
Come gentle night, come loving blacke brow'd night.
Give me my Romeo, and when I shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little starres,
And he will make the Face of heaven so fine,
That all the world will be in Love with night,
And pay no worship to the Garish Sun.
O I have bought the Mansion of a Love,
But not posselt it, and though Lam sold,
Not yet enioy'd, so tedious is this day,
As is the night before some Festiuall.

To

To an impatient child that hath new robes
And may not weare them, O here comes my Nurse:
Enter Nurse with cords.

And she brings newes and every tongue that speakes
But Romeo's name, speakes heavenly eloquence:
Now Nurse, what newes? what hast thou there?
The Cords that Romeo bid thee fetch?

Nur. I, I, the Cords,

Jul. Ayme, what newes?
Why dost thou wring thy hands.

Nur. A welady hee's dead, hee's dead,
We are undone Lady, we are undone.
Alacke the day, hee's gone, hee's kil'd, hee's dead.

Jul. Can heaven be so envious?

Nur. Romeo can,

Though heaven cannot. O Romeo, Romeo,
Who ever would have thought it Romeo.

Jul. What diuell art thou,
That dost torment me thus?

This torture should be roar'd in dismall bell,
Hath Romeo slaine himselfe? say thou but I:
And that bare vowell I shall poyson more
Then the death-darting eye of Cockatrice,
I am not I, if there be such an I.

Or those eyes shot, that makes the answer I,
If he be slaine say I, or if not, no.

Briefe, sounds, determine of my weale or wo.

Nur. I saw the wound, I saw it with mine eyes
God save the marke, here on his manly brest.
A pittous Coarse, a bloody pittous Coarse:
Pale, pale as ashes, all bedawb'd in blood
All in gore blood I founded at the sight.

Jul. O breake my heart,

Poore Banckrout breake at once,
To prison eyes; nere looke on liberty.
Vile earth to earth resigne, end motion here,
And thou and Romeo presse one heavy beere.

Nur. O Tybalt, Tybalt, the best Friend I had:
O courteous Tybalt honest Gentlemen,
That ever I should live to see thee dead.

Jul. What storme is this that bowes so contrary?
Is Romeo slaugthred? and is Tybalt dead?
My dearest Cozen, and my dearer Lord:
Then dreadfull Trumpet sound the generall doome,
For who is living, if those two are gone?

Nur. Tybalt is gone, and Romeo banished,
Romeo that kil'd him, he is banished.

Jul. O God!

Nur. Did Romeo's hand shed Tybalts blood
It did, it did, alas the day, it did.

Jul. O Serpent heart, hid with a flowring face.

Did ever Dragon keepe so faire a Cave?

Beautifull Tyrant, fiend Angelicall:

Ravenous Dove, feather'd Raven,

Woluish-ravening Lambe,

Dispis'd substance of Divinest show:

Iust oppsite to what thou iustly seem'st,

A damned Saint, an Honourable Vallaine:

O Nature! what had'st thou to doe in hell,

When thou did'st bower the spirit of a fiend

In mortall paradise of such sweet flesh?

Wasever booke containing such vile matter

So fairely bound? O that deceit should dwell

In such a gorgeous Pallace.

Nur. There's no trust, no faith, no honesty in men,
All periur'd, all forsworne, all naught, all dissemblers,

Ah wher's my man? give me some Aqua-vitæ?
These griefes, these woes, these sorrowes make me old!
Shame come to Romeo.

Jul. Blister'd be thy tongue

For such a wish, he was not borne to shame:

Vpon his brow shame is asham'd to sit;

For 'tis a throane where Honour may be Crown'd

Sole Monarch of the univerrall earth:

O what a beast was I to chide him so?

Nur. Will you speake well of him,

That kil'd your Cozen?

Jul. Shall I speake ill of him that is my husband?

Ah poore my Lord, what tongue shall smooth thy name,

When I thy three houres wife have mangled it.

But wherefore Villaine did'st thou kill my Cozin?

That Villaine Cozen would have kil'd my husband:

Backe foolish teares, backe to your native spring,

Your tributary drops belong to woe,

Which your mistaking offer up to ioy:

My husband lives that Tybalt would have slaine,

And Tybalt dead that would have kil'd my husband:

All this is comfort, wherefore weepe I then?

Some word there was worser then Tybalts death

That mured me, I would forget it faine,

But oh, it presses to my memory,

Like damned guilty deedes to sinners minds,

Tybalt is dead and Romeo banished:

That banished, that one word banished,

Hath slaine ten thousand Tybalts: Tybalts death

Was woe inough if it had ended there:

Or if sower woe delights in fellowship,

And needly will be ranckt with other greifes,

Why followed not when she said Tybalts dead.

Thy Father or thy Mother, nay or both.

Which moderne lamentation might have mov'd.

But with a rere-ward following Tybalts death,

Romeo is banished to speake that word,

Is Father, Mother, Tybalt, Romeo, Juliet,

All slaine, all dead: Romeo is banished,

There is no end, no limit, measure, bound,

In that words death, no words can that woe sound.

Where is my Father and my Mother Nurse?

Nur. Weeping and wailing over Tybalts Coarse.

Will you go to them? I will bring you thither.

Jul. Wailh they his wounds with tears: mine shal be spent

When theirs are dry for Romeo's banishment.

Take up those Cords, poore rops you are beguil'd,

Both you and I for Romeo is exild:

He made you for a high way to my bed,

But I a Maide, dye Maiden widdowed.

Come Cord, come Nurse, Ile to my wedding bed,

And death not Romeo, take my Maiden head.

Nur. Hy to your Chamber, Ile find Romeo

To comfort you, I wot well where he is:

Harke ye your Romeo will be heere at night,

Ile to him, he is hid at Lawrence's Cell.

Jul. O find him, give this Ring to my true Knight,

And bid him come, to take his last farewell.

Exit.

Enter Friar, and Romeo.

Fri. Romeo come forth,

Come forth thou fearefull man.

Affliction is enamord of thy parts:

And thou art wedded to calamity.

Rom. Father what newes?

What

What is the Princes Doome?

What sorrow craves acquaintance at my hand,
That I yet know not?

Fri. Too familiar

Is my deare Sonne with such sowre Company:
I bring thee tydings of the Princes Doome.

Rom. What lesse then Doomesday,
Is the Princes Doome?

Fri. A gentler iudgement vanisht from his lips,
Not bodies death, but bodies banishment.

Rom. Ha, banishment? be mercifull, say death:
For exile hath more terror in his looke,
Much more then death: do not say banishment.

Fri. Here from Verona art thou banished:
Be patient, for the world is broad and wide.

Rom. There is no world without Verona walles,
But Purgatory, Torture, hell it selfe:
Hence banished, is banisht from the world,
And worlds exile is death. Then banished,
Is death, misteare'd, calling death banished,
Thou cut'st my head off with a golden Axe,
And smilest upon the stroke that murders me.

Fri. O deadly sin, O rude unthankfullnesse!
Thy fault our Law calles death, but the kind Prince
Taking thy part hath rusht aside the Law,
And turn'd that blacke word death, to banishment.
This is deare mercy, and thou see'st it not.

Rom. 'Tis Torture and not mercy, heaven is here
Where Juliet lives, and every Cat and Dog, and little Mousse, every unworthy thing
Live here in Heaven and may looke on her,
But Romeo may not. More Validity,
More Honourable state, more Courtship lives
In carrion Flies, then Romeo: they may seaze
On the white wonder of deare Juliet's hand,
And steale immortall blessing from her lips,
Who even in pure and vestall modesty
Still blush, as thinking their owne kisses sin.
This may Flies doe, when I from this must flie,
And saist thou yet, that exile is not death?
But Romeo may not, hee is banished.
Had'st thou no poyson mixt, no sharpe ground knife,
No sudden meane of death, though nere so meane,
But banished to kill me? Banished?

O Friar, the damned use that word in hell:
Howlings attend it, how hast thou the heart
Being a Divine, a Ghostly Confessor,
A Sin-Absolver, and my friend profest:

To mangle me with that word banished?

Fri. Fond Mad man, heare me speake.

Rom. O thou wilt speake againe of banishment.

Fri. Ile give thee Armour to keepe off that word,
Adversities sweet milke, Philosophy,
To comfort thee, though thou art banished.

Rom. Yet banished? hang up Philosophy:
Vnlesse Philosophie can make a Juliet,
Displant a Towne, reuerse a Princes Doome,
It helps not, it prevayles not, talks no more.

Fri. O then I see, that Madmen have no cares.

Rom. How should they,
When wisemen have no eyes?

Fri. Let me dispaire with thee of thy estate.

Rom. Thou can'st not speake of that thou dost not feelee,
Wert thou as young as Juliet my Love:
An houre but married, Tybalt murdered,
Doting like me, and like me banished,

Then mightest thou speake,
Then mightest thou teare thy hayre,
And fall upon the ground as I doe now,
Taking the measure of an unmade grave.

Enter Nurse, and knockes.

Frier. Arise one knockes,
Good Romeo hide thy selfe.

Rom. Not I,
Vnlesse the breath of Hearticke groanes
Mist-like infold me from the search of eyes.

Fri. Harke how they knocke
(Who's there) Romeo arise,
Thou wilt be taken stay a while stand up:

Run to my study: by and by, Gods will
What simplenesse is this: I come, I come,

Who knockes so hard?
Whence come you? what's your will?

Enter Nurse.

Nur. Let me come in.
And you shall know my errand:
I come from Lady Juliet.

Fri. Welcome then.

Nur. O holy Frier, O tell me holy Frier, Wher's my Ladies Lord? wher's Romeo?

Fri. There on the ground,
With his owne teares made druncke.

Nur. O he is even in my Mistresse cause,
Iust in her case, O wofull sympathy:
Pittious predicament, even so liles she,
Blubbring and weeping, weeping and blubbring,
Stand up, stand up, stand and you be a man,
For Juliet's sake, for her sake rise and stand:
Why should you fall into so deepe an O.

Rom. Nurse.

Nur. Ah fir, ah fir, death's the end of all.

Rom. Speak'st thou of Juliet? how is it with her?
Doth not she thinke me an old Murtherer,
Now I have stain'd the Childhood of our ioy,
With blood removed, but little from her owne?
Where is she? and how doth she? and what saies
My conceal'd Lady to our conceal'd Love?
Nur. Oh she sayes nothing fir, but weepes and weepes,
And now fells on her bed, and then startsup,
And Tybalt calls, and then on Romeo cries,
And then downe falls againe.

Ro. As if that name shot from the deadly leuell of a Gun,
Did murder her, as that names cursed hand
Murderd her kinsman. Oh tell me Frier, tell me,
In what vile part of this Anoramy
Doth my name lodge? Tell me, that I may sacke
The hatefull Mansion,

Fri. Hold thy desperate hand:
Art thou a man? thy forme cries ont thou art:
Thy teares are womanish, thy wild acts doe note
The unreasonable Fury of a beast.

Vnseemely woman, in a seeming man,
And ill beseeching beast in seeming both,
Thou hast amaz'd me. By my holy order,
I thought thy disposition better temper'd.
Hast thou slaine Tybalt? wilt thou slay thy selfe?
And slay thy Lady, that in thy lifelies,
By doing damned hate upon thy selfe?
Why rail'st thou on thy birth? the heaven and earth?

Since

Since birth, and heaven and earth, all three do meete
In thee at once, which thou at once would'st loose
Fie, fie, thou sham'st thy shape, thy love, thy wit,
Which like a Viceroy abound'st in all:
And usest none in that true use indeed,
Which should bedecke thy shape, thy love, thy wit:
Thy Noble shape, is but a forme of waxe,
Digressing from the Valour of a man,
Thy deare Love tworne but hollow perjury,
Killing that Love which thou hast vow'd to cherish.
Thy wit, that Ornament, to shape and Love,
Mis-shapen in the conduct of them both:
Like powder in a skilless Souldiers flaske,
Is set a fire by thine owne ignorance,
And thou dismembred with thine owne defence.
What, rowse thee man, thy Juliet is alive,
For whose deare sake thou wast but lately dead.
There art thou happy. Tybalt would kill thee,
But thou slew'st Tybalt, there art thou happy too
The law that threatned death became thy Friend,
And turn'd it to exile, there art thou happy.
A packe of blessings light upon thy backe,
Happinesse Courts thee in her best array,
But like a mis-shapen and a sullen wench,
Thou putt'st up thy Fortune and thy Love:
Take heed, take heed, for such die miserable.
Goe get thee to thy Love as was decreed,
Ascend her Chamber, hence and comfort her:
But looke thou stay not till the watch be set,
For then thou canst not passe to Mantua,
Where thou shalt live till we can finde a time
To blaze your marriage, reconcile your Friends,
Beg pardon of thy Prince, and call thee backe,
With twenty hundred thousand times more joy
Then thou went'st forth in lamentation.
Goe before Nurse, commend me to thy Lady,
And bid her hasten all the house to bed,
Which heavy sorrow makes them apt unto.

Romeo is comming.

Nur. O Lord, I could have staid here all night,
To heare good counsell: oh what learning is!
My Lord Ile tell my Lady you will come.

Rom. Do so, and bid my Sweete prepare to chide,

Nur. Heere sir, a Ring she bid me give you sir:
Hee you, make hast, for it growes very late.

Rom. How well my comfort is reuiv'd by this.

Fri. Go hence.

Goodnight, and here stands a'l your state:
Either be gone before the watch be set,
Or by the breake of day disguis'd from hence,
Sojorne in Mantua, Ile find out your man,
And he shall signifie from time to time,
Every good hap to you that chaunces heere:
Give me thy hand, 'tis late, farewell, goodnight.

Rom. But that a joy past joy, calls out on me,
It were a grieve, so briefe to part with thee:
Farewell.

Exeunt.

Enter old Capulet, his Wife and Paris.

Cap. Things have falne out sir so unluckily,
That we have had no time to move our Daughter:
Looke you, she Lov'd her kinsman Tybalt dearely,
And so did I. Well, we were borne to die.
Tis very late, she'l not come downe to night:
I promise you, but for your company,

I would have bin a bed an houre ago.

Par. These times of wo, affoord no times to woo:
Madam goodnight, commend me to your Daughter.

Lad. I will, and know her mind early to morrow.
To night, she is mew'd up to her heavinesse.

Cap. Sir Paris, I will make a desperate tender
Of my Childes love: I thinke she will be rul'd
In all respects by me: nay more, I doubt it not,
Wife, go you to her ere you go to bed,
Acquaint her here, of my Sonne Paris Love,
And bid her, marke you me, on Wensday next,
But soft, what day is this?

Par. Monday my Lord.

Cap. Monday, ha ha: well Wensday is too soone,
A Thursday let it be: a Thursday tell her,
She shall be married to this Noble Earle:
Will you be ready? do you like this hast?
Weele keepe no great adoe, a Friend or two,
For harke you, Tybalt being slaine so late,
It may be thought we held him carelessly,
Being our kinsman, if we revell much:
Therefore weele have some halfe a dozen Friends,
And there an end. But what say you to Thursday?

Par. My Lord,

I would that Thursday were to morrow.

Cap. Well, get you gone, a Thursday, be it then:
Go you to Juliet ere you go to bed,
Prepare her wife, against this wedding day.
Farewell my Lord, light to my Chamber hoa,
Afore me, it is so late, that we may call it early by and by,
Goodight.

Exeunt.

Enter Romeo and Juliet aloft.

Iu. Wilt thou be gone?

It was the Nightingale, and not the Larke,
That pier'd the fearefull hollow of thine eare,
Nightly she sings on yond Pomgranet tree,
Believe me Love, it was the Nighningale.

Rom. It was the Larke the Herald of Morne:
No Nightingale: looke Love what envious streakes
Do lace the severing Cloudes in yonder East:
Nights Candies are burnt out, and locond day
Stands tipto on the mistie Mountaine tops,
I must be gone and live, or stay and die.

Iu. Yond light is not day light, I know it I:
It is some Meteor that the Sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a Torch-bearer,
And light thee on thy way to Mantua.

Therefore stay yet, thou need'st not to be gone,

Rom. Let me be tane, let me be put to death,
I am content, so thou wilt have it so.
Ile say yon gray is not the mornings eye,
Tis but the pale reflexe of Cinthias brow.
Nor that is not the Larke whose notes do beate
The vaulty heaven so high above our heads,
I have more care to stay, then will to go:
Come death and welcome, Juliet wils it so.
How ist my soule, lets talke, it is not day.

Iu. It is, it is, hie hence be gone away:
It is the Larke that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh Discords, and unpleasing Sharpes:
Some say the Larke makes sweete Division;
This doth not so: for she divideth us.
Some say, the Larke and loathed Toad change eyes,
O now I would they had chang'd voyces too:

Since arme from arme that voyce doth us affray,
Hunting thee hence, with Huntſ-up to the day,
O now be gone, more light and it light growes.

Rom. More light & light, more darke & darke our woes.

Enter Madam and Nurse.

Nur. Madam.

Jul. Nurse.

Nur. Your Lady Mother is comming to your chamber,
The day is broke, be wary, looke about,

Jul. Then window let day in, and let life out.

Rom. Farewell, farewell, one kisse and Ile descend.

Jul. Art thou gone for Love, Lord, ah Husband, Friend,
I muſt heare from thee every day in the houre,
For in a minute there are many dayes,
O by this count I ſhall be much in yeares,
Ere I againe behold my Romeo.

Rom. Farewell:

I will omit no opportunity,
That may convey my greetings Love, to thee.

Jul. O thinkeſt thou we ſhall ever meet againe?

Rom. I doubt it not, and all theſe woes ſhall ſerve
For ſweet diſcourſes in our time to come.

Jul. O God! I have an ill Divining ſoule,
Me thiakes I ſee thee now, thou art ſo lowe,
As one dead in the Bottome of a Tombe,
Either my eye-ſight failes, or thou look'ſt pale.

Rom. And truit me Love, in my eye ſo do you:
Dry ſorrow drinckes our blood. Adue, adue.

Jul. O Fortune, Fortune, all men call thee fickle,
If thou art fickle, what doſt thou with him
That is renown'd for faith? be fickle Fortune:
For then I hope thou wilt not keepe him long,
But ſend him backe.

Enter Mother.

Lad. Ho Daughter, are you up?

Jul. Who iſt that callſ? Is it my Lady Mother?
Is ſhe not downe ſo late, or up ſo early?
What unaccuſtom'd cauſe procures her hither?

Lad. Why how now Juliet?

Jul. Madam I am not well.

Lad. Evermore weeping for your Cozins death?
What wilt thou waſh him from his grave with teares?
And if thou could'ſt, thou could'ſt not make him live:
Therefore have done, ſome grieve ſhewes much of Love,
But much of grieve, ſhewes ſtill ſome want of wit.

Jul. Yet let me weepe, for ſuch a feeling loſſe.

Lad. So ſhall you feele the loſſe, but not the Friend
Which you weepe for.

Jul. Feeling ſo the loſſe,

I cannot chule but ever weepe the Friend.

Lad. Well Girle, thou weep'ſt not ſo much for his death,
As that the Villaine lives which ſlaughter'd him.

Jul. What Villaine, Madam?

Lad. That ſame Villaine Romeo.

Jul. Villaine and he, be many Miles aſunder:
God pardon him, I doe with all my heart,
And yet no man like he, doth grieve my heart.

Lad. That is becauſe the Traitor lives.

Jul. I Madam from the reach of theſe my hands:
Would none but I might venge my Cozins death.

Lad. We will have vengeance for it, feare thou not.
Then weepe no more, Ile ſend to one in Mantua,
Where that ſame baniſht Run-agate doth live,
Shall give him ſuch an unaccuſtom'd dram,
That he ſhall ſoone keepe Tybalt company:
And then I hope thou wilt be ſatisfied.

Jul. Indeed I never ſhall be ſatisfied
With Romeo, till I behold him. Dead
Is my poore heart ſo for a kinsman vext:
Madam if you could find out but a man
To beare a poiſon, I would temper it;
That Romeo ſhould upon receipt thereof,
Soone ſleepe in quiet. O how my heart abhors
To heare him nam'd, and cannot come to him,
To wreake the Love I bore my Cozin, Tybalt
Vpon his body that hath ſlaughter'd him.

Mo. Find thou the meanes, and Ile find ſuch a man,
But now Ile tell thee joyfull tidings Girle,

Jul. And joy comes well, in ſuch a needy time,
What are they, I beſeech your Ladyſhip?

Mo. Well, well, thou haſt a carefull Fa her Child?
One who to put thee from thy heavineſſe,
Hath ſorted out a ſudden day of joy,
That thou expectſt not, nor I looke not for.

Jul. Madam in happy time, what day is thiſ?

Mo. Marry my Child, early next Thursday morne,
The gallant, young, and Noble Gentleman,
The County Paris at Saint Peters Church,
Shall happily make thee a joyfull Bride.

Jul. Now by Saint Peters Church, and Peter too,
He ſhall not make me there a joyfull Bride.

I wonder at this haſt, that I muſt wed
Ere he that ſhould be Husband comes to woe.
I pray you tell my Lord and Father Madam
I will not marry yet, and when I doe, I ſweare
It ſhall be Romeo, whom you know I hate
Rather then Paris. Theſe are newes indeed.

Mo. Here comes your Father, tell him ſo your ſelfe,
And ſee how he will take it at you hands,

Enter Capulet and Nurse.

Cap. When the Sun ſets, the earth doth drizzle dew;
But for the Sunſet of my Brothers Sonne,
It raines downright.

How now? A Conduit Girle, what ſtill in teares?
Ever more ſhowring in one little body?
Thou counterfeits a Barke, a Sea, a Wind:
For ſtill thy eyes, which I may call the Sea,
Do ebbe and flow with teares, the Barke thy body
Sailing in this ſalt floud, the windes thy ſighes,
Who raging with the teares and they with them,
Without a ſudden calme will over ſet
Thy tempeſt-tossed body. How now wife?
Have you delivered to her our decree?

Lad. I ſir;

But ſhe will none, ſhe gives you thanks,
I would the foole were married to her grave.

Cap. Soft, take me with you, take me with you wife.
How, will ſhe none? doth ſhe not give us thanks?
Is ſhe not proud? doth ſhe not count her bleſt,
Vnworthy as ſhe is, that we have wrought
So worthy a Gentleman, to be her Bridegroom?

Jul. Not proud you have,

But thankfull that you have:
Proud can I never be of what I have,
But thankfull even for hate, that is meant Love.

Cap. How now?

How now? Chopt Logicke? what is thiſ?
Proud, and I thanke you: and I thanke you not.
Thanke me no thankings, nor proud me no prouds,
But ſettle your fine joints 'gainſt Thursday next,

To go with Paris to Saint Peters Church:
Or I will drag thee, on a Hurdle thither.
Out you greene sicknelle carrion, out you baggage,
You tallow face.

Lad. Fie, fie, what are you mad?

Jul. Good Father, I beseech you on my knees
Heare me with patience, but to speake a word.

Fa. Hang thee young baggage, disobedient wretch,
Itell thee what, get thee to Church a Thursday,
Or never after looke me in the face.

Speake not, reply not, do not answere me.
My fingers itch, wife: we scarce thought us blest,
That God had lent us but this onely Child,
But now I see this one is one too much,
And that we have a curse in having her:
Out on her Hilding.

Nur. God in heaven bleffe her,
You are too blame my Lord to rate her so.

Fa. And why my Lady wisdom? hold your tongue,
Good Prudence, smatter with your gossip, go.

Nur. I speake no treason,
O Godigoden,
May not one speake?

Fa. Peace you mumbling foole,
Vtter your gravity ore a Gossips bowle,
For here we need it not.

La. You are too hot.

Fa. Gods bread, it makes me mad:
Day, night, houre, tide, time, worke, play,
Alone in company, still my care hath bin
To have her matcht, and having now provided
A Gentleman of Noble Parentage,
Of faire Demeanes. Youthfull, and Nobly Allied,
Stuft as they say with Honourable parts,
Proportion'd as ones thought would wish a man.
And then to have a wretched puling foole,
A whining mammet, in her Fortunes tender,
To answer, Ile not wed, I cannot Love:
I am too young, I pray you pardon me.
But, and you will not wed, Ile pardon you.
Graze where you will, you shall not house with me:
Looke too't, thinke on't, I do not use to jest.
Thursday is neere, lay hand on heart, advise,
And you be mine. Ile give you to my Friend:
And you be not, hang, beg, starve, die in the streets,
For by my soule, Ile nere acknowledge thee,
Nor what is mine shall never do thee good:
Trust too't, be thinke you, Ile not be forsworne. Exit.

Jul. Is there no pitty fitting in the Cloudes,
That sees into the bottome of my griefe?
O sweet my Mother cast me not away,
Delay this marriage, for a month, a weeke,
Or if you do not, make the Bridall bed
In that dim Monument where Tybalt lies.

Mo. Talke not to me, for Ile not speake a word,
Do as thou wilt, for I have done with thee. Exit.

Jul. O God!
O Nurse, how shall this be prevented?
My Husband is on earth, my faith in heaven,
How shall that faith returne againe to earth,
Vlesse that Husband send it me from heaven,
By leaving earth? Comfort me, counsaile me:
Alacke, alacke, that heaven should practise stratagems
Vpon so soft a subject as my selfe.
What saist thou? hast thou not a word of joy?
Some comfort Nurse.

Nur. Faith here it is,
Romeo is banished, and all the world to nothing,
That he dares nere come backe to challenge you:
Or if he do, it needs must be by stealth.
Then since the case so stands as now it doth,
I thinke it best you married with the Count,
O hee's a Lovely Gentleman:
Romeo a dish-clout to him, an Eagle Madam
Hath not so greene, so quicke, so faire an eye
As Paris hath, beshrow my very heart,
I thinke you are happy in this second march,
For it excels your first: or if it did not,
Your first is dead, or 'twere as good he were,
As living here and you no use of him.

Jul. Speakest thou from thy heart?

Nur. And from my soule too,
Or else beshrew them both.

Jul. Amen.

Nur. What?

Jul. Well, thou hast comforted me marv'lous much,
Go in, and tell my Lady I am gone,
Having displeas'd my Father, to Lawrence Cell,
To make confession, and to be absolv'd.

Nur. Marry I will, and this is wisely done. Exit.

Jul. Auncient damnation, O most wicked fiend.
Is it more sin to wish me thus forsworne,
Or to dispraise my Lord with that same tongue
Which she hath prais'd him with above compare,
So many thousand times? Go Counsellor,
Thou and my bosome henchforth shall be twaine:
Ile to the Frier to know his remedy,
If all else faile, my selfe have power to die. Exeunt.

Enter Frier and Count Paris.

Fri. On Thursday sir? the time is very short.

Par. My Father Capulet will have it so,
And I am nothing slow to slack his halte.

Fri. You say you do not know the Ladies mind?
Vneven is the course, I like it not.

Pa. Immoderately she weepes for Tybalts death,
And therefore have I little talke of Love,
For Venus smiles not in a house of teares.
Now sir, her Father counts it dangerous
That she doth give her sorrow so much sway:
And in his wisdom, hasts our marriage,
To stop the inundation of her teares,
Which too much minded by her selfe alone,
May be put from her by society.

Now doe you know the reason of this haste?

Fri. I would I knew not why it should be slow'd.
Looke sir, here comes the Lady towards my Cell.

Enter Juliet.

Par. Happily met, my Lady and my wife.

Jul. That may be sir, when I may be a wife.

Par. That may be, must be Love, on Thursday next.

Jul. What must be shall be.

Fri. That's a certaine text.

Par. Come you to make confession to this Father?

Jul. To answer that, I should confesse to you.

Par. Do not deny to him, that you Love me.

Jul. I will confesse to you that I Love him.

Par. So will ye, I am sure that you Love me.

Jul. If I do so, it will be of more price,
Being spoke behind your backe, then to your face.

Par. Poore soule, thy face is much abus'd with teares.

Jul. The teares have got small victorie by that:
For it was bad inough before their spight.

Pa. Thou wrong'st it more then teares with that report

Jul. That is no flander sir, which is truth,
And what I spake, I spake it to my face.

Par. Thy face is mine, and thou hast flandered it.

Jul. It may be so, for it is not mine owne.

Are you at leifure, Holy Father now,
Or shall I come to you at evening Masse?

Fri. My leifure serves me penfivè daughter now.
My Lord I must intreat the time alone.

Par. God sheild: I should disturbe Devotion,
Juliet, on Thursday early will I rowse yee,
Till then adue, and keepe this holy kisse. Exit Paris.

Jul. O shut the doore, and when thou hast done so,
Come weepe with me, past hope, past care, past helpe.

Fri. O Juliet, I already know thy griefe,
It straines me past the compasse of my wits:
I heare thou must, and nothing may prorogue it,
On Thursday next be married to this Count,

Jul. Tell me not Frier that thou hearest of this,
Vnlesse thou tell me how I may prevent it:
If in thy wisedome, thou canst give no helpe,
Do thou but call my resolution wise,
And with' this knife, Ile helpe it presently.

God joynd my heart, and Romeos, thou our hands,
And ere this hand by thee to Romeo seal'd:

Shall be the Labell to another Deede,
Or my true heart with trecherous revolt.
Turne to another, this shall slay them both:
Therefore out of thy long experien't time,
Give me some present counsell, or behold
Twixt my extreames and me, this bloody knife
Shall play the umpire, arbitrating that,
Which the commission of thy yeares and art,
Could to no issue of true honour bring:

Be not so long to speake, I long to die,
If what thou speak'st, speake not of remedy.

Fri. Hold Daughter, I doe spie a kind of hope,
Which craves as desperate an execution,
As that is desperate which we would prevent.
If rather then to marry Countie Paris
Thou hast the strength of will to lay thy selfe,
Then is it likely thou wilt undertake
A thing like death to chide away this shame,
That coap't with death himsefe, to scape fro it:
And if thou dar'st, Ile give thee remedy.

Jul. O bid me leape, rather then marry Paris,
From of the Battlements of any Tower,
Or walke in theevish waies, or bid me lurke
Where Serpents are: chaine me with roaring Beares
Or hide me nightly in a Charnell house,
Orecovered quite with dead mens ratling bones,
With recky shankes and yellow chappleffe sculls:
Or bid me go into a new made grave,
And hide me with a dead man in his grave,
Things that to heare them told, have made me tremble,
And I will doe it without feare or doubt,
To live an vnstaind wife to my sweet Love.

Fri. Hold then: goe home be merry, give consent,
To marry Paris: wensday is to morrow,
To morrow night looke that thou lie alone,
Let not thy Nurse lie with thee in thy Chamber:
Take thou this Violl being then in bed,
And this distilling liquor drinke thou off,
When presently through all thy veines shall run,

A cold and drowfie humour: for no pulse
Shall keepe his native progresse, but surcease:
No warmth, no breath shall testifie thou livest,
The Roses in thy lips and cheekes shall fade
To mealy ashes, the eyes windowes fall
Like death when he shuts up the day of life:
Each part depriv'd of supple government,
Shall stiffe and starke, and cold appeare like death,
And in this borrowed likenesse of shrunk death
Thou shalt continue two and forty houres,
And then awake, as from a pleasant sleepe.
Now when the Bridegroom in the morning comes,
To rowse thee from thy bed, there art thou dead:
Then as the manner of our country is,
In thy best Robes uncover'd on the Beere,
Be borne to buriall in thy kindreds grave:
Thou shalt be borne to that same antient vault,
Where all the kindred of the Capulets lie,
In the meane time against thou shalt awake,
Shall Romeo by my Letters know our drift,
And hither shall he come, and that very night
Shall Romeo beare thee hence to Mantua.
And this shall free thee from this present shame,
If no inconstant toy nor womanish feare,
Abate thy valour in the acting it.

Jul. Give me, give me, O tell not me of feare.

Fri. Hold get you gone, be strong and prosperous:
In this resolve, Ile send a Frier with speed
To Mantua with my Letters to thy Lord.

Jul. Love give me strength,
And strength shall helpe afford:
Farewell deare father.

Exit.

Enter Father Capulet, Mother, Nurse, and serving men, two or three.

Cap. So many guests invite as here are writ,
Sirrah, go hire me twenty cunning Cookes.

Ser. You shall have none ill sir, for Ile trie if they can licke their fingers.

Cap. How canst thou trie them so?

Ser. Marry sir, tis an ill Cooke that cannot licke his owne fingers: therefore he that cannot licke his fingers goes not with me.

Cap. Go be gone, we shall be much unfurnisht for this time: what is my Daughter gone to Frier Lawrence?

Nur. I forsooth.

Cap. Well he may chance to do some good on her,
A peevish selfe-wild harlotry it is.

Enter Juliet.

Nur. See where she comes from shrift
With merry looke

Cap. How now my headstrong,
Where have you bin gadding?

Jul. Where I have learnt me to repent the sin
Of disobedient opposition:
To you and your behests, and am enjoynd
By holy Lawrence, to fall prostrate here,
To beg your pardon: pardon I beseech you,
Henceforward I am ever rul'd by you,

Cap. Send for the Count, goe tell him of this,
Ile have this knot knit up to morrow morning.

Jul. I met the youthfull Lord at Lawrence Cell,
And gave him what becomed Love I might,
Not stepping ore the bounds of modestie.

Cap. Why I am glad on't, this is well, stand up,

This

This is as't should be, let me see the County:
I marry go I say, and fetch him hither.
Now afore God, this reverend holy Frier,
All our whole Citty is much bound to him.

Jul. Nurse will you goe with me into my Clofet,
To helpe me sort such needfull ornaments,
As you thinke fit to furnish me to morrow?

Mo. No not till Thursday, there is time inough.

Fa. Go Nurse, go with her,
Weele to Church to morrow.

Exeunt Juliet and Nurse.

Mo. We shall be short in our provision,
Tis now neere night.

Fa. Tush, I will stirre about,
And all things shall be well, I warrant thee wife:
Gothou to Juliet, helpe to decke up her,
Ile not to bed to night, let me alone:
Ile play the hufwife for this once. What ho?
They are all forth, well I will walke my selfe
To County Paris, to prepare him up
Against to morrow, my heart is wondrous light,
Since this same way-ward Gyrle is so reclaim'd.

Exeunt Father and Mother.

Enter Juliet and Nurse.

Jul. I those attires are best, but gentle Nurse
I pray thee leaue me to my selfe to night:
For I have need of many Orysons,
To move the heavens to smile upon my state,
Which well thou know'st, is crosse and full of sin.

Enter Mother.

Mo. What are you busie ho? need you my help?

Jul. No Madam, we have cull'd such necessaries
As are behoouefull for our state to morrow:
So please you, let me now be left alone;
And let the Nurse this night sit up with you,
For I am sure, you have your hands full all,
In this so sudden businesse.

Mo. Goodnight.

Get thee to bed and rest, for thou hast need.

Exeunt.

Jul. Farewell:

God knowes when we shall meete againe.
I have a faint cold feare thrills through my veines,
That almost freezes up the heate of fire:
Ile call them backe againe to comfort me.
Nurse, what should she do here?
My dismall Sceau, I needs must act alone:
Come Viall, what if this mixture do not worke at all?
Shall I be married then to morrow morning?
No, no, this shall forbid it. Lie thou there,
What if it be a poison which the Frier
Subtilly hath ministred to have me dead,
Left in this marriage he should be dishonour'd,
Because he married me before to Romeo?
I feare it is, and yet me thinks it should not.
For he hath still benee tried a holy man.
How, if when I am laid into the Tombe,
I wake before the time that Romeo
Cometo redeeme me? There's a fearefull point:
Shall I not then be stifled in the Vault?
To whose foule mouth no healthsome ayre breaths in,
And there die strangled ere my Romeo comes.
Or if I live, is it not very like,
The horrible conceit of death and night,
Together with the terror of the place,
As in a Vault, an ancient receptacle,

Where for these many hundred yeeres the bones
Of all my buried Auncestors are packt,
Where bloody Tybalt, yet but greene in earth,
Lies festring in his shrow'd, where as they say,
At some houres in the night, Spirits resort:
Alacke, alack is it not like that I
So early waking, what with loathsome smells,
And shrikes like Mandrakes torne out of the earth,
That living mortals hearing them, run mad.
Or if I walke, shall I not be distraught,
Invironed with all these hideous feares,
And madly play with my forefathers joynts?
And plucke the mangled Tibalt from his shrow'd?
And in this rage, with some great kinsmans bone,
As (with a club) dash out my desperate braines.
O looke, me thinks I see my Cozins Ghost,
Seeking out Romeo that did spit his body
Vpon his Rapiers point: stay Tybalt, stay;
Rome, Romeo, Romeo, here's drinke: I drinke to thee.

Enter Lady of the house, and Nurse.

Lady. Hold,

Take these keies, and fetch more spices Nurse,

Nur. They call for Dates and Quinces in the Pastrie,

Enter old Capulet.

Cap. Come, stir, stir, stir,
The second Cocke hath Crow'd,
The Curphew Bell hath rung, tis three a clocke:
Looke to the bakte meates, good Angelica,
Spare not for cost.

Nur. Go you Cot-queane, go,
Get you to bed, faith youle be sicke to morrow
For this nights watching.

Cap. No not a whit. what? I have watcht ere now
All night for a lesse cause and neere beene sicke,

La. I you have bin a Mouse-hunt in your time,
But I will watch you from such watching now.

Exit Lady and Nurse.

Cap. A jealous hood, a jealous hood,
Now fellow, whats there?

Enter three or foure with spits, and logs, and baskets.

Fel. Things for the Cooke sir, but I know not what.

Cap. Make hast, make hast, sir ha, fetch drier Logs.
Call Peter, he will shew thee where they are.

Fel. I have a head sir, that will find out logs,
And never trouble Peter for the matter.

Cap. Masse and well said, a merry horson, ha,
Thou shalt be loggerhead, good Faith, tis day.

Play Musicke.

The County will be here with Musicke straight,
For so he said he would, I heare him neere,
Nurse, wife, what ho? what Nurse I say?

Enter Nurse.

Go waken Juliet, go and trim her up,
Ile go and chat with Paris: hie, make hast,
Make hast, the Bridegroome, he is come already:
Make hast I say.

Nur. Mistris, what Mistris? Juliet? Fast I warrant her.
Why Lambe, why Lady? fie you sluggabed,
Why Love I say? Madam, sweet heart: why Bride?
What not a word? You take your peniworths now.
Sleepe for a weeke, for the next night I warrant
The County Paris hath set up his rest,
That you shall rest but little, God forgive me:
Marry and Amen: how found is she a sleeper?

I must needs wake her: Madam, Madam, Madam,
I, let the County take you in your bed;
Heele fright you up yfaith. Will it not be?
What drest, and in your clothes, and downe againe?
I must needs wake you: Lady, Lady, Lady?
Alas, alas, helpe, helpe, my Ladys dead,
Oh weladay, that ever I was borne,
Some Aqua-vitæ ho, my Lord, my Lady?

Mo. What noise is heere?

Enter Mother.

Nur. O lamentable day.

Mo. What is the matter?

Nur. Looke, looke, oh heavy day.

Mo. O me, O me, my Child, my onely life:
Revive, looke up, or I will die with thee:
Helpe, helpe, call helpe.

Enter Father.

Fa. For shame bring Juliet forth, her Lord is come.

Nur. Shee's dead: deeeast, shee's dead: alacke the day.

M. Alacke the day, shee's dead, shee's dead, shee's dead.

Fa. Ha? Let me see her: out alas shee's cold,
Her blood is fetled and her joynts are stiffe:
Life and these lips have long bene separated:
Death lies on her like an untimely frost
Vpon the swetest flower of all the field.

Nur. O Lamentable day!

Mo. O wofull time.

Fa. Death that hath tane her hence to make me waile,
Ties up my tongne, and will not let me speake.

Enter Friar and the County.

Fri. Come, is the Bride ready to go to Church?

Fa. Ready to go, but never to returne.

O Sonne, the night before thy wedding day,
Hath death laine with thy wife: see there she lies,
Flower as she was, deflowred now by him.
Death is my Sonne in law, death is my Heire,
My Daughter he hath wedded. I will die,
And leave him all life living, all is deaths.

Fa. Have I thought long to see this mornings face,
And doth it give me such a sight as this?

Mo. Accur'd, unhappy, wretched, hatefull day,
Most miserable houre, that ere time saw
In lasting labour of his Pilgrimage.
But one, poore one, one poore and loving Child,
But one thing to rejoyce and solace in,
And cruell death hath catcht it from my sight.

Nur. O wo, O wofull, wofull, wofull day,
Most lamentable day, most wofull day,
That ever, ever, I did yet behold.
O day, O day, O day, O hatefull day,
Never was scene so blacke a day as this:
O wofull day, O wofull day.

Fa. Beguild, divorced, wronged, spighted, flaine,
Most detestable death, by thee beguil'd,
By cruell, cruell thee quite overthrowne:
O love, O life, not life, but lone in death.

Fa. Despis'd, distressed, hated, martir'd, kil'd,
Vncomfortable time, why cam'st thou now
To murder, murder our solemnity?
O Child, O Child; my soule, and not my Child,
Dead art thou, alacke my Child is dead,
And with my Child, my joyes are buried.

Fri. Peace ho for shanie, confusions: Care lives not
In these confusions, heaven and your selfe
Had part in this faire Maid, now heaven hath all,
And all the better is it for the Maid:
Your part in her, you could not keepe from death,

But heaven kepes his part in eternall life:
The most you sought was her promotion;
For 'twas your heaven, that she should be advanc't.
And weepe ye now, seeing she is advanc't
Above the Cloudes, as high as Heaven it selfe?
O in this love, you love your Child so ill,
That you run mad, seeing that she is well:
Shee's not well married, that lives married long,
But shee's best married, that dies married yong.
Drie vp your teares, and sticke your Rosemarie
On this faire Coarse, and as the custome is
And in her best array beare her to Church:
For though fond Nature bids all us lament,
Yet Natures teares are Reasons merriment.

Fa. All things that we ordained Festivall,
Turne from their office to blacke Fanerall:
Our instruments to melancholy Bells
Our wedding cheare, to a sad buriall Feast:
Our solemne Hymnes, to sullen Dyrgees change;
Our Bridall flowers serve for a buried Coarse:
And all things change them to the contrary.

Fri. Sir go you in, and Madam, go with him,
And go sir Paris, every one prepare
To follow this faire Coarse unto her grave:
The heavens do lowre upon you, for some ill:
Move them no more, by crossing their high will. Exeunt.

Mu. Faith we may put up our Pipes and be gone.

Nur. Honest goodfellowes: Ah put up put up,
For well you know, this is a pittifull case.

Mu. I by my troth, the case may be amended.

Enter Peter.

Pet. Musitians, oh Musitians,
Hearts ease, hearts ease,
O, and you will have me live, play hearts ease.

Mu. Why hearts ease;

Pet. O Musitians,

Because my heart it selfe plaies, my heart is full.

Mu. Not a dump we, tis no time to play now.

Pet. You will not then?

Mu. No.

Pet. I will then give it you soundly.

Mu. What will you give us?

Pet. No money on my faith, but the gleeke.

I will give you the Ministrell.

Mu. Then will I give you the Serving creature.

Pet. Then will I lay the serving Creatures Dagger on your pate. I will cary no Crochets, Ile Re you, Ile Fay you, do you note me?

Mu. And you Re us, and Fa us, you Note us.

2. M. Pray you put up your Dagger,
And put out your wit.

Then have at you with my wit.

Pet. I will dry-beate you with an yron wit,
And put up my yron Dagger.

Answer me like men:

When griping griefes the heart doth wound, then Musickewith her silver found.

Why silver found? why Musicke with her silver found?
what say you Simon Castling?

Mu. Mary sir, because silver hath a sweet sound.

Pet. Pratest, what say you Hugh Rebicke?

2. M. I say silver found, because Musitions found for sil-

Pet. Pratest to, what say you James Sound-Post? (ver

3. Mu. Faith I know not what to say.

Pet. O I cry you mercy, you are the Singer.

I will say for you; it is Musicke with her silver found,

Be-

Because Musicians have no gold for sounding:
Then Musicke with her silver sound, with speedy helpe doth lend redresse. Exit.

Ma. What a pestilent knave is this same?

M.2. Hang him Iacke, come wee in here, tarry for the Mourners, and stay dinner. Exit.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. If I may trust the flattering truth of sleepe,
My dreames preface some joyfull newes at hand:
My bosome Lord sits lightly in his throne:
And all this winged vnaccustom'd spirit,
Lifts me above the ground with cheerefull thoughts.
I dreamt my Lady came and found me dead,
(Strange dreame that gives a dead man leave to thinke,)
And breath'd such life with kisses in my lips,
That I reuiu'd and was an Emperour.
Ah me, how sweet is love it selfe possest,
When but loves shadowes are so rich in joy.

Enter Romeo's man.

Newes from Verona, how now Balthazar?
Dost thou not bring me Letters from the Frier?
How doth my Lady? Is my Father well?
How doth my Lady Juliet? that I aske againe,
For nothing can be ill, if she be well.

Ma. Then she is well, and nothing can be ill.
Her body sleepest in Capels Monument,
And her immortall part with Angels liues
I saw her laide low in her kindreds Vault:
And presently tooke Poste to tell it you:
O pardon me for bringing these ill newes,
Since you did leave it for my office Sir.

Rom. Is it even so?

Then I deny you Starres.
Thou knowest my lodging, get me inke and paper,
And hire Post-Horses, I will hence to night.

Ma. I do beseech you sir, have patience:
Your lookes are pale and wilde, and do import
Some misadventure.

Rom. Tush, thou art deceiv'd,
Leave me, and do the thing I bid thee doe:
Hast thou no Letters to me from the Frier?

Ma. No, my good Lord.

Exit Man.

Rom. No matter: Get thee gone,
And hyre those Horses, Ile be with thee straight.
Well Juliet, I will lie with thee to night:
Let's see for meanes: O mischief thou art swift,
To enter in the thoughts of desperate men:
I do remember an Appothecary,
And hereabouts he dwels, which late I noted
In tattered weeds, with overwhelming browes,
Culling of Simples, meager were his lookes,
Sharpe miserie had worne him to the bones:
And in his needie shop a Tortoys hung,
An Allegator stufte, and other skins
Of ill shap'd fishes, and about his shelves,
A beggerly account of empty boxes,
Greene earthen pots, Bladders, and musty seedes,
Remnants of packthred, and old cakes of Roses
Were thinly scatter'd, to make up a shew.
Noting this penury, to my selfe I said,
An if a man did need a poison now,
Whose sale is present death in Mantua,
Here liues a Caitiffe wretch would sell it him.
O this same thought did but fore-run my need,
And this same needy man must sell it me.

As I remember, this should be the house,
Being holy day, the beggers shop is shut.
What ho? Appothecary?

Enter Appothecary.

App. Who call's so low'd?

Rom. Come hither man, I see that thou art poore, Hold, there is forty Dukets, let me have
A dram of poison, such soone speeding geare,
As will disperse it selfe through all the veines,
That the life-weary-taker may fall dead,
And that the Trunke may be discharg'd of breath,
As violently, as hasty powder fier'd
Doth hurrie from the fatall Canons wombe.

Ap. Such mortall drugs I have, but Mantuas law
Is death to any he, that vtters them.

Rom. Art thou so bare and full of wretchednesse,
And fear'st to die? Famine is in thy cheekes,
Need and oppression starveth in thy eyes,
Contempt and beggery hang on thy backe!
The world is not thy friend, nor the worlds law:
The world affords no law to make thee rich.
Then be not poore, but breake it, and take this.

Ap. My poverty, but not my will consents.

Rom. I pray thy poverty, and not thy will.

Ap. Put this in any liquid thing you will
And drinke it off, and if you had the strength
Of twenty men, it would dispatch you straight.

Rom. There's thy Gold,
Worse poison to mens soules,
Doing more murther in this loathsome world,
Then these poore compounds that thou mayest not sell.
I sell thee poison, thou hast sold me none.
Farewell, buy food, and get thy selfe in flesh.
Come Cordiall, and not poison, go with me
To Juliets grave, for there must I use thee.

Exit.

Enter Frier Iohn to Frier Lawrence.

Iohn. Holy Francis can Frier, Brother, ho?

Enter Frier Lawrence.

Law. This same should be the voice of Frier Iohn.
Welcome from Mantua, what sayes Romeo?
Or if mind be writ, give me his Letter.

Ioh. Going to find a bare-foote Brother out,
One of our order to associate me,
Here in this City visiting the sick,
And finding him, the Searchers of the Towne
Suspecting that we both were in a house
Where the infectious pestilence did raigne,
Seal'd up the doores, and would not let us forth,
So that my speed to Mantua there was staide.

Law. Who bare my Letter then to Romeo?

Ioh. I could not send it, here it is againe,
Nor get a messenger to bring it thee,
So fearefull were they of infection.

Law. Vnhappy Fortune: by my Brotherhood
The Letter was not nice, but full of charge,
Of deare import, and the neglecting it
May do much danger: Frier Iohn go hence,
Get me an Iron Crow, and bring it straight
Vnto my Cell.

Ioh. Brother Ile go and bring it thee.

Exit.

Law. Now must I to the Monument alone,
Within this three houres will faire Juliet wake,
Shee will bestrew me much that Romeo
Hath had no notice of these accidents:
But I will write againe to Mantua,

And

And keepe her at my Cell till Romeo come,
Poore living Coarse, clos'd in a dead mans Tombe,

Exit.

Enter Paris and his Page,

Par. Give me thy Torch Boy, hence and stand aloft,
Yet put it out, for I would not be seene:
Vnder yond young Trees lay thee all alone,
Holding thy eare close to the hollow ground,
So shall no foot upon the Churchyard tread,
Being loose, unfirm with digging up of Graves,
But thou shalt heare it: whistle then to me,
As signall that thou hearest some thing approach,
Give me those flowers. Do as I bid thee, go.

Pag. I am almost afraid to stand along
Here in the Churchyard, yet I will adventure. Exit.

Pa. Sweet Flower with flowers thy Bridall bed I strew:
O woe, thy Canopy is dust and stones,
Which with sweet water nightly I will dewe,
Or wanting that, with teares distill'd by mones;
The obsequies that I for thee will keepe,
Nightly shall be, to strew thy grave, and weepe.

Whistle Boy.

The Boy gives warning, something doth approach,
What curst foot wanders this way to night,
To crosse my obsequies, and true loves right?
What with a Torch? Muffle me night a while.

Enter Romeo, and Peter.

Rom. Give me that Mattocke, & the wrenching Iron,
Hold take this Letter, early in the morning
See thou deliver it to my Lord and Father,
Give me the light: upon thy life I charge thee,
What ere thou hear'st or seest, stand all aloofe,
And do not interrupt me in my course.
Why I descend into this bed of death,
Is partly to behold my Ladies face:
But chiefly to take thence from her dead finger,
A precious Ring: a Ring that I must use,
In deare employment, therefore hence be gone:
But if thou jealous dost returne to prie
In what I further shall intend to do,
By heaven I will teare thee joynt by joynt,
And strew this hungry Churchyard with thy limbs:
The time, and my intents are savage wilde:
More fierce and more inexorable farre,
Then empty Tygers, or the roaring Sea.

Pet. I will be gone sir, and not trouble you

Po. So shalt thou shew me friendship: take thou that,
Live and be prosperous, and farewell good fellow.

Pet. For all this same, Ile hide me here about,
His looks I feare, and his intents I doubt. Exit.

Rom. Thou detestable mawe, thou wombe of death,
Gorg'd with the dearest morsell of the earth:
Thus I enforce thy rotten lawes to open,
And in despight, Ile cram thee with more food.

Par. This is that banisht haughty Montague,
That mured my Loves Cozins, with which griefe,
It is supposed the faire Creature died,
And here is come to do some villanous shame
To the dead bodies: I will apprehend him.
Stop thy unhallowed toyle, vile Montague:
Can vengeance be pursued further then death?
Condemned villaine, I do apprehend thee.
Obey and go with me, for thou must die,

Rom. I must indeed, and therefore came I hither:
Good gentle youth, tempt not a desperate man,
Flie hence and leave me, thinke upon those gone,
Let them affright thee. I beseech thee Youth,
Put not an other sin upon my head,
By urging me to fury. O be gone,
By heaven I love thee better then my selfe,
For I come hither arm'd against my selfe:
Stay not, be gone, live, and hereafter say,
A mad mans mercy bid thee run away.

Par. I do defie thy commiseration,
And apprehend thee for a Fellow here.

Ro. Wilt thou provoke me? Then have at thee Boy.

Pet. O Lord they fight, I will go call the Watch.

Pa. O I am slaine, if thou be mercifull,
Open the Tombe, lay me with Juliet.

Rom. In faith I will, let me peruse this face,
Mercutius kinsman, Noble County Paris,
What said my man, when my betossed soule
Did not attend him as we rode? I thinke
He told me Paris should have married Juliet.
Said he not so? Or did I dreame it so?
Or am I mad, hearing him talke of Juliet,
To thinke it was so? O give me thy hand,
One, writ with me in sowre misfortunes booke,
Ile bury thee in a triumphant grave.

A Grave, O no, a Lanthorne; slaughtred Youth:
For here lies Juliet, and her beauty makes
This Vault a feasting presence full of light.
Death lie thou there, by a dead man inter'd.
How oft when men are at the point of death,
Have they bene merry? Which their Keepers call
A lightning before death? Oh how may I
Call this a lightning? O my Love, my Wife,
Death that hath suck the honey of thy breath,
Hath had no power yet upon thy Beauty:

Thou are not conquer'd: Beauties ensigne yet
Is Crymson in thy lips, and in thy cheekes,
And Deaths pale flag is not advanced there.
Tybalt, ly'st thou there in thy bloody sheet?
O what more favour can I do to thee,
Then with that hand that cut thy youth in twaine,
To sunder his that was thy enemy?

Forgive me Cozen. Ah deare Juliet:
Why art thou yet so faire? I will beleeve,
Shall I beleve, that unsubstantiall death is amorous?
And that the leane abhorred Monster keeps
Thee here in darke to be his Paramour?
For feare of that, I still will stay with thee,
And never from this Palace of dym night
Depart againe: come lie thou in my armes,
Heere's to thy health, where ere thou tumblest in.
O true Appothecary!

Thy drugs are quicke. Thus with a kisse I die,
Depart againe; here, here will I remaine,
With Wormes that are thy Chambermaides: O here
Will I set up my everlasting rest:
And shake the yoke of inauspicious starres
From this worlds wearied flesh: Eyes looke your last:
Armes take your last embrace: And lips, O you
The doores of breath, seale with a righteous kisse
A datelesse bargaine to ingrossing death:
Come bitter conduct, come unfavoury guide,
Thou desperate Pilot, now at once run on
The dashing Rocks, thy Sea-sicke weary Barke:
Heere's to my Love. O true Appothecary:

Thy

Thy drugs are quicke. Thus with a kisse I die.

Enter Friar with Lanthorne, Crow, and Spade.

Fri. St. Francis be my speed, how oft to night
Have my old feet stumbled at graves? Who's there?

Man. Her's one, a Friend, & one that knowes you well.

Fri. Blisse be upon you. Tell me good my Friend
What Torch is yond that vainely lends his light
To grubs, and eyelesse Sculles? As discerne,
It burneth in the Capels Monument.

Man. It doth so holy sir,
And there's my Maister, one that you love.

Fri. Who is it?

Man. Romeo.

Fri. How long hath he bin there?

Man. Full halfe an houre.

Fri. Go with me to the Vault.

Man. I dare not Sir.
My Maister knowes not but I am gone hence,
And fearefully did menace me with death,
If I did stay to looke on his entents.

Fri. Stay, then Ile go alone, feares come upon me.
O much I feare some ill unluckie thing.

Man. As I did sleepe under this young tree here,
I dreamt my maister and another tought,
And that my Maister slew him.

Fri. Romeo.

Alacke, alacke, what blood is this which stains
The stony entrance of this Sepulcher?
What meane these Maisterlesse, and goary Swords
To lie discolour'd by this place of peace?
Romeo, oh pale: who else? what Paris too?
And steapt in blood? Ah what an unkn'd houre
Is guilty of this lamentable chance?
The Lady stirs.

Iul. O comfortable Frier, where's my Lord?
I do remember well where I should be:
And there I am, where is my Romeo?

Fri. I heare some noise Lady, come from that nest
Of death, contagion, and unnaturall sleepe,
A greater power then we can contradict
Hath thwarted our entents, come, come away,
Thy husband in thy bosome there lies dead:
And Paris too: come Ile dispose of thee,
Among a Sisterhood of holy Nunnes:
Stay not to question, for the watch is comming,
Come, go good Iuliet, I dare no longer stay.

Iul. Go get thee hence, for I will not away,
What's here? A cup clos'd in my true loves hand?
Poison I see hath bin his timelesse end
O churle, drinke all? and left no friendly drop,
To helpe me after, I will kisse thy lips,
Happily some poison yet doth hang on them,
To make me die with a restorative.
Thy lips are warme.

Enter Boy and Watch.

Watch. Lead Boy, which way?

Iul. Yea noife?

Then ile be brieve. O happy Dagger.
Tis in thy sheath, there rust and let me die Kills herselfe.

Boy. This is the place.

There where the Torch doth burne

Watch. The ground is bloody.

Search about the Churchyard.

Go some of you, who ere you find attach.

Pittifull sight, here lies the County slaine,
And Iuliet bleeding, warme and newly dead

Who here hath laine these two dayes buried.
Go tell the Prince, runne to the Capulets,
Raife up the Mountagues, some others search,
We see the ground whereon these woes do lie.
But the true ground of all these piteous woes,
We cannot without circumstance descry.

Enter Romeo's man.

Wat. Here's Romeo's man,
We found him in the Churchyard.

Con. Hold him in safety, till the Prince comes hither.

Enter Frier, and another Watchman.

3. Wat. Here is a Frier that trembles, sighes, and weepes
We tooke this Mattocke and this Spade from him,
As he was comming from this Church-yard side.

Con. A great suspition, stay the Frier too.

Enter the Prince.

Prin. What misadventure is so early up,
That calls our person from our mornings rest?

Enter Capulet and his Wife.

Cap. What should it be that they so shrike abroad?
Wife. O the people in the streete crie Romeo.
Some Iuliet, and some Paris, and all runne
With open out cry toward our Monument.

Pri. What feare is this which startles in your eares?

Wat. Sovereigne, here lies the Countie Paris slaine,
And Romeo dead, and Iuliet dead before,
Warme and new kil'd.

Pri. Search,
Seeke, and know how, this foule murder comes.

Wat. Here is a Frier, and Slaughter'd Romeo's man,
With Instruments upon them fit to open
These dead mens Tombes,

Cap. O heaven!
O wife looke how our Daughter bleedes!
This Dagger hath mistaine, for loe his house
Is empty on the backe of Mountague,
And is misheathed in my Daughters bosome.

Wife. O me, this sight of death, is as a Bell
That warnes my old age to a Sepulcher.

Enter Mountague

Pri. Come Mountague, for thou art early up
To see thy Sonne and Heire, now early downe,

Mount. Alas my liege, my wife is dead to night,
Griefe of my Sonnes exile hath stop't her breath:
What further woe conspires against my age?

Pri. Looke: and thou shalt see

Mon. O thou untaught, what manners in is this,
To presse before thy Father to a grave?

Pri. Seale up the mouth of outrage for a while,
Till we can cleare these ambiguities,
And know their spring, their head, their true descent,
And then will I be generall of your woes,
And lead you even to death: meane time forbear,
And let mischance be slave to patience,
Bring forth the parties of suspition.

Fri. I am the greatest, able to doe least,
Yet most suspected as the time and place
Doth make against me of this direfull murder:
And heere I stand both to impeach and purge
My selfe condemned, and my selfe excus'd.

Pri. Then say at once, what thou dost know in this?

Fri. I will be brieve, for my short date of breath
Is not so long as is a tedious tale.

Romeo there dead, was husband to that Iuliet,
And she there dead, that's Romeo's faithfull wife:

I married them; and their stolne marriage day
 Was Tybalts Doome (day: whose untimely death
 Banish'd the new-made Bridegroome from this City:
 For whom (and not for Tybalts) Juliet pinde.
 You, to remove that siege of Griefe from her,
 Betro' h'd, and would have married her perforce
 To Countie Paris. Then comes she to me,
 And (with wilde lookes) bid me devise some meanes
 To rid her from this second Marriage,
 Or in my Cell there would she kill her selfe.
 Then gave I her (so Tuter'd by my Art)
 A sleeping Potion, which so tooke effect
 As I intended, for it wrought on her
 The forme of death. Meane time, I writ to Romeo,
 That he should hither come, as this dyre night,
 To helpe to take her from her borrowed grave,
 Being the time the Potions force should cease.
 But he which bore my Letter, Frier Iohn,
 Was stay'd by accident; and yesternight
 Return'd my Letter backe. Then all alone,
 At the prefixed houre of her waking,
 Came I to take her from her Kindreds vault,
 Meaning to keepe her closely at my Cell,
 Till I conveniently could send to Romeo.
 But when I came (some Minute ere the time
 Of her a waking) heere untimely lay
 The Noble Paris, and true Romeo dead.
 Shee wakes, and I Intreated her come foorth,
 And beare this worke of Heaven, with patience:
 But then, a noise did scarre me from the Tombe,
 And she (too desperate) would not go with me,
 But (as it seemes) did violence on her selfe.
 All this I know, and to the Marriage her Nurse, is privy:
 And if ought in this miscarried by my fault,
 Let my old life be sacrific'd, some houre before the time,
 Vnto the rigour of severest Law.

Prin. We still have knowne thee for a Holy man.
 Where's Romeo's man? What can he say to this?

Boy. I brought my Maister newes of Juliet's death,

And then in poste he came from Mantua
 To this same place, to this same Monument.
 This Letter he early bid me give his Father,
 And threatned me with death, going in the Vault,
 If I departed not, and left him there.

Prin. Give me the Letter, I will looke on it.
 Where is the Counties Page that rais'd the Watch?
 Sirra, what made your Maister in this place?

Pag. He came with flowres to strew his Ladies grave,
 And bid me stand aloofe, and so I did:
 Anon comes one with light to ope the Tombe,
 And by and by my Maister drew on him,
 And then I ran away to call the Watch.

Prin. This Letter doth make good the Friers words,
 Their course of Love, the tydings of her death:
 And heere he writes, that he did buy a poyson
 Of a poore Potheccary, and therewithall
 Came to this Vault to dye, and lye with Juliet,
 Where be these Enemies? Capulet Mountague,
 See what a scourge is laide upon your hate,
 That Heaven finds meanes to kill your joyes with Love,
 And I, for winking at your discords too,
 Have lost a brace of Kinsmen: All are punish'd.

Cap. O Brother Mountague, give me thy hand,
 This is my Daughters joynture, for no more
 Can I demand.

Moun. But I can give thee more:
 For I will raise her Statue in pure Gold,
 That whilks Verona by that name is knowne,
 There shall no figure at that Rate be set,
 As that of True and Faichfull Juliet.

Cap. As rich shall Romeo by his Lady lie,
 Poore sacrifices of our enmity,

Prin. A glooming peace this morning with it brings,
 The Sunne for sorrow will not shew his head;
 Go hence, to have more talke of these sad things,
 Some shall be pardon'd, and some punished.

For never was a Story of more Woe
 Then this of Juliet, and her Romeo.

Exeunt omnes.

FIN IS.

THE LIFE OF TYMON OF ATHENS.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Poet, Painter, Jeweller, Merchant, and Mercer, at severall doores.

Poet.

Good day Sir.

Pain. I am glad y<sup>e</sup> are well.

Poet. I have not seene you long, how goes the World?

Pain. It weares fir, as it growes.

Poet. I that's well knowne:

But what particular Rarity? What strange,
Which manifold record not matches: see
Magicke of Bounty, all these spirits thy power
Hath conjur'd to attend.
I know the Merchant.

Pai. I know them both: th<sup>o</sup> others a Jeweller.

Mer. O tis a worthy Lord.

Jew. Nay that's most fixt.

Mer. A most incomparable man, breath'd as it were,
To an untyrable and continue goodnesse:
He passes.

Jew. I have a Jewell heere.

Mer. O pray let's see't. For the Lord Timon, fir?

Jew. If he will touch the estimate, but for that

Poe. When we for recompence have prais'd the vild,
It stains the glory in that happy Verse,
Which aptly sings the good.

Mer. Tis a good for me.

Jew. And rich: heere is a Water looke ye.

Pai. You are rapt fir, in some worke, some Dedication to the great Lord.

Poe. A thing slipt idly from me.

Our Poetrie is as a Gowne, which uses
From whence tis nourisht: the fire i<sup>n</sup> th<sup>e</sup> Flint
Shewes not, till it be strooke: our gentle flame
Provokes it selfe, and like the currant fl<sup>y</sup>es
Each bound it chases. What have you there?

Pai. A Picture fir: when comes your Booke forth?

Poe. Vpon the heeles of my presentment fir.
Let's see your peece.

Pai. Tis a good Peece.

Poe. So tis, this comes off well, and excellent.

Pain. Indifferent:

Poe. Admirable: How this grace
Speakes his owne standing: what a mentall power
This eye shootes forth? How bigge imagination
Moves in this Lip; to th<sup>e</sup> dumbnesse of the gesture,

One might interpret.

Pai. It is a pretty mocking of the life:
Heere is a touch: Is't good?

Poe. I will say of it,
It Tutors Nature, Artificiall strife
Lives in these touches, livelier then life.

Enter certaine Senators.

Pai. How this Lord is followed.

Poe. The Senators of Athens, happy men.

Pain. Looke mee.

Po. You see this confluence, this great flood of visitors,
I have in this rough worke shap'd out a man
Whom this beneath world doth embrace and hugge
With amplest entertainment: My free drift
Halts not particularly, but moves it selfe
In a wide Sea of wax, no leuell'd malice
Infects one comma in the course I hold,
But flies an Eagle flight, bold, and forth on,
Leaving no Tract behinde.

Pai. How shall I understand you?

Poe. I will unbould to you.

You see how all Conditions, how all Mindes,
As well of glib and slipp'ry Creatures, as
Of Grave and austere quality, tender downe
Their services to Lord Timon: his large Fortune,
Vpon his good and gracious Nature hanging,
Subdues and properties to his love and tendance
All sorts of hearts; yea, from the glasse-fac'd Flatterer
To Apemantus, that few things loves better
Then to abhorre himselfe, even hee drops downe
The knee before him, and returns in peace
Most rich in Timons nod.

Pai. I saw them speake together.

Poe. Sir, I have upon a high and pleasant hill
Feign'd Fortune to be thron'd.
The Base o'th' Mount

Is rank'd with all deserts, all kinde of Natures
That labour on the bosome of this Sphere,
To propagate their states; among't them all,
Whose eyes are on this Sovereigne Lady fixt,
One do I personate of Lord Timons frame,
Whom Fortune with her Ivory hand wafts to her,
Whose present grace, to present slaves and servants
Translates his Rivals.

Pai. Tis conceiv'd, to scope
This Throne, this Fortune, and this Hill me thinkes

With

With one man becken'd from the rest below,
Bowing his head against the steepy Mount
To climbe his happinesse, would be well exprest
In our Condition.

Poe. Nay Sir, but heare me on:
All those which were his Fellowes but of late,
Some better then his vawew; on the moment
Follow his strides, his Lobbies fill with tendance,
Raine Sacrificiall whisperings in his eare,
Make Sacred even his styrtrop, and through him
Drinke the free Ayre.

Pai. I marry, what of these?

Poe. When fortune in her shift and change of mood
Spurnes downe her late beloved; all his Dependants
Which labour'd after him to the Mountaines top,
Even on their knees and hands, let him sit downe,
Not one accompanying his declining foot.

Pai. Tis common:
A thousand morall Paintings I can shew,
That shall demonstrate these quicke blowes of Fortune,
More pregnantly then words. Yet you do well,
To shew Lord Timon, that meane eyes have seene
The foot above the head

Trumpets sound.

Enter Lord Timon, addressing himselfe curteously to every Suitor.

Tim. Imprison'd is he, say you?

Mef. I my good Lord, five Talents is his debt,
His meanes most short, his Creditors most strait:
Your Honourable Letter he desires
To those have shut him up, which failing to him,
Periods his comfort.

Tim. Noble Ventsidius well:
I am not of that Feather, to shake off
My Friend when he must neede me. I do know him
A Gentleman, that well deserves a helpe,
Which he shall have. He pay the debt, and free him.

Mef. Your Lordship ever bindes him.

Tim. Commend me to him, I will send his ransome,
And being enfranchized bid him come to me;
Tis not enough to helpe the Feeble up,
But to support him after. Fare you well.

Mef. All happinesse to your Honor.

Exit.

Enter an old Athenian.

Oldm. Lord Timon, heare me speake.

Tim. Freely good Father.

Old. Thou hast a Servant nam'd Lucilius.

Tim. I have so: What of him?

Old. Most Noble Timon, call the man before thee.

Tim. Attends he heere, or no? Lucilius.

Luc. Heere at your Lordships service.

Old. This Fellow heere, L. Timon, this thy Creature,
By night frequents my house. I am a man
That from my first have beene inclin'd to thrift,
And my estate deserves an Heyre more rais'd,
Then one which holds a Trencher.

Tim. Well: what further?

Old. One onely Daughter have I, no Kin else,
On whom I may conferre what I have got:
The Maid is faire, a'th' youngest for a Bride,
And I have bred her at my dearest cost
In Qualities of the best. This man of thine
Attempts her love: I prythee (Noble Lord)

Ioyne with me to forbid him her resort,
My selfe have spoke in vaine.

Tim. The man is honest,

Old. Therefore he will be Timon,
His honesty rewards him in it selfe,
It must not beare my Daughter.

Tim. Does she love him?

Old. She is young and apt:

Our owne precedent passions do instruct us
What levities in youth.

Tim. Love you the Maid?

Luc. I my good Lord, and she accepts of it.

Old. If in her Marriage my consent be missing,
I call the Gods to witnesse, I will chose
Mine heyre from forth the Beggars of the world,
And dispossesse her all.

Tim. How shall she be endowed,
If she be mated with an equall Husband?

Old. Three Talents on the present, in future, all.

Tim. This Gentleman of mine
Hath serv'd me long:
To build his Fortune, I will straine a little,
For tis a Bond in men. Give him thy Daughter,
What you bestow, in him Ile counterpoize,
And make him weigh with her.

Old. Most Noble Lord,
Pawne me to this your Honour, she is his.

Tim. My hand to thee,
Mine Honour on my promise.

Luc. Humbly I thanke your Lordship, never may
That state or Fortune fall into my keeping,
Which is not owed to you. Exit.

Poe. Vouchsafe my Labour.
And long live your Lordship.

Tim. I thanke you, you shall heare from me anon:
Go not away. What have you there, my Friend?

Pai. A peece of Painting, which I do beseech
Your Lordship to accept.

Tim. Painting is welcome.
The Painting is almost the Nature all man:
For since Dishonor Traffikes with mans Nature,
He is but out-side: The Pensil'd Figures are Even such as they give out. I like your worke,
And you shall finde I like it, Waite attendance
Till you heare further from me.

Pai. The Gods preserve ye.

Tim. Well fare you Gentleman: give me your hand.
We must needs dine together: sir your Jewell
Hath suffered under praise.

Jew. What my Lord, dispraise?

Tim. A meere society of Commendations,
If I should pay you for't as tis extold,
It would unclew me quite.

Jew. My Lord, tis rated
As those which sell would give: but you well know,
Things of like vawew differing in the Owners,
Are prized by their Maisters. Beleeve't deere Lord,
You mend the Jewell by the wearing it.

Tim. Well mock'd. Enter Apermantus.

Mer. No my good Lord, he speakes the common toong
Which all men speake with him.

Tim. Looke who comes heere, will you be chid?

Jew. Wee'l I beare with your Lordship.

Mer. Hee'l spare none.

Tim. Good morrow to thee,
Gentle Apermantus.

Aper

Ape. Till I be gentle, stay thou for thy good morrow.
When thou art Timons dogge, and these Knaves honest.

Tim. Why dost thou call them Knaves, thou knowst them not?

Ape. Are they not Athenians?

Tim. Yes.

Ape. Then I repent not.

Tim. You know me, Apemantus?

Ape. Thou knowst I doe, I call'd thee by thy name:

Tim. Thou art proud Apemantus?

Ape. Of nothing so much, as that I am not like Timon.

Tim. Whether art going?

Ape. To knocke out an honest Athenians braines.

Tim. That's a deed thou't dye for.

Ape. Right, if doing nothing be death by th' Law.

Tim. How lik'st thou this picture Apemantus?

Ape. The best, for the innocence.

Tim. Wrought he not well that painted it:

Ape. He wrought better that made the Painter, and yet he's but a filthy peece of worke.

Tim. Y'are a Dogge.

Ape. Thy Mothers of my generation: whats she, if I be a Dogge?

Tim. Wilt dine with me Apemantus?

Ape. No: I eate not Lords.

Tim. And thou shou'lt, thoud'st anger Ladies.

Ape. O they eare Lords;
So they come by great bellies.

Tim. That's a lascivious apprehension.

Ape. So, thou apprehendst it.
Take it for thy labour.

Tim. How dost thou like this lewell, Apemantus.

Ape. Not so well as plain-dealing, which will not cast a man a Doit,

Tim. What dost thou thinke tis worth?

Ape. Not worth my thinking.

How now Poet?

Poe. How now Philosopher?

Ape. Thoulyest.

Poe. Art not one?

Ape. Yes.

Poe. Then I lye not.

Ape. Art not a Poet?

Poe. Yes.

Ape. Then thou lyeest:

Looke in thy last worke, where thou hast feign'd him a worthy Fellow.

Poe. That's not feign'd, he is so.

Ape. Yes he is worthy of thee, and to pay thee for thy labour. He that loves to be flattered, is worthy o'th flatterer. Heavens, that I were a Lord.

Tim. What wouldst doe then Apemantus?

Ape. Ene as Apemantus does now, hate a Lord with my heart.

Tim. What thy selfe?

Ape. I.

Tim. Wherefore?

Ape. That I had no angry wit to be a Lord.
Are not thou a Merchant?

Mer. I Apemantus.

Ape. Trafficke confound thee, if the gods will not.

Mer. If Trafficke doe it, the gods doe it.

Ape. Traffickes thy god, and thy god confound thee.

Trumpet sounds. Enter a Messenger.

Tim. What Trumpets that?

Mes. Tis Alcibiades, and some twenty horse

All of Companionship.

Tim. Pray entertaine them, give them guide to us.

You must needs dine with me: goe not you hence

Till I have thank't you: and when dinners done

Shew me this peece, I am joyfull of your fights.

Enter Alcibiades with the rest.

Most welcome Sir.

Ape. So, so; their Aches contract, and sterue your supple joynts: that there should be small love amongst these sweet Knaves, and all this Curtesie. The straine of mans bred out into Baboon and Monkey.

Alci. Sir, you have sav'd my longing, and I feed Most hungerly on your sight.

Tim. Right welcome Sir.

Ere we depart, we'll share a bounteous time

In different pleasures.

Pray you let us in.

Exeunt.

Enter two Lords.

1 Lord. What time a day is't Apemantus.

Ape. Time to be honest.

1 That time serves still.

Ape. The most accursed thou that still omitst it.

2 Thou art going to Lord Timons Feast.

Ape. I, to see meate fill Knaves, and Wine heat fooles,

2 Farthee well, farthee well.

Ape. Thou art a Foole to bid me farewell twice.

2 Why Apemantus?

Ape. Shouldst have kept one to thy selfe, for I meane to give thee none.

1 Hang thy selfe.

Ape. No I will doe nothing at thy bidding:
Make thy requests to thy Friend.

2 Away unpeaceable Dogge,
Or Ile spurne thee hence.

Ape. I will flye like a dogge, the heeles a'th' Ass.

1 He's opposite to humanity.

Come shall we in,

And taste Lord Timons bounty: he out goes
The very heart of kindnesse.

2 He powres it out: Plutus the god of gold
Is but his Steward; no meede but he repayes
Seven-fold above it selfe: No guift to him,
But breeds the giver a returne: exceeding
All use of quittance.

1 The Noblest minde he carries.

That ever govern'd man.

2 Long may he live in Fortunes. Shall we in?

Ile keepe you Company.

Exeunt.

Hoboyes Playing lowd Musick.

A great Banquet serv'd in: and then, Enter Lord Timon, the States, the Athenian Lords, Ventigius which Timon redeemd from prison. Then comes dropping after all Apemantus discontentedly like himselfe.

Ventig. Most honoured Timon,
It hath pleas'd the gods to remember my fathers age,
And call him to long peace:

He is gone happy, and has left me rich:

Then, as in gratefull Vertue I am bound

To your free heart, I doe returne those Talents

Doubled with thanks and service, from whose helpe
I deriu'd liberty.

Tim. O by no meanes,

Honest Ventigius: you mistake my love,

k k

I gave

I gave it freely ever, and there's none
Can truly say he gives, if he receives :
If our betters play at that game, we must not dare
To imitate them : faults that are rich are faire.

Vins. A Noble spirit.

Tim. Nay my Lords, Ceremony was but devis'd at first
To set a glosse on faint deeds, hollow welcomes,
Recanting goodnesse, sorry ere tis showne :
But where there is true friendship, there needs none.
Pray fit, more welcome are ye to my Fortunes,
Then my Fortunes to me.

1 Lord. My Lord, we alwayes have confest it.

Ape. Ho ho, confest it ? hang'd it ? have you not ?

Tim. O Apermantus, you are welcome.

Ape. No : you shall not make me welcome.

I come to have thee thrust me out of doores.

Tim. Fye, th'art a churle, ye have got a humour there
Does not become a man, tis much too blame :
They say my Lords, Ira furor brevis est,
But yond man is very angry.
Goe, let him have a Table by himselfe :
For he does neither affect company,
Nor is he fit for't indeed.

Ape. Let me stay at thine apperill Timon,
I come to observe, I give thee warning on't.

Tim. I take no heede of thee ; Th'art an Athenian, therefore welcome : I my selfe would have no power,
prethee let my meate make thee silent.

Ape. I scorne thy meate, twould choake me : for I should nere flatter thee. Oh you Gods ! What a number of men eates Timon, and he sees em not ? It grieves me to see so many dip there meate in one mans blood, and all the madnesse is, he cheeres them up too.
I wonder men dare trust themselves with men.
Me thinks they should invite them without knives,
Good for their meate, and safer for their lives.
Theres much example for't, the fellow that sits next him now parts bread with him, pledges the breath of him in a divided draught : is the readiest man to kill him. Tas beene proved, if I were a huge man I should feare to drinke at meales, least they should spy my wind-pipes dangerous noates, great men should drinke with harnesse on their throats.

Tim. My Lord in heart : and let the health goe round.

2 Lord. Let it flow this way my good Lord.

Ape. Flow this way ? A brave fellow. He keepes his tides well, those healths will make thee and thy state looke ill, Timon.

Heeres : that which is too weake to be a sinner,
Honest water, which nere left man i'th' mird :
This and my food are equall, theres no ods,
Feasts are to proud to give thanks to the gods.

Apermantus Grace.

Immortall gods, I crave no pelfe,
I pray for no man but my selfe,
Grant I may never prove so fond,
To trust man on his Oath or Bond.
Or a Harlot for her weeping.
Or a Dogge that seems asleeping,
Or a keeper with my freedome,
Or my friends if I should need em.

Amen. So fall too't :

Richmen sin, and I eat root.

Much good dich thy good heart, Apermantus.

Tim. Captaine,

Alcibiades, your hearts in the field now.

Alci. My heart is ever at your service, my Lord.

Tim. You had rather be at a breakefast of Enemies, then a dinner of Friends.

Alci. So they were bleeding new my Lord, theres no meat like em, I could wish my friend at such a Feast.

Ape. Would all those flatterers were thine Enemies then, that then thou mightst kill em : and bid me to em.

1 Lord. Might we but have that happinesse my Lord, that you would once use our hearts, whereby we might expresse some part of our zeales, we should thinke our selves for ever perfect.

Tim. Oh no doubt my good Friends, but the gods themselves have provided that I shall have much helpe from you : how had you beene my Friends else. Why have you that charitable title from thousands ? Did not you chiefly belong to my heart ? I have told more of you to my selfe, then you can with modesty speake in your owne behalfe. And thus farre I confirme you. Oh you gods (thinke I) what need we have any Friends ; if we should nere have neede of em ? They were the most needlesse Creatures living ; should we nere have use for em ? And would most resemble sweet Instruments hung up in Cases, that keepe their sounds to themselves.
Why I have often wisht my selfe poorer, that I might come neerer to you : we are borne to doe benefits. And what better or properer can we call our owne, then the riches of our Friends ? Oh what a pretious comfort tis to have so many like Brothers commanding one anothers Fortunes. Oh joyes, e'ne made away er't can be borne, mine eyes cannot hold out watter me thinks to forget their faults. I drinke to you,

Ape. Thou weep'st to made them drinke Timon.

2 Lord. Ioy had the like conception in our eyes,
And at that instant, like a babe sprung up.

Ape. Ho, ho : I laugh to thinke that babe a bastard.

3 Lord. I promise you my Lord you mov'd me much.

Ape. Much.

Sound Tucket. Enter the Maskers of Amazons with Lutes in their hands, dancing and playing.

Tim. What meanes that Trumpe ? How now ?

Enter Servant.

Ser. Please you my Lord, there are certaine Ladies
Most desirovs of admittance.

Tim. Ladies ? what are their wills ?

Ser. There comes with them a fore-runner my Lord, which beares that office, to signifie their pleasures.

Tim. I pray let them be admitted.

Enter Cupid with the Maske of Ladies.

Cup. Haile to thee worthy Timon and to all that of his Baunties taste : the five best Sences acknowledge thee their Patron, and come freely to gratulate thy plenteous bosome.

There taste, touch all, pleas'd from thy Table rise :
They onely now come but to Feast thine eyes.

Tim. Their welcome all, let em have kind admittance. Musicke make their welcome.

Luc. You see my Lord, how ample ye are belov'd.

Ape. Hoyday,

What a sweepe of vanity comes this way.
They daunce ? They are madwomen.

Like

Like Madnesse is the glory of this life,
As this pompe shewes to a little oyle and roote.
We make our selves fooles, to disport our selves,
And spend our Flatteries, to drinke those men,
Vpon whose Age we voyde it up agen
With poysonous Spight and Envy.
Who lives, that's not depraved, or depraves;
Who dyes, that beares not one spurne to their graves
Of their friends gift:
I should feare, those that dance before me now,
Would one day stampe upon me: Tas beene done,
Men shut their doores against a setting Sunne.

The Lords rise from Table, with much adoring of Timon, and to shew their loves, each single out an Amazon, and all Dance, men with women, a lusty straine or two to the Hoboyes, and cease.

Tim. You have done our pleasures
Much grace (faire Ladies)
Sets a faire fashion on our entertainment,
Which was not halfe so beautifull, and kind:
You have added worth untoo't, and lively luster,
And entertain'd me with mine owne device.
I am to thanke you for't.

1 Lord. My Lord you take us even at the best.
Ape. Faith for the worst is filthy, and would not hold taking, I doubt me.

Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet attends you.
Please you to dispose your selves.

All La. Most thankfully, my Lord. Exeunt.

Tim. Flavius,
Fla. My Lord.

Tim. The little Casket, bring me hither.

Fla. Yes, my Lord. More Jewels yet?
There is no crossing him in's humour,
Else I should tell him well, ifaith I should;
When all's spent, he'd be crost then, and he could:
Tis pittie Bounty had not eyes behind,
That man might ne're be wretched for his mind.

1 Lord. Where be our men?

Ser. Heere my Lord in readinesse,

2 Lord. Our horses.

Tim. O my Friends;
I have one word to say to you: Looke you, my good L.
I must intreat you honour me so much.
As to advance this Jewell, accept, and weare it,
Kind my Lord.

1 Lord. I am so farre already in your gifts.

All. So are we all.

Enter a Servant.

Ser. My Lord, there are certaine Nobles of the Senate newly alighted, and come to visit you.

Tim. They are fairely welcome.

Enter Flavius.

Fla. I beseech your Honor, vouchsafe me a word, it does concerne you neere.

Tim. Neere? why then another time Ile heare thee.
I prethee let's be provided to shew them entertainment.

Fla. I scarce know how.

Enter another Servant.

Ser. May it please your honor, Lord Lucius
(Out of his free love) hath presented to you
Foure Milke-white Horses, trapt in Silver.

Tim. I shall accept them fairely: let the Presents
Be worthily entertain'd.

Enter a third Servant.

How now? What newes?

3 Ser. Please you my Lord, that honourable Gentleman Lord Lucullus, entreats your company to morrow, to hunt with him, and ha's sent your Honour two brace of Grey-hounds.

Tim. Ile hunt with him.
And let them be received, not without faire Reward.

Fla. What will this come to?
He commands us to provide, and give great gifts, and all out of an empty Coffer:

Nor will he know his purse, or yeeld me this,
To shew him what a Begger his heart is,
Being of no power to make his wishes good,
His promises flye so beyond his state,
That what he speakes is all in debt, owes for ev'ry word:
He is so kind, that he now payes interest for't;
His Lands put to their Bookes. Well, would I were Gently put out of Office, ere I were forc'd:
Happier is he that has no friend to feede,
Then such that doe e'ne Enemies excede.
I bleed inwardly for my Lord. Exit.

Tim. You doe your selves much wrong,
You bate too much of your owne merits.
Heere my Lord, a trifle of our Love.

2 Lord. With more then common thanks
I will receive it.

3 Lord. O has the very soule of Bounty.

Tim. And now I remember my Lord, you gave good words the other day of a Bay Courser I rod on. Tis yours because you lik'd it.

1 L. Oh, I beseech you pardon me, my Lord, in that.

Tim. You may take my word my Lord: I know no man can justly praise, but what he does affect. I weigh my friends affection with mine owne? Ile tell you true, Ile call to you.

All Lor. O none so welcome.

Tim. I take all, and your severall visitations
So kind to heart, tis not enough to give:
Me thinks, I could deale Kingdomes to my friends,
And nere be weary. Alcibiades,
Thou art a Souldier, therefore sildome rich,
It comes in Charity to thee; for all thy living
Is mong't the dead: and all the Lands thou hast
Lye in a pitch field.

Alci. I desie Land, my Lord.

1 Lord. We are so vertuoufly bound.

Tim. And so am I to you.

2 Lord. So infinitely endear'd.

Tim. All to you. Lights, more Lights, more Light.

1 Lord. The best of Happines, Honor, and Fortunes
Keepe with you Lord Timon.

Tim. Ready for his Friends. Exeunt Lords.

Aper. What a coiles heere, serving of beckes, and jutting out of bummes. I doubt whether their Legges be worth the summes that are given for 'em.

Friendships full of dregges,
Me thinks false hearts, should never have iound legges,
Thus honest Fooles lay out their wealth on Curties

Tim. Now Apermantus (if thou wert not fullen)
I would be good to thee.

Aper. No, Ile nothing; for if I should be brib'd too, there would be none left to raile upon thee, and then thou wouldst sinne the faster. Thou giv'st so long Timon (I feare me) thou wilt give away thy selfe in paper shortly.
What neede these Feasts, pompes, and Vaine-glories?

Tim. Nay, and you begin to raile on Society once, I am sworne not to give regard to you. Farewell, and come with better Musicke. Exit.

Aper. So : thou wilt not heare me now, thou shalt not then. Ile locke thy heaven from thee :
Oh that mens eares should be
To Counsell deafe, but not to Flattery. Exit.

Enter a Senator.

Sen. And late five thousand : to Varro and to Isidore
He owes nine thousand, besides my former summe,
Which makes it five and twenty. Still in motion
Of raging waste ? It cannot hold, it will not.
If I want Gold, steale but a beggers Dogge,
And give it Timon, why the Dogge coyne Gold.
If I would sell my horse, and buy twenty more
Better then he ; why give my horse to Timon.
Aske nothing, give it him, it Foles me straight
And able Hories : No Porter at his gate,
But rather one that smiles, and still invites
All that passe by. It cannot hold, no reason
Can found his state in safety. Caphis hoa,
Caphis I say.

Enter Caphis.

Caph. Heere sir, what is your pleasure.

Sen. Get on your cloake, and haile you to Lord Timon
Importune him for my Moneyes, be not ceast
With slight deniall ; nor then silenc'd, then
Commend me to your Master, and the Cap
Playes in the right hand, thus : but tell him sirrah
My uses cry to me ; I must serve my turne
Out of mine owne, his dayes and times are past,
And my reliances on his fracted dates
Have smit my credit. I love, and honour him,
But must not breake my backe, to heale his finger.
Immediate are my needs, and my releife
Must not be tost and turn'd to me in words,
But find supply immediate. Get you gone,
Put on a molt importunate aspect,
A visage of demand : for I doe feare
When every Feather stickes in his owne wing,
Lord Timon will be left a naked gull,
Which flashes now a Phoenix, get you gone.

Ca. I goe sir.

Sen. I goe sir ?
Take the Bonds along with you,
And have the dates in. Come.

Ca. I will Sir.

Sen. Goe. Exeunt.

Enter Steward, with many billes in his hand.

Stew. No care, no stop, so senselesse of expence,
That he will neither know how to maintaine it,
Nor cease his flow of Riot. Takes no accompt
How things goe from him, nor resume no care
Of what is to continue : never mind
Was to be so unwise, to be so kind.
What shall be done, he will not here, till feele :
I must be round with him, now he comes from hunting.
Fie, fie, fie, fie.

Enter Caphis, Isidore, and Varro.

Cap. Good even Varro : what, you come for money ?

Var. Is't not your businesse too ?

Cap. It is, and yours too, Isidore ?

Isid. It is so.

Cap. Would we were all discharg'd.

Var. I feare it,

Cap. Heere comes the Lord.

Enter Timon, and his Traine.

Tim. So soone as dinners done, we'll forth againe
My Alcibiades. With me, what is your will ?

Cap. My Lord, heere is a note of certaine dues.

Tim. Dues ? whence are you ?

Cap. Of Athens heere : my Lord.

Tim. Goe to my Steward.

Cap. Please it your Lordship, he hath put me off
To the succession of new dayes this moneth :
My Master is awak'd by great Occasion,
To call upon his owne, and humbly prayes you,
That with your other Noble parts, you'll suite,
In giving him his right.

Tim. Mine honest Friend,

I prethee but repaire to me next morning.

Cap. Nay good my Lord.

Tim. Containe thy selfe, good friend.

Var. One Varroes servant, my good Lord.

Isid. From Isidore, he humbly prayes your speedy payment,

Cap. If you did know my Lord, my Masters wants.

Var. Twas due on forfeiture my Lord, sixe weekes,
and past.

Isid. Your Steward puts me off my Lord, and I Am sent expressely to your Lordship.

Tim. Give me breath :

I doe beseech you good my Lords keepe on,
Ile waite upon you instantly. Come hither : pray you
How goes the world, that I am thus encountred
With clamorous demands of debt, broken Bonds,
And the detention long since due debts
Against my Honor ?

Stew. Please you Gentlemen,
The time is unagreeable to this businesse :
Your importunacy cease, till after dinner,
That I may make his Lordship understand
Wherefore you are not paid.

Tim. Doe so my Friends, see them well entertain'd.

Stew. Pray draw neere. Exit.

Enter Apemantus and Foole.

Caph. Stay, stay, here comes the Foole with Apemantus, lets ha some sport with em.

Var. Hang him, he'll abuse us.

Isid. A plague upon him dogge.

Var. How dost Foole ?

Ape. Dost Dialogue with thy shadow ?

Var. I speake not to thee.

Ape. No tis to thy selfe. Come away.

Isid. Theres the Foole hangs on your backe already.

Ape. No thou standst single, thou art not on him yet

Cap. Wheres the foole now ?

Ape. He last ask'd the question. Poore Rogues and Vsurers men, Bands betweene Gold and want.

All. What are we Apemantus ?

Ape. Asses.

All. Why ?

Ape. That you aske me what you are, and doe not know your selves. Speake to em foole.

Foole. How doe you Gentlemen ?

All. Gramercies good Foole :

How does your Mistris ? Foole.

Foole. She's e'ne setting on water to scal'd such Chicks as you are. Would we could see you at Corinth.
Ape. Good, Gramercy.

Enter Page.

Foole. Looke you, heere comes my Masters Page.
Page. Why how now Captaine? what doe you in this wife company.
How dost thou Apemantus?

Ape. Would I had a Rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably.

Boy. Prethee Apemantus reade me the superscription of these Letters, I know not which is which.

Ape. Canst not read?

Page. No.

Ape. There will little Learning dye then that day thou art hang'd. This is to Lord Timon, this to Alcibiades. Go thou was't borne a Bastard, and thou't dye a Bawd.

Page. Thou was't whelpt a Dogge, and thou shalt famish a Dogges death.

Answer not, I am gone,

Exit.

Ape. E'ne so thou out-runst grace,
Foole I will goe with you to Lord Timons.

Foole. Will you leave me there?

Ape. If Timon stay at home.

You three serve three Vsurers?

All. I would they serv'd us.

Ape. So would I:

As good a trick as ever Hangman serv'd thee.

Foole. Are you three Vsurers men?

All. I foole

Foole. I thinke no Vsurer, but has a foole to his Servant. My Mistris is one, and I am her foole: when men come to borrow of your Masters, they approach sadly, and goe away merry: but they enter my Masters house merrily, and goe away sadly. The reason of this?

Var. I could render one.

Ape. Doe it then, that we may account thee a Whoremaster, and a Knave, which notwithstanding thou shalt be no lesse esteemed,

Var. What is a Whoremaster foole?

Foole. A foole in good clothes, and something like thee. Tis a spirit, sometime t'appeares like a Lord, sometime like a Lawyer, sometime like a Philosopher, with two stones more then's artificiall one. He is very often like a Knight; and generally, in all shapes that man goes up and downe in, from fourescore to thirteen, this spirit walkes in.

Var. Thou art not altogether a foole.

Foole. Nor thou altogether a Wise man,
As much foolery as I have, so much wit thou lack'st.

Ape. That answer might have become Apemantus.

All. Aside, aside, here comes Lord Timon.

Enter Timon, and Steward.

Ape. Come with me (foole) come.

Foole. I doe not alwayes follow Lover, elder Brother, and Woman, sometime the Philosopher.

Stew. Pray you walke neerer,

He speake with you anon.

Exeunt.

Tim. You make me mervell wherefore ere this time Had you not fully laid my state before me, That I might so have rated my expence As I had leave of meanes.

Stew. You would not heare me:

At many leysures I propos'd.

Tim. Goe to:

Perchance some single vantages you tooke,
When my indisposition put you backe,
And that unaptnesse made you minister
Thus to excuse your selfe.

Stew. O my good Lord,

At many times I brought in my accompts,
Laid them before you, you would throw them off,
And say you found them in mine honesty,
When for some trifling present you have bid me
Returne so much, I have shooke my head, and wept:
Yea gainst th' Authority of manners, pray'd you
To hold your hand more close: I did indure
Not sildome, nor no flight checkes, when I have Prompted you in the ebbe of your estate,
And your great flow of debts; my deare lov'd Lord,
Though you here now (too late) yet nowes a time,
The greatest of you having, lackes a halfe,
To pay your present debts.

Tim. Let all my Land be sold.

Stew. Tis all engag'd, some forfeited and gone,
And what remaines will hardly stop the mouth
Of present dues; the future comes apace:
What shall defend the interim, and at length
How goes our reck'ning?

Tim. To Lacedemon did my Land extend.

Stew. O my good Lord, the world is but a world,
Were it all yours, to give it in a breath,
How quickly were it gone.

Tim. You tell me true.

Stew. If you suspect my Husbandry or Falshood.
Call me before the exactest Auditors,
And set me on the prooffe. So the gods blesse me,
When all our Offices have beene oppress'd
With riotous Feeders, when our Vaults have wept
With drunken spilt of Wine; when every roome
Hath blaz'd with Lights, and braid with Minstrelsie,
I have retr'y'd me to a wastefull cocke,
And set mine eyes at flow.

Tim. Prethee no more.

Stew. Heavens have I said, the bounty of this Lord!
How many prodigall bits have Slaves and Pezants
This night englutted: who is not Timons,
What heart, head, sword, force, meanes, but is L. Timons:
Great Timon, Noble, Worthy, Royall Timons:
Ah, when the meanes are gone, that buy this praise,
The breath is gone, whereof this praise is made:
Feast won, fast lost; one cloud of Winter showres,
These flies are coucht.

Tim. Come sermon me no further:

No villainous bounty yet hath past my heart;
Unwisely, not ignobly have I given.
Why dost thou weepe, canst thou the conscience lacke,
To thinke I shall lacke friends: secure thy heart,
If I would broach the vessels of my love,
And try the argument of hearts, by borrowing,
Men, and mens fortunes could I frankly use
As I can bid thee speake.

Stew. Assurance blesse your thoughts,

Tim. And in some sort these wants of mine are crown'd
That I account them blessings. For by these Shall I try friends. You shall perceive
How you mistake my fortunes:
I am wealthy in my friends.

Within there, Flavius, Servilius?

Enter three Servants.

Ser. My Lord, my Lord.

Tim. I will dispatch you severally.

You to Lord Lucius, to Lord Lucullus you, I hunted with his Honor to day; you to Sempronius, commend me to their loves, and I am proud say, that my occasions have found time to use 'em toward a supply of mony: let the request be fifty Talents.

Flam. As you have said, my Lord.

Stew. Lord Lucius and Lucullus? Humh.

Tim. Goe you fir to the Senators;
Of whom, even to the States best health? I have Deserv'd this hearing; bid 'em fend o'th' instant A thousand Talents to me.

Stew. I have beene bold
(For that I knew it the most generall way)
To them, to use your Signet, and your Name,
But they doe shake their heads, and I am heere
No richer in returne.

Tim. Is't true? Can't be?

Stew. They answer in a joynt and corporate voyce,
That now they are at fall, want Treasure, cannot Doe what they would, are sorry: you are Honourable,
But yet they could have wisht, they know not,
Something hath beene amisse; a Noble Nature
May catch a wrench; would all were well; tis pittie,
And so intending other serious matters,
After distastefull lookes; and these hard Fractions
With certaine halfe-caps, and cold moving nods,
They froze me into Silence.

Tim. You gods reward them:
Prythee man looke cheereely. These old Fellowes
Have their ingratitude in them Hereditary:
Their blood is cak'd, tis cold, it seldome flowes,
Tis lacke of kindly warmth, they are not kind;
And Nature, as it growes againe toward earth,
Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy.
Goe to Ventidius (prythee be not sad,
Thou art true, and honest; ingeniously I speake,
No blame belongs to thee:) Ventidius lately
Buried his Father, by whose death he's stepp'd
Into a great estate: when he was poore,
Imprison'd, and in scarcity of Friends,
I cleer'd him with five Talents: Greet him from me,
Bid him suppose, some good necessity
Touches his Friend, which craves to be remembred
With those five Talents; that had, give'these Fellowes
To whom tis instant due. Neu'r speake, or thinke,
That Timons fortunes 'mong his friends can siuke.

Stew. I would I could not thinke it:
That thought is Bounties Foe?
Being free it selfe, it thinkes all others fo. Exeunt.

Flaminius waiting to speake with a Lord from his Master, enters a servant to him.

Ser. I have told my Lord of you, he is comming downe to you.

Flam. I thanke you Sir.

Enter Lucullus.

Ser. Heres my Lord.

Luc. One of Lord Timons men? A Gift I warrant.
Why this hits right: I dreamt of a Silver Bafon and Ewre to night. Flaminius, honest Flaminius, you are very respectfully welcome fir. Fill me some Wine. And how does that honourable, Compleate, Free-hearted

Gentleman of Athens, thy very bountifull good Lord and Master?

Flam. His health is well fir.

Luc. I am right glad that his health is well fir: and what halt thou there under thy Cloake, pretty Flaminius?

Flam. Faith, nothing but an empty box Sir, which in my Lords behalfe; I come to intreat your honor to supply: who having great and instant occasion to use fifty Talents, hath sent to your Lordship to furnish him: nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Luc. La, la, la, la: Nothing doubting sayes he? Alas good Lord, a Noble Gentleman tis, if he would not keepe to good a house. Many a time and often I ha din'd with him, and told him on't, and come againe to supper to him of purpose, to have him spend lesse, and yet he would embrace no counsell, take no warning by my comming, every man has his fault, and honesty is his. I ha told him on't, but I could nere get him from't.

Enter Servant, with Wine.

Ser. Please your Lordship, here is the Wine.

Luc. Flaminius, I have noted thee alwayes wise. Heres to thee.

Flam. Your Lordship speakes your pleasure.

Luc. I have observed thee alwayes for a towardly prompt spirit, give thee thy due, and one that knowes what belongs to reason; and canst use the time well, if the time use thee well. Good parts in thee; get you gone fir rah. Draw neerer, honest Flaminius. Thy Lords a bountifull Gentleman, but thou art wise, and thou knowst well enough (although thou com'st to me) that this is no time to lend money, especially upon bare friendship without security. Heres three Solidares for thee, good Boy winke at me, and say thou saw'st me not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Is't possible the world should so much differ,
And we alive that lived? Fly damned basenefie
To him that worships thee.

Luc. Ha? Now I see thou art a Foole, and fit for thy Master. Exit Lucullus.

Fla. May these adde to the number that may scald thee:
Let multen Coyne be thy damnation,
Thou diseale of a friend, and not himselfe:
Has friendship such a faint and milky heart,
It turnes in lesse then two nights? O you gods!
I feele my Matters passion. This Slave unto his honor,
Has my Lords meate in him:
Why should it thrive, and turne to Nutriment,
When he is turn'd to payson?
O may Diseases onely worke upon't:
And when he's sicke to death, let not that part of Nature
Which my Lord paid for, be of any powre,
To expell sicknesse, but prolong his hower. Exit.

Enter Lucius, with three Strangers.

Luc. Who the Lord Timon? He is my very good friend and an honourable Gentleman.

1 We know him for no lesse, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing my Lord, and which I heare from common rumours, now Lord Timons happy howres are done and past, and his estate shrinks from him.

Luc. Fye no, doe not beleeeve it; he cannot want for money.

2 But beleeeve you this my Lord, that not long agoe, one of his men was with the Lord Lucullus, to borrow so many Talents, nay urg'd extremely for't, and shewed what

What necessity belong'd too't, and yet was deny'de.

Luc. How?

2 I tell you, deny'de my Lord.

Luc. What a strange case was that? Now before the gods I am asham'd on't. Denied that honourable man? There was very little honour shew'd in. For my owne part, I must needs confesse, I have received some small kindnesse from him, as Money, Plate, Jewels, and such like Trifles; nothing comparing to his: yet had he mistooke him, and sent to me, I should ne're have denied his occasion so many Talents.

Enter Servilius.

Servil. See, by good hap yonders my Lord, I have sweet to see his honor. My honor'd Lord.

Luci. Servilius? You are kindly met sir. Farthewell, commend me to thy honourable vertuous Lord, my very exquisite Friend.

Servil. May it please your Honor, my Lord hath sent

Luci. Ha? what has he sent? I am so much endeered to that Lord; hes ever sending: how shall I thanke him think'it thou? And what has he sent now?

Serv. Has onely sent his present occasion now my Lord: requesting your Lordship to supply his instant use with so many Talents.

Luci. I know his Lordship is but merry with me, He cannot want fifty five hundred Talents,

Servil. But in the meane time he wants lesse my Lord. If his occasion were not vertuous, I should not urge it halfe so faithfully.

Luc. Dost thou speake seriously Servilius?

Serv. Vpon my soule tis true Sir.

Luc. What a wicked Beast was I to disfurnish my selfe against such a good time, when I might ha shewne my selfe honorable? how unluckily it hapned, that I should purchase the day before for a little part, and undoe a great deale of honor? Servilius, now before the gods I am not able to doe (the more beast I say) I was sending to use Lord Timon my selfe, these gentlemen can witnesse; but I would not for the wealth of Athens I had don't now Commend me bountifully to his good Lordship, and I hope his Honor will conceive the fairest of me, because I have no power to be kind. And tell him this from me, I count it one of my greatest afflictions say, that I cannot pleasure such an honorable Gentleman. Good Servilius, will you befriend me so farre, as to use mine owne words to him?

Serv. Yes sir, I shall.

Exit Servilius.

Luci. Hee looke you out a good turne Servilius.

True as you said, Timon is shrunke indeed, And he thats once deny'd, will hardly speed.

Exit.

1 Doe you observe this Hastilius?

2 I, to well.

1 Why this is the worlds soule, And iust of the same peece Is every Flatterers sport: who can call him his friend That dips in the same dish? For in my knowing Timon has bin this Lords Father, And kept his credit with his purse: Supported his estate, nay Timons money Has paid his men their wages. He ne're drinke, But Timons Silver treads upon his Lip, And yet, oh see the monstrousnesse of man, When he looks out in an ungratefull shape: He does deny him (in respect of his)

What charitable men affoord to Beggers.

3 Religion grones at it.

1 For mine owne part, I never tasted Timon in my life, Nor came any of his bounties over me, To marke me for his Friend. Yet I protest. For his right Noble mind, illustrious Vertue, And honourable Carriage, Had his necessity made use of me. I would have put my wealth into Donation, And the best halfe should haue return'd to him, So much I love his heart: But I perceive, Men must learne now with pitty to dispence. For policie sits above Conscience.

Exeunt.

Enter a third servant with Sempronius, another of Timons Friends.

Semp. Must he needs trouble me in't? Hum. Bove all others?

He might have tried Lord Lucius, or Lucullus, And now Ventidius is wealthy too, Whom he redeemd from prison. All these Owe their estates unto him.

Ser. My Lord, They have all bin touch'd, and all are found Base-Mettle, For they have all denied him.

Semp. How? have they denyde him? Has Ventidius and Lucullus deny'de him, And does he send to me? Three? Humh? It shewes but little love, or judgement in him. Must I be his last Refuge? his friend: (like Physicians) That thriu'd, give him over. Must I take th' Cure upon Has much disgrac'd me in't, I'me angry at him, (me?) That might have knowne my place. I see no sence for't, But his occasions might have wooed me first:

For in my conscience, I was the first man That ere received gift from him. And does he thinke so backwardly of me now, That Ile requite it last? No: So it may prove an Argument of Laughter To th'rest, and 'mongst Lords I be thought a Foole: Ide rather then the worth of thrice the summe, Had sent to me first, but for my minds sake: Ide such a courage to doe him good. But now returne, And with their faint reply, this answer joyne; Who bates mine honor, shall not know my Coyne. Exit.

Ser. Excellent: Your Lordships a goodly Villaine. the divell knew not what he did, when he made inan Politicke; he crossed himselfe by't: and I cannot thinke, but in the end, the villanies of man will set him cleere. How fairely this Lord strives to appeare foule? Takes Vertuous Copies to be wicked: like those, that under hot ardent zeale, would set whole Realmes on fire, of such a nature is his politike love.

This was my Lords best hope, now all are fled Save onely the gods. Now his friends are dead, Doores that were ne're acquainted with their Wards Many a bounteous yeere, must be imploy'd Now to guard sure their Master: And this is all a liberall course allowes, Who cannot keepe his wealth, must keepe his house. Ex.

Enter Varro's man, meeting others. All Timons Creditors to wait for his coming out. Then enter Lucius and Hortensius.

Var. man. Well met, good morrow Timon and Hortensius

Titus

Tit. The like to you kind Varro.

Hort. Lucius, what doe we meet together?

Luc. I, and I thinke one businesse do's command us all.
For mine is money.

Tit. So is theirs, and ours.

Enter Philotus.

Luci. And fir Philotus too.

Phi. Good day at once.

Luci. Welcome good Brother.
What doe you thinke the houre?

Phil. Labouring for Nine.

Luci. So much?

Phil. Is not my Lord seene yet?

Luci. Not yet.

Phil. I wonder on't, he was wont to shine at seaven.

Luci. I, but the dayes are waxt shorter with him:
You must confider, that a Prodigall course
Is like the Sunnes, but not like his recoverable, I feare:
Tis deepest Winter in Lord Timons purse, that is: One
may reach deepe enough, and yet find little.

Phil. I am of your feare, for that.

Tit. Ile shew you how t'observe a strange event:
Your Lord sends now for Money?

Hort. Most true, he does.

Tit. And he weares Jewels now of Timons guift,
For which I waite for money.

Hort. It is against my heart.

Luci. Marke how strange it shoves,
Timon in this, should pay more then he owes:
And e'ne as if your Lord should weare rich Jewels,
Ad send for money for 'em.

Hort. I'm weary of this Charge,
The gods can witnesse:
I know my Lord hath spent of Timons wealth,
And now ingratitude, makes it worse then stealth.

Varro. Yes mine's three thousand Crownes:
Whats yours?

Luci. Five thousand mine.

Var. Tis much deepe, and it should seeme by th'sum
Your Masters confidence was above mine,
Else surely his had equall'd.

Enter Flamininus.

Tit. One of Lord Timons men.

Luc. Flamininus? Sir, a word: Pray is my Lord ready to come forth?

Flam. No, indeed he is not.

Tit. We attend his Lordship: pray signifie so much.

Flam. I need not tell him that, he knowes you are too
diligent.

Enter Steward in a Cloake, muffled.

Luci. Ha: is not that his Steward muffled so?
He goes away in a Clowd: Call him, call him.

Tit. Doe you heare, fir?

2 Varro. By your leave, fir.

Stew. What doe ye aske of me, my friend.

Tit. We waite for certaine Money heere, fir.

Stew. I, if Money were as certaine as your waiting,
Twere sure enough.

Why then preferr'd you not your summes and Billes
When your false Masterseate of my Lords meat?
Then they would smile and fawne upon his debts,
And take downe th'intrest into their glutt'nous Mawes.
You doe your selves but wrong, to stirre me up,
Let me passe quietly:

Beleeve't, my Lord and I have made an end,
I have no more to reckon, he to spend.

Luci. I, but this answer will not serve.

Stew. If twill not serve, tis not so base as you,
For you serve Knaves.

1 Varro. How? what does his casheer'd Worship mut-
ter?

2 Varro. No matter what, he's poore, and thats revenge enough. Who can speake broader, then he that has no house to put his head in? Such may rayle against great buildings.

Enter Servilius.

Tit. Oh heres Servilius: now we shall know some answer.

Serv. If I might beseech you Gentlemen, to repayre
some other houre, I should derive much from't. For tak't of my soule, my Lord leanes wondrously to discontent:
his comfortable temper has forsooke him, hes much out of health, and keepes his Chamber.

Luci. Many doe keepe their Chambers, are not sicke:
And if it be so farre beyond his health,
Me thinkes he should the sooner pay his debts,
And make a cleare way to the gods.

Servil. Good gods.

Tit. We cannot take this for answer, fir.

Flamininus within. Servilius helpe, my Lord, my Lord.

Enter Timon in a rage.

Tim. What, are my dores oppos'd against my passage?
Have I bin ever free, and must my house
Be my retentive Enemy? My Goale?
The place which I have Feasted, does it now
(Like all Mankind) shew mean Iron heart?

Luci. Put in now Titus.

Tit. My Lord, heere is my Bill.

Luci. Heres mine.

1 Var. And mine, my Lord.

2 Var. And ours, my Lord.

Philo. All our Billes.

Tim. Knocke me downe with em, cleave me to the Girdle.

Luc. Alas my Lord.

Tim. Cut my heart in summes.

Tit. Mine, fifty Talents.

Tim. Tell out my bloud.

Luc. Five thousand Crownes, my Lord.

Tim. Five thousand drops payes that.

What yours? and yours?

1 Var. My Lord.

2 Var. My Lord.

Tim. Teare me, take me, and the gods fall upon you.

Exit Timon.

Hort. Faith I perceive our Masters may throw their caps at their money, these debts may well be call'd desperate ones, for a madman owes em.

Exit Hort.

Enter Timon.

Tim. They have e'ne put my breath from me the slaves. Creditors? Divels.

Stew. My deere Lord.

Tim. What if it should be so?

Stew. My Lord.

Tim. Ile have it so. My Steward?

Stew. Heere my Lord.

Tim. So fitly? Goe, bid all my Friends againe,

Lucius, Lucullus, add Semprovius: All,
Ile once more feast the Rascals.

Stew. O my Lord, you onely speake from your distracted soule; there's not so much left to furnish out a moderate Table.

Timon.

Tim. Be it not in thy care :
Goe I charge thee, invite them all, let in the tide
Of Knaves once more: my Cooke and Ile provide. Exeunt.

*Enter three Senators at one doore, Alcibiades meeting them,
with Attendants.*

1 Sen. My Lord, you have my voyce, too't,
The faults Bloudy ;
Tis necessary he should dye :
Nothing imboldens sinne so much, as Mercy.

2 Most true; the Law shall bruise em.

Alci. Honor, health, and compassion to the Senate,
1 Now Captaine.

Alci. I am an humble Sutor to your Vertues ;
For pitty is the vertue of the Law,
And none but Tyrants use it cruelly.
It pleases time and Fortune to lye heavy
Vpon a Friend of mine, who in hot blood
Hath stept into the Law : which is past depth
To thole that (without heed) doe plunge intoo't.
He is a Man (setting his Fate aside) of comely Vertues,
Nor did he soyle the fact with Cowardice.
(And honour in him, which buyes out his fault)
But with a Noble Fury, and faire spirit,
Seeing his Reputation touch'd to death,
He did oppose his Foe ;
And with such sober and unnoted passion
He did behoove his anger ere twas spent,
As if he had but prov'd an Argument.

1 Sen. You undergoe too strict a Paradox,
Striving to make an ugly deed looke faire :
Your words have tooke such paines, as they labourd
To bring Mad-slaughter into forme, and set Quarrelling
Vpon the head of Valour ; which indeed
Is Valour mis-begot, and came into the world,
When Sects, and Factions were newly borne.
Hes truly Valiant, that can wisely suffer
The worst that man can breath,
And make his wrongs, his Out-sides,
To weare them like his Rayment, carelessly.
And ne're preferre his injuries to his heart,
To bring it into danger.

If wrongs be evils, and inforce us kill,
What Folly tis, to hazard life for ill.

Alci. My Lord.

1 Sen. You cannot make grosse sinnes looke cleare,
Torevenge is no Valour, but to beare.

Alci. My Lords, then under favour, pardon me.
If I speake like a Captaine.

Why doe fond men expose themselves to Battell,
And not endure all threats? sleepe upon't,
And let the Foes quietly cut their throats
Without repugnancy? if there be
Such Valour in the bearing, what make we
Abroad? Why then, Women are more valiant
That stay at home, if Bearing carry it:
And the Assc, more Captaine then the Lyon? the fellow
Loaden with Irons, wiser then the Iudge?
If Wisedome be in suffering. Oh my Lords,
As you are great, be pittifully good,
Who cannot condemne rashnesse in cold blood?
To kill, I grant, is sinnes extreamest Gust,
But in defence, by Mercy, tis most just.
To be in Anger, is impiety :
But who is Man, that is not Angry.
Weigh but the Crime with this.

2 Sen. You breath in vaine.

Alci. In vaine?

His service done at Lacedemon, and Bizantium,
Were a sufficient briber for his life.

1 What's that?

Alci. Why I say my Lords ha's done faire service,
And slaine in fight many of your enemies :
How full of valour did he beare himselfe
In the last Conflict, and made plenteous wounds?
2 He has made too much plenty with em
Hes a sworne Riotor, he has a sinne
That often drownes him, and takes his valour prisoner.
If there were no Fots, that were enough
To overcome him. In that Beastly fury,
He has bin knowne to commit outrages,
And cherrish Factions. Tis infer'd to us,
His dayes are foule, and his drinke drangerous.

1 He dyes.

Alci. Hard fate: he might have dyed in warre.
My Lords, if not for any parts in him,
Though his right arme might purchase his owne time,
And be in debt to none: yet more to move you.
Take my deserts to his, and joyne em both.
And for I know, your reverend Ages love Security,
Ile pawne my Victories, all my honours to you,
Vpon his good returnes.

If by this Crime, he owes the Law his life,
Why let the Waare receive't in valiant gore,
For Law is strict, and Warre is nothing more.

1 We are for Law, he dyes, urge it no more
On height of our displeasure: Friend, or Brother,
He forfeits his owne blood, that spilles another,

Alci. Must it be so? It must not bee :
My Lords, I doe beseech you know me.

2 How?

Alci. Call me to your remembrances.

3 What.

Alci. I cannot thinke but your Age has forgot me,
It could not else be, I should prove so bace,
To sue and be deny'de such common Grace.
My wounds ake at you.

1 Doe you dare our anger?
Tis few words, but spacious in effect.
We banish thee for ever.

Alci. Banish me?

Banish your dotage, banish usury,
That makes the Senate ugly.

1 If after two dayes shine, Athens containe thee,
Attend our waightier Iudgement,
And not to swell our Spirit.
He shall be executed presently. Exeunt.

Alci. Now the gods keepe you old enough,
That you may live
Onely in bone, that none may looke on you.
I'm worse then mad: I have kept backe their Foes
While they have told their Money, and let out
Their Coyne upon large interest. I my selfe,
Rich onely in large hurts. All those, for this?
Is this the Balsome, that the usuring Senat
Powres into Captaines wounds? ha Banishment.
It comes not ill: I hate not to be banisht,
It is a cause worthy my Spleene and Fury,
That I may strike at Athens. Ile cheere up
My discontented Troopes, and lay for hearts :
Tis honour with most Lands to be at ods,
Souldiers should brooke as little wrongs as gods. Exit.
Enter

Enter divers Friends at severall doores.

- 1 The good time of day to you, fir.
 2 I also wish it to you: I thinke this honourable Lord did but try us this other day-
 1 Vpon that were my thoughts tying when we encountred. I hope it is not so low with him as he made it seeme in the triall of his severall Friends.
 2 It should not be, by the perswasion of his new Feasting.
 1 I should thinke so: He hath sent me an earnest inviting, which many my neere occasions did urge me to put off: but he hath conjur'd me beyond them, and I must needs appeare.
 2 In like manner was I in debt to my importunat businesse, but he would not heare my excuse. I am sorry, when he sent to borrow of mee, that my Provision was out.
 1 I am sicke of that grieve too, as I understand how all things goe.
 2 Every man heares so: what would he have borrowed of you?
 1 A thousand Peeeces.
 2 A thousand Peeeces?
 1 What of you?
 2 He sent to me fir——Heere he comes.

Enter Timon and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart Gentlemen both; and how fare you?

- 1 Ever at the best, hearing well of your Lordship.
 2 The Swallow followes not Summer more willing, then we your Lordship.
Tim. Nor more willingly leaves Winter, such Summer Birds are men. Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompence this long stay: Feast your eares with the Musicke a while: if they will fare so harshly o'th Trumpets sound: we shall too't presently.

1 I hope it remains not unkindly with your Lordship, that I return'd you an empty Messenger.

Tim. O fir, let it not trouble you.

2 My Noble Lord.

Tim. Ah my good friend, what cheere?

The Banket brought in.

2 My most honorable Lord, I am e'ne sicke of shame, that when your Lordship the other day sent to me, I was so unfortunate a Begger.

Tim. Thinke not on't, fir.

2 If you had sent but two houres before.

Tim. Let it not cumber your better remembrance. Come bring in all together.

2 All cover'd Dishes.

1 Royall Cheare, I warrant you.

3 Doubt not that, if money and the season can yeild it

1 How doe you? Whats the newes?

3 Alcibiades is banish'd: here you of it.

Both. Alcibiades banish'd?

3 Tis so, be sure of it.

1 How? How?

2 I pray you upon what?

Tim. My worthy Friends, will you draw neere?

3 Ile tell you more anon. Here's a Noble feast toward

2 This is the old man still.

3 Wilt hold? Wilt hold?

2 It does: but time will, and so.

3 I doe conceive.

Tim. Each man to his stoole, with that spurre as hee would to the lip of his mistris: your dyet shal be in al places alike. Make not a City Feast of it, to let the meat coule, ere we can agree upon the first place. Sir, fir. The gods require our Thankes.

You great Benefactors, sprinkle our Society with Thankes. For your owne guises, make your selves prais'd: But reserve still to give, least your Deities be despised. Lend to each man enough, that one neede not lend to another. For were your Godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Make the Meate be beloved, more then the Man that gives it. Let no Assembly of Twenty, be without a score of Villaines. If there sit twelve Women at the Table, let a dozen of them be as they are. The rest of your Fees, O gods, the Senators of Athens, together with the common legge of People, what is amisse in them, you Gods, make suteable for destruction. For these my present Friends, as they are to me nothing, so in nothing blesse them, and to nothing are they welcome.

Vncover Dogges, and lap.

Some speake. What doe's his Lordship meane?

Some other. I know not.

Tim. May you a better Feast never behold You knot of Mouth-friends: Smoke, and luke warme Is your perfection. This is Timons last, (water Who sticke and spangled you with flatteries, Washes it off, and sprinkles in your faces Your reeking villany. Live loath'd, and long Most smiling, smooth, detested Parasites, Curteous destroyers, affable Wolves, meeke Beares: You fooles of fortune, Trencher-friends, Time flies, Cap and knee Slaves, vapours, and Minute Iackes Of Man and Beast, the infinite Malady Cruel you quite o're, What do'st thou goe? Soft, take thy Physicke first; thou too, and thou; Stay I will lend thee money, borrow none. What? All in Motion? Henceforth be no Feast, Whereat a Villaine's not a welcome Guest. Burne house, sinke Athens, henceforth hated be Of Timon, Man, and all humanity.

Exit.

Enter the Senators, with other Lords.

- 1 How now, my Lords?
 2 Know you the quality of Lord Timons fury?
 3 Push, did you see my Cap?
 4 I have lost my Gowne.
 1 Hes but a mad Lord, and nought but humors swaies him. He gave me a Jewell th'other day, and now he has beate it out of my hat.
 Did you see my Jewell?
 2 Did you see my Cap.
 3 Heere tis.
 4 Heere lyes my Gowne.
 1 Lets make no stay.
 2 Lord Timons mad.
 3 I fee't upon my bones.
 4 One day he giues us Diamonds, next day stones.

Exeunt the Senators.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Let me looke backe upon thee. O thou Wall That girdles in those Wolves, dive in the earth, And fence not Athens. Mutrons, turne incontinent, Obedience fayle in Children: Slaves and Fooles

Plucke

Plucke the grave wrinkled Senate from the Bench,
And minister in their steeds, to generall Filthes.
Convert oth' instant greene Virginitie,
Doo't in your Parents eyes. Bankrupts, hold fast
Rather then render backe; out with your Knives,
And cut your Trusters throates. Bound Servants, steale,
Large-handed Robbers your grave Masters are,
And pill by Law: Maide to thy Masters bed,
Thy Mistris is o'th Brothell. Sonne of sixteene,
Plucke the lyn'd Crutch from thy old limping Sire,
With it, beate out his Braines. Piety, and feare,
Religion to the gods, Peace, Iustice, Truth,
Domesticke awe, Night-rest, and Neighbour-hood,
Instruction, Manners, Mysteries, and Trades,
Degrees, Observances, Customes, and Lawes,
Decline to your confounding contraries.
And yet Confusion live: Plagues incident to men,
Your potent and infectious Feavors, heape
On Athens ripe for stroke. Thou cold Sciatica,
Cripple our Senators, that their limbes may halt
As lamely as their Manners. Lust and liberty
Creepe in the Mindes and Marrowes of our youth,
That gainst the streame of Vertue they may strive,
And drowne themselves in Riot. Itches, Blaines,
Sowe all th' Athenian bosomes, and their crop
Be generall Leprosie: Breath, infect breath,
That their Society (as their Friendship) may
Be meere poyson. Nothing Ile beare from thee
But nakednesse, thou detestable Towne.
Take thou that too, with multiplying Bannes:
Timon will to the Woods, where he shall find
Th' unkindest Beast, more kinder then Mankind.
The gods confound (heare me you good gods all)
Th' Athenians both within and out that Wall:
And graunt as Timon growes, his hate may grow
To the whole race of Mankind, high and low.
Amen.

Exit.

Enter Steward with two or three Servants.

1 Heare you Master Steward, where's our Master?
Are we undone, cast off, nothing remaining?

Stew. Alacke my fellowes, what should I say to you?
Let me be recorded by the righteous gods,
I am as poore as you.

1 Such a house broke?
So Noble a Master false, all gone, and not
One Friend to take his Fortune by the arme,
And goe along with him.

2 As we doe turne our backs
From our Companion, throwne into his grave,
So his Familiars to his buried Fortunes
Slinke all away leave their false vowes with him
Like empty purses pickt. and his poore selfe
A dedicated Beggar to the Ayre,
With his disease, of all shunn'd poverty,
Walkes likes contempt alone. More of our Fellowes.

Enter other Servants.

Stew. All broken Implements of a ruin'd house.

3 Yet doe our hearts weare Timons Livery,
That see I by our Faces: we are Fellowes still,
Serving alike in sorrow: Leak'd is our Barke,
And we poore Mates, stand on the dying Decke,
Hearing the Surges threat: we must all part
Into this Sea of Ayre.

Stew. Good fellowes all.

The latest of my wealth Ile share amongst you.
Where ever we shall meete, for Timons sake,
Let's yet be Fellowes. Lets shake our heads, and say
As twere a Knell unto our Masters Fortunes,
We have seene better dayes. Let each take some:
Nay put out all your hands: Not one word more,
Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poore.

Embrace and part severall wayes.

Oh the fierce wretchednesse that glory bring us!
Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt,
Since Riches point to Misery and Contempt?
Who would be so mock'd with glory, or to live
But in a Dreame of Friendship,
To have his pompe, and all what state compounds,
But onely painted like his varnished Friends:
Poore honest Lord, brought lowe by his owne heart,
Vndone by goodnesse: Strange unuall blood,
When mans worst sinne is, he do's too much Good.
Who then dares to be halfe so kindagen?
For Bounty that makes gods, doe still marre Men,
My deere Lord, blest to be most accurst,
Rich onely to be wretched; thy great Fortunes
Are made thy chiefe Afflictions. Alas (kind Lord)
Hes flung in Rage from this ingratchfull Seate
Of monstrous Friends:
Nor his he with him to supply his life,
Or that which can command it:
Ile follow and enquire him out.
Ile ever serve his minde, with my best will,
Whilst I have gold, Ile be his Steward still,

Exit.

Enter Timon in the Woods.

Tim. O blessed breeding Sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity: below thy Sisters Orbe
Infect the ayre. Twin'd Brothers of one wombe,
Whose procreation, residence, and birth,
Scarce is dividant; touch them with severall fortunes,
The greater scornes the lesser. Not Nature
(To whom all fores lay siege) can beare great Fortune
But by contempt of Nature.
Raile me this Begger, and deny't that Lord,
The Senators shall beare contempt Hereditary,
The Begger Native honor.
It is the Pastor Lords, the Brothers sides,
The want that makes him leane: who dares? who dares
In purity of Manhood stand upright
And say, this mans a flatterer. If one be,
So are they all: for every grize of fortune
Is smooth'd by that below. The Learned pate
Duckes to the Golden foole. Alls obliquy:
Theres nothing levell in our cursed Natures
But direct villany. Therefore be abhorr'd,
All Feasts, Societies, and Throngs of men.
His semblable, yea himselfe Timon disdaines,
Destruction phang mankind, Earth yeeld me Rootes,
Who seekes for better of thee, sawce his pallate
With thy moist operant Poyson. What is heere?
Gold? Yellow, glittering, precious Gold?
No gods, I am no idle Votarist,
Roots you cleere Heavens. Thus much of this will make
Blacke, white; fowle, faire; wrong, right;
Base, Noble; Old, young; Coward, valliant.
Ha you gods! why this? what this you gods? why this
Will lodge your Priests and Servants from your sides:
Plucke stout mens pillowes from below the heads.

This

This yellow Slave,
Will knit and breake Religions, blesse th'accurst,
Make the hoare Leprosie ador'd, place Theeves.
And give them Title, knee, and approbation
With Senators on the Bench? This is it
That makes the wappen'd Widdow wed againe;
Shee, whom the Spittle-house, and vlcrous sores,
Would cast the gorge at. This Embalmes and Spices
To'th'Aprill day againe. Come damn'd Earth,
Thou common whore of Mankind, that puttes oddes
Among the rout of Nations, I will make thee.
Doe thy right Nature. March a farre off.
Ha? A Drumme? Th'art quicke,
But yet Ile bury thee: Thou't goe (strong Theefe).
When Gowty keepers of thee cannot stand:
Nay stay thou out for earnest.

*Enter Alcibiades with Drumme and Fife in wa-like manner
and Phrynia, and Timandra.*

Alci. What art thou there? speake.

Tim. A beast as thou art. The Canker gnaw thy heart
For shewing me againe the eyes of man,

Alci. What is thy name? Is man so hatefull to thee,
That art thy selfe a Man?

Tim. I am Misanthropos, and hate Mankind.
For thy part, I doe with thou wert a dogge,
That I might love thee something.

Alci. I know thee well:
But in thy Fortunes am unlearn'd, and strange.

Tim. I know thee to, and more then that I know thee
I not desire to know, Follow thy Drumme,
With mans blood paint the ground Gules, Gules:
Religious Cannons, civill Lawes are cruell,
Then what should warre be? This fell whore of thine,
Hath in her more destruction then thy Sword,
For all her Cherubin looke.

Phrynia. Thy lips rot off.

Tim. I will not kisse thee, then the rot returns
To thine owne lippes againe.

Alci. How came the Noble Timon to this change?

Tim. As the Moone doe's, by wanting light to give:
But then renew I could not like the Moone,
There were no Sunnes to borrow of.

Alci. Noble Timon, what friendship may I doe thee?

Tim. None, but to maintaine my opinion.

Alci. What is it Timon?

Tim. Promise me Friendship, but performe none.
If thou wilt not promise, the Gods plague thee, for thou art a man: if thou do'st performe, confound thee, for thou art a man.

Alci. I have heard in some sort of thy Miseries.

Tim. Thou sawst them when I had prosperity.

Alci. I see them now, then was a blessed time.

Tim. As thine is now, held with a brace of Harlots.

Timandra. Is this th'Athenian Minion, whom the world,
Voyc'd so regardfully?

Tim. Art thou Timandra?

Timandra. Yes.

Tim. Be a whore still, they love thee not that use thee, give them diseases, leaving with thee their Lust. Make use of thy salt houres, season the slaves for Tubbes and Bathes, bring downe Rose-checkt youth to the Fubfast,
and the Diet.

Timandra. Hang thee Monster,

Alci. Pardon him sweet Timandra, for his wits
Are drown'd and lost in his Calamities.

I have but little Gold of late, brave Timon,
The want whereof, doth dayly make revolt
In my penurious Band. I have heard and greev'd
How curst Athens, mindlesse of thy worth,
Forgetting thy great deeds, when Neighbour states
But for thy Sword and Fortune trod upon them.

Tim. I prethee beate thy Drum, and get thee gone.

Alci. I am thy Friend, and pittie thee deere Timon.

Tim. How dost thou pittie him whom thou dost trouble,
I had rather be alone.

Alci. Why fare thee well:

Heere is some gold for thee.

Tim. Keepe it, I cannot eat it.

Alci. When I have laid proud Athens on a heape.

Tim. Warr'st thou gainst Athens.

Alci. I Timon, and have cause.

Tim. The gods confound them all in thy Conquest,
And thee after, when thou hast Conquer'd.

Alci. Why me, Timon?

Tim. That by killing of Villaines
Thou was't borne to conquer my Country.
Put up thy Gold. Go on, heeres Gold, goe on;
Be as a Planetary plague, whom Iove
Will ore some high-Vic'd City, hang his poyson
In the sicke ayre: let not thy sword skip one.
Pitty not honour'd Age for his white Beard,
He is an Usurer. Strike me the counterfet Matron,
It is her habite onely, that is honest,
Her selfe a Bawd. Let not the Virgins cheek
Make soft thy trenchant Sword: for those Milke pappes
That through the window Barne bore at mens eyes,
Are not within the Lease of pittie writ,
But set them down horrible Traitors. Spare not the Babe
Whose dimpled smiles from Fooles exhaust their mercy;
Thinke it a Bastard, whom the Oracle
Hath doubtfully pronounced, the throat shall cut,
And mince it fans remorse. Swear against Objects,
Put Armour on thine eares, and on thine eyes,
Whose prooffe, nor yels of Mothers, Maides, nor Babes
Nor sight of Priests in holy Vestments bleeding,
Shall pierce a jot. Theres Gold to pay thy Souldiers.
Make large confusion: and thy fury spent,
Counfounded be thy selfe. Speake not, be gone.

Alci. Hast thou gold yet, Ile take the gold thou givest
me, not all thy Counsell.

Tim. Dost thou or dost thou not, Heavens curse upon
thee.

Both. Give us some Gold good Timon, hast thou more?

Tim. Enough to make a Whore forswear her Trade,
And to make Whores, a Bawd. Hold up you Sluts
Your Aprons mountant; you are not Othable,
Although I know you'll sweare, terribly sweare
Into strong shudders, and to heavenly Agues
Th'immortall gods that heare you. Spare your Oathes:
Ile trust to your Cenditions, be whores still.
And he whose pious breath seekes to convert you,
Be strong in Whore, allure him, burne him up,
Let your close fire predominate his smoke,
And be no turne-coats: yet may your paines six mouths
Be quite contrary. And Thatch
Your poore thin Roofes with burthens of the dead,
(Some that were hang'd) no matter:
Weare them, betray with them; Whore still,
Paint till a horse may myre upon your face:
A pox of wrinkles.

Both. Well, more Gold, what then?

Believe't

Beleeve't that wee'l do any thing for Gold.

Tim. Consumptions sowe
In hollow bones of man, strike their sharpe shinnes,
And marre mens spurring. Cracke the Lawyers voyce,
That he may never more false Title pleade,
Nor sound his Quillets shrilly; Hoare the Flamen,
That scold't against the quality of flesh,
And not beleeves himselfe. Downe with the Nose,
Downe with it flat, take the Bridge quite away
Of him, that his particular to foresee (bald
Smels from the generall weale. Make curld'pate Ruffians
And let the unscarr'd Braggarts of the Warre
Deriue some paine from you. Plagve all,
That your Activity may defeate and quell
The fourse of all Erektion. There's more Gold.
Do you damne others, and let this damne you,
And ditches grave you all.

Beth. More counsell with more Money, bounteous
Timon.

Tim. More whore, more Mischeefe first, I have given
you earnest.

Alc. Strike up the Drum towards Athens, farewell
Timon : if I thrive well, Ile visit thee againe.

Tim. If I hope well, Ile never see thee more,

Alc. I never did the harme.

Tim. Yes, thou spok'st well of me.

Alc. Call'st thou that harme?

Tim. Men dayly finde it. Get thee away,
And take thy Beagles with thee.

Alc. We but offend him, strike. Exeunt.

Tim. That Nature being sicke of mans unkindnesse
Should yet be hungry: Common Mother, thou
Whose wombe vnmeasureable, and infinite breest
Teemes and feeds all; whose selfesame Mettle
Whereof thy proud Child (arrogant man) is puffed,
Engenders the blacke Toad, and Adder blew,
The gilded Newt, and eyelesse venom'd Worme,
With all th'abhorred Births below Crispe Heaven,
Whereon Hyperione quickning fire doth shine:
Yield him, who all the humane Sonnes do hate,
From forth thy plentious bosome, one poore roote:
Enscare thy Fertile and Conceptions wombe,
Let it no more bring out ingratefull man.
Goe great with Tygers: Dragons, Wolues, and Beares,
Teeme with new Monsters, whom thy upward face
Hath to the Marbled Mansion all above
Never presented. O, a Root, deare thanks:
Dry up thy Marrowes, Vines, and Plough-torne Leas,
Whereof ingratefull man with Licourish draughts
And Morfels Vnctions, greases his pure minde,
That from it all Consideration slippes——

Enter Apemantus.

More man? Plague, plague.

Alc. I was directed hither. Men report,
Thou dost affect my Manners, and dost use them.

Tim. 'Tis then, because thou dost not keepe a dogge
Whom I would imitate, Consumption catch thee.

Alc. This is in thee a Nature but infected,
A poore unmanly Melancholy sprung
From change of future. Why this Spade: this place?
This Slave like Habit, and these lookes of Care?
Thy Flatterers yet weare Silke, drinke Wine, lye soft
Hugge their diseased Perfumes, and have forgot
That ever Timon was. Shame not these Woods,
By putting on the cunning of a Carper.
Bethou a Flatterer now, and seeke to thrive

By that which ha's undone thee; hindge thy knee,
And let his very breath whom thou'lt observe
Blow of thy Cap: praise his most vicious straine,
And call it excellent: thou wast told thus:
Thou gav'st thine eares (like Tapsters, that bid welcome)
To Knaves, and all approachers: 'Tis most iust
That thou turne Rascal, had'st thou wealth againe,
Rascalls should have't, Do not assume my likeness,

Tim. Where I like thee, I'd throw away my selfe.

Alc. Thou hast cast away thy selfe, being like thy selfe
A Madman so long, now a Foole: what think'st
That the bleake ayre, thy boysterous Chamberlaine
Will put thy shirt on warme? Will these moist Trees,
That have out-liv'd the Eagle, paye thy heeles
And skip when thou point'st out? Will the cold brooke
Candied with Ice, Cawdle thy Morning taste
To cure thy o're-nights surfer? Call the Creatures,
Whose naked Natures live in all the spight
Of wrekefull Heaven, whose bare unhoused Trunkes,
To the conflicting Elements expos'd
Answer meere Nature: bid them flatter thee.
O thou shalt finde.

Tim. A Foole of thee: depart.

Alc. I love the better now, then ere I did.

Tim. I hate thee worse.

Alc. Why?

Tim. Thou flatter'st misery.

Alc. I flatter not, but say thou art a Caytiffe.

Tim. Why do'st thou seeke me out?

Alc. To vex thee.

Tim. Alwaies a Villaines Office, or a Fooles.
Dost please thy selfe in't?

Alc. I.

Tim. What, a Knave too?

Alc. If thou did'st put this sowre cold habit on
To calligate thy pride, 'twere well: but thou
Dost it enforcedly: Thou'dst Countier be againe
Wert thou not Beggar: willing misery
Out-lives: in certaine pompe, is crown'd before:
The one is filling stil, never compleat:
The other, at high wish: best state Contentlesse,
Hath a distracted and most wretched being,
Worse then the worst, Content.

Thou should'st desire to dye, being miserable.

Tim. Not by his breath, that is more miserable.
Thou art a Slave, whom Fortunes tender arme
With favour never clapt: but bred a Dogge.
Had'st thou like us from our first swath proceeded,
The sweet degrees that this breefe world affords,
To such as may the passive drugges of it
Freely command't: thou would'st have plung'd thy selfe
In generall Rior, melted downe thy youth
In different beds of Lust, and never learn'd
The Icie precepts of respect, but followed
The sugred game before thee. But my selfe,
Who had the world as my Confectionary,
The mouthes, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of men,
At duty more then I could frame employments:
That numberlesse upon the sticke, as leaves
Do on the Oake, have with one Winters brush
Fell from their boughes, and left me open bare,
For every storme that blowes. I to beare this,
That never knew but better, is some burthen:
Thy Nature, did commence in sufferance, Time
Hath made the hard in't. Why should'st thou hate Men?
They never flatter'd thee. What hast thou given?

Tit. The like to you kind Varro.

Hort. Lucius, what doe we meet together?

Luc. I, and I thinke one businesse do's command us all.
For mine is money.

Tit. So is theirs, and ours.

Enter Philotus.

Luci. And fir Philotus too.

Phi. Good day at once.

Luci. Welcome good Brother.
What doe you thinke the houre?

Phil. Labouring for Nine.

Luci. So much?

Phil. Is not my Lord seene yet?

Luci. Not yet.

Phil. I wonder on't, he was wont to shine at seaven.

Luci. I, but the dayes are waxt shorter with him:
You must consider, that a Prodigall course
Is like the Sunnes, but not like his recoverable, I feare:
Tis deepest Winter in Lord Timons purse, that is: One
may reach deepe enough, and yet find little.

Phil. I am of your feare, for that.

Tit. Ile shew you how't observe a strange event:
Your Lord sends now for Money?

Hort. Most true, he does.

Tit. And he weares Jewels now of Timons gift,
For which I waite for money.

Hort. It is against my heart.

Luci. Marke how strange it shewes,
Timon in this, should pay more then he owes:
And e'ne as if your Lord should weare rich Jewels,
Ad send for money for'em.

Hort. I'm weary of this Charge,
The gods can witnesse:
I know my Lord hath spent of Timons wealth,
And now ingratitude, makes it worse then stealth.

Varro. Yes mine's three thousand Crownes:
Whats yours?

Luci. Five thousand mine.

Var. Tis much deepe, and it should seeme by th'sum
Your Masters confidence was above mine,
Else surely his had equall'd.

Enter Flaminius.

Tit. One of Lord Timons men.

Luc. Flaminius? Sir, a word: Pray is my Lord ready to come forth?

Flam. No, indeed he is not.

Tit. We attend his Lordship: pray signifie so much.

Flam. I need not tell him that, he knowes you are too
diligent.

Enter Steward in a Cloake, muffled.

Luci. Ha: is not that his Steward muffled so?
He goes away in a Clowd: Call him, call him.

Tit. Doe you heare, sir?

2 Varro. By your leave, sir.

Stew. What doe ye aske of me, my friend.

Tit. We waite for certaine Money heere, sir.

Stew. I, if Money were as certaine as your waiting,
Twere sure enough.

Why then prefer'd you not your summes and Billes
When your false Masterseate of my Lords meat?
Then they would smile and fawne upon his debts,
And take downe th'intrest into their glutt'nous Mawes.
You doe your selves but wrong, to stirre me up,
Let me passe quietly:
Beleeve't, my Lord and I have made an end,
I have no more to reckon, he to spend.

Luci. I, but this answer will not serve.

Stew. If twill not serve, tis not so base as you,
For you serve Knaves.

1 Varro. How? what does his casheer'd Worship mut-
ter?

2 Varro. No matter what, he's poore, and thats revenge enough. Who can speake broader, then he that has no house to put his head in? Such may rayle against great buildings.

Enter Servilius.

Tit. Oh heres Servilius: now we shall know some answer.

Serv. If I might beseech you Gentlemen, to repayre
some other houre, I should derive much from't. For tak't of my soule, my Lord leanes wondrously to discontent:
his comfortable temper has forsooke him, hes much out of health, and keeps his Chamber.

Luci. Many doe keepe their Chambers, are not sicke:
And if it be so farre beyond his health,
Me thinkes he should the sooner pay his debts,
And make a cleare way to the gods.

Servil. Good gods.

Tit. We cannot take this for answer, sir.

Flaminius within. Servilius helpe, my Lord, my Lord.

Enter Timon in a rage.

Tim. What, are my dores oppos'd against my passage?
Have I bin ever free, and must my house
Be my retentive Enemy? My Goale?
The place which I have Feasted, does it now
(Like all Mankind) shew me an Iron heart?

Luci. Put in now Titus.

Tit. My Lord, heere is my Bill.

Luci. Heres mine.

1 Var. And mine, my Lord.

2 Var. And ours, my Lord.

Philo. All our Billes.

Tim. Knocke me downe with em, cleave me to the Girdle.

Luc. Alas my Lord.

Tim. Cut my heart in summes.

Tit. Mine, fifty Talents.

Tim. Tell out my bloud.

Luc. Five thousand Crownes, my Lord.

Tim. Five thousand drops payes that.
What yours? and yours?

1 Var. My Lord.

2 Var. My Lord.

Tim. Teare me, take me, and the gods fall upon you.
Exit Timon.

Hort. Faith I perceive our Masters may throw their caps at their money, these debts may well be call'd desperate ones, for a madman owes em.
Exit.

Enter Timon.

Tim. They have e'ne put my breath from me the slaves. Creditors? Divels.

Stew. My deere Lord.

Tim. What if it should be so?

Stew. My Lord.

Tim. Ile have it so. My Steward?

Stew. Heere my Lord.

Tim. So fitly? Goe, bid all my Friends againe,
Lucius, Luullius, add Sempronius: All,
Ile once more feast the Rascals.

Stew. O my Lord, you onely speake from your distracted soule; there's not so much left to furnish out a moderate Table.

Timon.

Tim. Be it not in thy care :
Goe I charge thee, invite them all, let in the tide
Of Knaves once more: my Cooke and Ile provide. Exeunt.

*Enter three Senators at one doore, Alcibiades meeting them,
with Attendants.*

1 Sen. My Lord, you have my voyce, too't,
The faults Bloudy ;
Tis necessary he should dye:
Nothing imboldens sinne so much, as Mercy.

2 Most true; the Law shall bruise em.

Alci. Honor, health, and compassion to the Senate,
1 Now Captaine.

Alci. I am an humble Sutor to your Vertues ;
For pittie is the vertue of the Law,
And none but Tyrants use it cruelly.
It pleases time and Fortune to lye heavy
Vpon a Friend of mine, who in hot blood
Hath stept into the Law : which is past depth
To thole that (without heed) doe plunge intoo't.
He is a Man (setting his Fate aside) of comely Vertues,
Nor did he soyle the fact with Cowardice.
(And honour in him, which buyes out his fault)
But with a Noble Fury, and faire spirit,
Seeing his Reputation touch'd to death,
He did oppose his Foe ;
And with such sober and unnoted passion
He did behoove his anger ere twas spent,
As if he had but prov'd an Argument.

1 Sen. You undergoe too strict a Paradox,
Striving to make an ugly deed looke faire :
Your words have tooke such paines, as they labourd
To bring Mad-slaughter into forme, and set Quarrelling
Vpon the head of Valour ; which indeed
Is Valour mis-begot, and came into the world,
When Sects, and Factions were newly borne.
Hes truly Valiant, that can wisely suffer
The worst that man can breath,
And make his wrongs, his Out-sides,
To weare them like his Rayment, carelessly,
And ne're preferre his injuries to his heart,
To bring it into danger.
If wrongs be evils, and inforce us kill,
What Folly tis, to hazard life for ill.

Alci. My Lord.

1 Sen. You cannot make grosse sinnes looke cleare,
Torevenge is no Valour, but to beare.

Alci. My Lords, then under favour, pardon me.
If I speake like a Captaine.

Why doe fond men expose themselves to Battell,
And not endure all threats? sleepe upon't,
And let the Foes quietly cut their throats
Without repugnancy? if there be
Such Valour in the bearing, what make we
Abroad? Why then, Women are more valiant
That stay at home, if Bearing carry it:
And the Assie, more Captaine then the Lyon? the fellow
Loaden with Irons, wiser then the Iudge?
If Wisedome be in suffering. Oh my Lords,
As you are great, be pittifully good,
Who cannot condemne rashnesse in cold blood?
To kill, I grant, is sinnes extreamest Gust,
But in defence, by Mercy, tis most just.
To be in Anger, is impiety :
But who is Man, that is not Angry.
Weigh but the Crime with this.

2 Sen. You breath in vaine.

Alci. In vaine?

His service done at Lacedemon, and Bizantium,
Were a sufficient briber for his life.

1 What's that?

Alci. Why I say my Lords ha's done faire service,
And slaine in fight many of your enemies :
How full of valour did he beare himselfe
In the last Conflict, and made plenteous wounds?

2 He has made too much plenty with em
Hes a sworne Riotor, he has a sinne
That often drownes him, and takes his valour prisoner.
If there were no Fots, that were enough
To overcome him. In that Beastly fury;
He has bin knowne to commit outrages,
And cherriish Factions. Tis inferr'd to us,
His dayes are foule, and his drinke drangerous.

1 He dyes.

Alci. Hard fate: he might have dyed in warre.
My Lords, if not for any parts in him,
Though his right arme might purchase his owne time,
And be in debt to none: yet more to move you.
Take my deserts to his, and joyne em both.
And for I know, your reverend Ages love Security,
Ile pawne my Victories, all my honours to you,
Vpon his good returnes.

If by this Crime, he owes the Law his life,
Why let the Waare receive't in valiant gore,
For Law is strict, and Warre is nothing more.

1 We are for Law, he dyes, urge it no more
On height of our displeasure: Friend, or Brother,
He forfeits his owne blood, that spilles another,

Alci. Must it be so? It must not bee:
My Lords, I doe beseech you know me.

2 How?

Alci. Call me to your remembrences.

3 What.

Alci. I cannot thinke but your Age has forgot me,
It could not else be, I should prove so bace,
To sue and be deny'de such common Grace.
My wounds ake at you.

1 Doe you dare our anger?
Tis few words, but spacious in effect.
We banish thee forever.

Alci. Banish me?

Banish your dotage, banish usury,
That makes the Senate ugly.

1 If after two dayes shine, Athens containe thee,
Attend our waightier Iudgement,
And not to swell our Spirit.
He shall be executed presently. Exeunt.

Alci. Now the gods keepe you old enough,
That you may live
Onely in bone, that none may looke on you.
I'm worse then mad: I have kept backe their Foes
While they have told their Money, and let out
Their Coyne upon large interest. I my selfe,
Rich onely in large hurts. All those, for this?
Is this the Balsome, that the usuring Senat
Powres into Captaines wounds? ha Banishment.
It comes not ill: I hate not to be banisht,
It is a cause worthy my Spleene and Fury,
That I may strike at Athens. Ile cheere up
My discontented Troopes, and lay for hearts :
Tis honour with most Lands to be at ods,
Souldiers should brooke as little wrongs as gods. Exit.
Enter

Enter divers Friends at severall doores.

1 The good time of day to you, sir.
2 I also wish it to you: I thinke this honourable Lord did but try us this other day-

1 Vpon that were my thoughts tying when we encountered. I hope it is not so low with him as he made it seeme in the triall of his severall Friends.

2 It should not be, by the perswasion of his new Feasting.

1 I should thinke so: He hath sent me an earnest inviting, which many my neere occasions did urge me to put off: but he hath conjur'd me beyond them, and I must needs appeare.

2 In like manner was I in debt to my importunate business, but he would not heare my excuse. I am sorry, when he sent to borrow of mee, that my Provision was out.

1 I am sicke of that griefe too, as I understand how all things goe.

2 Every man heares so: what would he have borrowed of you?

1 A thousand Peeces.

2 A thousand Peeces?

1 What of you?

2 He sent to me sir——Heere he comes.

Enter Timon and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart Gentlemen both; and how fare you?

1 Ever at the best, hearing well of your Lordship.

2 The Swallow followes not Summer more willing, then we your Lordship.

Tim. Nor more willingly leaves Winter, such Summer Birds are men. Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompence this long stay: Feast your eares with the Musicke a while: if they will fare so harshly o'th Trumpets sound: we shall too't presently.

1 I hope it remains not unkindly with your Lordship, that I return'd you an empty Messenger.

Tim. O sir, let it not trouble you.

2 My Noble Lord.

Tim. Ah my good friend, what cheere?

The Banket brought in.

2 My most honorable Lord, I am e'ne sicke of shame, that when your Lordship the other day sent to me, I was so unfortunate a Begger.

Tim. Thinke not on't, sir.

2 If you had sent but two houres before.

Tim. Let it not cumber your better remembrance. Come bring in all together.

2 All cover'd Dishes.

1 Royall Cheare, I warrant you.

3 Doubt not that, if money and the season can yeild it

1 How doe you? Whats the newes?

3 Alcibiades is banish'd: here you of it.

Both. Alcibiades banish'd?

3 Tis so, be sure of it.

1 How? How?

2 I pray you upon what?

Tim. My worthy Friends, will you draw neere?

3 Ile tell you more anon. Here's a Noble feast toward

2 This is the old man still.

3 Wilt hold? Wilt hold?

2 It does: but time will, and so.

3 I doe conceive.

Tim. Each man to his stoole, with that spurre as hee would to the lip of his mistress: your dyet shal be in all places alike. Make not a City Feast of it, to let the meat coole, ere we can agree upon the first place. Sir, sir. The gods require our Thankes.

You great Benefactors, sprinkle our Society with Thankfulness. For your owne gifts, make your selves prais'd: But reserve still to give, lest your Deities be despised. Lend to each man enough, that one neede not lend to another. For were your Godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Make the Meate be beloved, more then the Man that gives it. Let no Assembly of Twenty, be without a score of Villaines. If there sit twelve Women at the Table, let a dozen of them be as they are. The rest of your Fees, O gods, the Senators of Athens, together with the common legge of People, what is amisse in them, you Gods, make suteable for destruction. For these my present Friends, as they are to me nothing, so in nothing blasse them, and to nothing are they welcome.

Vncover Dogges, and lap.

Some speake. What doe's his Lordship meane?

Some other. I know not.

Tim. May you a better Feast never behold You knot of Mouth-friends: Smoke, and luke warme Is your perfection. This is Timons last, (water Who flucke and spangled you with flatreris, Washes it off, and sprinkles in your faces Your reeking villany. Live loath'd, and long Most smiling, smooth, detested Parasites, Curtious destroyers, affable Wolves, meeke Beares: You fooles of fortune, Trencher-friends, Time flies, Cap and knee Slaves, vapours, and Minute Iackes Of Man and Beast, the infinite Malady Cruft you quite o're, What do'st thou goe? Soft, take thy Physicke first; thou too, and thou; Stay I will lend thee money, borrow none. What? All in Motion? Henceforth be no Feast, Whereat a Villaine's not a welcome Guest. Burne house, sinke Athens, henceforth hated be Of Timon, Man, and all humanity. Exit.

Enter the Senators, with other Lords.

1 How now, my Lords?

2 Know you the quality of Lord Timons fury?

3 Push, did you see my Cap?

4 I have lost my Gowne.

1 Hes but a mad Lord, and nought but humors swaies him. He gave me a Jewell th'other day, and now he has beate it out of my hat.

Did you see my Jewell?

2 Did you see my Cap.

3 Heere tis.

4 Heere lyes my Gowne.

1 Lets make no stay.

2 Lord Timons mad.

3 I fee't upon my bones.

4 One day he giues us Diamonds, next day stones.

Exeunt the Senators.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Let me looke backe upon thee. O thou Wall That girdles in those Wolves, dive in the earth, And fence not Athens. Mutrons, turne incontinent, Obedience fayle in Children: Slaves and Fooles

Plucke

Plucke the grave wrinkled Senate from the Bench,
And minister in their steeds, to generall Filthes.
Convert oth' instant greene Virginitie,
Doo't in your Parents eyes. Bankrupts, hold fast
Rather then render backe; out with your Knives,
And cut your Trusters throates. Bound Servants, steale,
Large-handed Robbers your grave Masters are,
And pill by Law: Maide to thy Masters bed,
Thy Mistris is o'th Brothell. Sonne of sixteene,
Plucke the lyn'd Crutch from thy old limping Sire,
With it, beate out his Braines. Piety, and feare,
Religion to the gods, Peace, Iustice, Truth,
Domesticke awe, Night-rest, and Neighbour-hood,
Instruction, Manners, Mysteries, and Trades,
Degrees, Observances, Customes, and Lawes,
Decline to your confounding contraries.
And yet Confusion live: Plagues incident to men,
Your potent and infectious Feavors, heape
On Athens ripe for stroke. Thou cold Sciatica,
Cripple our Senators, that their limbes may halt
As lamely as their Manners. Lust and liberty
Creepe in the Mindes and Marrowes of our youth,
That gainst the streame of Vertue they may strive,
And drowne themselves in Rior. Itches, Blaines,
Sowe all th' Athenian bosomes, and their crop
Be generall Leprosie: Breath, infect breath,
That their Society (as their Friendship) may
Be meere poysen. Nothing Ile beare from thee
But nakednesse, thou detestable Towne.
Take thou that too, with multiplying Bannes:
Timon will to the Woods, where he shall find
Th' unkindest Beast, more kinder then Mankind.
The gods confound (heare me you good gods all)
Th' Athenians both within and out that Wall:
And graunt as Timon growes, his hate may grow
To the whole race of Mankind, high and low.
Amen.

Exit.

Enter Steward with two or three Servants.

1 Heare you Master Steward, where's our Master?
Are we undone, cast off, nothing remaining?
Stew. Alacke my fellowes, what should I say to you?
Let me be recorded by the righteous gods,
I am as poore as you.

1 Such a house broke?
So Noble a Master false, all gone, and not
One Friend to take his Fortune by the arme,
And goe along with him.

2 As we doe turne our backs
From our Companion, throwne into his grave,
So his Familiars to his buried Fortunes
Slinke all away leave their false vowes with him
Like empty purses pickt. and his poore selfe
A dedicated Beggar to the Ayre,
With his disease, of all shunn'd poverty,
Walkes likes contempt alone. More of our Fellowes.

Enter other Servants.

Stew. All broken Implements of a ruin'd house.

3 Yet doe our hearts weare Timons Livery,
That see I by our Faces: we are Fellowes still,
Serving alike in sorrow: Leak'd is our Barke,
And we poore Mates, stand on the dying Decke,
Hearing the Surges threat: we must all part
Into this Sea of Ayre.

Stew. Good fellowes all.

The latest of my wealth Ile share amongst you.
Where ever we shall meete, for Timons sake,
Let's yet be Fellowes. Lets shake our heads, and say
As twere a Knell unto our Masters Fortunes,
We have seene better dayes. Let each take some:
Nay put out all your hands: Not one word more,
Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poore.

Embrace and part severall wayes.

Oh the fierce wretchednesse that glory bring us!
Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt,
Since Riches point to Misery and Contempt?
Who would be so mock'd with glory, or to live
But in a Dreame of Friendship,
To have his pompe, and all what state compounds,
But onely painted like his varnish'd Friends:
Poore honest Lord, brought lowe by his owne heart,
Vndone by goodnesse: Strange unuall blood,
When mans worst sinne is, he doe's too much Good.
Who then dares to be halfe so kindagen?
For Bounty that makes gods, doe still marre Men,
My deere Lord, blest to be most accurst,
Rich onely to be wretched; thy great Fortunes
Are made thy chiefe Afflictions. Alas (kind Lord)
Hes flung in Rage from this ingratchfull Seate
Of monstrous Friends:
Nor his he with him to supply his life,
Or that which can command it:
Ile follow and enquire him out.
Ile ever serve his minde, with my best will,
Whilst I have gold, Ile be his Steward still,

Exit.

Enter Timon in the Woods.

Tim. O blessed breeding Sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity: below thy Sisters Orbe
Infect the ayre. Twin'd Brothers of one wombe,
Whose procreation, residence, and birth,
Scarfe is dividant; touch them with severall fortunes,
The greater comes the lesser. Not Nature
(To whom all fores lay siege) can beare great Fortune
But by contempt of Nature.
Raife me this Begger, and deny't that Lord,
The Senators shall beare contempt Hereditary,
The Begger Native honor.
It is the Pastor Lords, the Brothers sides,
The want that makes him leane: who dares? who dares
In purity of Manhood stand upright
And say, this mans a flatterer. If one be,
So are they all: for every grize of fortune
Is smoothe'd by that below. The Learned pate
Duckes to the Golden foole. Alls obliquy:
Theres nothing leuell in our curst Natures
But direct villany. Therefore be abhor'd,
All Feasts, Societies, and Throngs of men.
His semblable, yea himselfe Timon disdaines,
Destruction phang mankind, Earth yeeld me Rootes,
Who seekes for better of thee, sawce his pallate
With thy most operant Poyson. What is heere?
Gold? Yellow, glittering, precious Gold?
No gods, I am no idle Votarist,
Roots you cleere Heavens. Thus much of this will make
Blacke, white; fowle, faire; wrong, right;
Base, Noble; Old, young; Coward, valliant.
Ha you gods! why this? what this you gods? why this
Will lagge your Priests and Servants from your sides:
Plucke stout mens pillowes from below the heads.

This

This yellow Slave,
Will knit and breake Religions, blesse th' accurst,
Make the hoare Leprosie ador'd, place Theeves.
And give them Title, knee, and approbation
With Senators on the Bench? This is it
That makes the wappen'd Widdow wed againe;
Shee, whom the Spittle-house, and vlcrous sores,
Would cast the gorge at. This Embalmes and Spices
To th' Aprill day againe. Come damn'd Earth,
Thou common whore of Mankind, that puttes oddes
Among the rout of Nations, I will make thee.
Doe thy right Nature. March afarre off.
Ha? A Drumme? Th' art quicke,
But yet Ile bury thee: Thou' t goe (strong Theefe).
When Gowty keepers of thee cannot stand:
Nay stay thou out for earnest.

*Enter Alcibiades with Drumme and Fife in wa-like manner
and Phrynia, and Timandra.*

Alci. What art thou there? speake.

Tim. A beast as thou art. The Canker gnaw thy heart
For shewing me againe the eyes of man.

Alci. What is thy name? Is man so hatefull to thee,
That art thy selfe a Man?

Tim. I am Misanthropos, and hate Mankind.
For thy part, I doe with thou wert a dogge,
That I might love thee something.

Alci. I know thee well:
But in thy Fortunes am unlearn'd, and strange.

Tim. I know thee to, and more then that I know thee
I not desire to know. Follow thy Drumme,
With mans blood paint the ground Gules, Gules:
Religious Cannons, civill Lawes are cruell,
Then what should warre be? This fell whore of thine,
Hath in her more destruction then thy Sword,
For all her Cherubin looke.

Phrynia. Thy lips rot off.

Tim. I will not kisse thee, then the rot returns
To thine owne lippes againe.

Alci. How came the Noble Timon to this change?

Tim. As the Moone doe's, by wanting light to give:
But then renew I could not like the Moone,
There were no Sunnes to borrow of.

Alci. Noble Timon, what friendship may I doe thee?

Tim. None, but to maintaine my opinion.

Alci. What is it Timon?

Tim. Promise me Friendship, but performe none.
If thou wilt not promise, the Gods plague thee, for thou art a man: if thou do'st performe, confound thee, for thou art a man.

Alci. I have heard in some sort of thy Miseries.

Tim. Thou sawst them when I had prosperity.

Alci. I see them now, then was a blessed time.

Tim. As thine is now, held with a brace of Harlots.

Timandra. Is this th' Athenian Minion, whom the world,
Voyc'd so regardfully?

Tim. Art thou Timandra?

Timandra. Yes.

Tim. Be a whore still, they love thee not that use thee,
give them diseases, leaving with thee their Lust. Make use of thy salt houres, season the slaves for Tubbes and Bathes, bring downe Rose-checkt youth to the Fubfast,
and the Diet.

Timandra. Hang thee Monster,

Alci. Pardon him sweet Timandra, for his wits
Are drown'd and lost in his Calamities.

I have but little Gold of late, brave Timon,
The want whereof, doth dayly make revolt
In my penurious Band. I have heard and greev'd
How curst Athens, mindlesse of thy worth,
Forgetting thy great deeds, when Neighbour states
But for thy Sword and Fortune trod upon them.

Tim. I prethee beate thy Drum, and get thee gone.

Alci. I am thy Friend, and pittie thee deere Timon.

Tim. How dost thou pittie him whom thou dost trouble,
I had rather be alone.

Alci. Why fare thee well:

Heere is some gold for thee.

Tim. Keepe it, I cannot eat it.

Alci. When I have laid proud Athens on a heape.

Tim. Warr'st thou, gainst Athens.

Alci. I Timon, and have cause.

Tim. The gods confound them all in thy Conquest,
And thee after, when thou hast Conquer'd.

Alci. Why me, Timon?

Tim. That by killing of Villaines
Thou was't borne to conquer my Country.
Put up thy Gold. Go on, heeres Gold, goe on;
Be as a Plannetary plague, whom Iove
Will ore some high-Vic'd City, hang his poyson
In the sicke ayre: let not thy sword skip one.
Pitty not honour'd Age for his white Beard,
He is an Vsurer. Strike me the counterfet Matron,
It is her habite onely, that is honest,
Her selfe a Bawd. Let not the Virgins cheekes
Make soft thy trenchant Sword: for those Milke pappes
That through the window Barne bore at mens eyes,
Are not within the Lease of pittie writ,
But set them down horrible Traitors. Spare not the Babe
Whose dimpled smiles from Fooles exhaust their mercy;
Thinke it a Bastard, whom the Oracle
Hath doubtfully pronounced, the throat shall cut,
And mince it sans remorse. Swear against Objects,
Put Armour on thine eares, and on thine eyes,
Whose prooffe, nor yels of Mothers, Maides, nor Babes
Nor sight of Priests in holy Vestments bleeding,
Shall pierce a jot. There's Gold to pay thy Souldiers.
Make large confusion: and thy fury spent,
Counfounded be thy selfe. Speake not, be gone.

Alci. Hast thou gold yet, Ile take the gold thou givest
me, not all thy Counsell.

Tim. Dost thou or dost thou not, Heavens curse upon
thee.

Both. Give us some Gold good Timon, hast thou more?

Tim. Enough to make a Whore forweare her Trade,
And to make Whores, a Bawd. Hold up you Sluts
Your Aprons mountant; you are not Othable,
Although I know you'll sweare, terribly sweare
Into strong shudders, and to heavenly Agues
Th' immortal gods that heare you. Spare your Oathes:
Ile trust to your Cenditions, be whores still.
And he whose pious breath seekes to convert you,
Be strong in Whore, allure him, burne him up,
Let your close fire predominate his smoke,
And be no turne-coats: yet may your paines fix mouths
Be quite contrary. And Thatch
Your poore thin Roofes with burthens of the dead,
(Some that were hang'd) no matter:
Weare them, betray with them; Whore still,
Paint till a horse may myre upon your face:
A pox of wrinkles.

Both. Well, more Gold, what then?

Believe't

Beleeve't that wee'l do any thing for Gold.

Tim. Consumptions sowe
In hollow bones of man, strike their sharpe shinnes,
And marre mens spurring. Cracke the Lawyers voyce,
That he may never more false Title pleade,
Nor sound his Quillets shrilly; Hoare the Flamen,
That scold'it against the quality of flesh,
And not beleeves himselfe. Downe with the Nose,
Downe with it flat, take the Bridge quite away
Of him, that his particular to foresee (bald
Smels from the generall weale. Make curld'pate Ruffians
And let the unscarr'd Braggarts of the Warre
Deriue some paine from you. Plagve all,
That your Activity may defeate and quell
The source of all Erektion. There's more Gold.
Doyou damne others, and let this damne you,
And ditches grave you all.

Both. More counsell with more Money, bounteous
Timon.

Tim. More whore, more Mischeefe first, I have given
you earnest.

Alc. Strike up the Drum towards Athens, farewell
Timon: if I thrive well, Ile uisit thee againe.

Tim. If I hope well, Ile never see thee more,

Alc. I never did the harme.

Tim. Yes, thou spok'st well of me.

Alc. Call'st thou that harme?

Tim. Men dayly finde it. Get thee away,
And take thy Beagles with thee.

Alc. We but offend him, strike. Exeunt.

Tim. That Nature being sicke of mans unkindnesse
Should yet be hungry: Common Mother, thou
Whose wombe vnmeasurable, and infinite breest
Teemes and feeds all; whose selfesame Mettle
Whereof thy proud Child (arrogant man) is pufft,
Engenders the blacke Toad, and Adder blew,
The gilded Newt, and eyelesse venom'd Worme,
With all th'abhorred Births below Crispe Heaven,
Whereon Hyperions quickning fire doth shine:
Yield him, who ail the humane Sonnes do hate,
From forth thy plentious bosome, one poore roote:
Enleare thy Fertile and Conceptions wombe,
Let it no more bring out ingratefull man.
Goe great with Tygers: Dragons, Wolues, and Beares,
Teeme with new Mousters, whom thy upward face
Hath to the Marbled Mansion all above
Never presented. O, a Root, deare thanks:
Dry up thy Marrowes, Vines, and Plough-torne Leas,
Whereof ingratefull man with Licourish draughts
And Morfels Vnctions, greases his pure minde,
That from it all Consideration slippes——

Enter Apemantus.

More man? Plague, plague.

Alc. I was directed hither. Men report,
Thou dost affect my Manners, and dost use them.

Tim. 'Tis then, because thou dost not keepe a dogge
Whom I would imitate, Consumption catch thee.

Alc. This is in thee a Nature but infected,
A poore unmanly Melancholy sprung
From change of future. Why this Spade: this place?
This Slave like Habit, and these lookes of Care?
Thy Flatterers yet weare Silke, drinke Wine, lye soft
Hugge their diseased Perfumes, and have forgot
That ever Timon was. Shame not these Woods,
By putting on the cunning of a Carper.
Bethou a Flatterer now, and seeke to thrive

By that which ha's undone thee; hindge thy knee,
And let his very breath whom thou'lt observe
Blow of thy Cap: praise his most vicious straine,
And call it excellent: thou wast told thus:
Thou gav'st thine eares (like Tapsters, that bid welcome)
To Knaves, and all approachers: 'Tis most iust
That thou turne Rascal, had'st thou wealth againe,
Rascalls should have't, Do not assume my likeness,

Tim. Where I like thee, I'de throw away my selfe.

Ape. Thou hast cast away thy selfe, being like thy selfe
A Madman so long, now a Foole: what think'st
That the bleake ayre, thy boysterous Chamberlaine
Will put thy shirt on warme? Will these moyst Trees,
That have out-liv'd the Eagle, page thy heeles
And skip when thou point'st out? Will the cold brooke
Candied with Ice, Cawdle thy Morning taste
To cure thy o're-nights surfer? Call the Creatures,
Whose naked Natures live in all the spight
Of wrekefull Heaven, whose bare unhoused Trunkes,
To the conflicting Elements expos'd
Answer meere Nature: bid them flatter thee.
O thou shalt finde.

Tim. A Foole of thee: depart.

Ape. I love the better now, then ere I did.

Tim. I hate thee worse.

Ape. Why?

Tim. Thou flatter'st misery.

Ape. I flatter not, but say thou art a Caytiffe.

Tim. Why do'st thou seeke me out?

Ape. To vex thee.

Tim. Alwaies a Villaines Office, or a Fooles.
Dost please thy selfe in't?

Ape. I.

Tim. What, a Knave too?

Ape. If thou did'st put this sowre cold habit on
To caltigate thy pride, 'twere well: but thou
Dost it enforcedly: Thou'dst Countier be againe
Wert thou not Beggar: willing misery
Out-lives: in certaine pompe, is crown'd before:
The one is filling stil, never compleat:
The other, at high wish: best state Contentlesse,
Hath a distracted and most wretched being,
Worse then the worst, Content.

Thou should'st desire to dye, being miserable.

Tim. Not by his breath, that is more miserable.
Thou art a Slave, whom Fortunes tender arme
With favour never claspt: but bred a Dogge.
Had'st thou like us from our first swath proceeded,
The sweet degrees that this breefe world affords,
To such as may the passive drugges of it
Freely command'st: thou would'st have plung'd thy selfe
In generall Rior, melted downe thy youth
In different beds of Lust, and never learn'd
The Icie precepts of respect, but followed
The sugred game before thee. But my selfe,
Who had the world as my Confectionary,
The mouthes, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of men,
At duty more then I could frame employments:
That numberlesse upon the sticke, as leaves
Do on the Oake, have with one Winters brust
Fell from their boughes, and left me open bare,
For every storme that blowes. I to beare this,
That never knew but better, is some burthen:
Thy Nature, did commence in sufferance, Time
Hath made the hard in't. Why should'st thou hate Men?
They never flatter'd thee. What hast thou given?

If thou wilt curse: thy Father (that poore ragge)
Must be thy subiect; who in t'pight put stufte
To some shee-Begger, and compounded thee
Poore Rogve, hereditary. Hence be gone,
If thou hadst not beene borne the worst of men,
Thou hadst bene a Knave and Flatterer.

Ape. Art thou proud yet?

Tim. I, that I am not thee.

Ape. I, that I was no Prodigall.

Tim. I, that I am one now.

Werc all the wealth I have shut up in thee,
I'd give the leave to hange it. Get the gone:
That the whole life of Athens were in this,
Thus would I eate it.

Ape. Heere, I will mend thy feast.

Tim. First mend thy company, take away thy selfe.

Ape. So I shall mend mine owne, by th'lacke of thine

Tim. 'Tis not well mended so, it is but botcht;

If not, I would it were.

Ape. What would'st thou have to Athens?

Tim. Thee thicker in a whirlewind: if thou wilt,
Tell them there I have Gold, looke, so I have.

Ape. Heere is no use for Gold.

Tim. The best, and truest:

For here it sleepe, and do's no hyred harme.

Ape. Where lye'st a nights Timon?

Tim. Vnder that's above me.

Where feed'st thou a dayes Apemantus?

Ape. Where my stomacke findes meate, or rather where I eate it.

Tim. Would poyson were obedient, and knew my mind

Ape. Where would'st thou send it?

Tim. To sawce thy dishes.

Ape. The middle of Humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends. When thou wast in thy Gilt, and thy Perfume, they mockt thee for too much Curiosity: in thy Ragges thou knowest none, but art de-spis'd for the contrary. Ther's a medler for thee, eate it.

Tim. On what I hate, I feed not.

Ape. Do'st hate a Medler?

Tim. I, though it looke like thee.

Ape. And th'hadst hated Medlers sooner, thou should'st have loved thy selfe better now. What man didd'st thou ever know unthrift, that was beloved after his meanes?

Tim. Who without hose meanes thou talk'st of, didst thou ever know belov'd?

Ape. My selfe.

Tim. I understand thee: thou had'st some meanes to keepe a Dogge.

Apem. What things in this world canst thou neereft compare to thy Flatterers?

Tim. Women neereft, but men: men are the things themselves. What would'st thou do with the world Apemantus, if it lay in thy power?

Ape. Give it the Beasts, to be rid of the men.

Tim. Would'st thou have thy selfe fall in the confusion of men, and remaine a Beast with the Beasts.

Ape. I Timon.

Tim. A beastly Ambition, which the Goddes grant thee t'attaine to. If thou wert the Lyon, the Fox would beguile thee: if thou wert the Lambe, the Foxe would eate thee: if thou wert the Fox, the Lion would suspect thee, when peradventure thou wert accus'd by the Asse:
If thou wert the Asse, thy dulnesse would torment thee:
and still thou liu'dst but as a Breakefast to the Wolfe. If thou wert the Wolfe, thy greedinesse would afflicte thee, and oft thou shold'st hazard thy life for thy dinner. Wert thou the Vnicorne, pride and wrath would confound thee, and make thine owne selfe the conquest of thy fury.

Wert thou a Beare, thou would'st be kill'd by the Horke:
wert thou a Horke, thou would'st be seiz'd by the Leopard: wert thou a Leopard, thou wert Germane to the Lion, and the spotted of thy Kindred, were Iurors on thy life. All thy safety were remotion, and thy defence absence. What Beast could'st thou bee, that were not subject to a Beast: and what a Beast art thou already, that feelt not thy losse in transformation.

Ape. If thou could'st please me
With speaking to me thou might'st
Have hit upon it heere.

The Common wealth of Athens, is become A Forrest of Beasts.

Tim. How ha's the Asse broke the wall, that thou art out of the City.

Ape. Yonder comes a Poet and a Painter:
The plague of Company light upon thee:
I will feare to catch it, and give way.
When I know not what else to do,
Hee see thee againe.

Tim. When there is nothing living but thee,
Thou shalt be welcome.

I had rather be a Beggers Dogge,
Then Apemantus.

Ape. Thou art the Cap
Of all the Fooles alive.

Tim. Would thou wert cleane enough
To spit upon.

Ape. A plague on thee,
Thou art too bad to curse.

Tim. All Villaines
That do stand by thee, are pure.

Ape. There is no Leprosie,
But what thou speak'st.

Tim. If I name thee, Hee beate thee;
But I should infect my hands.

Ape. I would my tongue
Could rot them off.

Tim. Away: thou issue of a mangy dogge.
Coller does kill me,

That thou art alive, I swoond to see thee,

Ape. Would thou would'st burst,

Tim. Away thou tedious Rogue, I am sorry I shall lose a stone by thee,

Ape. Beast.

Tim. Slave.

Ape. Toad.

Tim. Rogue, Rogue, Rogue.

I am sicke of this false world, and will love nought
But even the meere necessities upon't:

Then Timon presently prepare thy grave:

Lye where the light Fome of the Sea may beate
Thy grave-stone dayly, make thine Epitaph,

That death in me, at others lives may laugh.

O thou sweete King-killer, and deare divorce
Twixt naturall Sunne and fire: thou bright defiler of Himew purest bed, thou valiant Mars,

Thou ever, young, fresh, loved, and delicate wooer,
Whose blush doth thawe the consecrated Snow

That lies on Dians lap.

Thou visible God,

That souldrest close Impossibilities.

And mak'st them kisse; that speak'st with every Tongue

To

To every purpose ; O thou touch of hearts,
Think thy slave-man rebels, and by thy vertue
Set them into confounding oddes, that Beasts
May have the world in Empire.

Ape. Would't were so,
But not till I am dead. Ile say th' hast Gold :
Thou wilt be throng'd too shortly.

Tim. Throng'd too ?

Ape. I.

Tim. Thy backe I prythee,

Ape. Live, and love thy misery,

Tim. Long live so, and so dye. I am quit.

Ape. Mothings like men;
Eate Timon, and abhorre then.

Exit Apeman

Enter the Banditti.

1 Where should he have this Gold ? It is some poore Fragment, some slender Ort of his remainder : the meere want of Gold, and the falling from of his Friendes, drove him into this Melancholly.

2 It is nois'd

He both a masse of Treasure,

3 Let us make the assay upon him, if he care not for't, he will supply us easily : if he couetously referue it, how shall's get it ?

2 True : for he beares it not about him :
Tis hid.

1 Is not this hee ?

All. Where ?

2 'Tis his description.

3 He ? I know him.

All. Save thee Timon.

Tim. Now Theeves.

All. Soldiers, not Theeves.

Tim. Both too, and womens Sons.

All. We are not Theeves, but men
That much do want.

Tim. Your greatest want is, you want much of meat :
Why should you want ? Behold, the Earth hath Rootes :
Within this Mile breake forth a hundred Springs :
The Oakes beare Mast, the Briers Scarlet Hips,
The bounteous Huswife Nature, on each bush,
Layes her full Messe before you. Want ? why Want ?

1 We cannot live on Grassie, on Berries, Water,
As Beasts, and Birds, and Fishes.

2 Nor on the Beasts themselves, the Birds and Fishes,
You must eate men. Yet thanks I must you con,
That you are Theeves protest : that you worke not
In holier shapes : For there is boundlesse Theft
In limited Professions. Rascall Theeves

Heere's Gold. Go, sucke the subtle blood o'th Grape,
Till the high Feavour seeth your blood to froth,
And so scape hanging. Trust not the Physitian,
His Antidotes are poyson, and he slayes

More then you Rob : Take wealth, and live together,
Do Villaine do, since you protest to doo't.

Like Workemen, Ile example you with Theevery :
The Sunnes a Theefe, and with his great attraction
Robbes the vaste Sea. The Moores an arrant Theefe.
And her pale fire, she snatches from the Sunne.

The Seas a Theefe, whose liquid Surge, resolves
The Moone into Salt teares. The Earth's a Theefe,
That feeds and breeds by a composition stolne
From gen'ral excrement : each think's a Theefe.

The Lawes, your curbe and whip, in their rough power

Ha's uncheck'd Theft. Love not your selves, away,
Rob one another, there's more Gold, cut throates,
All that you meete are Theeves : to Athens go,
Breake open shoppes, nothing can you steale
But Theeves do loofe it : steale lesse, for this I give you
And Gold confound you howsoere : Amen.

3 Has almost charm'd me from my Profession, by perswading me to it.

1 'Tis in the malice of mankinde, that he thus advises vs not to have vs thrive in our mystery,

2 Ile beleeve him as an Enemy,

And give over my Trade.

1 Let vs first see peace in Athens, there is no time so miserable but a man may be true. Exeunt Theeves.

Enter the Steward to Timon.

Stm. Oh you Gods !
Is yon'd dispis'd and ruinous man my Lord ?
Full of decay and fayling ? Oh Monument
And wonder of good deeds, evilly bestow'd !
What an alteration of Honor has desp'rate want made ?
What vilder thing upon the earth, then Friends,
Who can bring Noblest mindes, to basest ends,
How rarely does it meete with this times guise,
When man was wisht to love his Enemies :
Grant I may ever love, and rather woo
Those that would miscreafe me, then those that doo.
Has caught me in his eye, I will present my honest griefe unto him ; and as my Lord, still serve him with my life.
My deereft Master.

Tim. Away : what art thou ?

Stew. Have you forgot me, Sir ?

Tim. Why dost aske that ? I have forgot all men.

Then if thou grunt'st th' art a man,

I have forgot thee.

Stew. An honest poore seruant of yours.

Tim. Then I know thee not :

I never had honest man about me, I all,
I kept were Knaves, to serve in meate to Villaines,

Stew. The Gods are witnesse,
Nev'r did poore Steward weare a truer greefe
For his undone Lord, then mine eyes for you.

Tim. What dost thou weepe ?

Come neerer, then I love thee

Because thou art a woman, and disclaim'st
Flinty mankinde : whose eyes do never give,
But thorow Lust and Laughter : pittie's sleeping : (ping.
Strange times that weepe with laughing, not with wee-

Stew. I begge of you to know me, good my Lord,
T'accept my greefe, and whilst this poore wealth lasts,
To entertaine me as your Steward still.

Tim. Had I a Steward
So true, so iust, and now so comfortable ?
It almost turnes my dangerous Nature wild.
Let me behold thy face : Surely, this man
Was borne of woman,

Forgive my generall, and exceptlesse rashnesse
You perpetuall sober Gods. I do proclaime
One honest man : Mistake me not, but one :

No more I pray, and hee's a Steward.
How faine would I have hated all mankinde,
And thou redeem'st thy selfe. But all save thee,
I fell with Curses,

Me thiakes thou art more honest now then wise :
For, by oppressing and betraying mee,

Thou might'st have sooner got another Service :
For many, so arrive at second Masters,
Vpon their first Lords necke. But tell me true,
(For I must ever doubt, though ne're so sure)
Is not thy kindnesse subtile, couetous,
If not a Vsuruing kindnesse, and as rich men deale Guifts,
Expecting in returne twenty for one ?

Stew No my most worthy Master, in whose brest
Doubt, and suspect (alas) are plac'd to late :
You should have fear'd false times, when you did Feast.
Suspect still comes where an estate is least,
That which I shew, Heaven knowes, is meere Love,
Duty, and Zeale, to your unmarched minde;
Care of your Food and Living, and beleeve it,
My most honovr'd Lord,
For any benefit that points to mee,
Either in hope, or present, I'de exchange
For this one wish, that you had power and weale
To requite me, by making rich your selfe.

Tim. Looke the 'tis so : thou singly honest man,
Heere take : the Gods out of my misery
Ha's sent the Treasure. Go, live rich and happy.
But thus condition'd : Thou shalt build from men:
Hate all, curse all, shew Charity to none,
But let the famisht flesh slide from the bone,
Ere thou releeve the Begger. Give to dogges
What thou denyest to men. Let Prisons swallow 'em,
Debts wither 'em to nothing, be men like blasted woods
And may Diseases lick vp their false bloods,
And so farewell, and thrive.

Stew. O let me stay and comfort you my Master:

Tim. If thou hat'st Curses
Stay not: flye, whil'st thou art blest and free :
Ne're see thou man, and let me ne're see thee. Exit.

Enter Poet, and Painter.

Pain. As I tooke note of the place, it cannot be farre
Where he abides,

Poet. What's to be thought of him ?
Does the Rumor hold for true,
That hee's so full of Gold ?

Painter. Certaine.

Alciades reports it : Phrinia and Timandra
Had Gold of him, he likewise enrich'd
Poore stragling Soldiers, with great quantity.
'Tis faide, he gave unto his Steward
A mighty summe.

Poet. Then this breaking of his.
Ha's beene but a try for his Friends ?

Painter. Nothing else :
You shall see him a Palme in Athens againe,
And flourish with the highest:
Therefore, 'tis not amisse, we tender our loves
To him, in this suppos'd distresse of his :
It will shew honestly in us,
And is very likely, to loade our purposes
With what they traivaille for,
If it be a iust and true report, that goes
Of his having.

Poet. What have you now
To present unto him ?

Painter. Nothing at this time
But my Visitation : onely I will promise him
An excellent Peece.

Poet. I must serue him so too;
Tell him of an intent that's comming toward him.

Painter. Good as the best
Promising, is the very Ayre o'th' Time ;
It opens the eyes of Expectation.
Performance, is ever the duller for his acte,
And but in the plainer and simpler kind of people,
The deede of Saying is quiet out of use.
To promise, is most Gourtly and fashionable ;
Performance, is a kind of Will or Testament
Which argues a great sicknesse in his iudgement
That makes it.

Enter Timon from his Cave.

Timon. Excellent Workeman,
Thou canst not paint a man so badde
As is thy selfe.

Poet. I am thinking
What I shall say I have provided for him :
It must be a personating of himselfe:
A Satyre against the softnesse of Prosperity,
With a Discovery of the infinite Flatteries
That follow youth and opulency.

Timon. Must thou needes
Stand for a Villaine in thine owne Worke ?
Wilt thou whip thine owne faults in other men ?
Do so, I have Gold for thee.

Poet. Nay let's seeke him.
Then do we sinne against our owne estate,
When we may profit meete, and come too late.

Painter. True :
When the day serues before blacke-corner'd night ;
Finde what thou want'st, by free and offer'd light.
Come.

Tim. Ile meete you at the turne :
What a Gods Gold, that he is worshipt
In a baser Temple, then where Swine feede ?
'Tis thou that rigg'st the Barke, and plow'st the Fome,
Setlest admired reverence in a Slave,
To thee be worshipt, and thy Saints for aye :
Be crown'd with Plagues, that thee alone obay.
Fit I meete them.

Poet. Haile worthy Timon.

Pain. Our late Noble Master.

Timon. Have I once liv'd
To see two honest men ?

Poet. Sir :
Having often of your open Bounty testid,
Hearing you were retyr'd, your Friends false off,
Whose thanklesse Nature (O abhorred Spirits)
Not all the Whippes of Heaven, are large enough,
What, to you,
Whose Starre-like Noblenesse gave life and influence
To their whole being ? I am rapt, and cannot cover
The monstros bulke of this Ingratitude
With any size of words.

Timon. Let it go,
Naked men may see't the better :
You that are honest, by being what you are,
Make them best scene, and knowne.

Pain. He, and my selfe
Have travail'd in the great showre of your guifts,
And sweetly felt it.

Timon. I, you are honest men.

Paines. We are hither come
To offer you our service.

Timon. Most honest men :

Why how shall I requite you?
Can you eat Roots, and drinke cold water, no?

Both. What we can do,
Wee'l do to do you service.

Tim. Y'are honest men,
Y'have heard that I have Gold,
I am sure you have, speake truth, y'are honest men,

Pain. So it is said my Noble Lord, but therefore Came not my Friend, nor I.

Timon. Good honest man: Thou draw'st a counterfet
Best in all Athens, th'art indeed the best,
Thou counterfet'st most lively.

Pain. So, so, my Lord,
Tim. E'ne so fir as I say. And for thy fiction,
Why thy Verse swels with stufte so fine and smooth,
That thou art even Naturall in thine Art.
But for all this (my honest Natur'd friends)
I must needs say you have a little fault,
Marry 'tis not monstrous in you, neither with I
You take much paines to mend.

Both. Beseech your Honour
To make it knowne to us.

Tim. You'l take it ill.
Both. Most thankfully, my Lord.

Timon. Will you indeed?
Both. Doubt it not worthy Lord.

Tim. There's never a one of you but trusts a Knave,
That mightily deceives you.

Both. Do we, my Lord?

Tim. I, and you heare him cogge,
See him dissemble,
Know his grosse patchery, love him, feede him,
Keepe in your bolome, yet remaine assur'd,
That he's a made-up-Villaine.

Pain. I know none such, my Lord.

Pain. Nor I.

Tim. Looke you,
I love you well, Ile give you Gold
Rid me these Villaines from your companies;
Hang them, or stab them, drowne them in draught,
Confound them by some course, and come to me,
Ile give you Gold enough.

Both. Namethem my Lord, let's know them.

Tim. You that way, and you this:
But two in company:
Each man a part, all single, and alone,
Yet an arch Villaine keepes him company:
If where thou art, two Villaines shall not be,
Come not neere him. If thou would'st not recide
But where one Villaine is, then him abandon.
Hence, packe, there's Gold, ye came for Gold ye slaves:
You have worke for me, there's payment, thence,
You are an Alcumist, make Gold of that:
Out Rascall dogges.

Exeunt.

Enter Steward, and two Senators.

Stew. It is vaine that you would speake with Timon:
For he is set so onely to himselfe,
That nothing but himselfe, which lookes like man,
Is friendly with him.

1. Sen. Bring us to his Cave.
It is our part and promise to th'Athenians
To speake with Timon.

2. Sen. At all times alike
Men are not still the same: 'twas Time and Greefes

That fram'd him thus. Time with his fairer hand,
Offering the Fortunes of his former dayes,
The former man may make him: bring us to him
And chanc'e it as it may,

Stew. Heere is his Cave:
Peace and content be heere- Timon, Timon,
Looke out, and speake to Friends: Th'Athenians
By two of their most reverend Senate greet thee:
Speake to them Noble Timon.

Enter Timon out of his Cave.

Tim. Thou Sunne that comfort burne,
Speake and be hang'd:
For each true word, a blister, and each false
Be as a Catherizing to the root o'th'Tougue,
Consuming it with speaking.

1 Worthy Timon.

Tim. Of none but such as you,
And you of Timon.

1 The Senators of Athens, greet thee Timon.

Tim. I thanke them,
And would send them backe the plague,
Could I but catch it for them.

1 O forget
What we are sorry for our selves in thee:
The Senators, with one consent of love,
Intreate thee backe to Athens, who have thought
On speciall Dignities, which vacant lye
For thy best use and wearing.

2 They confesse
Toward thee, forgetfulnesse too generall grosse;
Which now the publike Body, which doth fildome
Play the re-canter, feeling in it selfe
A lacke of Timons ayde, hath since withall
Of it owne fall, restraining ayde to Timon,
And send forth us, to make their sorrowed render,
Together, with a recompence more fruitfull
Then their offence can weigh downe by the Dramme,
I even such heapes and summes of Love and Wealth,
As shall to thee blot out, what wrongs were theirs,
And write in thee the figures of their love,
Ever to read them thine.

Tim. You witch me in it;
Surprize me to the very brinke of teares;
Lend me a Fooles heart, and a womans eyes,
And Ile beweepe these comforts, worthy Senators.

1 Therefore so please thee to returne with us,
And of our Athens, thine and ours to take
The Captaineship, thou shalt be met with thanks,
Allowed with absolute power and thy good name
Live with Authority: so soone we shall drive backe
Of Alcibiades h'approaches wilde
Who like a Boare too savage, doth root up
His Countries peace.

2 And shakes his threatning Sword
Against the walls of Athens.

1 Therefore Timon.

Tim. Well fir, I will: therefore I will fir thus:
If Alcibiades kill my Countrymen,
Let Alcibiades know this of Timon,
That Timon cares not, But if he sacke faire Athens,
And take our goodly aged men by'th'Beards,
Giving our holy Virgins to the itaine
Of contumelious, beastly, mad-brain'd warre:
Then let him know, and tell him Timon speakes it.

In pitty of our aged, and our youth,
I cannot choofe but tell him that I care not,
And let him tak't at worst: For their Knives care not,
While you have throats to answer. For my selfe,
There's not a whittle, in th'unruly Campe,
But I do prize it at my love, before
The reverendst Throat in Athens. So I leave you
To the protection of the prosperous Gods,
As Theeves to Keepers.

Stew. Stay not, all's in vaine.

Tim. Why I was writing of my Epitaph,
It will be leene to morrow, My long sicknesse
Of Health, and Living, now begins to mend,
And nothing brings me all things. Go, live still,
Be Alcibiades your plague; you his,
And last so long enough.

1 We speake in vaine,

Tim. But yet I love my Country, and am not
One that reioyces in the common wracke,
As common brute doth put it.

1 That's well spoke.

Tim. Commend me to my loving Countreymen.

1 These words become your lippes as they passe thorow them.

2 And enter in our eares, like great Triumphers
In their applauding gates.

Tim. Commend me to them,
And tell them, that to ease them of their greefes,
Their feares of Hostile strokes, their Aches losses,
Their pangs of Loue, with other incident throwes
That Natures fragile Vessell doth sustaine
In lifes uncertaine vo age, I will some kindnes do them.
He teach them to prevent wilde Alcibiades wrath.

1 I like this well, he will returne againe.

Tim. I have a Tree which growes heere in my Close,
That mine owne use invites me to cut downe,
And shortly must I fell it. Tell my Friends,
Tell Athens, in the frequency of degree,
From high to low throughout, that who so please
To stop Affliction, let him take his halte;
Come hither ere my Tree hath felt the Axe,
And hang himselfe. I pray you do my greeting.

Stew. Trouble him no further, thus you still shall Finde him.

Tim. Come not to me againe, but say to Athens,
Timon hath made his euerlasting Mansion
Vpon the Beached Verge of the salt Flood,
Which once a day with his embossed Froth
The turbulent Surge shall cover; thither come,
And let my grave-stone be your Oracle:
Lippes, let foure words go by, and Language end:
What is amisse, Plague and Infection mend.
Graves onely be mens workes, and Death their gaine;
Sunne, hide thy Beames, Timon hath done his Raigne.

Exit Timon.

1 His discontents are unremoveably coupled to Nature.

2 Our hope in him is dead: let us returne,
And straine what other meanes is left unto us
In our deere perill.

1 It requires swift foot.

Exeunt.

Enter two other Senators, with a Messenger.

1 Thou hast painfully discover'd: are his Files
As full as they report?

Mef. I have spoke the least.

Besides his expedition promises present approach.

2 We stand much hazard, if they bring not Timon.

Mef. I met a Currier, one mine ancient Friend,
Whom though in generall part we were oppos'd,
Yet our old love made a particular force,
And made us speake like Friends. This man was riding
From Alcibiades to Timon's Cave,
With Letters of intreaty, which imported
His Fellowship i'th'caue against your City,
In part for his sake mov'd.

Enter the other Senators.

1 Heere come our Brothers.

3 Not ake of Timon, nothing of him expect,
The Enemies Drumme is heard and fearefull scouring
Doth choake the ayre with dust: In, and prepare,
Ours is the fall I feare, our Foes the Snare.

Exeunt.

Enter a Souldier in the Woods seeking Timon.

Sol. By all description this should be the place.
Whos heere? Speake hoa. No answer? What is this?
Timon is dead, who hath out-stretcht his span,
Some Beast readeth this; There do's no live a Man.
Dead sure, and this his Grave, what's on this Tomb,
I cannot read: the Character He take with wax,
Our Captaine hath in every Figure skill,
An ag'd Interpreter, though yong in dayes:
B. fore proud Athens hee's set downe by this,
Whose rail the marke of his ambition is.

Exit

Trumpets sound. Enter Alcibiades with his Powers before Athens.

Alc. Sound to this Coward and lascivious Towne,
Our terrible approach.

Sounds a Parly.

The Senators appeare upon the walls.

Till now you have gone on, and filld the time
With all Licentious measure, making your willes
The scope of Iustice. Till now my selfe and such As slept within the shadow of your power
Have wander'd with our travest Armes, and breath'd
Our sufferance vainly. Now the time is flush,
When crouching Marrow in the bearer strong
Cries (of it selfe) no more: Now breathlesse wrong,
Shall sit and pant in your great Chaires of ease,
And pursue Insolence shall breake his winde
With feare and horrid flight.

1. Sen. Noble and young;
When thy first greefes were but a meere conceit,
Ere thou had'st power, or we had cause to feare,
We sent to thee, to give thy rages Balme,
To wipe out our Ingratitude, with Loves
Above their quantity.

2 So did we wooe
Transform'd Timon to our Citties love
By humble Message, and by promist meanes:
We were not all unkinde, nor all deserve
The common stroke of warre.

1 These walles of ours,
Were not erected by their hands, from whom
You have receiv'd your greefe: Nor are they such,
That these great Towres, Trophies, & Schools should fall
For private faults in them.

2 Nor are they living

Who

Who were the motives that you first went out,
Shame (that they wanted cunning in excess)
Hath broke their hearts, March, Noble Lord,
Into our City with thy Banners spread,
By decimation and a tythed death;
If thy Revenges hunger for that Food
Which Nature loathes, take thou the destin'd tenth,
And by the hazard of the spotted dye,
Let dye the spotted.

1 All have not offended:
For those that were, it is not square to take,
On those that are, Revenge: Crimes, like Lands
Are not inherited, then decree Countryman,
Bring in thy ranks, but leave without thy rage,
Spare thy Athenian Cradle, and those Kin
Which in the bluster of thy wrath must fall
With those that have offended, like a Shepheard, Approch the Fold, and cull th'infected forth,
But kill not all together.

2 What thou wilt,
Thou rather shalt enforce it with thy smile,
Then hew too't, with thy Sword.

1 Set but thy foot
Against our rampyrd gates, and they shall ope:
So thou wilt send thy gentle heart before,
To say thou'rt enter Friendly.

2 Throw thy Glove,
Or any Token of thine Honour else,
That thou wilt use the warres as thy redresse,
And not as our Confusion: All thy Powers
Shall make their harbours in our Towne till wee
Have seal'd thy full desire.

Alc. Then there's my Glove,
Descend and open your uncharged Ports,

Those Enemies of Timons, and mine owne
Whom you your selves shall set out for reproofe,
Fall and no more; and to atone your feares
With my more Noble meaning, not a man
Shall passe his quarter, or offend the streame
Of Regular Iustice in your Citties bounds,
But shall be remedied by your publike Lawes
At heaviest answer.

Both. 'Tis most Nobly spoken.

Alc. Descend, and keepe your words.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My Noble Generall, Timon is dead,
Entomb'd upon the very hemme o'th' Sea,
And on his Gravestone, this Insculpture which
With wax I brought away: whose soft Impression
Interprets for my poore ignorance.

Alcibiades reads the Epitaph.

Heere lies a wretched Coarse, of wretched Soule bereft,
Seek not my name: A Plague consume you, Cuts left:
Heere lye I Timon, who all living men and hate,
Passe by, and curse thy fill, but stay not here thy gate.

These well expresse in thee thy latter spirits:
Though thou abhorrd'st in vs our humane greifes, Scornd'st our Braines flow, and those our droplets, which
From niggard Nature fall; yet Rich Conceit
Taught thee to make vast Neptune weepe for aye
On thy low Grave: on faults forgiven. Dead
Is Noble Timon, of whose Memory
Heereafter more. Bring me into your City,
And I will use the Olive with my Sword:
Make war breed peace; make peace flint war, make each
Prescribe to other, as each others Leach.
Let our Drummes strike.

Exeunt.

FIN IS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF IVLIVS CÆSAR.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Flavius, Murellus, and certaine Commoners ouer the Stage.

Flavius.

Hence : home you idle Creatures, get you home :
Is this a Holiday? What, know you not (Being Mechanicall) you ought not walke
Vpon a labouring day, without the signe
Of your Profession? Speake, what Trade art thou?

Car. Why Sir, a Carpenter.

Mur. Where is thy Leather Apron, and thy Rule?
What dost thou with thy best Apparrell on?
You sir what Trade are you?

Cob. Truly Sir, in respect of a fine Workeman, I am but as you would say, a Cobler.

Mur. But what Trade art thou? Answer me directly.

Cob. A Trade Sir, that I hope I may use with, a safe Conscience, which is indeed Sir, a Mender of bad foules.

Fla. What Trade thou knave? Thou naughty knave, what Trade?

Cob. Nay I beseech you Sir, be not out with me: yet
if you be out Sir I can mend you.

Mur. What mean'st thou by that? Mend mee, thou fawcy Fellow?

Cob. Why sir Cobble you.

Fla. Thou art a Cobler art thou?

Cob. Truly sir, all that I live by, is with the Aule: I meddle with no Tradesmans matters, nor womans matters; but withall I am indeed Sir, a Surgeon to old shooes:
when they are in great danger, I recover them. As proper men as ever trod upon Neates Leather, have gone upon my handy worke.

Fla. But wherefore art not in thy Shop to day?
Why do'st thou leade these men about the streets?

Cob. Truly sir, to weare out their shooes, to get my selfe into more worke. But indeede sir we make Holy-day to see Caesar, and to reioyce in his Triumph.

Mur. Wherefore reioyce?

What Conquest brings he home?

What Tributaries follow him to Rome,

To grace in Captive bonds his Chariot Wheels:

You Blockes, you stones, you worse then senselesse things:

O you hard hearts, you cruell men of Rome,

Knew you not Pompey many a time and oft?

Have you climb'd up to Walles and Battlements,

To Towres and Windowes? Yea, to Chimney tops,

Your Infants in your Armes, and there have fate

The live-long day, with patient expectation,

To see great Pompey passe the streets of Rome :
And when you saw his Chariot but appeare,
Have you not made an Vniuersall shout,
That Tyber trembled underneath her bankes
To heare the replication of your sounds,
Made in her Concave Shotes?

And do you now put on your best attyre?

And do you now cull out a Holyday?

And do you now strew Flowers in his way,
That comes in Triumph over Pompey's blood?

Be gone,

Runne to your houses, fall upon your knees,

Pray to the Gods to intermit the plague

That needs must light on this Ingratitude.

Fla. Go, go, good Countrymen, and for this fault
Assemble all the poore men of your sort ;
Draw them to Tyber bankes, and weepe your teares
Into the Channell, till the lowest streame
Do kisse the most exalted Shores of all.

Exeunt all the Commoners.

See where their basest mettle be not mou'd,
They vanish tongue-tyed in their guiltinesse :
Go you downe that way towards the Capitoll,
This way will I : Disrobe the Images,
If you do finde them deckt with Ceremonies,

Mur. May we do so?

You know it is the Feast of Lupercall.

Fla. It is no matter, let on Images
Be hung with the Caesars Trophees : Ile about,
And drive away the Vulgar from the streets ;
So do you too, where you perceiue them thicke.
These growing Feathers, pluckt from Caesars wing,
Will make him flye an ordinary pitch,
Who else would soare above the view of men.
And keepe us all in ser vile fearefulnesse,

Exeunt.

Enter Caesar, Antony for the Course, Calphurnia, Portia, De-cius, Cicero, Brutus, Cassius, Caska, a Soothsayer: after them Murellus and Flavius.

Cal. Calphurnia.

Cask. Peace ho, Caesar speakes.

Cal. Calphurnia.

Calp. Heere my Lord.

Cal. Stand you directly in Antonio's way,
When he doth run his course. Antonio.

Ant. Caesar, my Lord.

Cal. Forget not in your speed Antonio,
To touch Calphurnia : for our Elders say,

The

The Barren touched in this holy chace,
Shake off their sterile curse.

Ant. I shall remember,
When Caesar sayes Do this ; it is perform'd.

Cas. Set on, and leave no Ceremony out.

Sooth. Caesar.

Cas. Ha? Who calles?

Cas. Bid every noyse be still : peace yet againe.

Cas. Who is it in the presse, that calles on me?

I heare a Tongue shriller then all the Musicke
Cry, Caesar : Speake, Caesar is turn'd to heare.

Sooth. Beware the Ides of March,

Cas. What man is that?

Br. A Sooth-sayer bids you beware the Ides of March

Cas. Set him before me, let me see his face.

Cassi. Fellow, come from the throng, looke upon Caesar.

Cas. What sayst thou to me now? Speake once againe.

Sooth. Beware the Ides of March.

Cas. He is a Dreamer let us leave him : Passe.

Sennet. Exeunt. Manent Brut. & Cassi.

Cassi. Will you goe see the order of the course?

Brut. Not I.

Cassi. I pray you doe.

Brut. I am not Gameiom : I do lacke some part
Of that quicke Spirit that is in Antony :
Let me not hinder Cassius your desires;
Ile leave you.

Cassi. Brutus, I doe obserue you now of late:
I have not from your eyes, that gentlenesse
And shew of Love, as I was wont to have :
You beare too stubborne, and too strange a hand
Over your Friends, that Loves you.

Brut. Cassius.

Be not deceiv'd : If I have veyl'd my looke,
I turne the trouble of my Countenance
Meerely upon my selfe. Vexed I am
Of late, with passions of some difference,
Conceptions onely proper to my selfe,
Which give some toyle (perhaps) to my Behaviours :
But let not therefore my good Friends be greiv'd
(Among which number Cassius be you one)
Nor construe any further my neglect,
Then that poore Brutus with himselfe at warre,
Forgets the shewes of Love to other men.

Cassi. Then Brutus, I have much mistooke your passion,
By meanes whereof, this Brest of mine hath buried
Thoughts of great value, worthy Cogitations.
Tell me good Brutus, Can you see your face?

Brutus. No Cassius :
For the eye sees not himselfe but by reflection,
By some other things.

Cassius. 'Tis iust,
And it is very much lamented Brutus,
That you have no such Mirrors, as will turne
Your hidden worthinesse into your eye,
That you might see your shadow :
I have heard,
Where many of the best respect in Rome,
(Except immortall Caesar) speaking of Brutus,
And groaning vnderneath this Ages yoke,
Have wish'd, that Noble Brutus had his eyes.

Brut. Into what daungers would you
Leade me Cassius ?
That you would have me seeke into my selfe,
For that which is not in me ?

Cas. Therefore good Brutus, be prepar'd to heare;

And since you know you cannot see your selfe
So well as by Reflection; I your Glasse,
Will modestly discover to your selfe
That of your selfe, which you yet know not of,
And be not iealous on me, gentle Brutus :
Where I a common Laughter, or did use
To stale with ordinary Oathes my love
To every new Protester : if you know,
That I do fawne on men, and hugge them hard,
And after scandall them : or if you know,
That I professe in Banquetting
To all the Rout, then hold me dangerous.

Flourish, and Shout.

Brut. What meanes this Showting?
I do feare, the People choole Caesar
For their King.

Cassi. I do you feare it?
Then must I thinke you would not have it so.

Brut. I would not Cassius, yet I love him well:
But wherefore do you hold me here so long?
What is it, that you would impart to me?
If it be ought toward the generall good,
Set Honour in one eye, and Death i'th other,
And I will looke on both indifferently :
For let the Gods so speed mee, as I love
The name of Honour, more then I feare death.

Cassi. I know that vertue to be in you Brutus,
As well as I do know your outward favour,
Well, Honor is the subiect of my Story :
I cannot tell, what you and other men
Thinke of this life : But my single selfe,
I had as lief not be, as live to be
In awe of such a Thing, as I my selfe.
I was borne free as Caesar, so were you,
We both have fed as well, and we can both
Endure the Winters cold, as well as hee.
For once, upon a Rawe and Gusty day,
The troubled Tyber, chasing with her Shores,
Caesar saies to me, Dar'lt thou Cassius now
Leape in with me into this angry Flood,
And swim to yonder Point? Vpon the word,
Accounted as I was, I plunged in,
And bad him follow : so indeed he did.
The Torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty Sinewes, throwing it aside,
And stemming it with hearts of Controversie.
But ere we could arrive the Point propos'd,
Caesar cride. Helpe me Cassius, or I sinke.
I (as Aeneas, our great ancestor,
Did from the Flames of Troy, upon his shoulder
The old Anchises beare) so, from the waves of Tyber
Did I the tyred Caesar : And this Man,
Is now become a God, and Cassius is
A wretched Creature, and must bend his body,
If Caesar carelesly but nod on him.
He had a Feather when he was in Spaine,
And when the Fit was on him, I did marke
How he did shake: 'Tis true, this God did shake,
His Coward lips did from their colour flye,
And that same eye, whose bend doth awe the World,
Did loose his Lustre: I did heare him grone:
I, and that Tongue of his, that bad the Romans
Marke him, and write his Speeches in their Bookes,
Alas, it cried, Give me some drinke Titinius,

As a sicke Girle: Ye Gods, it doth amaze me,
A man of such a feeble temper should
So get the start of the Maiesticke world,
And beare the Palme alone.

Shout.

Flourish.

Brn. Another generall shout?
I doe beleeeve, that these applauses are
For some new Honors, that are heap'd on Caesar.

Cassi. Why man, he doth bestride the narrow world
Like a Colossus, and we petty men
Walke under his huge legges, and peepe about
To finde our selves dishonourable Graves.

Men at sometime, are Masters of their Fates.
The fault (deere Brutus) is not in our Starres,
But in our Selves, that we are underlings.

Brutus and Caesar: What should be in that Caesar?
Why should that name be founded more then yours
Write them together: Yours, is as faire a Name:
Sound them, it doth become the mouth aswell.
Weigh them, it is as heavy: Coniure with'em,
Brutus will start a Spirit as soone as Caesar.

Now in the names of all the Gods at once,
Vpon what meate doth this our Caesar feede,
That he is growne so great? Age, thou art sham'd.
Rome, thou hast lost the breed of Noble Bloods.
When went there by an Age, since the great Flood,
But it was fam'd with more then with one man?
When could they say (till now) that talk'd of Rome,
That her wide Walkes in compast but one man?
Now is it Rome indeed, and Roome enough
When there is in it but one onely man.

Olyou and I, have heard our Fathers say,
There was a Brutus once, that would have brook'd Th'eternal Divell to keepe his State in Rome,
As easily as a King.

Brn. That you do love me, I am nothing iealous:
What you would worke me to, I have some ayme:
How I have thought of this, and of these times
I shall recount hereafter. For this present,
I would not so (with love I might intreat you)
Be any further moov'd: What you have said,
I will consider: what you have to say
I will with patience heare and finde a time
Both meet to heare, and answer such high thinges.
Till then my Noble Friend, chew upon this:

Brutus had rather be a Villager,
Then to repute himselfe a Sonne of Rome
Vnder these hard Conditions, as this time
Is like to lay upon us.

Cassi. I am glad that my weake words
Have stricke but thus much shew of fire from Brutus.

Enter Caesar and his Train.

Brn. The Games are done,
And Caesar is returning.

Cassi. As they passe by,
Plucke Caske by the Sleeve,
And he will (after his fowre fashion) tell you
What hath proceeded worthy note to day.

Brn. I will do so: but looke you Cassius,
The angry spot doth blow on Caesar's brow,
And all the rest looke like a chidden Train;
Calphurnia's Cheeke is pale, and Cicero
Lookes with such Ferret, and such fiery eyes
As we have seene him in the Capitoll

Being crost in Conference, by some Senators, Cassi. Caske will tell us what the matter is.

Cas. Antonio.

Ant. Caesar.

Cas. Let me have men about me that are fat,
Sleeke-headed men, and such as sleepe a-nights:
Yond Cassius has a leane and hungry looke,
He thinkes too much: such men are dangerous.

Ant. Feare him not Caesar, he's not dangerous,
He is a Noble Roman, and well given.

Cas. Would he were fatter; But I feare him not:
Yet if my name were lyable to feare,
I do not know the man I should avoyd so soone as that spare Cassius. He reades much,
He is a great observer, and he lookes
Quite through the Deedes of men. He loves no Playes,
As thou dost Antony: he heares no Musicke:
Seldome he smiles, and smiles in such a fort
As if he mock'd himselfe, and scorn'd his spirit
That could be mov'd to smile at any thing.
Such men as he, be never at hearts ease,
Whiles they behold a greater then themselves,
And therefore are they very dangerous.
I rather tell thee what is to be fear'd,
Then what I feare: for alwayes I am Caesar
Come on my right hand, for this care is deafe,
And tell me truly, what thou think'st of him.

Sennit.

Exeunt Caesar and his Train.

Cas. You pul'd me by the cloake, would you speake with me?

Brn. I Caske, tell us what hath chanc'd to day
That Caesar lookes so sad.

Cas. Why you were with him, were you not?

Brn. I should not then aske Caske what had chanc'd.

Cas. Why there was a Crowne offer'd him; and being offer'd him, he put it by with the backe of his hand thus, and then the people fell a shouting.

Brn. What was the second noyse for?

Cas. Why for that too.

Cas. They shouted thrice: what was the last cry for?

Cas. Why for that too.

Brn. Was the Crowne offer'd him thrice?

Cas. I marry was't, and hee put it by thrice, every time gentler then other; and at every putting by, mine honest
Neighbors shouted.

Cas. Who offer'd him the Crowne?

Cas. Why Antony.

Brn. Tell us the manner of it, gentle Caske.

Caske. I can as well bee hang'd as tell the manner of it:
It were meere Fooliry, I did not marke it. I sawe Mark Antony offer him a Crowne, yet 'twas not a Crowne neyther, 'twas one of these Coronets: and as I told you, hee put it by once: but for all that, to my thinking, he would faine have had it. Then he offered it to him againe:
then hee put it by againe: but to my thinking, he was very loath to lay his fingers off it. And then he offered it the third time: he put it the third time by, and still as he refus'd it, the rabblement howted, and clapp'd their chopt hands, and threw uppe ther sweaty Night-cappes, and uttered such a deale of stinking breath, because Caesar refus'd the Crowne, that it had (almost) choaked Caesar: for hee swooned, and fell downe at it: And for mine owne part, I durst not laugh, for feare of opening my Lippes, and receiving the bad.
Ayre.

Cassi.

Cassi. But soft I pray you : what, did Caesar fwoound ?

Cask. He fell downe in the Market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechlesse.

Brut. 'Tis very like he hath the Falling sicknesse.

Cassi. No, Caesar hath it not: but you, and I, And honest Caska, we have the falling sicknesse.

Cask. I know not what you meane by that, but I am sure Caesar fell downe. If the tag-ragge people did not clap him, and hisse him, according as he pleas'd, and displeas'd them, as they use to doe the Players in the Theatre, I am no true man.

Brut. What said he, when he came unto himselfe ?

Cask. Mary, before he fell downe, when he perceiv'd the common Heard was glad he refus'd the Crowne, he pluckt me ope his Dowllet, and offer'd them his Throat to cut : and I had beene a man of any Occupation, if I would not have taken him at a word, I would I might goe to Hell among the Rogues, and so hee fell. When he came to himselfe againe, he said, If hee had done, or said any thing amisse, he desir'd their worshipps to thinke it was his infirmity. Three or foure Wenches where I stood, cryed, Alasse good Soule, and forgave him with all their hearts : But there's heed to be taken of them ; if Caesar had stabl'd their Mothers, they would have done no lesse.

Brut. And after that, he came thus sad away.

Cask. I.

Cassi. Did Cicero say any thing ?

Cask. I, he spoke Greeke.

Cassi. To what effect ?

Cask. Nay, and I tell you that, Ile ne're looke you i'th'face againe. But those that understood him, smil'd at one another, and shooke their heads : but for mine owne part, it was Greeke to me. I could tell you more newestoo : Murellus and Flavius, for pulling Scarffes off Caesar's Imags, are put to silence. Fare you well. There was more Foolery yet, if I could remember it.

Cassi. Will you suppe with me to night, Caska ?

Cask. No, I am promis'd forth.

Cassi. Will you Dine with me to morrow ?

Cask. I, if I be alive, and your mind hold, and your Dinner worth the eating.

Cassi. Good, I will expect you.

Cask. Doe so : farewell both.

Exit.

Brut. What a blunt fellow is this growne to be ? He was quicke Mettle, when he went to Schoole.

Cassi. So is he now, in execution Of any bold or Noble Enterprize, How-ever he puts on this tardy forme : This Rudenesse is a Sawce to his good Wit, Which gives men stomacke to digest his words With better Appetites

Brut. And so it is :

For this time I will leave you :

To morrow if you please to speake with with me, I will come home to you : or if you will, Come home to me, and I will wait for you.

Cassi. I will doe so: till then, thinke of the world.

Exit Brutus.

Well Brutus, thou art: Noble yet I see, Thy honourable Mettall may be wrought From that it is dispos'd, therefore tis meet, That Noble mindes keepe ever with their likes: For who so firme, that cannot be seduc'd ? Caesar doth beare me hard, but he loves Brutus.

If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius, He should not humor me. I will this Night, In severall hands, in at his Windowes throw, As if they came from severall Citizens, Writtings, all tending to the great opinion That Rome holds of his Name : wherein obscurely Caesar's Ambition shall be glanced at. And after this, let Caesar seate him sure, For wee will shake him, or worfe dayes endure.

Exit.

Thunder, and Lightning. Enter Caska, and Cicero.

Cic. Good even, Caska : brought you Caesar home ? Why are you breathlesse, and why stare you so ?

Cask. Are not you mov'd, when all the sway of Earth Shakes, like a thing unfirme ? O Cicero, I have seene Tempests, when the scolding Winds Have riu'd the knotty Oakes, and I have seene Th'ambitious Ocean swell, and rage, and foame, To be exalted with the threatning Clouds : But never till to Night, never till now, Did I goe through a Tempest-dropping-fire. Eyther there is a Civill strife in Heaven, Or else the World, too sawcy with the Gods, Incenses them to send destruction.

Cic. Why, saw you any thing more wonderfull ?

Cask. A common slave, you know him well by sight, Held up his left hand, which did flame and burne Like twenty Torches ioynd; and yet his hand, Not sensible of fire, remain'd unscorch'd. Besides, I ha'not since put up my Sword, Against the Capitoll I met a Lyon, Who glaz'd upon me, and went surely by, Without annoying me. And there were drawne Vpon a heape, a hundred gally Women, Transformed with their feare, who swore, they saw Men, all in fire, walke up and downe the streets. And yesterday, the Bird of Night did sit, Even at Noone day, upon the Market place, Howling, and shreeking. When these Prodigious Doe so conioyntly meet, let not men say, These are their Reasons they are Naturall : For I beleieve, they are portentous things Vnto the Clymate, that they point upon.

Cic. Indeed, it is a strange disposed time : But men may coustrve things after their fashion, Cleane from the purpose of the things themselves. Comes Caesar to the Capitoll to morrow ?

Cask. He doth : for he did bid Antonio Send word to you, he would be there to morrow.

Cic. Good-night then, Caska :

This disturbed Skie is not to walke in.

Cask. Farewell Cicero.

Exit Cicero.

Enter Cassius.

Cassi. Who's there ?

Cask. A Romane.

Cassi. Caska, by your Voyce.

Cask. Your Eare is good.

Cassius, what Night is this ?

Cassi. A very pleasing Night to honest men.

Cask. Who ever knew the Heavens menace so ?

Cassi. Those that have knowne the Earth so full of faults.

For

For my part, I have walk'd about the streets,
Submitting me unto the perillous Night;
And thus unbraced, Caska, as you see,
Have bar'd my Bosome to the Thunder-stone:
And when the crosse blew Lightning seem'd to open
The Brest of Heaven, I did present my selfe
Even in the ayme, and very flash of it. (uens?)

Cask. But wherefore did you so much tempt the Hea-
It is the part of men, to feare and tremble,
When the most mighty Gods, by tokens send
Such dreadfull Heraulds, to astonish us.

Cassi. You are dull, Caska:
And those sparkes of Life that should be in a Roman,
You doe want or else you use not.
You looke pale, and gaze and put on feare,
And cast your selfe in wonder,
To see the strange impatience of the Heavens:
But if you would consider the true cause,
Why all these Fires, why all these gliding Ghosts,
Why Birds and Beasts, from quality and kinde,
Why Old men, Fooles, and Children calculate,
Why all these things change from their Ordinance,
Their Natures, and pre-formed Faculties,
To monstrous quality; why you shall finde,
That Heaven hath infus'd them with these Spirits,
To make them Instruments of feare, and warning,
Vnto some monstrous State.

Now could I (Caska) name to thee a man,
Most like this dreadfull Night,
That Thunders, Lightens, opens Graves, and teares,
As doth the Lyon in the Capitoll:
A man no mightier then thy selfe, or me,
In personall action; yet prodigious growne,
And fearefull, as these strange eruptions are.

Cask. Tis Caesar that you meane:
Is it not, Cassius?

Cas. Let it be who it is; for Romans now
Have Thewes, and Limbes, like to their Ancestors;
But woe the while, our Fathers mindes are dead,
And we are govern'd with our Mothers spirits,
Our yoake, and sufferance, thew us Womanish.

Cask. Indeed, they say, the Senators to morrow
Meane to establish Caesar as a King:
And he shall weare his Crowne by Sea, and Land,
In every place, save here in Italy.

Cas. I know where I will weare this Dagger then;
Cassius from Bondage will deliver Cassius:
Therein, yee Gods, you make the weake most strong;
Therein, yee Gods, you Tyrants doe defeat.
Nor Stony Tower, nor Walls of beaten Brasse,
Nor ayre-lesse Dungeon, nor strong Linkes of Iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit:
But Life being weary of these worldly Barres,
Never lacks power to dismisse it selfe.
If I know this, know all the World besides,
That part of Tyranny that I doe beare,
I can shake off at pleasure. Thunder still.

Cask. So can I:
So every Bond-man in his owne hand beares
The power to cancell his Captivity.

Cas. And why should Caesar be a Tyrant then?
Poore man, I know he would not be a Wolfe,
But that he sees the Romans are but Sheepe:
He were no Lyon, were not Romans Hinder.
Those that with haste will make a mighty fire,
Begin it with weake Strawes. What trash is Rome?

What Rubbish, and what Offall? when it serves
For the base matter, to illuminate
So vile a thing as Caesar. But oh Griefe,
Where hast thou led me? I (perhaps) speake this Before a willing Bond-man: then I know
My answer must be made. But I am arm'd,
And dangers are to me indifferent.

Cask. You speake to Caska, and to such a man,
That is no fearing Tell-tale. Hold, my Hand:
Be factious for redresse of all these Griefes,
And I will set this foot of mine as farre,
As who goes farthest,

Cas. There's a Bargaine made.
Now know you, Caska, I have mov'd already
Some certaine of the Noblest minded Romans
To under-goe, with me, an Enterprize,
Of Honourable dangerous consequence;
And I doe know by this, they stay for me
In Pompeyes Porch: for now this fearefull Night,
There is no stirre, or walking in the streetes;
And the Complexion of the Element
Is Favors, like the Worke we have in hand,
Most bloody, fiery, and most terrible.

Enter Cinna.

Caska. Stand close a while, for heere comes one in haste.

Cas. Tis Cinna, I doe know him by his Gate,
He is a friend. Cinna, where haste you so?

Cinna. To finde out you: Who's that, Metellus
Cymbber?

Cas. No, it is Caska, one incorporate
To our Attempts. Am I not stay'd for, Cinna?

Cin. I am glad on't.
What a fearefull Night?

There's two or three of us have scene strange sights.

Cas. Am I not stay'd for? tell me.

Cin. Yes, you are, O Cassius,
If you could but winne the Noble Brutus
To our party —

Cas. Be you content. Good Cinna take this Paper,
And looke you lay it in the Pretors Chayre,
Where Brutus may but finde it: and throw this
In at his Window; set this up with Waxe
Vpon old Brutus Statue: all this done,
Repaire to Pompeyes Porch, where you shall finde us.
Is Decius Brutus and Trebonius there?

Cin. All, but Metellus Cymbber, and hee's gone
To seeke you at your house. Well, I will hie,
And so bestow these Papers as you bad me.

Cas. That done, repayre to Pompeyes Theater.

Exit Cinna.

Come Caska, you and I will yet, ere day,
See Brutus at his house: three parts of him
Is ours already, and the man entire Vpon the next encounter, yeelds him ours.

Cask. O, he sits high in all the Peoples hearts:
And that which would appeare Offence in vs,
His Countenance, like richest Alchymie,
Will change to Vertue, and to Worthinesse.

Cas. Him, and his worth, and our great need of him,
You have right well conceited: let us goe,
For it is after Mid-night, and ere day,
We will awake him, and be sure of him.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Brutus in his Orchard.

Brn. What Lucius, hoe?
I cannot, by the progresse of the Starres,
Give guesse how neere to day--Lucius, I say?
I would it were my fault to sleepe so soundly.
When Lucius, when? awake, I say: what Lucius?

Enter Lucius.Luc. Call'd you, my Lord?Brn. Get me a Taper in my Study, Lucius:
When it is lighted, come and call me here.Luc. I will, my Lord.Exit.

Brn. It must be by his death: and for my part,
I know no personall cause, to spurne at him,
But for the generall. He would be crown'd:
How that might change his nature, there's the question?
It is the bright day, that brings forth the Adder,
And that craves wary walking: Crowne him that,
And then I graunt we put a Sting in him,
That at his will he may doe danger with.
Th'abuse of Greatnesse, is, when it dis-joynes
Remorse from Power: And to speake truth of Caesar,
I have not knowne, when his Affections sway'd
More then his Reason. But tis a common prooffe,
That Lowlynesse is young Ambitions Ladder,
Whereto the Climber upward turnes his Face:
But when he once attaines the upmost Round,
Hethen unto the Ladder turnes his Backe.
Lookes in the Clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend: so Caesar may;
Then lest he may, prevent. And since the Quarrell
Will beare no colour, for the thing he is,
Fashion it thus; that what he is, augmented,
Would runne to these, and these extremities:
And therefore thinke him as a Serpents egge,
Which hatch'd, would as his kinde grow mischievous;
And kill him in the shell.

Enter Lucius.

Luc. The Taper burneth in your Closet, Sir:
Searching the Window for a Flint, I found
This Paper, thus seal'd up, and I am sure
It did not lye there when I went to Bed.

Gives him the Letter.

Brn. Get you to Bed againe, it is not day:
Is not to morrow (Boy) the first of March?

Luc. I know not, Sir.Brn. Looke in the Calender, and bring me word.Luc. I will, Sir.Exit.

Brn. The exhalations, whizzing in the ayre,
Give so much light, that I may reade by them.

Opens the Letter, and reades.

*Brutus thou sleepest; awake, and see thy selfe:
Shall Rome, &c. speake, strike, redresse.*

Brutus, thou sleepest; awake.

Such instigations have beene often dropt,
Where I have tooke them up:

Shall Rome &c. Thus must I piece it out:
Shall Rome stand under one mans awe? What Rome?
My Ancestors did from the streetes of Rome
The Tarquin drive, when he was call'd a King.
Speake, strike, redresse. Am I entreated

To speake, and strike? O Rome, I make the promise,
If the redresse will follow, thou receivest
Thy full Petition at the hand of Brutus.

Enter Lucius.Luc. Sir, March is wasted fiftene dayes.Knocke within.

Brn. Tis good. Go to the Gate, some body knocks:
Since Cassius first did whet me against Caesar,
I have not slept.
Betweene the acting of a dreadfull thing,
And the first motion, all the Interim is Like a Phantasma, or a hideous Dreame:
The Genius, and the mortall Iustruments
Are then in councell; and the state of man,
Like to a little Kingdome, suffers then
The nature of an Insurrection.

Enter Lucius.

Luc. Sir, tis your Brother Cassius at the Doore, Whodoth desire to see you.

Brn. Is he alone?Luc. No, Sir, there are moe with him.Brn. Doe you know them?

Luc. No, Sir, their Hats are pluckt about their Eares,
And halfe their Faces buried in their Cloathes,
That by no meanes I may discover them,
By any marke of favour.

Brn. Let'em enter:

They are the Faction. O Conspiracie,
Sham'it thou to shew thy dang'rous Brow by Night,
When evils are most free? O then, by day
Where wilt thou finde a Caverne darke enough,
To maske thy monstrous Visage? Secke none Conspiracie,
Hide it in Smiles, and Affability:
For if thou path, thy native semblance on,
Not Erebus it selfe were dimme enough,
To hide thee from prevention.

Enter the Conspirators, Cassius, Caska, Decius, Cinna, Metellus, and Trebonius.

Cas. I thinke we are too bold upon your Rest:
Good morrow Brutus, doe we trouble you?

Brn. I have beene up this howre, awake all Night:
Know I these men, that come along with you?

Cas. Yes, every man of them; and no man here
But honors you: and every one doth wish,
You had but that opinion of your selfe,
Which every Noble Roman beares of you.
This is Trebonius.

Brn. He is welcome hither.Cas. This, Decius Brutus.Brn. He is welcome too.

Cas. This, Caska; this Cinna; and this, Metellus
Cimber.

Brn. They are all welcome.

What watchfull Cares doe interpose themselves
Betwixt your Eyes, and Night?

Cas. Shall I intreat a word?They whisper.

Dec. Here lyes the East: doth not the Day breake heere?
Cas. No.

Cin. O pardon, Sir, it doth; and yon grey Lines,
That fret the Clouds, are Messengers of Day.

Cask. You shall confesse, that you are both deceiv'd:
Heere, as I point my Sword, the Sunne arises,
Which is a great way growing on the South,

Weigh-

Weighing the youthfull Season of the yeare.
Some two moneths hence, up higher toward the North
He first presents his fire, and the high East
Stands as the Capitoll, directly heere.

Bru. Give me your hands all over, one by one.

Cas. And let us sweare our Resolution.

Bru. No, not an Oath: if not the Face of men,
The sufferance of our Soules, the times Abuse;
If these be Motives weake, breake off betimes,
And every man hence, to his idle bed:
So let high-sighted Tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by Lottery. But if these
(As I am sure they do) beare fire enough
To kindle Cowards, and to steale with valour
The melting Spirits of women; Then Countrymen,
What neede we any spur, but our owne cause
To prick us to redresse? What other Bond,
Then secret Romans, that have spoke the word,
And will not palter? And what other Oath,
Then Honesty to Honesty ingag'd,
That this shall be, or we will fall for it.
Sweare Priests and Cowards, and men Cautelous
Old feeble Carrions, and such suffering Soules
That welcome wrongs: Vnto bad causes, sweare
Such Creatures as men doubt; but do not staine
The even vertue of our Enterprize,
Nor th'insuppressive Mettle of our Spirits,
To thinke, that or our Cause, or our Performance
Did neede an Oath. When every drop of blood
That every Roman beares, and Nobly beares
Is guilty of a severall Bastardy,
If he do breake the smallest Particel
Of any promise that hath past from him.

Cas. But what of Cicero? Shall we found him?
I thinke he will stand very strong with us.

Cas. Let us not leave him out.

Cin. No, by no meanes.

Met. O let us have him, for his Silver haire
Will purchase us a good opinion:
And buy mens voyces, to commend our deeds:
It shall be sayd, his judgement rul'd our hands,
Our youths, and wildenesse, shall no whit appeare,
But all be buried in his Gravity.

Bru. O name him not; let us not breake with him,
For he will never follow any thing
That other men begin.

Cas. Then leave him out.

Cas. Indeed, he is not fit.

Dec. Shall no man else be toucht, but onely Caesar?

Cas. Decius, well urg'd: I thinke it is not meet,
Marke Antony, so well belov'd of Caesar,
Should out-live Caesar, we shall finde of him
A throw'd Contriver. And you know, his meanes
If he improve them, may well stretch so farre
As to annoy us all: which to prevent,
Let Antony and Caesar fall together.

Bru. Our course will seeme too bloody, Cassius,
To cut the Head off, and then hacke the Limbes:
Like Wrath in death, and Envy afterwards:
For Antony, is but a Limbe of Caesar.
Let's be Sacrificers, but not Butchers Cassius:
We all stand up against the spirit of Caesar,
And in the Spirit of men, there is no blood:
O that we then could come by Caesar's Spirits,
And not dismember Caesar! But (alas)
Caesar must bleed for it. And gentle Friends,

Let's kill him Boldly, but not Wrathfully:
Let's carve him, as a Dish fit for the Gods,
Not hew him as a Carcasse fit for Hounds;
And let our Hearts, as subtle Masters do,
Stirre up their Servants to an acte of Rage,
And after seeme to chide, em. This shall make
Our purpose Necessary, and not Envious.
Which so appearing to the common eyes,
We shall be call'd Purgers not Murderers.
And for Marke Antony, thinke not of him:
For he can do no more then Caesar's Arme,
When Caesar's head is off.

Cas. Yet I feare him,
For in the ingrafted love he bearesto Caesar.

Bru. Alas, good Cassius, do not thinke of him:
If he love Caesar, all that he can do
Is to himselfe; take thought, and dye for Caesar.
And that were much he should: for he is given
To sports, to wildenesse, and much company.

Treb. There is no feare in him; let him not dye,
For he will live, and laugh at this heereafter.

Clocke strikes.

Bru. Peace, count the Clocke.

Cas. The Clocke hath stricken three.

Treb. Tis time to part.

Cas. But it is doubtfull yet,
Whether Caesar will come forth to day, or no:
For he is Superstitious growne of late,
Quite from the maine Opinion he held once,
Of Fantasie, of Dreames, and Ceremonies:
It may be, these apparant Prodigies,
The unaccustom'd Terror of this night,
And the perswasion of his Augurers,
May hold him from the Capitoll to day.

Dec. Never feare that: If he be so resolv'd,
I can ore-sway him: for he loves to heare,
That Vnicornes may be betray'd with Trees,
And Beares with Glasse, Elephants with Holes,
Lyons with Toiles, and men with Flatterers.
But, when I tell him, he hates Flatterers,
He sayes, he does; being then most flattered.
Let me worke:

For I can give his humour the true bent;
And I will bring him to the Capitoll.

Cas. Nay, we will all of us, be there to fetch him.

Bru. By the eight houre, is that the uttermost?

Cin. Be that the uttermost, and faile not then.

Met. Cassius Ligarius doth beare Caesar's hatred,
Who rated him for speaking well of Pompey,
I wonder none of you have thought of him.

Bru. Now good Metellus go along by him:
He loves me well, and I have given him Reasons,
Send him but hither, and Ile fashion him.

Cas. The morning comes upon's:
Wee'll leave you Brunus,
And friends disperse your selves; but all remember
What you have said, and shew your selves true Romans.

Bru. Good Gentlemen, looke fresh and merrily,
Let not our lookes put on our purposes,
But beare it as our Roman Actors do,
With untyr'd Spirits, and formall Constancy,
And so good morrow to you every one.

Exeunt.

Manet Brutus

Boy: Lucius: Fast asleepe? It is no matter,
Enjoy the hony-heavy-Dew of Slumber:
Thou hast no Figures, nor no Fantasies, mm 2

Which

Which busie care drawes, in the braines of men;
Therefore thou sleepest so sound.

Enter Portia.

Por. Brutus, my Lord.

Brn. Portia, What meane you? wherefore rise you now?
It is not for your health, thus to commit
Your weake condition, to the raw cold morning.

Por. Nor for yours neither. Y<sup>e</sup> have ungently Brutus
Stole from my bed: and yesternight at Supper
You sodainly arose, and walk'd about,
Musing, and sighing, with your armes a-crosse:
And when I ask'd you what the matter was,
You star'd upon me, with ungentle lookes.
I urg'd you further, then you scratch'd your head,
And too impatiently stamp't with your foote:
Yet I insisted, yet you answer'd not,
But with an angry waver of your hand
Gave signe for me to leave you: So I did,
Fearing to strengthen that impatience
Which seem'd too much inkindled; and withall;
Hoping it was but an effect of Humor,
Which sometime hath his houre with every man.
It will not let you eate, nor talke, nor sleepe;
And could it worke so much upon your shape,
As it hath much prevail'd on your Condition,
I should not know you Brutus. Deare my Lord,
Make me acquainted with your cause of griefe,

Brn. I am not well in health, and that is all.

Por. Brutus is wife, and were he not in health,
He would embrace the meanes to come by it.

Brn. Why so I do: good Portia go to bed.

Por. Is Brutus sicke? And is it Physicall
To walke unbraced, and sucke up the humors
Of the darke Morning? What, is Brutus sicke?
And will he steale out of his wholesome bed
To dare the vile contagion of the Night?
And tempt the Rheumy, and unpurg'd Ayre,
To adde unto his sicknesse? No my Brutus,
You have some sicke Offence within your minde,
Which by the Right and Vertue of my place
I ought to know of: And upon my knees,
I charme you, by my once commended Beauty,
By all your vowes of Love, and that great Vow
Which did incorporate and make us one,
That you unfold to me, your selfe; your halfe;
Why you are heavy, and what men to night
Have had resort to you: for heere have beene
Some fixe or seven, who did hide their faces
Even from darknesse.

Brn. Kneele not gentle Portia.

Por. I should not neede, if you were gentle Brutus.
Within the Bond of Marriage, tell me Brutus,
Is it excepted, I should know no Secrets
That appertaine to you? Am I your Selfe,
But as it were in sort, or limitation?
To keepe with you at Meales, comfort your Bed,
And talke to you sometimes? Dwell I but in the Suburbs
Of your good pleasure? If it be no more,
Portia is Brutus Harlot, not his Wife.

Brn. You are my true and honourable Wife,
As deere to me, as are the ruddy dropes
That visit my sad heart.

Por. If this were true, then should I know this secret.
I graunt I am a Woman; but withall,
A Woman that Lord Brutus tooke to Wife:
I graunt I am a Woman; but withall,

A Woman well reputed: Caio's Daughter.

Thinke you, I am no stronger then my Sex

Being so Father'd, and so Husbanded?

Tell me your Counsels, I will not disclose 'em:

I have made strong proove of my Constancie,

Giving my selfe a voluntary wound

Heere, in the Thigh: Can I beare that with patience,

And not my Husbands Secrets?

Brn. O ye Gods!

Render me worthy of this Noble Wife.

Knocke.

Hearke, hearke, one knockes: Portia go in a while,

And by and by thy bosome shall partake

The secrets of my Heart.

All my engagements, I will contrue to thee,

All the Character of my sad browes:

Leave me with hast,

Exit Portia.

Enter Lucius and Ligarius.

Lucius, who's that knockes.

Luc. Heere is a sicke man that would speake with you.

Brn. Caio Ligarius, that Metellus spake of, Boy, stand aside. Caio Ligarius, how?

Caio. Vouchsafe good morrow from a feeble tongue.

Brn. O what a time have you chose out brave Caio
To weare a Kerchiefe? Would you were not sicke.

Caio. I am not sicke, if Brutus have in hand
Any exploit worthy the name of Honor.

Brn. Such an exploit have I in hand Ligarius,
Had you a healthfull eare to heare of it.

Caio. By all the Gods that Romans bow before,
I heere discard my sicknesse. Soule of Rome,
Brave Sonne, deriv'd from Honourable Loines,
Thou like an Exorcist, hast conjur'd up
My mortified Spirit. Now bid me runne,
And I will strive with things impossible,
Yea get the better of them. What's to do?

Brn. A peece of worke,
That will make sicke men whole.

Caio. But are not some whole, that we must make sicke?

Brn. That must we also. What it is my Caio,
I shall unfold to thee, as we are going,
To whom it must be done.

Caio. Set on your foote,
And with a heart new-fir'd, I follow you,
To do I know not what: but it sufficeth
That Brutus leads me on.

Thunder.

Brn. Follow me then.

Exeunt.

Thunder and Lightning.

Enter Julius Caesar in his Night-gowne.

Caesar. Nor Heaven, nor Earth,
Have beene at peace to night:
Thrice hath Calphurnia, in her sleepe cryed out;
Helpe, ho: They murther Caesar. Who's within?

Enter a Servant.

Ser. My Lord.

Caes. Go bid the Priests do present Sacrifice,
And bring me their opinions of Successe.

Ser. I will my Lord.

Exit.

Enter Calphurnia.

Cal. What meane you Caesar? Think you to walke forth?
You shal not stirre out of your house to day,

Caes. Caesar shall forth; the things that threaten'd me,
Ne're look'd but on my backe: When they shall see
The face of Caesar, they are vanished.

Calp.

Calp. Caesar, I never stood on Ceremonies,
Yet now they fright me: There is one within,
Besides the things that we have heard and seene,
Recounts most horrid sights seene by the Watch.
A Lionesse hath whelped in the streets,
And Graves have yawn'd, and yeelded up their dead;
Fierce fiery Warriours fight upon the Clouds
In Rankes and Squadrons, and right forme of Warre
Which drizel'd blood upon the Capitoll:
The noise of Battell hurried in the Ayre:
Horses did neigh, and dying men did grone,
And Ghosts did shrieke and squeale about the streets.
O Caesar, these things are beyond all use,
And I do feare them.

Cas. What can be avoyded
Whose end is purpos'd by the mighty Gods?
Yet Caesar shall go forth: for these Predictions
Are to the world in generall, as to Caesar.

Calp. When Beggars dye, there are no Comets seene,
The Heavens themselves blaze forth the death of Princes

Cas. Cowards dye many times before their deaths,
The valiant never taste of death but once:
Of all the Wonders that I yet have heard,
It seemes to me most strange that men should feare,
Seeing that death, a necessary end
Will come, when it will come.

Enter a Servant.

What say the Augurers?

Ser. They would not have you to stirre forth to day.
Plucking the intrailles of an Offering forth,
They could not finde a heart within the beast.

Cas. The Gods do this in shame of Cowardice:
Caesar should be a Beast without a heart
If he should stay at home to day for feare:
No, Caesar shall not; Danger knowes full well
That Caesar is more dangerous then he.
We heare two Lyons litter'd in one day,
And I the elder and more terrible,
And Caesar shall go forth.

Cal. Alas my Lord,
Your wisedome is consum'd in confidence:
Do not go forth to day: Call it my feare,
That keeps you in the house, and not your owne.
Wee'l send Marke Antony to the Senate house,
And he shall say, you are not well to day:
Let me upon my knee prevaile in this.

Cas. Marke Antony shall say I am not well,
And for thy humor, I will stay at home.

Enter Decius.

Heere's Decius Brutus he shall tell them so.

Dec. Caesar, all haile: Good morrow worthy Caesar,
I come to fetch you to the Senate house.

Cas. And you are come in very happy time,
To beare my greeting to the Senators,
And tell them that I will not come to day:
Cannor, is false: and that I dare not, falser:
I will not come to day, tell them so Decius.

Cal. Say he is sicke.

Cas. Shall Caesar send a Lye?
Have I in Conquest stretcht mine Arme so farre,
To be afear'd to tell Gray-beards the truth:
Decius, go tell them, Caesar will not come.

Dec. Most mighty Caesar let me know some cause,
Lest I be laught at when I tell them so.

Cas. The cause is in my Will, I will not come,
That is enough to satisfie the Senate.

But for your private satisfaction,
Because I love you, I will let you know.

Calphurnia heere my wife, stayes me at home:
She dream't to nigh, she saw my Statue,
Which like a fountaine, with an hundred spouts
Did run pure blood: and many iustly Romans
Came smiling, and did bathe their hands in it:
And these does she apply, for warnings and portents,
And evils imminent; and on her knee
Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to day.

Dec. This dreame is all amisse interpreted,
It was a vision, faire and fortunate:
Your Statue spouting blood in many pipes,
In which so many smiling Romans bath'd,
Signifies, that from you great Rome shall sucke
Reviving blood, and that great men shall presse
For Tinctures, Staines, Reliques, and Cognifance.
This by Calphurnia's Dreame is signified.

Cas. And this way have you well expounded it.

Dec. I have, when you have heard what I can say:
And know it now, the Senate have concluded
To give this day, a Crowne to mighty Caesar.
If you shall send them word you will not come,
Their mindes may change. Besides, it were a mocke
Apt to be render'd, for some one to say,
Breake up the Senate, till another time,
When Caesar's wife shall meete with better Dreames:
If Caesar hide himselfe, shall they not whisper
Loe Caesar is afraid?

Pardon me Caesar, for my deere deere love
To your proceeding bids me tell you this:
And reason to my love is liable.

Cas. How foolish do your fears seeme now Calphurnia?
I am ashamed I did yeeld to them.
Give me my Robe, for I will go.

Enter Brutus, Ligarius, Metellus, Caska, Trebonius, Cinna, and Publius.

And looke where Publius is come to fetch me.

Pub. Goodmorrow Caesar.

Cas. Welcome Publius.

What Brutus, are you stirr'd so earely too?
Good morrow Caska: Caius Ligarius,
Caesar was ne're so much your enemy,
As that same Ague which hath made you leane.
What is't a Clocke?

Bru. Caesar, tis stricken eight.

Cas. I thanke you for your paines and curtesie.

Enter Antony.

See, Antony that Revels long a-nights
Is notwithstanding up. Good morrow Antony.

Ant. So to most Noble Caesar

Cas. Bid them prepare within:
I am too blame to be thus waited for.
Now Cinna, now Metellus: what Trebonius,
I have an houres talke in store for you:
Remember that you call on me to day:
Be neere me, that I may remember you.

Treb. Caesar I will; and so neere will I be,
That your best Friends shall wish I had beene further.

Cas. Good Friends go in, and taste some wine with me
And we (like Friends) will straight way go together.

Bru. That every like is not the same, O Caesar,
The heart of Brutus earne to thinke upon. Exeunt.

Enter Artemidorus.

Caesar, beware of Brutus, take heede of Cassius; come not neere Caska, have an eye to Cynna, trust not Trebonius, marke well Metellus Cymbel, Decius Brutus loves thee not: Thou hast wrong'd Caius Ligarius. There is but one minde in all these men, and it is bent against Caesar: If thou beest not Immortal, looke about you: Security giues way to Conspiracy. The mighty Gods defend thee.

Thy Lover Artemidorus.

Heere will I stand, till Caesar passe along,
And as a Sutor will I give him this:
My heart laments, that Vertue cannot live
Out of the teeth of Emulation.
If thou reade this, O Caesar, thou mayest live;
If not, the Fates with Traitors do contriue.

Enter Portia and Lucius.

Por. I prythee Boy, run to the Senate-house,
Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone.
Why doest thou stay?

Luc. To know my errand Madam.

Por. I would have had thee there and heere agen
Ere I can tell thee what thou should'st do there:
O Constancy, be strong upon my side,
Set a huge Mountaine 'twene my Heart and Tongue:
I have a mans minde, but a womans might:
How hard it is for women to keepe counsell.
Art thou heere yet?

Luc. Madam, what should I do?
Run to the Capitoll, and nothing else?
And so returne to you, and nothing else?

Por. Yes, bring me word Boy, if thy Lord looke well,
For he went sickly forth: and take good note
What Caesar doth, what Sutors presse to him.
Hearke Boy, what noise is that?

Luc. I heare none Madam.

Por. Prythee listen well:
I heard a busling Rumor like a Fray,
And the winde brings it from the Capitoll.

Luc. Sooth Madam, I heare nothing.

Enter the Soothsayer.

Por. Come hither Fellow, which way hast thou bin?

Sooth. At mine owne house, good Lady.

Por. What is't a clocke?

Sooth. About the ninth houre Lady.

Por. Is Caesar yet gone to the Capitoll?

Sooth. Madam not yet, I go to take my stand,
To see him passe on to the Capitoll.

Por. Thou hast some suite to Caesar, hast thou not?

Sooth. That I have Lady, if it will please Caesar
To be so good to Caesar, as to heare me:
I shall beset him to befriend himselfe.

Por. Why know'st thou any harme's intended towards him?

Sooth. None that I know will be,
Much that I feare may chance:
Good morrow to you: heere the street is narrow:
The throng that followes Caesar at the heeles,
Of Senators, of Prætors, common Sutors,
Will crowd a feeble man (almost) to death:
Ile get me to a place more voyd, and there
Speake to great Caesar as he comes along.

Por. I must go in:

Aye me! How weake a thing
The heart of woman is? O Brutus,
The Heavens speede thee in thine enterprize.
Sure the Boy heard me: Brutus hath a suite
That Caesar will not grant. O, I grow faint:
Run Lucius, and commend me to my Lord,

Say I am merry; Come to me againe,
And bring me word what he doth say to thee.

Actus Tertius.

Flourish.

Enter Caesar, Brutus, Cassius, Caska, Decius, Metellus, Trebonius, Cynna, Antony, Lepidus, Artemidorus, Popilius, and the Soothsayer.

Cas. The Ides of March are come.

Sooth. I Caesar, but not gone.

Art. Haile Caesar: Read this Scedule.

Dec. Trebonius doth desire you to ore-read
(At your best leisure) this his humble suite.

Art. O Caesar, reade mine first: for mine's a suite

That touches Caesar neerer. Read it great Caesar.

Cas. What touches us our selfe, shall be last serv'd.

Art. Delay not Caesar, read it instantly.

Cas. What, is the fellow mad?

Pub. Sirra, give place.

Cas. What, urge you your Petitions in the street?
Come to the Capitoll.

Pop. I wish your enterprize to day may thrive.

Cas. What enterprize Popilius?

Pop. Fare you well.

Brut. What said Popilius Lena?

Cas. He wisht to day our enterprize might thrive:
I feare our purpose is discovered.

Brut. Looke how he makes to Caesar: marke him.

Cas. Caska be sodaine, for we feare prevention.

Brutus what shall be done? If this be knowne,
Cassius or Caesar never shall turne backe,
For I will slay my selfe.

Brut. Cassius be constant:

Popilius Lena speakes not of our purposes,
For looke he smiles, and Caesar doth not change.

Cas. Trebonius knowes his time: for look you Brutus
He drawes Marke Antony out of the way.

Dec. Where is Metellus Cymbel, let him go,
And presently preferre his suite to Caesar.

Brut. He is addrest: presse neere, and second him.

Cin. Caska, you are the first that reares your hand.

Cas. Are we all ready? What is now amisse,
That Caesar and his Senate must redresse?

Metel. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant Caesar
Metellus Cymbel throwes before thy Seate
An humble heart.

Cas. I must prevent thee Cymbel:
These couchings, and these lowly courtesies
Might fire the blood of ordinary men,
And turne pre-Ordinance, and first Decree,
Into the lane of Children. Be not fond.
To thinke that Caesar beares such Rebell blood
That will be thaw'd from the true quality
With that which melteth Fooles, I meane sweet words,
Low-crooked-curties, and base Spaniell fawning:
Thy Brother by decree is banished:
If thou doest bend, and pray, and fawne for him,
I spurne thee like a Curre out of my way:
Know, Caesar doth not wrong, nor without cause
Will he be satisfied.

Met. Is there no voice more worthy then my owne,

To

To sound more sweetly in great Cæsars eare,
For the repealing of my banish'd Brother?

Bru. I kisse thy hand, but not in flattery Cæsar:
Desiring thee, that Publius Cimber may
Have an immediate freedome of repeale.

Cæs. What Brutus?

Cæs. Pardon Cæsar: Cæsar pardon:
As love as to thy foote doth Cassius fall,
To begge enfranchisement for Publius Cimber.

Cæs. I could be well mov'd, if I were as you,
If I could pray to moove, Prayers would moove me:
But I am constant as the Northern Starre,
Of whose true fixt, and resting quality,
There is no fellow in the Firmament.
The Skies are painted with unnumberd sparkes,
They are all Fire, and every one doth shine:
But, there's but one in all doth hold his place.
So, in the World; 'Tis furnish'd well with Men,
And Men are Flesh and Blood, and apprehensive;
Yet in the number, I do know but One
That unassayleable holds on his Ranke,
Unshak'd of motion: and that I am he,
Let me a little shew it, even in this:
That I was constant Cimber should be banish'd,
And constant do remaine to keepe him so.

Cim. O Cæsar.

Cæs. Hence: Wilt thou lift up Olympus?

Dec. Great Cæsar:

Cæs. Do not Brutus bootlesse kneele?

Cæs. Speake hands for me.

They stab Cæsar.

Cæs. Et Tu Brute—— Then fall Cæsar.

Cim. Liberty, Freedome; Tyranny is dead,
Run hence, proclaime, cry it about the Streets.

Cæs. Some to the common Pulpits, and cry out Liberty, Freedome, and Enfranchisement.

Bru. People and Senators, be not affrighted:
Fly not, stand still: Ambitions debt is paid.

Cæs. Go to the Pulpit Brutus.

Dec. And Cassius too.

Bru. Where's Publius?

Cim. Heere, quite confounded with this mutiny.

Met. Stand fast together, lest some Friend of Cæsars
Should chance——

Bru. Take not of standing. Publius good cheere,
There is no harme intended to your person,
Nor to no Roman else: so tell them Publius.

Cæs. And leave us Publius, lest that the people
Rushing on us, should do your Age some mischief.

Bru. Do so, and let no man abide this deede,
But we the Doers.

Enter Trebonius.

Cæs. Where is Anthony?

Treb. Fled to his House amaz'd:
Men, Wives, and Children, stare, cry out, and run,
As it were Doomesday.

Bru. Fates, we will know your pleasures:
That we shall dye we know, 'tis but the time
And drawing dayes out, that men stand upon.

Cæs. Why he that cuts off twenty yeares of life,
Cuts off so many yeares of fearing death.

Bru. Grant that, and then is Death a Benefit:
So are we Cæsars Friends, that have abridg'd
His time of fearing death. Stoope Romans, stoope,
And let us bathe our hands in Cæsars blood
Up to the Elbowes, and besmeare our Swords:

Then walke we forth, even to the Market place,
And waving our red Weapons o're our heads,
Let's all cry Peace, Freedome, and Liberty.

Cæs. Stoop then, and wail. How many Ages hence Shall this our lofty Scene be acted over,
In States unborne, and Accents yet unknowne?

Bru. How many times shall Cæsar bleed in sport,
That now on Pompeys Basis lyes along,
No worthier then the dust?

Cæs. So oft as that shall be,
So often shall the knot of us be call'd,
The Men that gave their Country liberty.

Dec. What, shall we forth?

Cæs. I, every man away.

Brutus shall leade, and we will grace his heeles
With the most boldest, and best hearts of Rome.

Enter a Servant.

Bru. Soft, who comes heere? A friend of Antonyes.

Ser. Thus Brutus, did my Master bid me kneele;
Thus did Marke Antony bid me fall downe,
And being prostrate, thus he bad me say,
Brutus is Noble, Wile, Valiant, and Honest,
Cæsar was Mighty, Bold, Royal, and Loving:
Say, I love Brutus, and I honour him;
Say, I fear'd Cæsar, honour'd him, and lov'd him.
If Brutus will vouchsafe, that Antony
May safely come to him, and be resolv'd
How Cæsar hath deserv'd to lye in death,
Mark Antony, shall not love Cæsar dead
So well as Brutus living; but will follow
The Fortunes and Affaires of Noble Brutus,
Thorough the hazards of this untrod State,
With all true Faith. So sayes my Master Antony.

Bru. Thy Master is a Wile and Valiant Roman,
I never thought him worse;
Tell him, so please him come unto this place
He shall be satisfied: and by my Honor
Depart untouch'd.

Ser. He fetch him presently.

Exit Servant.

Bru. I know that we shall have him well to Friend.

Cæs. I wish we may: But yet have I a minde
That feares him much, and my knif giving still Falles shrewdly to the purpose.

Enter Antony.

Bru. But heere comes Antony.
Welcome Mark Antony.

Ant. O mighty Cæsar! Dost thou lye so low?
Are all thy Conquests, Glories, Triumphes, Spoiles, Shrunke to this little Measure? Fare thee well.
I know not Gentlemen what you intend,
Who else must be let blood, who else is ranke:
If I my selfe, there is no houre so fit
As Cæsars deaths houre; nor no Instrument
Of halfe that worth, as those your Swords, made rich
With the most Noble blood of all this World.
I do beseech yee, if you beare me hard,
Now, whilst your purpled hands do reeke and sineake
Fulfill your pleasure. Live a thousand yeeres,
I shall not finde my selfe so apt to dye.
No place will please me so, no meane of death,
As heere by Cæsar, and by you cut off,
The Choice and Master Spirits of this Age.

Bru. O Antony! Begge not your death of us:
Though now we must appeare bloody and cruell,
As by our hands, and this our present Act
You see we do: Yet see you but our hands,

And

And this, the bleeding businesse they have done:
Our hearts you see not, they are pittifull:
And pittie to the generall wrong of Rome,
As fire drives out fire, so pittie, pittie,
Hath done this deed on Caesar. For your part,
To you, our Swords have leaden points Marke Antony;
Our Armes in strength of malice, and our Hearts
Of Brothers temper, do receive you in,
With all kinde love, good thoughts, and reverence.

Cas. Your voyce shall be as strong as any mans,
In the disposing of new Dignities.

Bru. Onely be patient, till we have appeas'd
The Multitude, beside themselves with feare,
And then, we will deliver you the cause,
Why I, that did love Caesar when I strooke him,
Have thus proceeded.

Ant. I doubt not of your Wisedome:
Let each man render me his bloody hand.
First Marcus Brutus will I shake with you;
Next Caius Cassius do I take your hand;
Now Decius Brutus yours, now yours Metellus;
Yours Cinna; and my valiant Caska, yours;
Though last, not least in love, yours good Trebonius,
Gentlemen all: Alas, what shall I say,
My credit now stands on such slippery ground,
That one of two bad wayes you must conceit me,
Either a Coward, or a Flatterer.
That I did love thee Caesar, O tis true:
If then thy Spirit looke upon us now,
Shall it not greeve thee deerer then thy death,
To see thy Antony making his peace,
Shaking the bloody fingers of thy Foes?
Most Noble, in the presence of thy Coarse,
Had I as many eyes, as thou hast wounds,
Weeping as fast as they streame forth thy blood,
It would become me better, then to close
In tearmes of Friendship with thine enemies.
Pardon me Julius, heere was't thou bay'd brave Heart,
Heere did'st thou fall, and heere thy Hunters stand
Sign'd in thy Spoyle, and Crimson'd in thy Lethe.
O World! thou wast the Forrest to this Hart,
And this indeed, O World, the Hart of thee,
How like a Deere, stricken by many Princes,
Dost thou heere lye?

Cas. Marke Antony.

Ant. Pardon me Caius Cassius:
The Enemies of Caesar, shall say this:
Then, in a Friend, it is cold Modesty.

Cas. I blame you not for praising Caesar so,
But what compact meane you to have with us?
Will you be prick'd in number of our Friends,
Or shall we on; and not depend on you?

Ant. Therefore I tooke your hands, but was indeed
Sway'd from the point, by looking downe on Caesar.
Friends am I with you all, and love you all,
Vpon this hope, that you shall give me Reasons,
Why, and wherein, Caesar was dangerous.

Bru. Or else were this a savage Spectacle:
Our Reasons are so full of good regard,
That were you Antony, the Sonne of Caesar,
You should be satisfied.

Ant. That's all I seeke,
And am moreover sutor, that I may Produce his body to the Market-place,
And in the Pulpit as becomes a Friend,
Speake in the Order of his Funerall.

Bru. You shall Marke Antony.

Cas. Brutus, a word with you:
You know not what you do; Do not consent
That Antony speake in his Funerall:
Know you how much the people may be mov'd
By that which he will utter.

Bru. By your pardon:
I will my selfe into the Pulpit first,
And shew the reason of our Caesar's death.
What Antony shall speake, I will protest
He speakes by leave, and by permission:
And that we are contented Caesar shall
Have all true Rites, and lawfull Ceremonies,
It shall advantage more, then do us wrong.

Cas. I know not what may fall, I like it not.

Bru. Marke Antony, heere take you Caesar's body:
You shall not in your Funerall speech blame us,
But speake all good you can devise of Caesar,
And say you doo't by our permission:
Else shall you not have any hand at all
About his Funerall. And you shall speake
In the same Pulpit whereto I am going,
After my speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so:

I do desire no more.

Bru. Prepare the body then, and follow us. Exeunt.

Manet Antony.

O pardon me, thou bleeding peece of Earth:
That I am meeke and gentle with these Butchers.
Thou art the Ruines of the Noblest man
That ever lived in the Tide of Times.
Woe to the hand that shed this costly Blood.
Ouer thy wounds, now do I Prophesie,
(which like dumbe mouthes do ope their Ruby lips,
To begge the voyce and utterance of my Tongue)
A Curse shall light upon the limbes of men;
Domesticke Fury, and fierce Civill, strife,
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy:
Blood and destruction shall be so in use,
And dreadfull Objects so familiar,
That Mothers shall but smile, when they behold
Their infants quartered with the hands of Warre:
All pittie choak'd with custome of fell deeds,
And Caesar's Spirit ranging for Revenge,
With Ate by his side, come hot from Hell,
Shall in these Confines, with a Monarkes voyce,
Cry havocke, and let slip the Dogges of Warre,
That this foule deede, shall smell above the earth
With Carrion men, groaning for Buriall.

Enter Octavius's Servant.

You serve Octavius Caesar, do you not?

Ser. I do Marke Antony.

Ant. Caesar did write for him to come Rome.

Ser. He did receive his Letters, and is comming,
And bid me say to you by word of mouth——
O Caesar!

Ant. Thy heart is bigge: get thee a-part and weepe:
Passion I see is catching, for mine eyes,
Seeing those Beads of sorrow stand in thine,
Began to water. Is thy Master comming?

Ser. He lies to night within seven Leagues of Rome.

Ant. Post backe with speede,
And tell him what hath chanc'd:
Heere is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,
No Rome of safety for Octavius yet,
Hie hence, and tell him so. Yet stay a-while,

Thou

Thou shalt not backe, till I have borne this course
Into the market place : There shall I try
In my Oration, how the People take
The cruell issue of these bloody men,
According to the which, thou shalt discourte
To young Octavius of the state of things.
Lend me your hand.

Exeunt

Enter Brutus and goes into the Pulpit, and Cassius with the Plebeians.

Pl. We will be satisfied : let us be satisfied.

Br. Then follow me, and give me Audience friends.

Cassius go you into the other streete,

And part the Numbers :

Those that will heare me speake, let 'em stay heere ;

Those that will follow Cassius, go with him,

And publike Reasons shall be rendred.

Of Cæsars death.

1 Pl. I will heare Brutus speake.

2. I will heare Cassius, and compare their Reasons,
When severally we heare them rendred.

3. The Noble Brutus is ascended : Silence.

Br. Be patient till the last.

Romans, Countrey-men, and Lovers, heare mee for my cause, and be silent, that you may heare. Beleeve mee for mine Honor, and have respect to mine Honor, that you may beleeve. Censure me in your Wisedome, and awake your Senses, that you may the better Iudge. If there bee any in this Assembly, any deere Friend of Cæsars, to them
I say, that Brutus love to Cesar, was no lesse then his. If then, that Friend demand, why Brutus rose against Cesar, this is my answer : Not that I lov'd Cesar lesse, but that I lov'd Rome more. Had you rather Cesar were living, and dye all Slaves ; then that Cesar were dead, to live all Free men ? As Cesar lov'd mee, I weepe for him ; as he was Fortunate, I rejoyce at it ; as he was Valiant, I honour him : But, as he was Ambitious, I slew him. There is Teares, for his Love : Joy, for his Fortune : Honor, for his Valour : and death for his Ambition. Who is heere so base, that would be a Bondman ? If any, speak, for him have I offended. Who is heere so rude, that would not be a Roman ? If any, speak, for him have I offended. Who is heere so vile, that will not love his Countrey ? If any, speak, for him have I offended. I pause for a Reply.

All. None Brutus, none.

Brutus. Then none have I offended. I have done no more to Cesar, then you shall do to Brutus. The Question of his death, is inroll'd in the Capitoll : his Glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy ; nor his offences enforc'd, for which he suffered death.

Enter Mark Antony, with Cæsars body.

Heere comes his Body, mourn'd by Marke Antony, who though he had no hand in his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying, a place in the Commonwealth, as which of you shall not. With this I depart, that as I slewe my best Lover for the good of Rome, I have the same Dagger for my selfe, when it shall please my Country to need my death.

All. Live Brutus, live, live.

1. Bring him with Triumph home unto his house,

2. Give him a Statue with his Ancestors.

3. Let him be Cesar.

4. Cæsars better parts,

Shall be Crown'd in Brutus.

1. Wee'l bring him to his House,
With Showts and Clamors.

Br. My Country-men.

2. Peace, silence, Brutus speakes.

1. Peace ho.

Br. Good Countrymen, let me depart alone,
And (for my sake) stay heere with Antony :

Do grace to Cæsars Corpes, and grace his Speech
Tending to Cæsars Glories, which Marke Antony
(By our permission) is allow'd to make.

I do intreat you, not a man depart.

Save I alone, till Antony have spoke.

Exit.

1 Stay ho, and let us heare Marke Antony.

3 Let him go up into the publike Chaire,

Wee'l heare him : Noble Antony go up.

Ant. For Brutus sake, I am beholding to you.

4 What does he say of Brutus ?

3 He sayes for Brutus sake

He findes himselfe beholding to us all.

4 'Twere best speake no harme of Brutus heere ?

1 This Cesar was a Tyrant.

3 Nay thats certaine :

We are glad that Rome is rid of him.

2 Peace, let us heare what Antony can say :

Ant. you gentle Romans.

All. Peace hoe, let us heare him.

Ant. Friends, Romans, Countrymen, lend me your ears :

I come to bury Cesar, not to praise him :

The evill that men do, lives after them,

The good is oft enterred with their bones,

So let it be with Cesar. The Noble Brutus,

Hath told you Cesar was Ambitious :

If it were so, it was a greevous Fault,

And greevously hath Cesar answer'd it

Heere under leave of Brutus, and the rest,

(For Brutus is an Honourable man,

So are they all, all Honourable men)

Come I to speake in Cæsars Funerall.

He was my Friend, faithfull, and just to me ;

But Brutus sayes, he was Ambitious,

And Brutus is an Honourable man.

He hath brought many Captives home to Rome,

Whose Ransomes, did the generall Coffers fill :

Did this in Cesar seeme Ambitious ?

When that the poore have cry'de, Cesar hath wept :

Ambition should be made of sterner stuffe,

Yet Brutus sayes, he was Ambitious ;

And Brutus is an Honourable man.

You all did see, that on the Lupercall,

I thrice presented him a Kingly Crowne,

Which he did thrice refuse. Was this Ambition ?

Yet Brutus sayes, he was Ambitious :

And sure he is an Honourable man.

I speake not to disprove what Brutus spoke,

But heere I am, to speake what I do know ;

You all did love him once, not without cause,

What cause with-holds you then, to mourne for him ?

O Iudgement ! thou art fled to brutish Beasts,

And Men have lost their Reason. Beare with me,

My heart is in the Coffin there with Cesar.

And I must pause till it come backe to me.

1 Me thinkes there is much reason in his sayings.

If thou consider rightly of the matter,

Cesar ha's had great wrong.

(his place.

3 Ha's he Masters ? I feare there will a worse come in

4. Marke

4 Mark'd ye his words? he would not take ſ Crowne,
Therefore tis certaine, he was not Ambitious.

1 If it be found ſo, ſome will decre abide it.

2 Poore ſoule, his eyes are red as fire with weeping,

3 There's not a Nobler man in Rome then Antony.

4 Now marke him, he begins againe to ſpeake.

Ant. But yesterday, the word of Caſar might Have ſtood againſt the World: Now lies he there,
And none ſo poore to do him reuerence.

O Maſters! If I were diſpos'd to ſtirre
Your hearts and mindes to Mutiny and Rage,
I ſhould doe Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong:
who (you all know) are Honourable men.

I will not do them wrong: I rather chooſe
To wrong the dead, to wrong my ſelfe and you,
Then I will wrong ſuch Honourable men.

But heere's a Parchment, with the Scale of Caſar,
I found it in his Cloſſet, tis his Will:

Let but the Commons heare this Teſtament:
(Which pardon me) I do not meane to reade,
And they would go and kiſſe dead Caſars wounds,
And dip their Napkins in his Sacred Blood;

Yea, begge a haire of him for Memory,
And dying, mention it within their Willes,
Bequeathing it as a rich Legacy
Vnto their iſſue.

4 Wee'l heare the Will, reade it Marke Antony.

All. The Will, the Will; we will heare Caſars Will.

Ant. Have patience gentle Friends, I muſt not read it.

It is not meet you know how Caſar lov'd you:

You are not Wood, you are not Stones, but men:

And being men, hearing the Will of Caſar,

It will inflame you, it will make you mad;

Tis good you know not that you are his Heires,

For if you ſhould, O what would come of it?

4 Read the Will, wee'l heare it Antony:

You ſhall reade us the will, Caſars Will.

Ant. Will you be Patient? Will you ſtay a while?

I have o're ſhot my ſelfe to tell you of it,

I feare I wrong the Honourable men,

Whoſe Daggers have ſtabb'd Caſar: I do feare it.

4 They were Traitors: Honourable men?

All. The Will, the Teſtament.

2 They were Villaines, Murderers: the Will, reade the

Will.

Ant. You will compell me then to read the Will;

Then make a Ring about the Corpes of Caſar,

And let me ſhew you him that made the Will:

Shall I deſcend? And will you give me leave?

All. Come downe.

2 Deſcend.

3 You ſhall have leave.

4 A Ring, ſtand round.

1 Stand from the Hearſe, ſtand from the Body.

2 Roome for Antony, moſt Noble Antony.

Ant. Nay preſſe not ſo upon me, ſtand farre off.

All. Stand backe: roome, beare backe.

Ant. If you have teares, prepare to ſhed them now.

You all do know this Mantle, I remember

The firſt time ever Caſar put it on,

Twas on a Summers Evening in his Tent,

That day he overcame the Nervij

Looke, in this place ran Cassius Dagger through:

See what a rent the envious Cassius made:

Through this, the welbelov'd Brutus ſtabb'd,

And as he pluck'd his curſed Steele away:

Marke how the blood of Caſar followed it,

As ruſhing out of doores, to be reſolv'd

If Brutus ſo unkindely knock'd, or no:

For Brutus, as you know, was Caſars Angel.

Iudge, O you Gods, how deerely Caſar lov'd him:

This was the moſt unkindeſt cut of all.

For when the Noble Caſar ſaw him ſtab,

Ingratitude, more ſtrong then Traitors armes,

Quite vanquiſh'd him: then burſt his Mighty heart,

And in his Mantle, muſſing up his face,

Even at the Baſe of Pompeyes Statue

(Which all the while ran blood) great Caſar fell.

O what a fall was there, my Countrymen?

Then I, and you, and all of us fell downe,

Whilſt bloody Treason flouriſh'd over us.

O now you weepe, and I perceive you feele

The dint of pittie: Theſe are gracious dropes.

Kinde Soules, what weepe you, when you but behold

Our Caſars Veſture wounded? Look you heere,

Heere is Himſelfe, marr'd as you ſee with Traitors.

1 O pitteous ſpectacle!

2 O Noble Caſar!

3 O woſull day!

4 O Traitors, Villaines!

1 O moſt bloody ſight!

2 We will be reveng'd: Revenge

About, ſeeke, burne, fire, kill, ſlay,

Let not a Traitor live.

Ant. Stay Country-men.

1 Peace there, heare the Noble Antony,

2 Wee'l heare him, wee'l follow him, wee'l dy with him. (you up)

Ant. Good Friends, ſweet Friends, let me not ſtirre

To ſuch a ſodaine Flood of Mutiny:

They that have done this Deede, are honourable,

What private griefes they have, alas I know not,

That made them do it: They are Wiſe, and Honourable,

And will no doubt with Reaſons anſwer you.

I come not (Friends) to ſteale away your hearts;

I am no Orator, as Brutus is;

But (as you know me all) a plaine blunt man

That love my Friend, and that they know full well,

That give me publicke leave to ſpeake of him:

For I have neither wit nor words, nor worth,

Action, nor Vtterance, nor the power of Speech,

To ſtirre mens Blood. I onely ſpeake right on:

I tell you that, which you your ſelves do know,

Shew you ſweet Caſars wounds, poor poor dum mouths

And bid them ſpeake for me: But were I Brutus,

And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony

Would ruffle up your Spirits, and put a Tongue

In every Wound of Caſar, that ſhould move

The ſtones of Rome, to riſe and Mutiny.

All. Wee'l Mutiny.

1 Wee'l burne the houſe of Brutus.

3 Away then, come ſeeke the Conſpirators.

Ant. Yet heare me Countrymen, yet heare me ſpeake

All. Peace hoe, heare Antony, moſt Noble Antony.

Ant. Why Friends, you go to do you know not, what.

Wherein hath Caſar thus deſerv'd your loves?

Alas you know not, I muſt tell you then:

You have forgot the Will I told you of.

All. Moſt true, the Will, let's ſtay and heare the Will.

Ant. Heere is the Will, and under Caſars Seale:

To every Roman Citizen he gives,

To every ſeverall man, ſeventy five Drachmaes.

2 Pl.

2 Pl. Most Noble Caesar, wee'l revenge his death.

3 Pl. O Royall Caesar.

Ant. Heare me with patience.

All. Peace hoe

Ant. Moreover, he hath left you all his Walkes,
His private Arbors, and new-planted Orchards,
On this side Tyber, he hath left them you, I
And to your heyres for euer: common pleasures
To walke abroad, and recreate your selves.
Heere was a Caesar: when comes such another?

1 Pl. Never, never: come, away, away:

Wee'l burne his body in the holy place,
And with the Brands fire all the Traitors houses.
Take up the body.

2 Pl. Go fetch fire.

3 Pl. Plucke downe Benches.

4 Pl. Plucke downe Formes, Windowes, any thing.

Exeunt Plebeians.

Ant. Now let it worke: Mischeefe thou art a-foot,
Take thou what course thou wilt.
How now Fellow?

Enter Servant.

Ser. Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome.

Ant. Where is hee?

Ser. He and Lepidus are at Caesar's house.

Ant. And thither will I straight, to visit him:

He comes vpon a wish. Fortune is merry,

And in this mood will give us any thing.

Ser. I heard him say, Brutus and Cassius
Are rid like Madmen through the Gates of Rome.

Ant. Belike they had some notice of the people
How I had moved them. Bring me to Octavius. Exeunt.

Enter Cinna the Poet, and after him the Plebeians.

Cin. I dreamt to night, that I did feast with Caesar,
And things unluckily charge my Fantasie:
I have no will to wander forth of doores,
Yet something leads me forth.

1 What is your name?

2 Whether are you going?

3 Where do you dwell?

4 Are you a married man, or a Batchellor?

2 Answer every man directly.

1 I, and breefely.

4 I, and wisely.

3 I, and truly, you were best.

Cin. What is my name? Whether am I going? Where do I dwell? Am I a married man, or a Batchellour? Then to answer every man, directly and breefely, wisely and truly: wisely I say, I am a Batchellor.

2 That's as much as to say, they are fooles that marry: you'l beare me a bang for that I feare: proceede directly.

Cin. Directly I am going to Caesar's Funerall.

1 As a Friend, or an Enemy?

Cin. As a friend.

2 That matter is answered directly.

4 For your dwelling: breefely.

Cin. Breefely, I dwell by the Capitoll.

3 Your name sir, truly,

Cin. Truly, my name is Cinna.

1 Teare him to peeces, hee's a Conspirator.

Cin. I am Cinna the Poet, I am Cinna the Poet.

4 Teare him for his bad verses, teare him for his bad Verses.

Cin. I am not Cinna the Conspirator.

4 It is no matter, his name's Cinna, pluck but his name out of his heart, and turne him going.

3 Teare him, teare him; Come Brands hoe, Firebrands: to Brutus, to Cassius, burne all. Some to Decius Houses and some to Caska's; some to Ligarius: Away, go.

Exeunt all the Plebeians.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Antony, Octavius, and Lepidus.

Ant. These many then shall die, their names are prikt

Oct. Your Brother too must dye: consent you Lepidus?

Lep. I do consent.

Oct. Pricke him downe Antony.

Lep. Vpon condition Publius shall not live,
Who is your Sisters sonne, Marke Antony.

Ant. He shall not live; looke, with a spot I dam him.

But Lepidus, go you to Caesar's house:

Fetch the Will hither, and we shall determine

How to cut off some charge in Legacies.

Lep. What? shall I finde you heere?

Oct. Or heere, or at the Capitoll.

Exit Lepidus.

Ant. This is a slight unmeritable man,

Meet to be sent on Errands: is it fit

The three-fold World divided, he should stand

One of the three to share it?

Oct. So you thought him,

And tooke his voyce who should be prickt to die

In our blacke Sentence and Proscription.

Ant. Octavius, I have seene more dayes then you;

And though we lay these Honours on this man,

To ease our selves of diuers sland'rous loads,

He shall but beare them, as the Ass beares Gold,

To groane and sweat under the Businesse,

Either led or driven, as we print the way:

And having brought our Treasure, where we will,

Then take we downe his Load, and turne him off

(Like to the empty Ass) to shake his eares,

And graze in Commons.

Oct. You may do your will:

But hee's a tried, and valiant Souldier.

Ant. So is my Horse Octavius, and for that I do appoint him store of Provender.

It is a Creature that I teach to fight,

To winde, to stop, to run directly on:

His corporall Motion, govern'd by my Spirit,

And in some taste, is Lepidus but so:

He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth:

A barren spirited Fellow; one that feeds

On Objects, Arts, and Imitations.

Which out of vse, and stal'de by other men

Begin his fashion. Do not talke of him,

But as a property: and now Octavius,

Listen great things. Brutus and Cassius

Are levying Powers; We must straight make head:

Therefore let our Alliance be combin'd,

Our best Friends made and our best meanes stretcht out,

And let us presently go sit in Councell,

How covert matters may be best disclos'd,

And open Perils surest answered.

Oct. Let us do so: for we are at the stake,

And

Cassi. I durst not.

Brut. No.

Cassi. What? durst not tempt him?

Brut. For your life you durst not.

Cassi. Doe not presume too much upon my Love,
I may doe that I shall be sorry for.

Brut. You have done that you should be sorry for.
There is no terror Cassius in your threats.

For I am arm'd so strong in Honesty,
That they passe by me, as the idle winde,
Which I respect not. I did send to you
For certaine summes of Gold, which you deny'de me,
For I can raise no money by vile meanes:
By heaven, I had rather Coyne my heart,
And drop my blood for Drachmaes, then to wring
From the hard hands of Peazants, their vile trash
By any indirection. I did send
To you for Gold to pay my Legions,
Which you deny'd me: was that done like Cassius?
Should I have answer'd Caius Cassius so?
When Marcus Brutus growes to Covetous,
To locke such Rascall Counters from his friends,
Beready gods with all your Thunder-bolts,
Dash him to peeces.

Cassi. I deny'de you not.

Brut. You did.

Cassi. I did not. He was but a Foole
That brought my answer back. Brutus hath riu'd my hart
A friend should beare his friends infirmities,
But Brutus makes mine greater then they are.

Brut. I doe not, till you practice them on me.

Cassi. You love me not.

Brut. I doe not like your faults.

Cassi. A friendly eye could never see such faults.

Brut. A flatterers would not, though they do appeare
As huge as high Olympus.

Cassi. Come Antony, and yong Octavius come,
Revenge your selves alone on Cassius,
For Cassius is a-weary of the World:
Hated by one he loves, brau'd by his brother,
Check'd like a bondman, all his faults observ'd,
Set in a Note-booke, learn'd, and con'd by roate
To cast into my Teeth. O I could weepe
My Spirit from mine eyes: There is my Dagger,
And here my naked Breast: Within a heart
Deerer then Pluto's Mines: Richer then gold:
If that thou beest a Roman, take it forth.
I that deny'd thee gold, will give my heart:
Strike as thou didst at Caesar: for I know,
When thou didst hate him worst, thou lovedst him better
Then ever thou lovedst Cassius.

Brut. Sheath your Dagger:

Be angry when you will, it shall have scope:
Doe what you will, dishonor, shall be humour.
O Cassius, you are yoaked with a Lambe
That carries Anger, as the Flint beares fire,
Who much inforced, shewes a hasty sparke,
And Traite is cold againe.

Cassi. Hath Cassius liv'd
To be but Mirth and Laughter to his Brutus,
When griefe and blood ill temper'd, vexeth him?

Brut. When I spoke that, I was ill temper'd too.

Cassi. Doe you confesse so much? Give me your hand.

Brut. And my heart too.

Cassi. O Brutus!

Brut. Whats the matter?

Cassi. Have not you love enough to beare with me,
When that rash humour which my Mother gave me
Makes me forgetfulls?

Brut. Yes Cassius, and from henceforth
When you are over-earnest with your Brutus,
Hee'l thinke your Mother chides, and leave you so.

Enter a Poet.

Poet. Let me goe in to see the Generals,
There is some grudge betweene em, tis not meete
They be alone.

Luci. You shall not come to them.

Poet. Nothing but death shall stay me.

Cassi. How now? Whats the matter?

Poet. For shame you Generals? what doe you meane?
Love, and be friends, as two such men should be,
For I have seene more yeeres I me sure then yee.

Cassi. Ha, ha, how vildely doth this Cynicke rime:

Brut. Get you hence firrah: Sawcy fellow, hence.

Cassi. Beare with him Brutus, tis his fashion,

Brut. Ile know his humour, when he knowes his time:
What should the Warres doe with these Iigging fooles?
Companion, hence.

Cassi. Away, away be gone.

Exit Poet.

Brut. Lucilius and Titinius bid the Commanders
Prepare to lodge their Companies to night.

Cassi. And come your selves, & bring Messala with you Immediately to us.

Brut. Lucius, a bowle of Wine.

Cassi. I did not thinke you could have bin so angry,

Brut. O Cassius, I am sicke of many griefes.

Cassi. Of your Philosophy you make no use,
If you give place to accidentall evils.

Brut. No man beares sorrow better. Portia is dead.

Cassi. Ha? Portia?

Brut. She is dead.

Cassi. How scap'd I killing, when I crost you so?
O insupportable, and touching losse!
Vpon what sicknesse?

Brut. Impatient of my absence.

And griete, that yong Octavius with Marke Antony,
Have made themselves so strong: For with her death
That tydings came. With this she fell distract,
And (her Attendants absent) swallow'd fire.

Cassi. And dy'd so?

Brut. Even so.

Cassi. O ye immortall gods!

Enter Boy with Wine, and Tapers.

Brut. Speake no more of her: Give me a bowle of wine
In this I bury all unkindnesse Cassius.

Drinkes.

Cassi. My heart is thirsty for that Noble pledge,
Fill Lucius, till the Wine ore-swell the Cup:
I cannot drinke too much of Brutus love.

Enter Titinius, and Messala.

Brut. Come in Titinius:
Welcome good Messala:
Now sit we close about this Taper heere,
And call in question our necessities.

Cassi. Portia, art thou gone?

Brut. No more I pray you.

Messala, I have here received Letters,
That yong Octavius, and Marke Antony
Come downe upon us with a mighty power,
Bending their Expedition toward Philippi.

Mess. My selfe have Letters of the selfe-same Tenure.

Brn. With what Addition.

Mess. That by proscription, and billes of Outlary,
Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus,
Have put to death, an hundred Senators.

Brn. Therein our Letters doe not well agree :
Mine speake of seventy Senators, that dy'de
By their proscriptions, Cicero being one.

Cassi. Cibero one ?

Messa. Cicero is dead, and by that order of proscription
Had you your Letters from your wife, my Lord ?

Brn. No Messala.

Messa. Nor nothing in your Letters writ of her ?

Brn. Nothing Messala.

Messa. That me thinkes is strange.

Brn. Why aske you ?

Heare you ought of her, in yours ?

Messa. No my Lord.

Brn. Now as you are a Roman tell me true.

Mess. Then like a Roman, beare the truth I tell,
For certaine she is dead, and by strange manner.

Brn. Why farewell Portia : We must dye Messala :
With meditating that she must dye once,
I have the patience to endure it now.

Messa. Even so great men, great losses should indure.

Cassi. I have as much of this in Art as you.

But yet my Nature could not beare it so.

Brn. Well, to our worke alive. What doe you thinke
Of marching to Philippi presently.

Cassi. I doe not thinke it good.

Brn. Your reason ?

Cassi. This it is :

Tis better that the Enemy seeke us,
So shall he waste his meanes, weary his Souldiers,
Doing himselfe offence, whilst we lying still,
Are full of rest, defence, and nimblenesse.

Brn. Good reasons must of force give place to better:
The people twixt Philippi, and this ground
Doe stand but in a forc'd affection :

For they have grug'd us Contribution.
The Enemy, marching along by them,
By them shall make a fuller number up,
Come on refresht, new added, and encourag'd ;
From which advantage shall we cut him off.
If at Philippi we doe face him there,

These people at our backe,

Cassi. Heare me good brother.

Brn. Vnder your pardon. You must note beside,
That we have tride the utmost of our friends :
Our Legions are brim full, our cause is ripe,
The Enemy encreaseth every day,
We at the height, are ready to decline.
There is a Tide in the affayres of men,
Which taken at the Flood, leades on to Fortune :
Omitted, all the voyage of their life,
Is bound in Shallowes, and in Miseries.
On such a full Sea are we now a-float,
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or loose our Ventures,

Cassi. Then with your will goe on : we'll along
Our selves, and meet them at Philippi.

Brn. The deepe of night is crept upon our talke,
And Nature must obey Necessity,
Which we will niggard with a little rest:
There is no more to say.

Cassi. No more, good night,

Early to morrow will we rise, and hence.

Enter Lucius.

Brn. Lucius my Gowne : farewell good Messala,
Good night Tullius : Noble, Noble Cassius,
Good night, and good repose.

Cassi. O my deere brother :
This was an ill beginning of the night :
Never come such division twene our soules :
Let it not Brutus :

Enter Lucius with the Gowne.

Brn. Every thing is well.

Cassi. Good night my Lord.

Brn. Good night good brother.

Tit. Messa. Good night Lord Brutus.

Brn. Farewell every one.

Exit.

Give me the Gowne. Where is thy instrument ?

Luc. Heere in the Tent.

Brn. What thou speak'st drowsily ?

Poore knave I blame thee art, thou art ore-watch'd.
Call Claudio, and some other of my men,
Ile have them sleepe on Cushions in my Tent.

Luc. Varrus, and Claudio.

Enter Varrus and Claudio.

Var. Calls my Lord ?

Brn. I pray you sirs, lye in my Tent and sleepe,
It may be I shall raise you by and by
On businesse to my brother Cassius.

Var. So please you, we will stand,
And watch your pleasure.

Brn. I will not have it so : Lye downe good sirs,
It may be I shall otherwise bethinke me.
Looke Lucius, heeres the booke I sought for so :
I put it in the pocket of my Gowne.

Luc. I was sure your Lordship did not give it me.

Brn. Beare with me good Boy, I am much forgetfull.
Canst thou hold up thy instrument a straine or two,
And touch thy heavy eyes a-while,

Luc. I my Lord, an't please you.

Brn. It does my Boy ;

I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing.

Luc. It is my duty Sir.

Brn. I should not urge thy duty past thy might,
I know yong blouds looke for a time of rest.

Luc. I have slept my Lord already.

Brn. It was well done, and thou shalt sleepe againe :
I will not hold thee long. If I doe live,
I will be good to thee.

Musicke, and a Song.

This is a sleepey Tune : O Murdrous slumbler !
Layest thou thy Leaden Mace upon my Boy,
That playes thee Musicke ? Gentle knave good night :
I will not doe thee so much wrong to wake thee :
If thou dost nod, thou break'st thy instrument,
Ile take it from thee, and (good Boy) good night.
Let me see, let me see ? is not the Leafe turn'd downe
Where I left reading ? Heere it is I thinke.

Enter the Ghost of Caesar.

How ill this Taper burnes. Ha ! Who comes heere ?
I thinke it is the weakenesse of mine eyes
That shapeth this monstrous Apparition.
It comes upon me : Art thou any thing ?
Art thou some god, some Angell, or some Divell,
That mak'st my blood cold, and my haire to stare ?
Speake to me, what thou art.

Ghost. Thy evill Spirit Brutus

Ghost. I, at Philippi.
Brut. Why I will see thee at Philippi then:
 Now I have taken heart, thou vanishest.
Ill Spirit, I would hold more talke with thee.
Boy, Lucius, Varrus, Claudio, Sirs: awake: Claudio.
Luci. The strings my Lord are false.
Brut. He thinks he still is at his instrument.
Lucius, awake.
Luci. My Lord.
Brut. Didst thou dreame Lucius, that thou so cryedst out?
Luc. My Lord, I doe not know that I did cry.
Brut. Yes that thou didst; Didst thou see any thing?
Luc. Nothing my Lord.
Brut. Sleepe againe Lucius: Sirra Claudio, fellow, Thou: Awake.
Var. My Lord.
Claudio. My Lord.
Brut. Why did you so cry out sirs in your sleepe?
Both. Did we my Lord?
Brut. I: saw you any thing?
Var. No my Lord, I saw nothing.
Claudio. Nor I my Lord.
Brut. Goe, and commend me to my brother Cassius:
 Bid him set on his Powres betimes before,
 And we will follow.
Both. It shall be done my Lord. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Octavius, Antony, and their Army.
Octa. Now Antony, our hopes are answered,
 You said the Enemy would not come downe,
 But keepe the hilles and upper Regions:
 It proves not so: their battailes are at hand,
 They meane to warne us at Philippi here:
 Answering before we doe demand of them.
Ant. Tut I am in their bosomes, and I know ]
 Wherefore they doe it: They could be content
 To visit other places, and come downe
 With fearefull bravery: thinking by this face
 To fasten in our thoughts that they have Courage:
 But tis not so.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare you Generals,
 The Enemy comes on in gallant shew:
 Their bloody signe of Battell is hung out,
 And something to be done immediately.
Ant. Octavius, leade your Battaile softly on Vpon the left hand of the even field.
Octa. Vpon the right hand I, keepe thou the left.
Ant. Why doe you crosse me in this exigent.
Octa. I doe not crosse you: but I will doe so. March.

Drum. Enter Brutus, Cassius, and their Army.

Brut. They stand, and would have parley.
Cassi. Stand fast Titinius, we must out and talke.
Octa. Marke Antony, shall we give signe of Battaile?
Ant. No Caesar, we will answer on their Charge.

Make forth, the generalls would have some words.
Octa. Stirre not untill the Signall.
Brut. Words before blowes: is it so Countrymen?
Octa. Not that we love words better, as you doe.
Brut. Good words are better then bad strokes Octavius.
Ant. In your bad strokes Brutus, you give good words
 Witnesse the hole you made in Caesars heart,
 Crying long live, haile Caesar.
Cassi. Antony,
 The posture of your blowes are yet unknowne;
 But for your words. they rob the Hibla bees,
 And leave them Hony-lesse.
Ant. Not stinglesse too.
Brut. O yes, and foundlesse too:
 For you have stolne their buzzing Antony,
 And very wisely threat before you sting.
Ant. Villaines: you did not so, when your vile daggers
 Hackt one another in the sides of Caesar:
 You shew'd your teethes like Apes,
 And fawn'd like hounds,
 And bow'd like Bondmen, kissing Caesars feete:
 Whilst damned Cassius, like a Curre, behind
 Strooke Caesar on the necke. O you flatterers.
Cassi. Flatterers? Now Brutus thanke your selfe,
 This tongue had not offended so to day,
 If Cassius might have ruld.
Octa. Come, come, the cause. If arguing make us swet,
 The prooffe of it will turne to redder drops:
 Looke, I draw a Sword against Conspirators,
 When thinke you that the Sword goes up againe?
 Never till Caesars three and thirty wounds
 Be well aveng'd; or till another Caesar
 Have added slaughter to the Sword of Traytors.
Brut. Caesar, thou canst not dye by Traytors hands,
 Vnlesse thou bringst them with thee.

Octa. So I hope:
 I was not borne to dye on Brutus Sword!
Brut. O if thou wert the Noblest of thy Straine,
 Yong-man, thou couldst not dye more honorable.
Cassi. A peevish Schoole-boy, worthies of such honor
 Ioynd with a Masker, and a Reveller.
Ant. Old Cassius still.
Octa. Come Antony: away:
 Defiance Traitors, hurle we in your teeth.
 If you dare fight to day, come to the field;
 If not, when you have stomackes,

Exit Octavius, Antony, and Army.

Cassi. Why now blow winde, swell billow,
 And swimme Barke:
 The Storme is up, and all is on the hazard.
Brut. Ho Lucillius, hearke, a word with you.
Lucillius, and Messala stand forth.

Luc. My Lord.
Cassi. Messala.
Messa. What sayes my generall?
Cassi. Messala, this is my Birth-day: as this very day
 Was Cassius borne. Give me thy hand Messala:
 Be thou my witnesse, that against my will,
 (As Pompey was) am I compell'd to set
 Vpon one Battell all our Liberties.
 You know, that I held Epicurus strong,
 And his opinion: Now I change my minde,
 And partly credit things that doe presage.
 Comming from Sardis, on our former Ensigne
 Two mighty Eagles fell, and there they perch'd,
 Gorging and feeding from our Souldiers hands,

Who to Philippi here comforted us :

This Morning are they fled away, and gone,
And in their steeds, doe Ravens, Crowes, and Kites
Flye ore our heads, and downward looke on us
As we were sickely prey ; their shadowes seeme
A Canopy most fatall, under which
Our Army lyes, ready to give up the Ghost.

Messa. Beleeve not so.

Cassi. I but beleeve it partly,
For I am fresh of spirit, and resolv'd
To meet all peril, very constantly.

Brut. Even so Lucilius.

Cassi. Now most Noble Brutus,
The gods to day stand friendly, that we may Lovers in peace, leade on our dayes to age.
But since the affayres of men rests still incertaine,
Lets reason with the worst that may befall.
If we doe lose this Battaile, then is this
The very last time we shall speake together :
What are you then determined to do ?

Brut. Even by the rule of that Philosophy,
Be which I did blame Cato, for the death
Which he did give himselfe, I know not how :
But I doe find it Cowardly, and vile,
For feare of what might fall, so to prevent
The time of life, arming my selfe with patience,
To stay the providence of some high Powers,
That governe us below.

Cassi. Then, if we loose this Battaile,
You are contented to be led in Triumph
Thorow the streets of Rome.

Brut. No Cassius, no :
Thinke not thou Noble Romane,
That ever Brutus will goe bound to Rome,
He beares too great a minde, But this same day
Must end that worke, that Ides of March begun.
And whether we shall meete againe, I know not :
Therefore our everlasting, farewell take :
For ever, and for ever, farewell Cassius,
If we doe meete againe, why we shall smile :
If not, why then this parting was well made.

Cassi. For ever, and for ever, farewell Brutus :
If we doe meete againe, we'll smile indeed ;
If not, tis true, this parting was well made.

Brut. Why then leade on. O that a man might know
The end of this dayes businesse, ere it come :
But it sufficeth, that the day will end,
And then the end is knowne. Come ho, away. Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter Brutus and Messala.

Brut. Ride, ride Messala, ride and give these Billes
Vnto the Legions, on the other side.

Lowd Alarum.

Let them set on at once : for I perceive
But cold demeanor in Octavius's wing :
And sodaine push gives them the overthrow :
Ride, ride Messala, let them all come downe. Exeunt.

Alarums. Enter Cassius and Titinius.

Cassi. O looke Titinius, looke, the Villaines flye :
My selfe have to mine owne turn'd Enemy :
This Ensigne heere of mine was turning backe,
I slew the Coward, and did take it from him.

Titin. O Cassius, Brutus gave the word too early,

Who having some advantage on Octavius
Tooke it too eagerly : his Souldiers fell to spoyle,
Whilst we by Antony are all inclos'd.

Enter Pindarus.

Pind. Flye further off my Lord : flye further off,
Marke Antony is in your Tents my Lord :
Flye therefore Noble Cassius, flye farre off.

Cassi. This hill is farre enough. Looke, looke Titinius
Are those my Tents where I perceive the fire ?

Tit. They are, my Lord.

Cassi. Titinius, if thou lovest me,
Mount thou my horse, and hide thy spurres in him,
Till he have brought thee up to yonder Troopes
And here againe, that I may rest assur'd
Whether yond Troopes, are friend or Enemy.

Tit. I will be heere againe, even with a thought. Exit.

Cassi. Goe Pindarus, get thither on that hill,
My sight was ever thicke : regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou notst about the field.
This day I breathed first, time is come round,
And where I did begin, there shall I end,
My life is run his compasse. Sirra, what newes ?

Pind. Above. O my Lord.

Cassi. What newes ?

Pind. Titinius is enclotod round about
With horsemen, that make to him on the Spurre,
Yet he spurres on. Now they are almost on him :
Now Titinius, Now some light : O he lights too.
Hes tane. Shout.

And hearke, they shout for joy.

Cassi. Come downe, behold no more :
O Coward that I am, to live so long,
To see my best friend tane before my face

Enter Pindarus.

Come hither sirrah ; In Parthia did I take thee Prisoner,
And then I swore thee, saving of thy life,
That whatsoever I did bid thee doe,
Thou shouldst attempt it. Come now, keepe thine oath,
Now be a free-man, and with this good Sword
That ran through Cæsars bowels, search this bosome.
Stand not to answer : Heere, take thou the Hilts,
And when my face is cover'd, as tis now,
Guide thou the Sword——Cæsar, thou art reveng'd,
Even with the Sword that kill'd thee. Kills him.

Pind. So, I am free,

Yet would not so have beene
Durst I have done my will. O Cassius,
Farre from this Country Pindarus shall run,
Where never Roman shall take note of him.

Enter Titinius, and Messala.

Messa. It is but change, Titinius : for Octavius
Is overthrowne by Noble Brutus power,
As Cassius Legions are by Antony.

Titin. These tydings will well comfort Cassius.

Messa. Where did you leave him.

Titin. All disconsolate,

With Pindarus his Bondman, on this hill.

Messa. Is not that he that lyes upon the ground ?

Titin. He lyes not like the Living. O my heart !

Messa. Is not that he ?

Titin. No, this was he Messala,
But Cassius is no more. O setting Sunne :

So in his red blood Cassius day it set.
The Sonne of Rome is set. Our day is gone,
Clouds, Dewes, and Dangers come; our deeds are done:
Mistrust of my successe hath done this deed.

Messa. Mistrust of good successe hath done this deed.
O hatefull Error, Melancholies Childe:
Why do'st thou shew to the apt thoughts of men
The things that are not? O Error soone concey'd,
Thou never com'st unto a happy byrth,
But kilst the Mother that engendred thee.

Tit. What Pindarus? Where art thou Pindarus?

Messa. Seeke him Titinius, whilst I goe to meet
The Noble Brutus, thrusting this report
Into his eares; I may say thrusting it:
For piercing Steele, and Darts invenomed,
Shall be as welcome to the eares of Brutus,
As tydings of this fight.

Tit. Hye you Messala,
And I will seeke for Pindarus the while:
Why didst thou send me forth brave Cassius?
Did I not meet thy friends, and did not they Put on my browes this wreath of Victory,
And bid me give it thee? Didst thou not heare their Alas, thou hast misconstrued every thing. (showts)
But hold thee, take this Garland on thy Brow,
Thy Brutus bid me giue it thee, and I
Will doe his bidding. Brutus, come apace,
And see how I regarded Caius Cassius:
By your leave gods: This is a Romans part,
Come Cassius Sword, and find Titinius heart. Dyes.

Alarum. Enter Brutus, Messala yong Cato,
Strato, Volumnius, and Lucilius.

Br. Where, where Messala, doth his body lye?

Messa. Loe yonder, and Titinius mourning it.

Br. Titinius face is upward.

Cato. He is flaine.

Br. O Iulius Caesar, thou art mighty yet,
Thy spirit wa'kes abroad, and turnes our Swords
In our owne proper Entrailes. Low Alarums.

Cato. Brave Titinius,

Looke where he have not crown'd dead Cassius.

Br. Are yet two Romans living such as these?

The last of all the Romans, fare thee well:

It is impossible, that ever Rome

Should breed thy fellow: friends I owe mo teares

To this dead man, then you shall see me pay.

I shall find time, Cassius: I shall find time.

Come therefore, and to Thursus send his body,

His funerals shall not be in our Campe,

Least it discomfort us. Lucilius come,

And come yong Cato, let us to the field,

Labio and Flavius set our Battailles on:

Tis three a clocke, and Romans yet ere night,

We shall try fortune in a second fight. Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter Brutus, Messala, Cato, Lucilius, and Flavius.

Br. Yet Country men: O yet, hold up your heads.

Cato. What Bastard doth not? who will goe with me?

I will proclaime my name about the Field.

I am the Sonne of Marcus Cato, hoe.

A Foe to Tyrants, and my Countries friend.

I am the Sonne of Marcus Cato, hoe.

Enter Souldiers, and fight.

And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I.

Brutus my Countries friend: Know me for Brutus,

Luc. O yong and Noble Cato, art thou downe?

Why now thou dyest, as bravely as Titinius,

And may't be honour'd, being Cato's Sonne.

Sold. Yeeld, or thou dyest.

Luc. Onely I yeeld to dye:

There is so much, that thou wilt kill me straight:

Kill Brutus, and be honor'd in his death,

Sold. We must not: a Noble Prisoner.

Enter Antony.

2 Sold. Roome hoe: tell Antony, Brutus is tane;

1 Sold. Ile tell thee newes. Heere comes the Generall;

Brutus is tane, Brutus is tane my Lord.

Ant. Where is he?

Luc. Safe Antony, Brutus is safe enough:

I dare assure thee, that no Enemy

Shall ever take alive the Noble Brutus:

The gods defend him from so great a shame,

When you doe finde him, or a live, or dead,

He will be found like Brutus, like himselfe.

Ant. This is not Brutus friend, but I assure you,

A prize no lesse in worth; keepe this man safe,

Give him all kindnesse. I had rather have Such men my friends, then Enemies. Goe on,

And see where Brutus be alive or dead,

And bring us, unto Octavius Tent;

How every thing is chanc'd.

Exeunt.

Enter Brutus, Dardanius, Clitus, Strato, and Volumnius.

2 Br. Come poore remaines of friends, rest on this Rocke.

Clit. Statilius shew'd the Torch-light, but my Lord!
He came not backe: he is or tane, or flaine.

Br. Sit thee downe, Clitus: slaying is the word;
It is a deed in fashion. Hearke thee, Clitus.

Clit. What I, my Lord? No, not for all the World.

Br. Peace then, no words.

Clit. Ile rather kill my selfe.

Br. Hearke thee, Dardanius.

Dard. Shall I doe such a deed?

Clit. O Dardanius.

Dard. O Clitus.

Clit. What ill request did Brutus make to thee?

Dard. To kill him, Clitus: looke he meditates.

Clit. Now is that Noble Vessell full of grieve,
That it runnes over even at his eyes.

Br. Come hither, good Volumnius, list a word.

Volum. What sayes my Lord?

Br. Why this, Volumnius:

The Ghost of Caesar hath appear'd to me

Two severall times by Night: at Sardis, once;

And this last Night, here in Philippi fields:

I know my houre is come.

Volum. Not so, my Lord.

Br. Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius.

Thou seest the world, Volumnius, how it goes,

Our Enemies have beat us to the Pit: Low Alarum.

It is more worthy, to leape in our selves,

Then tarry till they push us. Good Volumnius,

Thou know'st, that we two went to Schoole together:

Even for that our love of old, I prethee

Hold thou my Sword Hilts, whilst I runne on it.

Vol. That's not an Office for a friend, my Lord.

Alarum still.

Cly. Fly, flye my Lord, there is no tarrying heere.

Brn. Farewell to you, and you, and you Volumnius.

Strato, thou hast bin all this while a sleepe :

Farewell to thee, to Strato, Countrymen :

My heart doth joy, that yet all my life,

I found no man, but he was true to me.

I shall have glory by this loosing day

More then Octavius, and Marke Antony,

By this vile Conquest shall attaine unto.

So fareyouwell at once, for Brutus tongue

Hath almost ended his lives History :

Night hangs upon mine eyes, my Bones would rest,

That have but labour'd, to attaine this houre.

Alarum. Cry within, Flye, flye, flye.

Cly. Fly my Lord, flye,

Brn. Hence : I will follow :

I prethee Strato, stay thou by thy Lord,

Thou art a fellow of a good respect :

Thy life hath had some smatch of honor in it.

Hold then my Sword, and turne away thy face,

While I doe run upon it. Wilt thou Strato ?

Stra. Give me your hand first. Fare you well my Lord.

Brn. Farewell good Strato.——Caesar, now be still,
I kill'd not thee with halfe so good a will. Dyes.

Alarum. Retreat. Enter Antony, Octavius, Messala,
Lucillius, and the Army.

Olla. What man is that ?

Messa. My masters man. Strato, where is thy Master ?

Stra. Free from the Bondage you are in Messala,
The Conquerors can but make a fire of him :

For Brutus onely overcame himselfe,

And no man else hath honor by his death.

Luci. So Brutus should be found. I thanke thee Brutus
That thou hast prov'd Lucillius saying true.

Olla. All that serv'd Brutus, I will entertaine them,
Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me ?

Stra. I, if Messala will preferre me to you.

Olla. Doe so, good Messala.

Messa. How dyed my Strato.

Stra. I held the Sword, and he did run on it.

Messa. Octavius, then take him to follow thee,
That did the latest service to my Master.

Ant. This was the Noblest Roman of them all :

All the Conspirators save onely he,

Did that they did, in envy of great Caesar :

He, onely in a generall honest thought,

And common good to all, made one of them.

His life was gentle, and the Elements

Somixt in him, that Nature might stand up,

And say to all the world ; This was a man.

Olla. According to his Vertue, let us use him
Withall respect, and rites of Buriall.

Within my Tent his bones to night shall lye,

Most like a Souldier ordered honorably :

So call the field to rest, and lets away,

To part the glories of this happy day. Exeunt omnes.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF MACBETH.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Thunder, and Lightning. Enter three Witches.

When shall we three meet again?

3 That will be ere the set of Sunne,

1 Where the place?

2 Vpon the Heath.

3 There to meet with Macbeth.

1 I come, Gray-Malkin.

All. Paddocke calls anon: faire is foule, and foule is faire,
Hover through the fogge and filthy ayre. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Alarum within. Enter King, Malcolm, Donalbaine, Lenox, with attendants, meeting a bleeding Captaine.

King. What bloody man is that? he can report,
As seemeth by his plight, of the Revolt
The newest state.

Mal. This is the Serjeant,
Who like a good and hardy Souldier fought
Gainst my Captivity: Haile: haile brave friend;
Say to the King, the knowledge of the broyle,
As thou didst leave it.

Cap. Doubtfull it stood,
As two spent Swimmers, that doe cling together,
And choake their Art: The mercilesse Macdonnell (Worthy to be a Rebelle, for to that
The multiplying Villaines of Nature
Doe swarme upon him) from the Westerne Isles
Of Kernes and Gallow glasses is supply'd,
And Fortune on his damned Quarry smiling,
Shew'd like a Rebells Whore: but al's too weake:
For brave Macbeth (well he deserves that Name)
Disdayning Fortune, with his brandisht Steele,
Which smoak'd with bloody execution
(Like Valours Minion) carv'd out his passage,
Till he fac'd the Slave:
Which neu'r shooke hands, nor bad farewell to him,
Till he unseam'd him from the Nave toth' Chops,
And fix'd his head upon our Battlements.

King. O valiant Cousin, worthy Gentleman,
Cap. As whence the Sunne gins his refection,
Shipwracking Stormes, and direfull Thunders breaking
So from that spring, whence comfort seem'd to come,
Discomfort swells: Marke King of Scotland, marke,
No sooner iustice had, with Valour arm'd,
Compell'd these skipping Kernes to trust their heeles,
But the Norweyan Lord, surveying vantage,
With furbusht Armes, and new supplies of men,
Began a fresh assault.

King. Dismaid not this our Captaines, Macbeth and Banquo?

Cap. Yes, as Sparrowes Eagles;
Or the Hare, the Lyon:

If I say sooth, I must report they were
As Cannons over-charg'd with double Crackes
So they doubly redoubled stroake on the Foe:
Except they meant to bathe in reeking Wounds,
Or memorize another Golgotha,
I cannot tell: but I am faint,
My Gashes cry for helpe.

King. So well thy words become thee, as thy wounds
They imacke of Honor both: Goe get him Surgeons.

Enter Rosse and Angus.

Whocomes here?

Mal. The worthy Thane of Rosse.

Lenox. What hast lookes through his eyes?
So should he looke, that seemes to speake things strange.

Rosse. God save the King.

King. Whence cam'st thou, worthy Thane?

Rosse. From Fife, great King,
Where the Norweyan Bannars flowt the Sky,
And fanne our people cold.
Normay himselfe, with terrible numbers,
Assisted by that most disloyall Traytor,
The Thane of Cawdor, began a dismall Conflict,
Till that Bellona's Bridegroom, lapt in prooffe,
Confronted him with selfe-comparisons,
Point against Point, rebellious Arme gainst Arme,
Curbing his lavish spirit: and to conclude,
The Victory fell on us,

King. Great happinesse.

Rosse. That now Sueno, the Norweyes King,
Craves composition:
Nor would we deigne him buriall of his men,
Till he disburs'd, at Saint Colmes-hill,
Ten thousand Dollars, to our generall use.

King.

King. No more that Thane of Cawdor shall deceive
Our Bosome interest : Goe pronounce his present death,
And with his former Title great Macbeth.

Rosse. Ile see it done.

King. What he hath lost, Noble Macbeth hath wonne.
Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

1 Where hast thou been, Sister ?

2 Killing Swine.

3 Sister, where thou ?

1 A Saylor's Wife had Chestnuts in her Lappe,
And mouncht, and mouncht, and mouncht :
Give me, quoth I.

Aroynt thee, Witch, the rumpe-fed Ronyon cryes,
Her husbands to Aleppo gone, Master oth' Tiger :

But in a Syve Ile thither fayle,
And like a Rat without a tayle,
Ile doe, Ile doe, and Ile doe.

2 Ile give thee a Wind.

1 Th'art kind.

3 And I another.

1 I my selfe have all the other,
And the very Ports they blow,
All the Quarters that they know.
Ith' Ship-mans Card.

I'le dreyne him dry as Hay :
Sleepe shall neither Night nor day
Hang upon his Pent-house Lid :

He shall live a man forbid :
Weary Seu' nights, nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peake, and pine :
Though his Barke cannot be lost,
Yet it shall be Tempest-toft.

Looke what I have.

2 Shew me, shew me.

1 Here I have a Pilots Thumbe,
Wrackt, as homeward he did come.

Drum within.

3 A Drumme, a Drumme :
Macbeth doth come.

All. The wey ward Sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the Sea and Land.
Thus doe goe, about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice againe, to make up nine.
Peace, the Charme's wound up.

Enter Macbeth and Banquo.

Macb. So foule and faire a day I have not seene.

Banq. How farre is't call'd to Soris ? What are these,
So wither'd, and so wilde in their attyre,
That looke not like th'inhabitants oth' Earth,
And yet are on't ? Live you, or are you aught
That man may question ? you seeme to understand me,
By each at once her choppy finger laying
Vpon her skinny Lips : you should be Women,
And yet your Beards forbid me to interpret
That you are so.

Mac. Speake if you can : what are you ?

1 All haile Macbeth, hail to thee Thane of Glamis

2 All haile Macbeth, hail to thee Thane of Cawdor.

3 All haile Macbeth, that shalt be King hereafter.

Banq. Good sir, why doe you start, and seeme to feare
Things that doe sound so faire ? i'th' name of truth
Are ye fantastickall, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye shew ? My Noble Partner
You greet with present Grace, and great prediction
Of Noble having, and of Royall hope,
That he seemes wrapt withall ; to me you speake not.
If you can looke into the Seedes of Time,
And say, which Graine will grow, and which will not.
Speake then to me, who neither begge, nor feare
Your favors, nor your hate.

1 Hayle.

2 Hayle.

3 Hayle.

1 Lesser then Macbeth, and greater.

2 Not so happy, yet much happier.

3 Thou shalt get Kings, though thou be none :
So all haile Macbeth, and Banquo.

1 Banquo, and Macbeth, all haile.

Macb. Stay you imperfect Speakers, tell me more :
By Sinells death, I know I am Thane of Glamis ;
But how, of Cawdor ? the Thane of Cawdor lives
A prosperous Gentleman : And to be King,
Stands not within the prospect of beliefe,
No more then to be Cawdor. Say from whence
You owe this strange Intelligence, or why
Vpon this blasted heath you stop our way
With such Prophetique greeting ?
Speake, I charge you.

Witches vanish.

Banq. The earth hath bubbles, as the Water has,
And these are of them : whether are they vanish'd ?

Macb. Into the Ayre : and what seem'd corporall,
Melted, as breath into the Winde.
Would they had staid.

Banq. Were such things here, as we doe speake about
Or have we eaten on the insane Root,
That takes the Reason Prisoner ?

Macb. Your Children shall be Kings.

Banq. You shall be King.

Macb. And Thane of Cawdor too : went it not so ?

Banq. Toth' selfe-same tune, and words : whos here

Enter Rosse, and Angus.

Rosse. The King hath happily receiv'd, Macbeth,
The newes of thy successe : and when he reades
Thy personall Venture in the Rebels fight,
His wonders and his Praises doe contend,
Which should be thine, or his : silenc'd with that,
In viewing o're the rest o'th' selfe-same day,
He findes thee in the stout Norweyan Rankes,
Nothing afeard of what thy selfe didst make Strange Images of death, as thicke as Tale
Can post with post, and every one did beare
Thy prayes in his Kingdomes great defence,
And powr'd them downe before him.

Ang. We are sent,
To give thee from our Royall Master thanks,
Onely to herraide thee into his fight,
Not pay thee.

Rosse. And for an earnest of a greater honor,
He bad me, from him, call thee Thane of Cawdor :

In which addition, haile most worthy Thane,
For it is thine.

Banq. What can the Thane speake true?

Macb. The Thane of Cawdor lives:

Why doe you dresse me in his borrowed Robes?

Ang. Who was the Thane, lives yet,
But under heavy judgement beares that life,
Which he deserves to loose.

Whether he was combin'd with those of Norway,
Or else did lyne the Rebelle with hidden helpe,
And vantage; or that with both he labour'd
In his Countryes wracke, I know not:
But Treasons Capitall, confests'd, and prou'd,
Have overthrowne him.

Macb. Glamis, and Thane of Cawdor:
The greatest is behind. Thankes for your paines.
Doe you not hope your Children shall be Kings,
When those that gave the Thanes of Cawdor to me,
Promis'd no lesse to them.

Banq. That trusted home,
Might yet enkindle you unto the Crowne,
Besides the Thane of Cawdor. But tis strange:
And oftentimes, to winne us to our harme,
The Instruments of Darknesse tell us Truths,
Winne us with honest Trifles, to betrays
In deepest consequence.

Cousins, a word, I pray you.

Macb. Two truths are told,
As happy Prologues to the swelling Acte
Of the imperiall Theame. I thanke you Gentlemen:
This supernaturall solliciting
Cannot be ill; cannot be good.
If ill? why hath it given mee earnest of successe,
Commencing in a Truth? I am Thane of Cawdor.
If good? why doe I yeeld to that suggestion,
Whose horrid Image doth unfixe my heire,
And make my seated Heart knocke at my Ribbes,
Against the use of nature? Present Feares
Are lesse then horrible imaginings:
My thought, whose Murther yet is but fantasticall,
Shakes so my single state of Man,
That function is smother'd in surmise,
And nothing is, but what is not.

Banq. Looke how our Partners rapt.

Macb. If chance will have me King,
Why Chance may Crowne me,
Without my stirre.

Banq. New honors come upon him
Like our strange Garments, cleave not to their mould,
But with the aid of use.

Macb. Come what come may,
Time, and the houre, runs through the roughest Day.

Banq. Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leysure.

Macb. Give me your favour:
My dull Braine was wrought with things forgotten.
Kind Gentlemen, your paines are registred,
Where every day I turne the Leafe,
To reade them.

Let us toward the King; thinke upon
What hath chanc'd: and at more time,
The Interim having weigh'd it, let us speake
Our free hearts each to other.

Banq. Very gladly,

Macb. Till then enough:
Come friends.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Flourish. Enter King, Lenox, Malcolme,
Donalbaine, and Attendants.

King. Is execution done on Cawdor?
Are not those in Commission yet return'd?

Mal. My Liege, they are not yet come backe.
But I have spoke with one that saw him dye:
Who did report, that very frankly he Confests'd his Treasons, implor'd your Highnesse Pardon
And set forth a deepe Repentance:
Nothing in his Lite became him,
Like the leaving it. He dy'de,
As one that had beene studied in his death,
To throw away the dearest thing he ow'd,
As twere a carelesse Trifle.

King. Theres no Art,
To finde the mindes construction in the face:
He was a Gentleman, on whom I built
An absolute Trust.

Enter Macbeth, Banquo, Rosse, and Angus.
O worthyest Cousin,
The sinne of my ingratitude even now
Was heavy on me. Thou art so farre before,
That swiftest Wine of Recompence is slow:
To overtake thee. Would thou hadst lesse deserv'd,
That the proportion both of thankes, and payment,
Might have beene mine: onely I have left to say,
More is thy due, then more then all can pay.
Macb. The service, and the loyalty I owe,
In doing it payes it selfe.
Your highnesse part, is to receive our Duties:
And our Duties are to your Throne, and State,
Children, and Servants; which doe but what they should
By doing every thing safe toward your Love
And honor,

King. Welcome hither:
I have begun to plant thee, and will labour
To make thee full of growing. Noble Banquo,
That hast no lesse deserv'd, nor must be knowne
No lesse to have done so: Let me enfold thee,
And hold thee to my heart,

Banq. There if I grow,
The Harvest is your owne.

King. My plenteous joyes,
Wanton in fulnesse, seeke to hide themselves
In drops of sorrow. Sonnes, Kinsman, Thanes,
And you whose places are the nearest, know,
We will establish our Estate upon
Our eldest, Malcolme, whom we name hereafter,
The Prince of Cumberland: which honor must
Not unaccompanied, invest him onely.
But signes of Noblenesse, like Starres shall shine
On all deservers. From hence to Envernes,
And bind us further to you.

Mac. The Rest is labour, which is not us'd for you:
Ile be my selfe the Herberger, and make joyfull
The hearing of my Wife, with your approach:
So humbly take my leave.

King. My worthy Cawdor.

Macb. The Prince of Cumberland: that is a step,
On which I must fall downe, or else o're leape,

For

For in my way it lyes. Starres hide your fires,
Let not Light see my blacke and deepe desires:
The eye winke at the hand : yet let that be,
Which the Eye feares, when it is done to see. Exit.

King. True, worthy Banquo : he is full so valiant,
And in his commendations, I am fed :
It is a Banquet to me. Lets after him,
Whose care is gone before, to bid us welcome :
It is a peerelesse Kinsman. Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Macbeths Wife alone with a Letter.

Lady. They met me in the day of successe: and I have learn'd by the perfectest report, they have more in them, then mortall knowledge. When I burnt in desire to question them further, they made themselves Ayre, into which they vanish'd. Whiles
I stood rapt in the wonder of it, came Missives from the King, who all hail'd me Thane of Cawdor, by which Title before, these weyward Sisters saluted me, and referr'd me to the comming on of time, with haile King that shalt be. This have I thought good to deliver thee (my dearest Partner of Greatnesse) that thou might'st not loose the dues of rejoycing by being ignorant of what Greatnesse is promis'd thee. Lay it to thy heart, and farewell.

Glamis thou art, and Cawdor, and shalt be
What thou art promis'd : yet doe I feare thy Nature,
It is too full o'th' Milke of humane kindnesse,
To catch the neereft way. Thou wouldst be great,
Art not without Ambition, but without
The ilnesse should attend it. What thou wouldst highly,
That wouldst thou holily : wouldst not play false,
And yet wouldst wrongly winne.
Thouldst have, great Glamis, that which cryes,
Thus thou mult doe, if thou have it ;
And that which rather thou do'st feare to doe,
Then wishest should be undone. High thee hither,
That I may powre my Spirits in thine Eare,
And chastise with the valour of my Tongue
All that thee hinders from the Golden Round,
Which Fate and Metaphysicall ayde doth seeme
To have thee crown'd withall. Enter Messenger.
What is your tidings ?

Mess. The King comes here to Night.

Lady. Thou'rt mad to say it.
Is not thy Master with him ? who, wer't so,
Would have inform'd for preparation.

Mess. So please you, it is true : our Thane is comming
One of my fellowes had the speed of him ;
Who almost dead for breath, had scarcely more
Then would make up his Message.

Lady. Give him tending,
He brings great newes. Exit Messenger.
The Raven himselte is hoarse,
That croakes the fatall entrance of Duncane
Vnder my Battlements. Come you Spirits,
That tend on mortall thoughts, unfex me here,
And fill me from the Crowne to the Toe, top-full
Of direct Cruelty : make thicke my blood,
Stop up th'accesse and passage to Remorse,
That no compunctious visitings of Nature

Shake my fell purpose, nor keepe peace betweene
Th'effect, and hit. Come to my Womans Brefts,
And take my Milke for Gall : murth'ring Ministers,
Where-ever, in your sight I see substances,
You wait on Natures Mischiefe. Come thicke Night,
And pall thee in the dunnest smoake of hell,
That my keene Knife see not the Wound it makes,
Nor heaven peepe through the Blanket of the darke,
To cry, hold, hold. Enter Macbeth.
Great Glamis, worthy Cawdor,
Greater then both, by the all-haile hereafter,
Thy Letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present, and I feele now
The future in the instant.

Mach. My dearest Love,

Duncane comes here to Night.

Lady. And when goes hence ?

Mach. To morrow, as he purposes.

Lady. O never,

Shall Sunne that Morrow see.

Your Face, my Thane, is as booke, where men
May reade strange matters, to beguile the time.
Looke like the time, beare welcome in your Eye,
Your hand, your Tongue : looke like the innocent flower,
But be the Serpent under't. He thats comming,
Must be provided for : and you shall put
This Nights great businesse into my dispatch,
Which shall to all our Nights, and Dayes to come,
Give solely soveraigne sway, and Masterdome.

Mach. We will speake further.

Lady. Onely looke up cleare :
To alter favor, ever is to feare :
Leave all the rest to me. Exit.

Scena Sexta.

*Hoboyes, and Torches. Enter King, Malcolme, Donalbaine, Banquo, Lenox, Macduffe, Rosse, Angus,
and Attendants.*

King. This Castle hath a pleasant seat,
The ayre nimbly and sweetly recommends it selfe
Vnto our gentle senses.

Banq. This Guest of Summer,
The Temple-haunting Barlet does approve,
By his loued Mansforny, that the Heavens breath,
Smells wooingly here : no luttie frieze,
Buttrice, nor Coigne of Vantage, but this Bird
Hath made his pendant Bed, and procreant Cradle,
Where they must breed, and haunt : I have observ'd
The ayre is delicate. Enter Lady.

King. See, see, our honor'd Hostesse :
The love that followes us, sometime is our trouble,
Which still we thanke as Love. Herein I teach you,
How you shall bid god-eyld us for your paines,
And thanke us for your trouble.

Lady. All our service,
In every point twice done, and then done double,
Were poore, and single Businesse, to contend
Against those honors deepe, and broad,
Wherewith your Majesty loades our house :
For those of old, and the late Dignities,
Heap'd up to them, we rest your Hermites.

King.

King. Wheres the Thane of Cawdor?
We court him at the heeles, and had a purpose
To be his Purveyor: But he rides well,
And his great Love (sharpe at his Spurre) hath holpe him
To his home before us: Faire and Noble Hostesse
We are your guest to night.

Lady. Your Servants ever,
Have theirs, themselves, and what is theirs in compt,
To make their Audit at your hignesse pleasure,
Still to returne your owne.

King. Give me your hand:
Conduct me to mine Host we love him highly,
And shall continue, our Graces towards him.
By your leave Hostesse.

Exeunt.

Scena Septima.

Ho-boys. Torches.

Enter a Sewer, and divers Servants with Dishes and Service over the Stage. Then enter Macbeth.

Macb. If it were done, when tis done, then twer well,
It were done quickly: if th' Assassination
Could trammell up the Consequence, and catch
With his surcease, Successe: that but this blow
Might be the be all, and the end all. Heere,
But heere, upon this Banke and Schoole of time,
We'd jumpe the life to come. But in these Cases,
We still have judgement heere, that we but teach
Bloudy instructions, which being taught, returne
To plague th' Ingredience of our poyson'd Chalice
To our owne lips. Hes here in double trust;
First, as I am his Kinsman, and his subject,
Strong both against the Deed: then, as his Host,
Who should against his Murtherer shut the doore,
Not beare the knife my selfe. Besides, this Duncane
Hath borne this Faculties so meeke: hath bin
So cleere in his great Office, that his Vertues
Will pleade like Angels, Trumpet-tongu'd against
The deepe damnation of his taking off:
And Pitty, like a naked Newborne-babe,
Striding the blast, or heavens Cherubin, hors'd
Upon the sightlesse Curriers of the Ayre,
Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That teares shall drowne the winde. I have no Spurre
To prick the sides of my intent, but onely
Vaulting Ambition, which ore-leapes it selfe,
And falls on th' other.

Enter Lady.

How now? What Newes?

Lady. He has almost supt: why have you left the chamber?

Mac. Hath he ask'd for me?

Lady. Know you not, he has?

Mac. We will proceed no further in this Businesse:
He hath honour'd me of late, and I have bought
Golden Opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worne now in their newest glosse,
Not cast aside so soone.

Lady. Was the hope drunke,
Wherein you drest your selfe? hath it slept since?
And wakes it now to looke so greene, and pale,
At what it did so freely? From this time,
Such I account thy love. Art thou affear'd
To be the same in thine owne Act, and Valour,
As thou art in desire? Wouldst thou have that

Which thou esteem'st the Ornament of Life,
And live a Coward in thine owne Esteeme?
Letting I dare not, wait upon I would,
Like the poore Cat i'th' Addage.

Macb. Prethee peace:
I dare doe all that may decomm a man,
Who dares no more, is none.

Lady. What beast was't then
That made you breake this enterprize to me?
When you durst doe it, then you were a man:
And to be more then what you were, you would Be so much more the man. Nor time, nor place
Did then adhere, and yet you would make both:
They have made themselves, and that their fitnesse now
Do's unmake you. I have given Sucke, and know
How tender tis to love the Babe that milkes me,
I would, while it was smyling in my face,
Have pluckt my Nipple from his bonelesse Gummes,
And dasht the Branes out, had I but so sworne
As you have done to this.

Macb. If we should faile?

Lady. We faile?

But screw your courage to the sticking place,
And we'll not faile: when Duncan is a sleepe, (Whereto the rather shall his dayes hard Journey Soundly invite him) his two Chamberlaines
Will I with Wine, and Wassell, so convince,
That Memory, the Warder of the Braine,
Shall be a Fume, and the Receipt of Reason
A Lymbecke onely. when in Swinish sleepe,
Their drenched Natures lye as in a Death,
What cannot you and I performe upon Th'unguarded Duncan? What not put upon
His spongy Officers? who shall beare the guilt
Of our great quell.

Macb. Bring forth Men-Children onely:
For thy undaunted Mettle should compose
Nothing but Males. Will it not be receiv'd,
When we have mark'd with blood those sleepey two
Of his owne Chamber, and us'd their very Daggers,
That they have don't?

Lady. Who dares receive it other,
As we shall make our Griefes and Clamor rore,
Upon his death?

Macb. I am settled, and bend up
Each corporall Agent to this terrible Fear,
Away, and mocke the time with fairest show,
False Face must hide what the false heart doth know.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Banquo, and Fleance, with a Torch before him.

Banq. How goes the Night, Boy?

Fleance. The Moone is downe: I have not heard the Clocke.

Banq. And she goes downe at Twelve.

Fleanc. I take't, tis later, Sir.

Banq. Hold, take my Sword:
There's Husbandry in Heaven,
Their Candles are all out: take thee that too.

A heavy Summons lyes like Lead upon me,
And yet I would not sleepe :
Mercifull Powers, reſtraine in me the curſed thoughts
That Nature gives way to in repoſe.

Enter Macbeth, and a Servant with a Torch.

Give me my Sword: whos there?

Macb. A friend.

Banq. What Sir, not yet at reſt? the Kings a bed.
He hath beene in unuſuall pleaſure.

And ſent forth a great Largeſſe to your Offices.
This Diamond he greets your Wife withall,
By the name of moſt kind hoſteſſe,
And ſhut it up in meaſureleſſe content.

Macb. Being unprepar'd,
Our will became the ſervant to defect,
Which elſe ſhould free have wrought.

Banq. Alls well.

I dreamt laſt Night of the three weyward Siſters :
To you they have ſhew'd ſome truth.

Macb. I thinke not of them :
Yet when we can intreat an houre to ſerve,
We would ſpend it in ſome words upon that Buſineſſe,
If you would graunt the time.

Ban. At your kindeſt leiſure.

Macb. If you ſhall cleave to my conſent,
When tis, it ſhall make honor for you.

Banq. So I loſe none,
In ſeeking to augment it, but ſtill keepe
My boſome franchis'd, and Allegaunce cleare,
I ſhall be counſail'd.

Macb. Good repoſe the while.

Banq. Thanks Sir: the like to you. Exit Banquo.

Macb. Goe bid thy Miſtreſſe, when my drinke is ready
She ſtrike upon the Bell. Get thee to bed. Exit.

Is this a dagger, which I ſee before me,
The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee:
I have thee not, and yet I ſee thee ſtill,
Art thou not fatall Viſion, ſenſible
To feeling, as to ſight? or art thou but
A Dagger of the Minde, a falſe Creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppreſſed Braine?
I ſee thee yet, in forme as palpable,
As this which now I draw.

Thou marſhaſt me the way that I was going,
And ſuch an inſtrument I was to uſe.
Mine eyes are made the foolles o'th' other Senſes,
Or elſe worth all the reſt: I ſee thee ſtill;
And on thy blade, and Dudgeon, Gouts of blood,
Which was not ſo before. There's no ſuch thing:
It is the bloody Buſineſſe, which informes
Thus to mine eyes. Now ore the one halfe World
Nature ſeemes dead, and wicked Dreames abuſe
The Curtain'd ſleepe: Witchcraft celebrates
Pale Heccates Offrings: and wither'd Murther,
Alarum'd by his Centinell, the Wolfe,
Whoſe howles his Watch, thus with his ſtealthy pace,
With Tarquins raviſhing ſides, towards his deſigne
Moves like a Ghoſt. Thou ſowre and firme-ſet Earth
Heare not my ſteps, which they may walke, for feare
Thy very ſtones prate of my where-about,
And take the preſent horror from the time,
Which now ſutes with it. Whiles I threat, he lives:
Words to the heart of deeds too cold breath gives.

A Bell rings.

I goe, and it is done: the bell invites me.
Heare it not, Duncane, for it is a Knell.
That ſummons thee to heaven, or to hell.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Lady.

La. That which hath made them drunke, hath made me
What hath quench'd them, hath given me fire. (bold)
Heareke, peace: it was the Owle that ſhriek'd,
The fatall Bell-man, which gives the ſtern'ſt good-night,
He is about it, the Doores are open:
And the ſurfeted Groomes doe mocke their charge
With Snores. I have drugg'd their Poſſets,
That death and Nature doe contend a bout them,
Whether they live, or dye.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. Whos there? what hoa?

Lady. Alacke, I am afraid they have awak'd,
And tis not done: th' attempt, and not the deed,
Confounds us: hearke: I laid their Daggers ready,
He could not miſſe em. Had he not reſembled
My father as he ſlept, I had don't:
My husband?

Macb. I have done the deed:

Didſt thou not heare a noyſe?

Lady. I heard the Owle ſchreame, and the Crickets cry
Did not you ſpeake?

Macb. When?

Lady. Now.

Macb. As I deſcended?

Lady. I.

Macb. Hearke, who lyes ith' ſecond Chamber?

Lady. Donalbaine.

Macb. This is a ſorry fight.

Lady. A fooliſh thought, to ſay a ſorry fight.

Macb. There's one did laugh in ſleepe,
And one cry'd Murther, that they did wake each other:
I ſtood, and heard them: but they did ſay their Prayers,
And addreſt them againe to ſleepe.

Lady. There are two lodg'd together.

Macb. One cry'd God bleſſe us, and Amen the other,
As they had ſeene me with theſe hangmans hands:
Liſtning their feare, I could not ſay Amen,
When they did ſay God bleſſe us.

Lady. Conſider it not ſo deeply.

Macb. But wherefore could not I pronounce Amen?
I had moſt need of bleſſing, and Amen ſtuck in my throat

Lady. Theſe deeds muſt not be thought
After theſe wayes: ſo, it will make us mad.

Macb. Me thought I heard a voyce cry, ſleepe no more:
Macbeth does murther Sleepe, the innocent ſleepe,

Sleepe that knits up the ravel'd ſleeve of Care,
The death of each dayes Life, ſore Labors Bath,
Balme of hurt Mindes, great Natures ſecond Courſe,
Chiefe nourisher in lifes ſeaſt.

Lady. What doe you meane?

Macb. Still it cry'd, ſleepe no more to all the houſe:
Glamis hath murder'd ſleepe, and therefore Camdor
Shall ſleepe no more: Macbeth ſhall ſleepe no more.

Lad. Who was it, that thus cry'd? why worthy Thane,
You doe unbend your Noble ſtrength, to thinke
So braine-fickly of things: Goe get ſome Water,

And

And wash this filthy Witnesse from your Hand,
Why did you bring these Daggers from the place?
They must lye there: goe carry them, and smea
The sleepey Groomes with blood.

Macb. He goe no more:
I am afraid, to thinke what I have done:
Looke on't againe, I dare not.

Lady. Infirmes of purpose:
Give me the Daggers: the sleeping, and the dead,
Are but as Pictures: 'tis the Eye of Child-hood,
That feares a painted Divell. If he doe bleed,
He guilde the Faces of the Groomes withall,
For it must seeme their Guilt.

Exit.

Knocke within.

Macb. Whence is that knocking?
How is't with me, when every noyse appalls me?
What Hands are here? hah: they plucke out mine Eyes
Will all great Neptunes Ocean wash this blood
Cleane from my Hand? no: this my Hand will rather
The multitudinous Seas incarnardine,
Making the Greene one, Red.

Enter Lady.

Lady. My hands are of your colour: but I shame
To weare a heart so white.

Knocke.

I heare a knocking at the South entry:
Retyre we to our Chamber:

A little Water cleares us of this deed.

How easie is it then? your Constancie

Hath left you unattended,

Knocke.

Hearke, more knocking.

Get on your Night-Gowne, lest occasion call us,

And shew vs to be Watchers: be not lost

So poorely in your thoughts.

Macb. To know my deed,

Knocke.

'Twere best not know my selfe.

Wake Duncan with thy knocking:

I would thou could'st.

Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter a Porter.

Knocking within.

Porter. Heere's a knocking indeed: if a man were Porter of Hell Gate, hee should have old turning the Key. Knocke, Knock, Knock, Knock. Who's there i'th' name of Belzebub? Here's a Farmer, that hang'd himselfe on th' expectation of Plenty: Come in time, have Napkins enough about you, here you'll sweate for't. Knock, Knock, Knock. Who's there in th' other Devils Name?
Faith here's an Equivocator, that could sweare in both the Scales, against cyther Scale, who committed Treason enough for Gods sake, yet could not equivocate to Heaven: oh come in, Equivocator, Knock, Knock, Knock, Knock. Who's there? Faith here's an English
Taylor come hither, for stealing out of a French Hose:
Come in Taylor, here you may rost your Goose. Knock, Knock, Knock, Never at quiet: What are you? but this place is too cold for Hell. He Devill-Porter it no further:
I had thought to have let in some of all professions, that goe the Primrose way to th' everlasting Bonfire. Knock.
Anon, anon, I pray you remember the Porter.

Enter Macduff, and Lenox.

Macd. Was it so late, friend, ere you went to Bed,
That you doe lye so late?

Port. Faith Sir, we were carowling till the second Cock:
And Drinke, Sir, is a great provoker of three things.

Macd. What three things does Drinke especially provoke?

Port. Marry, Sir, Nose-painting, Sleepe, and Vrine.
Lechery, Sir, it provokes, and unprovokes: it Provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance. Therefore much Drinke may be said to be an Equivocator with Lechery: it makes him and it marres him; it sets him on,
and it takes him off; it perswades him, and disheartens him; makes him stand to, and not stand to: in conclusion, equivocates him in a sleepe, and giving him the Lye, leaves
him.

Macd. I beleve, Drinke gave thee the Lye last Night.

Port. That it did, Sir, i'the very Throat on me: but I requited him for his Lye, and (I thinke) being too strong for him, though he tooke up my Legges sometime, yet I made a Shift to cast him.

Enter Macbeth.

Macd. Is thy Master stirring?
Our knocking ha's awak'd him: here he comes.

Lenox. Good morrow, Noble Sir.

Macb. Good morrow both.

Macd. Is the King stirring, worthy Thane?

Macb. Not yet.

Macd. He did command me to call timely on him,
I have almost slipt the houre.

Macb. He bring you to him.

Macd. I know this is a ioyfull trouble to you:
But yet 'tis one.

Macb. The labour we delight in, Physicks paine:
This is the Doore.

Macd. He make so bold to call, for 'tis my limited service.

Exit Macduff.

Lenox. Goes the King hence to day.

Macb. He does: he did appoint so.

Lenox. The Night ha's beene vnruely:
Where we lay, our Chimneys were blowne downe.
And (as they say) lamentings heard i'th' Ayre;
Strange Schreemes of Death,
And Prophecying, with Accents terrible,
Of dyre Combutions and confus'd Events,
New hatch'd roth'wofull time.
The obscene Bird clamor'd the live-long Night,
Some say, the Earth was fevorous,
And did shake.

Macb. 'Twas a rough Night.

Lenox. My young remembrance cannot parallell
A fellow to it.

Enter Macduff.

Macd. O horror, horror, horror,
Tongue nor Heart cannot conceive, nor name thee,

Macb. and Lenox. What's the matter?

Macd. Confusion now hath made his Master-peece:
Most sacrilegious Murther hath broke ope
The Lords anoynted Temple, and stole thence
The Life o'th' Building.

Macb. What is't you say? the Life?

Lenox. Meane you his Maiestie?

Macb. Approch the Chamber, and destroy your sight
With a new Gorgon. Doe not bid me speake:

See, and then speake your selves : awake, awake,
Exeunt Macbeth and Lenox.

Ring the Alarum Bell : Murther, and Treason,
Banquo, and Donalbaine : Malcolme awake,
Shake off this Downy sleepe, Deaths counterfeite,
And looke on death it selfe : up, up, and see
The great Doomes Image : Malcolme, Banquo,
As from your Graves rise up, and walke like Sprights,
To countenance this horror. Ring the Bell.

Bell Rings. Enter Lady.

Lady. What's the businesse ?
That such a hideous Trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the House ? speake, speake,
Macd. O gentle Lady,
'Tis not for you to heare what I can speake :
The repetition in a Womans eare,
Would murther as it fell.

Enter Banquo.

O Banquo, Banquo, Our Royall Master's murther'd.

Lady. Woe, alas :

What, in our house ?

Ban. Too cruell, any where.

Deare Duff, I prythee contract thy selfe,
And say, it is not so.

Enter Macbeth, Lenox, and Rosse.

Macb. Had I but dy'd an houre before this chance,
I had liv'd a blessed time : for from this instant,
There's nothing serious in Mortality :
All is but Toyes : Renowne and Grace is dead,
The Wine of Life is drawne, and the meere Lees
Is left this Vault to brag of.

Enter Malcolme and Donalbaine.

Donal. What is amisse ?

Malb. You are and doe not know't :
The Spring, the Head, the Fountaine of your Blood
Is stopt; the very Source of it is stopt,

Macd. Your Royall Father's murther'd.

Mal. Oh, by whom ?

Lenox. Those of his Chamber, as it seem'd, had don't:
Their Hands and Faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their Daggers, which unwip'd, we found
Vpon their Pillowes : they star'd, and were distracted,
No mans life was to be trusted with them.

Macd. O, yet I do repent me of my furie,
That I did kill them.

Macb. Wherefore did you so ?

Macb. Who can be wise, amaz'd, temp'rate, & furious, Loyall, and Neutrall, in a moment ? No man :
Th'expedition of my violent Love
Out-run the pawser, Reason. Here lay Duncan,
His Silver skinne, lac'd with his Golden Blood,
And his gash'd Stabs, look'd like a Breach in Nature,
For Ruines wastfull entrance : there the Murtherers,
Steep'd in the Colours of their Trade ; their Daggers
Vnmannerly breech'd with gore : who could refraine,
That had a heart to love, and in that heart,
Courage, to make's love knowne ?

Lady. Helpe me hence, hoa,

Macd. Looke to the Lady,

Mal. Why do we hold our tongues,
That most may claime this argument for ours ?

Donal. What should be spoken here,

Where our Fate hid within an augure hole,
May rush, and seize us ? Let's away.
Our Teares are not yet brew'd.

Mal. Nor our strong Sorrow
Vpon the foote of Motion,

Banq. Looke to the Lady :
And when we have our naked Frailties hid,
That suffer in expolure ; let us meet,
And question this most bloody piece of worke,
To know it further. Feares and scruples shake us :
In the great Hand of God I stand, and thence,
Against the undivulg'd pretence I fight
Of Treasonous Malice.

Macd. And so doe I.

All. So all.

Macb. Let's breefely put on manly readinesse,
And meet i'th' Hall together.

All. Well contented,

Exeunt.

Malc. What will you doe ?

Let's not comfort with them :
To shew an unfelt Sorrow, is an Office
Which the false man do's easie.
He to England.

Don. To Ireland, I :

Our seperated fortune shall keepe us both the safer:
Where we are, there's Daggers in mens Smiles ;
The neere in blood, the neerer bloody.

Macd. This murtherous Shaft that's shot,
Hath not yet lighted : and our safest way,
Is to avoid the ayne. Therefore to House,
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But shift away : there's warrant in that Theft,
Which steales it selfe, when there's no mercie left.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Rosse, with an Old man.

Old man. Threescore and ten I can remember well,
Within the volume of which Time, I have scene
Houres dreadful, and things strange: but this fore Night
Hath trifled former knowings.

Rosse. Ha, good Father,
Thou seest he heavens, as troubled with mans Act,
Threatens his bloody Stage : by th' Clock tis Day,
And yet darke Night strangles the travailing Lampe :
Is't Nights predominance, or the Dayes shame,
That darknesse does the face of Earth intombe,
When living Light shall kisse it ?

Old man. 'Tis unnatural,
Evenlike the deed that's done : on Tuesday last,
A Faulcon towering in her pride of place,
Was by a Mousing Owle hawk't at, and kill'd

Rosse. And Duncan's Horles,
(A thing most strange, and certaine)
Beauteous, and swift, the Minions of their Race,
Turn'd wilde in nature, broke their stalls, along out,
Contending 'gainst Obedience, as they would Make warre with Mankinde.

Old man. 'Tis said, they eate each other.

Rosse. They did so :

To th' amazement of mine eyes that look'd upon't.

Enter Macduffe.

Heere comes the good Macduffe.

How goes the world Sir, now?

Macd. Why see you not?

Rosse. Is't known who did this more then bloody deed?

Macd. Those that Macbeth hath slaine.

Rosse. Alas the day,

What good could they pretend?

Macd. They were subborned,

Malcolme, and Donalbaine the Kings two Sonnes
Are stolne away and fled, which puts upon them
Suspition of the deed.

Rosse. 'Gainst Nature still,
Thriftlesse Ambition, that will raven upon
Thine owne lives meanes: Then 'tis most like,
The Sovereignty will fall upon Macbeth.

Macd. He is already nam'd, and gons to Scone
To be invested.

Rosse. Where is Duncans body?

Macd. Carried to Colmekill,
The Sacred Store-houfe of his Predecessors,
And Guardian of their Bones.

Rosse. Will you to Scone?

Macd. No Cosin, Ile to Fife.

Rosse. Well, I will thither:

Macd. Well may you see things well done there: Adieu Left our old Robes sit easier then our new.

Rosse. Farewell, Father.

Old M. Gods benyson go with you sir, and with those
That would make good of bad, and Friends of Foes.

Exeunt omnes.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Banquo.

Banq. Thou hast it now, King, Cawdor, Glamis, all,
As the weyward Women promis'd, and I feare
Thou plaid'st most foully for't: yet it was said
It should not stand in thy Posterity,
But that my selfe should be the Roote, and Father
Of many Kings. If there come truth from them,
As upon thee Macbeth, their Speeches shine,
Why by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my Oracles as well,
And set me up in hope. But hush, no more.

Senit sounded. Enter Macbeth as King, Lady Lenox, Rosse, Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. Heere's our chiefe Guest.

La. If he had beene forgotten,
It had beene as a gap in our great Feast,
And all-things unbecomming.

Macb. To night we hold a solemne Supper, sir,
And Ile request your presence

Banq. Let your Highnesse
Command upon me, to the which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tye
Forever knit.

Macb. Ride you this afternoone?

Ban. I, my good Lord.

Macb. We should have else desir'd your good advice

(Which still hath been both grave, and prosperous)
In this dayes Councell: but wee'le take to morrow.
Is't farre you ride?

Ban. As farre, my Lord, as will fill up the time
Twixt this, and Supper. Goe not my Horse the better,
I must become a borrower of the Night,
For a darke houre or twaine.

Macb. Faile not our Feast.

Ban. My Lord, I will not.

Macb. We heare our bloody Cozens are bestow'd
In England, and in Ireland, not confessing
Their cruell Parricide, filling their hearers
With strange inuention. But of that to morrow,
When therewithall we shall have cause of State,
Craving us joyntly. Hye you to horse:
Adieu, till you returne at Night.

Goes Fleance with you?

Ban. I, my good Lord: our time does call upon's.

Macb. I wish your Horses swift, and sure of foot:
And so I doe commend you to their backs.
Farwell.

Exit Banquo.

Let every man be master of his time,
Till seaven at Night, to make society
The sweeter welcome:

We will keepe our selfe till Supper time alone:

While then, God be with you.

Exeunt Lords.

Sirra, a word with you: Attend those men
Our pleasure?

Servant. They are, my Lord, without the Palace Gate.

Macb. Bring them before us. Exit Servant.

To be thus, is nothing, but to be safely thus:

Our feares in Banquo sticke deepe,
And in his Royalty of Nature reignes that
Which would be fear'd. Tis much he dares,
And to that dauntlesse temper of his Minde,
He hath a Wisdome, that doth guide his Valour,
To act in safetie. There is none but he,
Whose being I doe feare: and under him,
My Genius is rebuk'd, as it is said

Mark Antonies was by Cesar, He chid the Sisters,
When first they put the Name of King upon me
And bad them speake to him. Then Prophet-like,
They hayld him Father to a Line of Kings.
Vpon my head they plac'd a fruitlesse Crowne,
And put a barren Scepter in my Gripe,
Thence to be wrencht with an unlineall Hand,
No Sonne of mine succeeding: if't be so,
For Banquo's Issue have I fil'd my Minde,
For them, the gracious Duncan have I murther'd,
Put Rancours in the Vessell of my Peace
Onely for them, and mine eternall Iewell
Given to the common Enemy of Man,
To make them Kings, the Seedes of Banquo Kings:
Rather then so, come Fate into the Lyft,
And champion me to th' utterance.
Who's there?

Enter Servant, and two Murtherers.

Now goe to the Doore, and stay there till we call.

Exit Servant.

Was it not yesterday we spoke together?

Murth. It was, so please your Highnesse.

Macb. Well then,

Now have you consider'd of my speeches?

Know, that it was he, in the times past,
Which held you so under fortune,
Which you thought had beene our innocent selfe,
This I made good to you, in our last conference,
Past in probation with you :
How you were borne in hand, how crost :
The Instruments : who wrought with them :
And all things else, that might
To halfe a Soule, and to a Notion craz'd, Say, Thus did Banquo.

1. Murth. You made it knowne to us.

Macb. I did so :

And went further, which is now
Our point of second meeting.
Doe you finde your patience so predominant,
In your nature, that you can let this goe?
Are you so Gospell'd to pray for this good man,
And for his Issue, whose heauie hand
Hath bow'd you to the Grave, and begger'd
Yours for ever?

1. Murth. We are men, my Liege.

Macb. I, in the Catalogue ye goe for men,
As Hounds, and Greyhoundes, Mungrels, Spaniels, Curres,
Showghes, Water-Rugs, and Demy-Wolves are clipt
All by the Name of Dogges : the valued file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The House-keeper, the Hunter, every one
According to the gift, which bounteous Nature
Hath in him clos'd : whereby he does receive Particular addition, from the Bill,
That writes them all alike : and so of men.
Now, if you have a station in the file,
Not i'th' worst ranke of Manhood, say't,
And I will put that Businesse in your Bosomes,
Whose execution takes your Enemie off,
Grapples you to the heart ; and love of us,
Who weare our Health but sickly in his Life,
Which in his Death were perfect.

2. Murth. I am one my Liege,
Whom the vile Blowes and Buffets of the World
Hath so incens'd, that I am recklesse what I doe,
To spight the World.

1. Murth. And I another,
So wearie with Disasters, tugg'd with Fortune,
That I would set my Life on any Chance,
To mend it or be rid on't.

Macb. Both of you know Banquo was your Enemie.

Murth. True, my Lord.

Macb. So is he mine : and in such bloody distance,
That every minute of his being, thrusts
Against my neer'st of Life: and though I could
With bare-fac'd power sweepe him from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not,
For certaine friends that are both his, and mine,
Whose loves I may not drop, but wayle his fall,
Who I my selfe stricke downe: and thence it is,
That I to your assistance doe make love,
Masking the Businesse from the common Eye,
For sundry weightie Reasons.

2. Murth. We shall, my Lord,
Performe what you command us.

1. Murth. Though our Lives——

Macb. Your Spirits shine through you.
Within this houre, at most,
I will advise you where to plant your selves,
Acquaint you with the perfect Spy o'th' time,

The moment on't, for't must be done to Night,
And something from the Palace : alwayes thought,
That I require a clearenesse ; and with him,
To leave no Rubs nor Botches in the Worke :
Fleance, his Sonne, that keepe him companie,
Whose absence is nolesse materiall to me,
Then is his Fathers, must embrace the fate
Of that darke houre : resolute your selves apart,
He come to you anon.

Murth. We are resolu'd, my Lord.

Macb. He call upon you straight : abide within,
It is concluded : Banquo, thy Soules flight,
If it finde Heaven, must finde it out to Night. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Macbeths Lady, and a Servant.

Lady. Is Banquo gone from Court?

Servant. I, Madame, but returnes againe to Night.

Lady. Say to the King, I would attend his leysure,
For a few words.

Servant. Madame, I will. Exit.

Lady. Nought's had, all's spent,
Where our desire is got without content :
'Tis safer, to be that which we destroy,
Then by destruction dwell in doubtful joy.

Enter Macbeth.

How now, my Lord, why doe you keepe alone?
Of sorryest Francies your Companions making,
Vsing those Thoughts, which should indeed have dy'd
With them they thinke on : things without all remedie
Should be without regard : what's done, is done.

Macb. We have scorch'd the Snake, not kill'd it :
Shee'le close, and be her selfe, whilest our poore Malice
Remaines in danger of her former Tooth.
But let the frame of things dis-joynt,
Both the Worlds suffer,
Ere we will eate our Meale in feare, and sleepe
In the affliction of these terrible Dreames,
That shake us Nightly : Better be with the dead,
Whom we, to gayne our place, have sent to peace:
Then on the torture of the Minde to lye
In restlesse extasie:

Duncane is in his Grave :

After Lifes fitfull Fever, he sleepe well,
Treason ha's done his worst : nor Steele nor Poyson,
Malice domestique, forraine Levie, nothing,
Can touch him further.

Lady. Come on :

Gentle my Lord, sleeke o're your rugged Lookes,
Be bright and ioyall'mong your Guests to Night.

Macb. So shall I Love, and so I pray be you:
Let your remembrance still apply to Banquo,
Pretent him Eminence, both with Eye and Tongue:
Vnsafe the while, that we must lave
Our Honors in these flattering streames,
And make our Faces Vizards to our Hearts,
Disguising what they are.

Lady. You must leave this.

Macb. O, full of Scorpions is my Minde, deare Wife:
Thou know'st, that Banquo and his Fleance lives.

Lady. But

Lady. But in them, Natures Coppie's not eterne.

Macb. There's comfort yet, they are assailable,
Then be thou jocund; ere the Bat hath flowne
His Cloyster'd flight, ere to blacke Heccats summons
The shard-borne Beetle, with his drowfie hums,
Hath rung Nights yawning Peale,
There shall be done a deed of dreadfull note.

Lady. What's to be done?

Macb. Be innocent of the knowledge, dearest Chuck,
Till thou applaud the deed: Come, feeling Night,
Scarfe up the tender Eye of pittifull Day,
And with thy bloody and invisible Hand
Cancell and teare to pieces that great Bond,
Which keepes me pale. Light thickens,
And the Crow makes Wing to th' Rookie Wood:
Good things of Day begin to droope, and drowse,
Whiles nights black Agents to their Prey's doe rowse,
Thou marvell'st at my words: but hold thee still,
Things bad begun, make strong themselves by ill:
So prythee goe with me. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter three murderers.

1. But who did bid thee joyne with us?

3. Macbeth.

2. He needes not our mistrust, since he delivers
Our Offices, and what we have to doe,
To the direction just.

1. Then stand with us.

The West yet glimmers with some streakes of Day.
Now spurres the latest Traveller apace,
To gayne the timely Inne, and neere approaches
The subject of our Watch.

3. Hearke, I heare Horses.

Banquo within. Give us a Light there, ho.

2. Then 'tis hee:

The rest, that are within the note of expectation,
Already are i'th' Court.

1. His Horses goe about.

3. Almost a mile: but he does usually,
So all men doe, from hence to th' Pallace Gate
Make it their Walke.

Enter Banquo and Fleans, with a Torch.

2. A Light, a Light.

3. 'Tis hee.

1. Stand too't.

Ban. It will be Rayne to Night.

1. Let it come downe.

Ban. O, Trecherie!

Flye godd Fleans, flye, flye, flye,

Thou may'st revenge. O Slave!

3. Who did strike out the Light?

1. Was't not the way?

3. There's but one downe: the Sonne is fled.

2. We have lost

Best halfe of our Affaire.

1. Well, let's away, and say how much is done:

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Banquet prepar'd. Enter Macbeth, Lady, Rosse, Lenox, Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. You know your owne degrees, sit downe:
At first and last, the hearty welcome.

Lords. Thanks to your Majesty.

Macb. Our selfe will mingle with Society,
And play the humble Host:
Our Hostesse keepes her State, but in the best time
We will require her welcome.

La. Pronounce it for me Sir, to all our Friends,
For my heart speakes, they are welcome.

Enter first Murderer.

Macb. See they encounter thee with their hearts thanks
Both sides are even: heere Ile sit i'th' mid'st,
Belarge in mirth, anon wee'l drinke a Measure
The Table round. There's blood upon thy face.

Mur. 'Tis Banquo's then.

Macb. 'Tis better thee without, then he within.
Is he dispatch'd?

Mur. My Lord his throat is cut, that I did for him:

Macb. Thou art the best o'th' Cut-throats,
Yet hee's good that did the like for Fleans:
If thou did'st it, thou art the Non-pareill.

Mur. Most Royall Sir

Fleans is scap'd.

Macb. Then comes my Fit againe:
I had else beene perfect;

Whole as the Marble, founded as the Rocke,
As broad, and generall, as the casing Ayre:
But now I am cabin'd, crib'd, confin'd, bound in
To sawcy doubts, and feares. But Banquo's safe?

Mur. I, my good Lord: safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trenched gashes on his head;
The least a Death to Nature.

Macb. Thanks for that,
There the growne Serpent lyes, the worme that's fled
Hath Nature that in time will Venom breed,
No teeth for th' present. Get thee gone, to morrow
Wee'l heare our selves againe. Exit Murderer.

Lady. My Royall Lord,
You do not give the Cheere, the Feast is sold
That is not often vouch'd, while 'tis making:
Tis given, with welcome: to feede were best at home:
From thence, the sawce to meate is Ceremony,
Meeting werebare without it.

Enter the Ghost of Banquo, and sits in Macbeth's place.

Macb. Sweet Remembrancer:
Now good digestion waite on Appetite,
And health on both.

Lenox. May't please your Highnesse sit.

Macb. Here had we now our Countries Honor, roof'd,
Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present:
Who may I rather challenge for unkindnesse,
Then pittie for Mischance.

Rosse. His absence (Sir)
Layes blame upon his promise. Pleas't your highnesse
To grace us with your Royall Company?

Macb. The Table's full.

Lenox. Here is a place reserv'd Sir.

Macb. Where?

Lenox. Heere my good Lord.

What is't that moves your Highnesse?

Macb. Which of you have done this?

Lords. What, my good Lord?

Macb. Thou canst not say I did it; never shake
Thy goary lockes at me,

Rosse. Gentlemen rise, his Highnesse is not well.

Lady. Sit worthy Friends: my Lord is often thus,
And hath beene from his youth. Pray you keepe Seat,
The fit is momentany, upon a thought
He will againe be well. If much you note him
You shall offend him, and extend his Passion,
Feed, and regard him not. Are you a man?

Macb. I, and a bold one, that dare looke on that
Which might appall the Divell.

La. O proper stuffe:

This is the very painting of your feare:
This is the Ayre-drawne-Dagger which you said
Led you to Duncan. O, these flawes and starts (Imposters to true feare) would well become
A womans story at a Winters fire
Authoriz'd by her Grandam: shame it selfe,
Why do you make such faces? When all's done
You looke but on a stoole.

Macb. Prythee see there:

Behold, looke, loe, how say you:
Why what care I, if thou canst nod, speake too,
If Charnell houses, and our Graves must send
Those that we bury, backe; our Monuments
Shall be the Mawes of Kytes.

Exit Ghost.

La. What? quite unmann'd in folly.

Macb. If I stand heere, I saw him.

La. Fie for shame.

Macb. Blood hath bene shed ere now, i'th' olden time
Ere humane Statute purg'd the gentle Weale:
I, and since too, Murthers have bene perform'd
Too terrible for the eare. The times have beene,
That when the Braines were out, the man would dye,
And there an end: But now they rise againe
With twenty mortall murthers on their crownes,
And push us from our stooles. This is more strange
Then such a murther is.

La. My worthy Lord
Your Noble Friends do lacke you.

Macb. I do forget:

Do not muse at me my most worthy Friends,
I have a strange infirmity, which is nothing
To those that know me. Come, love and health to all,
Then Ile sit downe: Give me some Wine, fill full:

Enter Ghost.

I drinke to th' generall joy o'th' whole Table,
And to our deere Friend Banquo, whom we miss:
Would he were heere: to all; and him we thirst,
And all to all.

Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.

Mac. Auant, & quit my sight, let the earth hide thee:
Thy bones are marrowlesse, thy blood is cold:
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
Which thou dost glare with.

La. Thinke of this good Peeres
But as a thing of Custome: 'Tis no other,
Onely it spoyle the pleasure of the time.

Macb. What man dare, I dare:

Approach thou like the rugged Russian Beare,
The arm'd Rhinoceros, or th' Hircan Tiger,
Take any shape but that, and my firme Nerves
Shall never tremble. Or be alive againe,
And dare me to the Defart with thy Sword:
If trembling I inhabit, then protest me
The Baby of a Girle. Hence horrible shadow, Vnreall mock'ry hence. Why so, being gone
I am a man againe: pray you sit still.

La. You have displac'd the mirth,
Broke the good meeting, with most admir'd disorder.

Macb. Can such things be,
And overcome us like a Summers Clowd,
Without our speciall wonder? You make me strange
Even to the disposition that I owe,
When now I thinke you can behold such sights,
And keepe the naturall Rubie of your Cheekes,
When mine is blanch'd with feare.

Rosse. What signes, my Lord?

La. I pray you speake not: he growes worse & worse,
Question enrages him: at once, goodnight.
Stand not upon the order of your going,
But go at once.

Len. Good night, and better health Attend his Majesty.

La. A kinde goodnight to all.

Exeunt Lords.

Macb. It will have blood they say:
Blood will have Blood:
Stones have beene knowne to move, & Trees to speake:
Augures, and understood Relations, have
By Maggot Pyes, & Choughes, & Rookes brought forth
The secretst man of blood. What is the night?

La. Almost at oddes with morning, which is which.

Macb. How sayst thou that Macduff denies his person
At our great bidding.

La. Did you send to him Sir?

Macb. I heare it by the way: But I will send:
There's not a one of them but in his house
I keepe a Servant Feed. I will to morrow
(And betimes I will) to the wizard Sisters.
More shall they speake: for now I am bent to know
By the worl's meanes, the worst, for mine owne good,
All causes shall give way, I am in blood
Spent in to farre, that should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go ore:
Strange things I have in head, that will to hand,
Which must be acted, ere they may be scand.

La. You lacke the season of all Natures, sleepe.

Macb. Come, weel to sleepe; My strange & self-abuse
Is the initiate feare, that wants hard use:
We are yet but young indeed.

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches, meeting
Hecat.

1. Why how now Hecat, you looke angerly?
Hec. Have I not reason (Beldams) as you are?
Sawcy, and over-bold, how did you dare
To Trade, and Trafficke with Macbeth,
In Riddles, and Affaires of death;

And

And I the Mistris of your Charmes,
The close contriver of all harmes,
Was never call'd to beare my part,
Or shew the glory of our Art?
And which is worse, all you have done
Hath beene but for a wayward Sonne,
Spightfull, and wrathfull, who (as others do)
Loves for his owne ends, not for you.
But make amends now: Get you gon,
And at the pit of Acheron
Meete me i'th' Morning: thither he
Will come, to know his Destinie,
Your Vessels, and your Spels provide,
Your Charmes, and every thing beside;
I am for th' Ayre: This night He spend
Vnto a dismall, and a Fatall end.
Great businesse must be wrought ere Noone.
Vpon the Corner of the Moone.
There hangs a vap'rous drop, profound,
He catch it ere it come to ground;
And that distill'd by Magicke flights,
Shall rise such Artificiall Sprights,
As by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his Confusion.
He shall spurne Fate, scorne Death, and beare
His hopes 'bove Wisedome, Grace, and Feare:
And you all know, Security
Is mortals cheefest Enemy.

Musicke, and a Song.

Hearke, I am call'd: my little Spirit see
Sits in a Foggy cloud, and stayes for me.

Sing within. Come away, come away, &c.

1 Come, let's make hast, shee'l soone be Backe againe.

Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Lenox, and another Lord.

Lenox. My former Speeches,
Have but hit your Thoughts
Which can interpret farther: Onely I say Things have bin strangely borne. The gracious Duncan
Was pittied of Macbeth: marry he was dead:
And the right valiant Banquo walk'd too late.
Whom you may say (if't please you) Fleance kill'd,
For Fleance fled: Men must not waite too late.
Who cannot want the thought, how monstrous
It was for Malcolme, and for Donalbaine
To kill their gracious Father? Damned Fact,
How it did greeve Macbeth? Did he not straight
In pious rage, the two delinquents teare,
That were the Slaves of drinke, and thralls of sleepe?
Was not that Nobly done? I, and wisely too:
For 'twould have anger'd any heart alive
To heare the men deny't. So that I say,
He ha's borne all things well, and I do thinke,
That had he Duncans Sonnes under the Key,
(As and't please Heaven he shall not) they shall finde
What 'twere to kill a Father: So should Fleance.
But peace; for from broad words, and cause he say'd
His presence at the Tyrants Feast; I heare
Macduffe lives in disgrace. Sir, can you tell

Where he bestowes himselfe?

Lord. The Sonnes of Duncane

(From whom this Tyrant holds the due of Birth)
Live in the English Court, and is receyv'd
Of the most Pious Edward, with such grace,
That the malevolence of Fortune, nothing
Takes from his high respect. Thither Macduffe
Is gone, to pray the Holy King, upon his ayd
To wake Northumberland, and warlike Seyward,
That by the helpe of these (with him above
To ratifie the Worke) we may againe
Give to our Tables meate, sleepe to our Nights:
Free from our Feasts, and Banquets bloody knives;
Do faithfull Homage, and receive free Honors,
All which we pine for now. And this report
Hath so exasperate their King, that hee
Prepares for some attempt of Warre,

Len. Sent he to Macduffe?

Lord. He did: and with an absolute, Sir, not I,
The cloudy Messenger turnes me his backe,
And hums; as who should say, you'l rue the time
That clogges me with this Answer.

Lenox. And that well might Advise him to a Caution, t'hold what distance
His wisdome can provide. Some holy Angell
Flye to the Court of England, and unfold
His Message ere he come, that a swift blessing
May soone returne to this our suffering Country,
Vnder a hand accus'd.

Lrrd. He send my Prayers with him.

Exeunt

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

- 1 Thrice the brinded Cat hath mew'd.
- 2 Thrice, and once the Hedges Pigge whin'd.
- 3 Harpier cries, 'tis time, 'tis time.
- 1 Round about the Caldron go:

In the poyfond Entrailes throw
Toad, that under cold stone,
Dayes and Nights, ha's thirty one:
Sweltred Venom sleeping got,
Boyle thou first i'th' charmed pot.

All. Double, double, toyle and trouble;
Fire burne, and Cauldron bubble.

2 Fillet of a Fenny Snake,
In the Cauldron boyle and bake:
Eye of Newt, and Toe of Frogge:
Wooll of Bat, and Tongue of Dogge:
Adders Forke, and Blinde-wormes Sting,
Lizards legge, and Howlets wing:
For a Charme of powerfull trouble,
Like a Hell-broth, boyle and bubble.

All. Double, double, toyle and trouble,
Fire burne, and Cauldron bubble.

3 Scale of Dragon, Tooth of Wolfe,
Witches Mummy, Maw, and Gulfe
Of the ravin'd salt Sea sharke:
Roote of Hemlocke, digg'd i'th darke:
Liver of Blaspheeming Iew,
Gall of Goate, and Slippes of Yew,
Sliver'd in the Moones Eclipse:

Nose

Nose of Turke, and Tartars lips :
Finger of Birth-strangled Babe,
Ditch-deliver'd by a Drab,
Make the Grwell thicke, and slab.

Add thereto a Tigars Chawdron,
For th' Ingredience of our Cawdron.

All. Double, double, toyle and trouble,
Fire burne, and Cauldron bubble.

2 Coole it with a Baboones blood,
Then the Charme is firme and good.

Enter Hecat, and the other three Witches.

Hec. O well done: I commend your paines,
And every one shall share i'th' gaines:
And now about the Cauldron sing
Like Elves and Fairies in a Ring,
Inchanting all that you put in.

Musicke and a Song. Blacke Spirits, &c.

2 By the pricking of my Thumbes,
Something wicked this way comes:
Open Lockes, who ever knockes.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. How now you secret, black, & midnight Hags?
What is't you do?

All. A deed without a name.

Macb. I conjure you, by that which you Professe,
(How ere you come to know it) answer me:
Though you untie the Windes, and let them fight Against the Churches: Though the yesty Waves
Confound and swallow Navigation up:
Though bladed Corne be lodg'd, & Trees blown downe,
Though Castles topple on their Warders heads:
Though Palaces, and Pyramids do slope
Their heads to their Foundations: Though the treasure
Of Natures Germaine, tumble altogether,
Even till distraction sicken: Answer me
To what I aske you.

1 Speake.

2 Demand.

3 Wee'l answer.

1 Say, if th' hadst rather heare it from our mouthes,
Or from our Masters.

Macb. Call 'em: let me see 'em.

1 Powre in Soves blood, that hath eaten
Her nine Farrow: Greace that's sweaten
From the Murtherers Gibbet, throw
Into the Flame.

All. Come high or low:

Thy Selfe and Office deaftly show.

Thunder.

1. Apparition, an Armed Head.

Macb. Tell me thou unknowne power.

1 He knowes thy thought:

Heare his speech, but say thou nought.

1 Appar. Macbeth, Macbeth, Macbeth:

Beware Macduffe,

Beware the Thane of Fife: dismisse me. Enough.

He Descends.

Macb. What ere thou art, for thy good caution, thanks
Thou hast harp'd my feare aright. But one word more.

1 He will not be commanded: heere's another
More potent then the first.

Thunder

2 Apparition, a Bloody Childe.

2 Appar. Macbeth, Macbeth, Macbeth.

Macb. Had I three eares, I'd heare thee.

2 Appar. Be bloody, bold, and resolute:

Laugh to scorne

The power of man: For none of woman borne Shall harme Macbeth.

Descends.

Mac. Then live Macduffe: what need I feare of thee?

But yet Ile make assurance, double sure,

And take a Bond of Fate: thou shalt not live,

That I may tell pale-hearted Feare, it lies;

And sleepe in spight of Thunder.

Thunder.

3 Apparition, a Childe Crowned, with a Tree in his hand.

What is this, that rises like the issue of a King,

And weares upon his Baby-brow, the round

And top of Sovereignty?

All. Listen, but speake not too't.

3 Appar. Be Lyon metled, proud, and take no care:
Who chafes, who frets, or where Conspirers are:

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, untill

Great Byrnam Wood, to high Dunfinane Hill

Shall come against him.

Descend:

Macb. That will never be:

Who can impresse the Forrest, bid the Tree

Unfixe his earth-bound Root? Sweet boadments, good:

Rebellious dead, rise never till the Wood

Of Byrnam rise, and our high plac'd Macbeth

Shall live the Lease of Nature, pay his breath

To time, and mortall Custome. Yet my heart

Throbs to know one thing: Tell me, if your Art

Can tell so much: Shall Banquo's issue ever

Reigne in this Kingdome?

All. Seeke to know no more.

Macb. I will be satisfied. Deny me this,
And an eternall Curie fall on you: Let me know.

Why sinkes that Caldron? & what noyse is this? Hobyns

1. Shew.

2 Shew.

3 Shew.

All. Shew his Eyes, and greeve his Heart,
Come like shadowes, to depart.

*Shew of eight Kings, and Banquo last, with a glasse
in his hand.*

Macb. Thou art too like the Spirit of Banquo: Down:

Thy Crowne do's feare mine Eye-bals. And thy haire

Thou other Gold-bound-brow, is like the first:

A third, is like the former. Filthy Haggas,

Why do you shew me this? — A fourth? Start eye!

What will the Line stretch out to'th' cracke of Doome?

Another yet? A seaventh? Ile see no more:

And yet the eight appears, who beares a glasse,

Which shewes me many more: and some I see,

That two-fold Balles, and trebble Scepters carry.

Horrible sight: Now I see 'tis true,

For the Blood-bolter'd Banquo smiles upon me,

And points at them for his. What is this so?

1 I Sir, all this is so. But why

Stands Macbeth thus amazedly?

Come Sisters, cheere we up his sprights,

And shew the best of our delights.

Ile Charme the Ayre to give a sound,

While you performe your Antique round:

That this great King may kindly say,

Our duties, did his welcome pay.

Musicke.

The Witches Dance, and vanish.

Macb. Where are they? Gone?

Let this pernicious houre,

Stand aye accursed in the Kalender.

Come in, without there.

Enter Lenox.

Lenox. What's your Graces will,

Macb.

Macb. Saw you the Wizard Sihers ?

Lenox. No my Lord.

Macb. Came they not by you ?

Lenox. No indeed my Lord.

Macb. Infected be the Ayre whereon they ride,
And damn'd all those that trust them. I did heare
The galloping of Horse. Who was't came by ?

Len. 'Tis two or three my Lord, that bring you word :

Macduff is fled to England.

Macb. Fled to England ?

Len. I, my good Lord.

Macb. Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits :
The flighty purpose never is o're-tooke
Vlesse the deed go with it, From this moment,
The very firstling of my heart shall be
The firstlings of my hand. And even now
To Crown my thoughts with Acts: be it thought & done:
The Castle of Macduff, I will surprize.
Seize upon Fife ; give to th' edge o'th' Sword
His Wife, his Babes, and all unfortunate Soules
That trace him in his Line. No boasting like a Foole,
This deed Ile do, before this purpose coole,
But no more fights. Where are these Gentlemen ?
Come bring me where they are. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Macduffes Wife, her Son, and Rosse.

Wife. What had hee done, to make him fly the Land ?

Rosse. You must have patience Madam.

Wife. He had none :

His flight was madnesse : when our Actions do not,
Our feares do make us Traitors.

Rosse. You know not

Whether it was his wisedom, or his feare.

Wife. Wisedom? to leave his wife, to leave his Babes,
His Mansion, and his Titles, in a place
From whence himselfe does flye? He loves us not.
He wants the naturall touch. for the poore Wren
(The most diminutive of Birds) will fight,
Her young ones in her Nest, against the Owle :
All is the Feare, and nothing is the Love ;
As little is the Wisedom, where the flight
Sorunnes against all reason.

Rosse. My dearest Cooz,
I pray you schoole your selfe, But for your Husband,
He is Noble, Wise, Iudicious, and best knowes
The fits o'th' Season. I dare not speake much further,
But cruell are the times, when we are Traitors
And do not know our selves: when we hold Rumor
From what we feare, yet know not what we feare,
But floate upon a wilde and violent Sea
Each way, and move. I take my leave of you :
Shall not be long but Ile be here againe:
Things at the worst will cease, or else climbe upward,
To what they were before. My pretty Cosine,
Blessing upon you.

Wife. Father'd he is,
And yet hee's Fatherlesse.

Rosse. I am so much a Foole, should I stay longer
It would be my disgrace, and your discomfort.
I take my leave at once. Exit Rosse.

Wife. Sirra, your Fathers dead,
And what will you do now ? How will you live ?

Son. As Birds do Mother.

Wife. What with Wormes, and Flyes ?

Son. With what I get, and so do they.

Wife. Poore bird,
Thoud'st never Feare the Net, nor Line,
The Pitfall, nor the Gin.

Son. Why should I Mother ?

Poore Birds they are not set for :

My Father is not dead for all your saying.

Wife. Yes, he is dead :

How wilt thou doe for a Father ?

Son. Nay how will you doe for a husband ?

Wife. Why I can buy me twenty at any Market.

Son. Then you'l by 'em to sell againe.

Wife. Thou speak'st with all thy wit,
And yet I faith with wit enough for thee.

Son. Was my Father a Traitor, Mother ?

Wife. I, that he was.

Son. What is a Traitor ?

Wife. Why one that sweares, and lyes.

Son. And be all Traytors, that doe so.

Wife. Every one that do's so, is a Traitor,
And must be hang'd.

Son. And must they all be hang'd, that swear and lye ?

Wife. Every one.

Son. VVho must hang them ?

Wife. VVhy, the honest men.

Son. Then the Liars and Swearers are Fools: for there are Lyars and Swearers enow, to beate the honest men, and hang up them.

Wife. Now God helpe thee, poore Monkie :
But how wilt thou doe for a Father ?

Son. If hee were dead, you'd weepe for him : if you would not it were a good signe, that I should quickly have a new Father.

Son. Poore pratler, how thou talk'st ?

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Blesse you faire Dame: I am not to you knowne,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect;
I doubt some danger does approach you neerely.
If you will take a homely mans advice,
Be not found heere : hence with your little ones :
To fright you thus, Me thinkes I am to savage :
To do worse to you, were fell Cruelty,
VVhich is too nie your person. Heauen preserve you,
I dare abide no longer. Exit Messenger.

Wife. Whether should I flye?
I have done no harme, But I remember now
I am in this earthly world : where to doe harme
Is often laudable, to doe good sometime
Accounted dangerous folly. Why then (alas)
Doe I put up that womanly defence,
To say I had done no harme?
What are these faces?

Enter Murtherers.

Mur. Where is your husband ?

Wife. I hope in no place so unsanctified,
Where such as thou mayst find him.

Mur. He's a Traitor.

Son. Thou lyst thou shagge-ear'd Villaine.

Mur. What you Egge ?
Yong fry of Treachery ?

Son. He has killd me Mother,
Run away I pray you. Exit crying Murther.

Scena

Scena Tertia.

Enter Malcolme and Macduffe.

Mal. Let us seeke out some desolate shade, & there Weepe our sad bosomes empty.

Macd. Let us rather Hold fast the mortall Sword: and like good men, Bestride our downfall Birthdome: each new Morne, New Widdowes howle, new Orphans cry, new sorowes Strike Heaven on the face, that it resounds As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out Like Syllable of Dolour.

Mal. What I beleewe, Ile waile; What know, beleewe; and what I can redresse, As I shall finde the time to friend, I will. What you have spoke, it may be so perchance. This Tyrant, whose sole name blisters our tongues, Was once thought honest: you have lov'd him well, He hath not touch'd you yet. I am young, but something You may discern of him through me, and wisdom To offer up a weake, poore innocent Lambe T'appease an angry God.

Macd. I am not treacherous.

Mal. But Macbeth is.

A good and vertuous Nature may recoyle In an Imperiall charge. But I shall crave your pardon: That which you are, my thoughts cannot transpose; Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell. Though all things soule, would wear the brows of grace Yet Grace must still looke so.

Macd. I have lost my Hopes.

Mal. Perchance even there Where I did finde my doubts Why in that rawnesse left you Wife, and Children? Those precious Motives, those strong knots of Love, Without leave-taking. I pray you, Let not my Jealousies, be your Dishonors, But mine owne Safeties: you may be rightly just, What ever I shall thinke.

Macd. Bleed, bleed poore Country, Great Tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure, For goodnesse dare not check thee: weare y thy wrongs The Title is affear'd. Fare thee well Lord, I would not be the Villaine that thou think'st, For the whole Space that's in the Tyrants Graspe, And the rich Ealt to boot.

Mal. Be not offended: I speake not as in absolute feare of you: I thinke our Country sinkes beneath the yoake, It weepes, it bleeds, and each new day a gash Is added to her wounds. I thinke withall, There would be hands uplifted in my right: And here from gracious England have I offer Of goodly thousands. But for all this, When I shall tread upon the Tyrants head, Or weare it on my Sword; yet my poore Country Shall have more vices then it had before, More suffer, and more sundry wayes then ever, By him that shall succede.

Macd. What should he be?

Mal. It is my selfe I meane: in whom I know All the particulars of Vice so grafted,

That when they shall be open'd, blacke Macbeth Will seeme as pure as Snow, and the poore State Esteeme him as a Lambe, being compar'd With my confinelesse harmes.

Macd. Not in the Legions Of horrid Hell, can come a Divell more damn'd In evils, to top Macbeth.

Macb. I grant him Bloody, Luxurious, Avaricious, False, Deceitfull, Sodaine, Malicious, smoaking of every sinne That has a name. But there's no bottome, none In my Voluptuousnesse: Your Wives, your Daughters, Your Matrons, and your Maides, could not fill up The Cesterne of my Lust, and my Desire All continent Impediments would ore-bear That did oppose my will. Better Macbeth, Then such an one to reigne.

Macd. Boundlesse intemperance In Nature is a Tyranny: It hath beene Th' untimely emptying of the happy Throne, And fall of many Kings. But feare not yet To take upon you what is yours: you may Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty, And yet seeme cold. The time you may so hoodwinke: We have willing Dames enough: there cannot be That Vulture in you, to devoure so many As will to Greatnesse dedicate themselves, Finding it so inclinde.

Mal. With this, there growes In my most ill-compos'd Affection, such A stanchlesse Avarice, that were I King, I should cut off the Nobles for their Lands, Desire his Jewels, and this others House, And my more-having, would be as a Sawce To make me hunger more, that I should forge Quarrels unjust against the Good and Loyall, Destroying them for wealth.

Macd. This Avarice sticke deeper: growes with more pernicious roote Then Summer-seeming Lust: and it hath bin The Sword of our slaine Kings: yet do not feare, Scotland hath Foysons to fill up your will Of your meere Owne. All these are portable, With other Graces weigh'd.

Mal. But I have none. The King-becoming Graces, As Iustice, Verity, Temp'rance, Stablenesse, Bounty, Perseverance, Mercy, Lowlinesse, Devotion, Patience, Courage, fortitude, I have no relish of them, but abound In the division of each severall Crime, Acting it many wayes. Nay had I power I should Pour the sweet Milke of Concord, into Hell, Vpore the universall peace, confound All unity on earth.

Macd. O Scotland, Scotland.

Mal. If such a one be fit to governe, speake: I am as I have spoken.

Mac. Fit to govern? No not to live. O Nation miserable! With an untitled Tyrant, bloody Sceptred, When shalt thou see thy wholsome dayes againe? Since that the truest Issue of thy Throne By his owne Interdiction stands accurst, And do's blaspheme his breed? Thy Royall Father Was a most Sainted-King: the Queene that bore thee, Oftner upon her knees, then on her feet, Dy'd every day she liv'd. Fare thee well,

These

These Evils thou repeat'st upon thy selfe,
Hath banisht me from Scotland. O my Brest,
Thy hope ends heere.

Mal. Macduff, this Noble passion
Childe of integrity, hath from my soule
Wip'd the blacke Scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good Truth, and Honor. Divellish Macbeth,
By many of these traines, hath fought to win me
Into his power: and modest Wisdome pluckes me
From over-credulous hast: but God above
Deale betweene thee and me; For even now
I put my selfe to thy direction, and Vnspeake mine owne detraction. Heere abiure
The taints, and blames I laid upon my selfe,
For strangers to my Nature, I am yet
Vnknowne to women, never was forswore,
Scarfely have coveted what was mine owne.
At no time broke my Faith, would not betray
The Divell to his Fellow, and delight
No lesse in truth then life. My first false speaking
Was this upon my selfe. what I am truly
Istine, and my poore Countries to command:
Whither indeed, before thy heere approach,
Old Seyward with ten thousand warlike men
Already at a point, was setting forth?
Now wee'l together, and the chance of goodnesse
Belike our warranted Quarrell. Why are you silent?

Macd. Such welcome, and unwelcome things at once
'Tis hard to reconcile.

Enter a Doctor.

Mal. Well, more anon. Comes the King forth
I pray you?

Doct. I Sir: there are a crew of wretched Soules
That stay his Cure: their malady convinces
The great assay of Art. But at his touch,
Such sanctity hath Heaven given his hand,
They presently amend.

Exit.

Mal. I thanke you Doctor.

Macd. What's the Dileate he meanes?

Mal. 'Tis call'd the Evill,
A most miraculous worke in this good King,
Which often since my heere remaine in England,
I have seene him doe: How he solicates heaven
Himselfe best knowes: but strangely visited people
All swolne and Vlcrous, pittifull to the eye,
The meere despaire of Surgery, he cures,
Hanging a golden stampe about their neckes,
Put on with holy Prayers, and 'tis spoken
To the succeeding Royalty he leaves
The healing Benediction. with this strange vertue,
He hath a heavenly giest of Prophecie,
And sondry Blessings hang about his Throne,
That speak him full of Grace.

Enter Rosse.

Macd. Se who comes heere.

Malc. My Countryman: but yet I know him not.

Macd. My euer gentle Cozen, welcome hither.

Malc. I know him now. Good God betimes remoue
The meanes, the meanes that makes us strangers,

Rosse. Sir. Amen.

Macd. Stands Scotland where it did?

Rosse. Alas poore Country,
Almost afraid to know it selfe. It cannot Be call'd our Mother, but our Grave; where nothing
But who knowes nothing is once scene to smile:
Where sighes, and groanes, and shrieks that rent the ayre

Are made, not mark'd: Where violent sorrow seemes
A Moderne extasie: The Deadmans kneil,
Is there scarle ask'd for who, and good menslives
Expire before the Flowers in their Caps,
Dying, or ere they sicken.

Macd. Oh relation; too nice, and yet too true.

Malc. What's the newest griefe?

Rosse. That of an honores age, doth hisse the speaker,
Each minute teemes a new one.

Macd. How does my Wife?

Rosse. Why well.

Macd. And all my Children?

Rosse. Well too.

Macd. The Tyrant has not batter'd at their peace?

Rosse. No, they were well at peace when I did leave 'em.

Macd. Be not a niggard of your speech: how goes't?

Rosse. When I came hither to transport the Tidings
Which I have heavily borne, there ran a Rumour
Of many worthy Fellowes, that were out,
Which was to my beleefe witness the rather,
For that I saw the Tyrants Power a-foot.
Now is the time of helpe: your eye in Scotland
Would create Souldiours, make our women fight,
To doffe their dire distresses.

Malc. Bee't their comfort
We are comming thither: Gracious England hath Lent us good Seyward, and ten thousand men,
An older and a better Souldier, none
That Christendome gives out.

Rosse. Would I could answer
This comfort with the like. But I have words
That would be howl'd out in the desert ayre,
Where hearing should not latch them.

Macd. What concerne they,
The generall cause, or is it a Fee-griefe
Due to some single brett?

Rosse. No munde that's honest
But in it shares some woe, though the maine part Pertaines to you alone.

Macd. If it be mine
Keepe it not from me, quickly let me have it.

Rosse. Let not your cares despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possesse them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

Macd. Humbl: I guesse at it.

Rosse. Your Castle is surpriz'd: your Wife, and Babes
Savagely slaughter'd: To relate the maner
Were on the Quarry of these murder'd Deere
To adde the death of you.

Malc. Mercifull Heaven:
What man, ne're pull your hat upon your browes:
Give sorrow words; the griefe that do's not speake,
Whispers the o're-faught heart, and bids it breake.

Macd. My Children too?

Ro. Wife, Children, Servants, all that could be found.

Macd. And I must be from thence? My wife kill'd too?

Rosse. I have said.

Malc. Be comforted.

Let's make us Med'cines of our great Revenge,
To cure this deadly griefe.

Macd. He ha's no Children. All my pretty ones?
Did you say All? Oh Hell-Kite! All?
What, All my pretty Chickens, and their Damme
At one fell swoope?

Malc. Dispute it like a man.

Macd. I shall do so:

But I must also feele it as a man ;
I cannot but remember such things were
That were most precious to me : Did heaven looke on,
And would not take their part ? Sinfull Macduffe,
They were all strooke for thee : Naught that I am,
Not for their owne demerits, but for mine
Fell slaughter on their soules : Heaven rest them now.

Mal. Be this the Whetstone of your sword, let griefe
Convert to anger : blunt not the heart, enrage it.

Macd. O I could play the woman with mine eyes,
And Braggart with my tongue. But gentle Heavens,
Cut short all intermission : Front to Front,
Bring thou this Fiend of Scotland, and my selfe
Within my Swords length set him, if he scape
Heaven forgive him too.

Mal. This time goes manly :
Come go we to the King, our Power is ready,
Our lacke is nothing but our leave. Macbeth
Is ripe for shaking, and the Powers about
Put on their Instruments: Receiue what cheere you may,
The night is long that never findes the Day. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter a Doctor of Physicke, and a Waiting Gentlewoman.

Doct. I have two Nights watch'd with you, but can perceive no truth in your report. When was it she last walk'd ?

Gent. Since his Majesty went into the Field, I have seene her rise from her bed, throw her Night-Gown upon her, unlocke her closet, take forth paper, folde it, write upon't, read it, afterwards scale it, and againe returne to bed ; yet all this while in a most fast sleepe,

Doct. A great perturbation in Nature, to receive at once the benefit of sleepe and do the effects of watching.
In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking, and other actuall performances, what (at any time) have you heard her say ?

Gent. That Sir, which I will not report after her.

Doct. You may to me, and 'tis most meet you should.

Gent. Neither to you, nor any one, having no witness to confirme my speech. Enter Lady with a Taper.

Lo you, here she comes : This is her very guise, and upon my life fast asleepe; observe her, stand close.

Doct. How came she by that light ?

Gent. Why it stood by her : she ha's light by her continually, 'tis her command.

Doct. You see her eyes are open.

Gent. I but their sense are shut.

Doct. What is it she do's now ?

Looke how she rubbes her hands.

Gent. It is an accustom'd action with her, to seeme thus washing her hands : I have knowne her continue in this a quarter of an houre.

Lad. Yet heere's a spot.

Doct. Heark, she speakes, I will set downe what comes from her, to satisfie my remembrance the more strongly.

La. Out damned spot : out I say. One : Two : Why then 'tis time to doo't : Hell is murky. Eye, my Lord, fie, a Souldier, and affear'd? what need we feare? who knows it, when none can call our power to accompt : yet who would have thought the olde man to have had so much blood in him.

Doct. Do you marke that ?

Lad. The Thane of Fife, had a wife: where is she now?
What will these hands neere be cleane ? No more o'that my Lord, no more o'that : you marre all with stat-ting.

Doct. Goto, goto:

You have knowne what you should not.

Gent. She ha's spoke what she should not, I am sure of that : Heaven knowes what she ha's knowne.

La. Here's the smell of the blood still : all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand.
Oh, oh, oh.

Doct. What a sigh is there? The heart is sorely charg'd

Gent. I would not have such a heart in my bosome, for the dignity of the whole body.

Doct. Well, well, well.

Gent. Pray God it be fir.

Doct. This disease is beyond my practise : yet I have knowne those which have walkt in their sleep, who have dyed holily in their beds.

Lad. Wash your hands, put on your Night-Gowne, looke not so pale : I tell you yet againe Banquo's buried;
he cannot come out on's grave.

Doct. Even so ?

Lady. To bed, to bed : there's knocking at the gate :
Come, come, come, come, give me your hand : What's done, cannot be undone. To bed, to bed, to bed.

Exit Lady.

Doct. Will she go now to bed ?

Gent. Directly.

Doct. Foule whisp'rings are abroad : unnaturall deeds
Do breed unnaturall troubles ; infected mindes
To their deafe pillowes will discharge their Secrets :
More needes she the Divine, then the Physitian :
God, God forgive us all. Looke after her,
Remove from her the meanes of all annoyance,
And still keepe eyes upon her : So goodnight;
My minde she ha's mated, and amaz'd my sight.
I thinke, but dare not ipeake.

Gent. Good night good Doctor.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Drum and Colours. Enter Menteth, Cathnes, Angus, Lenx, Souldiers.

Met. The English power is neere, led on by Malcolm,
His Vnkle Seyward, and the good Macdoff.
Revenge burne in them : for their deere causes
Excite the mortified man.

Ang. Neere Byrnan wood

Shall we well meet them, that way are they comming.

Cath. Who knowes if Donalbane be with his brother ?

Len. For certaine Sir, he is not : I have a File
Of all the Gentry ; there is Seyward's Sonne,
And many unruffe youths, that even now
Protest their first of Manhood.

Ment. What do's the Tyrant.

Cath. Great Dunfinane he strongly Fortifies,
Some say hee's mad : Others, that lesler hate him,
Do call it valiant Fury, but for certaine

He

He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause
Within the belt of Rule.

Ang. Now doe's he feele
His secret Murthers sticking on his hands,
Now minutely Revolts upbraid his faith-breach:
Those he commands, move onely in command,
Working in love: Now doe's he feele his Title
Hang loose about him, like a Giants Robe
Upon a Dwarfish Theefe.

Ment. Who then shall blame
His pester'd Senses to recoyle, and start,
When all that is within him, doe's condemne
It selfe, for being there.

Cath. Well, march we on,
To give obedience where tis truly ow'd:
Meet we the Med'cine of the sickly Weale,
And with him powre we in our Countries purge,
Each drop of us.

Lenox. Or so much as it needs,
To dew the Sovereigne Flower, and drowne the Weeds
Make we our March towards Birnam. Exeunt marching

Scena Tertia.

Enter Macbeth, Doctor, and Attendants.

Macb. Bring me no more Reports, let them flye all:
Till Byrnham Wood remove to Dunfinane,
I cannot taint with Feare. Whats the Boy Malcolme?
Was he not borne of woman? The Spirits that know
All mortall Consequences, have pronounc'd me thus:
Feare not Macbeth, no man that's borne of woman
Shall ere have power upon thee. Then fly false Thanes,
And mingle with the English Epicures,
The minde I sway by, and the heart I beare,
Shall never sagge with doubt, nor shake with feare.

Enter Servant.

The Divell damne thee blacke, thou cream-fac'd Loone:
Where got'st thou that Goose-looke.

Ser. There is ten thousand.

Macb. Geese Villaine?

Ser. Souldiers sir.

Macb. Goe pricke thy face, and over-red thy feare
Thou Lilly-liver'd Boy. What Souldiers, Patch?
Death of thy soule, those linnen cheekes of thine
Are Counsaillours to feare. What Souldiers Whay-face?

Ser. The English Force, so please you.

Macb. Take thy face hence. Seyton, I am sicke at heart,
When I behold: Seyton, I say, this push
Will cheere me ever, or diseafe me now.
I have liv'd long enough: my way of life
Is faine into the Seare, the yellow Lease,
And that which should accompany Old Age,
As honour, love, obedience, Troopes of Friends,
I must not looke to have: but in their stead,
Curses, not lowd but deepe, Mouth-honour, breath
Which the poore heart would faine deny, and dare not.
Seyton?

Enter Seyton.

Sey. Whats your Gracious pleasure?

Mac. What newes more?

Sey. All is confirm'd my Lord, which was reported.

Mac. Ile fight, till from my bones, my flesh is hackt.

Give me my Armour.

Sey. Tis not needed yet.

Mac. Ile put it on:

Send out moe horses, skirre the Countrey round,
Hang those that stand in feare. Give me mine Armor:
How doe's your Patient, Doctor?

Doct. Not so sicke my Lord,
As she is troubled with thicke-comming Fancies
That keepe her from her rest.

Macb. Cure her of that:

Canst thou not Minister to a minde diseas'd,
Plucke from the Memory a rooted Sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the Braine,
And with some sweet oblivious Antidote
Cleanse the stuff bosome, of that perillous stuffe
Which weiges upon the heart?

Doct. Therein the Patient
Must Minister unto himselfe,

Macb. Throw Physicke to the Dogs, Ile none of it.
Come, put mine Armor on: give me my Staffe:

Seyton, send out: Doctor, the Thanes flye from me:

Come sir, dispatch. If thou could'st Doctor, cast
The water of my Land, find her diseafe,
And purge it to a sound and pristine Health,
I would applaud thee to the very Eccho,
That should applaud againe. Pull't off I say,
What Rubarb, Cæny, or what Purgative drug
Would scowre these English hence: hearst thou of them?

Doct. I my good Lord: your Royall preparation
Makes us heare something.

Mac. Bring it after me:

I will not be afraid of Death and Bane,
Till Birnam Forrest come to Dunfinane.

Doct. Were I from Dunfinane away, and cleare, Profit againe should hardly draw me here. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Drum and Colours. Enter Malcolme, Seyward, Mac- duffe, Seywards Sonne, Menteth, Cathnes, Angus, and Souldiers Marching.

Malc. Cousins I hope the dayes are neere at hand
That Chambers will be safe.

Ment. We doubt it nothing.

Seyw. What Wood is this before us?

Ment. The Wood of Byrnham.

Malc. Let every Souldier hew him downe a Bough,
And bear't before him, thereby shall we shadow
The numbers of our Hoast, and make discovery
Erre in report of us.

Sold. It shall be done.

Seyw. We learne no other, but the confident Tyrant,
Keepes still in Dunfinane, and will indure
Our setting downe befor't.

Malc. Tis his maine hope:
For where there is advantage to be given,
Both more and lesse have given him the Revolt,
And none serve with him, but constrained things,
Whose hearts are absent too.

Macd. Let our best Censures
Before the true event, and put we on

Industrious Souldierſhip.

Sey. The time approaches,
That will with due deciſion make us know
What we ſhall ſay we have, and what we owe:
Thoughts ſpeculative, their unſure hopes relate,
But certaine iſſue, ſtrokes muſt arbitrate,
Towards which, advance the warre. Exeunt marching.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Macbeth, Seyton, and Souldiers, with Drum and Colours.

Macb. Hang out our Banners on the outward walls,
The Cry is ſtill, they come: Our Caſtles ſtrength
Will laugh a Siege to ſcorne: Here let them lye,
Till Famine and the Ague eate them up:
Were they not forc'd with thoſe that ſhould be ours,
We might have met them darefull, beard to beard,
And beat them backward home. What is that noiſe?

A cry within of Women.

Sey. It is the cry of women, my good Lord.

Macb. I have almoſt forgot the taſte of Feares:
The time has bene, my ſenſes would have cool'd
To heare a Night-ſhricke, and my Fell of haire
Would at a diſmall Treatiſe rowze, and ſtirre
As life were in't. I have ſuſt full with horrors, Direneſſe familiar to my ſlaughterous thoughts
Cannot once ſtart me. Wherefore was that cry?

Sey. The Queene (my Lord) is dead.

Macb. She ſhould have dy'd hereafter;
There would have been a time for ſuch a word:
To morrow, and to morrow, and to morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the laſt Syllable of Recorded time:
And all our yesterdaies, have lighted Fooles
The way to ſtudy death. Out, out, briefe Candle,
Life's but a walking Shadow, a poore Player,
That ſtruts and frets his houre upon the Stage,
And then is heard no more. It is a Tale
Told by an Ideot, full of ſound and fury Signifying nothing. Enter a Meſſenger

Meſ. My Gracious Lord,
I ſhould report that which I ſay I ſaw,
But know not how to doo't.

Macb. Well, ſay ſir.

Meſ. As I did ſtand my watch upon the hill
I look't toward Byrnam, and anon me thought
The Wood began to move.

Macb. Lyar, and Slave.

Meſ. Let me endure your wrath, if't be not ſo:
Within this three mile may you ſee it comming.
I ſay, a moving Grove.

Macb. If thou ſpeak'ſt falſe,
Vpon the next tree ſhalt thou hang alive
Till Famine cling thee: If thy ſpeech be ſooth,
I care not if thou doſt for me as much.
I pull in Reſolution, and begin
To doubt the Equivocation of the Fiend,
That lies like truth. Feare not, till Byrnam Wood
Doe come to Dunſinane, and now a Wood

Comes toward Dunſinane. Arme, arme, and out,
If this which he avouches doe's appeare,
There is nor flying hence, nor tarrying here,
I'gin to be a weary of the Sunne,
And wiſh th'eſtate o'th' world were now undon.
Ring the alarum Bell, blow Wind, come wracke,
At leaſt wee'l dye with Harneſſe on our backe. Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Drumme and Colours.
Enter Malcolm, Seyward, Macduffe, and their Army, with Boughes.

Mal. Now neere enough:
Your Leavy Screenes throw downe,
And ſhew like thoſe you are: You (worthy Vncle)
Shall with my Couſin, your right Noble ſonne, Lead our firſt Battell. Worthy Macduffe, and we Shall take upon's what elſe remains to doe
According to our order.

Sey. Fare you well:
Doe we but find the Tyrants power to night,
Let us be beaten, if we cannot fight. (breath.)

Macd. Make all our Trumpets ſpeake, give them all Thoſe clamorous Harbingers of blood, and death. Exe.
Alarums continued.

Scena Septima.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. They have tyed me to a ſtake, I cannot flye,
But Beare-like I muſt fight the courſe. Whats he
That was not borne of woman? Such a one
Am I to feare, or none.

Enter yong Seyward.

Y.Sey. What is thy name?

Macb. Thou'lt be afraid to heare it.

Y.Sey. No: though thou call'ſt thy ſelfe a hotter name
Than any is in hell.

Macb. My name's Macbeth.

Y.Sey. The Divell himſelfe could not pronounce a Title
More hatefull to mine eare.

Macb. No: nor more fearefull.

Y.Sey. Thou liſt thou abhorred Tyrant, with my ſword
Ile prove the lye thou ſpeak'ſt.

Fight, and yong Seyward ſlaine.

Macb. Thou waſt borne of Woman;
But ſwords I ſmile at, Weapons laugh to ſcorne, Brandiſh'd by man that's of a Woman borne. Exit.

Alarums. Enter Macduffe.

Macd. That way the noiſe is: Tyrant ſhew thy face,
If thou beſt ſlaine, and with no ſtroake of mine,
My Wife and Childrens Ghosts will haunt me ſtill:
I cannot ſtrike at wretched Kernes, whoſe armes
Are hyr'd to beare their Staves; either thou Macbeth,
Or elſe my ſword with an unbattered edge
I ſheath againe undeeded. There thou ſhould'ſt be,
By this great clatter, one of greateſt note

Scenes

Seemes bruited. Let me finde him Fortune,
And more I beg not. Exit, Alarums.

Enter Malcolm and Seyward.

Seyw. This way my Lord, the Castles gently rendred:
The Tyrants people, on both sides doe fight,
The Noble Thanes doe bravely in the Warre,
The day almost it selfe professes yours,
And little is to doe.

Malc. We have met with Foes
That strike beside us.

Seyw. Enter, Sir, the Castle. Exeunt. Alarums.

Enter Macbeth.

Mac. Why should I play the Roman Foole, and dye
On mine owne sword? whiles I see lives, the gashes
Doe better upon them.

Enter Macduffe.

Macd. Turne Hell-hound, turne.

Mac. Of all men else I have avoyded thee:
But get thee backe, my soule is too much charg'd
With blood of thine already.

Macd. I have no words,
My voyce is in my Sword, thou bloodier Villaine
Than tearmes can give thee out. Fight, Alarums.

Macb. Thou loiest labour,
As easie may'st thou the intrenchant Ayre
With thy keene Sword impresse, as make me bleed:
Let fall thy blade on vulnerable Crests,
I beare a charmed life, which must not yeeld
To one of woman borne.

Macd. Dispaire thy Charme,
And let the Angell whom thou still hast serv'd
Tell thee, Macduffe was from his Mothers wombe Vntimely ript.

Macb. Accur'd be that tongue that tels me so;
For it hath Cow'd my better part of man:
And be these Iugling Fiends no more beleeu'd,
That palter with us in a double sence,
That keepe the word of promise to our eare,
And breake it to our hope. Ile not fight with thee.

Macd. Then yeeld thee Coward,
And live to be the shew, and gaze o'th'time.
Wee'l have thee, as our Rarer Monsters are Painted upon a Pole, and under-writ,
Here may you see the Tyrant.

Macb. I will not yeeld
To kisse the ground before yong Malcolmes feet,
And to be baited with the Rabbles curse,
Though Byrnam Wood be come to Dunsinane,
And thou oppos'd, being of no woman borne,
Yet I will try the last. Before my body,
I throw my warlike Shield: Lay on Macduffe,
And damn'd be him, that first cryes hold, enough

Exeunt fighting. Alarums.

Enter Fighting, and Macbeth slaine.

Retreat, and Flourish. Enter with Drumme and Colours, Malcolme, Seyward, Rosse, Thanes, and Soldiers.

Mal. I would the Friends we misse, were safe arriv'd.

Sey. Some must goe off: and yet by these I see,
So great a day as this is cheapely bought.

Mal. Macduffe is missing, and your noble Sonne.

Rosse. Your sonne my Lord, ha's paid a Souldiers debt,
He onely liv'd but till he was a man,
The which no sooner had his Prowesse confirm'd
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he dy'd.

Sey. Then he is dead?

Rosse. I, and brought off the Field: your cause of sorrow
Must not be measur'd by his worth, for then
It hath no end.

Sey. Had he his hurts before.

Rosse. I, on the Front.

Sey. Why then, Gods Souldier be he:
Had I as many sonnes, as I have haire,
I would not wish them to a fairer death:
And so his Knell is knoll'd.

Mal. Hee's worth more sorrow,
And that Ile spend for him.

Sey. He's worth no more,
They say he parted well, and paid his score,
And so God be with him. Here comes newer comfort.

Enter Macduffe, with Macbeths head.

Macd. Haile King, for so thou art.
Behold where stands

Th' Vsurpers curst head: the time is free:
I see thee compast with thy Kingdomes Pearle,
That speake my salutation in their minds:
Whose voyces I desire alow'd with mine.
Haile King of Scotland.

All. Haile King of Scotland.

Flourish.

Mal. We shall not spend a large expence of time,
Before we reckon with your severall loves,
And make us even with you. My Thanes and Kinsmen
Henceforth be Earles, the first that ever Scotland
In such an honor nam'd: Whats more to doe
Which would be planted newly with the time,
As calling home our exil'd Friends abroad,
That fled the Snares of watchfull tyranny,
Producing forth the cruell Ministers
Of this dead Butcher, and his Fiend-like Queene;
Who (as 'tis thought) by selfe and violent hands,
Tooke off her life. This, and what needfull else
That calls upon us, by the Grace of Grace,
We will performe in measure, time, and place:
So thanks to all at once, and to each one,
Whom we invite, to see us Crown'd at Scone.

Flourish. Exeunt omnes.

THE TRAGEDY OF HAMLET, Prince of Denmarke.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Barnardo and Francisco two Centinels.

Barnardo.

Ho's there?

Fran. Nay answer me : Stand and unfold your selfe.

Bar. Long live the King.

Fran. Barnardo?

Bar. He.

Fran. You come most carefully upon your houre.

Bar. Tis now struck twelve, get thee to bed Francisco.

Fran. For this reliefe much thanks : Tis bitter cold,
And I am sicke at heart.

Barn. Have you had quiet Guard?

Fran. Not a Mouse stirring.

Barn. Well, goodnight. If you doe meet Horatio and Marcellus, the Rivals of my Watch, bid them make haile.

Enter Horatio and Marcellus.

Fran. I thinke I heare them. Stand : who's there?

Hor. Friends to this ground.

Mar. And Liege-men to the Dane.

Fran. Give you good night.

Mar. O farewell honest Soldier, who hath reliev'd you?

Fra. Barnardo ha's my place : give you good night.

Exit Francisco.

Mar. Holla Barnardo.

Bar. Say, what is Horatio there?

Hor. A peece of him.

Bar. Welcome Horatio, welcome good Marcellus.

Mar. What, ha's this thing appear'd againe to night.

Bar. I have seene nothing.

Mar. Horatio sayes, tis but our phantasie,
And will not let beleefe take hold of him
Touching this dreaded sight, twice seene of us,
Therefore I have intreated him along
With us, to watch the minutes of this night,
That if againe this Apparition come,
He may approve our eyes, and speake to it.

Hor. Tush, tush, 'twill not appeare.

Bar. Sit downe a while,

And let us once againe assaile your cares,
That are so fortified against our Story,
What we two nights have seene.

Hor. Well, sit we downe,

And let us heare Barnardo speake of this.

Barn. Last night of all,

Whon yond same Starre thats Westward from the Pole
Had made his course t'illumine that part of heaven

Where now it burnes, Marcellus and my selfe,
The Bell then beating one.

Mar. Peace, breake thee off : Enter the Ghost,
Looke where it comes againe.

Bar. In the same figure like the King thats dead.

Mar. Thou art a Scholler ; speake to it Horatio.

Bar. Looke it not like the King? Marke it Horatio.

Hor. Most like : It harrowes me with feare and won-

Bar. It would be spoke to. (d)

Mar. Question it Horatio.

Hor. What art thou that usurp'st this time of night,
Together with that faire and warlike forme
In which the Majesty of buried Denmarke
Did sometimes march : By heaven I charge thee speake.

Mar. It is offended.

Bar. See, it stalkes away.

Hor. Stay : speake ; speake : I charge thee, speake.

Exit the Ghost.

Mar. Tis gone, and will not answer.

Bar. How now Horatio? You tremble & looke pale:
Is not this something more than phantasie?
What thinke you on't?

Hor. Before my God I might nor this beleefe
Without the sensible and true avouch
Of mine owne eyes.

Mar. Is it not like the King?

Hor. As thou art to thy selfe,
Such was the Armour he had on,
When th'Ambitious Norway combatted :
So frown'd he once, when in an angry parle
He smot the flegged Pollax on the Ice.
Tis strange.

Mar. Thus twice before, and just at this same houre,
With Martiall stiake, hath he gone by our Watch.

Hor. In what particular thought to worke, I know not
But in the grosse and scope of my opinion,
This boads some strange eruption to our State.

Mar. Good now sit downe, and tell me he that knowes
Why this same strict and most observant Watch,
So nightly toyles the subject of the Land,
And why such daily Cast of Brazen Cannon
And forraigne Mart for Implements of Warre :
Why such impresse of Shipwrights, whose fore Taske
Do's not divide the Sunday from the weeke,
What might be toward, that this sweaty haste
Doth make the night joynt-labourer with the day :
Who is't that can informe me?

Hor. That can I,

At least the whisper goes so : Our last King,
Whose Image even but now appear'd to us,
Was (as you know) by Fortinbras of Norway,
(Thereto prick'd on by a most emulate pride)
Dar'd to the Combate. In which, our valiant Hamlet,
(For so this side of our knowne world esteem'd him)
Did slay this Fortinbras : Who by a seal'd Compact,
Well ratified by Law, and Heraldry,
Did forfeit (with his life) all those his Lands
Which he stood seiz'd on, to the Conqueror :
Against the which, a Moity competent
Was gaged by our King : which had return'd
To the Inheritance of Fortinbras,
Had he bin Vanquisher, as by the same Cov'nant
And carriage of the Article design'd,
His fell to Hamlet. Now sir, yong Fortinbras,
Of unimproved mettle, hot and full,
Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there,
Shar'd up a List of Landlese Resolutes,
For food and Dyet, to some Enterprize
That hath a stomake in't : which is no other
(And it doth well appeare unto our State)
But to recover of us by strong hand
And termes Compulsive, those foresaid Lands
So by his father lost : and this (I take it)
Is the maine motive of our Preparations,
The course of this our Watch, and the chiefe head
Of this post-haste, and Romage in the Land.

Enter Ghost againe.

But soft, behold : Loe, where it comes againe :
He crosse it, though it blast me. Stay Illusion :
If thou hast any sound, or use of voyce,
Speake to me. If there be any good thing to be done,
That may to thee doe ease, and grace to me; speake to me.
If thou art privy to thy Countries Fate
(Which happily foreknowing may avoyd) Oh speake.
Or, if thou hast uphoorded in thy life
Extorted Treasure in the wombe of Earth,
(For which, they say, you spirits oft walke in death)
Speake of it. Stay, and speake. Stop it Marcellus.

Mar. Shall I strike at it with my Partizan?

Hor. Doe if it will not stand,

Barn. Tis here.

Hor. Tis here.

Mar. Tis gone.

Exit Ghost.

We doe it wrong, being so Majesticall
To offer it the shew of Violence,
For it is as the Ayre, invulnerable,
And our vaine blowes, malicious mockery.

Barn. It was about to speake, when the Cocke crew.

Hor. And then it started, like a guilty thing
Vpon a fearefull Summons. I have heard,
The Cocke that is the Trumpet to the day,
Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat
Awake the god of Day : and at his warning,
Whether in Sea, or Fire, in Earth, or Ayre,
Th'extravagant and erring spirit, hies
To his Confinde. And of the truth herein,
This present Object made probation.

Mar. It faded on the crowing of the Cocke.
Some sayes, that ever 'gainst that season comes Wherein our Saviours Birth is celebrated,
The Bird of Dawning singeth all night long :
And (they say) no spirit can walke abroad,
The nights are wholsom, then no Planets strike,
No Faery talkes, nor Witch hath power to Charme :

So hallow'd, and so gracious is the time.

Hor. So have I heard, and doe in part beleve it.
But looke, the Morne in Russet Mantle clad;
Walkes o're the Dew of yon high Easterne hill,
Breake we our Watch up, and by my advice
Let us impart what we have seene to night
Vnto yong Hamlet. For upon my life,
This spirit dumbe to us, will speake to him :
Doe you consent we shall acquaint him with it,
As needfull in our Loves, fitting our duty?

Mar. Let's do't I pray, and I this morning know Where we shall finde him most conveniently. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Claudius, King of Denmarke, Gertrud the Queene, Hamlet, Polonius, Laertes, and his Sister Ophelia, Lords Attendants.

King. Though yet of Hamlet our deare Brothers death,
The memory be Greene : and that it us befitted
To beare our hearts in griefe, and our whole Kingdome
To be contracted in one brow of woe :
Yet so farre hath Discretion fought with Nature,
That we with wisest sorrow thinke on him,
Together with remembrance of our selves.
Therefore our sometimes Sister, now our Queene,
Th'Imperiall Ioyntresse of this warlike State,
Have we, as twere, with a defeated joy,
With one Auspicious, and one Dropping eye,
With mirth in Funerall, and with Dirge in Marriage,
In equall Scale weighing Delight and Dole
Taken to wife ; nor have we herein barr'd
Your better Wisedomes, which have freely gone
With this affaire along, for all our Thanks.
Now followes, that you know yong Fortinbras,
Holding a weake supposal of our worth ;
Or thinking by our late deare Brothers death,
Our State to be disioynt, and out of Frame,
Collegued with the dreame of his Advantage ;
He hath not fail'd to pester us with Message,
Importing the surrender of those lands
Lost by his Father, with all Bonds of Law
To our most valiant Brother. So much for him.

Enter Voltimand and Cornelius.

Now for our selfe, and for this time of meeting
Thus much the businesse is. We have here writ
To Norway, Vncle of yong Fortinbras,
Who impotent and bedrid, scarcely heares
Of this his Nephewes purpose, to suppress
His further gate herein. In that the Levies,
The Lists, and full proportions are all made
Out of his subject : and we here dispatch
You good Cornelius, and you Voltimand,
For bearing of this greeting to old Norway,
Giving to you no further personall power
To businesse with the King, more than the scope
Of these dilated Articles allow :
Farewell, and let your haste commend your duty.

Volr. In that, and all things, will we shew our duty.

King. We doubt it nothing, heartily farewell.

Exit Voltimand and Cornelius.

And now Laertes, whats the newes with you?

You told us of some suite. What is't Laertes?
 You cannot speake of Reason to the Dane,
 And loose your voyce. What wouldst thou beg Laertes,
 That shall not be my Offer, not thy Asking?
 The head is not more Native to the heart,
 The hand more instrumentall to the Mouth,
 Then is the Throne of Denmarke to thy father.
 What wouldst thou have Laertes?

Laer. Dread my Lord,
 Your leave and favour to returne to France,
 From whence, though willingly I came to Denmarke
 To shew my duty in your Coronation,
 Yet now I must confesse, that duty done,
 My thoughts and wishes bend againe towards France,
 And bow them to your gracious leave and pardon.

King. Have you your Fathers leave?
 What sayes Polonius?

Pol. He hath my Lord:
 I doe beseech you give him leave to goe.

King. Take thy faire houre Laertes, time be thine,
 And thy best graces spend it at thy will:

But now my Cosin Hamlet, and my Sonne?

Ham. A little more then kin, and lesse then kind.

King. How is it that the Clouds still hang on you?

Ham. Not so my Lord, I am too much ith' Sun,

Quee. Good Hamlet cast thy nightly colour off,
 And let thine eye looke like a Friend on Denmarke.

Doe not for ever with thy veyled lids

Seeke for thy Noble Father in the dust;

Thou knowst tis common, all that live must dye.

Passing through Nature, to Eternity.

Ham. I Madam, it is common.

Quee. If it be;

Why seemes it so particular with thee.

Ham. Seemes Madam? Nay, it is: I know not Seemes:

Tis not alone my Inky Cloake (good Mother)
 Nor Customary suites of solemne Blacke,
 Nor windy suspiration of forc'd breath,
 No, nor the fruitfull River in the Eye,
 Nor the dejected haviour of the Visage,
 Together with all Formes, Moods, shewes of Griefe,
 That can denote me truly. These indeed Seeme,
 For they are actions that a man might play:
 But I have that Within, which passeth show;
 These, but the Trappings, and the Suites of woe.

King. Tis sweet and commendable
 In your Nature Hamlet,
 To give these mourning duties to your Father:
 But you must know, your father lost a father,
 That father lost, lost his, and the Survivor bound
 In filiall Obligation, for some terme
 To doe obsequious Sorrow. But to perfer
 In obstinate Condolment, is a course
 Of impious stubbornnesse. Tis unmanly griefe,
 It shewes a will most incorrect to Heaven,
 A heart unfortified, a Mind impatient,
 An Vnderstanding simple, and unschoold:
 For, what we know must be, and is as common
 As any the most vulgar thing to sence,
 Why should we in our peevisish Opposition
 Take it to heart? Fye, tis a fault to heaven,
 A fault against the Dead, a fault to Nature,
 To Reason most absurd, whose common Theame
 Is death of Fathers, and who still hath cryed,
 From the first Coarse, till he that dyed to day,
 This must be so. We pray you throw to earth

This unprevayling woe, and thinke of us,
 As of a Father; For let the world take note,
 You are the most immedieate to our Throne,
 And with no lesse Nobility of Love,
 Then that which deereft Father beares his Sonne,
 Doe I impart towards you. For your intent
 In going backe to Schoole in Wittenberg,
 It is most retrogarde to our desire:

And we beseech you, bend you to remaine
 Heere in the cheere and comfort of our eye,
 Our cheifest Courtier Cosin, and our Sonne.

Que. Let not thy Mother lose her Prayers Hamlet:
 I prethee stay with us, goe not to Wittenberg.

Ham. I shall in all my best
 Obey you Madam.

King. Why tis a loving, and a faire Reply,
 Be as our selfe in Denmarke. Madam come,
 This gentle and unforc'd accord of Hamlet
 Sits smiling to my heart, in grace whereof,
 No jocond health that Denmarke drinks to day,
 But the great Cannon to the Clouds shall tell,
 And the Kings Rounce, the heavens shall bruite againe, Respeaking earthly Thunder. Come away. Exeunt.

Manet Hamlet.

Ham. Oh that this too too solid Fleish, would melt,
 Thaw, and resolve it selfe into a Dew:
 Or that the Everlasting had not fixt
 His Cannon gainst ielse-slaughter. O God, O God!
 How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
 Seemes to me all the uses of this world?
 Eye on't? Oh fie, fie, tis an unweeded Garden
 That growes to Seed: things rank, and grosse in Nature
 Possesse it meerely. That it should come to this:
 But two months dead: Nay, not so much; not two,
 So excellent a King, that was to this
Hyperion to a Satyre: so loving to my Mother,
 That he might not beteene the windes of heaven
 Visit her face too roughly. Heaven and Earth
 Must I remember: why she would hang on him,
 As if encrease of Appetite had growne
 By what it fed on; and yet within a month?
 Let me not thinke on't: Frailty, thy name is woman!
 A little Month, or ere those shooes were old,
 With which she followed my poore Fathers body
 Like Niobe, all teares. Why she, even she,
 (O heaven! A beast that wants discourse of Reason
 Would have mourn'd longer) married with mine Vnkle,
 My fathers brother: but no more like my father,
 Then I to Hercules. Within a Month?
 Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous Teares
 Had left the flushing of her gauled eyes,
 She married. O most wicked speed to post
 With such dexterity to incestuous sheets:
 It is not, nor it cannot come to good.
 But breake my heart, for I must hold my tongue.

Enter Horatio, Barnard, and Marcellus.

Hor. Haile to your Lordship.

Ham. I am glad to see you well:

Horatio, or I doe forget my selfe.

Hor. The same my Lord,

And your poore Servant ever.

Ham. Sir my good friend,
 Ile change that name with you:

And what make you from Wittenberg Horatio?

Marcellus.

Marcellus.

Mar. My good Lord.

Ham. I am very glad to see you : good even sir.
But what in faith make you from Wittenberge.

Hor. A Truant disposition, good my Lord.

Ham. I would not have your enemy say so ;
Nor shall you doe mine care that violence,

To take it truster of your owne report
Against your selfe. I know you are no Truant :
But what is your affaire in Elfenour ?

Wee'l teach you to drinke deepe ere you depart.

Hor. My Lord, I came to see your Fathers Funerall.

Ham. I prythee doe not mocke me (fellow Student)
I thinke it was to see my Mothers wedding.

Hor. Indeed my Lord, it followeth hard upon.

Ham, Thrift, thrift, Horatio: the Funerall Bak'd meats,
Did coldly furnish forth the Marriage Tables ;
Would I had met my dearest Foe in heaven,
Ere I had ever seene that day Horatio.

My father, me thinks I see my father.

Hor. Oh where my Lord ?

Ham. In my mind's eye (Horatio.)

Hor. I saw him once, he was a goodly King.

Ham. He was a man, take him for all in all :
I should not looke upon his like againe.

Hor. My Lord, I thinke I saw him yesternight.

Ham. Saw ? Who ?

Hor. My Lord, the King your Father.

Ham. The King my father !

Hor. Season your admiration for a while
With an attent care ; till I may deliver
Vpon the witnesse of these Gentlemen,
This marvell to you.

Ham. For heavens love let me heare.

Hor. Two nights together, had these Gentlemen
(Marcellus and Barnardo) on their Watch
In the dead waste and middle of the night
Beene thus encountred. A figure like your father,
Arm'd at all points exactly, Cap a Pe,
Appares before them, and with solemne March
Goes slow and stately : By them thrice he walkt,
By their oppress'd and feare-surprized eyes,
Within his Truncheons length ; whilst they bestill'd
Almost to Idly with the Act of feare,
Stand dumbe and speake not to him. Thisto me
Indreadfull secrecy impart they did,
And I with them the third night kept the Watch,
Whereas they had deliver'd both in time,
Forme of the thing ; each word made true and good,
The Apparition comes. I knew your Father :
These hands are not more like.

Ham. But where was this ?

Mar. My Lord upon the platforme where we watcht.

Ham. Did you not speake to it ?

Hor. My Lord, I did ;

But answer made it none : yet once me thought
It lifted up it head, and did adresse
It selfe to motion, like as it would speake :
But even then, the morning Cocke crew lowd ;
And at the sound it shrunke in haste away,
And vanisht from our sight.

Ham. Tis very strange.

Hor. As I doe live my honourable Lord 'tis true ;
And we did thinke it writ downe in our duty
To let you know of it.

Ham. Indeed, indeed Sirs ; but this troubles me.

Hold you the Watch to night ?

Both. We doe my Lord.

Ham. Arm'd, say you ?

Both. Arm'd, my Lord.

Ham. From top to toe ?

Both. My Lord, from head to foote.

Ham. Then saw you not his face ?

Hor. O yes, my Lord, he wore his Beaver up :

Ham. What, lookt he frowningly ?

Hor. A countenance more in sorrow than in anger.

Ham. Pale, or red ?

Hor. Nay, very pale.

Ham. And fixt his eyes upon you ?

Hor. Most constantly.

Ham. I would I had beene there.

Hor. It would have much amaz'd you.

Ham. Very like, very like : staid it long ? (dred.

Hor. While one with moderate haste might tell a hun-

All. Longer, longer.

Hor. Not when I saw't.

Ham. His Beard was grisly ?

Hor. It was, as I have seene it in his life,

A Sable Silver'd. (gaine.

Ham. Ile watch to night ; perchance twill walke a-

Hor. I warrant you it will.

Ham. If it assume my noble fathers person,
Ile speake to it, though Hell it selfe should gape
And bid me hold my peace. I pray you all,
If you have hitherto conceald this sight ;
Let it be trebble in your silence still :
And whatsoever else shall hap to night,
Give it an understanding, but no tongue ;
I will requite your loves ; so, fare ye well :
Vpon the Platforme twixt eleven and twelve,
Ile visit you.

All. Our duty to your Honour. Exeunt.

Ham. Your love, as mine to you : farewell.

My fathers spirit in Armes ? All is not well :
I doubt some foule play : would the night were come ;
Till then sit still my foule ; foule deeds will rise,
Though all the earth orewhelm them to mens eyes. Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Laertes and Ophelia.

Laer. My necessities are imbarck't, farewell :
And sister, as the Winds give benefit,
And Convoy is assistant ; doe not sleepe,
But let me heare from you,

Ophe. Doe you doubt that ?

Laer. For Hamlet, and the trifling of his favours,
Hold it a fashion and a toy in Bloud ;
A Violet in the youth of Primy Nature ;
Froward, not permanent ; sweet not lasting
The suppliance of a minute ; No more.

Ophe. No more but so.

Laer. Thinke it no more :
For nature cresant does not grow alone,
In thewes and Bulke : but as his Temple waxes,
The inward service of the minde and soule
Growes wide withall. Perhaps he loves you now,
And now no foyle nor cautell doth besmerch
The vertue of his feare : but you must feare

Hts

His greatnesse weigh'd, his will is not his owne;
 For he himselfe is subject to his Birth:
 He may not, as unvalued persons doe,
 Carve for himselfe; for, on his choyce depends
 The sanctity and health of the whole state.
 And therefore must his choyce be circumscrib'd
 Vnto the voyce and yeelding of that body,
 Whereof he is the head. Then if he sayes he loves you,
 It fits your wisdom so farre to beleve it;
 As he in his peculiar Sect and force
 May give his saying deed; which is no further,
 Than the maine voyce of Denmarke goes withall.
 Then weigh what losse your honour may sustaine,
 If with two credent eare you list his Songs;
 Or lose your heart; or your chaste treasure open
 To his unmaistred importunity.

Feare it Ophelia, feare it my deare Sister,
 And keepe within the reare of your affection;
 Out of the shot and danger of desire.

The charest Maid is prodigall enough,
 If she unmaske her beary to the Moone:
 Vertue it selfe escapes not calumnious stroaks,
 The Canker galls the infant of the Spring
 Too oft before the Buttons be disclos'd,
 And in the morne and liquid dew of Youth,
 Contagious blastments are most imminent.
 Be wary than, best safety lies in feare;
 Youth to it selfe rebels, though none else neere.

Ophe. I shall th'effect of this good Lesson keepe,
 As watchmen to my heart: but good my Brother
 Doe not as some ungracious Pastors doe,
 Shew me the steepe and thorny way to heaven;
 Whilst like a puff and recklesse Libertine
 Himselfe, the Primrose path of dalliance treads,
 And reakes not his owne reade.

Laer. Oh, feare me not.

Enter Polonius.

I stay too long; but here my Father comes:
 A double blessing is a double grace;
 Occasion smiles upon a second leave.

Polon. Yet here Laertes? Aboord, aboard for shame,
 The wind sits in the shoulder of your saile,
 And you are staid for there: my blessing with you;
 And these few Precepts in thy memory,
 See thou Character. Give thy thoughts no tongue,
 Nor any unproportion'd thought his Act:
 Bethou familiar; but by no meanes vulgar:
 The friends thou hast, and their adoption trade,
 Grapple them to thy soule, with hoopes of Steele:
 But doe not dull thy palme, with entertainment
 Of each unhatch't, unfledg'd Comrade. Beware
 Of entrance to a quarrell: but being in Bear't that th'oppos'd may beware of thee.
 Give every man thine eare; but few thy voyce:
 Take each mans censure: but reserve thy judgement:
 Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy;
 But not exprest in fancy; rich, not gaudy:
 For the apparell oft proclaimes the man.
 And they in France of the best ranke and Nation,
 Are of a most select and generous cheff in that.
 Neither a borrower, nor a lender be;
 For Loane oft loses both it selfe and friend:
 A borrowing duls the edge of Husbandry.
 This above all; to thine owne selfe be true:
 And it must follow, as the Night the Day,
 Thou canst not then be false to any man.

Farewell: my blessing season this in thee.

Laer. Most humbly doe I take my leave, my Lord.

Polon. The time invites you, goe, your servants tend.

Laer. Farewell Ophelia, and remember well

What I have said to you.

Ophe. 'Tis in my memory lockt,

And you your selfe shall keepe the Key of it.

Laer. Farewell.

Exit Laer.

Polon. What ist Ophelia, he hath said to you?

Ophe. So please you, something touching the L. Hamlet.

Polon. Marry, well bethought:

'Tis told me he hath very oft of late

Given private time to you; and you your selfe

Have of your audience beene most free and bounteous,

If it be so, as so tis put on me;

And that in way of caution: I must tell you,

You doe not understand your selfe so clearly,

As it behoves my Daughter, and your honour.

What is betwene you, give me up the truth?

Ophe. He hath my Lord of late, made many tenders
 Of his affection to me.

Polon. Affection, puh. You speake like a Greene Girl,
 Vnsifted in such perillous circumstance.

Doe you beleve his tenders, as you call them?

Ophe. I doe not know, my Lord, what I should thinke.

Polon. Marry Ile teach you; thinke your selfe a Baby,
 That you have tane his tenders for true pay,
 Which are not starling. Tender your selfe more dearly;
 Or not to cracke the wind of the poore Phrase,
 Roaming it thus, you'll tender me a foole.

Ophe. My Lord, he hath importun'd me with love,
 In honourable fashion.

Polon. I, fashion you may call it, goe to, goe to.

Ophe. And hath given countenance to his speech,
 My Lord, with all the vowes of heaven.

Polon. I, Springes to catch Woodcocks. I doe know
 When the blood burnes, how prodigall the soule
 Gives the tongue vowes: these blazes, daughter,
 Giving more light than heat; extinct in both,
 Even in their promise, as it is a making;
 You must not take for fire. For this time Daughter,
 Be somewhat scantier of your Maiden presence,
 Set your entreatments at a higher rate,
 Then a command to parley. For Lord Hamlet,
 Beleeve so much in him, that he is yong,
 And with a larger tether may he walke,
 Then may be given you. In few, Ophelia,
 Doe not beleeve his vowes; for they are Broakers,
 Not of the eye, which their Investments shew:
 But meere implorators of unholy Sutes,
 Breathing like sanctified and pious bonds,
 The better to begaile. This is for all:
 I would not, in plaine termes, from this time forth,
 Have you so slander any moment leisure,
 As to give words or talke with the Lord Hamlet:
 Looke too't, I charge you; come your way.

Ophe. I shall obey my Lord.

Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet, Horatio, Marcellus.

Ham. The Ayre bites shrew'dly: is it very cold?

Hor. It is a nipping and an eager ayre.

Ham. What houre now?

Hor. I thinke it lackes of twelve.

Mar. No, it is strooke.

(season,

Hor. Indeed I heard it not: then it drawes neere the Wherein the Spirit held his wont to walke.

What

What does this meane my Lord?

(rouse,

Ham. The King doth wake to night, and takes his Keepe waffels, and the swaggering upspring reeles,
And as he dreines his draughts of Renish downe,
The Kettle Drum and Trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his pledge.

Hor. It is a custome?

Ham. I marry is't:

And to my mind, though I am native here,
And to the manner borne: It is a custome
More honour'd in the breach, than the observance.

Enter Ghost.

Hor. Looke my Lord it comes.

Ham. Angels and Ministers of grace defend us:
Be thou a spirit of health, or Goblin damn'd,
Bring with thee ayres from heaven, or blasts from hell,
Be thy events wicked or charitable,
Thou com'st in such a questionable shape
That I will speake to thee. Ile call thee Hamlet,
King, Father, Royall Dane: Oh, oh, answer me,
Let me not burst in ignorance; but tell
Why thy Canoniz'd bones hearded in death,
Have burst their Cearments, why the Sepulcher
Wherein we saw thee quietly Inurn'd,
Hath op'd his ponderous and Marble jawes,
To cast thee up againe? What may this meane?
That thou dead Coarse againe in compleat Steele,
Revisitst thus the glimpses of the Moone,
Making night hideous? And we fooles of Nature,
So horribly to shake our disposition,
With thoughts beyond thee; reaches of our soules,
Say, why is this, wherefore? what should we doe?

Ghost Beckens Hamlet.

Hor. It beckens you to goe away with it,
As if it some impartment did desire
To you alone.

Mar. Looke with what courteous action
It waits you to a more removed ground:
But doe not goe with it.

Hor. No, by no meanes.

Ham. It will not speake: then will I follow it.

Hor. Doe not my Lord.

Ham. Why, what should be the feare?

I doe not set my life at a Pins fee;
And for my soule what can it doe to that?
Being a thing immortall as it selfe:
It waves me forth againe; Ile follow it.

Hor. What if it tempt you toward the Floud my Lord?
Or to the dreadfull Sonnet of the Cliffe,
That beetles o're his base into the Sea,
And there assumes some other horrible forme,
Which might deprive your Sovereignty of Reason,
And draw you into madnesse? thinke of it.

Ham. It waits me still: goe on, Ile follow thee.

Mar. You shall not goe my Lord.

Ham. Hold off your hand.

Hor. Be rul'd, you shall not goe.

Ham. My fate cries out,
And makes each petty Artire in this body,
As hardy as the Nemian Lions Nerve:
Still am I call'd? Vnhand me Gentlemen:
By heav'n, Ile make a Ghost of him that lets me:
I say away, goe on, Ile follow thee.

Exeunt Ghost and Hamlet.

Hor. He waxes desperate with imagination.

Mar. Let's follow; tis not fit thus to obey him.

Hor. Have after, to what issue will this come?

Mar. Something is rotten in the State of Denmarke.

Hor. Heaven will direct it.

Mar. Nay, let's follow him.

Exeunt.

Enter Ghost and Hamlet.

Ham. Where wilt thou leade me? speake; Ile goe no

Ghost. Marke me.

(further.

Ham. I will.

Geo. My honour is almost come,
When I to sulphurous and tormenting Flames
Must render up my selfe.

Ham. Alas poore Ghost.

Ghost. Pitty me not but lend thy serious hearing
To what I shall unfold.

Ham. Speake, I am bound to heare.

Geo. So art thou to revenge, when thou shalt heare.

Ham. What?

Ghost. I am thy fathers spirit.

Doom'd for a certaine terme to walke the night;
And for the day confin'd to fast in fiers,
Till the foule crimes done in my dayes of Nature,
Are burnt and purg'd away? But that I am forbid
To tell the secrets of my Prison-house;
I could a Tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soule, freeze thy yong blood,
Make thy two eyes like Starres, start from their Spheres,
Thy knotty and combined lockes to part,
And each particular haire to stand an end,
Like Quills upon the fretfull Porpentine:
But this eternall blazon must not be
To cares of Flesh and Blood; list Hamlet, oh list,
If thou didst ever thy deare father love.

Ham. Oh heaven!

Ghost. Revenge his foule and most unnaturall Murther.

Ham. Murther?

Ghost. Murther most foule, as in the best it is;
But this most foule, strange, and unnaturall.

Ham. Haste, haste me to know it,
That I with wings as swift
As Meditation, or the thoughts of Love,
May sweepe to my Revenge.

Ghost. I finde thee apt;

And duller should'st thou be than the fat weed
That rots it selfe in ease, on Lethe Wharfe, Would'st thou not stirre in this. Now Hamlet heare:
It's given out, that sleeping in mine Orchard,
A Serpent stung me: so the whole eare of Denmarke,
Is by a forged proceffe of my death
Rankly abus'd: But know thou noble youth,
The Serpent that did sting thy fathers life,
Now weares his Crowne.

Ham. O my Prophetick soule: mine Vncle?

Ghost. I, that incestuous, that adulterate Beast
With witchcraft of his wits, hath traiterous gifts,
Oh wicked wit, and gifts, that have the power
So to seduce? Won to this shamefull Lust
The will of my most seeming vertuous Queene:
Oh Hamlet, what a falling off was there,
From me, whose love was of that dignity,
That it went hand in hand, even with the Vow
I made to her in Marriage; and to decline
Vpon a Wretch, whose naturall gifts were poore
To those of mine. But Vertue, as it never will be moved,
Though Lewdnesse court it in a shape of heaven:
So Lust, though to a radiant Angell link'd,
Will sate it selfe in a Celestiall bed, and prey on Garbage.

But

But soft, me thinks I scent the Mornings Ayre:
Briefe let me be : Sleeping within mine Orchard,
My custome alwayes in the afternoone ;
Vpon my secure howre thy Vncle stole
With iuyce of curfed Hebenon in a Violl,
And in the Porches of mine eares did poure
The leaperous Distilment ; whose effect
Holds such an enmity with bloud of Man,
That swift as Quick-silver it courses through
The naturall Gates and Allies of the body ;
And with a sodaine vigour it doth possēt
And curd, like Aygre droppings into Milke,
The thin and wholesome blood : so did it mine ;
And a most instant Tetter bak'd about,
Most Lazar-like, with vile and loathsome crust,
All my smooth body.

Thus was I, sleeping, by a Brothers hand,
Of Life, of Crowne, and Queene at once dispatcht :
Cut off even in the blossomes of my Sinne,
Vnhouzzled, disappointed, unnaneld,
No reckoning made, but sent to my account
With all my imperfections on my head ;
Oh, horrible, Oh horrible, most horrible :
If thou hast nature in thee beare it not ;
Let not the Royall Bed of Denmarke be
A Couch for Luxury and damned Incest,
But howsoever thou pursuest this Act,
Taint not thy mind ; nor let thy soule contrive
Against thy Mother ought ; leave her to heaven,
And to those Thornes that in her bosome lodge,
To pricke and sting her. Fare thee well at once,
The Glow-worme shewes the Martine to be neere,
And gins to pale his uneffectuall Fire :
Adue, adue, Hamlet : remember me. Exit.

Ham. Oh all you host of heaven ! Oh Earth ; what else?
And shall I couple hell ? Oh fie : hold my heart ;
And you my sinnewes, grow not instant Old ;
But beare me stiffely up : remember thee ?
I, thou poore Ghost, while memory holds a seate
In this distracted Globe : Remember thee ?
Yea, from the Table of my Memory,
He wipe away all triviall fond Records,
All sawes of bookes, all formes, all pressures past,
That youth and observation coppied there ;
And thy Commandment all alone shall live
Within the booke and Volume of my braine,
Vnmixt with baser matter ; yes, yes, by heaven :
Oh most pernicious woman !
Oh Villaine, Villaine, smiling damned Villaine !
My Tables, my Tables : meet it is I set it downe,
That one may smile, and smile and be a Villaine ;
Atleast I'm sure it may be so in Denmarke ;
So Vncle there you are : now to my word ;
It is ; Adue, Adue, Remember me : I have sworn't. .

Hor. & Mar. within. My Lord, my Lord.

Enter Horatio and Marcellus.

Mar. Lord Hamlet.

Hor. Heaven secure him.

Mar. So be it.

Hor. Illo, ho, ho, my Lord.

Ham. Hillo, ho, ho, boy ; comebird, come.

Mar. How is't my Noble Lord ?

Hor. What newes, my Lord ?

Ham. Oh wonderfull !

Hor. Good my Lord tell it.

Ham. No you'll reveale it.

Hor. Not I, my Lord, by heaven.

Mar. Nor I, my Lord.

Ham. How say you then, would heart of man, (thinks)
But you'll be secret ?

Both. I, by heav'n, my Lord-

Ham. There's ne'er a villaine dwelling in all Denmarke
But he's an arrant Knave.

Hor. There needs no Ghost my Lord, come from the Grave to tell us this.

Ham. Why right, you are i'th' right ;
And so without more circumstance at all,
I hold it fit that we shake hands, and part :
You, as your businesse and desires shall point you ;
For every man has businesse and desire,
Such as it is : and for mine owne poore part,
Looke you, Ile goe pray.

Hor. These are but wilde and hurling words, my Lord.

Ham. I'm sorry they offend you heartily :
Yes faith, heartily.

Hor. There's no offence my Lord.

Ham. Yes, by Saint Patrickke, but there is my Lord,
And much offence too, touching this Vision here :
It is an honest Ghost, that let me tell you :
For your desire to know what is betweene us,
O're-master't as you may. And now good friends,
As you are Friends, Schollers, and Souldiers,
Give me one poore request.

Hor. What is't my Lord ? we will.

Ham. Never make knowne what you have seene to

Both. My Lord, we will not. (night)

Ham. Nay, but swear't.

Hor. In faith my Lord, not I.

Mar. Nor I my Lord : in faith.

Ham. Vpon my Sword.

Mar. We have sworne my Lord already.

Ham. Indeed, upon my sword, indeed.

Gho. Swear. Ghost cries under the Stage.

Ham. Ah ha boy, sayest thou so. Art thou there true-penny ? Come on, you heare this fellow in the felleridge.
Consent to swear.

Hor. Propose the oath my Lord.

Ham. Never to speake of this that you have seene,
Swear by my Sword.

Gho. Swear.

Ham. Hic & ubique ? Then wee'l shift for ground,
Come hither Gentlemen,
And lay your hands againe upon my sword.
Never to speake of this that you have heard :
Swear by my Sword.

Ghost. Swear. (fast)

Ham. Well said old Mole, can't worke i'th' ground so
A worthy Pioner, once more remove good friend.

Hor. Oh day and night, but this is wondrous strange.

Ham. And therefore as a stranger give it welcome.
There are more things in heaven and earth Horatio,
Than are dream't of in our Philosophy. But come,
Here as before, never so helpe you mercy,
How strange or odde so ere I beare my selfe ;
(As I perchance hereafter shall thinke meet
To put an Anticke disposition on : )
That you at such time seeing me, never shall
With Armes encombred thus, or thus, head shake ;
Or by pronouncing of some doubtfull phrase ;
As well, we know, or we could, and if we would,
Or if we list to speake ; or there be and if there might,
Or such ambiguous giving out to note,

That

That you know ought of me ; this not to doe :
So grace and mercy at your most need helpe you :
Swear.

Ghost. Swear.

Ham. Rest, rest perturbed Spirit : so Gentlemen,
With all my love commend me to you ;
And what so poore a man as Hamlet is,
May doe t' expresse his love and friending to you,
God willing shall not lacke : let us goe in together,
And still your fingers on your lippes I pray,
The time is out of joynt : Oh cursed spight,
That ever I was borne to set it right.
Nay, come, lets goe together. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Polonius and Reynoldo.

Polon. Give him his money, and those notes Reynoldo.

Reynold. I will my Lord.

Polon. You shall doe marvels wisely : good Reynoldo.
Before you visite him you make inquiry
Of his behaviour.

Reynold. My Lord, I did intend it.

Polon. Marry, well said :

Very well said. Looke you sir,
Enquire me first what Danskers are in Paris ;
And how, and who, what meanes ; and where they keepe :
What company, at what expence : and finding
By this encompassement and drift of question,
That they doe know my sonne : Come you more neere
Than your particular demaunds will touch it,
Take you as twere some distant knowledge of him,
And thus, I know his father and his friends,
And in part him. Doe you marke this Reynoldo ?

Reynold. I, very well my Lord,

Polon. And in part him, but you may say not well ;
But if't be he I meane, hees very wilde ;
Addicted so and so ; and there put on him
What forgeries you please : marry, none so ranke,
As may dishonour him ; take heed of that :
But Sir, such wanton, wilde, and usuall slips,
As are companions noted and most knowne
To youth and liberty.

Reynold. As gaming my Lord.

Polon. I, or drinking, fencing, swearing,
Quarrelling, Drabbing. You may goe so farre.

Reyn. My Lord that would dishonour him.

Polon. Faith no, as you may season it in the charge ;
You must not put another scandall on him,
That he is open to Incontinency ;
Thats not my meaning ; but breathe his faults so quaintly,
That they may seeme the taints of liberty ;
The flash and out-breake of a fiery minde,
A savagenesse in unreclaim'd blood of generall assault.

Reynold. But my good Lord.

Polon. Wherefore should you doe this ?

Reynol. I my Lord, I would know that.

Polon. Marry Sir, here's my drift,
And I beleve it is a fetch of warrant :
You laying these slight fulleyes on my Sonne,
As twere a thing a little soild i'th' working : (sounded,
Marke you your party in converse ; him you would Having ever seene. In the prenominate crimes,

The youth you breath of guilty, be assur'd
He closes with you in this consequence :
Good sir, or so, or friend, or Gentleman.
According to the Phrase and the Addition,
Of man and Countrey.

Reynol. Very good my Lord.

Polon. And then sir does he this ?

He does : what was I about to say ?
I was about to say nothing : where did I leave ?

Reynol. At closes in the consequence :
At friend, or so, and Gentleman.

Reynol. At closes in the consequence, I marry,
He closes with you thus. I know the Gentleman,
I saw him yesterday, or tother day ;
Or then, or then, with such and such, and as you say,
There was he gaming, there o'retook in's Rouse,
Their falling out at Tennis ; or perchance,
I saw him enter such a house of baile ;

Videlicet, a Brothell, or so forth. See you now ;
Your bait of falshood, takes this Cape of truth ;
And thus doe we of wisdom and of reach
With Windleses, and with assayes of Byas,
By indirections finde directions out :
So by my former Lecture and advice
Shall you my sonne ; you have me, have you not ?

Reynol. My Lord I have.

Polon. God buy you ; fare you well.

Reynol. Good my Lord.

Polon. Observe his inclination in your selfe.

Reynol. I shall my Lord.

Polon. And let him ply his Musicke.

Reynol. Well, my Lord. Exit.

Enter Ophelia.

Pol. Farewell :

How now Ophelia, whats the matter ?

Ophe. Alas my Lord, I have been so affrighted.

Pol. With what, in the Name of Heaven ?

Ophe. My Lord, as I was sowing in my Chamber,
Lord Hamlet with his doublet all unbrac'd,
No Hat upon his head, his stockings foul'd,
Vngarter'd, and downe-gyved to his Ankle,
Pale as his shirt, his knees knocking each other,
And with a looke so pitteous in purport,
As if he had been loosed out of Hell,
To speake of horrors : he comes before me.

Polon. Mad for thy Love ?

Ophe. My Lord, I do not know : but truly I do feare it.

Polon. What said he ?

Ophe. He tooke me by the wrist.

Then goes he to the length of all his Arme ;
And with his other hand, thus o're his brow,
He fals to such perusall of my face,
As he would draw it. Long itaid he so,
At last, a little shaking of my arme,
And thrice his head thus waving up and downe,
He rais'd a sigh, so hideous and profound,
That it did seeme to shatter all his bulke,
And end his being. That done, he lets goe,
And with his head over his shoulders turn'd,
He seem'd to find his way without his eyes,
For out adores he went without their helpe ;
And to the last, bended their light on me.

Polon. Goe with me, I will goe seeke the King,
This is the very extasie of Love,
Whose violent propertie foredoes it selfe,

And

And leads the will to desperate Vndertakings,
As oit as any passion under heaven,
That does afflict our Natures. I am sorry,
What have you given him any hard words of late?

Oph. No my good Lord: but as you did command,
I did reuell his Letters, and deny'd
His access to me.

Pol. That hath made him mad.
I am sorry that with better speed and judgement
I had not quoted him. I feare he did but trifle,
And meant to wracke thee: but befhrew my jealousie:
It seemes it is as proper to our Age,
To cast beyond our selves in our opinions,
As it is common for the yonger sort
To lacke diseretion. Come, goe we to the King, (move
This must be know ne, which being kept close might
More griefto hide, than hate to utter love. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter King, Queene, Rosincrosse, and Guilden-stare Cumalijs.

King. Welcome deare Rosincros and Guildenstare.
Moreover, that we much did long to see you,
The need we have to use you, did provoke
Our hasty sending. Something have you heard
Of Hamlets transformation: to I call it,
Since not th' exterior, nor the inward man
Resembles that it was. What it should be More than his fathers death, that thus hath put him
So much from th' understanding of himselfe,
I cannot deeme of. I intreat you both,
That being off so yong dayes brought up with him:
And since so Neighbour'd to his youth, and humour,
That you vouchsafe your rest here in our Court
Some little time: so by your Companies
To draw him on to pleasures, and to gather
So much as from Occasions you may gleane,
That open'd lies within our remedy,

Qu. Good Gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of you,
And sure I am, two men there are not living,
To whom he more adheres. If it will please you
To shew us so much gentry and good will,
As to expend your time with us a while,
For the supply and profit of our hope,
Your Visitation shall receive such thanks,
As fits a Kings remembrance.

Rosin. Both your Maiesties
Might by the Sovereigne power you have of us,
Put your dread pleasures, more into command
Than to Entreaty.

Guil. We both obey,
And here give up our selves, in the full bent,
To lay our Services freely at your feet,
To be commanded.

Kin. Thanks Rosincros, and gentle Guildenstare.

Qu. Thanks Guildenstare and gentle Rosincros,
And I beseech you instantly to visit
My too-much changed sonne.

Goe some of ye,
And bring the Gentlemen where Hamlet is.

Guil. Heavens make our presence and our practises,
Pleasant and helpfull to him. Exeunt.

Queen. Amen.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. The Ambassadors from Norway, my good Lord,
Are joyfully return'd.

King. Thou still hast bin the father of good Newes.

Pol. Have I, my Lord? Assure you, my good Liege,
I hold my duty, as I hold my Soule,
Both to my God, one to my gracious King:
And I doe thinke, or else this braine of mine
Hunts not the traile of Policy, so sure
As I have us'd to doe, that I have found
The very cause of Hamlets Lunacy.

Kin. Oh speake of that, that I doe long to heare.

Pol. Give first admittance to th' Ambassadors,
My Newes shall be the Newes to that great Feast.

King. Thy selfe doe grace to them, and bring them in.
He tels me my sweet Queene, that he hath found
The head and fource of all your sonnes distemper.

Qu. I doubt it is no other, but the maine,
His fathers death, and our ore-hasty Marriage.

Enter Polonius, Voltimand, and Cornelius.

King. Well, we shal sitt him. Welcome good Friends:
Say Voltimand, what from our Brother Norway?

Volt. Most faire returne of Greetings, and Desires.
Vpon our first, he sent out to suppress
His Nephewes Levies, which to him appeal'd
To be a preparation 'gainst the Polak:
But better look'd into, he truly found
It was against your Highnesse, whereat grieved,
That so his Sicknesse, Age, and Impotence
Was fallfely borne in hand, sends out Arrests
On Fortinbras, which he (in briefe) obeyes,
Receives rebuke from Norway: and in fine,
Makes Vow before his Vncle, never more
To give th' assay of Armes against your Majesty.
Whereon old Norway, overcome with joy,
Gives him three thousand Crownes in Annuall Fee,
And his Commission to imploy those Souldiers
So levied as before, against the Polak:
With an intreaty herein further shewne,
That it might please you to give quiet passe
Through your Dominions for his enterprize,
On such regards of safety and allowance,
As therein are set downe.

King. It likes us well:

And at our more consider'd time wee'l read,
Answer, and thinke upon this Businesse.
Meane time we thanke you, for your well-look't labour.
Goe to your rest, at night wee'l Feast together.
Most welcome home. Exit Ambas.

Pol. This businesse is very well ended.
My Liege and Madrm, to expostulate
What Majestie should be, what Duty is,
Why day is day; night, night; and time is time,
Were nothing but to waste Night, Day, and Time.
Therefore, since Brevitie is the Soule of Wit,
And tediousnesse, the limbes and outward flourishes,
I will be briefe. Your Noble Sonne is mad:
Mad call I it; for to define true Madnesse,
What is't, but to be nothing else but mad.
But let that goe.

Qu. More matter, with lesse Art.

Pol. Madam, I sweare I use no Art at all:
That he is mad 'tis true: 'Tis true, 'tis pittie,
And pittie it is true: A foolish figure,
But farewell it: for I will use no Art.

Mad

and all potent him in imperandighus, voy abut qui have present against Prefat centm Neph. vid etiam
Lubmich 2. Cap 7

Mad let us grant him then : and now remains
That we find out the the cause of this effect,
Or rather say, the cause of this defect ;
For this effect defective, comes by cause,
Thus it remaines, and the remainder thus. Perpend.
I have a daughter : have, whilst she is mine.
Who in her Duty and Obedience, marke,
Hath given me this : now gather, and surmise.

The Letter.

To the Celestiall, and my Soules Idoll, the most beautified Ophelia.

Thats an ill Phrase, a vilde Phrase, beautified is a vilde Phrase : but you shall heare these in her excellent white bosome, these.

Quee. Came this from Hamlet to her.

Pol. Good Madam stay awhile, I will be faithfull.

Doubt thou, the Starres are fire,

Doubt, that the Sunne doth move :

Doubt Truth to be a Lier,

But never Doubt, I love.

O deere Ophelia, I am ill at these Number : I have not Art to reckon my grones ; but that I love thee best, oh most Best believe it.

Adieu.

Thine evermore most deere Lady, whilst this Machine is to him, Hamlet.

This in Obedience hath my daughter shew'd me :
And more above hath his soliciting,
As they fell out by Time, by meanes, and place,
All given to mine care,

King. But how hath she receiv'd his Love ?

Pol. What doe you thinke of me ?

King. As of a man, faithfull and honorable.

Pol. I would faine prove so. But what might you think ?

When I had seene this hot love on the wing,
As I perceived it, I must tell you that Before my daughter told me, what might you
Or my deere Majesty you Queene heere, thinke,
If I had playd the Deske or Table-booke,
Or given my heart a winking, mute and dumbe, }
Or look'd upon this Love, with idle sight,
What might you thinke ? No, I went round to worke,
And my yong Mistris thus I did bespeake ;
Lord Hamlet is a Prince out of thy Sphere,
This must not be : and then, I precepts gave her,
That she should locke her selfe from his Resort,
Admit no Messengers, receive no Tokens :
Which done, she tooke the fruites of my Advice,
And he repulst, a short Tale to make,
Fell into a Sadnesse, then into a Fast,
Thence to a Watch, thence into a Weakenesse,
Thence to a Lightnesse, and by this declension
Into the Madnesse whereon now he raves,
And all we waile for.

King. Doe you thinke tis this ?

Quee. It may be very likely.

Pol. Hath there bene such a time, I de faine know what,
That I have positively said, tis so,
When it prov'd otherwise ?

King. Not that I know.

Pol. Take this from this, if this be otherwise,
If Circumstances leade me, I will find
Where truth is hid, though it were hid indeed
Within the Center.

King. How may we try it further ?

Pol. You know sometimes
He walkes foure houres together, heere

In the Lobby.

Quee. So he has indeed.

Pol. At such a time Ile loose my Daughter to him,
Be you and I behinde an Arrs then,
Marke the encounter : If he love her not,
And be not from his reason false thereon ;
Let me be no Assistant for a State,
And keepe a Farme and Carters,
King. We will try it.

Enter Hamlet reading on a Booke.

Quee. But looke where sadly the poore wretch
Comes reading.

Pol. Away I doe beseech you, both away,
Ile boord him presently. Exit King and Queene.
Oh give me leave. How does my good Lord Hamlet.

Ham. Well, god-a-mercy.

Pol. Doe you know me, my Lord ?

Ham. Excellent, excellent well : y'are a Fishmonger.

Pol. Not I my Lord.

Ham. Then I would you were so honest a man.

Pol. Honest, my Lord ?

Ham. I sir, to be honest as this world goes, is to be one man pick'd out of two thousand.

Pol. Thats very true, my Lord.

Ham. For if the Sun breed Magots in a dead dogge, being a good kissing Carrion —
Have you a daughter ?

Pol. I have my Lord.

Ham. Let her not walke i'th Sunne : Conception is a blessing, but not as your daughter may conceive. Friend looke too't.

Pol. How say you by that ? Still harping on my daughter :
yet he knew me not at first ; he said I was a Fishmonger :
he is farre gone, farre gone : and truly in my youth,
I suffered much extremitie for love : very neere this. Ile speake to him againe. What doe you read my Lord ?

Ham. Words, words, words.

Pol. What is the matter, my Lord ?

Ham. Betweene whom ?

Pol. I meane the matter you meane, my Lord.

Ham. Slanders sir : for the Satyricall slave sayes here, that old men have gray Beards ; that their faces are wrinkled ; their eyes purging thicke Amber, or Plum-Tree Gumme : and that they have a plentifull locke of Wit, together with weake hammes. All which Sir, though I most powerfully, and potently believe, yet I hold it not Honesty to have it thus set downe : For you your selfe Sir, should be old as I am, if like a Crab you could goe backward.

Pol. Though this be madnesse.
Yet there is Method in't : will you walke
Out of the ayre my Lord ?

Ham. Into my Grave ?

Pol. Indeed that is out oth' Ayre :
How pregnant (sometimes) his Replies are ?
A happinesse,
That often Madnesse hits on,
Which Reason and Sanity could not
So prosperously be deliver'd of.
I will leave him,

And sodainely contrive the meanes of meeting
Betweene him, and my daughter.
My honorable Lord, I will most humbly
Take my leave of you.

Ham. You cannot Sir take from me any thing, that I will more willingly part withall, except my life, my life.

Polon. Fare you well my Lord.

Ham. These tedious old fooles.

Polon. You goe to seeke my Lord Hamlet; there he is.

Enter Rosincros and Guildenstar.

Rosin. God save you Sir.

Guild. Mine honour'd Lord?

Rosin. My most deare Lord?

Ham. My excellent good friends? How do'st thou Guildenstar? Oh, Rosincros, good Lads: How doe yee both?

Rosin. As the indifferent Children of the earth.

Guild. Happy, in that we are not over-happy: on Fortunes Cap, we are not the very Button.

Ham. Nor the Soales of her Shooe?

Rosin. Neither my Lord.

Ham. Then you live about her waste, or in the middle of her favour?

Guild. Faith, her privates, we.

Ham. In the secret parts of Fortune? Oh, most true: she is a Strumpet. Whats the newes.

Rosin. None my Lord; but that the Worlds growne honest.

Ham. Then is Doomesday neere: But your newes is not true. Let me question more in particular: what have you my good friends, deserved at the hands of fortune, that she sends you to Prison hither?

Guild. Prison, my Lord?

Ham. Denmark's a Prison.

Rosin. Then is the World one.

Ham. A goodly one, in which there are many Confines, Wards, and Dungeons; Denmarke being one o'th' worst.

Rosin. We thinke not so my Lord.

Ham. Why then tis noneto you; for there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so: to me it is a prison.

Rosin. Why then your Ambition makes it one: tis too narrow for your minde.

Ham. O God, I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count my selfe a King of infinite space; were it not that I have bad dreames.

Guild. Which dreames indeed are Ambition: for the very substance of the Ambitious, is meerely the shadow of a Dreame.

Ham. A dreame it selfe is but a shadow,

Rosin. Truly, and I hold Ambition of so ayry and light a quality, that it is but a shadowes shadow.

Ham. Then are our Beggers bodies; and our Monarchs and out-stretch Heroes the Beggers Shadowes: shall we to th' Court: for, by my fey I cannot reason?

Both. We'll wait upon you.

Ham. No such matter. I will not fort you with the rest of my servants: for to speake to you like an honest man: I am most dreadfully attended; but in the beaten way of friendship. What make you at Elfinoor?

Rosin. To visit you my Lord, no other occasion.

Ham. Begger that I am, I am even poore in thanks; but I thanke you: and sure deare friends my thanks are too deare a halfe peny; were you not sent for? Is it your owne inclining? Is it a free visitation? Come, deale justly with me: come, come; nay speake.

Guild. What should we say my Lord?

Ham. Why any thing. But to the purpose; you were sent for; and there is a kind confession in your lookes; which your modesties have not craft enough to colour, I know the good King and Queene have sent for you.

Rosin. To what end my Lord?

Ham. That you must teach me: but let me conjure you by the rights of our fellowship, by the consonancy of our youth, by the Obligation of our ever-preserved love, and by what more deare, a better proposer could charge you withall; be even and direct with me, whether you were sent for or no.

Rosin. What say you?

Ham. Nay then I have an eye of you: if you love me hold not off.

Guild. My Lord, we were sent for.

Ham. I will tell you why; so shall my anticipation prevent your discovery of your secrecy to the King and Queene: moult no feather, I have of late, but wherefore I know not, lost all my mirth, forgone all custome of exercise; and indeed, it goes so heavenly with my disposition; that this goodly frame the earth, seemes to me a sterill Promontory; this most excellent Canopy the Ayre looke you, this brave ore-hanging, this Majesticall Roofe, fretted with golden fire: why, it appeared no other thing to me, then a foule and peltient congregation of vapours. What a piece of worke is a man! How Noble in Reason? how infinite in faculty? in forme and moving how expresse and admirable? in Action, how like an Angell? in apprehension, how like a god? the beauty of the world, the Parragon of Anamals; and yet to me, what is this Quintessence of Dust? Man delights not mee; no, nor Woman neither; though by your smiling you see me to say so.

Rosin. My Lord, there was no such stufte in my thoughts.

Ham. Why did you laugh, when I said, Man delights not me?

Rosin. To thinke, my Lord, if you delight not in Man, what Lenton entertainment the Players shall receive from you: we coated them on the way, and hither are they comming to offer you Service.

Ham. He that playes the King shall be welcome; his Majesty shall have Tribute of me: the adventurous Knight shall use his Foyle and Target: The Lover shall not sigh gratia, the humorous man shall end his part in peace: the Clowne shall make those laugh whose lungs are tickled at' sere: and the Lady shall say her mind freely; or the blanke Verse shall halt for't: what Players are they?

Rosin. Even those you were wont to take delight in the Tragedias of the City.

Ham. How chanches it they travaile? their residence both in reputation and profit was better both wayes.

Rosin. I thinke their Inhibition comes by the meanes of the late innovation?

Ham. Doe they hold the same estimation they did when I was in the City? Are they so follow'd?

Rosin. No indeed, they are not.

Ham. How comes it? doe they grow rusty?

Rosin. Nay, their indeavour keepes in the wonted pace; But there is Sir an ayry of Children, little Yafes, that cry out on the top of question; and are most tyrannically elapt fort: these are now the fashion, fashion, and so be rattle the common Stages (so they call them) that many wearing Rapiers, are affraid of Goose-quils, and dare scarce come thither.

Ham. What are they Children? Who maintaines em? How are they escorted? Will they pursue the Quality no longer then they can sing? Will they not say afterwards if they should grow themselves to common Players (as it is like most if their meanes are not better) their Writers doe them wrong, to make them exclaim against their owne Succession.

Rosin. Faith there has been much to doe on both sides: and the Nation holds it no sinne, to tarre them to Controversie. There was for a while, no money bid for argument, unlesse the Poet and the Player went to Cusses in the Question.

Ham. Ist possible?

Guild. Oh there has beene much throwing about of braines.

Ham. Doe the Boyes carry it away?

Rosin. I that they do my Lord, Hercules & his load too

Ham. It is not strange for mine Vnckle is King of Denmarke, and those that would make mowes at him while my father lived; give twenty, forty, an hundred Ducates a peece, for his picture in Little. There is something in this more then Naturall, if Philosophy could find it out.

Flourish for the Players.

Guild. There are the Players.

Ham. Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elsinore: your hands, come: The appurtenance of Welcome, is Fashion and Ceremony. Let me comply with you in the Garbe, lest my extent to the Players (which I tell you must shew fairely outward) should more appeare like entertainment then yours. You are welcome: but my Vnckle Father, and Aunt Mother are deceiv'd.

Guild. In what my deere Lord?

Ham. I am but mad North, North. West: when the Winde is Southerly, I know a Hawke from a Handsaw.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. Well be with you Gentlemen.

Ham. Hearke you Guildenstar, and you too: at each eare a hearer: that great Baby you see there, is not yet out of his swathing clouts.

Rosin. Happily hes the second time come to them: for they say, an old man is twice a child.

Ham. I will Prophesie, He comes to tell me of the Players. Marke it, you say right Sir: for a Monday morning twas so indeed.

Pol. My Lord, I have Newes to tell you.

Ham. My Lord, I have Newes to tell you, When Roscius an Actor in Rome——

Pol. The Actors are come hither my Lord.

Ham. Buzze, buzze.

Pol. Vpon mine honor.

Ham. Then can each Actor on his Ass——

Pol. The best Actors in the world, either for Tragedy, Comedy, history, Pastorall: Pastorall-Comically-Historical-Pastorall: Tragically-Historical; Tragically-Comically-Historical-Pastorall: Scene indivible, or Poem unlimited. Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus too light, for the law of Writ, and the Liberty. These are the onely men.

Ham. O Iephtha Iudge of Israel, what a Treasure hadst thou?

Pol. What a Treasure had he, my Lord?

Ham. Why one faire Daughter, and no more.

The which he loved passing well.

Pol. Still on my daughter.

Ham. Am I not ith' right old Iephtha?

Pol. If you call me Iephtha my Lord, I have a daughter that I love passing well.

Ham. Nay that followes not.

Pol. What followes then, my Lord?

Ham. Why, as by lot, God wot? and then you know, It came to passe, as most like it was: the first rowe of the Pans Chanson will shew you more. For looke where my Abridgements come.

Enter foure or five Players.

Y'are welcome Masters, welcome all. I am glad to see thee well; Welcome good friends. O my old friend? Thy face is valiant since I saw thee last: Comst thou to beard me in Denmarke? What, my yong Lady and Mistress? Berlady your Ladiship is neerer heaven, then when I saw you last, by the altitude of a Choppine: Pray God your voyce like a peece of uncurrant gold be not crak'd within the ring. Masters, you are all welcome: we'll e'ne to't like French Faulconers, flye at any thing we see: we'll have a speech straight. Come give us a taste of your quality: come, a passionate speech.

I Play. What speech, my Lord?

Ham. I heard thee speake me a speech once, but it was never Acted: or if it was, not above once, for the Play I remember pleas'd not the Million, twas Cautary to the Generall: but it was (as I received it, and others, whose judgement in such matters, cryed in the top of mine) an excellent Play; well digested in the Scenes, set downe with as much modesty, as cunning. I remember one said, there was no Sallets in the lines, to make the matter savoury; nor no matter in the phrase, that might indite the Author of affectation, but ca'd it an honest method. One chiefe speech in it, I chiefly lov'd, twas Aeneas Tale to Dido, and thereabout of it especially, where he speakes of Priams slaughter. If it live in your memory, begin at this Line, let me see, let me see: The rugged Pyrrhus like th' Hyrcanian Beast. It is not so: it begins with Pyrrhus The rugged Pyrrhus, he whose Sable Armes Blacke as he purpose, did the night resemble When his lay couched in the Ominous Horse, Hath now this dread and blacke Complexion smear'd With Heraldry more dismall: head to foote Now is he to take Geulles, horridly Trick'd With blood of Fathers, Mothers, Daughters, Sonnes, Bak'd and impasted with the parching streets, That lend a tyrannous, and damned light To their vilde Murthers, roasted in wrath and fire, And thus o're-sized with coagulate gore, With eyes like Carbuncles, the hellish Pyrrhus Old Grandfire Priam seekes.

Pol. Fore God, my Lord, well spoken, with good accent, and good discretion.

I Play. Anon he findes him, Striking too short at Greekes. His anticke Sword, Rebellious to his Arme, lyes where it falles Repugnant to command: unequal match, Pyrrhus at Priam drives, in Rage strikes wide: But with the whiffe and wind of his fell Sword, Th'unnerved father fals. Then senselesse Illium, Seeming to feele his blow, with flaming top Stoopest to his Bace, and with a hideous crash Takes Prisoner Pyrrhus care. For loe, his Sword Which was declining on the Milky head Of Reverend Priam, seem'd ith' Ayre to sticke:

So as a painted Tirant Pyrrhus stood,
And lik'd a Newtrall to his will and matter, did nothing.
But as we often see against some storme,
A silence in the heavens, the Racke stand still,
The bold windes speechlesse, and the Orbe below
As hush as death: Anon the dreadfull Thunder
Doth rend the Region. So after Pyrrhus pause,
A rowed Vengeance sets him new a worke,
And never did the Cyclops hammers fall
On Mars his Armour, forg'd for prooffe Eterne,
With lesse remorse then Pyrrhus bleeding sword
Now fall on Priam.

Out, out, thou Strumpet-Fortune, all you gods,
In generall Synod take away her power:
Breake all the Spokes and Fallies from her wheele,
And boule the round Nave downe the hill of heaven,
As low as to the fiends.

Pol. This is too long:

Ham. It shall to'th Barbar, with your beard. Pre-thee say on: Hes for a ligge, or a tale of Baudry, or he sleepes. Say on: come to Hecuba.

1 Play. But who, O who, had seen the Mobled Queene.

Ham. The Mobled Queene?

Pol. Thats good: Mobled Queene is good.

1 Play. Run bare-foot up and downe,

Threatning the flame

With Biffon Rheume: A clout about that head,
Where late the Diadem stood, and for a Robe
About her lanke and all ore-teamed Loynes,
A blanket in th' Alarum of feare caught up.
Who this had seene, with tongue in Venome steep'd,
Gainst fortunes State, would Treason have pronounc'd?
But if the gods themselves did see her then,
When she saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport
In mincing with his Sword her husbands limbes,
The instant Burst of Clamour that she made (Vnlesse things mortall move them not at all)
Would have made milche the Burning eyes of heaven,
And passion in the Gods.

Pol. Looke where he has not tarn'd his colour, and has teares in eyes. Pray you no more.

Ham. Tis well, Ile have thee speake out the rest, soone.
Good my Lord, will you see the Players well bestow'd.
Doe ye heare, let them be well us'd: for they are the Abstracts and brieft Chronicles of the time. After your death, you were better have a bad Epitaph, then their ill report while you lived.

Pol. My Lord, I will use them according to their de-sart.

Ham. Godsbodykins man, better. Vse every man after his desert, and who should scape whipping: use them after your owne Honor and dignity. The lesse they deserve, the more merit is in your bounty. Take them in.

Pol. Come sirs.

Exit Polonius.

Ham. Follow him friends: we'll heare a play to morrow. Dost thou heare me old friend, can you play the murder of Gonzago?

Play. I my Lord.

Ham. We'll ha't to morrow night. You could for a need study a speech of some dosen or sixteen lines, which I would set downe, and insert int? Could ye not?

Play. I my Lord.

Ham. Very well. Follow that Lord, and looke you mocke him not. My good friends, Ile leave you till night you are welcome to Elfenower?

Refin. Good my Lord.

Manet Hamlet.

Exeunt.

Ham. I so, god buy'ye: Now I am alone.
Oh what a Rogue and Pefant slave am I?
Is it not monstrous that this Player heere,
But in a Fiction, in a dreame of Passion,
Could force his soule so to his whole conceit,
That from her working, all his visage warm'd;
Teares in his eyes, distraction ins Aspect,
A broken voyce, and his whole function suiting
With formes, to his conceit? And all for nothing?
For Hecuba?

Whats Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
That he should weepe for her? What would he doe,
Had he the Motive and the Cue for passion
That I have? He would drowne the Stage with teares,
And cleave the generall eare with horrid speech:
Make mad the guilty, and apale the free.
Confound the ignorant, and amaze indeed,
The very faculty of eyes and Eares. Yet I,
A dull and muddy-metled Rascal, peake
Like Iohn a-deames, unpregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing: No, not for a King,
Vpon whose property, and most deere life,
A damn'd defecate was made. Am I a Coward?
Who calles me Villaine? breakes my pate a-crosse?
Pluckes off my Beard, and blowes it in my face?
Tweakes me byth' Nose? gives me the Lye ith' Throate,
As deepe as to the Lungs? Who does me this?
Ha? Why I should take it: for it cannot be,
But I am Pigeon-Liver'd, and lacke Gall
To make Oppression bitter, or ere this,
I should have fatted all the Region Kites
With this Slaves Offall, bloody: a Bawdy villaine, Remorselesse, Treacherous, Letcherous, kindlesse villaine!
Oh Vengeance!

Who? What an Ass am I? I sure, this is most brave,
That I, the Sonne of the Deere murther'd,
Prompted to my Revenge by heaven, and hell,
Must (like a Whore) unpacke my heart with words,
And fall a Cursing like a very Drab,
A Scullion? Fye upon't. Foh. About my Braine.
I have heard, that guilty Creatures sitting at a Play,
Have by the very cunning of the Scene,
Beene strooke so to the soule, that presently
They have proclaim'd their Malefactions.
For Murther, though it have no tongue, will speake
With most myraculous Organ. Ile have these Players,
Play something like the murder of my father,
Before mine Vnkle. Ile observe his looks
Ile rent him to the quicke: if he but blench
I know my course. The Spirit that I have seene
May be the divell, and the divell hath power
T'assume a pleasing shape, yea and perhaps
Out of my Weaknesse, and my Melancholly,
As he is very potent with such Spirits,
A buses me to damne me. Ile have grounds
More Relative then this: The Plays the thing,
Wherein Ile catch the Conscience of the King.

Exit.

Enter King, Queene, Polonius, Ophelia, Rosincros, Guildenstar, and Lords.

King. And can you by no drift of circumstance
Get from him why he puts on this Confusion
Grating so harshly all his dayes of quiet

With

With turbulent and dangerous Lunacy.

Rosin. He does confesse he feels himselfe distracted,
But from what cause he will by no meanes speake.

Guild. Nor doe we find him forward to be founded,
But with a crafty Madnesse keepes aloofe :
When we would bring him on to some Confession
Of his true state,

Quee. Did he receive you well ?

Rosin. Most like a Gentleman.

Guild. But with much forcing of his disposition.

Rosin. Niggard of question, but of our demands
Most free in his reply.

Quee. Did you assay him to any pastime ?

Rosin. Madam, it so fell out, that certaine Players
We ore-wrought on the way : of these we told him,
And there did seeme in him a kind of joy
To heare of it : They are about the Court,
And (as I thinke) they have already order
This night to play before him.

Pol. Tis most true :

And he beseech'd me to intreate your Majesties
To heare, and see the matter.

King. With all my heart, and it doth much content me
To heare him so inclin'd. Good Gentlemen,
Give him a further edge, and drive his purpote on
To these delights.

Rosin. We shall my Lord.

Exeunt.

King. Sweet Gertrude leave us too,
For we have closely sent for Hamlet hither,
That he, as twere by accident, may there
Affront Ophelia. Her father, and my selfe (lawfull espials)
Will so bestow our selves, that seeing unscene
We may of their encounter frankly judge,
And gather by him, as he is behaved,
If it be th' affliction of his love, or no.
That thus he suffers for.

Quee. I shall obey you,

And for your part Ophelia. I doe wish
That your good beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlets wildnesse : so shall I hope your Vertues
Will bring him to his wonted way againe,
To both your honours.

Oph. Madam, I wish it may.

Pol. Ophelia, walke you heere. Gracious so please ye
We will bestow our selves : Reade on this booke,
That shew of such an exercise may colour
Your loneliness. We are oft too blame in this Tis too much prov'd, that with Devotions visage,
And pious Action, we doe surge ore
The divell himselfe.

King. Oh tis true :

How smart a lash that speech doth give my Conscience ?
The Harlots Cheeke beautied with plastring Art
Is not more ugly to the thing that helps it,
Then is my deede, to my most painted word,
Oh heavy burthen !

Pol. I heare him comming, lets withdraw my Lord.

Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. To be, or not to be, that is the Question :
Whether tis Nobler in the mind to suffer
The Slings and Arrowes of outrageous Fortune,
Or to take Armes against a Sea of troubles,
And by opposing end them : to dye, to sleepe
No more : and by a sleepe, to say we end
The heart-ake, and the thousand naturall shockes

That flesh is heire to ? Tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wish'd. To dye to sleepe,
To sleepe, perchance to Dreame ; I there's the rub,
For in that sleepe of death, what dreames may come,
When he have shuffle'd off this mortall coile,
Must give us pause. Theres the respect
That makes Calamity of so long life :
For who would beare the Whips and Scornes of time,
The Oppressors wrong, the poore mans Contumely,
The pangs of dispriz'd Love, the Lawes delay,
The insolence of Office, and the Spurnes
That patient merit of the unworthy takes,
When he himselfe might his Quierus make
With a bare Bodkin ? Who would these Fardles beare
To grunt and sweat under a weary life,
But that the dread of something after death,
The undiscovered Country, from whose Borne
No Traveller returnes, Puzels the will,
And makes us rather beare those illes we have,
Then flye to others that we know not of.
Thus Conscience does make Cowards of us all,
And thus the Native hew of Resolution
Is sicklied ore, with the pale cast of thought,
And enterprizes of great pith and moment,
With this regard their Currants turne away,
And loose the name of Action. Soft you now,
The faire Ophelia Nimph, in thy Horizons
Be all my sinnes remembred.

Ope. Good my Lord,

How does your honor for this many a day ?

Ham. I humbly thanke you : well, well, well.

Oph. My Lord, I have Remembrances of yours,
That I have longed long to redeliver.
I pray you now, receive them.

Ham. No, no, I never gave you ought.

Oph. My honor'd Lord, I know right well you did,
And with them words of so sweet breath compos'd,
As made the things more rich, then perfume left :
Take these againe, for to the Noble mind
Rich gifts wax poore, when givers prove unkind.
There my Lord.

Ham. Ha, ha : Are you honest ?

Oph. My Lord.

Ham. Are you faire ?

Oph. What meanes you Lordship ?

Ham. That if you be honest and faire, your Honesty
Should admit no discourse to your Beauty.

Oph. Could beauty my Lord, have better Commerce then your honesty ?

Ham. I truely : for the power of beauty, will sooner transforme honesty from what it is, to a Bawd, then the force of honesty can translate Beauty into his likeness,
This was sometime a Paradox, but now the time gives it proofe. I did love you once.

Oph. Indeed my Lord, you made me beleve so.

Ham. You should not have beleev'd me. For vertue cannot so inoculate our old stocke, but we shall relish of it. I loved you not.

Oph. I was the more deceived.

Ham. Get thee to a Nunnery. Why wouldst thou be a breeder of Sinners ? I am my selfe indifferent honest, but yet I could accuse me of such things, that it were better my Mother had not borne me. I am very prowd, revengefull. Ambitious, with more offences at my becke, then I have thoughts to put them in imagination, to give them shape, or time to acte them in. What should such

Fellowes

The Ancients use numbers, numbers, maria, this is a to denote the number, quantity of any thing, &c.

Fellowes as I doe crawling betweene heaven and Earth. We are arrant Knaves all, beleve none of us. Goe thy wayes to a Nunnery. Wheres your father?

Ophe. At home, my Lord.

Ham. Let the doores be shut upon him, that he may play the Foole no way, but ins owne house. Farewell.

Ophe. O helpe him, you sweet heavens.

Ham. If thou doest Marry, Ile give thee this Plague for thy Dowry. Be thou as chaste as Ice, as pure as Snow, thou shalt not escape Calumny. Get thee to a Nunnery. Goe, farewell. Or if thou wilt needs marry, marry a foole: for Wife men know well enough, what monsters you make of them. To a Nunnery goe, and quickly too. Farewell.

Ophe. O heavenly Powers restore him.

Ham. I have heard of your prating too well enough- God has given you one pace, and you make your selfe another: you gidge, you amble, and you lisper, and nickname Gods creatures, and make your Wantonnesse, your ignorance. Goe, ile no more on't, it hath made me mad. I say, we will have no more Marriages. Those that are married already, all but one shall, the rest shall keepe as they are, To a Nunnery, goe. Exit Hamlet.

Ophe. O what a Noble minde is heere ore-throwne? The Courtiers, Soldiers, Schollers? Eye, tongue, sword, Th'expectansie and Rose of the faire State, The glasse of fashion, and the mould of forme, Th'observ'd of all Observers, quite, quite downe. Have I of Ladies most deject and wretched, That suck'd the Hony of his Musicke Vowes: Now see that Noble, and most Sovereigne Reason, Like sweet bells iangled out of tune, and harsh, That unmatch'd fortune and feature of blowne youth, Blasted with extasie. Oh woe is me, T'have seene what I have seene: see what I see.

Enter King, and Polonius.

King. Love? his affections doe not that way tend, Nor what he spake, though it lack'd forme a little, Was not like Madnesse. Theres something in his soule, Ore which his Melancholly sits on brood, And I doe doubt the harch, and the disclose Will be some danger, which to prevent I have in quicke determination Thus set it downe. He shall with speed to England For the demand of our neglected Tribute: Haply the Seas and Countries different With variable Objects, shall expell This something fetled matter in his heart: Whereon his braines still beating, puts him thus From fashion of himselfe. What thinke you on't?

Pol. It shall doe well. But yet doe I beleve The Origin and Commencement of this griefe Sprung from neglected love. How now Ophe? You neede not tell us, what Lord Hamlet said, We heard it all. My Lord, doe as you please, But if you hold it fit after the Play, Let his Queene Mother all alone intreat him To shew his Griefes: let her be round with him, And he be plac'd so, please you in the eare Of all their conference. If she find him not, To England send him: Or confine him where Your wisdome best shall thinke.

King. It shall be so:

Madnesse in great Ones, must not unwatch'd goe.

Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet, and two or three of the Players.

Ham. Speake the Speech I pray you, as I pronounce it to you trippingly on the Tongue. But if you mouth it, as many of your Players doe, I had as live the Towne-Cryer had spokemy Lines; Nor doe not saw the Ayre too much your hand thus, but use all gently; for in the very Torrent, Tempest, and (as I may say) the Whirle-winde of passion, you must acquire and beget a Temperance that may give it Smoothnesse. O it offends me to the Soule, to see a robustious Pery-wig-parted fellow, teare a Passion to tatters, to very ragges, to split the eares of the Groundlings: who (for the most part) are capeable of nothing, but inexplicable dumbe shewes, and noise: I could have such a fellow whipt for ore-doing Termagant: it out-Herods Herod. Pray you avoyd it.

Player. I warrant your honor.

Ham. Be not too tame neither: but let your owne Discretion be your Tutor. Sure the Action to the word, the word to the Action, with this speciall observance: That you ore-stop not the modesty of Nature; for any thing so over-done, is from the purpose of Playing, whole end both at the first and now, was and is, to hold as twere the Mirrour up to Nature; to shew Vertue her owne Feature, Scorne her owne Image, and the very Age and Body of the Time, his forme and pressure. Now, this over-done, or come tardy off, though it make the unskillfull laugh, cannot but make the judicious greive; The censure of the which one, must in your allowance ore-sway a whole Theater of others. Oh, there be Players that I have seene Play, and heard others praise, and that highly (not to speake it prophanely) that neither having the accent of Christians, nor the gate of Christian, Pagan, or Norman, have so strutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of Natures Iouerney-men had made men, and not made them well, they imitated Humanity so abominably.

Play. I hope we have reform'd that indifferently with us, Sir.

Ham. O reforme it altogether. And let those that play your Clownes, speake no more then is set down for them. For there be of them, that will themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren Spectators to laugh too, though in the meane time, some necessary question of the Play be then to be considered: thats Villanous, and shewes a most pittifull Ambition in the Foole that uses it. Goe make you ready. Exeunt Players.

Enter Polonius, Rosincros, and Guildenstare.

How now my Lord,

Will the King heare this peece of worke?

Pol. And the Queene too, and that presently.

Ham. Bid the Players make hast. Exit Polonius.

Will you two helpe to hasten them?

Both. We will my Lord. Exeunt.

Enter Horatio.

Ham. What hoa, Horatio?

Hora. Heere sweet Lord, at your service.

Ham. Horatio, thou art eene as just a man As ere my Convseration coap'd withall.

Hora. O my deere Lord,

Ham. Nay, doe not thinke I flatter: For what advancement may I hope from thee, That no Revennew hast, but thy good spirits

To

To feed and cloath thee. Why should the poore be flat-
No, let the Candied tongue, like absurd pompe, (terd
And crooke the pregnant Hindges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow faining? Dost thou heare,
Since my deere Soule was Mistris of my choysse,
And could of men distinguish, her election
Hath seal'd thee for her selfe. For thou hast beene
As one in suffering all, that suffers nothing.
A man that Fortunes buffets, and Rewards
Hath tane with equall thanks. And blest are those,
Whose blood and Iudgement are so well co-mingled,
That they are not a Pipe for fortunes finger.
To sound what stop she please. Give me that man,
That is not Passions Slave, and I will weare him
In my hearts Core: I, in my heart of heart,
As I doe thee. Something too much of this.

There is a Play to night before the King,
One Scene of it comes neere the Circumstance:
Which I have told thee, of my Fathers death.
I prethee, when thou seest that Act a-foot,
Even with the Comment of my foule
Observe mine Vnkle: if his occulted guilt,
Doe not it selfeunkennell in one speech,
It is a damned Ghost that we have seene:
And my imaginations are as foule
As Vulcans Styth. Give him needfull note,
For I mine eyes will rivet to his face?
And after we will both our judgement joine,
To censure of his seeming.

Hora. Well my Lord.
If he steale ought the whilst this Play is playing,
And scape detecting, I will pay the Theft.

Enter King, Queene, Polonius, Ophelia, Rosincros: Guildestar, and other Lords attendant, with his Guard carrying Torches. Danish March. Sound a Flourish.

Ham. They are comming to the Play: I must be idle.
Get you a place.

King. How fares our Cofin Hamlet?

Ham. Excellent ifaith, of the Camelions dish: I eate the Ayre promise-cramm'd, you cannot feed Capons so.

King. I have nothing with this answer Hamlet, these words are not mine.

Ham. No, nor mine. Now my Lord, you plaid once ith' Vniversity, you say?

Polon. That I did my Lord, and was accounted a good Actor.

Ham. And what did you enact?

Polon. I did enact Iulius Caesar, I was kill'd ith' Capitoll:
Brutus kill'd me.

Ham. It was a brute part of him, to kill so Capitall a Calfe there. Be the Players ready?

Rosin. I my Lord, they stay upon your patience.

Quee. Come hither my good Hamlet, sit by me.

Ham. No good Mother, heres Mettle more attractive.

Polon. Oh ho, doe you marke that?

Ham. Lady, shall I lye in your Lap?

Oph. No my Lord.

Ham. I meane, my head upon your Lap?

Oph. I my Lord.

Ham. Doe you thinke I meant Country matters?

Oph. I thinke nothing, my Lord.

Ham. Thats a faire thought to lye between Maids legs

Oph. What is my Lord?

Ham. Nothing.

Oph. You are merry, my Lord?

Ham. Who I?

Oph. I my Lord.

Ham. Oh God, your onely Tigge-maker: what should a man doe, but be merry. For looke you how cheerefully my Mother lookes, and my father dyed within's two houres.

Oph. Nay, tis twice two moneths, my Lord.

Ham. So long? Nay then let the Divell weare blacke, for Ile haue a suite of Sables. Oh heavens! dye two mo-neths agoe, and not forgotten yet? Then theres hope, a great mans Memoty, may out-live his life halfe a yeare:
But berlady he must build Churches then: or else shall he suffer not thinking on, with the Hoby-horsse, whose Epitaph is, for o, for o, the Hoby-horse is forgot.

Hoboyes play, The dumbe shew enters.

*Enter a King and Queene, very lovingly; the Queene embracing him. She kneeles; and makes shew of Protestation unto him. He takes her up, and declines his head upon her necke.
Layes him downe upon a Banke of Flowers. She seeing him a-sleepe, leaves him. Anon comes in a fellow, takes off his Crowne, kisses it, and powres poyson in the Kings eares, and Exits. The Queene returnes, findes the King dead, and makes passionate Action. The Poysoner, with some two or three Mutes comes in againe, seeming to lament with her.
The dead body is carried away: The Poysoner Wores the Queene with Gifts, she seemes loath and unwilling a while, but in the end, accepts his love.* Exeunt.

Oph. What meanes this, my Lord?

Ham. Marty this is Miching Malicho, that meanes Milchiefe.

Oph. Be like this shew imports the Argument of the Play?

Ham. We shall know by these fellows: the Players cannot keepe counsell, they'll tell all.

Oph. Will they teile us what this shew meant?

Ham. I, or any shew that you'd shew him. Be not you asham'd to shew, he'll not shame to tell you what it meanes.

Oph. You are naught, you are naught, Ile make the Play.

Enter Prologue.

*For us, and for our Tragedy,
Heere stooping to your Clemency:
We begge your hearing Patiently.*

Ham. Is this a Prologue, or the Poefie of a Ring?

Oph. Tis brieffe my Lord.

Ham. As Womans love.

Enter King, and his Queene.

King. Full thirty times hath Phcebus Cart gon round,
Neptunes salt Wash, and Tellus Orbed ground:
And thirty dozen Moones with borrowed sheene,
About the World have time, twelve thirties beene,
Since love our hearts, and Hymen did our hands
Vnite comutually, in most sacred Bands.

Quee. So many journies may the Sunne and Moone
Make us againe count ore, ere love be done.
But woe is me, you are so ficke of late,
So farre from cheere, and from your former state,
That I distrust you: yet though I distrust,
Discomfort you (my Lord) it nothing must:
For womens Feare and Love, holds quantity,

In neither ought, or in extremity:

Now what my love is, proove hath made you know,
And as my Love is siz, my feare is so.

King. Faith I must leave thee Love, and shortly too:
My operant Powers my functions leave to doe
And thou shalt live in this faire world behind,
Honor'd, belov'd, and haply, one as kind.
For husband shalt thou—

Que. Oh confound the rest:
Such Love, must needs be Treason in my brest:
In second husband, let me be accurst,
None wed the second, but who killd the first.

Ham. Wormewood, Wormewood.

Quee. The instances that second Marriage move,
Are base respects of Trift, but none of Love.
A second time, I kill my husband dead,
When second husband kisses me in Bed.

King. I doe beleve you. Thinke what now you speake:
But what we doe determine, oft we breake;
Purpose is but the slave to Memory,
Of violent Birth, but poore validity:
Which now like fruite unripe sticke on the Tree,
But fall unshaken, when they mellow be.
Most necessary tis, that we forget
To pay our selves, what to our selves is debt:
What to our selves in passion we propose,
The passion ending, doth the purpose lose.
The violence of other Griefe or joy,
Their owne enactors with themselves destroy:
Where Ioy most Revels, Griefe doth most lament;
Griefe joyes, Ioy grieves on slender accident.
This world is not for aye, nor tis not strange
That even our Loves should with our Fortunes change.
For tis a question left us yet to prove,
Whether Love lead fortune, or else fortune Love.
The great man downe, you marke his favourite flies,
The poore aduanc'd makes friends of Enemies:
And hither to doth Love on fortune tend,
For who not needs, shall never lacke a friend?
And who in want a hollow friend doth try,
Directly seasons him his Enemy.
But orderly to end, where I begun,
Our Willes and Fates doe so contrary run,
That our Devices still are overthrowne,
Our thoughtes are ours, their ends none of our owne.
So thinke thou wilt no second husband wed.
But dyethy thoughts, when thy first Lord is dead.

Quee. Nor Earth to give me food, nor heaven light,
Sport and repose locke from me day and night:
Each opposite that blankes the face of joy,
Meet what I would have well, and it destroy:
Both heere, and hence, pursue me lasting strife,
If once a Widdow, ever I be Wife.

Ham. If she should breake it now.

King. Tis deeply sworne:
Sweet, leave me heare a while,
My spirits grow dull, and faine I would beguile
The tedious day with sleepe.

Quee. Sleepe rocke thy braine, Sleeper.
And never come mischance betweene us twaine. Exit.

Ham. Madam, how like you the Play?

Que. The Lady protests too much me thinks.

Ham. Oh but she'll keepe her word,

King. Have you heard the Argument, is there no Offence in't?

Ham. No, no, they doe but jest, poyson in jest, no Offence ith' world.

King. What doe you call the Play?

Ham. The Moufe-trap: Marry how? Tropically:
This Play is the image of a murder done in Vienna: Gon-zago is the Dukes name, his wife Baptista: you shall see anon: tis a knavish peece of worke: But what o'that?
Your Majesty, and we that have free soules, it touches us not: let the gall'd jade winch: our withers are unrunge.

Enter Lucianus.

This is one Lucianus nephew to the King.

Ophe. You are a good Chorus. my Lord.

Ham. I could interpret betweene you and your love:
if I could see the Puppets dallying.

Ophe. You are keene my Lord, you are keene.

Ham. It would cost you a groaning, to take off my edge.

Ophe. Still better and worfe.

Ham. So you mistake husbands.
Begin Murderer. Pox, leave thy damnable Faces, and begin. Come, the croaking Raven doth bellow for Revenge.

Lucian. Thoughts blacke, hands apt,
Drugges fit, and Time agreeing:
Confederate season, else no Creature seeing:
Thou mixture ranke, of Midnight-Weeds collected,
With Hecats Ban, thrice blasted, thrice infected,
Thy naturall Magicke, and dire property,
On wholsome life, usurpe immediately.

Powres the poyson in his eares.

Ham. He poysons him ith' Garden fors estate: His names Gonzago: the Story is extant and writ in choyce Italian. You shall see anon how the Murtherer gets the love of Gonzagos wife.

Ophe. The King rises.

Ham. What, frighted with false fire.

Quee. How fares my Lord?

Pol. Give o're the Play.

King. Giue me some Light. Away,

All. Lights, Lights, Lights. Exeunt.

Manet Hamlet and Horatio.

Ham. Why let the stricken Deere goe weepe,
The Heart ungalled play:
For some must watch, while some must sleepe?
So runnes the world away.

Would not this Sir, and a Forrest of Feathers, if the rest of my fortunes turne Turke with me; with two Provin-ciall Roses on my rac'd Shooes, get me a Fellowship in a cry of Players sir.

Hor. Halfe a share.

Ham. A whole one I,

For thou dost know: Oh Damon deere;
This Realme dismantled was of Iove himselfe,
And now reignes heere,
A very very Pajocke.

Hor. You might have Rim'd.

Ham. Oh good Horatio, Ile take the Ghosts word for a thousand pound. Didst perceive?

Hor. Very well my Lord.

Ham. Vpon the talke of the poysoning?

Hor. I did very well note him.

Enter Rosincros, and Guildenstar.

Ham. Oh, ha? come some Musick. Come the Recorders
For if the King like not the Comedy.
Why then belike he likes it not perdy.
Come some Musicke.

Guild. Good my Lord, vouchsafe me a word with you.
Ham.

Ham. Sir, a whole History.

Guild. The King, fir.

Ham. I fir, what of him.

Guild. Is in his retyrement, marvellous distemper'd.

Ham. With drinke Sir?

Guild. No my Lord, rather with choller.

Ham. Your wisdom should shew it selfe more rich to signifiethis to his Doctor; for me to put him to his Purgation, would perhaps plunge him into farre more Choller.

Guild. Good my Lord put your discourse into some frame, and start not so wildly from my affaire.

Ham. I am tame Sir, pronounce.

Guild. The Queene your Mother, in most great affliction of spirit, hath sent me to you.

Ham. You are welcome.

Guild. Nay, good my Lord, this courtesie is not of the right breed. If it shall please you to make me a wholesome answer, I will doe your Mothers commandment: if not, your pardon, and my returne shall be the end of my businesse.

Ham. Sir, I cannot.

Guild. What may Lord?

Ham. Make you a wholesome answer: my wits diseas'd. But sir, such answers as I can make, you shall command: or rather you say, my mother: therefore no more but to the matter. My mother you say.

Rosin. Then thus she sayes: your behavior hath stroke her into amazement, and admiration.

Ham. Oh wonderfull Sonne, that can so astonish a Mother. But is there no sequell at the heeles of this Mothers admiration?

Rosin. She desires to speake with you in her Clofset, ere you goe to bed.

Ham. We shall obey, were she ten times our Mother. Have you any further Trade with us?

Rosin. My Lord, you once did love me.

Ham. So I doe still, by these pickers and stealers.

Rosin. Good my Lord, what is your cause of destemper? You doe freely barre the doore of your owne Liberty, if you deny your griefes to your friend.

Ham. Sir I lacke Advancement.

Rosin. How can that be, when you have the voyce of the King himselfe, for your Succession in Denmarke?

Ham. I, but while the grasse growes, the Proverbe is something musty.

Enter one with a Recorder.

O the Recorder. Let me see, to withdraw with you, why doe you goe about to recover the wind of me, as if you would drive me into a toile?

Guild. O my Lord, if my Duty be too bold, my love is too unmannerly.

Ham. I doe not well understand that. Will you play upon this Pipe?

Guild. My Lord, I cannot.

Ham. I pray you.

Guild. Beleeve me, I cannot.

Ham. I doe beseech you.

Guild. I know no touch of it, my Lord.

Ham. Tis as easie as lying: governe these Ventiges with your finger and thumb, give it breath with your mouth, and it will discourse most excellent Musicke.

Looke you, these are the stoppes.

Guild. But these cannot I command to any utterance of harmony, I have not the skill.

Ham. Why looke you now, how unworthy a thing you make of me: you would play upon me: you would seeme to know my stops: you would plucke out the heart of my Mystery; you would sound me from my lowest Note, to the top of my compasse: and there is much Musicke, excellent Voyce, in this little Organe, yet cannot you make it. Why doe you thinke, that I am easier to be plaid on, then a Pipe? Call me what instrument you will, though you can fret me, you cannot play upon me. God bleesse your Sir.

Enter Polonius.

Polon. My Lord; the Queene would speake with you and presently.

Ham. Doe you see that Clowd? thats almost in shape like a Camell.

Polon. By'th'Misse, and its like a Camell indeed.

Ham. Me thinks it is like a Weazell.

Polon. It is back'd like a Weazell.

Ham. Or like a Whale?

Polon. Very like a Whale.

Ham. Then will I come to my mother, by and by: They foole me to the top of my bent.

I will come by and by.

Polon. I will say so.

Exit.

Ham. By and by, is easily said. Leave me friends: Tis now the very witching time of night, When Churchyards yawne, and hell it selfe breaths out Contagion to this world, Now could I drinke hot blood, And doe such bitter businesse as the day Would quake to looke on. Soft now, to my mother: Oh heart, loose not thy Nature; let not ever The Soule of Nero, enter this firme bosome: Let me be cruell, not unnaturall, I will speake Daggers to her, but use none: My tongue and soule in this be Hypocrites. How in my words somever she be shent, To give them scales, never my soule consent.

Enter King, Rosincros, and Guildenstar.

King. I like him not, nor stands it safe with us, To let his madnesse range. Therefore prepare you, I your Commission will forthwith dispatch, And he to England shall along with you, The termes of our estate, may not endure Hazard so dangerous as doth hourly grow Out of his Lunacies.

Guild. We will our selves provide: Most holy and Religious feare it is To keepe those many bodies safe That live and feede upon your Majesty.

Rosin. The single And peculiar life is bound Withall the strength and Armour of the minde, To keepe it selfe from noyance: but much more, That Spirit, upon whose spirit depends and rests The lives of many, the ceale of Majesty Dies not alone: but like a Gulfe doth draw Whats neere it, with it, It is a massie wheele Fixt on the Sommet of the highest Mount, To whose huge Spoakes, ten thousand lesser things Are mortiz'd and adjon'd: which when it falles, Each small annexment, petty consequence Attends the boystrous Ruine. Never alone Did the King fight, but with a generall grone

King. Arme you, I pray you to this speedy Voyage: For we will Fetters put upon this feare,

Which

Which now goes too free-footed.

Both. We will haste us.

Exeunt Gent.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. My Lord, hes going to his Mothers Clofset :
Behinde the Arras lie convey my felfe
To heare the proceffe. Ile warrant ſhe'll tax him home.
And as you ſaid, and wiſely was it ſaid,
Tis meete that ſome more audience then a Mother,
Since Nature makes them partiall, ſhould o're-heare
The ſpeech of vantage, Fare you well my Liege,
Ile call upon you ere you goe to bed,
And tell you what I know.

Exit.

King. Thankes deere my Lord,
Oh my offence is ranke, it ſmels to heaven,
It hath the primall eldeſt curſe upon't,
A brothers murder. Pray can I not,
Though inclination be as ſharpe as will :
My ſtronger guilt, defeats my ſtrong intent,
And like a man to double buſineſſe bound,
I ſtand in pauſe where I ſhall firſt begin,
And both neglect ; what if this curſed hand
Were thicker then it ſelfe with brothers blood,
Is there not Raine enough in the ſweet heavens
To waſh it white as ſnow ? Where to ſerves mercy,
But to confront the viſage of Offence ?
And whats in Prayer, but this two-fold force,
To be fore-ftalled ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd being downe ? Then Ile looke up,
My fault is paſt. But oh, what forme of Prayer
Can ſerue my turne ? Forgive me my foule Murther :
That cannot be, ſince I am ſtill poſſeſt
Of thoſe effects for which I aid the Murther
My Crowne, mine owne Ambition, and my Queene :
May one be pardon'd, and retaine th'offence ?
In the corrupted currants of this world,
Offences guilded hand may ſhove by luſtice,
And oft tis ſcene, the wicked prize it ſelfe
Buyes out the Law ; but tis not ſo above,
There is no ſhuffling, there the Action lyes
In his true Nature, and we our ſelves compell'd
Even to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To give in evidence. What then ? What reſts ?
Try what Repentance can. What can it not ?
Yet what can it, when one cannot repent ?
Oh wretched ſtate ? Oh boſome, blacke as death !
Oh limed ſoule, that ſtrugling to be free,
Art more ingag'd : Helpe Angels, make aſſay :
Bow ſtubborne knees, and heart with ſtrings of Steele,
Be ſoft as ſinewes of the new-borne Babe,
All may be well.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now might I doe it pat, now he is praying,
And now Ile doo't, and ſo he goes to heaven,
And ſo am I reveng'd : that would be ſcarin'd,
A Villaine kills my Father, and for that
I his foule Sonne, doe this ſame Villaine ſend
To heaven. Oh this is hyre and Sallery, not Revenge.
He tooke my Father groſſely, full of bread,
With all his Crimes broad blowne, as freſh as May,
And how his Audit ſtands, who knowes, ſave heaven :
But in our circumſtance and courſe of thought
Tis heavy with him : and am I then reveng'd,
To take him in the purging of his Soule,
When he is fit and ſeaſon'd for his paſſage ? No.
Vp Sword, and know thou a more horrid hent

When he is drunke aſleepe : or in his Rage,
Or in th'inceſtuous pleaſure of his bed,
At gaming, ſwearing, or about ſome acte
That has no relliſh of Saluation in't,
Then trip him, that his heeles may kicke at heaven,
And that his Soule may be as damn'd and blacke
As hell, whereto it goes. My Mother ſtayes,
This Phyſicke but prolongs thy ſickly dayes.

Exit.

King. My words flye up, my thoughts remaine below,
Words without thoughts, never to heaven goe.

Exit.

Enter Queene and Polonius.

Pol. He will come ſtraight :
Looke you lay home to him,
Tell him his pranks have been too broad to berre with,
And that your grace hath forc'd, and ſtood betweene
Much heat, and him. Ile ſilence me e'ne heere :
Pray you be round with him.

Ham. within. Mother, mother, mother.

Que. Ile warrant you, feare me not.
Withdraw, I heare him comming.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now mother, whats the matter ?

Que. Hamlet, thou haſt thy father much offended.

Ham. Mother, you have my father much offended.

Que. Come, come, you answer with an idle tongue.

Ham. Goe, goe, you queſtion with an idle tongue.

Que. Why how now Hamlet.

Ham. Whats the matter now ?

Que. Have you forgot me ?

Ham. No by the Rood, not ſo :

You are the Queene, your husbands brothers wife,
But would you were not ſo. You are my Mother.

Que. Nay, then Ile ſet thoſe to you that can ſpeake.

Ham. Come, come, and ſit you downe, you ſhall not boudge :

You goe not till I ſet up a glaſſe.

Where you may ſee the inmoſt part of you ?

Que. What wilt thou doe ? thou wilt not murther me ?
Helpe. helpe, ho.

Pol. What ho, helpe, helpe, helpe.

Ham. How now, a Rat ? dead for a Ducate, dead.

Pol. Oh I am ſlaine.

Killes Polonius.

Que. Oh me, what haſt thou done ?

Ham. Nay I know not, is it the King ?

Que. Oh what a raſh, and bloody deed is this ?

Ham. A bloody deed, almoſt as bad good Mother,
As kill a King, and marry with his brother.

Que. As killd a King ?

Ham. I Lady, twas my word.

Thou wretched, raſh, intruding foole farewell,
I tooke thee for thy Betters, take thy fortune,
Thou findſt to be too buſie, is ſome danger.
Leave wringing of your hands, peace ſit you downe,
And let me wring your heart, for ſo I ſhall
If it be made of penetrable ſtuffe ;
If damned Cuſtome have not braz'd it ſo,
That it is prooffe and bulwarke againſt Senſe.

Que. What have I done, that thou darſt wag thy In noyſe ſo rude againſt me ? (tongue,

Ham. Such an Act

That blurres the grace and bluſh of Modeſty,
Cals Vertue Hypocrite, takes off the Roſe
From the faire forehead of an innocent love,
And makes a bliſter there. Makes marriage vowes
As falſe as Dicers Oathes. Oh ſuch a deed,

As from the body of contraction pluckes .
The very soule, and sweet Religion makes
A rapsody of words. Heavens face doth glow,
Yea this solidity and compound masse,
With tristfull visage as against the doome,
Is thought-sicke at the act.

Quee. Aye me, what act, that roares so lowd, and thunders in the Index.

Ham. Looke heere upon this Picture, and on this,
The counterfet presentment of two brothers :
See what a grace seated on his Brow,
Hyperions curls, the front of Love himselfe,
An eye like Mars, to threaten or command
A Station, like the Herald Mercury
Now lighted on a heaven-kissing hill :
A Combination, and a forme indeed,
Where every god did seeme to set his Seale,
To give the world assurance of a man.
This was your husband. Looke you now what followes.
Heere is your husband, like a Mildew'd deare
Blasting his wholsome breath. Have you eyes?
Could you on this faire Mountaine leave to feed,
And batten on this Moore? Ha? have you eyes?
You cannot call it Love: For at your age,
The hey-day in the blood is tame, its humble,
And waites upon the Iudgement: and what Iudgement
Would step from this, to this? What divell was't,
That thus hath coufend you at hoodman-blind?
O Shame! where is thy blush? Rebellious Hell,
If thou canst mutine in a Matrons bones,
To flaming youth, let Vertue be as waxe.
And melt in her owne fire. Proclaime no shame,
When the compulsiue Ardure gives the charge,
Since Frost it selfe, as actively doth burne,
As Reason panders Will.

Quee. O Hamlet, speake no more.
Thou turnst mine eyes into my very soule,
And there I see such blacke and grained spots.
As will not leave their Tinct.

Ham. Nay, but to live
In the ranke sweat of an enseamed bed,
Stewd in Corruption; honying and making love
Over the nasty Sty.

Quee. Oh speake to me, no more,
These words like Daggers enter in mine eares.
No more sweet Hamlet.

Ham. A Murderer, and a Villaine :
A Slave, that is not twentieth part the tythe
Of your precedent Lord. A vice of Kings,
A Cutpurse of the Empire and the Rule.
That from a shelve, the precious Diadem stole,
And put it in his Pocket.

Quee. No more.

Enter Ghost.

Ham. A King of shreds and patches.
Save me: and hover o're me with your wings
You heavenly Guards. What would you gracious figure?

Quee. Alas hes mad.

Ham. Doe you not come your tarry Sonne to chide,
That laps't in Time and Passion, lets goe by
Th' important acting of your dread command? Oh say.

Ghost. Doe not forget: this Visitation
Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.
But looke Amazement on thy Mother sits;
O step betweene her, and her fighting Soule,
Conceit in weakest bodies, strongest workes.

Speake to her Hamlet.

Ham. How is it with you Lady?

Quee. Alas, how is't with you?

That thus you bend your eye on vacancy,
And with the corporall ayre doe hold discourse.
Forth at your eyes, your spirits wiidely peepe,
And as the sleeping Souldiours in th' Alarme,
Your bedded haire, like life in excrements,
Start up, and stand an end. Oh gentle Sonne,
Vpon the heate and flame of thy distemper
Sprinkle coole patience. Whereon doe you looke?

Ham. On him, on him: looke you how pale he glares,
His forme and cause conjoyn'd, preaching to Itones,
Would make them capeable. Doe not looke upon me,
Least with this pittreous action you convert
My sterne effects: then what I have to doe,
Will want true colour; teares perchance for blood.

Quee. To whom doe you speake this?

Ham. Doe you see nothing there?

Quee. Nothing at all, yet all that is I see.

Ham. Nor did you nothing heare?

Quee. No, nothing but our selves.

Ham. Why looke you there: looke how it steals away;
My father in his habite, as he lived.
Looke where he goes even now out at the Portall. Exit.

Quee. This is the very coynage of your braine,
This bodilesse Creation extasie is very cunning in.

Ham. Extasie?

My Pulse as youre doth temperately keepe time,
And makes as heathfull Musicke. It is not madnesse
That I have uttered; bring me to the Test
And I the matter will reword: which madnesse
Would gamboll from. Mother, for love of Grace,
Lay not a flattering Vnction to your soule,
That not your trespassse, but my madnesse speakes:
It will but skin and filme the Ulcerous place,
Whilst ranke corruption mming all within,
Infects unseene. Confesse your selfe to heaven,
Repent whats past, avoyd what is to come,
And doe not spred the Compost or the Weedes,
To make them ranke. Forgive me this my Vertue,
For in the fatnesse of these pursie times,
Vertue it selfe, of Vice mult pardon begge,
Yea courbe, and wooe, for leave to doe him good.

Quee. Oh Hamlet,

Thou hast cleft my heart in twaine.

Ham. O throw away the worser part of it,
And live the purer with the other halfe.
Good night, but goe not to mine Vnkles bed,
Assume a Vertue, if you have it not, refraine to night,
And that shall lend a kind of easinesse
To the next abstinence. Once more goodnight:
And when you are desirous to be blest,
Ile blessing begge of you. For this same Lord,
I doe repent: but heaven hath pleas'd it so.
To punish me with this, and this with me,
That I must be their Scourge and Minister.
I will bestow him, and will answer well
The death I gave him: so againe, good night.
I must be cruell, onely to be kind;
Thus bad begins, and worse remains behind.

Quee. What shall I doe?

Ham. Not this by no meanes that I bid you doe:
Let the blunt King tempt you againe to bed,
Pinch Wanton on your cheek, call you his Mousse,
And let him for a paire of reechy kisses,

Or padding in your necke with his damn'd fingers,
Make you to ravell all this matter out,
That I essentially am not in madnesse,
But mad in craft. Twere good you let him know,
For who thats but a Queene, faire, sober, wife,
Would from a Paddocke, from a Bat, a Gibbe,
Such deere concernings hide? Who would doe so?
No in despite of Sense and Secrecy,
Vnpegge the Basket on the houses top:
Let the Birds flye, and like the famous Ape,
To try Conclusions, in the Basket creepe,
And breake your owne necke downe.

Que. Be thou assur'd, if words be made of breath,
And breath of life: I have no life to breath
What thou hast said to me.

Ham. I must to England, you know that?

Quee. Alacke I had forgot: 'Tis so concluded on.

Ham. This man shall set me packing:
He lugges the Guts into the Neighbor roome,
Mother goodnight. Indeepe this Counsellor
Is now most still, most secret, and most grave,
Who was in life a foolish prating Knave.
Come sir, to draw toward an end with you.
Good night Mother.

Exit Hamlet tugging in Polonius.

Enter King.

King. Theres matters in these lighes.
These profound heaves
You must translate, 'Tis fit we understand them.
Where is your Sonne?

Quee. Ah my good Lord, what have I seene to night?

King. What Gertrude? How does Hamlet?

Quee. Mad as the Seas, and winde, when both contend
Which is the Mightier, in his lawlesse fit
Behind the Arras, hearing something stirre,
He whips his Rapier out, and cries a Rat, a Rat,
And in his brainish apprehension killes
The unseene good old man.

King. Oh heavy deed.

It had bine so with us had we beene there:
His Liberty is full of threats to all,
To you your selfe, to us, to every one.
Alas, how shall this bloody deede be answered?
It will be laid to us, whose providence
Should have kept short, restrain'd, and out of haunt,
This mad yong man. But so much was our love,
We would not understand what was most fit,
But like the Owner of a foule disease,
To keepe it from divulging, lets it fcede
Even on the pith of life. Where is he gone?

Quee. To draw apart the body he hath kild,
Ore whom his very madnesse like some Oare
Among a Minerall of Methals base
Shewes it selfe pure. He weepes for wat is done.

King. Oh Gertrude, come away:
The Sun no sooner shall the Mountaines touch,
But we will ship him hence, and this vilde deed,
We must with all our Majesty and Skill
Both countenance, and excuse. Enter Rosincros, and
Ho Guildenstar:

Hamlet in madnesse hath Polonius slaine,
And from his Mothers Clofset hath he dragg'd him.
Goe seeke him out, speake faire, and bring the body
Into the Chappell. I pray you haste in this. Exit Gent.
Come Gertrude, we'll call up our wisest friends,

To let them know both what we meane to doe,
And whats untimely done. Oh come away,
My foule is full of discord and dismay.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Safely flowed.

Gentlemen within. Hamlet, Lord Hamlet.

Ham. What noife? Who calls on Hamlet?

Oh heere they come. Enter Rosincros, and Guildenstar.
Ros. What have you done my Lord with the dead body?

Ham. Compounded it with dust, where to tis kinne.

Rosin. Tell us where tis, that we may take it thence,
And beare it to the Chappell.

Ham. Doe not beeleeve it.

Rosin. Beeleeve what?

Ham. That I can keepe your counsell, and not mine owne. Besides, to be demanded of a Spundge, what replication should be made by the Sonne of a King.

Rosin. Take you me for a Spundge, my Lord?

Ham. I sir, that sokes up the Kings Countenance, his Rewirde, his Authorities (but such Officers do the King best service in the end.) He keepe them like an Ape in the corner of his jaw, first mouth'd to be last swallowed, when he needes what you have glean'd, it is but squeezing you, and Spundge you shall be dry againe.

Rosin. I understand you not my Lord.

Ham. I am glad of it: a knavish speech sleepes in a foolish care.

Rosin. My Lord, you must tell us where the body is,
and geve with us to the King.

Ham. The body is with the King, but the King is not with the body. The King, is a thing——

Guild. A thing my Lord?

Ham. Of nothing? bring me to him, hide Fox, and all after. Exeunt.

Enter King.

King. I have sent to seeke him, and to find the body:
How dangerous is it that this man goes loose:
Yet must not we put the strong Law on him:
Hes loved of the distracted multitude,
Who like not in their judgement, but their eyes:
And where tis so, th'Offenders scourge is weigh'd
But neerer the offence: to beare all smooth, and even,
This fodaine sending him away, must seeme
Deliberate pause, diseases desperate growne,
By desperate appliance are relieved,
Or not at all. Enter Rosincros.

How now? what hath befallne?

Rosin. Where the dead body is bestow'd my Lord,
We cannot get from him.

King. But where is he?

Rosin. Without my Lord, guarded to know your pleasure.

King. Bring him before us.

Rosin. Hoa, Guildenstar? bring in my Lord.

Enter Hamlet and Guildenstar.

King. Now Hamlet, wheres Polonius?

Ham. At Supper.

King. At Supper? Where?

Ham. Not where he eats, but where he is eaten, a certaine convocation of wormes are ene at him. Your worm is your onely Emperour for diet. We fat all creatures else to fat us, and we fat our selues for Magots. Your fat King and your leane Begger is but variable service, two dishes, but to one Table, thats the end.

King. What dost thou meane by this?

Ham.

Ham. Nothing but to shew you how a King may goe a Progresse through the gut of a Begger.

King. Where is Polonius.

Ham. In heaven, send thither to see. If your Messenger finde him not there, seeke him i'th other place your selfe: but indeed, if you finde him not this moneth, you shall nose him as you goe up the staires into the Lobby.

King. Goe seeke him there.

Ham. He will stay till ye come.

K. Hamlet, this deed of thine, for thine especial safety
Which we doe tender, as we dearely grieve
For that which thou hast done, must send thee hence
With fiery quicknesse. Therefore prepare thy selfe,
The Barke is ready, and the wind at helpe,
Th' Associates tend, and every thing at bent
For England.

Ham. For England.

King. I, Hamlet.

Ham. Good.

King. So is it, if thou knewst our purposes.

Ham. I see a Cherube that sees him: but come, for England. Farewell deare Mother.

King. Thy loving Father Hamlet.

Hamlet. My Mother: Father and Mother is Man and Wife: Man and Wife is one flesh, and so my Mother.
Come, for England. Exit.

King. Follow him at foot,
Tempt him with speed aboard:
Delay it not, Ile have him hence to night.
Away, for every thing is Seal'd and done
That else leanes on th' Affaire, pray you make haste.
And England, if my love thou holdst at ought,
As my great power thereof may give thee sense,
Since yet thy Cicatrice looks raw and red
After the Danish Sword, and thy free awe
Payes homage to us; thou maist not coldly set
Our Sovereigne Proccesse, which imports at full
By letters conjuring to that effect
The present death of Hamlet. Doe it England.
For like the Hecticke in my blood he rages,
And thou must cure me: Till I know 'tis done,
How ere my haps, my joyes were ne're begun.

Exit:

Enter Fortinbras with an Army.

For. Goe Captaine, from me to the Danish King,
Tell him that by his license, Fortinbras
Claimes the conveyance of a promis'd March
Over his Kingdome. You know the Rendevouz:
If that his Majestie would ought with us,
We shall expresse our durie in his eye,
And let him know to.

Cap. I will doo't, my Lord.

For. Goe safely on.

Exit.

Enter Queene and Horatio.

Qu. I will not speake with her.

Hor. She is importunate, indeed distract, her moode will needs be pittied.

Qu. What would she have?

Hor. She speaks much of her Father; sayes she heares
There's trickes i'th' world, and hems, and bears her heart,
Spurnes enviously at Strawes, speakes things in doubt,
That carry but halfe sense: Her speech is nothing,
Yet the unshaped use of it doth move
The hearers to Collection; they ayme at it,
And botch the words up fit to their owne thoughts,
Which as her winks, and nods, and gestures yeeld them,

Indeed would make one thinke there would be thought.
Though nothing sure, yet much unhappily.

Qu. Twere good she were spoken with,
For she may strew dangerous conjectures
In ill breeding mindes. Let her come in
To my sicke soule (as sinnes true nature is)
Each toy seemes Prologue, to some great amisse.
So full of Artlesse jealousy is guilt,
It spils it selfe in fearing to be spilt.

Enter Othelia distracted.

Oph. Where is the beauteous Majestie of Denmarke.

Qu. How now Ophelia?

Oph. How should I your true love know from another
By his Cockle Hat and Staffe, and his Sandal Shoone (one?)

Qu. Alas sweet Lady: what imports this Song?

Oph. Say you? Nay pray you marke.
He is dead and gone Lady, he is dead and gone,
At his head a grasse-green Turfe, at his heeles a stone.

Enter King.

Qu. Nay but Ophelia.

Oph. Pray you marke.

White his Shrow'd as the Mountaine Snow.

Qu. Alas, looke here my Lord.

Oph. Larded with sweet flowers:

Which bewept to the grave did not goe,

With True-love flowers.

King. How doe ye, pretty Lady?

Oph. Well, God dil'd you. They say the Owle was a Bakers daughter. Lord, wee know what we are, but know not what we may be. God be at your Table.

King. Conceit upon her Father.

Oph. Pray you let's have no words of this: but when they aske you what it meanes, say you this:
To morrow is S. Valentines day, all in the morne betime,
And I a Maid at your window, to be your Valentine. (dore.
Then up he rose, & don'd his cloathes, & dupt the chamber
Let in the Maid, let in a Maid, never departed more.

King. Pretty Ophelia.

Oph. indeed la? without an oath Ile make an end ont.

By gis, and by S. Charity.

Alacke, and fie for shame:

Young men will doo't, if they come too't.

By Cocke they are too blame.

Quoth she before you tumbled me,

You promis'd me to wed:

So would I ha done, by yonder Sunne,

And thou hadst not come to my bed.

King. How long hath she been thus?

Oph. I hope all will be well. Wee must be patient, but I cannot choose but weepe, to thinke they should lay him i'th' cold ground: My Brother shall know of it, and so I thanke you for your good counsell. Come, my Coach: Goodnight Ladies: Goodnight sweet Ladies:
Goodnight, goodnight. Exit.

King. Follow her close,

Give her good watch I pray you:
Oh this is the poyson of deepe griefe, it springs
All from her Fathers death. Oh Gertrude, Gertrude,
When sorrowes come, they come not single spies,
But in Battaliaes. First, her father slaine,
Next your sonne gone, and he most violent author
Of his owne just remove: the people muddied,
Thicke and unwholsome in their thoughts and whispers,
For good Polonius death; and we have done but greenly,
In hugger mugger to interre him. Poore Ophelia Divided from her selfe, and her faire judgement,

Without

Without the which we are Pictures, or meere Beasts,
 Last, and as much containing as all these,
 Her brother is in secret come from France,
 Keepest on his wonder, keepest himselfe in clouds
 And wants not Buzzers to infect his eare
 With pestilent Speeches of his fathers death,
 Where in necessity of matter Beggard
 Will nothing sticke our persons to Arraigne
 In eare and eare. O my deere Gertrude, this,
 Like to a murdering Peece in many places,
 Gives me superfluous death. A Noyse within.

Enter a Messenger.

Que. Alacke, what noyse is this?

King. Where are my Switzers?

Let them guard the doore. What is the matter?

Mef. Save your selfe, my Lord.

The Ocean-(over-peering of his List)
 Eates not the Flats with more impetuous haste
 Then young Laertes, in a Riotous head,
 Ore-beares your Officers, the rabble call him Lord,
 And as the world were now but to begin,
 Antiquity forgot, Custome not knowne,
 The Ratifiers and props of every word,
 They cry choose we? Laertes shall be King.
 Caps, hands, and tongues, applaud it to the clouds,
Laertes shall be King, Laertes King.

Quee. How cheerefully on the false Traile they cry,
 Oh this is Counter, you false Danish Dogges.

Noyse within. Enter Laertes.

King. The doores are broke.

Laer. Where is the King, first? Stand you all without.

All. No, lets come in.

Laer. I pray you give me leave.

All. We will, we will.

Laer. I thanke you: Keepe the doore.

Oh thou vilde King, give me my father.

Que. Calmely good Laertes.

Laer. That drop of blood, that calmes
 Proclaimes me Bastard:

Cries Cuckold to my father, brands the Harlot
 Even here betweene the chaste unsmitched brow
 Of my true Mother.

King. What is the cause Laertes,
 That thy Rebellion lookes so Gyant-like?
 Let him goe Gertrude: Doe not feare our person:
 Theres such Divinity doth hedge a King,
 That Treason can but peepe to what it would,
 Acts little of his will. Tell me Laertes,
 Why thou art thus incens'd? Let him goe Gertrude,
 Speake man.

Laer. Wheres my Father?

King. Dead.

Que. But not by him,

King. Let him demand his fill.

Laer. How came he dead? Ile not be Iuggel'd with.
 To hell Allegiance: Vowes, to the blackest divell.
 Conscience and Grace, to the Profoundest Pit.
 I dare Damnation: to this point I stand,
 That both the worlds I give to negligence,
 Let come what comes: onely Ile be reveng'd
 Most throughly for my father.

King. Who shall stay you?

Laer. My Will, not all the world.

And for my meanes, Ile husband them so well,
 They shall goe farre with little.

King. Good Laertes:

If you desire to know the certainty
 Of your deare fathers death, if writ in your revenge,
 That Soop-stake you will draw both friend and foe,
 Winner and Looser.

Laer. None but his Enemies.

King. Will you know them then.

La. To his good Friends thus wide Ile hope my And like the kinde life-rendring Pelican, (Armes,
 Repast them with my blood.

King. Why now? what noyse is that?
 Like a good child, and a true Gentl'man.
 That I am guiltlesse of your Fathers death,
 And am most sensible in griefe for it,
 It shall as levell to your Iudgement pierce
 As day do's to your eye.

A noyse within, Let her come in,

Enter Ophelia.

Laer. How now? what noyse is that?
 Oh heat dry up my braines, teares seven times salt,
 Burne out the sense and vertue of mine eye.
 By heaven thy madnesse shall be paid by waight,
 Till our Scale turnes the beame. Oh Rose of May,
 Deare Maide, kinde Sister, sweet Ophelia:
 Oh heavens, is't possible, a yong Maids wits,
 Should be as mortall as an old mans life?
 Nature is fine in Love, and where tis fine,
 It sends some precions instance of it selfe
 After the thing it loves.

Oph. They bore him bare fac'd on the Beere.

Hey non nony, nony, hey nony:

And on his grave raines many a teare,

Fare you well my Dove.

Laer. Hadst thou thy wits, and didst perswade Revenge, it could not move thus.

Oph. You must sing downe a-downe, and you call him a-downe-a. Oh, how the wheelles become it? It is the false Steward that stole his Masters daughter.

Laer. This nothings more than matter.

Oph. There's Rosemary, that's for Remembrance.
 Pray Love remember: and there is Pancies, that's for Thoughts.

Laer. A document in madnesse, thoughts and remembrance fitted.

Oph. There's Fennell for you, and Columbines: there's Rue for you, and here's some for me. Wee may call it Herbe-Grace a Sundayes: Oh you must weare your Rue with a difference. There's a Dafie, I would give you some Violets, but they wither'd all whē my Father dyed: They say, he made a good end;

For Bonny sweet Robin is all my joy.

Laer. Thought, and Affliction, Pailion, Hell it selfe:
 She turnes to favour; and to prettinesse.

Oph. And will he not come againe.

And will he not come againe?

No, no, he is dead, goe to thy Death-bed,

He never will come againe.

His Beard as white as Snow.

All Flaxen was his Pole:

He is gone, he is gone, and we cast away mone,

Gramercy on his Soule.

And of all Christian Soules, I pray God.
 God buy ye.

Laer. Doe you see this, you gods?

King. Laertes, I must commune with your griefe,
 Or you deny me right: goe but apart,

Exit Ophelia.

Make

Make choyce of whom your wisest friends you will,
And they shall heare and judge twixt you and me ;
If by direct or by Collaterall hand
They find us touch'd, we will our Kingdome give,
Our Crown, our Life, and all that we call Ours
To you in satisfaction. But if not,
Be you content to lend your paience to us,
And we shall joyntly labour with your soule
To give it due content.

Laer. Let this be so :
His meanes of death his obscure buriall :
No Trophee, Sword, nor Hatchment ore his bones,
No Noble rite, nor formall ostentation,
Cry to be heard, as twere from heaven to earth,
That I must call in question.

King. So you shall ;
And where th' offence is, let the great Axe fall.
I pray you goe with me.

Exeunt.

Enter Horatio, with an Attendant.

Hora. What are they that would speake with me ?

Ser. Saylors sir, they say they have Letters for you.

Hora. Let them come in,

I doe not know from what part of the world
I should be greeted, if not from Lord Hamlet.

Enter Saylor,

Say. God blesse your Sir.

Hora. Let him blesse thee too.

Say. He shall Sir, and't please him. Theres a Letter for you Sir : It comes from th' Ambassadors that was bound for England, if your name be Horatio : as I am let to know it is.

Reads the Letter.

HOratio, When thou shalt have overlook'd this, give these fellowes some meanes to the King : They have Letters for him. Ere we were two dayes old at Sea, a Py-rate of very Warlike appointment gave us Chace. Finding our selves too slow of Saile, we put on a compelled Valour. In the Grapple, I boorded them : On the instant they got cleare of our Ship, so I alone became their Prisoner.
They have dealt with me, like Theeves of Mercy, but they knew what they did. I am to doe a good turne for them. Let the King have the Letters I have sent, and repaire thou to me with as much hast as thou wouldst flye death. I have words to speake in your eare, will make thee dumbe, yet are they much too light for the bore of the Matter. These goodfellowes will bring thee where I am.
Rosincros and Guildenstar, hold their course for England.
Of them I have much to tell thee, Farewell.

He that thou knowest thine,

Hamlet.

Come, I wil give you way for these your Letters,
And do't the speedier, that you may direct me
To him from whom you brought them.

Exit.

Enter King and Laertes.

King. Now must your conscience my acquittance seal,
And you must put me in your heart for friend,
Sith you have heard, and with a knowing eare,
That he which hath your Noble father slaine,
Pursued my life.

Laer. It well appeares. But tell me,
Why you proceeded not against these feates,
So crimefull, and so Capitall in Nature,
As by your Safety, Wisdome, all things else,

You mainly were stirr'd up ?

King. O for two speciall Reasons,
Which may to you (perhaps) seeme much unfinnowed,
And yet to me they are strong. The Queene his Mother,
Lives almost by his lookes : and for my selfe,
My Vertue or my Plague, be it either which,
Shes so conjunctive to my life and soule ;
That as the Starre moves not but in his Sphere,
I could not but by her. The other Motive,
Why to a publike count I might not goe,
Is the great love the generall gender beare him,
Who dipping all his faults in their affection,
Would like the Spring that turneth Wood to Stone,
Convert his Gyves to Graces. So that my Arrowes
Too slightly timbred for so loud a Wind,
Would have reverted to my Bow againe,
And not where I had aym'd them.

Laer. And so have I a Noble father lost,
A Sister driven into desperate tearmes,
Who was (if praises may goe backe againe)
Stood Challenger on mount of all the Age
For her perfections. But my revenge will come.

King. Breake not your sleepes for that,
You must not thinke
That we are made of stufte, so flat, and dull,
That we can let our Beard be shooke with danger,
And thinke it pasttime. You shortly shall heare more,
I lov'd your father, and we love your selfe,
And that I hope will teach you to imagine.

Enter a Messenger.

How now ? What Newes ?

Mes. Letters my Lord from Hamlet. This to your Majesty : this to the Queene.

King. From Hamlet ? Who brought them ?

Mes. Saylors my Lord they say, I saw them not :
They were given me by Claudio, he receiv'd them.

King. Laertes you shall them :

Leave us.

Exit Messenger.

High and Mighty, you shall know I am set naked on your Kingdome To morrow shall I beg leave to see your Kingly Eyes When I shall (first asking your Pardon thereunto) recount th' Occasions of my sodaine, and more strange returne.

Hamlet.

What should this meane ? Are all the rest come backe ?
Or is it some abuse ? Or no such thing ?

Laer. Know you the hand ?

King. Tis Hamlets Character, naked, and in a Postscript here he sayes alone : Can you advise me ?

Laer. I'm lost in it my Lord, but let him come,
It warms the very sicknesse in my heart,
That I shall live and tell him to his teeth :
Thus diddest thou.

King. If it be so Laertes, as how should it be so ?
How otherwise ? will you berul'd by me ?

Laer. If so you'll not o'rerule me to a peace.

King. To thine owne peace : if he be now return'd,
As checking at his Voyage, and that he meanes
No more to undertake it ; I will worke him
To an exployt now ripe in my Device,
Vnder the which he shall not choose but fall :
And for his death no wind of blame shall breath,
But even his Mother shall uncharge the practice,
And call it accident : Some two Monthes hence
Here was a Gentleman of Normandy.
I've seene my selfe and seru'd against the French,
And they ran well on Horsebacke ; but this Gallant

Had witchcraft in't ; he grew into his Seat,
And to such wondrous doing brought his Horse,
As had he been encorps't and demy-Natur'd
With the brave Beast, so farre he past my thought,
That I in forgery of shapes and trickes,
Come short of what he did.

Laer. A Norman was't?

King. A Norman.

Laer. Vpon my life Lamound.

King. The very same.

Laer. I know him well, he is the Brooch indeed,
And Iemme of all our Nation.

King. He made confession of you,
And gave you such a Masterly report,
For Art and exercise in your defence ;
And for your Rapier most especially,
That he cryed out, 't would be a sight indeed,
If one could match you Sir. This report of his
Did Hamlet so envenom with his Envy,
That he could nothing doe but with and begge,
Your sodaine comming over to play with him ;
Now out of this.

Laer. Why out of this, my Lord ?

King. Laertes, was your Father deare to you ?
Or are you like the painting of a sorrow,
A face without a heart ?

Laer. Why aske you this ?

Kin. Not that I thinke you did not love your Father,
But that I know Love is begun by Time :
And that I see in passages of prooffe,
Time qualifies the sparke and fire of it :
Hamlet come backe , what would you undertake,
To shew your selfe your Fathers sonne indeed,
More than in words ?

Laer. To cut his throat i'th' Church.

Kin. No place indeed should murder Sanctuarize ;
Revenge should have no bounds : but good Laertes,
Will you doe this, keepe close within your Chamber ?
Hamlet return'd, shall know you are come home :
Wee'l put on those shall praise your excellence,
And set a double varnish on the fame
The Frenchman gave you, bring you in fine together,
And wager on your heads, he being remisse,
Most generous, and free from all contriving,
Will not peruse the Foiles ? So that with ease,
Or with a little shuffling, you may choosse
A sword unbaited, and in a passe of practice,
Requit him for your Father.

Laer. I will doo't,

And for that purpose Ile annoiote my Sword :
I bought an Vnction of a Mountebanke
So mortall, I but dipt a knife in it,
Where it drawes blood, no Cataplasme so rare,
Collected from all Simples that have Vertue
Vnder the Moone, can save the thing from death,
That is but scratcht withall : Let touch my point,
With this contagion, that if I gall him slightly,
It may be death.

Kin. Let's further thinke of this,
Weigh what convenience both of time and meanes
May fit us to our shape, if this should faile ;
And that our drift looke through our bad performance,
Twere better not assaid ; therefore this Project
Should have a backe or second, that might hold,
If this should blast in prooffe: Soft, let me see
Wee'l make a solemne wager on your commings,

I ha't : when in your motion you are hot and dry,
As make your bowts more violent to the end,
And that he calls for drinke ; Ile have prepar'd him
A Chalice for the nonce ; whereon but sipping,
If he by chance escape your venom'd stuck,
Our purpose may hold there ; how now sweet Queene.

Enter Queene.

Queen. One woe doth tread upon anothers heele,
So fast they'l follow : your Sister's drown'd Laertes.

Laer. Drown'd ! O where ?

Queen. There is a Willow growes assant a Brooke,
That shewes his hore leaves in the glassie streame :
There with fantastick Garlands did she come,
Of Crow-flowers, Nettles, Dayies, and long Purples,
That liberrall Shepheards give a grosser name ;
But our cold Maids doe Dead Mens Fingers call them :
There on the pendant boughes, her Coronet weeds
Clambring to hang; an envious sliuer broke,
When downe the weedy Trophies, and her selfe,
Fell in the weeping Brooke, her cloathes spred wide,
And Mermaid-like, a while they bore her up,
Which time she chaunted snatches of old tunes,
As one incapable of her owne distresse,
Or like a creature Native, and deduced
Vnto that element : but long it could not be,
Till that her garments, heavy with their drinke,
Pull'd the poore wretch from her melodious by,
To muddy death.

Laer. Alas then, is she drown'd ?

Queen. Drown'd, drown'd.

Laer. Too much of water hast thou poore Ophelia,
And therefore I forbid my teares : but yet
It is our trick, Nature her custome holds,
Let shame say what it will ; when these are gone
The woman will be out : Aduce my Lord,
I have a speech of fire, that faine would blaze,
But that this folly drownes it. Exit.

King. Let's follow, Gertrude :

How much I had to doe to calme his rage ?
Now feare I this will give it start againe ;
Therefore let's follow. Exeunt.

Enter two Clownes.

Clown. Is sheeto be buried in Christian buriall, that wilfully seekes her owne salvation ?

Other. I tell thee she is, and therefore make her Grave straight, the Crowner hath fate on her, and finds it Christian buriall.

Clo. How can that be, unlesse she drowned her selfe in her owne defence ?

Other. Why 'tis found so.

Clo. It must be So offendendo, it cannot be else : for here lies the point: If I drowne my selfe wittingly, it argues an Act : and an Act hath three branches. It is an Act to doe, and to performe; argall she drown'd her selfe wittingly.

Other. Nay but here you Goodman Delver.

Clown. Give me leave ; here lies the water, good :
here stands the man, good : if the man goe to this water and drowne himselfe ; it is will he, nill he, hee goes ;
marke you that ? But if the water come to him & drowne him ; he drownes not himselfe. Argall, he that is not guilty of his owne death, shortens not his owne life.

Other. But is this Law ?

Clo. I marry is't, Crowners Quest Law. Other.

Other. Will you ha the truth on't: if this had not been a Gentlewoman, shee should have beene buried out of Christian Buriall.

Clo. Why there thou say'st. And the more pittie that great folke should have countenance in this world to drowne or hang themselves, more than their even Christian. Come, my Spade; there is no ancient Gentlemen, but Gardiners, Ditchers and Grave-makers; they hold up Adam's profession.

Other. Was he a Gentleman?

Clo. He was the first that ever bore Armes.

Other. Why he had none.

Clo. What art a Heathen? how dost thou understand the Scripture? the Scripture sayes Adam digg'd; could he digge without Armes? We put another question to thee? if thou answerest me not to the purpose, confesse thy selfe—

Other. Goe to.

Clo. What is he that builds stronger than either the Mason, the Shipwright or the Carpenter?

Other. The Gallows maker, for that Frame out-lives a thousand Tenants.

Clo. I like thy wit well in good faith, the Gallows does well; but how does it well? it does well to those that doe ill: now thou dost ill to say the Gallows is built stronger than the Church: Argall, the Gallows may doe well to thee. Too't againe, Come.

Other. Who builds stronger than a Mason, a Shipwright, or a Carpenter?

Clo. I tell me that, and unyoke.

Other. Marry, now I can tell.

Clo. Too't.

Other. Masse, I cannot tell.

Enter Hamlet and Horatio a farre off.

Clo. Cudgell thy braines no more about it; for your dull Ass will not mend his pace with beating; and when you are askt this question next, say a Grave-maker: the Houses that he makes, lasts till Doomes-day: go, get thee to Yanaghan, fetch me a stoape of Liquor.

Sings.

In youth when I did love, did love,

me thought it was very sweet,

To contract O the for a my behove,

O me thought there was nothing meet.

Ham. Ha's this fellow no feeling of his businessse, that he sings at Grave-making?

Hor. Custome hath made it in him a property of easinesse.

Ham. Tis ee'n so; the hand of little imployment hath the daintier sense.

Clowne sings.

But Age with his stealing steps

hath caught me in his clutch:

And hath shipped me intill the Land,

as if I had never been such.

Ham. That Scull had a tongue in it, and could sing once: how the Knave jowles it to th' ground, as if it were Caines law-bone, that did the first murther: It might be the Pate of a Polititian which this Ass ore-Offices: one that could circumvent God, might it not?

Hor. It might, my Lord.

Ham. Or of a Courtier, which could say, Good Morrow sweet Lord: how dost thou, good Lord? this might be my Lord such a one, that prais'd my Lord such a ones horse, when he meant to begge it; might it not?

Hor. I, my Lord.

Ham. Why ee'n so: and now my Lady Wormies, Chaplesse, and knockt about the Mazzard with a Sextons Spade; heere's fine Revolution, if we had the trick to see't. Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at Loggets with 'em? mine ake to thinke on't.

Clowne sings.

A Picke-axe and a Spade, a Spade,

for and a shrowding-sheet:

O a Pit of Clay for to be made,

for such a Guest is meet.

Ham. There's another: why might not that be the Scull of a Lawyer? where be his Quiddits now? his Quillits? his Cases? his Tenures, and his Tricket? why doe's he suffer this rude knave now to knocke him about the Sconce with a dirty Shovell, and will not tell him of his Action of Battery? hum. This fellow might be in's time a great buyer of Land, with his Statutes, his Recognizances, his Fines, his double Vouchers, his Recoveries: Is this the fine of his Fines, and the recovery of his Recoveries, to have his fine Pate full of fine Dirt? will his Vouchers vouch him no more of his Purchases, and double ones too, then the length and breadth of a paire of Indentures? the very Conveyances of his Lands will hardly lye in this Boxe; and must the Inheritor himselfe have no more? ha?

Hor. Not a jot more my Lord.

Ham. Is not Parchment made of Sheep-skinnes?

Hor. I my Lord, and of Calve-skinnes too.

Ham. They are Sheepe and Calves that seeke out assurance in that. I will speake to this fellow: whose Grave's this Sir?

Clo. Mine Sir:

O a pit of Clay for to be made,

for such a Guest is meet.

Ham. I thinke it be thine indeed: for thou liest in't.

Clo. You lie out on't Sir, and therefore it is not yours: for my part I doe not lie in't, and yet it is mine.

Ham. Thou dost lye in't, to be in't, and say tis thine: tis for the dead, not for the quicke, therefore thou lyest.

Clo. Tis a quicke lye Sir, twill away againe from mee to you.

Ham. What man dost thou digge it for?

Clo. For no man Sir.

Ham. What woman then?

Clo. For none neither.

Ham. Who is to be buried in't?

Clo. One that was a woman Sir; but rest her soule shee's dead.

Ham. How absolute the Knave is? wee must speake by the Carde, or equivocation will follow us: by the Lord Horatio, these three yeares I have taken note of it, the Age is growne so pickt, and the toe of the Pefant comes so neare the heele of our Courtier, hee galls his Kibe. How long hast thou been a Grave-maker?

Clo. Of all the dayes i'th' yeare, I came too't that day that our last King Hamlet orecame Fortinbras.

Ham. How long is that since?

Clo. Cannot you tell that? every foole can tell that: It was the very day that young Hamlet was borne, hee that was mad and sent into England.

Ham. I marry, why was he sent into England?

Clo. Why, because he was mad; he shall recover his wits there; or if he doe not, its no great matter there.

Ham. Why?

Clown. T will not be seene in him, there the men are as mad as he.

Ham. How came he mad?

Clow. Very strangely they say.

Ham. How strangely?

Clow. Faith e'ne with loosing his wits.

Ham. Vpon what ground?

Clow. Why here in Denmarke: I have been Sexestone here, Man and Boy thirty yeeres.

Ham. How long will a man lie 'ith' earth ere he rot?

Clow. Ifaith, if he be not rotten before he dye (as we have many pocky Coarces now adayes, that will scarce hold the laying in) he will last you some eight yeere, or nine yeare. A Tanner will last you nine yeares.

Ham. Why he, more than another?

Clow. Why sir, his hide is so tan'd with his Trade, that he will keepe out water a great while. And your water is a fore Decayer of your whorson dead body, heres a Scull now: this Scull has laine in the earth three and twenty yeeres.

Ham. Whose was it?

Clow. A whorson mad Fellowes it was; Whose doe you thinke it was?

Ham. Nay, I know not.

Clow. A pestilence on him for a mad Rogue, a powr'd a Flagon of Renish on my head once. This same Scull Sir, this same Scull sir, was Toricke Scull the Kings Iester.

Ham. This?

Clow. E'ne that.

Ham. Let me see. Alas poore Toricke, I knew him Horatio, a fellow of infinit Ielt; of most excellent fancy, he hath borne me on his backe a thousand times: And how abhorred my imagination is, my gorge rises at it. Here hung those lippes, that I have kist I know not how oft. Where be your iibes now? Your Gambals? Your Songs? Your flashes of Merriment that were wont to set the Table on a Rore? No one now to mocke your own Teering? Quite choptalne? Now get you to my Ladies Chamber, and tell her, let her paint an inch thicke, to this favour she must come. Make her laugh at that: pry-thee Horatio tell me one thing,

Hor. What's that my Lord?

Ham. Dost thou thinke Alexander lookt o'this fashion i'th'earth?

Hor. E'ne so.

Ham. And smelt so? Puh.

Hor. E'ne so my Lord.

Ham. To what base uses we may returne Horatio. Why may not imagination trace the Noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bung-hole.

Hor. Twere to consider: too curiously to consider so.

Ham. No faith, not a jot. But to follow him thither with modesty enough, and likelihood to lead it; as thus. Alexander dyed: Alexander was buried: Alexander returneth into dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make Lome, and why of that Lome (whereto he was converted) might they not stop a Beere-barrell?

Imperiall Cesar, dead and turn'd to clay,
Might stop a hole to keepe the wind away.

Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a Wall, expell the Winters flaw.
But soft, but soft, aside; heere comes the King.

Enter King, Queene, Laertes, and a Coffin, with Lords attendant.

The Queene, the Courtiers. Who is't that they follow,

And with such maimed rights? This doth betoken,
The Coarse they follow, did with desperate hand,
Foredoe it owne life; twas some Estate.

Couch we a while, and marke.

Laer. What Ceremony else?

Ham. That is Laertes, a very Noble youth: Marke.

Laer. What Ceremony else?

Priest. Her Obsequies have beene as farre enlarg'd,
As we have warrantie, her death was doubtfull,
And but that great command, o'relwayes the order,
She should in ground unsanctified have lodg'd,
Till the last Trumpet. For charitable prayer,
Shardes, Flints, and Peebles, should be throwne on her:
Yet here she is allowed her Virgin Rites,
Her Maiden strewments, and the bringing home
Of Bell and Buriall.

Laer. Must there no more be done?

Priest. No more be done:

We should prophane the service of the dead,
To sing sage Requiem, and such rest to her
As to peace-parted Soules.

Laer. Lay her i'th'earth,

And from her faire and unpolluted flesh,
May Violets spring. I tell thee (churlish Priest)
A Ministring Angell shall my Sister be,
When thou liest howling?

Ham. What, the faire Ophelia?

Queen. Sweets, to the sweet farewell,
I hop'd thou should'st have been my Hamlets wife:
I thought thy Bride-bed to have deckt (sweet Maid)
And not t'have strew'd thy Grave.

Laer. Oh terrible wooer,

Fall ten times trebble on that curst head
Whose wicked deed, thy most ingenious sense
Depriv'd thee of. Hold off the earth a while,
Till I have caught her once more in mine armes:

Leaps in the grave.

Now pile your dust upon the quicke and dead,
Till of this flat a mountaine you have made,
To o'retop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blew Olympus.

Ham. What is he, whose griefes
Beares such an Emphasis? whose phrase of sorrow
Conjures the wandring Starres, and makes them stand
Like wonder-wounded hearers? This is I,
Hamlet the Dane.

Laer. The Divell take thy soule,

Ham. Thou prais't not well,

I prythee take thy fingers from my throat;
Sir though I am not ipleenative and rash,
Yet have I something in me dangerous,
Which let thy wisenesse feare. Away thy hand

King. Plucke them asunder.

Queen. Hamlet, Hamlet.

Gen. Good my Lord be quiet.

Ham. Why I will fight with him upon this Theame.
Vntill my eye-lids will no longer wag.

Queen. Oh my Sonne, what Theame?

Ham. I lov'd Ophelia; forty thousand brothers
Could not (with all their quantity of love)
Make up my summe. What wilt thou doe for her?

King. Oh he is mad Laertes,

Qu. For love of God forbear him.

Ham. Come shew me what thou'lt doe.
Woo't weepe? woo't fight? woo't teare thy selfe?
Woo't drinke up Esile, eate a Crocodile?

He doo't. Dost thou come here to whine;
To outface me with leaping in her Graue?
Be buried quicke with her, and so will I.
And if thou prate of Mountaines; let them throw
Millions of Akers on vs; till our ground
Sindging his pate against the burning Zone,
Make Ossa like a Wart. Nay, and thou'lt mouthe,
He rant as well as thou.

King. This is meere madnesse:
And thus a while the fit will worke on him:
Anon as patient as the female Dove,
When that her golden Cuplet are disclos'd;
His silence will sit drooping.

Ham. Heare you sir:
What is the reason that you use me thus?
I lov'd you ever; but it is no matter:
Let Hercules himselfe doe what he may,
The Cat will mew, and Dog will have his day.

Exit.

King. I pray you good Horatio wait upon him,
Strengthen you patience in our last nights speech,
We'll put the matter to the present push:
Good Gertrude set some watch over your sonne,
This Grave shall have a living Monument:
An houre of quiet shortly shall we see;
Till then in patience our proceeding be.

Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet and Horatio.

Ham. So much for this sir; now let me see the other,
You doe remember all the circumstance.

Hor. Remember it my Lord.

Ham. Sir, in my heart there was a kind of fighting,
That would not let me sleepe; me thought I lay
Worse than the mutines in the Bilboes, rashly,
(And praise be rashnesse for it) let us know,
Our inditcretion sometimes serves us well,
When our deare plots do paule, and that should teach us,
There's a Divinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.

Hor. That is most certaine.

Ham. Vp from my Cabin
My Sea-gowne scarft about me in the darke,
Grop'd I to find out them; had my desire,
Finger'd their Packet, and in fine, withdrew
To mine owne roome againe, making so bold,
(My teares forgetting manners) to unseale
Their grand Commission, where I found Horatio,
Oh royall knavery: An exact command,
Larded with many feverall sorts of reason:
Importing Denmarks health, and Englands too,
With hoo, such Bugges and Goblins in my life,
That on the supervize no leasure bated,
No not to stay the gringding of the Axe,
My head should be strucke off.

Hor. Ist possible?

Ham. Here's the Commission, reade it at more leisure:
But wilt thou heare how I did proceed?

Hor. I beseech you.

Ham. Being thus benetted round with Villaines,
Ere I could make a Prologue to my braines,
They had begun the Play. I fate me downe,
Devis'd a new Commission, wrote it faire,
I once did hold it as our Statists doe,
A basenesse to write faire; and laboured much
How to forget that learning: but sir now,
It did me yeomans service: wilt thou know
The effects of what I wrote?

Hor. I, good my Lord.

Ham. An earnest Conjururation from the King,
As England was his faithfull Tributary,
As love betweene them, as the Palme should flourish,
As Peace should still her wheaten Garland weare,
And stand a Comma tweene their amities,
And many such like Aflis of great charge,
That on the view and know of these Contents,
Without debatement further, more or lesse,
He should the bearers put to sodaine death,
Not shriving time allowed.

Hor. How was this seal'd?

Ham. Why, even in that was heaven ordinate;
I had my fathers Signet in my Purse,
Which was the Modell of that Danish Seale:
Folded the Writ up in forme of the other,
Subscrib'd it, gau'th Impression, plac'd it safely,
The changling never knowne: Now, the next day
Was our Sea-fight, and what to this was sement,
Thou know'it already.

Hor. So Guildenstare and Rosincros, goe too't.

Ham. Why man, they did make love to this employment
They are not neere my conscience; their debate
Doth by their owne insinuation grow:
Tis dangerous when baser nature comes Betweene the passe, and fell incensed points
Of mighty opposites.

Hor. Why, what a King is this?

Ham. Does it not, think'st thee, stand me now vpon,
He that hath kill'd my King, and whor'd my Mother,
Popt in betweene th' election and my hopes,
Throwne out his Angle for my proper life,
And with such cozenage; is't not perfect conscience,
To quit him with his arme? And is't not to be damn'd
To let this Canker of our nature come
In further evill.

Hor. It must be shortly knowne to him from England
What is the issue of the businesse there.

Ham. It will be short,
The interim's mine, and a mans life's no more
Than to say one: but I am very forry good Horatio,
That to Laertes I forgot my selfe;
For by the image of my cause I see
The portraiture of his; He count his favours:
But sure the bravery of his griefe did put me
Into a Towing passion.

Hor. Peace, who comes here?

Enter Ofricke.

(marke.

Ofr. Your Lordship is right welcome backe to Den-
Ham. I humbly thanke you sir, dost know this waterfly?

Hor. No my good Lord.

Ham. Thy state is the more gracious; for tis a Vice to know him: hee hath much Land, and fertile; let a Beast be Lord of Beasts, and his Crib shall stand at the Kings Messe; tis a Chough; but as I say, spacious in the possession of dirt.

Ofr. Swet Lord, if your friendship were at leasure, I should impart a thing to you from his Majesty.

Ham. I will receive it with all diligence of spirit; put your Bonnet to his right use, tis for the head.

Ofr. I thanke your Lordship, tis very hor.

Ham. No, beleeve mee, tis very cold, the wind is Northerly.

Ofr. It is indifferent cold my Lord indeed.

Ham. Mee thinks it is very foultry, and hot for my Complexion.

Ofricke

Ors. Exceedingly, my Lord, it is very foultry, as 'twere I cannot tell how: but my Lord, his Majesty bad me signifie to you, that he has laid a great wager on your head: Sir, this is the matter.

Ham. I beseech you remember.

Ors. Nay, in good faith, for mine ease in good faith: Sir, you are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is at his weapon.

Ham. What's his weapon?

Ors. Rapier and Dagger.

Ham. That's two of his weapons; but well.

Ors. The King sir has wag'd with him fixe Barbary horses, against the which he impon'd, as I take it, fixe French Rapiers and Poniards, with their assignes, as Girdle, Hangers, or so: three of the carriages in faith are very deare to fancy, very responsive to the hilts, most delicate carriages, and of very liberall conceit.

Ham. What call you the Carriages?

Ors. The Carriages Sir, are the Hangers.

Ham. The phrase would be more Germane to the matter: If we could carry Cannon by our sides; I would it might be Hanger still then; but on, fixe Barbary Horses, against fixe French Swords: their Assignes and three liberall conceited carriages, that's the French, but against the Danish; why is this impon'd as you call it?

Ors. The King Sir, hath laid that in a dozen passes betweene you and him, he shall not exceed you three hits; He hath one twelve for mine, and that would come to immediate triall, if your Lordship would vouchsafe the Answer.

Ham. How if I answer no?

Ors. I meane my Lord the opposition of your person in triall.

Ham. Sir, I will walke here in the Hall; if it please his Majestie, 'tis the breathing time of day with me; let the Foyles be brought, the Gentleman willing, and the King hold his purpose; I will winne for him if I can: if not, Ile gaine nothing but my shame, and the odde hits.

Ors. Shall I redeliver you ee'n so?

Ham. To this effect Sir, after what flourish your nature will.

Ors. I commend my duty to your Lordship. Exit.

Ham. Yours, yours; he does well to commend it himselfe, there are no tongues else for's tongue:

Hor. This Lapwing runs away with the shell on his head.

Ham. He did Comply with his Dug before he suck't it: thus had he and nine more of the same Beavy that I know the drossie Age dotes on; onely got the tune of the time, and outward habite of encounter, a kinde of yesty collection, which carries them through & through the most fond and winnowed opinions; and doe but blow them to their tryalls, the Bubbles are out.

Hor. You will lose this wager, my Lord.

Ham. I doe not thinke so, since he went into France, I have beene in continuall practice; I shall winne at the oddes; but thou wouldest not thinke how all heere about my heart: but it is no matter.

Hor. Nay, good my Lord.

Ham. It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gain-giving as would perhaps trouble a woman.

Hor. If your mind dislike any thing, obey. I will forestall their repaire hither, and say you are not fit.

Ham. Not a whit, we defie Augury; theres a speciall Providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, tis not to come: if it be not to come, it will be now: if it be not now; yet it will come; the readinesse is all, since no man ha's ought of what he leaves. What is't to leave be-times?

Enter King, Queene, Laertes and Lords, with other Attendants with Foyles, and Gauntlets, a Table and Flagons of Wine on it.

Kin. Come Hamlet, come, and take this hand from me.

Ham. Give me your pardon sir, I've done you wrong. But pardon't as you are a Gentleman.

This presence knowes,
And you must needs have heard how I am punish'd
With fore distraction? What I have done
That might your natures honor, and exception
Roughly awake, I here proclaime was madnesse:
Was't Hamlet wrong'd Laertes? Never Hamlet;
If Hamlet from himselfe be tane away:

And when he's not himselfe, do's wrong Laertes,
Then Hamlet doe's it not, Hamlet denies it:
Who does it then? His madnesse? If't be so,
Hamlet is of the Faction that is wrong'd,
His Madnesse is poore Hamlets enemy.

Sir, in this Audience,
Let my disclaiming from a purpos'd evill,
Free me so farre in your most generous thoughts,
That I have shot mine Arrow o're the house,
And hurt my Mother.

Laer. I am satisfied in Nature,
Whose motive in this case should stirre me most
To my Revenge. But in my termes of honor
I stand aloofe, and will no reconcilment,
Till by some elder Masters of knowne honour,
I have a voyce, and president of peace
To keepe my name ungorg'd. But till that time,
I doe receive your offer'd love like love,
And will not wrong it.

Ham. I doe embrace it freely,
And will this brothers wager frankly play.
Give us the Foyles: Come on.

Laer. Come one for me.

Ham. Ile be your Foyle Laertes, in mine ignorance,
Your skill shall like a Starre i'th'brightest night,
Sticke fiery off indeed.

Laer. You mocke me sir.

Ham. No, by this hand.

Kin. Give the Foyles young Ofricke,
Cousen Hamlet, you know the wager.

Ham. Very well my Lord,
Your Grace hath laid the oddes a'th' weaker side.

King. I doe not feare it,
I have seene you both:
But since he is better'd, we have therefore oddes.

Laer. This is too heavy,
Let me see another.

Ham. This likes me well,
These Foyles have have all a length. Prepare to Play.

Ors. I my good Lord.

King. Set me the Stopes of Wine upon that Table:
If Hamlet give the first, or second hit,
Or quit in answer of the third exchange,
Let all the Battlements their Ordnance fire,
The King shall drinke to Hamlets better breath,
And in the Cup an union shall he throw
Richer than that, which foure successive Kings
In Denmarks Crowne have worne.]

Give.

Give me the Cups,
And let the Kettle to the Trumpets speake,
The Trumpet to the Canoneer without,
The Cannons to the Heavens, the Heaven to Earth,
Now the King drinke to Hamlet. Come, begin,
And you the Iudges beare a wary eye,

Ham. Come on fir.

Laer. Come on fir.

They play.

Ham. One.

Laer. No.

Ham. Iudgement.

Ofr. A hit, a very palpable hit.

Laer. Well: againe.

King. Stay, give me drinke.

Hamlet, this Pearle is thine,

Here's to thy health. Give him the Cup,

Trumpet sound, shot goes off.

Ham. Ile play this bout first, set by a while.

Come: Another hit; what say you?

Laer. A touch, a touch, I doe confesse.

King. Our sonne shall win.

Qu. He's fat, and scant of breath.

Here's a Napkin, rub thy browes,

The Queene Carowfes to thy fortune, Hamlet.

Ham. Good Madam.

King. Gertrude, doe not drinke.

Qu. I will my Lord;

I pray you pardon me.

King. It is the poyson'd Cup, it is too late.

Ham. I dare not drinke yet Madam,

By and by.

Qu. Come, let me wipe thy face.

Laer. My Lord Ile hit him now.

King. I doe not think't.

Laer. And yet 'tis almost 'gainst my conscience.

Ham. Come, for the third.

Laertes, you but dally,

I pray you passe with your best violence.

I am affeard you make a wanton of me.

Laer. Say you so? Come on.

Play.

Ofr. Nothing neither way.

Laer. Have at you now.

In scuffling they change Rapiers.

King. Part them, they are incens'd.

Ham. Nay, come againe.

Ofr. Looke to the Queene there hoa.

Hor. They bleed on both sides. How is't my Lord?

Ofr. How is't Laertes?

Laer. Why as a Woodcocke

To my Sprindge, Ofricke,

I am justly kill'd with mine owne treachery.

Ham. How does the Queene?

King. She sounds to see them bleed.

Qu. No, no the drinke, the drinke,

Oh my deare Hamlet, the drinke, the drinke,

I am poyson'd.

Ham. Oh Villany! How? Let the doore be lock'd;

Treachery, seeke it out.

Laer. It is here Hamlet.

Hamlet, thou art slaine,

No medicine in the world can doe thee good.

In thee there is not halfe an houre of life;

The treacherous Instrument is in thy hand,

Vnbat'd and envenom'd: the foule practise

Hath turn'd it selfe on me. Loe, here I lye,

Never to rise againe: Thy Mothers poyson'd:

I can no more, the King, the King's to blame.

Ham. The point envenom'd too,

Then venome to thy worke.

Hurts the King.

All. Treason, Treason.

King. O yet defend me Friends, I am but hurt.

Ham. Heere thou incestuous, murtherous,

Damned Dane.

Drinke off this Potion: Is thy Vnion here?

Follow my Mother.

King Dyes.

Laer. He is justly serv'd.

It is a poyson temp' red by himselfe:

Exchange forgiveness with me, Noble Hamlet;

Mine and my Fathers death come not upon thee,

Nor thine on me.

Dyes.

Ham. Heaven make thee free of it, I follow thee.

I am dead Horatio, wretched Queene adiew,

You that looke pale and tremble at this chance,

That are but Mutes or audience at this act:

Had I but time (as this fell Sergeant death

Is strick't in this Arrest) oh I could tell you,

But let it be: Horatio, I am dead,

Thou liv'st, report me and my causes right

To the unsatisfied.

Hor. Never beleewe it.

I am more an Antike Roman then a Dane:

Ham. As th'art a man, give me the Cup,

Let go, by heaven Ile have't.

Oh good Horatio, what a wounded name,

(Things standing thus unknowne) shall live behind me.

If thou did'st ever hold me in thy heart,

Absent thee from felicitie a while,

And in this harsh world draw thy breath in paine,

To tell my Storie.

March a farre off, and shont within.

What warlike noyse is this?

Enter Ofricke.

(Land,

Ofr. Yong Fortinbras, with conquest come from Po-
To th' Ambassadors of England gives this warlike volly.

Ham. O I dye Horatio:

The potent poyson quie ore-crowes my spirit,

I cannot live to heare the Newes from England.

But I doe prophesie th' election lights

On Fortinbras, he ha's my dying voyce,

So tell him with the occurrents more and lesse,

Which have solicited. The rest is silence, O, O, O, O, Dies.

Hor. Now cracks a Noble heart:

Goodnight sweet Priende,

And flights of Angels sing thee to thy rest,

Why do's the Drumme come hither?

Enter Fortinbras and English Ambassador, with Drumme, Colours, and Attendants.

Fort. Where is this fight?

Hor. What is it ye would see;

If fought of woe or wonder, cease your search.

For. His quarry cries on Havocke. Oh proud death,

What Feast is toward in thine eternall Cell.

That thou so many Princes at a shoot.

So bloodily hast strooke.

Amb. The fight is dismall,

And our affaires from England come too late,

The eares are senselesse that should give us hearing,

To tell him his command'ment is fulfill'd,

That

That Rosineros and Guildestar are dead :
Where should we have our thanks ?

Hor. Not from his mouth,
Had it th'ability of life to thanke you :
He never gave command'ment for their death.
But since so jumpe upon this bloody question,
You from the Polake warres, and you from England
Are here arrived. Give order that these bodies
High on a stage be placed to the view,
And let me speake to th'yet unknowing world,
How these things came about. So shall you heare
Of carnall, bloody, and unnaturall acts,
Of accidentall judgements, casuall slaughters
Of death's put on by cunning, and forc'd cause,
And in this upshot, purposes mistooke,
False on the Inventors heads. All this can I Truly deliver.

For. Let us haste to heare it,
And call the Noblest to the Audience.
For me, with sorrow, I embrace my Fortune,
I have some Rites of memory in this Kingdome,

Which are to claime, my vantage doth
Invite me.

Hor. Of that I shall alwayes cause to speake
And from his mouth
Whose voyce will draw on more :
But let this same be presently perform'd,
Even whiles mens mindes are wilde,
Lest more mischance
On plots, and errours happen.

For. Let foure Captaines
Beare Hamlet like a Souldier to the Stage,
For he was likely, had he beene put on
To have prov'd most royally :
And for his passage,
The Souldiers Musicke, and the rites of Warre
Speake loudly for him.
Take up the body ; Such a sight as this Becomes the Field, but here shewes much ami eff.
Goe, bid the Souldiers shoot.

Exeunt Marching : after the which, a Peale of Ordnance are shot off.

FIN IS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF KING LEAR.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Kent, Gloucester, and Edmond.

Kent.

I Thought the King had more affected the Duke of Albany, then Cornwall.

Glou. It did alwayes seeme to us : But now in the division of the Kingdome, it appears not which of the Dukes he values most, for qualities are so weigh'd, that curiosity in neither, can make choise of either moiety.

Kent. Is not this your sonne, my Lord ?

Glou. His breeding Sir, hath been at my charge. I have so often blush'd to acknowledge him, that now I am braz'd too't.

Kent. I cannot conceive you.

Glou. Sir, this yong Fellowes mother could ; where-upon she grew round womb'd, and had indeed ( Sir ) a Sonne for her Cradle, ere she had a husband for her bed. Doe you smell a fault ?

Kent. I cannot with the fault undone, the issue of it being so proper.

Glou. But I have a Sonne, Sir, by order of Law, some yeere elder than this ; who, yet is no dearer in my account, though this Knave came something sawcily to the world before hee was sent for : yet was his Mother faire, there was good sport at his making, and the whorson must be acknowledged. Doe you know this Nobleman, Edmond ?

Edm. No, my Lord.

Glou. My Lord of Kent :

Remember him hereafter, as my honourable Friend.

Edm. My services to your Lordship.

Kent. I must love you, and sue to know you better.

Edm. Sir, I shall study deserving.

Glou. He hath been out nine yeares, and away he shall againe. The King is comming.

Sennet. Enter King Lear, Cornwall, Albany, Gonerill, Regan, Cordelia, and attendants.

Lear. Attend the Lords of France & Burgundy, Gloster

Glou. I shall my Lord.

Exit.

Lear. Meane time we shal expresse our darker purpose. Give me the Map there. Know, that we have divided In three, our Kingdome : and 'tis our fast intent, To shake all cares and businesse from our Age, Conferring them on yonger strengths, while we Vnburthen'd crawl toward death. Our son of Cornwall, And you our no lesse loving Sonne of Albany,

We have this houre a constant will to publish Our Daughters severall Dowers, that future strife May be preveted now. The Princes, France, & Burgundy. Great Rivals in our yonger daughters love, Long in our Court, have made their amorous sojourn, And here are to be answer'd. Tell me my daughters ( Since now we will divest us both of Rule, Interest of Territory, Cares of State ) Which of you shall we say doth love us most, That we, our largest bounty may extend Where nature doth with merit challenge. Gonerill, Our eldest borne, speake first.

Gon. Sir, I love you more than word can weild the Dearer than eye-sight, space, and liberty, (matter, Beyond what can be valued, rich or rare, No lesse than life, with grace, health, beauty, honor : As much as childe ere lov'd, or Father found. A love that makes breath poore, and speech unable, Beyond all manner of so much I love you.

Cor. What shall Cordelia speake ? Love, and be silent.

Lear. Of all these bounds even from this Line, to this, With shadowy Forrests, and with Champions rich'd With plenteous Rivers, and wide-skirted Meades We make thee Lady. To thine and Albanies issues Be this perpetuall. What sayes our second Daughter, Our dearest Regan, wife of Cornwall ?

Reg. I am made of that selfe-mettle as my sister, And prize me at her worth. In my true heart, I finde she names my very deed of love : Onely she comes too short, that I professe My selfe an enemy to all other joyes, Which the most precious square of senie professes, And finde I am alone felicitate In your deere Highnesse love.

Cor. Then poore Cordelia, And yet not so, since I am sure my love's More ponderous than my tongue.

Lear. To thee, and thine hereditary ever, Remaine this ample third of our faire Kingdome, No lesse in space, validity, and pleasure Than that conferr'd on Gonerill. Now our Ioy, Although our last and least ; to whose yong love, The Vines of France, and Milke of Burgundy, Strive to be interest. What can you say, to draw A third, more opulent then your Sisters ? speake.

Cor. Nothing my Lord.

Lear. Nothing ?

Cor.

Cor. Nothing.

Lear. Nothing will come of nothing, speake againe.

Cor. Vnhappy that I am, I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth: I love your Majesty
According to my bond, no more nor lesse.

Lear. How, how Cordelia? Mend your speech a little,
Lest you may marre your fortunes.

Cor. Good my Lord,
You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me.
I returne those duties backe as are right fit,
Obey you, Love you, and most honour you.
Why have my Sisters husbands, if they say
They love you all? happily when I shall wed.
That Lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry
Halfe my love with him, halfe my Care, and Duty,
Sure I shall never marry like my Sisters.

Lear. But goes thy heart with this?

Cor. I my good Lord.

Lear. So young, and so untender?

Cor. So young my Lord, and true.

Lear. Let it be so, thy truth then be thy dowre:
For by the sacred radiance of the Sunne,
The mysteries of Hecate and the night:
By all the operations of the Orbes,
From whom we doe exist, and cease to be,
Heere I disclaime all my Paternall care,
Propinquity and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me,
Hold thee from this for ever. The barbarous Scythian,
Or he that makes his generation messes
To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosome
Be as well neighbour'd, pittied, and releiv'd,
As thou my sometime Daughter.

Kent. Good my Liege.

Lear. Peace Kent.

Come not betweene the Dragon and his wrath,
I lov'd her most, and thought to set my rest
On her kind nursery. Hence and avoyd my sight;
So be my grave my peace, as here I give
Her fathers heart from her; call France, who stirs?
Call Burgundy, Cornwall, and Albany,
With my two Daughters, Dowres, digest the third,
Let pride, which she calls plainnesse, marry her:
I doe invest you jointly with my power,
Preheminence, and all the large effects
That troope with Majesty. Our selfe by Monthly course,
With reservation of an hundred Knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make with you by due turne, onely we shall retaine
The name, and all th'addition to a King: the Sway, Revennew, Execution of the rest,
Beloved Sonnes be yours, which to confirme,
This Coronet part betweene you.

Kent. Royall Lear,

Whom I have ever honor'd as my King,
Lov'd as my Father, as my Master follow'd,
As my Patron thought on in my praiers.

Lear. The bow is bent and drawne, make from the shaft.

Kent. Let it fall rather, though the forke invade
The region of my heart, be Kent unmannerly,
When Lear is mad, what wouldest thou doe old man?
Thinkst thou that duty shall have dread to speake
When power to flattery bowes?
To plainnesse honour's bound,
When Majesty falls to folly, reserve thy state,
And in thy best consideration checke

This hideous rashnesse, answer my life, my judgement:
Thy yongest Daughter do's not love thee least,
Nor are those emty hearted, whose low sounds
Reverbe no hollownesse.

Lear. Kent, on thy life no more.

King. My life I never held but as a pawne
To wage against thine enemies, nere feare to lose it,
Thy safety being motive.

Lear. Out of my sight.

Kent. See better Lear, and let me still remaine
The true blanke of thine eye.

Lear. Now by Apollo.

Kent. Now by Apollo, King
Thou swear'st thy gods in vaine.

Lear. O Vassall! Mifcreant.

Alb. Cor. Deare Sir forbear.

Kent. Kill thy Physician, and thy fee bestow
Vpon the foule disease, revoke thy gift,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
Ile tell thee thou dost evill.

Lear. Heare me recreant, on thine allegiance heare me;
That thou hast sought to make us breake our vower,
Which we durst never yet; and with strain'd pride,
To come betwixt our sentence, and our power.
Which, nor our nature, nor our place can beare;
Our potency made good, take thy reward:
Five dayes we doe allot thee for provision,
To shield thee from disasters of the world,
And on the sixth to turne thy hated backe
Vpon our Kingdome; if the tenth day following,
Thy banisht trunk be found in our Dominions,
The moment is thy death, away. By Iupiter,
This shall not be revok'd.

Kent. Fare thee well King, sith thus thou wilt appeare,
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here;
The gods to their deare shelter take thee Maid,
That justly think'st, and hast most rightly said:
And your large speeches, may your deeds approve,
That good effects may spring from words of love:
Thus Kent, O Princes, bids you all adieu, Hee'l shape his old course in a Countrey new. Exit.

Enter Gloster with France, and Burgundy Attendants.

Cor. Here's France and Burgundy, my Noble Lord.

Lear. My Lord of Burgundy,
We first addresse toward you, who with this King
Hath rival'd for our Daughter; what in the least
Will you require in present Dower with her,
Or cease your quest of Love?

Bur. Most Royall Majestie,
I crave no more than hath your Highnesse offer'd,
Nor will you tender lesse?

Lear. Right Noble Burgundy,
When she was deare to us, we held her so.
But now her price is fallen: Sir, there she stands,
If ought within that little seeming substance,
Or all of it with our displeasure piec'd,
And nothing more may fitly like your Grace,
Shee's there, and she is yours.

Bur. I know no answer.

Lear. Will you with those infirmities she owes,
Unfriended, new adopted to our hate,
Dowr'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her, or leave her.

Bur. Par-

Bur. Pardon me Royall Sir,
Election makes not up in such conditions.
Lear. Then leave her sir, for by the powre that made
I tell you all her wealth. For you great King, (me,
I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate, therefore beseech you
To avert your liking a more worthier way,
Then on a wretch whom Nature is ashamed
Almost to acknowledge hers.

Fra. This is most strange,
That she who even but now, was your best object,
The argument of your praise, balme of your age,
The best, the dearest, should in this trice of time
Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of favour: sure her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it: Or your fore-voucht affection
Fall into taint; which to beleieve of her
Must be a faith that reason without miracle
Should never plant in me.

Cor. I yet beseech your Majesty,
If for I want that glib and oylie Art,
To speake and purpose not, since what I will intend,
He do't before I speake, that you make knowne
It is no vicious blot, murther, or foulness,
No unchaste action or dishonored step
That hath depriv'd me of your Grace and favour,
But even for want of that, for which I am richer,
A still solliciting eye, and such a tongue,
That I am glad I have not, though not to have it,
Hath lost me in your liking.

Lear. Better thou hadst,
Not beene borne, then not to have pleas'd me better,

Fra. Is it but this? A tardiness in nature,
Which often leaves the history unspoke
That it intends to doe; my Lord of Burgundy,
What say you to the Lady? Love's not love
When it is mingled with regards, that stands
Aloofe from th'intire point, will you have her?
She is herselfe a Dowry.

Bur. Royall King,
Give but that portion which your selfe propos'd,
And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
Dutchesse of Burgundy.

Lear. Nothing, I have sworne, I am firme.

Bur. I am sorry then you have so lost a Father.
That you must loose a husband.

Cor. Peace be with Burgundy,
Since that respect and fortunes are his love,
I shall not be his wife.

Fra. Fairest Cordelia, that art most rich being poore,
Most choise forsaken, and most lov'd despis'd,
Thee and thy vertues here I seize upon,
Be it lawfull I take up what's cast away,
Gods, gods! 'Tis strange, that from their cold'st neglect
My love should kindle to enflam'd respect.
Thy dowrelesse Daughter, King, throwne to my chance,
Is Queene of us, of ours, and our faire France:
Not all the Dukes of watrish Burgundy,
Can buy this unpriz'd precious Maid of me.
Bid them farewell Cordelia, though unkind,
Thou loofest here a better where to find.

Lear. Thou hast her France, let her bethine, for we Have no such Daughter, nor shall ever see
That face of hers againe, therefore be gone,
Without our Grace, our Love, our Benizon:

Come Noble Burgundy.

Flourish.

Exeunt.

Fra. Bid farewell to your Sisters.

Cor. The Jewels of our father, with wash'd eyes
Cordelia leaves you, I know you what you are,
And like a Sister am most loth to call
Your faults as they are named. Love well our father:
To your professed bosomes I commit him,
But yet alas, stood I within his Grace,
I would prefer him to a better place,
So farewell to you both.

Reg. Prescribe not us our duty.

Gen. Let your study

Be to content your Lord, who hath receiv'd you,
At fortunes almes, you have obedience scantied,
And well are worth the want that you have wanted.

Cor. Time shall unfold what plighted cunning hides,
Who covers faults, at last with shame derides.
Well may you prosper.

Fra. Come my faire Cordelia. Exit France and Cor.

Gen. Sister, it is not little I have to say,
Of what most neerely appertaines to us both,
I thinke our father will hence to night. (with us.

Reg. That's most certaine, and with you: next moneth

Gen. You see how full of changes his age is, the observation we have made of it hath beene little: he alwayes lov'd our Sister most, and with what poore judgement he hath now cast her off, appears too too grossely.

Reg. 'Tis the infirmity of his age, yet he hath ever but slenderly knowne himselfe.

Gen. The best and soundest of his time hath beene but rash, then must we looke from his age, to receive not a-longe the imperfections of long ingrafted condition, but therewithall the unruly way-wardnesse, that infirme and cholericke yeeres bring with them.

Reg. Such unconstant starts are we like to have from him, as this of Kents banishment.

Gen. There is further complement of leave-taking be-twene France and him, pray you let us sit together, if our father carry authority with such disposition as he beares this last surrender of his will but offend us.

Reg. We shall further thinke of it,

Gen. We must doe something, and i'th'heate. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Bastard.

Bast. Thou Nature art my Goddesse, to thy Law
My services are bound, wherefore should I
Stand in the plague of custome, and permit
The curiosity of Nations, to deprive me?
For that I am some twelve, or fourteene Moonshines
Lag of a brother? Why Bastard? Wherefore base?
When my Dimensions are as well compact,
My mind as generous, and my shape as true
As honest Madams issue? Why brand they us
With Base? With basenesse Bastardy? Base, Base?
Who in the lusty stealth of Nature, take
More composition, and fierce quality,
Then doth within a dull stale tyred bed
Goe to th'creating a whole tribe of Fops
Got 'twene a sleepe, and wake? Well then,
Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land,
Our fathers love, is to the Bastard Edmund,
As to th'legitimate: fine word: Legitimate!

ff

Well

Well, my Legitimate, if this Letter speed,
And my invention thrive, Edmund the base
Shall to'th' Legitimate: I grow, I prosper:
Now gods, stand up for Bastards.

Enter Gloucester.

Glo. Kent banish'd thus? and France in choller parted?
And the King gone to night? Prescrib'd his power,
Confin'd to exhibition? All this gone
Vpon the gad? Edmund, how now? What newes?

Bast. So please your Lordship, none.

Glo. Whe so earnestly seeke you to put up that Let-

Bast. I know no newes, my Lord. (ter?)

Glo. What Paper were you reading?

Bast. Nothing my Lord.

Glo. No? what needed then that terrible dispatch of it into your Pocket? The quality of nothing, hath not such neede to hide it selfe. Lets see: come, if it be nothing, I shall not need Spectacles.

Bast. I beseech you Sir, pardon me; it is a Letter from my Brother, that I have not all ore-read; and for so much as I have perus'd, I find it not fit for your ore-looking.

Glo. Give me the Letter, Sir,

Bast. I shall offend, either to detaine, or give it:
The Contents, as in part I understand them,
Are too blame.

Glo. Lets see, lets see.

Bast. I hope for my brothers justification, he wrote this but as an essay, or taste of my Vertue.

Glo. reads. This policy, and reverence of Age, makes the world bitter to best of our times: keepes our Fortunes from us, till our oldnesse cannot relish them. I begin to find an idle and fond bondage, in the oppression of aged tyranny, who swayes not as it hath power, but as it is suffer'd. Come to me, that of this I may speake more. If our Father would sleepe till I wak'd him, you should enjoy halfe his Revennew for ever, and live the beloved of your brother. Edgar.

Hum? Conspiracy? Sleepe till I wake him, you should enjoy halfe his Revennew: my Sonne Edgar, had he a hand to write this? A heart and braine to breede it in?
When came you to this? Who brought it?

Bast. It was not brought me, my Lord; theres the cunning of it. I found it throwne in at the Casement of my Clofset.

Glo. You know the character to be your Brothers?

Bast. If the matter were good my Lord, I durst sweare it were his: but in respect of that, I would faine thinke it were not.

Glo. It is his.

Bast. It is his hand, my Lord: I hope his heart is not in the Contents.

Glo. Has he never before sounded you in this businesse?

Bast. Never my Lord. But I have heard him oft maintaine it to besit, that Sonnes at perfect age, and Fathers declind, the Father should be as Ward to the Son, and the Sonne manage his Revennew.

Glo. O Villaine, villaine: his very opinion in the Letter. Abhorred Villaine, unnaturall, detested, brutish Villaine; worse then brutish: Goe sirrah, seeke him: Ile apprehend him. Abominable Villaine, where is he?

Bast. I doe not well know my L. if it shall please you to suspend your indignation against my brother, till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent, you should run a certaine course: where, if you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your honor, and shake in peeces, the heart of his obedience. I dare pawne downe my life for him, that he hath writ this to feele my affection to your honor, and to no other pretence of danger.

Glo. Thinke you so?

Bast. If your honor judge it meete, I will place you where you shall heare us conferre of this, and by an Auricular assurance have your satisfaction, and that without any further delay, then this very Evening.

Glo. He cannot be such a Monster. Edmund seeke him out: winde me into him, I pray you: frame the Businesse after your owne wisdom. I would unstate my selfe, to be in a due resolution.

Bast. I will seeke him Sir, presently: convey the businesse as I shall find meanes, and acquaint you withall.

Glo. These late Eliples in the Sun and Moone portend no good to us: though the wisdom of Nature can reason it thus, and thus, yet Nature finds it selfe scourg'd by the sequent effects. Love cooles, friendship falls off, brothers divide. In Cities, mutinies; in Countries, discord: in Palaces, Treason; and the Bond crack'd, twixt Sonne and Father. This villaine of mine comes under the prediction: theres Son against Father, the King falls from by as of Nature, theres father against Child. We have seene the best of our time. Machinations, hollownesse, treachery, and all ruinous disorders follow us disquietly to our Graves. Find out this Villaine Edmund, it shall lose thee nothing, doe it carefully: and the Noble and true harted Kent banish'd; his offence, honesty. Tis strange. Exit.

Bast. This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the sursets of our owne behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters, the Sun, the Moone, and Starres, as if we were villaines on necessity, Foolles by heavenly compulsion, Knaves, Theeves, and Treachers by Spharicall predominance. Drunkards, Ly-ars and Adulterers by an inforc'd obedience of Planetary influence; and all that we are evill in, by a divine thrusting on. An admirable evasion of Whore-master-man, to lay his Goatish disposition on the charge of a Starre,
My father compounded with my mother under the Dragonstaile, and my Nativity was under Vrsa Maior, so that it followes, I am rough and Leacherous. I should have bin that I am, had the maidenlest Starre in the Fir-mament twinkled on my bastardizing.

Enter Edgar.

Pat: he comes like the Catastrophe of the old Comedy:
my Cue is villanous Melancholly, with a sigh like Tom o'Bedlam.—O these Eclipses do portend these divisions. Fa, Sol, La, Me.

Edg. How now brother Edmund, what serious contemplation are you in?

Bast. I am thinking brother of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these Eliples.

Edg. Doe you busie your selfe with that?

Bast. I promise, the effects he writes of, succede un-happily.

When saw you my Father last?

Edg. The night gone by.

Bast. Spake you with him?

Edg. I, two houres together.

Bast. Parted you in good tearmes? Found you no displeasure in him, by word, nor countenance?

Epg. None at all.

Bast. Bethinke your selfe wherein you may have offended him: and at my entreaty forbear his presence, untill some little time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure, which at this instant so rageth in him, that with the mis-chiefe

chiefe of your person, it would scarcely alay.

Edg. Some Villaine hath done me wrong.

Edm. Thats my feare, I pray you have a continent forbearance till the speed of his rage goes slower : and as I say, retire with me to my lodging, from whence I will fully bring you to heare my Lord speake : pray ye goe, theres my key : if you doe stirre abroad, goe arm'd.

Edg. Arm'd, Brother ?

Edm. Brother, I advise you to the best, I am no honest man, if there be any good meaning toward you : I have told you what I have seene, and heard : But faintly. Nothing like the image, and horror of it, pray you away.

Edg. Shall I heare from you anon ?

Exit.

Edm. I doe serve you in this businesse :

A Credulous Father, and a Brother Noble,
Whose nature is so farre from doing harmes,
That he suspects none : on whose foolish honesty
My practises ride easie : I see the businesse.
Let me, if not by birth, have lands by wit,
All with me's meete, that I can fashion fit.

Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Gonerill, and Steward.

Gon. Did my father strike my Gentleman for chiding of his foole ?

Stew. I Madam.

Gon. By day and night, he wrongs me, every howre He flashes into one grosse crime, or other, That sets us all at odds : Ile not endure it ; His Knights grow riotous, and himsele upbraides us On every trifle. When he returnes from hunting. I will not speake with him, say I am sicke, If you come slacke of former services You shall doe well, the fault of it Ile answer.

Stew. Hes comming Madam, I heare him.

Gon. Put on what weary negligence you please. You and your Fellowes : I'de have it come to question ; If he distaste it, let him to my Sister, Whose mind and mine I know in that are one, Remember what I have said.

Stew. Well Madam.

Gon. And let his Knights have colder looks among you : what growes of it no matter, advise your fellowes so, Ile write straight to my Sister to hold my course: prepare for dinner.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Kent.

Kent. If but as well I other accents borrow,
That can my speech defuse, my good intent
May carry through it selfe to that full issue
For which I raiz'd my likenesse. Now banisht Kent,
If thou canst serve where thou dost stand condemn'd,
So may it come, thy Master whom thou lov'st,
Shall find thee full of labours.

Hornes within. Enter Lear and Attendants.

Lear. Let me not stay a jot for dinner, goe get it ready : how now, what art thou ?

Kent. A man Sir.

Lear. What dost thou professe ? What wouldst thou with us ?

Kent. I doe professe to be no lesse then I seeme ; to serve him truly that will put me in trust, to love him that is honest, to converse with him that is wise and sayes little, to feare judgement, to fight when I cannot choose, and to eate no fish.

Lear. What are thou ?

Kent. A very honest hearted Fellow, and as poore as the King.

Lear. If thou best as poore for a subject, as he's for a King, thou art poore enough. What wouldst thou ?

Kent. Service.

Lear. Whom wouldst thou serve ?

Kent. You,

Lear. Do'st thou know me fellow ?

Kent. No Sir, but you have that in your countenance, which I would faine call Master.

Lear. Whats that ?

Kent. Authority.

Lear. What services canst thou doe ?

Kent. I can keepe honest counsailes, ride, run, marre a curious tale in telling it, and deliver a plaine message bluntly : that which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in, and the best of me, is Diligence.

Lear. How old art thou ?

Kent. Not so young Sir to love a woman for singing, nor so old to dote on her for any thing. I have yeares on my backe forty eight.

Lear. Follow me, that shalt serve me, if I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part from thee yet. Dinner ho, dinner, wheres my knave ? my foole ? goe you and call my foole hither. You you Sirrah, wheres my Daughter ?

Enter Steward.

Stew. So please you —

Exit.

Lear. What sayes the fellow there ? Call the Clotpole backe : wheres my Foole ? Ho, I thinke the worlds asleepe, how now ? Wheres that Mungrell ?

Knigh. He saies my Lord, your Daughters is not well.

Lear. Why came not the slave backe to mee when I call'd him ?

Knigh. Sir, he answered me in the roundest manner, he would not.

Lear. He would not ?

Knigh. My Lord, I know not what the matter is, but to my judgement your highnesse is not entertain'd with that Ceremonious affection as you were wont, theres a great abatement of kindnesse appears as well, in the generall dependants, as in the Duke himsele also, and your Daughter.

Lear. Ha ? Saist thou so ?

Knigh. I beseech you pardon me my Lord, if I bee mistaken, for my duty cannot be silent, when I thinke your highnesse wrong'd, Lear. Thou but remembrest me of mine owne Conception, I have perceived a most faint neglect of late, which I have rather blamed as mine owne jealous curiosity, then as a very pretence and purpose of unkindnesse ; I will looke further into't : but wheres my Foole ? I have not seene him this two dayes.

Knigh. Since my young Ladies going into France

ff 2

Sir,

Sir, the foole hath much pined away.

Lear. No more of that, I have noted it well, goe you and tell my Daughter, I would speake with her. Goe you call hither my Foole; Oh you Sir, you, come you hither Sir, who am I Sir.

Enter Steward.

Stew. My Ladies Father.

Lear. My Ladies Father? my Lords knave, you whorson dog, you slave, you curre.

Stew. I am none of these my Lord, I beseech your pardon.

Lear. Doe you bandy lookes with me, you Rascall?

Stew. Ile not be stricken my Lord.

Kent. Nor tript neither, you base Foot-ball player.

Lear. I thanke thee fellow.

Thou serv'st me, and Ile love thee.

Kent. Come sir, arise, away, Ile teach you differences: away, away, if you will measure your lubbers length againe, tarry, but away, goe to, have you wisedome, so.

Lear. Now my friendly knave I thanke thee, theres earnest of thy service.

Enter Foole.

Foole. Let me hire him too, heres my Coxcombe.

Lear. How now my pretty knave, how dost thou?

Foole. Sirrah, you were best take my Coxcombe.

Lear. Why my Boy?

Foole. Why? for taking ones part thats out of favour; nay, and thou canst not smile as the wind sits, thou'lt catch cold shortly, there take my Coxcombe; why this fellow has banish'd two on's daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will; if thou follow him, thou must needes weare my Coxcomb. How now Nunckle? would I had two Coxcombes and two Daughters.

Lear. Why my Boy?

Foole. If I gave them all my living, Ild keepe my Coxcombe my selfe, theres mine, beg another of thy Daughters.

Lear. Take heed Sirrah, the whip.

Foole. Truths a dog must to kennell, he must bee whipt out, when the Lady Brach may stand by'th fire and stinke.

Lear. A pestilent gall to me.

Foole. Sirra, Ile teach thee a speech.

Lear. Doe.

Foole. Marke it Nuncle;
Have more then thou showest,
Speake lesse then thou knowest,
Lend lesse then thou owest,
Ride more then thou goest,
Learne more then thou trowest,
Set lesse then thou throwest:
Leave thy drinke and thy whore,
And keepe in a dore,
And thou shalt have more,
Then two tens to a score.

Kent. This is nothing foole.

Foole. Then tislike the breath of an unfeed Lawyer, you gave menothing for't, can you make no use of nothing Nuncle?

Lear. Why no Boy,

Nothing can be made out of nothing.

Foole. Prethee tell him, so much the rent of his land comesto, he will not beleeve a Foole.

Lear. A bitter Foole.

Foole. Dost thou know the difference my Boy, betweene a bitter Foole, and a sweet one.

Lear. No Lad; teach me.

Foole. Nunckle, give me an egge, and Ile give thee two Crownes.

Lear. What two Crownes shall they be?

Foole. Why after I have cut the egge ith'middle and eate up the meate, the two Crownes of the egge. when thou clovest thy Crowne ith'middle, and gav'st away both parts, thou boar'st thine Assie on thy backe o're the durt, thou hadst little wit in thy bald crowne, when thou gav'st thy golden one away: if I speake like my selfe in this, let him be whipt that first findes it so.

Fooles had nere lesse grace in a yeere,

For wisemen are growne foppish,

And know not how their wits to weare,

Their manners are so apish.

Lear. When were you wont to be so full of Songs sirrah?

Foole. I have used it Nunckle, ere since thou mad'st thy Daughters thy Mothers, for when thou gav'st them the rod, and putst downe thine owne breeches, then they

For sodaine joy did weepe,

And I for sorrow sung,

That such a King should play bo-peepe,

And goe the Foole among.

Prethy Nunckle keepe a Schoolemaster that can teach thy Foole to lye, I would faine learne to lye.

Lear. And you lye sirrah, we'll have you whipt.

Foole. I marvell what kin thou and thy daughters are, they'l have me whipt for speaking true: thou'lt have me whipt for lying, and sometimes I am whipt for holding my peace. I had rather be any kind o'thing then a foole; and yet I would not be thee Nunckle, thou hast pared thy wit o'both sides, and left nothing ith'middle; heere comes one o'the parings.

Enter Gonerill.

Lear. How now Daughter? what makes that Frontlet on? You are too much of late ith'frowne.

Foole. Thou wast a pretty fellow when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning, now thou art an O without a figure, I am better then thou art now, I am a foole, thou art nothing. Yes fortooth I will hold my tongue, so your face bids me, though you say nothing.

Mum, mum, he that keepe nor crust, nor crum,
Weary of all, shall want some. Thats a sheal'd Pescod.

Gon. Not onely Sir this, your all-lycenc'd Foole,
But other of your insolent retinue

Doe hourly Carpe and Quarrell, breaking forth
In ranke, and not to be endured) riots Sir.

I had thought by making this well knowne unto you,
To have found a safe redresse, but now grow fearefull
By what your selfe too late have spoke and done,
That you protect this course, and put it on
By your allowance, which if you should, the fault
Would not scape censure, nor the redresses sleepe,
Which in the tender of a wholesome weale,
Might in their working doe you that offence,
Which else were shame, that then necessity
Will call discreet proceeding.

Foole. For you know Nunckle, the Hedge-Sparrow fed the Cuckoos so long, that it had its head bit off by it young, so out went the Candle, and we were left darkling.

Lear. Are you our Daughter?

Gon. I would you would make use of your good wife-
(Whereof I know you are fraught) and put away
These dispositions, which of late transport you
From what you rightly are.

Foole.

Foole. May not an Ass know, when the Cart drawes the Horse?

Whoop Iugge I love thee.

Lear. Dos any heere know me?

This is not Lear:

Do's Lear walke thus? Speake thus? Where are his eyes?

Either his Notion weakens, his Discernings

Are Lethargied. Ha! Waking? Tis not so?

Who is it that can tell me who I am?

Foole. *Lear*s shadow.

Lear. Your name, faire Gentlewoman?

Gon. This admiration Sir, is much oth' favour

Of other your new pranks. I doe beseech you

To understand my purposes aright:

As you are Old, and Reverend, should be Wise.

Heere doe you keepe a hundred Knights and Squires,

Men so disorder'd, so deboth'd, and bold,

That this our Court infected, with their manners,

Shewes like a riotous Inn; Epicurisme and Lust

Makes it more like a Taverne, or a Brothell,

Then a grac'd Pallace. The shame it selfe doth speake

For instant remedy. Be then desir'd

By her, that else will take the thing she begges,

A little to disquantity your Traine,

And the remainders that shall still depend,

To be such men as may besort your Age,

Which know themselves, and you.

Lear. Darkeness, and Divels,

Saddle my horses: call my Traine together.

Degenerate Bastard, Ile not trouble thee;

Yet have I left a daughter.

Gon. You strike my people, and your disorder'd rable, make Servants of their Betters.

Enter Albany.

Lear. Woe, that too late repents:

Is it your will, speake Sir? Prepare my Horses,

Ingratitude! thou Marble-hearted Fiend,

More hideous when thou shew'st thee in a Child,

Then the Sea-monster.

Alb. Pray Sir be patient.

Lear. Detested Kite, thou lyest.

My Traine are men of choyce, and rarest parts,

That all particulars of duty know,

And in the most exact regard, support

The worships of their name. O most small fault,

How ugly didst thou in Cordelia shew?

Which like an Engine, wrencht my frame of Nature

From the fixt place: drew from my heart all love,

And added to the gall. O Lear, Lear, Lear!

Beate at this gate that let thy Folly in,

And thy deere Iudgement out. Goe, goe, my people.

Alb. My Lord, I am guiltlesse, as I am ignorant

Of what hath moved you.

Lear. It may be so, my Lord,

Heare Nature, heare deere Goddesse, heare:

Suspend thy purpose, if thou didst intend

To make this Creature fruitfull:

Into her Wombe convey sterility,

Dry up in her the Organs of increase,

And from her derogate body, never spring

A Babe to honor her. If she must teeme,

Create her child of Spite, that it may live

And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her.

Let it stampe wrinkles in her brow of youth,

With cadent Teares fret Channels in her cheekes,

Turne all her Mothers paines, and benefits
To laughter, and contempt: That she may feele,
How sharper than a Serpents tooth it is,
To have a thankelesse Childe. Away, away.

Exit.

Alb. Now Gods that we adore.

Whercof comes this?

Gon. Never afflict your selfe to know of it:

But let his disposition have that scope

As dotage gives it.

Enter Lear.

Lear. What fifty of my followers at a clap?

Within a fortnight?

Alb. Whats the matter, Sir?

Lear. Ile tell thee:

Life and death, I am asham'd

That thou hast power to shake my manhood thus,

That these hot teares, which breake from me perforce

Should make thee worth them,

Blasts and Fogges upon thee:

Th'untented woundings of a Fathers curse

Pierce every sense about thee. Old fond eyes,

Beweep thee once againe, Ile plucke ye out,

And cast you with the waters that you loose

To temper Clay. Ha? Let it be so.

I have another daughter,

Who I am sure is kinde and comfortable:

When she shall heare this of thee, with her nailes

Shee'l flea thy Wolvishe visage. Thou shalt finde,

That Ile resume the shape which thou dost thinke

I have cast off for ever.

Gon. Doe you marke that?

Alb. I cannot be so partiall Gonerill,

To the great love I beare you.

Gon. Pray you content. What Oswald hoa?

Your Sir, more Knave then Foole, after your Master.

Foole. Nunkle Lear, Nuncle Lear,

Tarry, take the Foole with thee:

A Fox, when one has caught her,

And such a daughter,

Should sure to the slaughter,

If my Cap would by a Halter,

So the Foole followes after.

Exit.

Gon. This man hath had good counsell,

A hundred Knights?

Tis politike, and safe to let him keepe

At point a hundred Knights: yes, that on every dreame,

Each buz, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,

He may enguard his dotage with their powres,

And hold our lives in mercy. Oswald, I say.

Alb. Well, you may feare too farre.

Gon. Safer then trust too farre;

Let me still take away the harmes I feare,

Not feare still to be taken. I know his heart,

What he hath utter'd, I have writ my sister:

If she sustaine him, and his hundred Knights

When I have shew'd th'unfinesse.

Enter Steward.

How now Oswald?

What have you writ that letter to my Sister?

Stew. I Madam.

Gon. Take you some company, and away to horse,

Informe her full of my particular feare,

And thereto adde such reasons of your owne,

As may compact it more. Get you gone,

And hasten your returne ; no, no, my Lord,
This milky gentlenesse, and courte of yours
Though I condemne not, yet under pardon
You are much more at taske for want of wisedome,
Then prais'd for harmefull mildnesse.

Alb. How farre your eyes may pierce I cannot tell ;
Striving to better, oft we marre whats well.

Gen. Nay then. —

Alb. Well, well, the vent.

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Lear, Kent, Gentleman, and Foole.

Lear. Goe you before to Gloster with these Letters ; acquaint my daughter no further with any thing you know, then comes from her demand out of the Letter, if your diligence be not speedy, I shall be there afore
you.

Kent. I will not sleepe my Lord, till I have delivered your Letter. Exit.

Foole. If a mans braines were ins heeles, wert not in danger of kybes ?

Lear. I boy.

Foole. Then I prethee be merry, thy wit shall not goe flip-fhod.

Lear. Ha, ha, ha.

Foole. Shalt see thy other Daughter will use thee kindly, for though shes as like this, as a Crabbes like an Apple, yet I can tell what I can tell.

Lear. What canst tell Boy ?

Foole. She will taste as like this as, a Crabbe do's to a Crab: thou canst tell why ones nose stands ith' middle on's face ?

Lear. No.

Foole. Why to keepe ones eyes of either sides nose, that what a man cannot smell out, he may spy into.

Lear. I did her wrong.

Foole. Canst tell how an Oyster makes his shell ?

Lear. No.

Foole. Nor I neither ; but I can tell why a Snaille ha's a house.

Lear. Why ?

Foole. Why to put his head in, not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his hornes without a case.

Lear. I will forget my Nature, so kind a Father ? Be my hornes ready ?

Foole. Thy Asses are gone about em ; the reason why the seven Starres are no more than seven, is a pretty reason.

Lear. Because they are not eight.

Foole. Yes indeed, thou wouldst make a good foole.

Lear. To tak't againe perforce ? Monster ingratitude !

Foole. If you wert my foole Nunckle, I'd have thee beaten for being old before thy time.

Lear. How's that ?

Foole. Thou shouldst not have bin old, till thou hadst bin wife.

Lear. O let me not be mad, not mad sweet heaven :
keep me in temper, I would not be mad. How now, are the hornes ready ?

Gen. Ready my Lord.

Lear. Come Boy.

Fool. She that's a Maid now, and laughs at my departure
Shall not be a Maid long, unless things be cut shorter.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Bastard, and Curan, severally.

Bast. Save thee Curan.

Cur. And you Sir, I have bin
With your Father, and given him notice
That the Duke of Cornwall, and Regan his Duchesse
Will be here with him this night.

Bast. How comes that ?

Cur. Nay I know not, you have heard of the newesabroad I meane the whisper'd ones, for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments.

Bast. Not I : pray you what are they ?

Cur. Have you heard of no likely Warres toward,
Twixt the Dukes of Cornwall, and Albany ?

Bast. Not a word.

Cur. You may doe then in time,
Fare you well Sir. Exit.

Bast. The Duke be here to night ? the better best,
This weaves it selfe perforce into my businesse,
My father hath set guard to take my brother,
And I have one thing of a queazy question
Which I must act, briefenesse, and Fortune worke.

Enter Edgar.

Brother, a word, discead ; brother I say,
My father watches ; O Sir, flye this place,
Intelligence is given where you are hid ;
You have now the good advantage of the night,
Have you not spoken gainst the Duke of Cornwall ?
Hes coming hither, now ith' night, ith' haste,
And Regan with him, have you nothing said
Vpon his party gainst the Duke of Albany ?
Advise your selfe.

Edg. I am sure on't, not a word.

Bast. I heare my father comming, pardon me :
In cunning, I must draw my Sword upon you :
Draw, seeme to defend your selfe,
Now quit you well.

Yeeld, come before my father, light hwa, here,
Flye Brother, Torches, so farewell,

Exit Edgar.

Some blood drawne on me would beget opinion
Of my more fierce endeavour. I have seene drunkards
Doe more then this in sport ; Father, father,
Stop, stop, no helpe ?

Enter Gloster, and Servants with Torches.

Glo. Now Edmund, wheres the villaine ?

Bast. Here stood he in the darke, his sharpe Sword out,
Mumbling of wicked charmes, conjuring the Moone
To stand auspicious Mistris.

Glo. But where is he ?

Bast. Looke Sir, I bleed,

Glo. Where is the villaine, Edmund ?

Bast. Fled this way Sir, when by no meanes he could

Glo. Pursue him, ho : goe after. By no meanes, what ?

Bast. Perswade me to the murthre of your Lordship,
Gainst

But that I told him the revenging Gods,
Gainst Parricides did all the thunder bend,
Spoke with how manifold, and strong a Bond
The Child was bound to th' Father, Sir in fine,
Seeing how lothly opposite I stood
To his unnaturall purpose, in fell motion
With his prepared Sword, he charges home
My unprovided body, latch'd mine arme :
And when he saw my best alarum'd spirits
Bold in the quarrels right, rous'd to th' encounter,
Or whether galled by the noyse I made,
Full sodainely he fled.

Glo. Let him flye farre :
Not in this Land shall he remaine uncaught
And found ; dispatch, the Noble Duke my Master,
My worthy Arch and Patron comes to night,
By his authority I will proclaime it,
That he which finds him shall deserve our thanks,
Bringing the murderous Coward to the stake :
He that conceales him, death.

Bast. When I dissuaded him from his intent,
And found him pight to doe it, with curst speech
I threatned to discover him ; he replied,
Thou unpossessing Bastard, dost thou thinke,
If I would stand against thee, would the repofall
Of any trust, vertue, or worth in thee
Make thy words faith'd ? No, what should I deny,
(As this I would, though thou didst produce
My very Character) Ild turne it all
To thy suggestion, plot, and damned practise :
And thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potentiall spirits.
To make thee seeke it. Tucket within.

Glo. O strange and fastned Viliaine,
Would he deny his Letter, said he ?
Hearke, the Dukes trumpets, I know not where he comes
All Ports Ile barre, the villaine shall not scape,
The Duke must grant me that : besides, his picture
I will send farre and neere, that all the kingdome
May have due note of him, and of my land,
(Loyall and natrall Boy) Ile worke the meanes
To make thee capable.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, and Attendants.

Corn. How now my Noble friend, since I came hither
(Which I can call but now) I have heard strangenesse.

Reg. If it be true, all vengeance comes too short
Which can pursue th' offender : how does my Lord ?

Glo. O Madam, my old heart is crack'd, its crack'd.

Reg. What, did my Fathers Godsonne seeke your life ?
He whom my father nam'd, your Edgar :

Glo. O Lady, Lady, shame would have it hid.

Reg. Was he not companion with the riotous Knights
That tended upon my father ?

Glo. I know not Madam, tis too bad, too bad.

Bast. Yes Madam, he was of that consort.

Reg. No marvaile then, though he were ill affected,
Tis they have put him on the old mans death,
To have th' expence and wast of Revenues ;
I have this present evening from my Sister
Beene well inform'd of them, and with such cautions,
That if they come to sojourne at my house,
Ile not be there.

Cor. Nor I, assure thee Regan ;

Edmund, I heare that you have shewne your Father
A Child-like Office.

Bast. It was my duty Sir.

Glo. He did bewray his practise, and receiv'd
This hurt you see, striving to apprehend him.

Cor. Is he pursued ?

Glo. I my good Lord.

Cor. If he be taken, he shall never more
Be fear'd of doing harme, make your owne purpose,
How in my strength you please : as for you Edmund,
Whose vertue and obedience doth this instant
So much commend it selfe, you shall be ours,
Natures of such deepe trust, we shall much need :
You we first seize on.

Bast. I shall serve you Sir truely, how ever else.

Glo. For him I thanke your Grace.

Cor. You know not why we came to visit you ?

Reg. Thus out of season, thredding darke ey'd night,
Occasions Noble Gloster of some prize,
Wherein we must have use of your aduice.
Our Father he hath writ, so hath our Sister,
Of differences, which I best thought it fit
To answer from our home : the severall Messengers
From hence attend dispatch, our good old friend,
Lay comforts to your bosome, and bestow
Your needfull counsaile to our busineses,
Which craves the instant use.

Glo. I serve you Madam,
Your Graces are right welcome.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Kent, and Steward severally.

Stew. Good dawning to thee friend, art of this house ?

Kent. I.

Stew. Where may we set our horses ?

Kent. I th' myre.

Stew. Prethee, if thou lov'st me, tell me.

Kent. I love thee not.

Stew. Why then I care not for thee.

Kent. If I had thee in Lipsbury Pinfold, I would make thee care for me.

Stew. Why do'st thou use me thus ? I know thee not.

Kent. Fellow I know thee.

Stew. What dost thou know me for ?

Kent. A Knave, a Rascall, an eater of broken meates, a base, proud, shallow, beggerly, three-suited, hundred pound, filthy woollsted-stocking knave, a Lilly-livered, action-taking, whorson glasse-gazing super-serviceable finicall Rogue, one Trunke-inheriting slave, one that wouldst be a Baud in way of good servite, and art nothing but the composition of a Knave, Begger, Coward, Pandar, and the Sonne and Heire of a Mungrill Bitch, one whom I will beate into clamours whining, if thou deny'st the least fillable of thy addition.

Stew. Why, what a monstrous fellow art thou, thus to raile on one, that is neither knowne of thee, nor knows
thee ?

Kent. What a brazen-fac'd Varlet art thou, to deny thou knowest me ? Is it two dayes since I tript up thy heelles, and beate thee before the King ? Draw you rogue,
for

for though it be night, yet the Moone shines, Ile make a fop oth' Mooneshine of you, you whorson Cullyenly Barbar-monger, draw.

Stew. Away, I have nothing to doe with thee.

Kent. Draw you Rascall, you come with Letters against the King, and take Vanity the puppets part, against the Royalty of her father: draw you Rogue, or Ile so carbonado your shankes, draw you Rascall, come your wayes.

Stew. Helpe, ho, murther, helpe.

Kent. Strike you slave: stand rogue, stand you neat slave, strike.

Stew. Helpe ho, murther, murther.

Enter Bastard, Cornwall, Regan, Gloster, Servants.

Bast. How now, whats the matter? Part.

Kent. With you Goodman boy, if you please, come,
Ile flesh ye, come on yong Master.

Glo. Weapons? Armes? whats the matter here?

Cor. Keepe peace upon your lives, he dyesthat strikes again, what is the matter?

Reg. The Messengers from our Sister, and the King?

Cor. What is your difference, speake?

Stew. I am scarce in breath my Lord.

Kent. No Marvell, you have so bestir'd your valour, you cowardly Rascall, nature disclaimes in thee: a Taylor made thee.

Cor. Thou art a strange fellow, a Taylor make a man?

Kent. A Taylor Sir; a Stone, cutter, or a Painter, could not have made him so ill, though they had bin but two yeares oth' trade.

Cor. Speake yet, how grew your quarrell?

Stew. This ancient Ruffian Sir, whose life I have spar'd at fute of his gray-beard.

Kent. Thou whorson Zed, thou unnecessary letter, my Lord, if you will give me leave, I will tread this unboulded villaine into mortar, and daube the wall of a Iakes with him, Spare my gray-beard, you wagtaile?

Cor. Peace sirrah,

You beastly knave, know you no reverence?

Kent. Yes Sir, but anger hath a priviledge.

Cor. Why art thou angry?

Kent. That such a slave as this should weare a Sword,
Who weares no honesty: such smiling rogues as these,
Like Rats oft bite the holy cords a twaine,
Which art t' intrince, t' unloose: smoothe every passion
That in the natures of their Lords rebell,
Being oile to fire, inow to the colder moodes,
Renege, affirme, and turne their Halcion beakes
With every gale, and vary of their Masters,
Knowing naught (like dogges) but following:
A plague upon your Epilepticke visage,
Smoile you my speeches, as I were a foole?
Goose, if I had you upon Sarum Plaine,
I'd drive ye cackling home to Camelot.

Cor. What art thou mad old Fellow?

Glo. How fell you out, say that?

Kent. No contraries hold more antipathy,
Then I, and such a knave.

Cor. Why do'st thou call him Knave?
What is his fault?

Kent. His countenance likes me not.

Cor. No more perchance do's mine, nor his, nor hers.

Kent. Sir, tis my occupation to be plaine,
I have seene better faces in my time,

Then stands on any shoulder that I see
Before me, at this instant.

Cor. This is some fellow,
Who having beene prais'd for bluntnesse, doth affect
A saucy roughnesse, and constrains the garb
Quite from his Nature. He cannot flatter, he,
An honest mind and plaine, he must speake truth,
And they will take it so, if not, he's plaine.
These kind of Knaves I know, which in this plainnesse,
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Then twenty silly-ducking observants,
That stretch their duties nicely.

Kent. Sir, in good faith, in sincere verity,
Vnder th'allowance of your great aspect,
Whose influence like the wreath of radiant fire
On flicking Phabus front.

Cor. What mean'st by this?

Kent. To goe out of my dialect: which you discom-mend so much; I know Sir, I am no flatterer, he that be-guild you in a plaine accent, was a plaine Knave, which for my part I will not be, though I should win your displeasure to entreat me too't.

Cor. What was th'offence you gave him?

Stew. I never gave him any:

It pleas'd the King his Master very late
To strike at me upon his misconstruction,
When he compact, and flattering his displeasure
Tript me behind: being downe, insulted, rail'd.
And put upon him such a deale of Man,
That worthied him, got praises of the King,
For him attempting, who was selfe-subdued,
And in the fleshment of this dead exploit,
Drew on me here againe.

Kent. None of these Rogues, and Cowards
But Ajax is their foole.

Cor. Fetch forth the Stockes?

You stubborn ancient Knave, you reverent Bragart,
We'll teach you.

Kent. Sir, I am too old to learne:
Call not your Stockes for me, I serve the King.
On whose imployment I was sent to you,
You shall doe small respects, shew too bold malice
Against the Grace, and Person of my Master,
Stocking his Messenger.

Cor. Fetch forth the Stockes;
As I have life and honor, there shall he sit till Noone.

Reg. Till noone? till night my Lord, and all night too.

Kent. Why Madam, if I were your Fathers dog,
You should not use me so.

Reg. Sir, being his Knave, I will. Stockes brought out.

Cor. This is a fellow of the selfe same colour,
Our Sister speakes of. Come, bring away the Stockes.

Glo. Let me beseech your Grace, not to doe so,
The King his Master, needs must take it ill
That he so slightly valued in his Messenger,
Should have him thus restrained.

Cor. Ile answer that.

Reg. My Sister may receive it much more worfe,
To have her Gentleman abus'd, assaulted.

Cor. Come my Lord, away. Exit.

Glo. I am sorry for thee friend, tis the Dukes pleasure,
Whose disposition all the world well knowes
Will not be rubb'd nor stop't, Ile entreat for thee.

Kent. Pray do not Sir, I have watch'd and travail'd hard,
Some time I shall sleepe out, the rest Ile whistle:
A good mans fortune may grow out at heeles:

Give

Give you good morrow.

Glo. The Duke's too blame in this,
Twill be ill taken,

Exit.

Kent. Good King, that must approve the common law,
Thou out of heavens benediction com'st
To the warme Sun.

Approach thou Beacon to this under Globe,
That by thy comfortable Beames I may Peruse this Letter. Nothing almost sees miracles
But misery. I know tis from Cordelia,
Who hath most fortunately beene inform'd
Of my obscured course. And shall find time
From this enormous State, seeking to give Losses their remedies. All weary and o're-watch'd,
Take vantage heavy eyes, not to behold
This shamefull lodging. Fortune goodnight,
Smile once more, turne thy wheele.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. I heard my selfe proclaim'd,
And by the happy hollow of a Tree,
Escap'd the hunt. No Port is free, no place
That guard, and most unufall vigilance
Do's not attend my taking. Whiles I may scape
I will preserve my selfe: and am bethought
To take the basest, and most poorest shape
That ever penury in contempt of man,
Brought neere to beast: my face Ile grime with filth,
Blanket my loynes, cleave all my haire in knots,
And with presented nakednesse out-face
The Windes, and persecutions of the sky:
The Country gives me prooffe, and president
Of Bedlam beggers, who with roaring voyces,
Strike in their numm'd and mortified Armes,
Pins, Wodden-prickes, Nayles, Sprigs of Rosemary:
And with this horrible object, from low Farmes,
Poore peiting Villages, Sheepes-Coates, and Milles,
Sometimes with Lunaticke bans, sometimes with Praiers Inforce their charity: poore Twlygod, poore Tom.
Thats something yet: Edgar I nothing am,

Exit.

Enter Lear, Foole, and Gentleman.

Lear. Tis strange that they should so depart from home,
And not send backe my Messengers.

Gen. As I learn'd,
The night before, there was no purpose in them
Of this remove.

Kent. Haile to thee Noble Master.

Lear. Ha? Mak'st thou this shame thy pastime?

Kent. No my Lord.

Foole. Ha, ha, he weares Cruell Garters; horses are tide tide by the heads, Dogges and Beares by'th' necke, Mon-kies by'th' loynes, and Men by'th' legs; when a man is overlusty at legs, then he weares wodden nether-stockes.

Lear. Whats he,
That hath so much thy place mistooke
To let thee heere?

Kent. It is both he and she,
Your Son, and Daughter,

Lear. No.

Kent. Yes.

Lear. No I say.

Kent. I say yea.

Lear. By Jupiter I sweare no.

Kent. By Iuno, I sweare I.

Lear. They durst not do't:

They could not, would not do't: tis worfe then murther,
To doe upon respect such violent outrage:
Resolve me with all modest haste, which way
Thou mightst deserve, or they impose this viage,
Comming from us.

Kent. My Lord, when at their home
I did commend your highnesse Letters to them,
Ere I was risen from the place, that shewed
My duty kneeling, came there a reeking Poste,
Stew'd in his haste, halfe breathlesse, panting forth
From Generall his Mistris, salutation;
Deliver'd Letters spight of intermission,
Which presently they read; on those contents
They summon'd up their meiney, straight tooke horse,
Commanded me to follow, and attend
The leisure of their answer, gave me cold lookes,
And meeting heere the other Messenger,
Whose welcome I perceiv'd had poison'd mine,
Being the very fellow which of late
Displaid so sawcily against your highnesse,
Having more man then wit about me, drew;
He rais'd the house, with loud and coward cryes,
Your Sonne and daughter found this trespassse worth
The shame which heere it suffers.

(way,

Foole. Winters not gone yet, if the wild Geese fly that Fathers that weare rags, doe make their Children blind,
But fathers that beare bags, shall see their children kind.
Fortune that arrant whore, nere turnes the key toth' poore
But for all this y' shalt have as many Dolors for thy deare
Daughters, as thou canst tell in a yeare.

Lear. Oh how this Mother swels up toward my heart!
Historica passio, downe thou climing sorrow,
Thy Element's below; where is this daughter?

Kent. With the Earle Sir, here within.

Lear. Follow me not, stay heere.

Exit.

Gen. Made you no more offence,

But what you speake of?

Kent. None;

How chance the King comes with so small a number?

Foole. And thou hadst beene set ith' Stockes for that question, thoud'st well deser'd it.

Kent. Why foole?

Foole. We'll set thee to schoole to an Ant, to teach thee theres no labouring ith' winter. All that follow their noses, are led by their eyes, but blind men; and theres not a nose among twenty, but can smell him thats stinking; let go thy hold, when a great wheele runns downe a hill, lest it breake thy necke with following. But the great one that goes up ward, let him draw thee after: when a wiseman gives thee better counsell give me mine againe,
I would have none but knaves follow it, since a foole gives it!

That Sir, which serves and seekes for gaine,
And follows but for forme;
Will packe, when it begins to raine,
And leave thee in the storme,
But I will tarry, the foole will stay,
And let the wiseman flye:
The knave turnes foole that runnes away,
The foole no knave perdy.

Enter Lear, and Glouster.

Kent. Where learn'd you this foole;

Foole. Not ith' Stockes foole.

Lear.

Lear. Deny to speake with me?
They are sicke, they are weary,
They have travail'd all the night? meere fetches,
The Images of revolt and flying off.
Fetch me a better answer.

Glo. My deere Lord,
You know the fiery quality of the Duke,
How unremoveable and fixt he is
In his owne course.

Lear. Vengeance, Plague, Death, Confusion:
Fiery? What quality? Why Gloster, Gloster,
I'll speake with the Duke of Cornwall, and his wife.

Glo. Well, my good Lord, I have inform'd them so.

Lear. Inform'd them? Dost thou understand me man?

Glo. I my good Lord.

Lear. The King would speake with Cornwall,
The deere Father
Would with his Daughter speake, commands, tends, ser-
Are they inform'd of this? My breath and blood: (vice, Fiery? The fiery Duke, tell the hot Duke that——
No, but not yet, may be he is not well,
Infirmity doth still neglect all office,
Whereto our health is bound, we are not our selves,
When Nature being oppress'd, commands the mind
To suffer with the body; Ile forbear,
And am fallen out with my more headier will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit,
For the sound man. Death on my state; wherefore
Should he sit here? This Act perswades me,
That this remotion of the Duke and her
Is practise onely. Give me my servant forth;
Go tell the Duke, and's wife, I'll speake with them:
Now, presently: bid them come forth and heare me,
Or at their chamber doore Ile beat the Drum,
Till it cry sleepe to death.

Glo. I would have all well betwixt you. Exit.

Lear. Oh me my heart! my rising heart! but downe.

Fosse. Cry to it Nuncle, as the Cockney did to the Eeles, when hee put 'em i'th' Palle alive, she knapt 'em o'th' Coxcombs with a stick, and cryed downe wantons, downe; 'twas her brother, that in pure kindnesse to his horse buttered his Hey.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, Gloster, Servants.

Lear. Good morrow to you both.

Corn. Haile to your Grace. Kent here set at liberty.

Reg. I am glad to see your Highnesse.

Lear. Regan, I thinke you are. I know what reason,
I have to thinke so, if thou should'st not be glad,
I would divorce me from thy Mothers Tombe,
Sepulchring an Adulteresse. O are you free?
Some other time for that. Beloved Regan
Thy sisters naught: Oh Regan, she hath tyed
Sharpe tooth'd unkindnesse, like a vulture here,
I can scarce speake to thee, thou'lt not beleieve
With how deprav'd a quality. Oh Regan.

Reg. I pray you Sir, take patience, I have hope
You lesse know how to value her desert,
Than she to scant her duty.

Lear. Say? how is that?

Reg. I cannot thinke my sister in the least
Would faile her Obligation. If sir perchance
She have restrained the Riots of your Followers,
Tis on such ground, and to such wholesome end,
As clears her from all blame.

Lear. My curses on her.

Reg. O Sir, you are old,
Nature in you stands on the very Verge
Of her confine: you should be rul'd, and led
By some discretion, that discernes your state
Better then you your selfe: therefore I pray you,
That to our Sister, you doe make returne,
Say you have wrong'd her.

Lear. Aske her forgiveness?

Doe you but marke how this becomes the house?
Deere daughter, I confesse that I am old;
Age is unnecessary: on my knees I begge,
That you'll vouchsafe me Rayment, Bed, and Food.

Reg. Good Sir, no more: these are unsightly trickes: Returne you to my Sister.

Lear. Never Regan:

She hath abated me of halfe my Traine:
Look'd blacke upon me, strooke me with her Tongue
Most Serpent-like, upon the very heart.
All the stor'd Vengeances of heaven, fall
On her ingratefull top: strike her yong bones
You taking Ayres, with Lamenesse.

Corn. Fye sir, fie.

Lear. You nimble Lightnings, dart your blinding flames
Into her scornfull eyes: infect her Beauty,
You Fen-suck'd Foggies, drawne by the powerfull Sunne
To fall, and blister.

Reg. O the blest Gods!

So will you wish on me, when the rash moode is on.

Lear. No Regan, thou shalt never have my curse:
Thy tender-hefted Nature shall not give Thine eie to harshnesse: Her eyes are fierce, but thine
Doe comfort, and not burne. Tis not in thee
To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my Traine,
To bandy hasty words, to scant my sizes,
And in conclusion, to oppose the bolt
Against my coming in. Thou better know'st
The Offices of Nature, bond of Childhood,
Effects of Curtesie, dues of Gratitude:
Thy halfe o'th' kingdome hast thou not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd.

Reg. Good Sir, to'th' purpose—

Lear. Who put my man i'th' Stockes?

Tucket within.

Enter Steward.

Corn. What Trumpets that;

Reg. I know't my Sisters: this approves her Letter,
That she would soone be heere. Is your Lady come?

Lear. This is a Slave, whose easie borrowed pride
Dwells in the sickly grace of her he followes.
Out Varlet, from my sight.

Corn. What meanes your Grace?

Enter Gonerill.

Lear. Who stockt my Servant? Regan, I have good hope
Thou didst not know on't.

Who comes here? O heavens!
If you doe love old men; if your sweet sway
Allow Obedience: if you your selves are old,
Make it your cause: Send downe, and take my part.
Art not asham'd to looke upon this Beard?
O Regan, will you take her by the hand?

Gon. Why not by th' hand Sir? How have I offended?
Alls not offence that indiscretion findes
And dorage termes so.

Lear. O sides, you are too tough!
Will you yet hold?

How came my man i'th' Stockes?

Corn. I set him there, Sir: but his owne Disorders
Deserv'd

Deserv'd much lesse advancement.

Lear. You? Did you?

Reg. I pray you Father being weake, seeme so.
If till the expiration of your Moneth
You will returne and sojourne with my Sister,
Dismissing halfe your traine, comethen to me,
I am now from home, and out of that provision
Which shall be needfull for your entertainment.

Lear. Returne to her? and fifty men dismiss'd?
No, rather I abjure all roofes, and chuse,
To wage against the enmity oth'ayre,
To be a Comrade with the Wolfe, and Owle,
Necessities sharpe pinch. Returne with her?
Why the hot-bloodied France, that dowerlesse tooke
Our yongest borne, I could as well be brought To knee his Throne, and Squire-like pension beg,
To keepe base life a foote; returne with her?
Perswade me rather to be slave and sumpter
To this detested groome.

Gon. At your choyce Sir.

Lear. I prethee Daughter doe not make me mad,
I will not trouble thee my Child: farewell:
We'll no more meete, no more see one another,
But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter,
Or rather a disease thats in my flesh,
Which I must needs call mine. Thou art a Byle,
A plague sore, or imbossed Carbuncle
In my corrupted blood. But Ile not chide thee.
Let shame come when it will, I doe not call it,
I doe not bid the Thunder-bearer shoote,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Love,
Mend when thou can'st, be better at thy leisure.
I can be patient, I can stay with Regan,
I and my hundred Knights.

Reg. Not altogether so,
I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome, give care Sir to my Sister,
For those that mingle reason with you passion,
Must be content to thinke you old, and so;
But she knowes what she doe's

Lear. Is this well spoken?

Reg. I dare avouch it Sir, what fifty Followers?
Is it not well? What should you need of more?
Yea, or so many? Sith that both charge and danger,
Speake gainst so great a number: How in one house
Should many people, under two commands
Hold amity? Tis hard, almost impossible.

Gon. Why might not you my Lord, receive attendance
From those that she calls Servants, or from mine?

Reg. Why not my Lord?

If then they chanc'd to slacke ye,
We could comptroll them; if you will come to me,
(For now I spy a danger) I entreat you
To bring but five and twenty, to no more
Will I give place or notice.

Lear. I gave you all.

Reg. And in good time you gave it.

Lear. Made you my Guardians, my Depositaries,
But kept a reservation to be followed
With such a number? What, must I come to you
With five and twenty? Regan, said you so?

Reg. And speak't againe my Lord, no more with me.

Lear. Those wicked Creatures yet do looke wel favor'd
When others are more wicked, nor being the worst
Stands in some ranke of praise, Ile goe with thee,
Thy fifty yet doth double five and twenty,

And thou art twice her Love.

Gon. Heare me my Lord;

What need you five and twenty? Ten? Or five?
To follow in a house, where twice so many
Have a command to tend you?

Reg. What need one?

Lear. O reason not the need: our basest Beggers
Are in the poorest thing superfluous,
Allow not Nature, more then Nature needs:
Mans life is cheape as Beastes. Thou art a Lady;
If onely to goe warme were gorgeous,
Why Nature needs not what thou gorgeous wear'st,
Which scarcely keepes thee warme, but for true need,
You heavens, give me that patience, patience I need,
You see me here (you gods) a poore old man,
As full of griefe as age, wretched in both,
If it be you that stirres these Daughters hearts
Against their father, foole me not so much,
To beare it tamely: touch me with Noble anger,
And let not womens weapons, water drops,
Staine my mans cheekes. No you unnaturall Hags,
I will have such revenges on you both,
That all the world shall—I will doe such things,
What they are yet, I know not, but they shall be,
The terrors of the earth? you thinke Ile weepe,
No, Ile not weepe, I have full cause of weeping.

Storme and Tempest.

But this heart shal breake into a hundred thousand slaves
Or ere I weepe. O foole, I shall goe mad. Exeunt.

Corn. Let us withdraw, twill be a Storme.

Reg. This house is little, the old man and's people,
Cannot be well bestow'd.

Gon. Tis his owne blame hath put himselfe from rest,
And must needs taste his folly.

Reg. For his particular, Ile receive him gladly,
But not one follower.

Gon. So am I purpos'd,
Where is my Lord of Gloster?

Enter Gloster.

Corn. Followed the old man forth, he is return'd.

Glo. The King is in high rage.

Corn. Whether is he going?

Glo. He calls to horse, but will I know not whether.

Corn. Tis best to give him way, he leads himselfe.

Gon. My Lord, entreate him by no meanes to stay.

Glo. Alacke the night comes on, and the high windes
Doe sorely ruffle, for many Miles about Theres scarce a Bush.

Reg. O Sir, to willfull men,
The injuries that they themselves procure,
Must be their Schoole-Masters: shut up your doores,
He is attended with a desperate traine,
And what they may incense him to, being apt,
To have his eare abus'd, wisdom bids feare.

Corn. Shut up your doores my Lord, tis a wil'd night,
My Regan counsels well: come out oth' storme. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Storme still. Enter Kent, and a Gentleman, severally.

Kent. Who's there besides foule weather?

Gon. One minded like the weather, most unquietly.

Kent

Kent. I know you : Wheres the King ?

Gent. Contending with the fretfull Elements.
Bids the winde blow the Earth into the Sea,
Or swell the curled Waters bove the Mainie,
That things might change, or cease.

Kent. But who is with him ?

Gent. None but the foole, who labours to out-jest
His heart-strooke injuries.

Kent. Sir, I doe know you,
And dare upon the warrant of my note
Commend a deere thing to you. There is division
(Although as yet the face of it is cover'd
With mutuall cunning) twixt Albany, and Cornwall :
Who have, as who have not, that their great Starres
Thron'd and set high ; Servants, who seeme no lesse,
Which are to France the Spies and Speculations
Intelligent of our State. What hath bin seene,
Either in snuffes, and packings of the Dukes,
Or the hard Reine which both of them have borne
Against the old kind King ; or something deeper,
Whereof (perchance) these are but furnishings.

Gent. I will talke further with you.

Kent. No, doe not :
For confirmation that I am much more
Then my out-wall ; open this Purse, and take
What it containes. If you shall see Cordelia,
(As feare not but you shall) shew her this Ring,
And she will tell you who that fellow is
That yet you doe not know. Fye on this Storme,
I will goe seeke the King.

Gent. Give me your hand,
Have you no more to say ?

Kent. Few words, but to effect more then all yet ;
That when we have found the King, in which your paine
That way, Ile this : He that first lights on him, Holla the other. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Storme still. Enter Lear, and Foole.

Lear. Blow windes, and cracke your cheeks ; Rage, blow
You Cataracts, and Hurricano's spout,
Till you have drench'd our Steeples, drowne the Cokes.
You Sulph'rous and Thought-executing fires,
Vaunt-curriers of Oake-cleaving Thunder-bolts,
Sindge my white head. And thou all-shaking Thunder,
Strike flat the thicke Rotundity o'th' world,
Cracke Natures moulds, all germanes spill at once
That makes ingratefull Man.

Foole. O Nunkle, Court hoiey-water in a dry house, is better then this Rain-water out o'doore. Good Nunkle, in, aske thy Daughters blessing, heeres a night pitties neither Wisemen, nor Fooles.

Lear. Rumble thy belly full : spit Fire, spowt Raine ;
Nor Raine, Winde, Thunder, Fire are my daughters,
I taxe not you, you Elements with unkindnesse.
I never gave you Kingdome, call'd you Children ;
You owe me no subscription. Then let fall
Your horrible pleasure. Heere I stand your Slave,
A poore, infirme, weake, and despis'd old man :
But yet I call you Servile Ministers,
That will with two pernicious daughters joyne
Your high-engender'd Battailles, gainst a head

So old, and white as this. O, ho ! tis foule.

Foole. He that has a house to puts head in, has a good
Head-peece :

The Codpiece that will house, before the head has any ;
The Head, and he shall Lowse : so Beggers marry many.
The man y makes his Toe, what he his heart should make,
Shall of a Corne cry woe, and turne his sleepe to wake,

For there was never yet faire woman, but she made mouthes in a glasse.

Enter Kent.

Lear. No, I will be the patterne of all patience.
I will say nothing.

Kent. Whos there ?

Foole. Marry heres Grace, and a Codpiece, thatsa Witman, and a Foole.

Kent. Alas Sir are you here ? things that love night,
Love not such nights as these : the w rathfull Skies
Gallow the very wanderers of the darke
And make them keepe their Caves : Since I was man,
Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid Thunder,
Such greanes of roaring Winde, and Raine, I never Remember to have heard. Mans Nature cannot carry Th'affliction, nor the feare.

Lear. Let the great gods
That keepe this dreadful pudder ore our heads,
Find out their enemies now. Tremble thou Wretch,
That hast within thee undivulged Crimes
Vow hipt of Iustice. Hide thee, thou Bloudy hand ;
Thou Periur'd, and thou Simular of Vertue
That art Incestuous. Caytiffe, to peeces shake
That under covert, and convenient seeming
Has practis'd on mans life. Close pent-up guiltis,
Rise your concealing Continents, and cry
These dreadful Summoners grace. I am a man,
More sinn'd against, then sinning.

Kent. Alacke, bare-headed ?
Gracious my Lord, hard by heere is a Hovell,
Some friendship will it lend you gainst the Tempest :
Repose you there, while I to this hard house
(More harder then the stones whereof tis rais'd,
Which even but now, demanding after you,
Deny'd me to come in) returne, and force
Their scantied curtellie.

Lear. My wits begin to turne.
Come on my boy. How dost my boy ? Art cold ?
I am cold my selfe. Where is this straw, my fellow ?
The Art of our Necessities is strange,
And can make wilde things precious. Come, your hovell ;
Poore Foole, and Knave, I have one part in my heart
That's sorry yet for thee.

Foole. He that has and a little-tyne wit,
With height-ho, the Winde and the Raine,
Must make content with his Fortunes fit,
Though the Raine it raineth every day.

Lear. True Boy : Come bring us to this Hovell. Exit.

Foole. This is a brave night to coole a Curtizan :
He speake a Prophesie ere I goe :
When Priests are more in word, then matter :
When Brewers marre their Malt with water ;
When Nobles are their Taylors Tutors,
No Heretiques burn'd but wenches Sutors,
When every Case in Law is right :
No Squire in debt, nor no poore Knight :
When Slanders doe nor live in Tongues ;
Nor Cut-purses come not to throngs ;
When Vsurers tell their Gold i'th' field,

And

And Baudes, and whores, doe Churches build.
Then shall the Realme of Albion, come to great confusion
Then comes the time, who lives to see't,
That going shalbe us'd with feet.
This prophecy Merlin shall make, for I live before his time. Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Gloster, and Edmund.

Glo. Alacke, alacke Edmund, I like not this unuaturall dealing; when I desired their leave that I might pity him, they tooke from me the use of mine owne house, charg'd me on paine of perpetuall displeasure, neither to speake of him, entreat for him, or any way sustaine him.

Bast. Most savage and unnaturall.

Glo. Goe too; say you nothing. There is division betweene the Dukes, and a worfe matter then that: I have received a Letter this night, tis dangerous to be spoken, I have lock'd the Letter in my Closset, these injuries the King now beares, will be revenged home; there is part of a Power already footed, we must incline to the King, I will looke him, and privily relieve him; goe you and maintaine talke with the Duke, that my charity be not of him perceived; if he aske for me, I am ill, and gone to bed, if I dye for it, (as no lesse is threatned me) the King my old Master must be relieved. There is strange things toward Edmund, pray you be carefull. Exit.

Bast. This Curtesie forbid thee, shall the Duke
Instantly know, and of that Letter too;
This seemes a faire deserving, and must draw me
That which my father looses: no lesse then all,
The yonger rises, when the old doth fall. Exit.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Lear, Kent, and Foole.

Kent. Heere is the place my Lord, good my Lord enter,
The tirrany of the open night's too rough
For Nature to endure. Storme still.

Lear. Let me alone.

Kent. Good my Lord enter heere.

Lear. Wilt breake my heart?

Kent. I had rather breake mine owne,
Good my Lord enter.

Lear. Thou thinkst tis much that this contentious Invades us to the skin so: tis to thee, (Storme
But where the greater malady is fixt,
The lesser is scarce felt. Thou'dst shun a Beare,
But if thy flight lay toward the roaring Sea,
Thou'dst meet the Beare ith' mouth, when the minds free
The bodies delicate the tempest in my mind,
Doth from my senses take all feeling else,
Save what beates there, Filliall ingratitude,
Is it not as this mouth should teare this hand
For lifting food too't: But I will punish home;
No, I will weepe no more: in such a night,

To shut me out? Poure on, I will endure:
In such a night as this? O Regan, Gonerill,
Your old kind Father, whole franke heart gave all,
O that way madnesse lyes, let me shun that:
No more of that.

Kent. Good my Lord enter here.

Lear. Prythee goe in thy selfe, seeke thine owne ease,
This tempest will not give me leave to ponder
On things would hurt me more, but Ile goe in,
In Boy, goe first. You houselesse poverty, Exit.
Nay get thee in; Ile pray, and then Ile sleepe.
Poore naked wretches, where so ere you are
That bide the pelting of this pittilesse storme,
How shall your house-lesse heads, and unfed sides,
Your lop'd, and window'd raggednesse defend you
From seasons such as these? O I have tane
Too little care of this: Take Physicke, Pompe,
Expose thy selfe to feele what wretches feele,
That thou maist shake the superflux to them,
And shew the Heavens more just.

Enter Edgar, and Foole.

Edg. Fathom, and halfe, Fathom and halfe? poore Tom.

Foole. Come not in heere Nuncle, heres a spirit, helpe me, helpe me.

Kent. Give me thy hand, who's there?

Foole. A spirit, a spirit, he sayes his name's poore Tom.

Kent. What art thou that dost grumble there i'th straw?
Come forth.

Edg. Away, the foule Fiend followes me, through the sharpe Hawthorne blow the winds. Humh, goe to thy bed and warme thee,

Lear. Didst thou give all to thy Daughters? And art thou come to this?

Edg. Who gives any thing to poore Tom? Whom the foule Fiend hath led through Fire, & through Flame through Sword, and Whirle Poole, ore Bog, and Quagmire, that hath laid Knives under his Pillow, and Halters in his Pue, set Rate-bane by his Porredge; made him Proud of heart, to ride on a Bay trotting horse, over foure archt Bridges, to course his own shadow for a Traitor, Blisse thy five Wits, Toms a cold. O do, de, do, de, do, de, blisse thee from Whirle-Winds, Starre-blasting, and taking, doe poore Tom some charity, whom the foule fiend vexes. There could I have him now, and there, and there againe, and there.

Storme still.

Lear. Has his Daughters brought him to this passe?
Couldst thou save nothing? Wouldst thou give em all?

Foole. Nay, he reserv'd a Blanket, else we had bin all sham'd.

Lear. Now all the plagues that in the pendulous ayre
Hang fared ore mens faults, light on thy daughters.

Kent. He hath no Daughters Sir.

Lear. Death Traitor, nothing could have subdu'd
To such a lownesse, but his unkind Daughters. (Nature
Is it the fashion, that discarded Fathers,
Should have thus little mercy on their flesh:
Iudicious punishment, twas this flesh begot
Those Pelicane Daughter.

Edg. Pillicock sat on Pillicock hill, alow: alow, loo, loo,

Foole. This cold night will turne us all to fooles, and Madmen.

Edgar. Take heed oth' foule fiend, obey thy Parents, keepe thy word, justice, sweare not, commit not, tt with

with mans sworne Spouse; set not thy Sweet-heart on proud array. Tom's a cold.

Lear. What hast thou bin?

Edg. A Servingman? Proud in heart, and mind: that curl'd my haire, wore Gloves in my cap; serv'd the Lust of my Mittris heart, and did the act of darkenesse with her. Swore as many Oathes, as I spake words, and broke them in the sweet face of heaven. One, that slept in the contriving of Lust, and wak'd to doe it. Wine lov'd I deerely, Dice deerely; and in Woman, out-Paramour'd the Turke. False of heart, light of care, bloody hand: Hog in sloth, Foxe in stealth, Wolfe in greedinesse, Dog in madnesse, Lion in prey. Let not the creaking of shooes, Nor the rustling of Silkes, betray thy poore heart to woman. Keepe thy foote out of brothels; thy hand out of Plackets, thy pen from Lenders Bookes, and desye the foule fiend. Still through the Hawthorne blowes the cold wind: Sayes suum, mun, nonny, Dolphin my Boy, Boy Sessey: let him trot by. Storme still.

Lear. Thou wert better in a Grave, then to answer with thy uncover'd body, this extremity of the Skies. Is man no more then this? Consider him well. Thou owst the Worme no Silke: the Beast, no Hide: the Sheepe, no Wooll: the Cat, no perfume. Ha? Heres three ons are soppificated. Thou art the thing it selfe, unaccommodated man, is no more but such a poore, bare, forked Animal as thou art. Off, off you Lendings: Come, unbutton heere.

Enter Gloucester, with a Torch.

Fool. Prethee Nunckle be contented, tis a naughty night to swimme in. Now a little fire in a wilde field, were like an old Letchers heart, a small sparke, all the rest on's body, cold: Looke, heere comes a walking fire.

Edg. This is the foule Flibbertigibbet; he begins at Curfew, and walkes at first Cocke: He gives the Web and the Pin, squints the eye, and makes the Hare-lippe; Mildewes the white Wheate, and hurts the poore Creature of earth.

Swihold footed thrice the old.

He met the Night-Mare, and her ninefold,
Bid her a-light, and her troth-plight,
And aroynt thee Witch, aroynt thee.

Kent. How fares your grace?

Lear. Whats he?

Kent. Whos there? What ist you seeke?

Glou. What are you there? Your Names?

Edg. Poore Tom, that eates the swimming Frog, the Toad, the Tod-pole, the wall-Neut, and the water: that in the fury of his heart, when the foule fiend rages, eats Cow-dung for Sallets; swallowes the old Rat, and the ditch-Dogge: drinckes the green Mantle of the standing Poole: who is whipt from Tything to Tything, and stockt, punish'd, and imprison'd: who hath three Suites to his backe, fixe shirts to his Body:

Horse to ride, and weapon to weare:

But Mice, and Rats, and such small Deare,

Have bin Toms food, for seven long yeere:

Beware my follower. Peace Smulkin, peace thou fiend.

Glou. What, hath your Grace no better company?

Edg. The Prince of Darkenesse is a Gentleman. Modo hes call'd, and Mahu.

Glou. Our flesh and blood, my Lord, is growne so wild, that it doth hate what gets it,

Edg. Poore Toms a cold.

Glou. Goe in with me; my duty cannot suffer

T'obey in all your daughters hard commands: Though their injunction be to barre my doores, And let this Tyrannous night take hold upon you, Yet have I ventured to come seeke you out, And bring you where both fire, and food is ready.

Lear. First let me talke with this Philosopher, What is the cause of Thunder?

Kent. Good my Lord take his offer, Goe into th'house.

Lear. Ile talke a word with this same learned Theban: What is your study?

Edg. How to prevent the fiend, and to kill Vermine.

Lear. Let me aske you one word in private.

Kent. Inportune him once more to goe my Lord, His wits begin t'unsettle.

Glou. Canst thou blame him?

Storme still.

His Daughters seeke his death: Ah, that good Kent, He said it would be thus: poore banish'd man:

Thou sayest the King growes mad, Ile tell thee friend

I am almost mad my selfe, I had a Sonne,

Now out-law'd from my blood: he fought my life

But lately: very late: I lov'd him (friend)

No father his Sonne deerer: true to tell thee,

The griefe hath craz'd my wits. What a nights this? I doe beseech your grace.

Lear. O cry you mercy, Sir:

Noble Philosopher, your company.

Edg. Toms a cold.

Glou. In fellow there, into th'Hovell; keep thee warme

Lear. Come, lets in all.

Kent. This way, my Lord.

Lear. With him;

I will keepe still with my Philosopher.

Kent. Good my Lord, sooth him:

Let him take the fellow.

Glou. Take him you on.

Kent. Sirra, come on: goe along with us.

Lear. Come, good Athenian.

Glou. No words, no words, hush.

Edg. Child Rowland to the darke Tower came,

His word was still, fie, foh, and fum

I smell the blood of a Brittainish man.

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Cornwall, and Edmund.

Corn. I will have my revenge, ere I depart his house.

Bast. How my Lord, I may be censured, that Nature thus gives way to Loyalty, something feares me to thinke of.

Corn. I now perceive, it was not altogether your Brothers evill disposition made him seeke his death: but a provoking merit set a worke by a reprobable badnesse in himselfe.

Bast. How malicious is my fortune, that I must repent to be just? This is the Letter which he spoke of; which approves him an intelligent party to the advantages of France. O Heavens! that this Treason were not; or not I the detector.

Corn. Goe with me to the Dutchesse.

Bast. If the matter of this Paper be certaine, you have mighty businesse in hand.

Corn.

Corn. True or false, it hath made thee Earle of Gloucester: seeke out where thy father is, that he may be ready for our apprehension.

Bast. If I find him comforting the King, it will stuffe his supition more fully. I will perfever in my course of Loyalty, though the conflict be fore betweene that and my blood.

Corn. I will lay trust upon thee; and thou shalt finde a deere father in my Love. Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Kent, and Gloucester.

Glow. Here is better then the open ayre, take it thankfully: I will peece out the comfort with what addition I can: I will not be long from you. Exit.

Kent. All the power of his wits, have given way to his impatience: the gods reward your kindnesse.

Enter Lear, Edgar, and Foole.

Edga. Fraterresto calls me, and tells me Nero is an Angler in the Lake of Darknesse: pray innocent, and beware the foule fiend.

Foole. Prethee Nunkle tell me, whether a madman be a Gentlemen, or a Yeoman.

Lear. A King, a King.

Foole. No, he's a Yeoman, that has a Gentleman to his Sonne: for hes a mad Yeoman that sees his Sonne a Gentleman before him.

Lear. To have a thousand with red burning spits Come hizzing in upon'em.

Edga. Blesse thy five wits.

Kent. O pittie: Sir, where is the patience now That you so oft have boasted to retaine?

Edga. My teares begin to take his part so much, They marre my counterfetting.

Lear. The little dogges, and all; Trey, Blanch, and Sweet-heart: see, they barke at me,

Edga. Tom will throw his head at them: Avaunt you Curres, be thy mouth or blacke or white:

Tooth that poysons if it bite:

Mastiffe, Grey-hound, Mongrill, Grim,

Hound or Spaniell, Brache, or Hym:

Or Bobraile tight, or Troude taile,

Tom will make him weepe and wale,

For with throwing thus my head;

Dogs leapt the hatch, and all are fled.

Do, de, de, de: fese; Come, march to Wakes and Faires, And Market Townes: poore Tom thy horne is dry. Exit.

Lear. Then let them Anatomize Regan: See what breeds about her heart. Is there any cause in Nature that make these hard-hearts. You sir, I entertaine for one of my hundred; onely, I doe not like the fashion of your garments. You will say they are Persian; but let them be chang'd,

Enter Gloster.

Kent. Now good my Lord, lye heere, and rest awhile.

Lear. Make no noise, make no noyse, draw the Curtaines: so, so, we'll goe to supper ith' morning.

Foole. And Ile goe to bed at noone.

Glow. Come hither friend;

Where is the King my Master?

Kent. Here Sir, but trouble him not, his wits are gone.

Glow. Good friend, I prethee take him in thy armes; I have oreheard a plot of death upon him:

There is a Litter ready, lay him in't, And drive toward Dover friend, where thou shalt meete

Both welcome, and protection. Take up thy Master,

If thou shouldst dally halfe an houre, his life

With thine, and all that offer to defend him,

Stand in assured losse. Take up, take up,

And follow me, that will to some provision

Give thee quicke conduct. Come, come, away. Exeunt.

Scena Septima.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, Gonerill, Bastard, and Servants.

Corn. Poste speedily to my Lord your husband, shew him this Letter, the Army of France is landed: seeke out the Traitor Gloster.

Reg. Hang him instantly.

Gon. Plucke out his eyes.

Corn. Leave him to my displease. Edmund, keepe you our Sister company: the revenges we are bound to take upon your Traitorous father, are not fit for your beholding. Advise the Duke where you are going, to a most festinate preparation: we are bound to the like. Our Postes shall be swift, and intelligent betwixt us. Farewell deere Sister, farewell my Lord of Gloster.

Enter Steward.

How now? Wheres the King?

Stew. My Lord of Gloster hath convey'd him hence.

Some five or six and thirty of his Knights

Hot Questrists after him, met him at gate,

Who, with some other of the Lords dependants,

Are gone with him toward Dover; where they boast

To have well armed friends.

Corn. Get horses for your Mistris.

Gon. Farewell sweet Lord, and Sister. Exit.

Corn. Edmund farewell: goe seeke the Traitor Gloster, Pinnion him like a Theefe, bring him before us: Though well we may not passe upon his life Without the forme of Iustice: yet our power Shall doe a curt'sie to our wrath, which men May blame, but not comptroll.

Enter Gloucester, and Servants.

Whos there? the Traitor?

Reg. Ingratefull Fox, tis he.

Corn. Binde fast his corky armes.

Glow. What meanes your Graces?

Good my friends consider you are my Ghefts:

Doe me no foule play, friends,

Corn. Binde him I say.

Reg. Hard, hard: O filthy Traitor.

Glow. Vnmercifull Lady, as you are, I me none.

Corn. To this Chaire bind him,

Villaine, thou shalt finde.

Glow. By the kinde gods, tis most ignobly done

To plucke me by the Beard.

Reg. So white, and such a Traitor?

Glow. Naughty Lady,

These haire which thou dost ravish from my chin

Will quicken and accuse thee. I am your Host,

With Robbers hands, my hospitable favours

x a l e h i n g

You should not ruffle thus. What will you doe

Corn. Come Sir.

What Letters had you late from France?

Reg. Be simple answer'd, for we know the truth.

Corn. And what confederacy have you with the Traitors, late footed in the Kingdome?

Reg. To whose hands

You have sent the Lunaticke King : speake.

Glon. I have a Letter guessingly set downe
Which came from one thats of a newtrall heart,
And not from one oppos'd.

Corn. Cunning.

Reg. And false.

Corn. Where hast thou sent the King?

Glon. To Dover.

Reg. Wherefore to Dover?

Was't thou not charg'd at perill.

Corn. Wherefore to Dover? Let him answer that.

Glon. I am tyed to th' Stake,
And I must stand the Course.

Reg. Wherefore to Dover?

Glon. Because I would not see thy cruell Nailes
Plucke out his poore old eyes: nor thy fierce Sister,
In his Annoynted flesh, sticke boarish phangs.
The Sea, with such a storine as his bare head,
In hell-blacke-night indur'd, would have buoy'd up
And quench'd the Stelled fires:
Yet poore old heart, he holpe the heavensto raine.
If Wolves had at thy Gate howl'd that sterne time,
Thou shouldst have said, good Porter turne the Key:
All Cruels else subscribe: but I shall see
The winged Vengeance overtake such Children.

Corn. Seet shalt thou never. Fellowes hold the Chaire.
Vpon these eyes of thine, Ile set my foote.

Glon. He that will thinke to live, till he be old,
Give me some helpe, — O cruell! O you gods.

Reg. One side will mocke another: Th' other too.

Corn. If you see vengeance.

Serv. Hold your hand, my Lord?

I have serv'd you ever since I was a Child:
But better service have I never done you,
Then now to bid you hold.

Reg. How now, you dogge?

Serv. If you did weare a beard upon your chin,
Ild shake it on this quarrell. What doe you meane?

Corn. My Villaine?

Serv. Nay then come on, and take the chance of anger.

Reg. Give me thy Sword. A pezant stand up thus?

Killes him.

Serv. Oh I am slaine: my Lord, you have one eye left
To see some mischief on him. Oh.

Corn. Left it see more, prevent it; Out vilde gelly:
Where is thy luster now?

Glon. All darke and comfortlesse?

Wheres my Sonne Edmund?

Edmund, enkindle all the sparkes of Nature
To quit this horrid acte.

Reg. Out treacherous Villaine,
Thou call'st on him, that hates thee. It was he
That made the overture of thy Treasons to us:
Who is too good to pittie thee.

Glon. O my follies! then Edgar was abus'd,
Kind gods, forgive me that, and prosper him.

Reg. Goe thrust him out at gates, and let him smell
His way to Dover. Exit with Gloster.
How is't my Lord? How looke you?

Corn. I have receiv'd a hurt: Follow me Lady:
Turne out that eyelesse Villaine: throw this Slave
Vpon the Dunghill: Regan, I bleed apace, Vntimely comes this hurt. Give me your arme. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. Yet better thus, and knowne to be contemn'd,
Then still contemn'd and flatter'd, to be worst:
The lowest, and most deject thing of Fortune,
Stands still in esperance, lives not in feare.
The lamentable change is from the best,
The worst returnes to laughter. Welcome then,
Thou unsubstantiall ayre that I embrace:
The wretch that thou hast blowne unto the worst,
Owes nothing to thy blasts.

Enter Gloster, and an Oldman.

But who comes heere? My Father poorly led?
World, World, O World!
But that thy strange mutations make us hate thee,
Life would not yeeld to age.

Oldm. O my good Lord, I have beene your Tenant,
And your Fathers Tenant, these fourescore yeeres.

Glon. Away, get thee away: good friend be gone,
Thy comforts can doe me no good at all,
Thee they may hurt.

Oldm. You cannot see your way.

Glon. I have no way, and therefore want no eyes:
I stumbled when I saw. Full oft tis seene,
Our meanes secure us, and our meere defects
Prove our Commodities. Oh deere Sonne Edgar,
The food of thy abused fathers wrath:
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
Ild say I had eyes againe.

Oldm. How now? whos there?

Edg. O gods! Who ist can say I am at worst?
I am worse then ere I was.

Oldm. Tis poore mad Tom.

Edg. And worse I may be yet: the worst is not,
So long as we can say this is the worst.

Oldm. Fellow, where goest?

Glon. Is it a Beggar-man?

Oldm. Madman, and beggar too.

Glon. He has some reason, else he could not beg.
Ith'last nights storme, I such a fellow saw;
Which made me thinke a Man, a Worme. My Sonne
Came then into my mind, and yet my mind
Was then scarce Friends with him.
I have heard more since:

As Flies to wanton Boyes, are we to th' gods,
They kill us for their sport.

Edg. How should their be?

Bad is the Trade that must play to foole sorrow,
Ang'ring it selfe, and others. Blesse thee Master.

Glon. Is that the naked fellow?

Oldm. I my Lord.

Glon. Get thee away: if for my sake
Thou wilt ore-take us hence a mile or twaine
I'th way toward Dover, doe it for ancient love,
And bring some covering for this naked Soule,
Which Ile intreate to leade me.

Oldm. Alacke sir, he is mad.

Glon.

Di quasi piler homines latens. Plautus in Captivis
Adit in puerum divina potentia nobis Prologus Ver 22

Glow. Tis the times plague,
When Madmen leade the blinde :
Doe as I bid thee, or rather doe thy pleasure :
Above the rest, be'gone.

Oldm. Ile bring him the Best Parrell that I have Com on't, what will,

Exit.

Glow. Sirrah, naked fellow.

Edg. Poore Tom's a cold. I cannot daub it further.

Glow. Come hither fellow.

Edg. And yet I must :

Blesse thy sweet eyes, they bleed.

Glow. Knowst thou the way to Dover ?

Edg. Both stile, and gate, horseway, and foot-path :
poore Tom hath bin scarr'd out of his good wits. Blesse thee good mans sonne, from the foule fiend. (plagues

Glow. Here take this purse, thou whom the heav'ns
Have humbled to all strokes : that I am wretched Makes thee the happier : heavens deale so still :
Let the superfluous, and Lust-dieted man,
That slaves your ordinance, that will not see
Because he do's not feelee, feelee your power quickly :
So distribution should undoe excesse,
And each man have enough. Dost thou know Dover ?

Edg. I Master.

Glow. There is a Cliffe, whose high and bending head
Lookes fearefully in the confined Deepe :
Bring me but to the very brimme of it,
And Ile repayre the misery thou dost beare
With something rich about me : from that place,
I shall no leading neede.

Edg. Give me thy arme ;
Poore Tom shall leade thee.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Gonerill, Bastard, and Steward.

Gow. Welcome my Lord. I marvell our mild husband
Not met us on the way. Now, wheres your Master ?

Stew. Madam within, but never man so chang'd :
I told him of the Army that was Landed :
He smil'd at it. I told him you were comming,
His answer was, the worse. Of Glosters Treachery,
And of the loyall Service of his Sonne
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me Sor,
And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out :
What most he should dislike, seemes pleasant to him ;
What like, offensive.

Gow. Then shall you goe no further.
It is the Cowish terror of his spirit
That dares not undertake : heell not feelee wrongs
Which tye him to an answer ; our wishes on the way
May prove effects. Backe Edmund to my Brother,
Hasten his Musters, and conduct his powers.
I must change names at home, and give the Distaffe
Into my Husbands hands. This trusty Servant
Shall passe betweene us : ere long you are like to heare
(If you dare venture in your owne behalfe)

A Mistresses command. Weare this ; spare speech,
Decline your head. This kisse, if it durst speake,
Would stretch thy Spirits up into the ayre :
Conceive, and fare thee well.

Bast. Yours in the rankes of death.

Gow. My most deere Gloster.

Exit.

Oh, the difference of man, and man,
To thee a Womans services are due,
My foole usurpes my body.

Stew. Madam, heere comes my Lord.

Enter Albany.

Gow. I have beene worth the whistle.

Alba. Oh Gonerill.

You are not worth the dust which the rude winds
Blowes in your face.

Gow. Make-Liver'd man,
That bearest a cheek for blowes, a head for wrongs,
Who hast not in thy browes an eye-discerning,
Thine honor, from thy suffering.

Alba. See thy selfe divell :

Proper deformity seemes not in the fiend
So horrid as in woman.

Gow. Oh vaine foole.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Oh my good Lord, the Duke of Cornwall's dead, Slaine by his Servant, going to put out
The other eye of Gloster.

Alba. Glosters eyes !

Mess. A Servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act : bending his Sword
To his great Master, who, thereat enrag'd
Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead,
But not without that harmefull stroke, which since
Hath pluckt him after.

Alba. This shewes you are above
You Iustices, that these our nether crimes
So speedily can venge. But (O poore Gloster)
Lost he his other eye ?

Mess. Both, both, my Lord.

This Letter Madam, craves a speedy answer :
Tis from your Sister,

Gow. One way I like this well,
But being widdow, and my Gloster with her,
May all the building in my fancy plucke
Vpon my hatefull life. Another way
The Newes is not so tart. Ile read, and answer.

Alba. Where was his Sonne,
When they did take his eyes ?

Mess. Come with my Lady hither.

Alba. He is not heere.

Mess. No my good Lord, I met him backe againe.

Alba. Knowes he the wickednesse ?

Mess. I my good Lord: was he inform'd against him
And quit the house on purpose, that their punishment
Might have the freer course.

Al. Gloster, I live

To thanke thee for the love thou shewdst the King,
And to revenge thine eyes. Come hither friend,
Tell me what more thou knowst.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter with Drum and Colours, Cordelia, Gentlemen, and Souldiours.

Cord. Alacke, tis he : why he was met even now
As mad as the vext Sea, fluging alowd,
Crown'd with ranke Fenitar, and furrow weeds,
With Hardokes, Hemlocke, Nettles, Cuckoo flowres,

Darnell

Darnell, and all the idle weedes that grow
In our sustaining Corne. A Centery lend forth;
Search every Acre in the high-growne field,
And bring him to our eye: What can mans wisdom
In the restoring his bereaved Sense? he that helps him,
Take all my outward worth.

Gent. There is meanes Madam:
Our foster Nurse of Nature, is repose,
The which he lackes: that to provoke in him
Are many Simples operative, whose power
Will cure the eye of Anguish.

Cord. All blest Secrets,
All you unpublish'd Vertues of the earth,
Spring with my teares; be aydant, and remediate
In the goodman's desires: seeke, seeke for him,
Lest his ungovern'd rage, dissolue the life
That wants the meanes to leade it.

Enter Messenger.

Mess. Newes Madam,
The Brittish Powers are marching hitherward.

Cord. Tis knowne before. Our preparation stands
In expectation of them. O deere father,
It is thy businesse that I go about: therefore great France
My mourning, and importun'd teares hath pittied:
No blowne Ambition doth our Armes incite,
But love, deere love, and our ag'd Fathers Rites:
Soone may I heare, and see him. Exit.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Regan, and Steward.

Reg. But are my Brothers Powers set forth?

Stew. I Madam, as they are bound.

Reg. Him selfe in person there?

Stew. Madam with much adoe
Your Sister is the better Souldier.

Reg. Lord Edmund spake not with your Lord at home;

Stew. No Madam.

Reg. What might import my Sisters Letter to him?

Stew. I know not, Lady.

Reg. Faith he is posted hence on serious matter:

It was great ignorance. Gloucesters eyes being out
To let him live. Where he arrives, he moves
All hearts against us: Edmund, I thinke is gone
In pittie of his misery, to dispatch
His nighted life: Moreover to descry
The strength oth' Enemy.

Stew. I must needs after him, Madam, with my Letter.

Reg. Our troopes set forth to morrow, stay with us:
The wayes are dangerous.

Stew. I may not Madam:

My Lady charg'd my duty in this businesse.

Reg. Why should she write to Edmund?

Might not you transport her purposes by word? Belike,
Some things, I know not what. He love thee much
Let me unseale the Letter.

Stew. Madam, I had rather—

Reg. I know your Lady do's not love her husband,
I am sure of that: and at her late being here,
She gave strange Illads; and most speaking looks:
To Noble Edmund. I know you are of her bosome.

Stew. I Madam?

Reg. I speake in understanding: Yare: I know't.
Therefore I doe advise you take this nose:
My Lord is dead: Edmund, and I have talk'd,
And more convenient is he for my hand
Then for your Ladies: You may gather more:
If you doe find him, pray you give him this;
And when your Mistris heares thus much from you,
I pray desire her call her wife dome to her.
So fare you well:

If you doe chance to heare of that blinde Traitor,
Preferment fals on him, that cuts him off.

Stew. Would I could meet him Madam, I should shew
What party I doe follow.

Reg. Fare thee well. Exit.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Gloucester, and Edgar.

Glon. When shall I come to th' top of that same hill?

Edg. You doe climbe up it now. Look e how we labour.

Glon. Me thinks the ground is even.

Edg. Horrible steepe.

Heare, doe you heare the Sea?

Glon. No truly.

Edg. Why then your other Senses grow imperfect
By your eyes anguish,

Glon. So may it be indeed.

Me thinks thy voyce is alter'd, and thou speak'st in better phrase, and matter then thou didst.

Edg. Yare much deceiv'd: in nothing am I chang'd
But in my Garments.

Glon. Me thinks yare better spoken.

Edg. Come on Sir,

Heeres the place: stand still: how fearefull
And dizzy tis, to cast ones eyes so low,
The Crowes and Choughes, that wing the midway ayre
Shew scarce so grosse as Beetles. Halfe way downe
Hangs one that gathers Sampire: dreadfull Trade:
Me thinks he seemes no bigger then his head.
The Fishermen, that walk'd upon the beach
Appeare like Mice: and yond tall Anchoring Barke, Diminish'd to her Cocke: her Cocke, a Buoy
Almost too small for sight. The murmuring Surge,
That on th' unnumbred idle Pebble chafes
Cannot be heard so high. He looke no more,
Lest my braine turne, and the deficient sight
Topple downe headlong.

Glon. Set me where you stand.

Edg. Give me your hand:

You are now within a foote of th' extreme Verge:
For all beneath the Moone would I not leape upright.

Glon. Let goe my hand:

Heere friends another purse: in it, a Jewell
Well worth a poore mans taking. Fairies, and gods
Prosper it with thee. Goe thou further off,
Bid me farewell, and let me heare thee going.

Edg. Now fare ye well, good Sir.

Glon. With all my heart.

Edg. Why I doe trifle thus with his despair,
Is done to cure it.

Glon. O you mighty gods!

This world I doe renounce, and in your fights

Shake

Shake patiently my great affliction off:

If I could beare it longer, and not fall
To quarrell with your great opposese wiles,
My inuffe, and loathed part of Nature should Burae it selfe out. If Edgar live, O bleffe him:
Now fellow, fare thee well.

Edg. Good Sir, farewell.

And yet I know not how conceit may rob
The Treasure of life, when life it selfe
Yeelds to the Theft. Had he bin where he thought,
By this had thought bin past. Alive, or dead?
Hoe, you Sir: friend, here you Sir, speake:
Thus might he passe indeed: yet he revives.
What arr you Sir?

Glon. Away, and let me dye.

Edg. Hadst thou beene ought
But Gozemore, feathers and Ayre,
(So many fathome downe precipitating)
Thou'dst shiver'd like an Egge: but thou dost breath:
Hast heavy substance, bleedit not, speakst, art found.
Ten Malts at each, make not the altitude
Which thou hast perpendicularly fell,
Thy lifes a Miracle. Speake yet againe.

Glon. But have I false, or no?

Edg. From the dread Summet of this Chalky Bourn
Looke up a height, the shrill-gor'd Larke so farre
Cannot be seene, or heard: Doe but looke up.

Glon. Alacke, I have no eyes:
Is wretchednesse depriv'd that benefit
To end it selfe by death? Twas yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the Tyrants rage,
And frustrate his proud will.

Edg. Give me your arme.

Vp, so: How is't? Feele you your Legges? You stand.

Glon. Too well, too well.

Edg. This is above all strangenesse,
Vpon the crowne oth' Cliffe. What thing was that
Which parted from you?

Glon. A poore unfortunate Beggar.

Edg. As I stood here below, me thought his eyes
Weretwo full Moones: he had a thousand Noses,
Hornes wea'k'd, and waved like the enraged Sea:
It was some fiend: Therefore thou happy father,
Thinke that the cleereft gods, who make them honors
Of mens Impossibilities, have preserved thee.

Glon. I do remember now: henceforth Ile beare
Affliction, till it doe cry out it selfe
Enough, enough, and dye. That thing you speake of,
I tooke it for a man: often twould say
The fiend, the Fiend, he led me to that place.

Edg. Beare free and patient thoughts.

Enter Lear.

But who comes heere?
The safer sense will ne're accommodate His Master thus.

Lear. No, they cannot touch me for crying. I am the King himselfe.

Edg. O thou side-piercing sight!

Lear. Natures above Art, in that respect. Theres your Presse-money. That fellow handles his bow, like a Crow-keeper: draw me a Cloathiers yard. Looke, looke, a Moufe: peace, peace, this peece of toasted Cheefe will doo't. Theres my Gauntlet, Ile prove it on a Gyant.
Bring up the browne Billes. O well flowne Bird: ith clout, ith' clout: Hewgh. Give the word.

Edg. Sweet Maioram.

Lear. Passe.

Glon. I know that voyce.

Lear. Ha! Generall with a white beard? They flatter'd me like a Dogge, and told me I had the white haire in my Beard, ere the blacke ones were there. To say I, and no, to every thing that I said: I, and no too, was no good Divinity. When the raine came to wet me once, and wind to make me chatter: when the Thunder would not peace at my bidding, there I found em; there I smelt em out. Goe to, they are not men other words; they told me, I was every thing: Tis a Lye, I am not Agui-prooffe.

Glon. The tricke of that voyce, I doe well remember:
Is't not the King?

Lear. I, every inch a King.

When I doe stare, see how the subject quakes.
I pardon that mans life. What was thy cause?
Adultery? thou shalt not dye: dye for Adultery?
No, the Wren goes too't, and the small gilded Flye
Do's letcher in my sight. Let Copulation thrive:
For Glousters bastard Son was kinder to his father,
Then my Daughters got'tweene the lawfull sheets.
Too't Luxury pell-mell, for I lacke Souldiers.
Behold yond simpring Dame, whose face betweene her Forkes presages Snow: that minces Vertue, and dos shake the head to, heare of pleasures name. The Fitchew, nor the soyled horse goes too't with a more riotous appetite: downe from the waste they are Centaures, though Women all above: but to the Girdle doe the gods inherit, beneath is all the fiends. Theres hell, theres darke-nesse, there is the sulphurous pit; burning, scalding, stench, consumption: Fye, fie, fie; pah, pah: Give me a Ounce of Civet; good Apothecary sweeten my imagination:
Theres money for thee.

Glon. O let me kisse that hand.

Lear. Let me wipe it first,
It smells of Mortality.

Glon. O ruin'd peece of Nature, this great world
Shall so weare out to naught.
Do't thou know me?

Lear. I remember thine eyes well enough: dost thou squiny at me? No, doe thy worst blind Cupid, Ile not love. Reade thou this challenge, marke but the penning
of it.

Glon. Were all thy Letters Sunnes, I could not see.

Edg. I would not take this from report,
It is, and my heart breakes at it.

Lear. Read.

Glon. What with the Case of eyes?

Lear. Oh ho, are you there with me? No eyes in your head, nor no mony in your purse? Your eyes are in a heavy case, your purse in a light, yet you see how this world goes.

Glon. I see it feelingly.

Lear. What, art mad? A man may see how this world goes, with no eyes. Looke with thine eares: See how yond Iustice railes upon yond simple theefe. Hearke in thine eare: Change places and handy-dandy, which is the Iustice, which is the theefe: Thou hast seene a Farmers dogge barke at a Beggar?

Glon. I Sir.

Lear. And the Creature run from the Cur: there thou mightst behold the great image of Authority, a Dogg's obey'd in Office. Thou, Rascall Beadle, hold thy bloody hand: why dost thou lash that Whore? Strip thy owne backe, thou hotly lusts to use her in that kind, for which thou whippst her. The Vsurer hangs the Cozener. Thorough

rough tatter'd cloathes great Vices doe appeare : Robes, and furr'd gownes hide all. Place finnes with gold, and the strong Lance of iustice, hurtlesse breakes: Arme it in ragges, a Pigmies straw does pierce it. None does offend, none, I say none, Ile able em; take that of me my friend, who have the power to seale th'accusers lips. Get thee glasse-eyes, and like a scurvy Politician, seeme to see the things thou dost not. Now, now, now, now. Pull off my Bootes: harder, harder, so.

Edg. O matter, and impertinency mixt, Reason in Madnesse.

Lear. If thou wilt weepe my fortunes, take my eyes. I know thee well enough, thy name is Gloster: Thou must be patient; we came crying hither: Thou knowst, the first time that we sinell the Ayre We wawle, and cry. I will preach to thee: Marke

Glow. Alacke, alacke the day.

Lear. When we are borne, we cry that we are come To this great stage of fooles. This a good blocke: It were a delicate stratagem to shoore A Troope of horse with felt: Ile put't in prooffe, And when I have stolne upon these Sonnes in Lawes: Then kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. Oh heere he is: lay hand upon him, Sir. Your most deere Daughter—

Lear. No rescue? What, a Prisoner? I am even The Naturall Foole of fortune. Use me well, You shall have ranfome. Let me have Surgeons, I am cut toth' Braines.

Gent. You shall have any thing.

Lear. No Seconds? All my selfe?

Why, this would make a man, a man of Salt; To use his eies for Garden water-pots. I will die bravely, Like a smugge Bridegroom. What? I will be ioyall: Come, come, I am a King. Masters, know you that?

Gent. You are a Royall one, and we obey you.

Lear. Then theres life in't. Come, and you get it, You shall get it by running: Sa, sa, sa, sa. Exit.

Gent. A sight most pittifull in the meanest wretch, Past speaking of in a King. Thou hast a Daughter Who redeemes Nature from the generall curse Which twaine have brought her to.

Edg. Haile gentle Sir.

Gent. Sir, speed you: whats your will?

Edg. Doe you heare ought (Sir) of a Baxtell toward.

Gent. Most sure, and vulgar:

Every one heares that, which can distinguish sound.

Edg. But by your favour:

How neeres the other Army?

Gent. Neere, and on speedy foot: the maine discry Stands on the hourelly thought.

Edg. I thanke you Sir, thats all.

Gent. Though that the Queene on speciall cause is here Her Army is mov'd on. Exit.

Edg. I thanke you Sir.

Glow. You ever gentle Gods, take my breath from me, Let not my worfer Spirit tempt me againe To dye before you please.

Edg. Well pray you Father.

Glow. Now good sir, what are you?

Edg. A most poore man, made tame to Fortunes blowes Who, by the Art of knowne, and feeling sorrowes, Am pregnant to good pittie. Give me your hand, Ile leade you to some biding.

Glow. Hearty thanks:

The bounty, and the benizon of heaven To boot, and boot.

Enter Steward.

Stew. A proclaim'd prize: most happy: That eyelesse head of thine, was first fram'd flesh To raise my fortunes. Thou old, unhappy Traitor, Briefely thy selfe remember: the Sword is out That must destroy thee.

Glow. Now let thy friendly hand Put strength enough too't.

Stew. Wherefore, bold Pezant, Darst thou support a publish'd Traitor? Hence, Lest that th'infection of his fortune take Like hold on thee. Let goe his arme.

Edg. Chill not let goe Zir, Without vurther cation.

Stew. Let goe Slave, or thou dy'st.

Edg. Good Gentleman goe your gate, and let poore volke passe: and 'chud ha'bin zwagged out of my life, twould not ha'bin zo long as tis, by a vortnight. Nay, come not neere th'old man: keepe out che vor'ye, or ice try whither your Costard, or my Ballow be the harder; chill be plaine with you.

Stew. Out Dunghill.

Edg. Chill picke your teeth Zir: come, no matter vor your foynes.

Stew. Slave thou hast slaine me: villaine, take my purse; If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body, And give the Letters which thou findest about me, To Edmund Earle of Gloster: seeke him out Vpon the English party. Oh untimely death, death!

Edg. I know thee well. A serviceable Villaine, As duteous to the vices of thy Mistris, As badnesse would desire.

Glow. What, is he dead?

Edg. Sit you downe Father: rest you. Lets see these Pockets; the Letters that he speakes of May be my friends: he's dead; I am onely sorry He had no other Deathfman. Let us see: Leave gentle waxe, and manners: blame us not To know our enemies mindes, we rip their hearts, Their Papers are more lawfull.

Reads the Letter.

*L*et our reciprocall vomes be remembred. You have many Opportunities to cut him off: if your wish want not, time and place will be fruitfully offer'd. There is nothing done. If hee retorne the Conqueror, then am I the Prisoner, and binbod, my Goale, from the loathed warmth whereof, deliver me, and supply the place for your Labour.

Your (Wife, so I would say) affectionate Servant. Gonerill.

Of indinguish'd space of Womans will, A plot upon her vertuous husbands life, And the exchange my brother: heere, in the sands Thee Ile rake up, the poste unsanctified Of murderous Letchers: and in the mature time, With this ungracious paper strike the sight Of the death-practis'd Duke: for him tis well. That of thy death, and businesse, I can tell.

Glow. The King is mad: How stiffe is my vilde sence That I stand up, and have ingenious feeling Of my huge Sorrowes? Better I were distract, So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefes, Drum afarre off And woes, by wrong imaginations loose

The knowledge of themselves.

Edg. Give me your hand :

Farre off me thinkes I heare the beaten Drumme.

Come father, Ile bestow you with a friend. Exeunt.

Scæna Septima.

Enter Cordelia, Kent, and Gensleman.

Cor. O thou good Kent,

How shall I live and worke

To match thy goodnesse ?

My life will be too short,

And every measure faile me.

Kent. To be acknowledg'd Madam is ore-pay'd,

All my reports goe with the modest truth,

Nor more, nor clipt, but so.

Cor. Be better suited,

These weedes are memories of those worser houres :

I prethee put them off.

Kent. Pardon deere Madam,

Yet to be knowne shortens my made intent,

My boone I make it, that you know me not,

Till time, and I, thinke meet.

Cor. Then be't so my good Lord :

How dos the King ?

Gent. Madam sleepest still.

Cor. O you kind Gods !

Cure this great breach in his abused Nature,

Th'untun'd and jarring senses, O winde up,

Of this child-changed Father.

Gent. So please your Majesty.

That we may wake the King, he hath slept long ?

Cor. Be govern'd by your knowledge, and proceede
Ith' way of your owne will : is he array'd ?

Enter Lear in a chaire carried by Servants.

Gent. I Madam : in the heaviness of sleepe,

We put fresh garments on him.

Be by good Madam when we doe awake him,

I doubt of his Temperance,

Cor. O my deere father, restauration hang
Thy medicine on my lippes, and let this kisse
Repaire those violent harmes, that my two Sisters
Have in thy Reverence made.

Kent. Kind and deere Princesse.

Cor. Had you not bin their father, these white flakes

Did challenge pittie of them. Was this a face

To be oppos'd against the jarring windes ?

Mine Enemies dogge, though he had bit me,

Should have stood that night against my fire,

And was't thou faine (poore Father)

To hovell thee with Swine and Rogues forlorne,

In short, and musty straw ? Alacke, alacke,

Tis wonder that thy life and wits, at once

Had not concluded all. He wakes, speake to him.

Gent. Madam doe you, tis fittest.

Cor. How does my Royall Lord ?

How fares your Majesty ?

Lear. You doe me wrong to take me out oth'grave;

Thou art a Soule in blisse, but I am bound

Vpon a wheele of fire, that mine owne teares
Doe scald, like molten Lead.

Cor. Sir, doe you know me ?

Lear. You are a spirit I know, where did you dye ?

Cor. Still, still, farre wide.

Gent. Hes scarce awake,

Let him alone a while.

Lear. Where have I bin ?

Where am I ? faire day light ?

I am mightily abus'd ; I should ev'n dye with pittie

To see another thus. I know not what to say :

I will not sweare these are my hands : lets see,

I feele this pin pricke, would I were assur'd

Of my condition,

Cor. O looke upon me Sir,

And hold your hand in benediction o're me,

You must not kneele.

Lear. Pray doe not mocke me :

I am a very foolish fond old man,

Fourescore and upward,

Not an houre more, nor lesse :

And to deale plainly,

I feare I am not in my perfect mind.

Me thinkes I should know you, and know this man,

Yet I am doubtfull : for I am mainly ignorant

What place this is, and all the skill I have Remembers not these garments : nor I know not

Where I did lodge last night. Doe not laugh at me,

For (as I am a man) I thinke this Lady

To be my child Cordelia.

Cor. And so I am : I am,

Lear. Be your teares wet ?

Yes faith : I pray weepe not.

If you have poyson for mee, I will drinke it :

I know you doe not love me, for your Sisters

Have (as I doe remember) done we wrong.

You have some cause, they have not,

Cor. No cause, no cause.

Lear. Am I in France ?

Kent. In your owne kingdome Sir,

Lear. Doe not abuse me.

Gent. Be comforted good Madam, the great rage

You see is kill'd in him : desire him to goe in,

Trouble him no more till further setting.

Cor. Wilt please you highnesse walke ?

Lear. You must beare with me :

Pray you now forget, and forgive,

I am old and foolish. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter with Drumme and Colours, Edmund, Regan, Gentlemen, and Soldiers.

Bast. Know of the Duke if his last purpose hold,

Or whether since he is advis'd by ought

To change the course, hes full of alteration,

And selfe reproving, bring his constant pleasure.

Reg. Our Sisters man is certainly miscarried.

Bast. Tis to be doubted Madam.

Reg. Now sweet Lord,

You

You know the goodnesse I intend upon you :
Tell me but truly, but then speake the truth.
Doe you not love my Sister ?

Bast. In honour'd Love.

Reg. But have you never found my Brothers way,
To the fore-fended place ?

Bast. No by mine honor, Madam.

Reg. I never shall endure her, deere my Lord,
Be not familiar with her.

Bast. Feare not, she and the Duke her husband.

Enter with Drum and Colours, Albany, Gonerill, Souldiers.

Alb. Our very loving Sister, well be-met :
Sir, this I heard, the King is come to his Daughter
With others, whom the rigour of our State
Forc'd to cry out.

Regan. Why is this reasond ?

Gone. Combine together gainst the Enemy :
For these domesticke and particular broiles,
Are not the question heere.

Alb. Lets then determine with th'ancient of warre
On our proceeding.

Reg. Sister youle goe with us ?

Gon. No.

Reg. Tis most convenient, pray goe with us.

Gon. Oh, ho, I know the Riddle, I will goe.

Exeunt both the Armies.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. If ere your Grace had speech with man so poore,
Heare me one word.

Alb. Ile overtake you, speake.

Edg. Before you fight the Battaile, ope this Letter :
If you have victory, let the Trumpet sound
For him that brought it : wretch though I seeme,
I can produce a Champion, that will prove
What is avouched there. If you miscarry,
Your businesse of the world hath so an end,
And machination ceases. Fortune loves you.

Alb. Stay till I have read the Letter.

Edg. I was forbid it :

When time shall serve, let but the Herald cry.
And Ile appeare againe.

Exit.

Alb. Why fare thee well, I will o're-looke thy paper.

Enter Edmund.

Bast. The Enemy's in view, draw up your powers,
Heere is the guesse of their true strength and forces,
By diligent discovery, but your haile
Is now urg'd on you.

Alb. We will greet the time.

Exit.

Bast. To both these Sisters have I sworne my love :
Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the Adder. Which of them shall I take ?
Both ? One ? Or neither ? Neither can be enjoy'd
If both remaine alive : To take the Widdow,
Exasperates, makes mad her Sister Gonerill,
And hardly shall I carry out my side,
Her husband being alive. Now then, we'll use
His countenance for the Battaile, which being done,
Let her who would be rid of him, devise
His speedy taking off. As for the mercy
Which he intends to Lear and to Cordelia,
The Battaile done, and they within our power;

Shall never see his pardon : for my state,
Stands on me to defend, not to debate.

Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Alarm within. Enter with Drum and Colours, Lear, Cordelia, and Souldiers, over the Stage, and Exeunt.

Enter Edgar, and Gloster.

Edg. Heere Father, take the shadow of this Tree
For your good hoast : pray that the right may thrive :
If ever I returne to you againe,
Ile bring you comfort.

Glr. Grace goe with you Sir:

Exit.

Alarm and Retreat within.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. Away old man, give me thy hand away :
King Lear hath lost, he and his Daughter tane, Give me thy hand. Come on.

Glo. No further Sir, a man may rot even heere.

Edg. What in ill thoughts againe ?

Men must endure

Their going hence, even as their comming hither,
Ripenesse is all, come on.

Glo. And thats true too.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter in conquest with Drum and Colours, Edmund, Lear, and Cordelia, as prisoners, Souldiers, Captaine.

Bast. Some Officers take them away : good guard,
Vntill their greater pleasures first be knowne
That are to censure them.

Cor. We are not the first,
Who with best meaning have incurr'd the worst :
For thee oppressed King I am cast downe.
My selfe could else out-frowne false Fortunes frowne.
Shall we not see these Daughters, and these Sisters ?

Lear. No, no, no, no : come lets away to prison :
We two alone will sing like Birds ith' Cage :
When thou dost aske me blessing, Ile kneele downe
And aske of thee forgiveness : So we'll live,
And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh
At gilded Butterflies : and heare poore Rogues
Talke of Court newes, and we'll talkd with them too,
Who looses, and who wins ; whos in, whos out :
And take upons the mystery of things,
As if we were Gods spies : And we'll weare out
In a wall'd prison, packes and sects of great ones
That ebbe and flow by th' Moone.

Bast. Take them away.

Lear. Vpon such sacrifices my Cordelia,
The gods themselves throw incense.
Have I caught thee ?

He that parts us, shall bring a Brand from heaven,
And fire us hence, like Foxes : wipe thine eye,
The good yeeres shall devour them, flesh and fell,

Ere

Ere they shall make us weepe?
Weele see e'm starv'd first: come.

Exit.

Bast. Come hither Captaine, hearke.
Take thou this note, goe follow them to prison,
One step I have advanc'd thee, if thou dost
As this instructs thee, thou dost make thy way
To Noble Fortunes: know thou this, that men
Are as the time is; to be tender minded
Does not become a Sword, thy great imployment
Will not beare question: either say thou'lt do't,
Or thrive by other meanes,

Capt. Ile dot my Lord.
Bast. About it, and write happy, when th' hast done,
Marke I say instantly, and carry it so
As I have set it downe. Exit Captaine.

Enter Albany, Gonerill, Regan, Souldiers.

Alb. Sir, you have shew'd to day your valiant straine
And fortune led you well: you have the Captives
Who were the opposites of this dayes strife:
I doe require them of you so to use them,
As we shall find their merits, and our safety
May equally determine.

Bast. Sir, I thought it fit,
To send the old and miserable King to some retention,
Whose age had Charmes in it, whose Title more,
To plucke the common bosome on his side,
And turne our imprest Launces in our eyes
Which doe command them. With him I sent the Queene
My reason all the same, and they are ready
To morrow, or at further space, to appeare
Where you shall hold your Session.

Alb. Sir, by your patience.
I hold you but a subject of this Warre,
Not as a brother.

Reg. Thats as we list to grace him.
Methinkes our pleasure might have bin demanded
Ere you had spcke so farre. He led our Powers,
Bore the Commission of my place and person,
The which immediacy may well stand up,
And call it selfe your Brother.

Gon. Not so hot:
In his owne grace he doth exalt himselfe,
More then in your addition.

Reg. In my rights,
By me invested, he compeeres the best.

Alb. That were the most, if he should husband you.

Reg. Iesters doe oft prove Prophets.

Gon. Holla, holla,
That eye that told you so, look'd but a squint.

Reg. Lady I am not well, else I should answer
From a full flowing stomacke. Generall,
Taket thou my souldiers, prisoners, patrimony,
Dispose of them, of me, the walls are thine:
Witnesse the world, that I create thee heere
My Lord, and Master.

Gon. Meane you to enjoy him?

Alb. The let alone lies not in your good will.

Bast. Nor in thine Lord.

Alb. Halfe-blooded fellow, yes.

Reg. Let the Drum strike, and prove my title thine.

Alb. Stay yet, heare reason: Edmund, I arrest thee
On capitall Treason; and in thy arrest,
This guilded Serpent: for your claime faire Sisters,
I bare it in the interest of my wife,

Tis she is sub-contracted to this Lord,
And I her husband contradict your Banes.
If you will marry, make your loves to me,
My Lady is bespoken.

Gon. An enterlude.

Alb. Thou art armed Gloster,
Let the Trumpet sound:
If none appeare to prove upon thy person,
Thy heynous, manifest, and many Treasons,
There is my pledge: Ile make it on thy heart
Ere I taste bread, thou art in nothing lesse
Then I have heere proclaim'd thee.

Reg. Sicke, O sicke.

Gon. If not, Ile nere trust medicine.

Bast. Theres my exchange, what in the world he is
That names me Traitor, villaine-like he lyes,
Call by the Trumpet: he that dares approach;
On him, on you, who not, I will maintaine
My truth and honor firmly.

Enter a Herald.

Alb. A Herald, ho.
Trust to thy single vertue, for thy Souldiers
All levied in my name, have in my name
Tooke their discharge.

Regan. My sicknesse growes upon me.

Albany. She is not well, convey her to my Tent,
Come hither Herald, let the Trumpet sound,
And read out this. A Trumpet sounds.

Herald reads.

If any man of quality or degree within the lists of the Army, will maintaine upon Edmund supposed Earle of Gloster, that he is a manifold Traitor, let him appeare by the third sound of the Trumpet: he is bold in his defence. 1 Trumpet.

Her. Againe. 2 Trumpet.

Her. Againe. 3 Trumpet.

Trumpet answers within.

Enter Edgar armed,

Alb. Aske him his purposes, why he appeares
Vpon this Call o' th' Trumpet.

Her. What are you?
Your name, your quality, and why you answer
This present Summons?

Edg. Know my name is lost
By Treasons tooth: bare-guawne, and Canker-bit,
Yet am I Noble as the Adversary
I come to cope.

Alb. Which is that Adversary?

Edg. Whats he that speakes for Edmund Earle of Glo-

Bast. Himselfe, what faist thou to him? (Her?)

Edg. Draw thy Sword.

That if my speech offend a Noble heart,
Thy arme may doe thee Iustice; heere is mine:
Behold it is my priviledge,
The priviledge of mine honours,
My oath, and my profession. I protest,
Maugre thy strength, place, youth, and eminence,
Despite thy victor-Sword, and fire new fortune,
Thy valor, and thy heart, thou art a Traitor:
False to thy gods, thy brother, and thy father,
Conspirant gainst this high illustrious Prince,
And from th'extremest upward of thy head,
To the discent and dust below thy foote,

A most Toad-spotted Traitor. Say thou no,
This Sword, this arme, and my best spirits are bent
To prove upon thy heart, whereto I speake,
Thou lyest.

Bast. In wisedome I should aske thy name,
But since thy out-side lookes so faire and Warlike;
And that thy tongue (some say) of breeding breathes,
What safe, and nicely I might well delay,
By rule of Knight-hood, I disdaine and spurne:
Backe doe I tesse these Treasons to thy head,
With the hell-hated Lye, ore-whelme thy heart,
Which for they yet glance by, and scarcely bruise;
This Sword of mine shall give them instant way,
Where they shall rest for ever. Trumpets speake.

Alb. Save him, save him.

Alarums. Fights.

Gen. This is practise Gloster,
By th'law of Warre, thou wast not bound to answer
An unknowne opposite: thou art not vanquish'd,
But cozend, and beguild.

Alb. Shut your mouth Dame,
Or with this paper shall I stop it: hold Sir,
Thou worse then any name, reade thine owne evill:
No tearing Lady, I perceive you know it.

Gen. Say if I doe, the Lawes are mine not thine,
Who can araigne me fort?

Exit.

Alb. Most monstrous! O, knowst thou this paper?

Bast. Aske me not what I know.

Alb. Goe after her, shes desperate, governe her.

Bast. What you have charg'd me with,
That have I done,
And more, much more, the time will bring it out.
Tis past, and so am I: But what art thou
That hast this fortune on me? If thou'rt Noble,
I doe forgive thee.

Edg. Lets exchange charity:
I am no lesse in blood then thou art Edmund,
If more, the more th'hast wrong'd me.
My name is Edgar and thy Fathers sonne,
The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices
Make instruments to plague us:
The darke and vitious place where thee he got,
Cost him his eyes.

Bast. Th'hast spoken right, tis true,
The Wheele is come full circle, I am heere.

Alb. Me thought thy very gate did prophesie
A Royall Noblenesse: I must embrace thee,
Let sorrow split my heart, if ever I
Did hate thee, or thy father.

Edg. Worthy Prince I knowt.

Alb. Where have you hid your selfe?
How have you knowne the miseries of your father?

Edg. By nursing them my Lord. List a brieve tale,
And when tis told, O that my heart would burst.
The bloody proclamation to escape
That follow'd me so neere, (O our lives sweetnesse,
That we the paine of death would hourly dye,
Rather then dye at once) taught me to shift
Into a mad-mans ragges, t'assume a semblance
That very Dogges disdain'd: and in this habit
Met I my father with his bleeding Rings,
Their precious Stones new lost: became his guide,
Led him, begg'd for him, sav'd him from dispaire.
Never (O fault) reveal'd my selfe unto him,
Vntill some halfe houre past when I was arm'd,
Not sure, though hoping of this good successe,
I ask'd his blessing, and from first to last

Told him our pilgrimage. But his flawd heart
(Alacke too weake the conflict to support)
Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and griefe,
Burst smilingly.

Bast. This speech of yours hath mov'd me,
And shall perchance doe good, but speake you on,
You looke as you had something more to say.

Alb. If there be more, more wofull, hold it in,
For I am almost ready to dissolve,
Hearing of this.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gen. Helpe, helpe; O helpe.

Edg. What kind of helpe?

Alb. Speake man.

Edg. What meanes this bloody Knife?

Gen. Tis hot, it smoakes, came even from the heart of——O shes dead.

Alb. Who dead? Speake man.

Gen. Your Lady Sir, your Lady; and her Sister
By her is poyson'd: she confesses it.

Bast. I was contracted to them both, all three
Now marry in an instant.

Edg. Here comes Kent.

Enter Kent.

Alb. Produce the bodies, be they alive or dead i

Gonerill and Regans bodies brought out.

This judgement of the heavens that makes us tremble,
Touches us not with pittie. O is this she?
The time will not allow the complement
Which very manners urges.

Kent. I am come
To bid my King and Master aye good night,
Is he not here?

Alb. Great thing of us forgot,
Speake Edmund, wheres the King? and wheres Cordelia?
Seest thou this object Kent.

Kent. Alacke, why thus?

Bast. Yet Edmund was belov'd:
The one the other poison'd for my sake,
And after slew herselfe.

Alb. Even so: cover their faces.

Bast. I part for life: some good I meane to doe Despight of mine owne Nature. Quickly send,
(Be brieve in it) to th'Chastle for my Writ
Is on the life of Lear, and on Cordelia:
Nay, send in time.

Alb. Run, run, O run.

Edg. To whom my Lord? Who has the Office?
Send thy token of repreeve.

Bast. Well thought on, take my Sword,
Give it the Captaine.

Edg. Hast thee for thy life.

Bast. He hath Commission from thy Wife and me,
To hang Cordelia in the prison, and
To lay the blame upon her owne dispaire,
That she fore-did her selfe.

Alb. The gods defend her, beare him hence a while.

Enter Lear with Cordelia in his armes.

Lear. Howle, howle, howle: O your are men of stones,
Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so,
That heavens vault should cracke: shes gone for ever.
I know when one is dead, and when one lives,
Shes dead as earth: Lend me a Looking-glasse,

If that her breath will mist or staine the stone,
Why then she lives.

Kent. Is this the promis'd end?

Edg. Or image of that horror.

Alb. Fall and cease.

Lear. This feather stirs, she lives: if it be so,
It is a chance which doe's redeeme all sorrowes
That ever I have felt.

Kent. O my good Master.

Lear. Prythee away.

Edg. Tis noble Kent your Friend.

Lear. A plague upon you murtherers, Traitors all,
I might have sav'd her, now she's gone for ever:
Cordelia, Cordelia, stay a little. Ha.

What is't thou saist? her voyce was ever soft,
Gentle, and low, an excellent thing in woman.
I kill'd the slave that was a hanging thee.

Gent. Tis true (my Lords) he did.

Lear. Did I not fellow?

I have seene the day, with my good biting Faulchion
I would have made him skip: I am old now,
And these same crosses spoyle me. Who are you?
Mine eyes are o'thbest, Ile tell you straight.

Kent. If Fortune brag of two, she lov'd and hated,
One of them we behold.

Lear. This is a dull sight, are you not Kent?

Kent. The same: your servant Kent,

Where is your servant Caius?

Lear. He's good fellow, I can tell you that,
Hee'l strike and quickly too, he's dead and rotten.

Kent. No my good Lord, I am the very man.

Lear. Ile see that straight.

Kent. That from your first of difference and decay,
Hane follow'd your sad steps.

Lear. You are welcome hither.

Kent. Nor no man else:

All's cheerelesse, darke, and deadly,
Your eldest daughters have fore-done themselves,
And desperately are dead.

Lear. I so I thinke.

Alb. He knowes not what he sayes, and vaine is it

That we present us to him.

Enter a Messenger.

Edg. Very bootlesse.

Mes. Edmund is dead my Lord.

Alb. Thats but a trifle here:

You Lords and Noble friends know our intent,
What comfort to this great decay may come,
Shall be appli'd. For us we will resigne,
During the life of this old Majesty
To him our absolute power, you to your rights,
With boot, and such addition as your honours
Have more then merited. All Friends shall Taste the wages of their vertue, and all Foes
The cup of their deservings: O see, see.

Lear. And my poore Foole is hang'd: No, no, no life?
Why should a Dog, a Horse, a Rat have life,
And thou no breath at all? Thou'lt come no more,
Never, never, never, never, never.

Pray you undoe this Button. Thanke you Sir,
Doe you see this? Looke on her, looke on her lips,
Looke there, looke there.

He dyes.

Edg. He faints, my Lord, my Lord.

Kent. Breake heart, I prythee breake.

Edg. Looke to my Lord.

Kent. Vex not his ghost, O let him passe, he hates him,
That would upon the wracke of this tough world
Stretch him out longer.

Edg. He is gone indeed.

Kent. The wonder is, he hath endur'd so long,
He but usurpt his life.

Alb. Beare them from hence, our present businesse
Is generall woe: Friends of my soule, you twaine, Rule in this Realme, and the gor'd state sustaine.

Kent. I have a journey sir, shortly to goe,
My Master cals me, I must not say no.

Dyes.

Edg. The waight of this sad time we must obey,
Speake what we feele, not what we ought to say:
The oldest hath borne most, we that are yong,
Shall never see so much, nor live so long,

Exeunt with a dead march.

FIN IS.

THE TRAGEDY OF

Othello, the Moore of Venice.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Rodorigo and Iago.

Rodorigo.

Ever tell me, I take it very unkindly
That thou (Iago) who halt had my purse, (this.
As if the strings were thine, should'st know of Iago. But you'l not heare me. If ever I did
Of such a matter, abhorre me. (dreame

Rodo. Thou told'st me,
Thou didst hold him in thy hate.

Iago. Despise me
If I dee not. Three great ones of the Citie,
(In personall suit to make me his Lievetenant)
Off-capt to him: and by the faith of man
I know my price, I am worth no worse a place.
But he (as loving his owne pride, and purposes)
Evades them, with a Bumbast Circumstance,
Horribly stult with Epithites of warre,
Non-suites my Mediators. For certes, sayes he,
I have already chose my Officer. And what was he?
Forsooth, a great Arithmetician,
One Michael Cassio, a Florentine,
(A Fellow almost damn'd in a faire wife)
That never set a Squadron in the Field,
Nor the division of a battaile knowes
More than a Spintler: Vnlesse the Bookish Theoricke:
Wherein the Tongued Consuls can propose
As Masterly as he, Meere prattle (without practise)
Is all his Souldiership. But he (Sir) had th'election
And I (of whom his eyes had seene the prooffe
At Rhodes, at Cyprus, and on others grounds
Christen'd, and Heathen) must be be-leed, and calm'd
By Debitor, and Creditor. This Counter-Caster,
He (in good time) must his Lievetenant be,
And I (blessed the marke) his Mooreships Ancient.

Rod. By heaven, I rather would have been his hang-

Iago. Why, there's no remedy, (man
Tis the curse of Service;
Preferment goes by Letter, and affection,
And not by old gradation, where each second
Stood heire to th'first. Now sir, be Iudge your selfe, Whether I in any just terme am Aslir'd
To love the Moore?

Rod. I would not follow him then.

Iago. O Sir content you.

I follow him to serve my turne upon him.
We cannot all be Masters, nor all Masters

Cannot be truly follow'd. You shall marke
Many a dutious and knee-crooking Knaue;
That (doting on his owne obsequious bondage)
Weares out his time, much like his Masters Asse,
For nought but Provender, & when he's old Casheer'd, Whip me such honest Knaves. Others there are
Who trim'd in Formes, and visages of duty,
Keepe yet their hearts attending on themselves,
And throwing but shewes of service on their Lords,
Doe well thrive by them.
And when they have lin'd their Coates
Doe themselves Homage.
These Fellowes have some soule,
And such a one doe I professe my selfe. For (sir)
It is as sure as you are Rodorigo,
Were I the Moore, I would not be Iago:
In following him, I follow but my selfe.
Heaven is my Iudge, not I, for love and duty,
But seeming so, for my peculiar end:
For when my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act, and figure of my heart
In complement externe, 'tis not long after
But I will weare my heart vpon my sleeve
For Dawes to pecke at; I am not what I am.

Rod. What a fall Fortune do's the thicke-lips owe
If he can carry't thus?

Iago. Call up her father:
Rowle him, make after him, poyson his delight,
Proclaime him in the streets. Incense his kinsmen;
And though he in a fertile Clymate dwell,
Plague him with Flyes: though that his joy be joy,
Yet throw such chances of vexation on't,
As it may loose some colour.

Rodo. Here is her fathers house, Ile call aloud.

Iago. Doe, with like timorous accent, and dire yell.
As when (by night and negligence) the fire
Is spied in populous Cities.

Rod. What hoa: Brabantio, Signior Brabantio, hoa:

Iago. Awake, what hoa, Brabantio: Theeves, theeves, Looke to your house, your Daughter, and your Bags,
Theeves, theeves.

Bra. Above. What is the reason of this terrible Summons? what is the matter there?

Rodo. Signior, is all your Familie within?

Iago. Are your doores lock'd?

Bra. Why? wherefore aske you this?

Iago. Sir, y'are robb'd, for shame put on your Gowne,
Your

Your heart is burst, you have lost halfe your soule
Even now, now, very now an old blacke Ram
Is tugging your white Ewe. Arise, arise,
Awake the snorting Citizens with the Bell,
Or else the Divell will make a Grand-fire of you.
Arise I say.

Bra. What, have you lost your wits?

Rod. Most reverend Signior, do you know my voyce?

Bra. Not I: what are you?

Rod. My name is Rodorigo.

Bra. The worser welcome:

I have charg'd thee not to haunt about my doores:
In honest plainenesse thou hast heard me say,
My Daughter is not for thee. And now in madnesse
(Being full of supper, and distempering draughts)
Upon malicious knavery, dost thou come
To start my quiet.

Rod. Sir, Sir, Sir.

Bra. But thou must needs be sure,
My spirits and my place have in their power
To make this bitter to thee.

Rod. Patience good Sir.

Bra. What tell'st thou me of Robbing?
This is Venice: my house is not a Grange.

Rod. Most grave Brabantio,
In simple and pure soule, I come to you.

Iag. Sir, you are one of those that will not serve God, if the Divell bid you. Because we come to do you service, and you thinke we are Ruffians, you'll have your Daughter cover'd with a Barbary horse, you'll have your Nephewes neigh to you, you'll have Courfers for Cozens:
and Gennets for Germans.

Bra. What prophane wretch art thou?

Iag. I am one Sir, that comes to tell you, your Daughter and the Moore, are making the Beast with two backs.

Bra. Thou art a Villaine.

Iago. You are a Senator.

Bra. This thou shalt answer. I know thee Rodorigo.

Rod. Sir, I will answer any thing. But I beseech you
If't be your pleasure, and most wise consent,
(As partly I find it is) that your faire Daughter,
At this odd Even and dull watch o'th' night
Transported with no worse nor better guard,
But with a Knave of common hire, a Gundelior,
To the grosse claspes of a Lascivious Moore:
If this be knowne to you, and your Allowance,
We then have done you bold and sawcy wrongs.
But if you know not this, my manners tell me,
We haue your wrong rebuke. Doe not belevee
That from the sense of all Civilitie,
It thus would play and trifle with your Reverence.
Your daughter (if you have not given her leave)
I say againe, hath made a grosse revolt,
Tying her Duty, Beauty, Wit, and Fortunes
In an extravagant, and wheeling Stranger,
Of here, and every where: straight satisfie your selfe.
If she be in your Chamber, or your house,
Let loose on me the Justice of the state
For thus deluding you.

Bra. Strike on the Tinder, ho:

Give me a Taper: call up all my people.

This Accident is not unlike my dreaue,

Beliefe of it oppresses me already.

Light, I say, light.

Iago. Farewell: for I must leave you:

It seemes not meet, nor wholesome to my place

To be produced, as if I stay, I shall,)

Against the Moore. For I doe know the state,
(How ever this may gall him with some checke)
Cannot with safety cast him. For he's imbarck'd
With such load reason to the Cyprus warres,
(Which even now stands in Act) that for their soules
Another of his Fadome, they have none,
To lead their Businesse. In which regard,
Though I doe hate him as I doe hell,
Yet, for necessity of present life,
I must shew out a Flag, and signe of Love,
(Which is indeed but signe) that you shall surely find him
Lead to the Sagitary the raised Search:
And there will I be with him. So farewell. Exit.

Enter Brabantio, with Servants and Torches.

Bra. It is too true an evill. Gone she is,
And what's to come of my despised time,
Is naught but bitternesse. Now Rodorigo,
Where didst thou see her? (Oh unhappy Girle)
With the Moore fast thou? (Who would be a Father?)
How didst thou know twas she? (Oh she deceives me Past thought:) what said she to you? Get moe Tapers:
Raile all my Kinred. Are they married thinke you?

Rod. Truly I thinke they are.

Bra. Oh heaven: how got she out?
Oh treason of my blood.
Fathers, from hence trust not your Daughters minds
By what you see them Act. Are there not charmes,
By which the propertie of Youth and Maidhood
May be abus'd? Have you not read Rodorigo,
Of some such thing?

Rod. Yes sir: I have indeed.

Bra. Call up my brother: oh would you had had her.
Some one way, some another. Doe you know
Where we may apprehend her, and the Moore?

Rod. I thinke I can discover him, if you please
To get good Guard, and goe along with me.

Bra. Pray you lead on. At every house Ile call,
(I may command at most) get Weapons (ho)
And use some speciall Officers of might:
On good Rodorigo, I will deserve your paines. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello, Iago, Attendants, with Torches.

Iag. Though in the trade of warre I have slaine men,
Yet doe I hold it very stuffe o'th' conscience
To doe no contriv'd murder: I lake iniquitie
Sometime to doe me service. Nine, or ten times
I had thought to have yerck'd him here under the Ribbes.

Othel. Tis better as it is.

Iago. Nay but he prated,
And spoke such scurvy, and provoking termes
Against your honor, that with the little godlinesse I have
I did full hard forbeare him. But I pray you sir,
Are you fast married? Be assur'd of this,
That the Magnifico is much belov'd,
And hath in his effect a voyce potentiall
As double as the Dukes: He will divorce you.
Or put upon you, what restraint or grievance,

The Law (with all his might, to enforce it on)
Will give him Cable.

Othe. Let him doe his spight :
My services; which I have done the Signory
Shall out-tongue his complaints. Tis yet to know,
Which when I know, that boasting is an honour,
I shall promulgate. I fetch my life and being,
From men of Royall Seige. And my demerites
May speake (unbonnetted) to as proud a Fortune
As this that I have reach'd. For know Iago,
But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhoused free condition
Put into Circumscription, and Confine,
For the Seas worth. But looke, what Lights come yond ?

Enter Cassio with Torches.

Iago. Those are the raised father, and his friends :
You were best goe in.

Othel. Nor I : I must be found,
My parts, my title, and my perfect soule
Shall manifestly me rightly. Is it they ?

Iago. By Ianus, I thinke no.

Othel. The servants of the Dukes ?
And my Lievtenant ?
The goodnesse of the night upon you (friends)
What is the Newes ?

Cassio. The Duke does greet you (Generall)
And he requires your haste, Post-haste appearance,
Even on the instant.

Othel. What is the matter, thinke you ?

Cassio. Something from Cyprus, as I may divine :
It is a businesse of some heat. The Gallies
Have sent a dozen sequent messengers
This very night, at one anothers heeles :
And many of the Consuls (rais'd and met,)
Are at the Dukes already. You have been hotly call'd for,
When being not at your lodging to be found,
The Senate hath sent about three severall Quests,
To search you out.

Othel. Tis well I am found by you :
I will but spend a word here in the house,
And goe with you.

Cassio. Ancient, what makes he here ?

Iago. Faith, he to night hath boarded a Land Carrac,
If it prove lawfull prize, he's made for ever.

Cassio. I do not understand.

Iago. He's marry'd.

Cassio. To whom ?

Iago. Marry to ——— Come Captaine, will you goe ?

Othel. Have with you.

Cassio. Here comes another Troope to seeke for you:

Enter Brabantio, Rodorigo, with Officers and Torches.

Iago. It is Brabantio : Generall be advis'd.
He comes to bad intent.

Othel. Holla, stand there.

Rod. Signior, it is the Moore.

Bra. Downe with him, Theefe.

Iago. You Rodorigo ? Come sir, I am for you.

Othe. Keepe up your bright Swords, for the dew will rust them. Good Signior, you shall more command with yeares, than with your Weapons.

Bra. Oh thou foule theefe,

Where hast thou stow'd my Daughter ?
Damn'd as thou art, thou hast enchanted her

For Ile referre me to all things of sense,
(If she in chaines of Magicke were not bound)
Whether a Maide, so tender, faire, and happy,
So opposite to Marriage, that she shunn'd
The wealthy curled Dearling of our Nation,
Would ever have (t'encurre a generall mocke)
Runne from her Guardage to the sooty bosome,
Of such a thing as thou : to feare, not to delight ?
Iudge me the world, if tis not grosse in sense,
That thou hast practis'd on her with foule Charmes,
Abus'd her delicate youth, with Drugs or Minerals,
That weakens motion. Ile have't disputed on,
Tis probable, and palpable to thinking ;
I therefore apprehend and doe attach thee,
For an abuser of the world, a practiser
Of Arts inhibited, and out of warrant ;
Lay hold upon him, if he doe resist
Suddue him at his perill.

Othe. Hold your hands,
Both you of my inclining, and the rest.
Were it my Cue to fight, I should have knowne it Without a Prompter. Whither will you that I goe
To answer this your charge ?

Bra. To prison, till fit time
Of Law, and course of direct Session
Call thee to answer.

Othe. What if I doe obey ?
How may the Duke be therewith satisfied,
Whose Messengers are here about my side,
Vpon some present businesse of the State,
To bring me to him.

Officer. Tis true most worthy Signior,
The Duke's in Councell, and your Noble selfe,
I am sure is sent for.

Bra. How ? The Duke in Councell ?
In this time of the nigh ? bring him away ;
Mine's not an idle cause. The Duke himselfe,
Or any of my Brothers of the State,
Cannot but feele this wrong, as twere their owne :
For if such Actions may have passage free,
Bond-slaves and Pagans shall our Statesmen be. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Duke, Senators, and Officers.

Duke. There is no composition in this newes,
That gives them credit.

1 Sen. Indeed, they are disproportioned ;
My Letters say, a Hundred and seven Gallies.

Duke. And mine a Hundred forty.

2 Sen. And mine two Hundred :
But though they jumpe not on a just accompt,
(As in these Cases where the ayme reports,
'Tis oft with difference) yet doe they all confirme
A Turkish Fleet, and bearing up to Cyprus,

Duke. Nay, it is possible enough to judgement :
I doe not so secure me in the error,
But the maine Article I doe approve
In fearefull sense.

Saylor within. What ho, what ho, what ho.

Enter Saylor.

Officer. A

Officer. A Messenger from the Gallies.

Duke. Now? What's the businesse?

Saylor. The Turkish preparation makes for Rhodes,
So was I bid report here to the State,
By Signior Angelo.

Duke. How say you by this change?

1. Sen. This cannot be

By no assay of Reason. 'Tis a Pageant

To keepe us in false gaze, when we consider

Th'importancy of Cyprus to the Turke:

And let our selves againe but understand,

That as it more concerne the Turke then Rhodes,

So may he with more facile question beare it,

For that it stands not in such warlike brace,

But altogether lacks th'abilities

That Rhodes is dress'd in. If we make thought of this,

We must not thinke the Turke is so unskillfull,

To leave that latest, which concerne him first,

Neglecting an attempt of ease, and gaine

To wake, and wage a danger profitlesse.

Duke. Nay, in all confidence he's not for Rhodes.

Officer. Here is more Newes.

Enter a Messenger.

Messen. The Ottomites, Reveren'd, and Gracions,
Steering with due course toward the Ile of Rhodes,
Have there injoynted them with an after Fleet.

1. Sen. I, so I thought: how many, as you guesse?

Mess. Of thirty Saile: and now they doe re-stem
Their backward course, bearing with franke appearance
Their purposes toward Cyprus. Signior Montano,
Your trusty and most valiant Servitour,
With his free duty, recommends you thus,
And prayes you to beleve him.

Duke. 'Tis certaine then for Cyprus:

Marcus Luccicos is not he in Towne?

1. Sen. He's now in Florence.

Duke. Write from us,

To him, Post, Post-haste, dispatch.

1. Sen. Here comes Brabantio, and the Moore.

Enter Brabantio, Othello, Cassio, Iago, Rodorigo, and Officers.

Duke. Valiant Othello, we must straight employ you,
Against the generall Enemy Ottoman.

I did not see you: welcome gentle Signior,

Welack't your Counsaile, and your helpe to night.

Bra. So did I yours: Good your Grace pardon me.

Neither my place, for ought I heard of businesse

Hath rais'd me from my Bed; nor doth the generall care

Take hold on me. For my particular griefe

Is of so flood-gate, and ore-bearing Nature,

That it ingluts, and swallowes other sorrowes,

And it is still it selfe.

Duke. Why? What's the matter?

Bra. My Daughter: oh my Daughter!

Sen. Dead.

Bra. I, to me.

She is abus'd, stolne from me, and corrupted

By Spels and Medicines, bought of Mountebankes;

For Nature so preposterously to erre,

(Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,)

Sans witch-craft could nor.

Duke. Who ere he be, that in this fowle proceeding
Hath thus beguil'd your Daughter of her selfe,

And you of her; the bloody Booke of Law,
You shall your selfe read, in the bitter letter,
After your owne sense: yea, though our proper sonne
Stood in your Action.

Bra. Humbly I thanke your Grace,
Here is the man; this Moore, whom now it seemes
Your speciall Mandate, for the State affaires,
Hath hither brought.

All. We are very sorry for't.

Duke. What in your owne part, can you say to this?

Bra. Nothing, but this is so.

Othe. Most Potent, Grave, and Reverend Signiors,
My very Noble, and approv'd good Masters;
That I have tane away this old mans daughter,
It is most true: true I have married her;
The very head, and front of my offending,
Hath this extent; no more. Rude am I, in my speech,
And little bless'd with the soft phrase of Peace;
For since these Armes of mine, had seven yeeres pith,
Till now, some nine Moones wasted, they have us'd
Their deereft action, in the tented field:
And little of this great world can I speake,
More than pertaines to Feats of Broyles, and Battaile,
And therefore little shall I grace my cause,
In speaking for my selfe. Yet, (by your gracious patience)
I will a round un-varnish'd Tale deliver,
Of my whole course of Love.

What Drugs, what Charmes,
What Conjuratioun, and what mighty Magicke,
(For such proceeding I am charg'd withall)
I won his Daughter with.

Bra. A Maiden, never bold:
Of spirit so still, and quiet, that her Motion
Blush'd at her selfe, and she in spight of Nature,
Of yeares, of Countrey, credite, every thing
To fall in Love, with what she fear'd to looke on;
It is a judgement maim'd, and most imperfect.
That will confesse Perfection so could erre
Against all rules of Nature, and must be driven
To find out practises of cunning hell
Why this should be. I therefore vouch againe,
That with some Mixtures powerfull ore the blood,
Or with some Dram (conjur'd to this effect)
He wrought upon her.

Duk. To vouch this, is no prooffe,
Without more wider, and more over-Test
Then these thin habits, and poore likely-hoods
Of moderne seeming, doe preferre against him.

Sen. But Othello, speake,
Did you, by indirect, and forced courses
Subdue, and poyson this yong Maids affections?
Or came it by request, and such faire question
As foule, to foule affordeth?

Othel. I doe beseech you,
Send for the Lady to the Sagitary,
And let her speake of me before her Father,
If you doe find me foule, in her report,
The trust, the office, I doe hold of you,
Not onely take away, but let your sentence
Even fall upon my life.

Duke. Fetch Desdemona hither.

Othel. Ancient, conduct them:
You best know the place.
And till she come, as truly as to heaven,
I doe confesse the vices of my blood,
So justly to your Grave cares, Ile present

How I did thrive in this faire Ladies love,
And she in mine.

Duke. Say it Othello.

Othe. Her father lov'd me, oft invited me :
Still question'd me the story of my life,
From yeare to yeare : the Battails, Sieges, Fortane,
That I have past.
I ran it through, even from my Boyish dayes,
To th' very moment that he bad me tell it.
Wherein I spoke of most disastrous chances:
Of moving Accidents by Flood, and Field,
Of haire-breadth escapes i' th' imminent deadly breach ;
Of being taken by the insolent foe,
And sold to slavery. Of my redemption thence,
And portance in my Travellers history.
Wherein of Antars vast, and Defarts wilde, (ven,
Rough Quarries, Rocks, & Hills, whose heads touch hea-
It was my hint to speake. Such was my Proesse,
And of the Canibals that each others eate,
The Anthropophagi, and men whose heads
Grew beneath their shoulders. These things to heare,
Would Desdemona seriously incline :
But still the house affaires would draw her hence :
Which ever as she could with haste dispatch,
She'd come againe, and with a greedy eare
Devoure up my discourse. Which I observing,
Tooke once a pliant houre, and found good meanes
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my Pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not distinctively : I did consent,
And often did beguile her of her teares,
When I did speake of some distressefull stroke
That my youth suffer'd : My story being done,
She gave me for my paines a world of kisses:
She swore in faith twas strange, twas passing strange,
'Twas pittifull : twas wondrous pittifull.
She wish'd she had not heard it, yet she wish'd
That heaven had made her such a man. She thank'd me,
And bad me if I had a friend that lov'd her,
I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would wooe her. Vpon this hint I spake,
She lov'd me for the dangers I have past,
And I lov'd her, that she did pittie them.
This onley is the witch-craft I have us'd.
Here comes the Lady : Let her witnesse it.

Enter Desdemona, Iago, Attendants.

Duke. I thinke this tale would win my Daughter too,
Good Brabantio, take up this mangled matter at the best:
Men doe their broken Weapons rather use,
Then their bare hands.

Bra. I pray you heare her speake :
If she confesse that she was halfe the wooer,
Destruction on my head, if my bad blame
Light on the man. Come hither gentle Mistris,
Doe you perceive in all his Noble company,
Where most you owe obedience ?

Des. My Noble father,
I doe perceive here a divided duty.
To you I am bound for life, and education :
My life and education both doe learne me,
How to respect you. You are the Lord of duty,
I am hitherto your daughter. But here's my husband ;
And so much duty, as my Mother shew'd

To you, preferring you before her father :
So much I challenge, that I may professe
Due to the Moore my Lord.

Bra. God be with you : I have done.
Please it your Grace, on to the State affaires ;
I had rather to adopt a child than get it.
Come hither Moore,
I here doe give thee that with all my heart,
Which but thou hast already, with all my heart
I would keepe from thee. For your sake (Iewell)
I am glad at soule, I have no other child ;
For thy escape would teach me tyranny
To hang clogs on them. I have done my Lord.

Duke. Let me speake like your selfe :
And lay a Sentence,
Which like a grise, or step may helpe these Lovers,
When remedies are past, the griefes are ended
By seeing the worst, which late on hopes depended.
To mourne a mischief that is past and gone,
Is the next way to draw new mischief on.
What cannot be preserv'd, when Fortune takes :
Patience, her Injury a mockery makes.
The robb'd that smiles, steals something from the Thiefe,
He robs himselfe, that spends a bootlesse griefe.

Bra. So let the Turke of Cyprus beguile,
We lose it not so long as we can smile :
He beares the sentence well, that nothing beares,
But the free comfort which from thence he heares.
But he beares both the sentence, and the sorrow,
That to pay griefe, must of poore Patience borrow.
These Sentences, to Sugar, or to Gall,
Being strong on both sides, are Equivocall.
But words are words, I never yet did heare :
That the bruiz'd heart was pierced through the eare.
I humbly beseech you proceed to th' Affaires of State.

Duke. The Turke with a most mighty preparation makes for Cyprus ; Othello, the Fortitude of the place is best knowne to you. And though we have there a Substitute of most allowed sufficiency ; yet opinion, a more Soveraigne Mistris of Effects, throwes a more safe voyce on you : you must therefore be content to stubber the grosse of your new Fortunes, with this more stub-borne, and boysterous expedition.

Othe. The Tyrant Custome, most Grave Senators,
Hath made the flinty and Steele Coach of Warre
My thrice-driven bed of Downe. I doe agnize
A naturall and prompt Alacrity,
I find in hardnesse : and doe undertake
This present warre against the Ottomites.
Most humbly therefore bending to your State.
I crave fit disposition for my Wife,
Due reference of Place, and Exhibition,
With such accomodation and besort
As levels with her breeding.

Duke. Why, at her Fathers.

Bra. I will not have it so.

Othe. Nor I.

Des. Nor would I there reside,
To put my father in impatient thoughts
By being in his eye. Most Gracious Duke,
To my unfolding, lend your prosperous eare,
And let me find a Character in your voyce
T'assist my simplenesse.

Duke. What would you Desdemona ?

Des. That I love the Moore, to live with him,
My downe-right violence, and storme of Fortunes,

May trumpet to the world. My heart's subdu'd
Even to the very quality of my Lord;
I saw Othello's visage in his minde,
And to his honours and his valiant parts,
Did I my soule and fortunes consecrate.
So that (deere Lords) if I be left behind
A Moth of Peace, and he goe to the War,
The Rites for why I love him, are bereft me:
And I a heavy interim shall support
By his deare absence. Let me goe with him.

Othe. Let her have your voyce.
Vouch with me heaven, I therefore beg it not
To please the Palate of my Appetite:
Nor to comply with heat the yong effects
In my defunct, and proper satisfaction.
But to be free, and bounteous to her minde:
And heaven defend your good soules, that you thinke
I will your serious and great business scant
When she is with me. No, when light wing'd Toyes
Of feather'd Cupid, feeble with wanton dulnesse
My speculative, and offic'd Instrument:
That my Disports corrupt, and taint my business:
Let House-wives make a Skillet of my Helme,
And all indigne, and base adversities,
Make head against my Estimation.

Duke. Be it as you shall privately determine,
Either for her stay, or going: th' Affaire cries haste:
And speed must answer it.

Sen. You must away to night.

Othe. With all my heart.

Duke. At nine i'th' morning, here wee'l meet againe.
Othello, leave some Officer behind
And he shall our Commission bring to you:
And such things else of quality and respect
As doth import you.

Othe. So please your Grace, my Ancient,
A man he is of honesty and trust:
To his conveyance I assigne my wife.
With what else needfull, your good Grace shall thinke
To be sent after me.

Duke. Let it be so:
Good night to every one. And Noble Signior,
If Vertue no delighted beauty lacke,
Your Son-in Law is farre more faire than blacke.

Sen. Adieu brave Moore, use Desdemona well.

Bra. Look to her (Moore) if thou hast eyes to see:
She has deceiv'd her father, and may thee. Exit.

Othe. My life upon her faith. Honest Iago,
My Desdemona must I leave to thee:
I prythee let thy wife attend on her,
And bring them after in their best advantage.
Come Desdemona, I have but an houre
Of Love, of worldly matter, and direction
To speake with thee. We must obey the time. Exit.

Rod. Iago.

Iago. What saist thou noble heart?

Rod. What will I doe, thinkest thou?

Iago. Why goe to bed and sleepe.

Rod. I will incontinently drowne my selfe.

Iago. If thou dost, I shall never love thee after. Why thou silly Gentleman?

Rod. It is fillinesse to live, when to live is torment:
and then have we a prescription to dye, when death is our Physitian.

Iago. Oh villanous: I have look'd upon the world for foure times seven yeares, and since I could distinguish betwixt a Benefit, and an injury, I never found man that knew how to love himselfe. Ere I would say, I would drowne my selfe for the love of a Gynney Hen; I would change my humanity with a Baboone.

Rod. What should I doe, I confesse it is my shame to be so fond, but it is not in my vertue to amend it.

Iago. Vertue? A figge, tis in our selves that wee are thus, or thus. Our Bodies are our Gardens, to the which, our Wils are Gardiners. So that if we will plant Net-tels, or sowe Lettice: Set Hyfope, and weede up Time:
Supply it with one gender of Hearbes, or distract it with many: either have it sterill with idlenesse, or manured with Industry, why the power and Corrigible authority of this lies in our Wils. If the braine of our lives had not one scale of Reason, to payse another of Sensuality, the blood, and basenesse of our Natures would conduct us to most prepostrous Conclusions. But wee have reason to coole our raging Motions, or carnall Stings, or unbitted Lusts: whereof I take this, that you call Love, to be a Sect, or Seyen.

Rod. It cannot be.

Iago. It is meerely a Lust of the Blood, and a permission of the will. Come, be a man: drowne thy selfe?
Drowne Cats, and blind Puppies. I have profest me thy Friend, and I confesse me knit to thy deserving, with Cables of perdurable toughnesse. I could never better steed thee than now. Put money in thy purse: follow thou the Warres, defeat thy favour, with an usurped Beard. I say, put money in thy purse. It cannot be long that Desdemona should continue her love to the Moore. Put Money in thy purse: nor he his to her. It was a violent Commencement in her, and thou shalt see an answerable Sequestration, put but money in thy purse. These Moores are changeable in their wils: fill thy purse with money.
The food that to him now is as luscious as Locusts, shall to him shortly bee as bitter as Coloquintida. Shee must change for youth: when shee is sated with his body, she will finde the errors of her choyce. Therefore put money in thy purse. If thou wilt needs damne thy selfe, doe it a more delicate way then drowning. Make all the money thou canst: If Sanctimony and a fraile vow, betwixt an erring Barbarian, and super-subtle Venetian be not too hard for my wits, and all the Tribe of hell, thou shalt enjoy her: therefore make money: a pox of drowning thy selfe, it is cleane out of the way. Seeke thou rather to bee hang'd in compassing thy joy, then to bee drown'd, and goe without her.

Rod. Wilt thou be fast to my hopes, if I depend on the issue?

Iago. Thou art sure of me: Goe make money: I have told thee often, and I re-tell thee againe, and againe, I hate the Moore. My cause is hearted; thine hath no lesse reason. Let us be conjunctive in our revenge, against him. If thou canst Cuckold him, thou dost thy selfe a pleasure, me a sport. There are many Events in the Wombe of Time, which will be delivered. Traverse, goe, provide thy money. We will have more of this to morrow. Adieu.

Rod. Where shall we meet i'th morning?

Iago. At my lodging.

Rod. Ile be with thee betimes.

Iago. Goe to, farewell. Doe you here Roderigo?

Rod. Ile sell all my Land. Exit.

Iago. Thus doe I ever make my Foole, my purse:
For I mine owne gain'd knowledge should prophane
If I would time expend with such a Swaine,

But

But for my Sport, and Profit : I hate the Moore,
 And it is thought abroad, that twixt my sheets
 He ha's done my Office. I know not if't be true,
 But I, for meere suspicion in that kinde,
 Will doe, as if for Surety. He holds me well,
 The better shall my purpose worke on him:
Cassio's a proper man : Let me see now,
 To get this place, and to plume up my will
 In double Knavery. How ? how ? Let's see.
 After some time, to abuse Othello's eares,
 That he is too familiar with his wife :
 He hath a person, and a smooth dispose
 To be suspected : fram'd to make women false.
 The Moore is of a free, and open Nature,
 That thinks men honest, that but seeme to be so,
 And will as tenderly be lead by'th' Nose
 As Asses are :
 I have't : it is engendred : Hell, and Night,
 Must bring this monstrous Birth, to the world's light.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Montano, and Gentlemen.

Mon. What from the Cape, can you discern at Sea ?
1 Gen. Nothing at all, it is a high wrought Flood :
 I cannot 'twixt the heaven and the Maine,
 Descry a Sayle.

Mon. Me thinks, the wind hath spoke aloud at Land,
 A fuller blast ne're shooke our Battlements :
 If it hath rui'd and so upon the Sea,
 What ribbes of Oake, when Mountaines melt on them,
 Can hold the Morties. What shall we heare of this ?

2 A Segregation of the Turkish Fleet :
 For doe but stand upon the foaming Shoare,
 The chidden Billow seemes to pelt the cloudes,
 The wind-shak'd-Surge, with high & monstrous Maine,
 Seemes to cast water on the burning Beare,
 And quench the Guards of th'ever-fixed Pole :
 I never did like molestation view
 On the enchain'd Flood.

Mon. If that the Turkish Fleet
 Be not in shelter'd, and embay'd, they are drown'd,
 It is impossible to beare it out.

Enter a Gentleman.

3 Newes Laddes : our warres are done :
 The desperate Tempest hath sobang'd the Turkes,
 That their designement halts. A Noble ship of Venice,
 Hath scene a grievous wracke and sufferance
 On most part of their Fleet.

Mon. How ? Is this true ?

3 The Ship is here put in : A Veronesse, Michael Cassio
 Lieutenant to the warlike Moore, Othello,
 Is come on Shore : the Moore himselfe at Sea,
 And is in full Commission heere for Cyprus.

Mon. I am glad on't :
 Tis a worthy Governor.

3 But this same Cassio, though he speake of comfort,
 Touching the Turkish losse, yet he lookes sadly,
 And prayes the Moore be safe ; for they were parted
 With fowle and violent Tempest.

Mon. Pray heavens he be :

For I have serv'd him, and the man commands
 Like a full Souldier. Lets to the Sea-side (ho)
 As well to see the Vessell that's come in,
 As to throw-out our eyes for brave Othello,
 Even till we make the Maine, and th'Eriall blew,
 And indistinct regard.

Gent. Come, lets doe so ;
 For every Minute is expectancy
 Of more Arrivancy.

Enter Cassio.

Cassio. Thankes you, the valiant of the warlike Isle,
 That so approve the Moore : Oh let the heavens
 Give him defence against the Elements,
 For I have lost him on a dangerous Sea,

Mon. Is he well ship'd ?

Cassio. His Barke is stoutly Timber'd, and his Pylot
 Of very expert, and approv'd Allowance ;
 Therefore my hope's (not surfett'd to death )
 Stand in bold Cure.

Within. A Saile, a Saile, a Saile.

Cassio. What noyse ?

Gent. The Towne is empty ; on the brow o'th' Sea
 Stand rankes of People, and they cry a Sayle.

Cassio. My hopes doe shape him for the Governour,

Gent. They doe discharge their shot of courtesie,
 Our friends, at least.

Cassio. I pray you sir goe forth.

And give us truth who tis that is arriv'd.

Gent. I shall.

Exit.

Mon. But good Lievtenant, is your Generall wiv'd ?

Cassio. Most fortunately : he hath achiev'd a Maid
 That paragons description, and wilde Fame :
 One that excels the quirkes of blazoning Pens,
 And in th'essentiall Vesture of Creation,
 Do's tire the Ingeniver.

Enter Gentleman.

How now ? Who has put in ?

Gent. Tis one Iago, Ancient to the Generall,

Cassio. Ha's had most favourable, and happy speed :
 Tempests themselves, high Seas, and howling winds,
 The gutter'd Rockes, and Congregated Sands,
 Traitors ensteep'd, to enclogge the guiltlesse Keele,
 As having sense of Beauty, doe omit
 Their mortall Natures, letting goe safely by
 The divine Desdemona.

Mon. What is she ?

Cassio. She that I spake of :
 Our great Captaine's Captaine,
 Left in the conduct of the bold Iago,
 Whose footing here anticipates our thoughts,
 A Senights speed. Great Iove, Othello guard,
 And swell his Saile with thine owne powrefull breath,
 That he may blesse this Bay with his tall Ship,
 Make loves quicke pants in Desdemona's armes,
 Give renew'd fire to our extincted Spirits.

Enter Desdemona, Iago, Rodrigo, and Emilia.

Oh behold,
 The riches of the ship is come on Shore :
 You men of Cyprus, let her have your knees.
 Haile to thee Lady : and the grace of Heaven,
 Before, behind thee, and on every hand
 Enwheele thee round.

Des. I thanke you, valiant Cassio,
 What tydings can you tell me of my Lord ?

Cassio.

Cas. He is not arriv'd, nor know I ought
But that he's well, and will be shortly heere.

Des. Oh, but I feare :
How lost you company ?

Cas. The great contention of the Sea and Skies,
Parted our fellowship. But hearken, a Saile.

Within. A Saile, a Saile.

Gent. They give this greeting to the Cittadell :
This likewise is a friend.

Cas. See for the Newes :
Good Ancient, you are welcome. Welcome Mistris :
Let it not gall your patience (good Iago)

That I extend my Manners. 'Tis my Breeding,
That gives me this bold shew of Courtesie,

Iago. Sir, would she give you so much of her lips,
As of her tongue she oft bestowes of me,
You would have enough.

Des. Alas : she has no speech.

Iago. Infaith too much :
I find it still, when I have leave to sleepe,
Marry before your Ladyship, I grant,
She puts her tongue a little in her heart,
And chides with thinking.

Emil. You have little cause to say so.

Iago. Come on, come on: you are Pictures out of dores :
Bels in your Parlors : Wilde-Cats in your Kitchens :
Saints in your injuries : Divels being offended :
Players in your Huswifery, and Huswives in your beds.

Des. Oh, fie upon thee, slanderer.

Iago. Nay, it is true : or else I am a Turke,
You rise to play, and goe to bed to worke.

Emil. You shall not write my praise.

Iago. No, let me not.

Des. What would'st write of me, if thou should'st praise me.

Iago. Oh, gentle Lady, doe not put me toot,
For I am nothing, if not Criticall.

Des. Come on, assay.

There's one gone to the Harbour ?

Iag. I Madam.

Des. I am not merry : but I doe beguile
The thing I am, by seeming otherwise,
Come, how wouldst thou praise me ?

Iago. I am about it, but indeed my invention comes from my Pate, as Birdlime does from Freeze, it pluckes out Braines and all. But my Muse labours, and thus shee is delivered.

*If she be faire, and wise ; fairenesse and wit,
The ones for use, the other useth it.*

Des. Well prais'd :
How if she be blacke and witty ?

Iago. If she be blacke, and thereto have a wit,
She'll find a white, that shall her blacknesse fit.

Des. Worse and worse.

Emil. How if faire and foolish.

Iago. She never yet was foolish that was faire,
For even her folly helpt her to an heire.

Desd. These are old fond Paradoxes, to make Fooles laugh i'th' Alehouse. What miserable praise haste thou for her that's foule and foolish.

Iago. There's none so foule and foolish therunto,
But does foule pranks, which faire, and wise-ones doe.

Desd. Oh heavy ignorance : thou praisest the worst best. But what praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed ? One, that in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice it felfe.

Iago. She that was ever faire, and never proud,
Had tongue at will, and yet was never loud :
Never lackt gold, and yet went never gay,
Fled from her wish, and yet said now I may.
She that being angred, her revenge being nie,
Bad her wrong stay, and her displeasure fly.
She that in wisdom never was so fraile,
To change the Gods-head for the Salmons taile :
She that could thinke, and nev'r disclose her mind,
See Suiters following, and not looke behind :
She was a Wight, (if ever such Wights were)

Des. To doe what ?

Iago. To suckle Fooles, and chronicle small Beere.

Desd. Oh most lame and impotent conclusion. Doe not learne of him Emilia, though he be thy husband.
How say you (Cassio) is he not a most prophane, and liberall Counsailler ?

Cassio. He speakes home (Madam) you may relish him more in the Souldier, than in Scholler.

Iago. He takes her by the palme : I, well said, whif-per. With as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a Fly as Cassio. I, smile upon her, doe : I will gyve thee in thine owne Courtship. You say true, tis so indeed.
If such trickes as these strip you out of your Lieutenan-try, it had beene better you had not kiss'd your three fingers so oft, which now againe you are most apt to play the Sir, in. Very good : well kiss'd, and excellent Curt-sie : tis so indeed. Yet againe, your fingers to your lippes ? Would they were Clister-pipes for your fate.

The Moore, I know his Trumpet.

Cassio. Tis truly so.

Des. Lets meet him, and receive him.

Cassio. Lo, where he comes.

Enter Orbellio and Attendants.

Orb. O, my faire Warriour.

Des. My deere Othello.

Orb. It gives me wonder, great as my content
To see you here before me.

Oh my soules joy :

If after every Tempest, come such calmes,
May the windes blow, till they have waken'd death :
And let the labouring Barke climbe hils of Seas
Olympus high : and ducke againe as low,
As hel's from heaven. If it were now to dye,
Twere now to be most happy. For I feare,
My soule hath her content so absolute,
That not another comfort like to this,
Succeeds in unknowne Fate.

Des. The heavens forbid
But that our Loves
And Comforts should encrease
Even as our dayes doe grow.

Othe. Amen to that (sweet Powers)
I cannot speake enough of this content,
It stoppes me here : it is too much of joy,
And this, and this the greatest discords be
That ere our hearts shall make.

Iago. Oh you are well-tun'd now : But Ile set downe the Pegges that make this Musicke, as honest as I am.

Othe.

Othe. Come, let us to the Castle.
 Newes (Friends) our warres are done :
 The Turkes are drown'd.
 How doe's my old acquaintance of this Isle ?
 (Hony) you shall be well desir'd in Cyprus.
 I have found great love amongst them. Oh my Sweet,
 I prattle out of fashion, and I doat
 In mine owne comforts. I prythee, good Iago, Goe to the Bay, and disimbarke thy Coffers :
 Bring thou the Master to the Cittadell,
 He is a good one, and his worthinesse
 Doe's challenge much respect. Come Desdemona,
 Once more well met at Cyprus.

Exit Othello and Desdemona.

Iago. Do you meet me presently at the harbour. Come thither, if thou be'st valiant, (as they say base men being in love, have then a Nobility in their Natures, more than is native to them) list-me; the Lievtenant to night watches on the Court of Guard. First, I must tell thee this :
Desdemona, is directly in love with him.

Rod. With him? Why, tis not possible.

Iago. Lay thy finger thus : and let thy soule be instructed. Marke me with what violence shee lov'd the Moore, but for bragging, and telling her fantastick lies.
 To love him still for prating, let not thy discreet heart thinke it. Her eye must be fed. And what delight shall she have to looke on the Divell? When the blood is made dull with the Act of Sport, there should be a game to enlume it, and to give satiety a fresh appetite. Lovelinesse in favour, sympathy in yeares, Manners, and Beauties : all which the Moore is defective in. Now for want of these requir'd Conveniences, her delicate tenderness will find it selfe abus'd, begin to heave the gorge, disrellish and abhorre the Moore, very Nature will instruct her in it, and compell her to some second choyce.
 Now sir, this granted (as it is a most pregnant and viforc'd position) who stands so eminent in the degree of this Fortune, as Cassio doe's : a Knave very voluble : no further conscionable, than in putting on the meere forme of Civill, and humane seeming, for the better compasse of his Salt, and most hidden loose Affection? Why none, why none : A slippery, and subtle Knave, a finder of occasion : that ha's an eye can stampe, and counterfeit Advantages, though true Advantage never present it selfe. A Divellish Knave : besides, the Knave is handsome, yong :
 and hath all those requisites in him, that folly and greene mindes looke after. A pestilent compleat Knave, and the woman hath found him already.

Rod. I cannot beleeve that in her, she's full of most blest condition.

Iago. Bles'd figges-end. The Wine shee drinke is made of Grapes. If she had beene blest, shee would never have lov'd the Moore : Bles'd pudding. Didst thou not see her paddle with the palme of his hand? Didst not marke that?

Rod. Yes, that I did : but that was but curtesie.

Iago. Leachery by this hand : an Index, and obscure prologue to the History of Lust and foule Thoughts.
 They met so neere with their lippes, that their breathes embrac'd together. Villanous thoughts Roderigo, when these mutabilities so marshall the way, hard at hand comes the Master, and maine exercise, th'incorporate conclusion : Pish. But sir, be you rul'd by mee. I have brought you from Venice. Watch you to night : for the command, Ile lay't upon you. Cassio knowes you not : Ile not be farre from you. Doe you find some occasion to anger Cassio, either by speaking too loud, or tainting his discipline, or from what other course you please, which the time shall more favourably minister.

Rod. Well.

Iago. Sir, he's rash, and very sodaine in Choler : and happily may strike at you, provoke him that he may : for even out of that will I cause these of Cyprus to Mutiny.
 Whose qualification shall come into no true taste againe, but by the displanting of Cassio. So shall you have a shorter journey to your desires, by the meanes I shall then have to preferre them. And the impediment most profitably removed, without the which there were no expectation of our prosperity.

Rod. I will doe this, if you can bring it to any opportunity.

Iago. I warrant thee. Meet me by and by at the Citta-dell. I must fetch his necessaries ashore. Farewell.

Rod. Adieu.

Exit.

Iago. That Cassio loves her, I doe well beleeve't :
 That she loves him, tis apt, and of great credite,
 The Moore (howbeit that I endure him not)
 Is of a constant loving, noble Nature,
 And I dare thinke, he'll prove to Desdemona,
 A most deare husband. Now I dee love her too,
 Not out of absolute lust, (though peradventure
 I stand accountant for as great a sinne)
 But partly led to dyet my Revenge,
 For that I doe suspect the lusty Moore
 Hath leapt into my seat. The thought whereof,
 Doth (like a poysonous Minerall) gnaw my Inwards :
 And nothing can, or shall content my Soule
 Till I am even'd with him, wife for wife.
 Or failing so, yet that I put the Moore,
 At least in a selouzie so strong,
 That judgement cannot cure. Which thing to doe,
 If this poore Trash of Venice, whom I trace
 For his quick hunting, stand the putting on,
 He have on Michael Cassio on the hip,
 Abuse him to the Moore, in the right garbe
 (For I feare Cassio with my Night-Cap too)
 Make the Moore thanke me, love me, and reward me,
 For making him egregiously an Assle,
 And prancing upon his peace and quiet,
 Even to madness. Tis here : but yet confus'd,
 Knaveries plaine face, is never seene, till us'd.

Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello's Herald with a Proclamation.

Herald. It is Othello's pleasure, our Noble and Valiant Generall; That upon certaine Tydings now arriv'd, importing the meere perdition of the Turkish Fleet, every man put himselfe into Triumph. Some to dance, some to make Bonfires, each man, to what Sport and Revels his addition leads him. For besides these beneficiall Newes, it is the Celebration of his Nuptiall. So much was his pleasure should be proclaimed. All offices are open, and there is full liberty of Feasting from this pre-

present houre of five, till the Bell have told eleven.
Blesse the Isle of Cyprus, and our Noble Generall Othello.
Exit.

Enter Othello, Desdemona, Cassio and Attendants.

Othel. Good Michael, looke you to the Guard to night.
Let's teach our selves that honourable stop,
Not to out-sport discretion.

Cas. Iago hath direction what to doe.
But notwithstanding with my personall eye
Will I looke to't.

Othe. Iago, is most honest:
Michael, goodnight. To morrow with your earliest,
Let me have speech with you. Come my deare Love,
The purchase made, the fruits are to ensue,
That profit's yet to come tweene me, and you.
Goodnight. Exit.

Enter Iago.

Cas. Welcome Iago; we must to the Watch.

Iago. Not this houre Lievtenant: 'tis not yet ten o'th Clocke. Our Generall cast us thus early for the love of his Desdemona: Whom, let us not therefore blame; he hath not yet made wanton the night with her: and shee is sport for Ioue.

Cas. She's a most exquisite Lady.

Iago. And Ile warrant her, full of Game.

Cas. Indeed shee's a most fresh and delicate creature.

Iago. What an eye she ha's?

Me thinks it founds a parley to provocation.

Cas. An inviting eye:

And yet me thinks right modest.

Iago. And when she speaks,

Is it not an Alarum to Love?

Cas. She is indeed perfection.

Iago. Well: happinesse to their sheets. Come Lievetenant, I have a stope of Wine, and here without are a brace of Cyprus Gallants, that would faine have a measure to the health of blacke Othello.

Cas. Not to night, good Iago: I have very poore, and unhappy Braines for drinking. I could well wish cour-tesie would invent some other custome of entertainem-
ment.

Iago. Oh, they are our Friends: but one Cup, Ile drinke for you.

Cassio. I have drunke but one Cup to night, and that was craftily qualified too: and behold what innovation it makes here. I am infortunate in the infirmity, and dare not taske my weaknesse with any more.

Iago. What man? tis a night of Revels, the Gallants desire it.

Cas. Where are they?

Iago. Here, at the doore: I pray you call them in.

Cas. Ile doo't, but it dislikes me.

Iago. If I can fasten but one Cup upon him
With that which he hath drunke to night already,
He'll be as full of Quarrell, and offence
As my yong Mistress Dog,
Now my sicke Foole Roderigo,
Whom Love hath turn'd almost the wrong side out,
To Desdemona hath tonight Carrows'd,
Potations, pottle-deepe; and he's to watch.
Three else of Cyprus, Noble swelling spirits,
(That hold their honours in a wary distance,
The very Elements of this warlike Isle)
Have I to night fluster'd with flowing Cups,
And they Watch too.

Now 'mongst this Flocke of Drunkards,
Am I to put our Cassio in some Action
That may offend the Isle. But here they come.

Enter Cassio, Montano, and Gentlemen.

If consequence doe but approve my dreamie,
My Boat sayles freely, both with wind and streame.

Cas. Fore heaven, they have given me a rowle already.

Mon. Good faith a little one: not past a Pint, as I am a Souldier.

Iago. Some Wine hoa,

And let me the Cannakin clinke, clinke:

And let me the Cannakin clinke.

A Souldiers a man: Oh, mans life's but a span,

Why then let a Souldier drinke,

Some Wine Boyes.

Cas. 'Fore heaven: an excellent Song.

Iago. I learn'd it in England: where indeed they are most potent in Potting. Your Dane, your Germane, and your swag-belly'd Hollander, (drinke hoa) are nothing to your English.

Cassio. Is your Englishman so exquisite in his drinking?

Iago. Why, he drinkes you with facilitie, your Dane dead drunke. He sweares not to overthrow your Al-maine. He gives your Hollander a vomit, ere the next Pottle can be fill'd.

Cas. To the health of our Generall.

Mon. I am for it Lievtenant: and Ile doe you Iustice.

Iago. Oh sweet England.

King Stephen was and a worthy Peere,

His Breeches cost him but a Crowne,

He held them sixepence all to deere,

With that he call'd the Taylor Lowne:

He was a Wight of high Renowne,

And thou art but of low degree:

Tis Pride that puls the Countrey downe,

And take thy awl'd Cloake about thee.

Some Wine hoa.

Cassio. Why this is a more exquisite song than the other.

Iago. Will you hear't againe?

Cas. No: for I hold him to be unworthy of his place, that do's those things. Well: heav'ns above all: and there be foules must be saved, and there be foules must not be saved.

Iago. Its true, good Lievtenant,

Cas. For mine owne part, no offence to the Generall, nor any man of quality: I hope to be saved.

Iago. And so doe I too Lievtenant.

Cassio. I: (but by your leave) not before me. The Lievtenant is to be saved before the Ancient. Lets have no more of this: lets to our affaires. Forgive us our finnes: Gentlemen lets looke to our businesse. Doe not thinke Gentlemen, I am drunke: this is my Ancient, this is my right hand, and this is my left. I am not drunke now: I can stand well enough, and I speake well enough.

Gent. Excellent well.

Cas. Why very well then: you must not thinke then,
that I am drunke.

Montan. Toth' Platforme (Masters) come, lets set the Watch.

Iago. You see this fellow that is gone before,
He is a Soldier, fit to stand by Cesar,
And give direction. And doe but see his vice,
Tis to his vertue a just Equinox,

The

The one as long as th' other. Tis pittie of him :
I feare the trust Othello puts him in,
On some odde time of his infirmity
Will shake this Island.

Mont. But is he often thus ?

Iago. Tis evermore his prologue to his sleepe,
He'll watch the Horologue a double Set,
If drinke rocke not his Cradle.

Mont. It were well
The Generall were put in mind of it :
Perhaps he sees it not, or his good nature
Prizes the vertue that appears in Cassio,
And lookes not on his evils : is not this true ?

Enter Rodorigo.

Iago. How now Rodorigo ?
I pray you after the Lievttenant, goe.
Mont. And tis great pittie that the Noble Moore
Should hazzard such a place, as his owne Second,
With one ingraft Infirmity,
It were an honest Action, to say so
To the Moore.

Iago. Not I, for this faire Island,
I doe love Cassio well : and would doe much
To cure him of this evill. But harke, what noyse ?

Enter Cassio pursuing Rodorigo.

Cas. You Rogue : you Rascall.

Mon. Whats the matter Lieutenant ?

Cas. A Knave teach me my duty ? He beat the Knave into a Twiggen Bottle.

Rod. Beate me.

Cas. Dost thou prate, Rogue ?

Mon. Nay, good Lievttenant :
I pray you sir, hold your hand.

Cas. Let me goe (sir)
Or Ile know you ore the Mazzard.

Mon. Come, come : you're Drunke.

Cassio. Drunke ?

Iago. Away I say : goe out and cry a Mutiny.
Nay good Lieutenant. Alas Gentlemen :
Helpe hoa. Lieutenant. Sir Montano :
Helpe masters. Here's a goodly Watch indeed.
Who's that which rings the Bell : Diablo, hoa :
The towne will rise. Fie, fie Lieutenant,
You'i be sham'd for ever.

Enter Othello, and Attendants.

Othe. What is the matter here ?

Mon. I bleed still, I am hurt, but not to th' death.

Othe. Hold for your lives.

Iago. Hold hoa : Lievttenant, Sir Montano, Gentlemen :
Have you forgot all place of sense and dutie ?
Hold. The Generall speakes to you : hold for shame

Oth. Why how now hoa ? From whence ariseth this ?
Are we turn'd Turkes ? and to our selves doe that
Which heaven hath forbid the Ottomittes.
For Christian shame, put by this barbarous brawle :
He that stirres next to carve for his owne rage,
Holds his soule light : He dies upon his Motion.
Silence that dreadfull Bell, it frights the Isle,
From her propriety. What is the matter, Masters.
Honest Iago, that lookes dead with grieving.
Speake : who began this ? On thy love I charge thee ?

Iago. I do not not know : Friends all, but now, even now
In Quarter, and in termes like Bride and Groome
Devesting them for Bed : and then, but now :
(As if some Planet had unwitting men)

Swords out, and tilting one at others breasts,
In opposition bloody. I cannot speake
Any beginning to this peevish oddes.
And would in action glorious, I had left
Those legges that brought me to a part of it.

Othe. How comes it (Michael) you are thus forgot ?

Cas. I pray you pardon me, I cannot speake.

Othe. Worthy Montano, you were wont to be civill :
The gravitie and stilnesse of your youth
The world hath noted. And your name is great
In mouthes of wisest Censure. Whats the matter
That you unlace your reputation thus,
And spend your rich opinion, for the name
Of a night-brawler ? Give me answer to it.

Mon. Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger,
Your Officer Iago can informe you,
While I spare speech which something now offends me.
Of all that I doe know, nor know I ought
By me ; thats said, or done amisse this night,
Vnlesse selfe-charity be sometimes a vice,
And to defend our selves, it be a sinne
When violence assayles us.

Othe. Now by heaven,
My blood begins my safer Guides to rule,
And passion (having my best judgement collied)
Assayes to leade the way. If I once stirre,
Or doe but lift this Arme, the best of you
Shall sinke in my rebuke. Give me to know
How this foule Rout began : Who set it on,
And he that is approv'd in this offence,
Though he had twinn'd with me, both at a birth,
Shall loose me. What in a towne of warre,
Yet wilde, the peoples hearts brim-full of feare,
To manage private, and domestick Quarrell ?
In night, and on the Court and Guard of safetie ?
Tis monstrous : Iago, who began't ?

Mon. If partially Affect'd, or league in office,
Thou dost deliver more, or lesse than truth,
Thou art no Souldier.

Iago. Touch me not soneere,
I had rather have this tongue cut from my mouth,
Than it should doe offence to Michael Cassio.
Yet I perswade my selfe, to speake so the truth
Shall nothing wrong him. This it is Generall :
Montano and my selfe being in speech,
There comes a Fellow, crying out for helpe,
And Cassio following him with determin'd Sword,
To execute upon him. Sir, this Gentleman,
Steps into Cassio, and intreats his pause :
My selfe, the crying fellow did pursue,
Left by his clamour (as it so fell out)
The Towne might fall in fright. He, (swift of foot)
Out-ran my purpose : and I return'd the rather
For that I heard the clinke and fall of swords,
And Cassio high in oath : Which till to night
I nere might say before. When I came backe
(For this was brieve) I found them close together
At blow, and thrust, even as againe they were
When you your selfe did part them,
More of this matter cannot I report,
But men are men : the best sometimes forget,
Though Cassio did some little wrong to him,
As men in rage strike those that with them best,
Yet surely Cassio, I beleieve, receiv'd
From him that fled, some strange indignity,
Which patience could not passe.

Othe.

Otho. I know Iago
Thy honestie, and love doth mince this matter,
Making it light to Cassio: Cassio, I love thee,
But never more be Officer of mine.

Enter Desdemona attended.

Looke if my gentle Love be not rais'd up:
He make thee an example.

Des. What is the matter (Deere?)

Otho. All's well, Sweeting:

Come away to bed. Sir for your hurts,
My selfe will be your Surgeon. Lead him off:

Iago. looke with care about the Towne,
And silence those whom this vile brawle distracted.

Come Desdemona, 'tis the Souldiers life,
To have their Balmy slumbers wak'd with strife. Exit.

Iago. What are you hurt Lieutenant?

Cas. I, past all Surgery.

Iago. Marry Heaven forbid.

Cas. Reputation, Reputation, Reputation: Oh I have lost my Reputation. I have lost the immortall part of my selfe, and what remains is bestiall. My Reputation, Iago, my Reputation.

Iago. As I am an honest man I had thought you had received some bodily wound; there is more sence in that then in Reputation. Reputation is an idle, and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and lost without deserving. You have lost no Reputation at all, unlesse you repute your selfe such a looser. What man, there are more wayes to recover the Generall againe. You are but now cast in his moode, (a punishment more in policie, then in malice) even so as one would beate his offencelesse dogge, to affright an Imperious Lyon. Sue to him againe and he's yours.

Cas. I will rather sue to bee despis'd, then to deceive so good a Commander, with so slight, so drunken, and so indiscreet an Officer. Drunke? And speake Parrat? And squabble? Swagger? Swear? And discourse Fustian with ones owne shadow? Oh thou invisable spirit of Wine, if thou hast no name to be knowne by, let us call thee Divell.

Iago. What was hee that you follow'd with your Sword? What had he done to you?

Cas. I know not.

Iago. Is't possible?

Cas. I remember a masse of things, but nothing distinctly: a Quarrell, but nothing wherefore. Oh, that men should put an Enemy in their mouthes, to steale away their Braines? that wee should with joy pleasance, revell and applause, transforme our selves into Beasts.

Iago. Why? But you are now well enough: how came you thus recovered?

Cas. It hath pleas'd the divell drunkenness, to give place to the divell wrath, one unperfectnesse shewes me another, to make me frankly despise my selfe.

Iago. Come, you are too severe a Moraller. As the Time, the Place, and the Condition of this Country stands
I could hartily wish this had not befallne: but since it is, as it is, mend it for your owne good.

Cas. I will aske him for my Place againe, hee shall tell me, I am a drunkard: had I as many mouthes as Hydra, such an answer would stop them all. To bee now a sensible man, by and by a Foole, and presently a Beast. Oh strange! Every inordinate cup is unblest'd, and the Ingredient is a divell.

Iago. Come, come: good wine, is a good familiar Creature, if it be well us'd: exclaime no more against it.
And good Lieutenant, I thinke, you thinke I love
you.

Cassio. I have well approved it, Sir, I drunke?

Iago. You, or any man living, may be drunke at a time
man. I tell you what you shall do: Our Generals Wife, is now the Generall. I may say so, in this respect, for that he hath devoted, and given up himselfe to the contemplation, marke: and devotement of her parts and Graces. Confesse your selfe freely to her: Importune her helpe to put you in your place againe. She is of so free, so kinde, so apt, so blessed a disposition, she holds it a vice in her goodnesse, not to do more then she is requested. This broken joynt betweene you, and her husband, entreat her to splinter. And my Fortunes against any lay worth naming, this cracke of your love, shall grow stronger, then it was before.

Cassio. You advise me well.

Iago. I protest in the sinceritie of Love, and honest kind-nesse.

Cassio. I thinke it freely: and betimes in the morning,
I will beseech the vertuous Desdemona to undertake for me: I am desperate of my Fortunes if they check me.

Iago. You are in the right: good night Lieutenant, I must to the Watch.

Cassio. Good night, honest Iago.

Exit Cassio.

Iago. And what's he then,
That sayes I play the Villaine?
When this advice is free I give, and honest,
Proba! to thinking, and indeed the course
To win the Moore againe.
For 'tis most easie
Th' inclyning Desdemona to subdue
In any honest Suite. She's fram'd as fruitfull
As the free Elements. And then for her
To win the Moore, were to renounce his Baptisme,
All Seales, and Simbols of redeemed sin:
His Soule is so enfetted to her Love,
That she may make, unmake, doe what she list:
Even as her appetite shall play the god,
With his weake Function. How am I then a Villaine,
To Counsell Cassio to this paralell course,
Directly to his good? Divinitie of hell,
When divels will the blackest sinnes put on,
They do suggest at first with heavenly shewes,
As I do now. For whiles this honest Foole
Plies Desdemona, to repaire his Fortune,
And she for him, pleades strongly to the Moore,
He powre this pestilence into his care:
That she repeales him, for her bodies Lust,
And by how much she strives to do him good,
She shall undoe her Credite with the Moore.
So will I turne her vertue into pitch,
And out of her owne goodnesse make the Net,
That shall en-mash them all.
How now Roderigo?

Enter Roderigo.

Roderigo. I doe follow heere in the Chace, not like a Hound that hunts, but one that filles up the Crie. My Mony is almost spent; I have beene to night exceedingly well Cudgell'd: And I thinke the issue

x x

wil

will bee, I shall have so much experience for my paines ; And so, with no money at all, and a little more Wit, returne againe to Venice.

Iago. How poore are they that have not Patience ? What wound did ever heale but by degrees ? Thou know'st we worke by Wit, and not by witchcraft And Wit depends on dilatory time :

Dost not go well ? Cassio hath beaten thee, And thou by that small hurt hast easer'd Cassio : Though other things grow faire against the Sun, Yet Fruites that blossome first, will first be ripe : Content thy selfe, a-while. Introth 'tis Morning ; Pleasure, and Action, make the houres seeme short. Retire thee, go where thou art Billited :

Away, I say, thou shalt know more heereafter : Nay get thee gone.

Exit Rodorigo.

Two things are to be done :

My Wife must move for Cassio to her Mistis : Ile set her on my selfe, a while, to draw the Moore apart, And bring him jumpe, when he may Cassio finde Soliciting his wife : I, that's the way : Dull not Device, by coldnesse and delay.

Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Cassio, Musicians, and Clowne.

Cassio. Masters, play heere, I will content your paines, Something that's brieft : and bid, goodmorrow Generall.

Clo. Why Masters, have your Instruments bin in Naples, that they speake i'th' Nose thus ?

Mus. How Sir ? how ?

Clo. Are these I pray you, winde Instruments ?

Mus. I marry are they sir.

Clo. Oh, thereby hangs a tale.

Mus. Whereby hangs a tale, sir ?

Clow. Marry sir, by many a winde Instrument that I know. But Masters, hee's money for you : and the Generall so likes your Musick, that hee desires you for loves sake to make no noise with it.

Mus. Well Sir, we will not.

Clo. If you have any Musicke that may not bee heard, too't againe. But (as they say) to heare Musicke, the Generall do's not greatly care.

Mus. We have none such, sir.

Clow. Then put up your Pipes in your bagge, for Ile away. Go, vanish into ayre, away.

Exit Mus.

Cassio. Dost thou heare me, mine honest Friend ?

Clo. No, I heare not your honest Friend : I heare you.

Cassio. Prythee keepe up thy Quillets, ther's a poore peece of Gold for thee : if the Gentlewoman that attends the Generall be stirring, tell her, there's one Cassio entertains her a little favour of Speech. Wilt thou do this ?

Clo. She is stirring sir : if she will stirre hither, I shall seeme to notifie unto her.

Exit Clo.

Enter Iago.

In happy time, Iago.

Iago. You have not bin a-bed then ?

Cassio. Why no : the day had broke before we parted : I have made bold (Iago) to send in to your wife : My suite to her is, that she will to vertuous Desdemona

Procure me some access.

Iago. Ile send her to you Presently : And Ile devise a meane to draw the Moore Out of the way, that your converse and businesse May be more free.

Exit.

Cassio. I humbly thanke you for't. I never knew A Florentine more kinde, and honest.

Enter Emilia.

Emil. Goodmorrow (good Lieutenant) I am sorrie For your displeasure : but all will sure be well. The Generall and his wife are talking of it, And she speakes for you stoutly. The Moore replies, That he you hurt is of great Fame in Cyprus, And great Affinitie : and that in wholsome Wisedome He might not but refuse you. But he protests he loves you And needs no other Sutor, but his likings To bring you in againe.

Cassio. Yet I beseech you, If you thinke fit, or that it may be done, Give me advantage of some brieft Discourse With Desdemona alone.

Emil. Pray come in : I will bestow you where you shall have time To speake your bosome freely.

Cassio. I am much bound to you.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello, Iago, and Gentleman.

Oth. These Letters give (Iago) to the Pyiot, And by him do my duties to the Senate : That done, I will be walking on the Workes, Repaire there to me,

Iago. Well, my good Lord, Ile doo't.

Oth. This Fortification (Gentlemen) shall we see't ?

Gent. Weel waite upon your Lordship.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Desdemona, Cassio, and Emilia.

Des. Be thou assur'd (good Cassio) I will doe All my abilities in thy behaife.

Emil. Good Madam doe I warrant it grieves my Husband, As if the cause were his.

Des. Oh that's an honest Fellow, Do not doubt Cassio But I will have my Lord, and you againe As friendly as you were.

Cassio. Bounteous Madam, What ever shall become of Michael Cassio, He's never any thing but your true Servant.

Des. I know't : I thanke you : you do love my Lord : You have knowne him long, and be you well assur'd He shall in strangenesse stand no farther off, Then in a politique distance.

Cassio. I, but Lady, That policie may either last so long. Or feede upon such nice and waterish diet, Or breede it selfe so out of Circumstances, That I being absent, and my place supply'd. My Generall will forget my Love, and Service.

Des. Doe not doubt that : before Emilia here,

I give thee warrant of thy place. Assure thee,
If I doe vow a friendship, Ile performe it
To the last Article. My Lord shall never rest,
Ile watch him tame, and talke him out of patience;
His Bed shall seeme a Schoole, his Boord a Shrift,
Ile intermingle every thing he do's
With Cassio's suite: Therefore be merry Cassio,
For thy Solicitor shall rather dye,
Then give thy cause away.

Enter Othello, and Iago.

Emil. Madam, heere comes my Lord.

Cassio. Madam, Ile take my leave.

Des. Why stay, and heare me speake.

Cassio. Madam, not now: I am very ill at ease.
Unfit for mine owne purposes.

Des. Well, doe your discretion.

Exit Cassio.

Iago. Hah? I like not that.

Oth. What dost thou say?

Iago. Nothing my Lord; or if—I know not what.

Oth. Was not that Cassio parted from my wife?

Iago. Cassio my Lord? No sure, I cannot thinke it
That he would steale away so guilty-like,
Seeing your comming.

Oth. I do beleewe 'twas he.

Des. How now my Lord?

I have bin talking with a Suitor heere,
A man that languishes in your displeasure.

Oth. Who is't you meane?

Des. Why your Lieutenant Cassio. Good my Lord,
If I have any grace, or power to move you,
His present reconciliation take.
For if he be not one, that truly loves you,
That erres in Ignorance, and not in Cunning,
I have no judgement in an honest face.
I prythee call him backe.

Oth. Went he hence now?

Des. I sooth; so humbled,

That he hath left part of his greefe with me
To suffer with him. Good Love, call him backe.

Oth. Not now (sweet Desdemona) some other time.

Des. But shall't be shortly?

Oth. The sooner (Sweet) for you.

Des. Shall't be to night, at Supper?

Oth. No, not to night.

Des. To morrow Dinner then?

Oth. I shall not dine at home:

I meete the Capitaines at the Cittadell.

Des. Why then to morrow night, on Tuesday morne,
On Tuesday noone, or night; on Wednesday Morne.

I praythee name the time, but let it not Exceed three dayes. Infaith hee's penitent:

And yet his Trespasse, in our common reason

(Save that they say the warres must make example)

Out of her best, is not almost a fault

T'incurre a private checke. When shall he come?

Tell me Othello. I wonder in my Soule

What you would aske me, that I would deny,

Or stand so mam'ring on? What? Michael Cassio,

That came a wooing with you? and so many a time

(When I have spoke of you dispraisingly)

Hath tane your part, to have so much to doe

To bring him in? Trust me, I could do much.

Oth. Prythee no more: Let him come when he will:

I will deny thee nothing.

Des. Why, this is not a Boone:

'Tis as I should entreate you weare your Gloves,
Or feede on nourishing dishes, or keepe you warme,
Or sue to you, to doe a peculiar profit
To your owne person. Nay, when I have a suite
Wherein I meane to touch your Love indeed,
It shall be full of poize, and difficult waight,
And fearefull to be granted.

Oth. I will deny thee nothing.

Whereon, I do beseech thee, grant me this,
To leave me but a little to my selfe.

Des. Shall I deny you? No: fare well my Lord.

Oth. Farewell my Desdemona, Ile come to thee strait.

Des. Amelia come; be as your Fancies teach you:

What ere you be, I am obedient-

Exit.

Oth. Excellent wretch: Perdition catch my Soule
But I do love thee: and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come againe.

Iago. My Noble Lord.

Oth. What dost thou say, Iago?

Iago. Did Michael Cassio

When you woo'd my Lady, know of your love?

Oth. He did, from first to last:

Why dost thou aske?

Iago. But for a tatisfaction of my Thought,
No further harme.

Oth. Why of thy thought, Iago?

Iago. I did not thinke he had bin acquainted with it.

Oth. O yes, and went betweene us very oft.

Iago. Indeed?

Oth. Indeed? I indeed. Discern'st thou ought in that?
Is he not honest?

Iago. Honest, my Lord?

Oth. Honest? I, Honest.

Iago. My Lord, for ought I know

Oth. What do'st thou thinke?

Iago. Thinke, my Lord?

Oth. Thinke, my Lord? Alas, thou eccos't me;

As if there were some Monster in thy thought
Too hideous to be shewne. Thou dost meane something:
I heard thee say even now, thou lik'st not that,
When Cassio left my wife. What did'st not like?
And when I told thee, he was of my Counsaile,
Of my whole course of wooing; thou criest it, Indeede?
And didd'st contract, and purse thy brow together,
As if thou then hadst shut up in thy braine
Some horrible conceite, if thou do'st love me
Shew me thy thought.

Iago. My Lord, you know I love you.

Oth. I thinke thou do'st:

For I know thou'rt full of Love, and honesty,
And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them breath
Therefore these stops of thine, fright me the more:
For such things in a false disloyall Knave
Are trickes of Custome: but in a man that's just,
They're cold dilations working from the heart,
That passion cannot rule.

Iago. For Michael Cassio,

I dare be sworne, I thinke that he is honest.

Oth. I thinke so too.

Iago. Men should be what they seeme,
Or those that bee not, would they might seeme none.

Oth. Certaine, men should be what they seeme.

Iago. Why then I thinke Cassio's an honest man.

Oth. Nay yet there's more in this?

I pray thee speake to me as to thy thinkings,
As thou dost ruminate, and give thy worst of thoughts

The worst of words.

Iago. Good my Lord pardon me.
Though I am bound to every Act of duty,
I am not bound to that: All Slaves are free:
Vtter my Thoughts? Why say, they are vild, and false?
As where's that Palace, whereinto foule things
Sometimes intrude not? Who ha's that breast so pure,
Wherein uncleanly Apprehensions
Keepe Lætes, and Law-dayes, and in Sessions sit
With meditations Lawfull?

Othe. Thou do'st conspire against thy Friend (Iago)
If thou but think'st him wrong'd, and mak'st his care
A stranger to thy Thoughts.

Iago. I do beseech you,
Though I perchance am vicious in my guesse
(As I confesse it is my Natures plague
To spy into Abuses, and of my jealousy
Shapes faults that are not) that your wisedome
From one, that so imperfectly conceits,
Would take no notice, nor build your selfe a trouble
Out of his scattering, and unsure observance:
It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my Manhood, honesty and Wisedome,
To let you know my thoughts.

Othe. What dost thou meane?

Iago. Good name in Man, and woman (deere my Lord)
Is the immediate Iewell of their Soules;
Who steales my purse steales trash:
Tis something, nothing;
Twas mine, 'tis his, and has bin slave to thousands:
But he that filches from me my good Name,
Robs me of that, which not enriches him,
And makes me poore indeed.

Othe. Ile know thy Thoughts.

Iago. You cannot, if my heart were in your hand,
Nor shall not, while't 'tis in my custodie.

Othe. Ha?

Iago. Oh, beware my Lord, of jealousy,
It is the Greene-ey'd Monster, which doth mocke
The meate it feeds on. That Cuckold lives in blisse,
Who certaine of his Fate, loves not his wronger:
But oh, what damned minutes tells he ore,
Who dotes, yet doubts: Suspects, yet soundly loves?

Othe. Omifery.

Iago. Poore, and Content, is rich, and rich enough,
But riches finelesse, is as poore as Winter,
To him that ever feares he shall be poore:
Good Heaven, the Soules of all my Tribe defend
From jealousy.

Othe. Why? why is this?
Think'st thou, I'd make a Life of Iealousie;
To follow still the changes of the Moone
With fresh suspitions? No; to be once in doubt,
Is to be resolv'd: Exchange me for a Goat,
When I shall turne the businesse of my Soule
To such exufficate, and blowed Surmises,
Matching the inference. 'Tis not to make me Iealous,
To say my wife is faire, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, Sings, Playes, and Dances:
Where Vertue is, these are most vertuous.
Nor from mine owne weake merites, will I draw
The smallest feare, or doubt of her revolt,
For she had eyes, and chose me. No Iago,
Ile see before I doubt; when I doubt, prove;
And on the prooffe, there is no more but this,
Away at once with Love, or Iealousie.

Ia. I am glad of this: for now I shall have reason
To shew the Love and Duty that I beare you
With franker spirit. Therefore (as I am bound)
Receive it from me. I speake not yet of prooffe:
Looke to your wife, observe her well with Cassio, Weare your eyes, thus: not Iealous, nor Secure:
I would not have your free, and Noble Nature,
Out of selfe-Bounty, be abus'd looke too't:
I know our Country disposition well.
In Venice, they do let Heaven see the pranks
They dare not shew their Husbands.
Their best Conscience;

Is not to leave't undone, but kept unknowne.

Oth. Dost thou say so?

Iag. She did deceive her Father, marrying you,
And when she seem'd to shake, and feare your looks,
She lov'd them most.

Othe. And so she did.

Iago. Why go to then:
Shee that so young could give out such a Seeming
To seele her Fathers eyes up, close as Oake,
He thought 'twas witchcraft.

But I am much too blame:

I humbly do beseech you of your pardon
For too much loving you.

Othe. I am bound to thee for ever.

Iago. I see this hath a little dash'd your Spirits:

Othe. Not a jot, not a jot.

Iago. Trust me I feare it has:
I hope you will consider what is spoke
Comes from my Love.

But I do see y'are mov'd:

I am to pray you, not to straine my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Then to Suspition.

Oth. I will not.

Iago. Should you doe so (my Lord)
My speech should fall into such vild successe,
Which my Thoughts aym'd not.

Cassio's my worthy Friend:

My Lord, I see y'are mov'd:

Oth. No, not much mov'd:

I do not thinke but Desdemona's honest.

Iago. Long live she so;
And long live you to thinke so.

Oth. And yet how Nature erring from it selfe—

Iago. I, there's the point:
As (to be bold with you)

Not to affect many proposed Matches
Of her owne Clime, Complexion and Degree,
Whereto we see in all things, Nature tends:
Foh, one may smell in such, a will most ranke,
Foule disproportions, Thoughts unnaturall.
But (pardon me) I do not in position
Distinctly speake of her, though I may feare
Her will, recoyling to her better judgement,
May fall to match you with her Country formes,
And happily repent.

Oth. Farewell, farewell:

If more thou dost perceive, let me know more:
Set on thy wife to observe.

Leave me Iago.

Iago. My Lord, I take my leave.

Othe. Why did I marry?

This honest Creature (doubtlesse)
Sees, and knowes more, much more then he unfolds.

Iago.

Iago. My Lord, I would I might intreat your Honor
To scan this thing no farther : Leave it to time,
Although 'tis fit that Cassio have his place;
For sure he files it up with great Ability;
Yet if you please, to put him off a-while :
You shall by that perceive him, and his meanes :
Note if your Lady straine his Entertainment
With any strong, or vehement importunitie,
Much will be scene in that : In the meane time,
Let me be thought too busie in my feares,
(As worthy cause I have to feare I am)
And hold her free, I do beseech your Honor :

Oth. Feare not my government.

Iago. I once more take my leave.

Oth. This Fellow's of exceeding honesty,
And knowes all Quantities with a learn'd Spirit
Of humane dealings. If I do prove her Haggard,
Though that her lessees were my deere heart-strings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her downe the winde
To pry at Fortune. Haply, for I am blacke,
And have not those soft parts of Conversation
That Chamberers have : Or for I am declin'd
Into the vale of yeares (yet that's not much)
She's gone. I am abus'd, and my releefe
Must be to loath her. Oh Curse of Marriage!
That we can call these delicate Creatures ours,
And not their Appetites ? I had rather be a Toad,
And live upon the Vapour of a Dungeon.
Then keepe a corner in the thing I love
For others uses. Yet 'tis the plague to Great-ones, Prerogativ'd are they lesse then the Base,
'Tis destiny unshunnable, like death :
Even then, this forked plague is Fated to us,
When we do quicken. Looke where she comes :

Enter Desdemona and Emilia.

If she be false, Heaven mock'd it selfe :
He not believe't.

Des. How now, my deere Othello ?
Your dinner, and the generous Islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence.

Oth. I am to blame.

Des. Why do you speake so faintly ?
Are you not well ?

Oth. I have a paine upon my Forehead heere.

Des. Why that's with watching, 'twill away againe.
Let me but binde it hard, within this houre
It will be well.

Oth. Your Napkin is too little :

Let it alone : Come, He go in with you :

Des. I am very sorry that you are not well.

Emil. I am glad I have found this Napkin :
This was her first remembrance from the Moore,
My wayward Husband hath a hundred times
Woo'd me to steale it. But she so loves the Token,
(For he conjur'd her, she should ever keepe it)
That she reserves it evermore about her,
To kisse, and talke to. He have the worke tane out,
And giv't Iago : what he will do with it
Heaven knowes, not I :
Nothing, but to please his Fantasie.

Enter Iago.

Iago. How now ? What do you heere alone ?

Emil. Do not you chide : I have a thing for you.

Iago. You have a thing for me ?

It is a common thing ———

Emil. Hah ?

Iago. To have a foolish wife.

Emil. Oh, is that all ? What will you give me now
For that same Handkerchife.

Iago. What Handkerchife ?

Emil. What Handkerchife ?

Why that the Moore first gave to Desdemona,
That which so often you did bid me steale.

Iago. Hast stolne it from her ?

Emil. No : but she let it drop by negligence,
And to th' advantage, I being heere, took't up :
Looke, heere 'tis.

Iago. A good wench, give it me.

Emil. What will you do with't that you have bene so earnest to have me filch it ?

Iago. Why, what is that to you ?

Emil. If it be not for some purpose of import,
Giv't me againe. Poore Lady, shee'l run mad
When she shall lacke it.

Iago. Be not acknowne on't :

I have use for it. Go, leave me

Exit Emil.

I will in Cassio's Lodging loose this Napkin,
And let him finde it. Trifles light as ayre,
Are to the jealous, confirmations strong,
As proofes of holy Writ. This may do something.
The Moore already changes with my poysons,
Dangerous conceites, are in their Natures poysons,
Which at the first are scarce found to distaste :
But with a little act upon the blood,
Burne like the Mines of Sulphure. I did say so.

Enter Othello.

Looke where he comes : Not Poppy nor Mandragora,
Nor all the drowfie Syrrups of the world
Shall ever medicine thee to that sweete sleepe
Which thou ow'd'st yesterday.

Oth. Ha, ha, false to mee ?

Iago. Why how now Generall ? No more of that.

Oth. Auant, be gone : Thou hast set me on the Racke :
I sweare 'tis better to be much abus'd,
Then but to know'r a little.

Iago. How now, my Lord ?

Oth. What sent had I, in her stolne houres of Lust ?

I saw't not, thought it not : it harm'd not me :
I slept the next night well, fed well, was free, and merry.
I found not Cassio's kisses on her Lippes :
He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stolne,
Let him not know't, and he's not robb'd at all.

Iago. I am sorry to heare this ?

Oth. I had bene happy if the generall Campe,
Pyoners and all, had tasted her sweet Body,
So I had nothing knowne. Oh now, for ever
Farewell the Tranquill minde ; farewell Content ;
Farewell the plumed Troopes, and the bigge Warres,
That make Ambition, Vertue ! Oh farewell,
Farewell the neighing Steed, and the shrill Trumpe,
The Spirit-stirring Drum, th' Eare-piercing Fife,
The Royall Banner, and all Quality,
Pride, Pompe and Circumstance of glorious Warre :
And O you mortall Engines, whose rude throates
Th' immortall Loves dread Clamours counterfeit, Farewell : Othello's Occupation's gone.

Iago. Is't possible my Lord ?

Oth. Villaine, be sure thou prove my Love a Whore ;
Be sure of it : Give me the Ocular proofe,

Or by the worth of mine eternall Soule,
Thou had'st bin better have bin borne a Dog
Then answere my wak'd wrath.

Iago. Is't come to this?

Oth. Make me to see't: or (at the least) so prove it,
That the probation beare no Hindge, nor Loope,
To hang a doubt on: Or woe upon thy life.

Iago. My Noble Lord.

Oth. If thou do'st slander her, and torture me,
Never pray more: Abandon all remorse
On Horrors head, Horrors accumulate,
Doe deeds to make Heaven weepe, all Earth amaz'd;
For nothing canst thou to damnation adde,
Greater then that.

Iago. O Grace! O Heaven forgive me!
Are you a man? Have you a Soule? or Sense?
God buy you: take mine Office. Oh wretched Foole,
That lov'st to make thine Honesty, a Vice!
Oh monstrous world! Take note, take note (O World)
To be direct and honest, is not safe.

I thanke you for this profit, and from hence
Ile love no friend, fith love breeds such offence.

Oth. Nay stay: thou shouldst be honest.

Iago. I should be wife, for honestie's a Foole,
And loses that it workes for.

Oth. By the World,
I thinke my Wife be honest, and thinke she is not:
I thinke that thou art just, and thinke thou art not:
Ile have some proofe. My name that was as fresh
As Dians Visage, is now begrim'd and blacke
As mine owne face. If there be Cords or Knives, Poyson, or Fire, or suffocating streames.
Ile not indure it. Would I were satisfied.

Iago. I see you are eaten up with passion;
I do repent me, that I put it to you,
You would be satisfied?

Oth. Would, Nay, and I will.

Iago. And may: but how? How satisfied, my Lord?
Would you the super-vision grossely gape on?
Behold her topp'd?

Oth. Death, and damnation. Oh!

Iago. It were a tedious difficulty I thinke,
To bring to that prospect: Damne them then,
If ever mortall eyes do see them boulder
More then their owne. What then? How then?
What shall I say? Where's Satisfaction?
It is impossible you should see this,
Were they as prime as Goates, as hot as Monkeyes,
As salt as Wolves in pride, and Fooles as grosse
As Ignorance, made drunke. But yet, I say,
If imputation and strong circumstances,
Which leade directly to the doore of Truth,
Will give you satisfaction, you might have't.

Oth. Give me a living reason she's disloyall.

Iago. I do not like the Office.
But fith I am entred in this cause so farre
(Prick'd too't by foolish Honesty, and Love)
I will go on. I lay with Cassio lately,
And being troubled with a raging tooth,
I could not sleepe. There are a kinde of men,
So loose of Soule, that in their sleepes will mutter
Their Affayres: one of this kinde is Cassio:
In sleepe I heard him say, sweet Desdemona,
Let us be wary, let us hide our Loves,
And then (Sir) would he gripe, and wring my hand:
Cry, oh sweet Creature: then kisse me hard,

As if he pluckt up kisses by the rootes,
That grew upon my lippes, laid his Leg ore my Thigh,
And sigh, and kisse, and then cry curfed Fate,
That gave thee to the Moore.

Oth. O monstrous! monstrous!

Iago. Nay this was but his Dreame.

Oth. But this denoted a fore-gone conclusion,
Tis a shrew'd doubt, though it be but a Dreame.

Iago. And this may helpe to thicken other proofes,
That do demonstrate thinly.

Oth. Ile teare her all to peeces.

Iago. Nay yet be wife; yet we see nothing done,
She may be honest yet: Tell me but this,
Have you not sometimes seene a Handkerchiefe
Spotted with strawberries, in your wives hand?

Oth. I gave her such a one: 'twas my first gift

Iago. I know not that: but such a Handkerchiefe
(I am sure it was your wives) did I to day
See Cassio wipe his Beard with.

Oth. If it be that.

Iago. If it be that, or any, if't was hers,
It speakes against her with the other proofes.

Oth. O that the slave had forty thousand lives:
One is too poore, too weake for my revenge.

Now do I see'tistrue. Looke heere Iago,
All my fond love thus do I blow to Heaven. Tis gone,
Arise blacke vengeance, from the hollow hell,
Yeeld up (O Love) thy Crowne and hearted Throne
To tyrannous Hate. Swell bosome with thy fraught,
For 'tis of Aspickes tongues.

Iago. Yet be content.

Oth. Oh blood, blood, blood.

Iago. Patience I say: your minde may change.

Oth. Never Iago. Like to the Ponticke Sea,
Whose Icie Current, and compulsive course,
Nev'r keepes retiring ebbe, but keepes due on
To the Proponticke, and the Hellespont:
Even so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace
Shall nev'r looke backe, nev'r ebbe to humble Love,
Till that a capable and wide Revenge
Swallow them up, Now by yond Marble Heaven,
In the due reverence of a Sacred vow,
I heere engage my words——

Iago. Do not rise yet:

Witnesse you ever-burning Lights above,
You Elements, that clip us round about.
Witnesse that heere Iago doth give up
The execution of his wit, hands, heart,
To wrong'd Othello's Service. Let him command,
And to obey shall be in me remorse,
What bloody businesse ever.

Oth. I greet thy love,
Not with vaine thanks, but with acceptance bounteous,
And will upon the instant put thee too't,
Within these three dayes let me heare thee say,
That Cassio's not alive.

Iago. My friend is dead:
Tis done at your Request.
But let her live.

Oth. Damne her lewde Minx:
O damne her, damne her.
Come go with me a-part, I will withdraw
To furnish me with some swift meanes of death
For the faire Divell.
Now art thou my Lieutenant.

Iago. I am your owne for ever.

Exiunt.
Scena

Scena Quarta.

Enter Desdemona, Emilia, and Clowne.

Des. Do you know Sirrah, where Lieutenant Cassio lyes?

Clow. I dare not say he lyes any where.

Des. Why man?

Clow. He's a Soldier, and for mee to say a Souldier lyes, 'tis stabbing.

Des. Go to : where lodges he?

Clow. To tell you where he lodges, is to tell you where I lye.

Des. Can any thing be made of this?

Clow. I know not where he lodges, and for mee to devise a lodging, and say he lyes heere, or he lyes there, were to lye in mine owne throat.

Des. Can you enquire him out? and be edified by report?

Clow. I will Catechize the world for him, that is, make Questions, and by them answer.

Des. Seeke him, bid him come hither : tell him, I have moov'd my Lord on his behalfe, and hope all will be well.

Clow. To do this, is within the compasse of mans Wit, and therefore I will attempt the doing it. Exit Clow.

Des. Where should I loose the Handkerchiefe, Emilia?

Emil. I know not Madam.

Des. Beleave me, I had rather have lost my purse Full of Cruzadoes. And but my Noble Moore Is true of minde, and made of no such basenesse, As jealous Creatures are, it were enough To put him to ill-thinking.

Emil. Is he not jealous?

Des. Who he? I thinke the Sun where he was borne, Drew all such humors from him.

Emilia. Looke where he comes.

Enter Othello.

Des. I will not leave him now, till Cassio be Call'd to him. How is't with you, my Lord?

Oth. Well my good Lady. Oh hardnes to dissemble! How do you, Desdemona?

Des. Well, my good Lord.

Oth. Give me your hand, This hand is moyst my Lady,

Des. It hath felt no age, nor knowne no sorrow.

Oth. This argues fruitfulnessse, and liberall heart : Hot, hot, and moyst. This hand of yours requires A sequester from Liberty : Fasting, and Prayer, Much Castigation, Exercise devout, For heere's a young and sweating Divell heere That commonly rebels : Tis a good hand, A franke one.

Des. You may (indeed) say so : For 'twas that hand that gave away my heart.

Oth. A liberall hand. The hearts of old, gave hands : But our new Heraldry is hands, not hearts.

Des. I cannot speake of this : Come, now your promise.

Oth. What promise, Chucke?

Des. I have sent to bid Cassio come speake with you.

Oth. I have a salt and sorry Rhewme offends me : Lend me thy handkerchiefe.

Des. Heere my Lord.

Oth. That which I gave you.

Des. I have it not about me.

Oth. Not?

Des. No indeed, my Lord.

Oth. That's a fault : That Handkerchiefe Did an Egyptian to my Mother give : She was a Charmer, and could almost read The thoughts of people, She told her, while she kept it, 'Twould make her Amiable, subdue my Father Intirely to her love : but if she lost it, Or made a Guift of it, my Fathers eye Should hold her loathed, and his Spirits should hunt After new Fancies. She dying gave it me, And bid me (when my Fate would have me Wiv'd) To give it her. I did so; and take heede on't, Make it a Darling, like your precious eye : To loose't, or give't away, were such perdition, As nothing else could match.

Des. Is't possible?

Oth. Tis true, there's Magicke in the web of it : A Sybill that had numbred in the world The Sun to course two hundred compasses, In her prophetick furie sow'd the worke : The Wormes were hallowed, that did breede the Silke, And it was dyede in Mummey, which the Skilfull Conserv'd of Maidens hearts.

Des. Indeed? Is't true?

Oth. Most veritable, therefore looke too't well.

Des. Then would the Heaven, that I had never seene't

Oth. Ha? wherefore?

Des. Why do you speake so startlingly, and rash?

Oth. Is't lost? Is't gon? Speak, is't out o'th' way?

Des. Blesse us.

Oth. Say you?

Des. It is not lost : but what and if it were?

Oth. How?

Des. I say it is not lost.

Oth. Fetcht, let me see't.

Des. Why so I can : but I will not now : This is a tricke to put me from my suite, Pray you let Cassio be receiv'd againe.

Oth. Fetch me the Handkerchiefe, My minde mis-gives.

Des. Come, come : you'l never meete a more sufficient man.

Oth. The Handkerchiefe.

Des. A man that all his time Hath founded his good Fortunes on your love ; Shar'd dangers with you.

Oth. The Handkerchiefe.

Des. Insooth, you are too blame.

Oth. Away.

Exit Othello.

Emil. Is not this man jealous?

Des. I nev'r saw this before.

Sure, there's some wonder in this Handkerchiefe, I am most unhappy in the losse of it.

Emil. Tis not a yeare or two shewes us a man : They are all but stomackes, and we all but Food, They eate us hungerly, and when they are full They belch us.

Enter Iago, and Cassio.

Looke you, Cassio and my Husband.

Iago. There is no other way : 'tis she must doo't : And loe the happinesse : go, and importune her.

Des.

Des. How now? (goud Cassio) whrt's the newes with you?

Cassio. Madam. my former suite. I do beseech you, That by your vertuous meanes, I may againe Exist, and be a member of his love, Whom I, with all the Office of my heart Intirely honour, I would not be delayd. If my offence, be of such mortall kinde, That not my Service past, nor present Sorrowes, Nor purpos'd merit in futurity, Can ransome me into his love againe, But to know so, must be my benefit: So shall I cloath me in a forc'd content, And shut my selfe up in some other course To Fortunes Almes.

Des. Alas (thrice-gentle Cassio) My Advocation is not now in Tune; My Lord, is not my Lord; nor should I know him; Were he in Favour, as in Humour alter'd. So helpe me every spirit sanctified, As I have spoken for you all my best, And stood within the blanke of his displeasure For my free speech. You must awhile be patient: What I can do, I will: and more I will Then for my selfe I dare. Let that suffice you.

Iago. Is my Lord angry?

Emil. He went hence but now: And certainly in strange unquietnesse.

Iago. Can he be angry? I have scene the Cannon When it hath blowne his Rankes into the Ayre, And like the Divell from his very Arme Puff't his owne Brother: And is he angry? Something of moment then; I will go meet him, There's matter in't indeed, if he be angry, Exit.

Des. I prythee do so. Something sure of State, Either from Venice, or some unhatch'd practise Made demonstrable heere in Cyprus, to him, Hath puddled his cleare Spirit: and in such cases, Mens Natures wrangle with inferiour things, Though great ones are their object. 'Tis even so. For let our finger ake, and it endues Our other heathfull members, even to a sense Of paine. Nay, we must thinke men are not Gods, Nor of them looke for such observance As fits the Bridall, Beshrew me much, Amilia, I was (unhandsome Warrior, as I am) Arraigning his unkindnesse with my soule: But now I finde, I had suborn'd the Witnesse, And he's Indited falsely.

Emil. Pray heaven it be State matters, as you thinke, and no Conception, Nor no Iealous Toy, concerning you.

Des. Alas the day, I never gave him cause.

Emil. But Iealous soules will not be answer'd so; They are not ever jealous for the cause, But jealous, for they're jealous. It is a Monster Begot upon it selfe, borne on it selfe.

Des. Heaven keepe the Monster from Othello's mind.

Emil. Lady, Amen.

Des. I will go seeke him. Cassio, walke heere about: If I do finde him fit, Ile move your suite, And seeke to effect it to my uttermost Exit.

Cas. I humbly thanke your Ladyship.

Enter Bianca.

Bian. 'Save you (Friend Cassio.)

Cassio. What make you from home? How is't with you, my most faire Bianca?

Indeed (sweet Love) I was comming to your house.

Bian. And I was going to your Lodging, Cassio. What? keepe a weeke away? Seaven dayes, and Nights? Eight score eight houres? And Loves absent howers More tedious then the Diall, eight score times? Oh wearie reck'ning.

Cassio. Pardon me, Bianca: I have this while with leaden thoughts beene prest, But I shall in a more continvate time Strike off this score of absence. Sweet Bianca: Take me this worke out.

Bianca. Oh Cassio, whence came this? This is some token from a newer Friend, To the felt-Absence: now I feele a Cause: Is't come to this? Well, Well.

Cassio. Go to, woman: Throw your vilde gueses in the Divels teeth, From whence you have them. You are jealous now. That this is from some Mistris, some remembrance; No, in good troth Bianca.

Bian. Why, who's is it?

Cassio. I know not neither: I found it in my Chamber, I like the worke well; Ere it be demanded (As like enough it will) I would have it coppied: Take it, and doe't, and leave me for this time.

Bian. Leave you? wherefore?

Cassio. I do attend heere on the Generall, And thinke it no addition nor my wish To have him see me woman'd.

Bian. Why, I pray you?

Cassio. Not that I love you not.

Bian. But that you do not love me, I pray you bring me on the way a little, And say, if I shall see you soone at night?

Cassio. 'Tis but a little way that I can bring you, For I attend heere, But Ile see you soone.

Bian. 'Tis very good: I must be circumstanc'd.

Exeunt Omnes.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Othello, and Iago.

Iago. Will you thinke so?

Oth. Thinke so, Iago?

Iago. What to kisse in private?

Oth. An unauthoriz'd kisse?

Iago. Or to be naked with her Friends in bed, An houre, or more, not meaning any harme?

Oth. Naked in bed (Iago) and not meane harme? It is hypocrisie against the Divell:

They that meane vertuously, and yet do so, The Divell their vertue tempts, and they tempt Heaven.

Iago. If they do nothing, 'tis a Veniall slip: But if I give my wife a Handkerchiefe.

Oth. What then?

Iago. Why then 'tis hers (my Lord) and being hers, She may (I thinke) bestow't on any man,

Oth. She is Protectresse of her honor too: May she give that?

Iago.

Iago. Her honor is an Essence that's not seene,
They have it very oft, that have it not.
But for the Handkerchiefe.

Oth. By heaven I would most gladly have forgot it :
Thou saidst (oh, it comes ore my memory,
As doth the Raven o're the infectious house :
Boading to all) he had my Handkerchiefe.

Iago. I : what of that ?

Oth. That's not so good now :

Iag. What if I had said, I had seene him do you wrong?
Or heare him say (as Knaves be such abroad,
Who having by their owne importunate suite,
Or voluntary dotage of some Mistris,
Convinced or supply'd them cannot chuse
But they must blab.)

Oth. Hath he said any thing ?

Iago. He hath (my Lord) but be yon well assur'd,
No more then he'le un-sweare.

Oth. What hath he said ?

Iago. Why, that he did : I know not what he did.

Oth. What? What?

Iago. Lye.

Oth. With her?

Iago. With her? On her : what you will.

Oth. Lye with her? lye on her? We say lye on her, when they be-lye-her. Lye with her : that's full some:
Handkerchiefe : Confessions : Handkerchiefe. To con-fesse, and be hang'd for his labour. First, to be hang'd, and then to confesse : I tremble at it. Nature would not invest her selfe in such shadowing passion, without some Instruction. It is not words that shakes me thus, (pish) Noses, Eares, and Lippes : is't possible. Confesse? Hand-kerchiefe? O divell.

Falls in a Trance.

Iago. Worke on,
My Medicine workes. Thus credulous Fooles are caught,
And many worthy, and chaste Dames even thus.
(All guiltlesse) meete reproach : what hoa? My Lord?
My Lord, I say Othello.

Enter Cassio.

How now Cassio?

Cas. What's the matter ?

Iago. My Lord is faine into an Epilepsie,
This is his second Fit : he had one yesterday.

Cas. Rub him about the Temples.

Iago. The Lethargie must have his quyet course :
If not, he foames at mouth : and by and by Breakes out to savage madnesse. Looke, he stirres :
Do you withdraw your selfe a little while,
He will recover straight : when hee is gone,
I would on great occasion, speake with you.
How is it General? Have you not hurt your hand?

Oth. Dost thou mocke me?

Iago. I mocke you not, by Heaven :

Would you would beare your Fortune like a Man.

Oth. A Horned man's a Monster and a Beast.

Iago. There's many a Beast then in a populous Citty,
And many a civill Monster.

Oth. Did he confesse it ?

Iago. Good Sir, be a man :

Thinke every bearded fellow that's but yoa'k'd
May draw with you. There's Millions now alive,
That nightly lye in those unproper beds,
Which they dare sweare peculiar. Your cause is better.
Oh, 'tis the spight of hell, the Fiends Arch-mock,
To lip a wanton in a secure Cowch ;

And to suppose her chaste. No, let me know,
And knowing what I am, I know what she shall be.

Oth. Oh, thou art wife : 'tis certaine.

Iago. Stand you a while apart,
Confine your selfe but in a patient List,
Whil'st you were heere, o're-whelmed with your griefe
(A passion most resulting such a man)
Cassio came hither. I shifted him away,
And laid good scuses on your Extasie,
Bad him anon returne : and heere speake with me,
The which he promis'd. Do but encave your selfe,
And marke the Fleeres, the Gybes and notable Scornes
That dwell in every Region of his face.
For I will make him tell the Tale anew ;
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when
He hath, and is againe to cope your wife.
I say, but marke his gesture : marry Patience,
Or I shall say y'are all in all in Splene,
And nothing of a man.

Oth. Do'tt thou heare, Iago,

I will be found most cunning in my Patience:
But (do'st thou heare) most bloody.

Iago. That's not amisse.

But yet keepe time in all : will you withdraw ?
Now will I question Cassio of Bianca,
A Huswife, that by selling her desires
Buys her selfe Bread, and Cloath. It is a Creature
That dotes on Cassio, (as 'tis the Strumpets plague
To be-guile many, and be be-guil'd by one)
He, when he heares of her, cannot restrain
From the excesse of Laughter. Heere he comes.

Enter Cassio.

As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad :
And his unbookish Ielousie must conserve,
Poore Cassio's smiles, gestures and light behaviours
Quite in the wrong. How do you Lieutenant?

Cas. The worse, that you gave me the addition,
Whose want even kills me.

Iago. Ply Desdemona well, and you are sure on't :
Now, if this Sute lay in Bianca's dowre,
How quickly should you speed ?

Cas. Alas poore Caitiffe.

Oth. Looke how he laughes already.

Iago. I never knew woman love man so.

Cas. Alas poore Rogue, I thinke indeed she loves me,

Oth. Now he denies it faintly : and laughes it out,

Iago. Do you heare Cassio?

Oth. Now he importunes him

To tell it o're : go to, well sayd, well said.

Iago. She gives it out, that you shall marry her.
Do you intend it ?

Cas. Ha, ha, ha.

Oth. Do ye triumph Romaine? do you triumph ?

Cas. I marry. What? A customer ; prythee beare
Some Charitie to my wit, do not thinke it
So unwholesome. Ha, ha, ha.

Oth. So, so, so, so : they laugh, that winnes.

Iago. Why the cry goes, that you marry her.

Cas. Pry thee say true.

Iago. I am a very Villaine else.

Oth. Have you scar'd me ; Well.

Cas. This is the Monkeys owne giving out :
She is perswaded I will marry her
Out of her owne love & flattery, not out of my promise.

Oth.

Oth. Iago becons me : now he begins the story.

Cassio. She was heere even now: she haunts mee in every place. I was the other day talking on the Seabanke with certaine Venetians; and thither comes the Bauble, and falls me thus about my neck.

Oth. Crying oh deere Cassio, as it were: his gesture imports it.

Cassio. So hangs, and lolls, and weepes upon me : So shakes, and pulls me. Ha, ha, ha.

Oth. Now hee tells how she pluckt him to my Chamber : oh, I see that nose of yours, but now that dogge, I shall throw it to:

Cassio. Well I must leave her company.

Iago. Before me : looke where she comes.

Enter Bianca.

Cas. 'Tis such another Fitchew: marry a perfum'd one? What do you meane by this haunting of me?

Bian. Let the divell, and his dam haunt you : what did you meane by that same Handkerchiefe, you gave mee even now ? I was a fine Foolet to take it : I must take out the worke? A likely piece of worke, that you should finde it in your Chamber, and know not who left it there. This is some Minxes token, and I must take out the worke? There, give it your Hobbey-horse, wheresoever you had it, Ile take out no worke on't.

Cassio. How now, my sweete Bianca ? How now? How now?

Othe. By Heaven, that should be my Handkerchiefe.

Bian. If you'le come to supper to night you may, if you will not, come when you are next prepar'd for. Exit

Iago. After her : after her.

Cas. I must, shee'l rayle in the streets else.

Iago. Will you sup there?

Cas. Yes, I intend so.

Iago. Well, I may chance to see you : for I would very faine speake with you.

Cas. Prythee come : will you?

Iago. Go to ; say no more. Exit.

Oth. How shall I murder him, Iago.

Iago. Did you perceive how he laugh'd at his vice?

Oth. Oh, Iago.

Iago. And did you see the Handkerchife?

Oth. Was that mine?

Iago. Yours by this hand : and to see how he prizes the foolish woman your wife : she gave it him, and he hath giv'n it his whore.

Oth. I would have him nine yeeres a killing: A fine woman, a faire woman, a sweet woman?

Iago. Nay, you must forget that.

Oth. I, let her rot and perith, and be damn'd to night, for she shall not live. No, my heart is turn'd to stone : I strike it, and it hurts my hand. Oh, the world hath not a sweeter Creature : she might lye by an Emperours side, and command him Taskes.

Iago. Nay that's not your way.

Othe. Hang her, I do but say what she is : so delicate with her Needle : an admirable Musician. Oh, she will sing the Savagenesse out of a Beare: of so high a plenteous wit, and invention?

Iag. She's the worse for all this.

Oth. Oh, a thousand, a thousand times : And then of so gentle a condition?

Iago. I too gentle.

Othe. Nay that's certaine :

But yet the pittie of it, Iago : oh Iago, the pittie of it

Iago.

Iago. If you are so fond over her iniquitie : give her patten to offend, for if it touch not you, it comes nere no body.

Oth. I will chop her into Messes : Cuckold me?

Iago. Oh, 'tis foule in her.

Oth. With mine Officer?

Iago. That's fouler.

Othe. Get me some poyson, Iago, this night. Ile not expostulate with her : left her body and beautie unprovide my minde againe : this night Iago.

Iago. Do it not with poyson, strangle her in her bed, Even the bed she hath contaminated.

Othe. Good, good :

The justice of it pleases : very good.

Iago. And for Cassio, let me be his undertaker : You shall heare more by midnight.

Enter Lodovico, Desdemona, and Attendants.

Othe. Excellent good : What Trumpet is that same?

Iago. I warrant something from Venice, 'Tis Lodovico, this, comes from the Duke. See, your wife's with him.

Lod. Save you worthy Generall.

Othe. With all my heart Sir.

Lod. The Duke, and the Senators of Venice greet you.

Othe. I kisse the Instrument of their pleasures.

Des. And what's the newes, good cozen Lodovico?

Iago. I am very glad to see you Signior : Welcome to Cyprus.

Lod. I thanke you : how dos Lieutenant Cassio?

Iago. Lives Sir.

Des. Cozen there's falne betweene him and my Lord, An unkind breach: but you shall make all well,

Othe. Are you sure of that?

Des. My Lord?

Othe. This faile you not to do, as you will

Lod. He did not call: he's busie in the paper, Is there division twixt my Lord and Cassio?

Des. A most unhappy one : I would do much Tattone them for the love I beare to Cassio.

Oth. Fire, and brimestone.

Des. My Lord.

Oth. Are you wife?

Des. What is he angry?

Lod. May be the Letter mov'd him. For as I thinke they do command him home, Deputing Cassio in his Governement.

Des. Trust me, I am glad on't.

Othe. Indeed?

Des. My Lord?

Oth. I am glad to see you mad.

Des. Why, sweet Othello?

Othe. Divell.

Des. I have not deserv'd this,

Lod. My Lord, this would not be beleev'd in Venice, Though I should sweare I saw't. 'Tis very much, Make her amends : she weepes.

Oth. Oh divell, divell :

If that the Earth could teeme with womans teares, Each drop she falls, would prove a Crocodile : Out of my sight.

Des. I will not stay to offend you:

Lad. Truly obedient Lady :

I do beseech your Lordship call her backe.

Oth.

Othe. Mistris.

Des. My Lord.

Othe. What would you with her, Sir?

Lod. Who I, my Lord?

Othe. I, you did wish, that I would make her turne:
Sir, she can turne, and turne: and yet go on
And turne againe. And she can weepe, Sir, weepe.
And she's obedient; as you say obedient.
Very obedient: proceed you in your teares.
Concerning this Sir, (oh well-painted passion)
I am commanded home: get you away:
He send for you anon. Sir I obey the Mandate.
And will returne to Venice. Hence, aunnt:
Cassio shall have my Place. And Sir, to night
I do entreat, that we may sup together:
You are welcome Sir to Cyprus.

Goates, and Monkeys.

Exit.

Lod. Is this the Noble Moore, whom our full Senate
Call all in all sufficient? Is this the Nature
Whom Passion could not shake? Whose solid vertue
The shot of Accident, nor dart of Chance
Could neither graze, nor pierce?

Iago. He is much chang'd.

Lod. Are his wits safe? Is he not of light Braine?

Iago. He's that he is: I may not breath my censure.
What he might be: if what he might, he is not,
I would to heaven he were.

Lod. What, strike his wife?

Iago. 'Faith that was not so well; yet would I knew
That stroake would prove the worst.

Lod. Is it his use?

Or did the Letters, worke upon his blood,
And new create his fault?

Iago. Alas, alas:

It is not honesty in me to speake
What I have seene and knowne. You shall observe him,
And his owne courtes will denote him so,
That I may save my speech: do but go after
And marke how he continues.

La. I am forry that I am deceiu'd in him.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello, and Emilia.

Othe. You have seene nothing then?

Emil. Nor ever heard: nor ever did suspect.

Othe. Yes, you have seene Cassio, and she together.

Emil. But then I saw no harme: and then I heard,
Each syllable that breath made up betweene them.

Othe. What? Did they never whisper?

Emil. Never my Lord.

Othe. Nor send you out o'th' way?

Emil. Never.

Othe. To fetch her Fan, her Gloves, her mask, nor no-

Emil. Never my Lord. (thing?)

Othe. That's strange.

Emil. I durst (my Lord) to wager, she is honest:
Lay downe my Soule at stake: If you thinke other,
Remove your thought. It doth abuse your bosome,
If any wretch have put this in your head,
Let Heaven requite it with the Serpents curse,

For if she be not honest, chaste and true,
There's no man happy, The purest of their Wives
Is foule as Slander.

Othe. Bid her come hither: go.

Exit Emilia.

She saies enough: yet she's a simple Band
That cannot say as much. This is a subtle Whore:
A Closset Locke and Key of Villanous Secrets,
And yet she'll kneele, and pray: I have seene her do't.

Enter Desdemona, and Emilia.

Des. My Lord, what is your will?

Othe. Pray you Chucke come hither.

Des. What is your pleasure?

Oth. Let me see your eyes: looke in my face.

Des. What horrible Fancie's this?

Oth. Some of your Function Mistris:

Leave Procreants alone, and shut the doore:

Cough, or cry hem; if any body come:

Your Myltery, your Myltery; Nay dispatch. Exit Emi.

Des. Vpon my knee, what doth your speech import?
I understand a Fury in your words:

Othe. Why? What art thou?

Des. Your wife my Lord: your true and loyall wife.

Othello. Come sweare it: damne thy selfe, being like one of Heaven, the diuells themselves should feare to ceaze thee. Therefore bee double damn'd: sweare thou art honest.

Des. Heaven doth truly know it.

Othe. Heaven truly knowes, that thou art false as hell.

Des. To whom my Lord?

With whom? How am I false?

Othe. Ah Desdemon, away, away, away.

Des. Alas the heavy day: why do you weepe?

Am I the motive of these teares my Lord?

If happely you my Father do suspect,
An Instrument of this your calling backe,
Lay not your blame on me: if you have lost him,
I have lost him too.

Othe. Had it pleas'd Heaven,

To try me with Affliction, had they rain'd

All kind of Sores, and Shames on my bare-head:

Steep'd me in poverty to the very lippes.

Given to Captivitie, me and my utmost hopes.

I should have found in some place of my Soule

A drop of patience. But alas, to make me

The fixed Figure for the time of Scorne,

To point his flow, and moving finger at.

Yet could I beare that too, well, very well:

But there where I have garner'd up my heart,

Where either I must live, or beare no life,

The Fountaine from the which my currant runnes,

Or else dries up: to be discarded thence,

Or keepe it as a Cesterne, for foule Toades

To knot and gender in. Turne thy complexion there:

Patience, thou young and rose-lipp'd Cherubin,

I heere looke grim as hell.

Des. I hope my Lord esteemes me honest.

Othe. O I, as Sommer Flyes are in the Shambles,

That quicken even with blowing. Oh thou weed:

Who art so lovely faire, and smell'st so sweete,

That the Sence askes at thee,

Would thou had'st never bin borne.

Des. Alas, what ignorant sin have I committed?

Othe. Was this faire Paper? This most goodly Booke
Made to write Whore upon? What committed,

Com-

Committed? Oh, thou publicke Commoner,
I should make very Forges of my cheekes,
That would to Cynders burne up Modestie,
Did I but speake thy deedes. What committed?
Heaven stoppes the Nose at it, and the Moone winks:
The bawdy winde that kisses all it meetes,
Is hush'd within the hollow Myne of Earth
And will not hear't. What committed?

Des. By Heaven you do me wrong.

Othe. Are not you a Strumpet?

Des. No, as I am a Christian.

If to preserve this vessell for my Lord,
From any other foule unlawfull touch
Be not to be a Strumpet, I am none.

Othe. What, not a Whore?

Des. No, as I shall be sav'd.

Othe. Is't possible?

Des. Oh Heaven forgive us.

Othe. I cry you mercy then.

I tooke you for that cunning Whore of Venice,
That married with Othello. You Mistris,

Enter Emilia.

That have the office opposite to Saint Peter,
And keepes the gate of hell. You, you: I you.
We have done our course: there's mony for your paines:
I pray you turne the key and keepe our counsaile. Exit.

Emil. Alas, what do's this Gentleman conceive?

How do you Madam? how do you my good Lady?

Des. Faith, halfe a sleepe.

Emil. Good Madam,

What's the matter with my Lord?

Des. With whom?

Emil. Why, with my Lord, Madam?

Des. Who is thy Lord?

Emil. He that is yours, sweet Lady.

Des. I have none: do not talke to me, Emilia,

I cannot weepe: nor answeres have I none,
But what should go by water. Prythee to night,
Lay on my bed my wedding sheetes, remember,
And call thy husband hither.

Emil. Heere's a change indeed. Exit.

Des. 'Tis meete I should be us'd so: very meete.
How have I bin behav'd, that he might sticke
The small'st opinion on my least misuse?

Enter Iago, and Emilia.

Iago. What is your pleasure Madam?
How ist with you?

Des. I cannot tell: those that doe teach your Babes
Doe it with gentle meanes, and easie taskes.
He might have chid me so: for in good faith
I am a Child to chiding.

Iago. What is the matter Lady?

Emil. Alas (Iago) my Lord hath so bewhor'd her,
Throwne such dispiight, and heavie termes upon her
That true hearts cannot beare it.

Des. Am I that name, Iago?

Iago. What name (faire Lady?)

Des. Such as she said my Lord did say I was.

Emil. He call'd her whore: a Begger in his drinke:
Could not have laid such termes upon his Callet.

Iago. Why did he so?

Des. I do not know: I am sure I am none such.

Iago. Do not weepe, do not weepe: alas the day.

Emil. Hath she forooke so many Noble Matches?
Her Father? And her Country? And her Friends?

To be call'd Whore? Would it not make one weepe?

Des. It is my wretched Fortune.

Iago. Beshrew him for't:

How comes this Tricke upon him?

Des. Nay, Heaven doth know.

Emil. I will be hang'd, if some eternall Villaine,
Some busie and insinuating Rogue,
Some cogging, cozening Slave to get some Office,
Has not divis'd this Slander: I will be hang'd else.

Iago. Fie, there is no such man: it is impossible.

Des. If any such there be, Heaven pardon him.

Emil. A halter pardon him:

And hell gnaw his bones.

Why should he call her Whore?

Who keepes her company?

What Place? What Time?

What Forme? What liklyhood?

The Moore's abus'd by some most villanous Knave,
Some base notorious Knave, some scurvy Fellow.
Oh heavens, that such companions thou'dst unfold,
And put in every honest hand a whip
To lash the Rascall naked through the world,
Even from the East to th' West.

Iago. Speake within doore.

Emil. Oh fie upon them: some such Squire he was
That turn'd your wit, the seamy-side without,
And made you to suspect me with the Moore.

Iago. You are a Foole: go to.

Des. Alas Iago.

What shall I do to win my Lord againe?

Good Friend, go to him: for by this light of Heaven,

I know not how I lost him. Heere I kneele:

If ere my will did trespass 'gainst his Love,

Either in discourte of thought, or actuall deed,

Or that mine Eyes, mine Eares, or any Sence

Delighted them: or any other Forme.

Or that I do not yet, and ever did,

And ever will, (though he do shake me off

To beggerly divorcement) Love him deerely,

Comfort forswear me. Unkindnesse may do much,

And his unkindnesse may defeat my life,

But never taynt my Love. I cannot say Whore,

It do's abhorre me now I speake the word,

To doe the Act, that might the addition earne,

Nor the worlds Masse of vanitie could make me.

Iago. I pray you be content: 'tis but his humour:

The businesse of the State do's him offence.

Des. If 'twere no other.

Iago. It is but so, I warrant,

Hearke how these Instruments summon to supper:

The Messenger of Venice staies the meate;

Go in, and weepe not: all things shall be well.

Exeunt Desdemona and Emilia.

Enter Rodorigo.

How now Rodorigo?

Rod. I do not finde

That thou deal'st justly with me.

Iago. What in the contrary?

Rodori. Every day thou do'st me with some device Iago and rather as it seemes to me now, keep'st from me all conveniencie, then suppliest me with the least advantage of hope: I will indeed no longer endure it. Nor am I yet perswaded to put up in peace, what already I have foolishly suffred.

Iago. Will you heare me Rodorigo?

Rodori. I

Rodo. I have heard too much : and your words and Performances are no kin together.

Iago. You charge me most unjustly.

Rodo. With naught but truth : I have wasted my selfe out of my meanes. The Jewels you have had from me to deliver Desdemona, would halfe have corrupted a Votarist. You have told me she hath receiv'd them, and return'd me expectations and comforts of sodaine respect, and acquaintance, but I finde none.

Iago. Well, goe to : very well.

Rodo. Very well, goe to : I cannot goe to, (man) nor tis not very well. Nay I thinke it is scurvy : and begin to find my selfe fopt in it.

Iago. Very well.

Rodo. I tell you, tis not very well : I will make my selfe knowne to Desdemona. If she will returne me my Jewels, I will give over my Suit, and repent my unlawfull solicitation. If not, assure your selfe, I will seeke satisfaction of you.

Iago. You have said now.

Rodo. I, and said nothing but what I protest intendment of doing.

Iago. Why, now I see theres mettle in thee : and even from this instant doe build on thee a better opinion then ever before : give me thy hand Roderigo. Thou hast taken against me a most just exception : but yet I protest I have dealt most directly in thy Affaire.

Rodo. It hath not appear'd.

Iago. I grant indeed it hath not appear'd : and your suspicion is not without wit and judgement. But Roderigo, if thou hast that in thee indeed, which I have greater reason to beleve now then ever (I meane purpose, Courage, and Valour) this night shew it. If thou the next night following enjoy not Desdemona, take me from this world with Treachery, and devise Engines for my life.

Rodo. Well : what is it ? Is it within reason and compasse ?

Iago. Sir, there is especiall Commission, come from Venice to depute Cassio in Othello's place.

Rodo. Is that true ? Why then Othello and Desdemona returne againe to Venice.

Iago. Oh no : he goes into Mauritania and taketh away with him the faire Desdemona, unlesse his abode be lingred heere by some accident. Wherein none can be so determinate, as the removing of Cassio.

Rodo. How doe you meane removing him ?

Iago. Why, by making him incapable of Othello's place : knocking out his braines.

Rodo. And that you would have me to doe.

Iago. I : if you dare doe your selfe a profit, and a right. He sups to night with a Harlotry : and thither will I goe to him. He knowes not yet of his honorable fortune, if you will watch his going thence (which I will fashion to fall out betweene twelve and one) you may take him at your pleasure. I will be neere to second your Attempt, and he shall fall betweene us. Come, stand not amaz'd at it, but goe along with me : I will shew you such a necessity in his death, that you shall thinke your selfe bound to put it on him. It is now high supper time : and the night growes to waite. About it.

Rodo. I will heare further reason for this.

Iago. And you shall be satisfi'd.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Othello, Lodovico, Desdemona, Amilia, and Attendants.

Lod. I doe beseech you Sir, trouble your selfe no further

Oth. Oh pardon me : twill doe me good to walke.

Lod. Madam, good night : I humbly thanke your Lady.

Des. Your honor is most welcome. (ship.

Oth. Will you walke Sir ? Oh Desdemona.

Des. My Lord.

Oth. Get you to bed on th' instant, I will be return'd forth with : dismisst your Attendant there : look't bee done. Exit.

Des. I will my Lord.

Amil. How goes it now ? he lookes gentler then he did.

Des. He sayes he will returne incontinent, And hath commanded me to goe to bed, And bid me to dismisst you.

Amil. Dismisst me ?

Des. It was his bidding : therefore good Amilia, Give me my nightly wearing, and adieu, We must not now displease him.

Amil. I would you had never seene him.

Des. So would not I : my love doth so approve him, That even his stubbornesse, his checks, his frownes, (Prethee un-pin me) have grace and favour.

Amil. I have laid those Sheetes you bad me on the bed.

Des. All one : good Father, how foolish are our minds ? If I doe dye before thee, prethee shrowd me In one of these same Sheetes.

Amil. Come, come : you talke.

Des. My Mother had a Maid call'd Barbara, She was in love : and he she lov'd prov'd mad, And did forsake her. She had a Song of Willough, An old thing twas : but it exprest her Fortune. And she dy'd singing it. That Song to night, Will not goe from my mind : I have much to doe, But to goe hang my head all at one side And sing it like poore Barbara : prethee dispatch,

Amil. Shall I goe fetch your Night-gowne ?

Des. No, un-pin me here, This Lodovico is a proper man.

Amil. A very handsome man.

Des. He speakes well.

Amil. I know a Lady in Venice would have walk'd barefoot to Palestine for a touch of his neither lip.

Des. The poore Soule sat singing, by a Sicamour tree.

Sing all a greene Willough :

Her hand on her bosome, her head on her knee,

Sing Willough, Willough, Willough.

The fresh Streames ran by her, and murmur'd her moanes

Sing Willough, &c.

Her salt teares fell from her, and softned the stones,

Sing Willough, &c.

(Lady by these)

Willough, Willough. (Prethee highthee, hele come anon)

Sing all a greene Willough must be my Garland.

Let no body blame him, his scorne I approve.

(Nay thats not next. Hearke, who is't that knockes ?

Amil. Its the wind.

Des. I call'd my Love false Love : but what said he then ?

Sing Willough, &c.

If I court mo women, you'le couch with mo men.

yy

So

So get thee gone, good night : mine eyes doe itch :
Doth that boade weeping ?

Emil. Tis neither heere, nor there.

Des. I have heard it said so, O these Men, these men !
Dost thou in conscience thinke (tell me Emilia)
That there be women doe abuse their husbands
In such grosse kind ?

Emil. There be some such, no question.

Des. Wouldst thou doe such a deed for all the world :

Emil. Why, would not you ?

Des. No, by this heavenly light.

Emil. Nor I neither, by this heavenly light.

I might doo't as well it darke.

Des. Wouldst thou doe such a deed for all the world ?

Emil. The worlds a huge thing :

It is a great price, for a small vice.

Des. Introth I thinke thou would'st not.

Emil. Introth I thinke I should, and undoo't when I had done. Marry, I would not doe such a thing for a joynt Ring, nor for measures of Lawne, nor for Gownes, Petticoats, nor Caps, nor any petty exhibition. But for all the whole world: why, who would not make her husband a Cuckold, to make him a Monarch ? I should venture Purgatory for't.

Des. Beshrew me, if I would doe such a wrong
For the whole world.

Emil. Why, the wrong, is but a wrong it's world;
and having the world for your labour, tis a wrong in your owne world, and you might quickly make it right.

Des. I doe not thinke there is any such woman.

Emil. Yes, a dozen : and as many toth'vantage, as would store the world they plaid for.

But I doe thinke it is their husbands faults

If Wives doe fall : (Say, that they slacke their duties,

And powre our Treasures into forraigne laps ;

Or else breake out in peevish Iealousies,

Throwing restraint upon us : Or say they strike us,

Or scant our former having in despight)

Why we have galled : and though we have some Grace,

Yet have we some Revenge. Let husbands know,

Their wives have sense like them : They see, and smell,

And have their Palats both for sweet, and sowre,

As husbands have. What is it that they doe

When they change us for others ? Is it Sport ?

I thinke it is : and doth Affection breed it ?

I thinke it doth. Ist frailty that thus erres ?

It is so too. And have not we affections ?

Desires for Sport ? and frailty, as men have ?

Then let them use us well : else let them know,

The illes we doe, their illes instruct us to.

Des. Good night, good night :

Heaven me such uses send,

Not to picke bad, from bad ; but by bad, mend. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Iago, and Rodorigo.

Iago. Heere, stand behind this Barke,

Straight will he come :

Weare thy good Rapier bare, and put it home :

Quicke, quicke, feare nothing ; Ile be at thy Elbow,

It makes us, or it marres us, thinke on that,

And fixe most firme thy Resolution;

Rod. Be neere at hand, I may miscarry in't.

Iago. Heere, at thy hand : Behold, and take thy stand.

Rod. I have no great devotion to the deed,
And yet he hath given me satisfying Reasons :

Tis but a man gone. Forth my Sword : he dyes.

Iago. I have rub'd this yong Quat almost to the sense,
And he growes angry. Now, whether he kill Cassio,
Or Cassio him, or each doe kill the other,
Every way makes my gaine. Live Rodorigo,
He calles me to a restitution large
Of gold, and Iewels, that I bob'd from him,
As gifts to Desdemona.

It must not be : if Cassio doe remaine,

He hath a dayly beauty in his life,

That makes me ugly : and besides, the Moore

May unfold me to him : there stand I in much perill ;

No, he must dye. But so, I heare him comming.

Enter Cassio.

Rod. I know his gate, tis he : Villaine thou dyest.

Cas. That thrust had beene mine enemy indeed,
But that my Coate is better then thou knowst ;

I will make proove of thine.

Rod. Oh, I am flaine.

Cas. I am maym'd for ever :
Helpe hoa : Murther, murther.

Enter Othello.

Oth. The voyce of Cassio, Iago keeps his word.

Rod. O Villaine that I am.

Oth. It is even so.

Cas. Oh helpe hoa : Light, a Surgeon.

Oth. Tis he : O brave Iago, honest, and just,
That hast such Noble sense of thy friends wrong,
Thou teachest me. Minion, your deere lyes dead,
And your unblest Fate highes : Strumpet I come :
For off my heart, those Charmes thine Eyes, are blotted.
Thy Bed lust-stain'd, shall with Lusts blood be spotted.

Exit Othello.

Enter Lodovico and Gratiano.

Cas. What hoa ? no Watch ? No passage ?
Murther, Murther.

Gra. Tis some mischance, the voyce is very direfull ;

Cas. Oh helpe.

Lodo. Hearke.

Rod. Oh wretched Villaine.

Lod. Two or three groane. Tis heavy night ;
These may be counterfets : Lets thinkt unsafe
To come into the cry, without more helpe.

Rod. Nobody come : then shall I bleed to death.

Enter Iago.

Lod. Hearke.

Gra. Heres one comes in his shirt, with Light, and Weapons.

Iago. Whost there ?

Whose noyse is this that cryes out murther ?

Lodo. We doe not know.

Iago. Doe not you heare a cry ?

Cas. Heere, heere : for heaven sake helpe me.

Iago. Whats the matter ?

Gra. This is Othello's Ancient, as I take it.

Lodo. The same indeed, a very valiant Fellow.

Iago. What are you heere, that cry so greivously ?

Cas. Iago ? Oh I am spoyl'd, undone by Villaines :
Give me some helpe.

Iago. O me, Lieutenant !

What Villaines have done this ?

Cas. I thinke that one of them is heereabout,

And

And cannot make away.

Iago. Oh treacherous Villaines:

What are you there? Come in, and give some helpe.

Rod. O helpe me there.

Cassio. Thats one of them.

Iago. Oh murd'rous Slave! O Villaine!

Rod. O damn'd Iago! O inhumane Dogge!

Iago. Kill men ith' darke?

Where be these bloody Theeves?

How silent is this Towne? Hoa, murder, murder.

What may you be? Are you of good, or evill?

Lod. As you shall prove us, praise us.

Iago. Signior Lodovico.

Lod. He Sir.

Iago. I cry you mercy: heres Cassio hurt by Villaines:

Gra. Cassio?

Iago. How ist brother?

Cassio. My Legge is cut in two.

Iago. Marry heaven forbid:

Light Gentlemen, ile bind it with my shirt.

Enter Bianca.

Bian. What is the matter hoa? Who ist that cryd?

Iago. Who ist that cry'd?

Bian. Oh my deere Cassio,

My sweet Cassio: Oh Cassio, Cassio, Cassio.

Iago. O notable Strumpet. Cassio, may you suspect

Who they should be, that have thus mangled you?

Cassio. No.

Gra. I am sorry to find you thus;

I have beene to seeke you.

Iago. Lend me a Garter. So:—Oh for a Chaire

To beare him easily hence.

Bian. Alas he faints. Oh Cassio, Cassio, Cassio.

Iago. Gentlemenall, I doe suspect this Trash

To be a party in this injurie.

Patience a while, good Cassio. Come, come;

Lend me a Light: know wethis face, or no?

Alas my friend, and my deere Countryman

Roderigo? No: Yes sure: Yea, tis Roderigo.

Gra. What, of Venice?

Iago. Even he Sir: Did you know him?

Gra. Know him? I.

Iago. Signior Gratiano? I cry your gentle pardon:

These bloody accidents must excuse my Manners,

That so neglected you.

Gra. I am glad to see you.

Iago. How doe you Cassio? Oh, a Chaire, a Chaire.

Gra. Roderigo?

Iago. He, he, tis he:

Oh thats well said, the Chaire.

Some good man beare him carefully from hence,

Ile fetch the Generails Surgeon. For you Mistris,

Save you your labour. He that lyes flaine heere (Cassio)

Was my deere friend. What malice was betweene you?

Cassio. None in the world: nor doe I know the man?

Iago. What looke you pale? Oh beare him out oth' Ayre.

Stay you good Gentlemen. Looke you pale, Mistris?

Doe you perceive the gastnesse of her eye?

Nay, if you stare, we shall heare more anon.

Behold her well: I pray you looke upon her:

Doe you see Gentlemen? Nay, guiltinesse will speake

Though tongues were out of use.

Emil. Alas, what is the matter?

What is the matter, husband?

Iago. Cassio hath heere bin set on in the darke

By Roderigo, and Fellowes that are scap'd:

Hes almost flaine, and Roderigo quite dead.

Emil. Alas good Gentleman: alas good Cassio.

Iago. This is the fruits of whoring. Prethee Emilia,

Goe know of Cassio where he supt to night.

What doe you shake at that?

Bian. He supt at my house, but I therefore shake not.

Iago. O did he so? I charge you goe with me.

Emil. Oh fie upon thee Strumpet.

Bian. I am no Strumpet, but of life as honest,

As you that thus abuse me.

Emil. As I? Fye upon thee.

Iago. Kind Gentlemen:

Lets goe see poore Cassio drest.

Come Mistris, you must tels another Tale.

Emilia, run you to the Cittadell,

And tell my Lord and Lady, what hath happ'd:

Will you goe on afore? This is the night

That either makes me, or foredoes me quite. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello, and Desdemona in her bed.

Oth. It is the Cause, it is the Cause (my soule)
Let me not name it to you, you chaste Starres,
It is the Cause. Yet Ile not shed her blood,
Nor scarre that whiter skin of hers, then Snow,
And smooth as Monumentall Alabaster:
Yet she must dye, else she'l betray more men:
Put out the Light, and then put out the Light:
If I quench thee, thou flaming Minister,
I can againe thy former light restore,
Should I repent me. But once put out thy Light,
Thou cunningst Patterne of excelling Nature,
I know not where is that Promethean heate
That can thy Light re-Lume.
When I have pluck'd thy Rose,
I cannot give it vitall growth againe,
It needes must wither. Ile smell thee on the Tree:
Oh Balmy breath, that dost almost perswade
Iustice to breake her Sword. One more, one more;
Be thus when thou art dead, and I will kill thee,
And love thee after. One more, and thats the last.
So sweet, was ne're so fatali. I must weepe,
But they are cruell Teares: This sorrows heavenly,
It strikes, where it doth love. She wakes.

Des. Who's there? Othello?

Oth. I Desdemona.

Des. Will you come to bed, my Lord?

Oth. Have you pray'd to night, Desdemona?

Des. I my Lord.

Oth. If you bethinke your selfe of any Crime
Vnreconcil'd as yet to heaven, and Grace,
Solicite for it straight.

Des. Alacke, my Lord,

What may you meane by that?

Oth. Well, doe it, and be brieft, I will walke by?

I would not kill thy unprepared Spirit,

No, (Heavens fore-fend) I would not kill thy soule.

Des. Talke you of killing?

Oth. I, I doe.

Des. Then Heaven have mercy on mee.

Oth. Amen, with all my heart.

Des. If you say so, I hope you will not kill me.

Oth. Humh.

Des. And yet I feare you : for you're fatall then
When your eyes rowle so.

Why I should feare, I know not,
Since guiltinesse I know not : But yet I feele I feare.

Oth. Thinke on thy finnes,

Des. They are love I beare to you.

Oth. I, and for that thou dy'st.

Des. That deaths unaturall, that kils for loving.
Alas, why gnaw you so your nether-lip?
Some bloody passion shakes your very frame :
These are portents : but yet I hope, I hope,
They doe not point on me.

Oth. Peace, and be still.

Des. I will so : Whats the matter ?

Oth. That Handkerchiefe

Which I so lov'd, and gave thee, thou gau'st to Cassio.

Des. No by my life, and soule : send for the man,
And aske him.

Oth. Sweet soule, take heed, take heed of Perjury,
Thou art on thy death-bed.

Des. I, but not yet to dye.

Oth. Presently.

Therefore confesse thee freely of thy sinne :
For to deny each Article with Oath,
Cannot remove, nor choake the strong Conception
That I doe grone withall. Thou art to dye.

Des. Oh heaven have mercy on me.

Oth. I say, Amen.

Des. And have you mercy too. I never did
Offend you in my life : never lov'd Cassio,
But with such generall warranty of heaven,
As I might love. I never gave him Token.

Oth. By heaven I saw my Handkerchiefe in hand.
Operiur'd woman, thou dost stone my heart,
And makest me call, what I intend to doe
A Murther, which I thought a Sacrifice.
I saw the Handkerchife.

Des. He found it then :

I never gave it him : Send for him hither :
Let him confesse a truth.

Oth. He hath confest:

Des. What my Lord ?

Oth. That he hath vs'd thee.

Des. How ? unlawfully ?

Oth. I.

Des. He will not say so.

Oth. No : his mouth is stopp'd :

Honest Iago hath tane order fort.

Des. Oh, my feare interprets. What is he dead ?

Oth. Had all his haire bin lives, my great Revenge
Had stomacke for them all.

Des. Alas, he is betray'd, and I undone.

Oth. Out Strumpet: weep'st thou for him to my face ?

Des. O banish me, my Lord, but kill me not.

Oth. Downe Strumpet.

Des. Kill me to morrow, let me live to night.

Oth. Nay, if you strive.

Des. But halfe an houre.

Oth. Being done, there is no pawse.

Des. But while I say one prayer.

Oth. It is too late,

Smothers her.

Emilia at the doore.

Emil. My Lord, my Lord ? What hoa ?

My Lord, my Lord.

Oth. What noife is this ? Not dead ? not yet quite dead
I that am cruell, am yet mercifull,
I would not have thee linger in thy paine ?
So, so.

Emil. within. What hoa ? my Lord, my Lord ?

Oth. Whos there ?

Emil. Oh good my Lord, I would speake a word with you.

Oth. Yes : tis Emilia : by and by. Shes dead.
Tis like she comes to speake of Cassio's death :
The noife was high. Hah, no more mooving ?
Still as the Grave. Shall she come in ? Wert good ?
I thinke she stirres againe. No, whats best to doe ?
If she come in, shell sure speake to my wife :
My wife, my wife : what wife ? I have no wife.
Oh insupportable ! Oh heavy houre !
Me thinks, it should be now a huge Eclipse
Of Sunne, and Moone : and that th'affrighted Globe
Did yawne at Alteration.

Emil. I doe beseech you

That I may speake with you. Oh good my Lord.

Oth. I had forgot thee : oh come in Emilia.

Soft, by and by, let me the Curtaines draw.

Where art thou ? Whats the matter with thee now ?

Enter Emilia.

Emil. Oh my good Lord, yonders foule Murthers done.

Oth. What ? now ?

Emil. But now, my Lord,

Oth. It is the very error of the Moone,
She comes more neerer Earth then she was wont,
And makes men mad.

Emil. Cassio, my Lord, hath killd
A young Venetian, calld Roderigo.

Oth. Roderigo killd ? and Cassio killd ?

Emil. No, Cassio is not killd.

Oth. Not Cassio killd ? Then Murthers out of tune,
And sweet Revenge growes harsh.

Des. O falsely, falsely murder'd.

Emil. Alas ! what cry is that ?

Oth. That ? What ?

Emil. Out, and alas, that was my Ladies voyce,
Helpe, helpe hoa, helpe, Oh Ladie speake againe,
Sweet Desdemona, oh sweet Mistris, speake.

Des. A guiltlesse death I dye.

Emil. Oh who hath done this deed ?

Des. No body : I my selfe, farewell :
Commend me to my kind Lord : oh farewell.

Oth. Why how should she be murderd ?

Emil. Alas : who knowes ?

Oth. You heare her say her selfe, it was not I.

Emil. She said so : I must needs report the truth.

Oth. Shes like a Lyar gone to burning hell,
Twas I that killd her.

Emil. Oh the more Angell she, and you the blacker Divell.

Oth. She turn'd to folly : and she was a whore.

Emil. Thou dost bely her, and thou art a divell.

Oth. She was false as water.

Emil. Thou art rash as fire, to say
That she was false. Oh she was heavenly true.

Oth. Cassio did top her : Aske thy husband else.
O, I were damn'd beneath all depth in hell :
But that I did proceed upon just grounds
To this extremity. Thy husband knew it all!

Emil.

Emil. My husband?

Oth. Thy husband.

Emil. That she was false to Wedlocke;

Oth. I, with Cassio: had she bin true,
If heaven would make me such another world,
Of one entyre and perfect Chrysolite,
Ild not have sold her for it.

Emil. My husband?

Oth. I, twas he that told me on her first,
An honest man he is, and hates the slime
That stickes on filthy deeds.

Emil. My husband?

Oth. What needs this iterance, Woman?
I say, thy husband.

Emil. Oh Mistris,
Vilany hath made mockes with love:
My husband say she was false?

Oth. He, woman;

I say thy husband: Dost understand the word?
My friend, thy husband; honest, honest Iago.

Emil. If he say so, may his pernicious Soule
Rot halfe a graine a day: he lyes to th' heart,
She was too fond of her most filthy Bargaine.

Oth. Hah?

Emil. Doe thy worst:
This deede of thine is no more worthy heaven,
Then thou wast worthy her.

Oth. Peace, you were best.

Emil. Thou hast not halfe that power to doe me
As I have to be hurt. Oh gull, oh dolt, (harme
Asignorant as durt: thou hast done a deed
(I care not for thy Sword) Ile make thee knowne,
Though I lost twenty lives, Helpe, helpe, hoa, helpe:
The Moore hath kill'd my Mistris. Murther, murther.

Enter Montano, Gratiano, and Iago.

Mon. What is the matter? How now generall?

Emil. Oh, are you come, Iago: you have done well,
That men must lay their Murthers on your necke.

Gra. What is the matter?

Emil. Disprove this Villaine, if thou be'st a man,
He sayes, thou toldst him that his wife was false:
I know thou didst not: thou'rt not such a Villaine.
Speake, for my heart is full.

Iago. I told him what I thought,
And told no more
Then what he found himselfe was apt, and true.

Emil. But did you ever tell him,
She was false?

Iago. I did.

Emil. You told a Lye, an odious damned Lye:
Vpon my soule, a Lye; a wicked Lye.
Shee false with Cassio?

Did you say with Cassio?

Iago. With Cassio, Mistris,
Goe to, charme your tongue.

Emil. I will not charme my Tongue;
I am bound to speake,
My Mistris heere lyes murdered in her bed.

Al. Oh heavens, forefend.

Emil. And your reports have set the Murder on.

Oth. Nay stare not Masters,
It is true indeed.

Gra. Tis a strange Truth.

Mon. O monstrous Act.

Emil. Villany, villany, villany:

I thinke upont, I thinke: I smel't: O Villany:
I thought so then: Ile kill my selfe for grieve,
O villany! villany!

Iago. What, are you mad?

I charge you get you home.

Emil. Good Gentlemen, let me have leave to speake:
Tis proper I obey him; but not now:
Perchance Iago, I will nere goe home.

Oth. Oh, oh, oh.

Emil. Nay, lay thee downe and roare:
For thou hast killd the sweetest innocent,
That ere did lift up eye.

Oth. Oh she was fowle!

I scarce did know you Vnkle, there lies your Neece,
Whose breath (indeed) these hands have newly stopp'd:
I know this acte shewes horrible and grim.

Gra. Poore Desdemona:

I am glad thy father's dead,
Thy Match was mortall to him; and pure grieve
Shore his old thred in twaine. Did he live now,
This sight would make him doe a desperate turne:
Yea, curse his better Angell from his side,
And fall to Reprobance.

Oth. Tis pittifull; but yet Iago knowes,
That she with Cassio hath the act of shame
A thousand times committed. Cassio confest it,
And she did gratifie his amorous workes
With that Recognizance and pledge of Love
Which I first gave her: I saw it in his hand:
It was a Handkerchiefe, an Antique Token
My father gave my Mother.

Emil. Oh heaven! oh heavenly Powers!

Iago. Come, hold your peace.

Emil. Twill out, twill out. I peace?
No, I will speake as liberall as the North,
Let heaven, and Men, and diuels, let them all,
All, all, cry shame against me, yet Ile speake.

Iago. Be wife and get you home.

Emil. I will not.

Gra. Fye, your Sword upon a Woman.

Emil. Oh thou dull Moore,
That Handkerchiefe thou speak'st of
I found by Fortune, and did give my husband:
For often, with a solemne earnestnesse,
(More then indeed belong'd to such a Trifle)
He begg'd of me, to steale'r.

Iago. Villanous Whore.

Emil. She give it Cassio? No, alas I found it,
And I did giv't my husband.

Iago. Filth, thou lyest.

Emil. By heaven I doe not, I doe not Gentlemen:
Oh murd'rous Coxcombe, what should such a foole
Doe with so good a wife?

Oth. Are there no stones in heaven;
But what serves for the Thunder?
Precious Villaine.

Gra. The woman falles:
Sure he hath killd his Wife.

Emil. I, I; oh lay me by my Mistris side.

Gra. Hes gone, but his wifes kill'd.

Mon. Tis a notorious Villaine: take you this weapon
Which I have recover'd from the Moore:
Come guard the doore without, let him not passe,
But kill him rather. Ile after that same villaine,
For tis a damned Slave.

Exit.

Oth.

Oth. I am not valiant neither :
But every Puny whipster gets my Sword.
But why should honor out-live honesty ?
Let it goe all.

Emil. What did thy Song boad Lady ?
Hearke, canst thou heare me ? I will play the Swan,
And dye in Musicke : Willough, Willough, Willough.
Moore, she was chaste : She lov'd thee, cruell Moore :
So come my soule to blisse, as I speake true :
So speaking as I thinke, alas, I dye.

Oth. I have another weapon in this Chamber,
It was a Sword of Spaine, the Ice brookes temper :
Oh heere it is : Vnkle I must come forth.

Gra. If thou attempt it, it will cost thee deere ;
Thou hast no weapon, and perforce must suffer.

Oth. Look in upon me then, and speake with me,
Or naked as I am I will assault thee.

Gra. What is the matter ?

Oth. Behold, I have a weapon :
A better never did it selfe sustaine
Vpon a Souldiers Thigh. I have seene the day,
That with this little Arme, and this good Sword,
I have made my way through more impediments
Then twenty times your stop. But (oh vaine boast)
Who can controll his fate ? Tis not so now,
Be not affraid, though you doe see me weapon'd :
Heere is my journies end, heere is my but
And very Sea-marke of my utmost Saile.
Doe you goe backe dismayd ? Tis a lost feare :
Man but a Rush against Othello's brest,
And he retires. Where should Othello goe ?
Now : how dost thou looke now ? oh ill-Starr'd wench,
Pale as thy Smocke : when we shall meete at compt,
This looke of thine will hurle my soule from Heaven,
And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my Girle ?
Even like thy Chastity. O cursed, cursed Slave !
Whip me ye Divels,
From the possession of this heavenly sight :
Blow me about in windes, roast me in Sulphure,
Wash me in steepe-downe gulfes of Liquid fire.
Oh Desdemon ! dead Desdemon : dead. dead. Oh, oh !

Enter Lodovico, Cassio, Montano, and Iago, with Officers.

Lod. Where is this rash, and most unfortunate man ?

Oth. Thats he that was Othello : heere I am.

Lod. Where is that Viper ?

Bring the Villaine forth.

Oth. I looke downe towards his feet ; but thats a fable,
If that thou bceft a divell, I cannot kill thee.

Lod. Wrench his Sword from him.

Iago. I bleed Sir, but not kill'd.

Oth. I am not sorry neither, Ild have thee live :
For in my sense, tis happinesse to dye.

Lod. Oh thou Othello, that was once so good,
Falne in the practise of a cursed Slave,
What shall be said to thee.

Oth. Why any thing :

An honorable Murderer, if you will :
For nought I did in hate, but all in Honor.

Lod. This wretch hath part confest his Villany :
Did you and he consent in Cassio's death.

Oth. I.

Cas. Deere Generall, I never gave you cause.

Oth. I doe beleve it, and I aske your pardon :
Will you, I pray, demand that demy-Divell,

Why he hath thus ensnar'd my soule and body.

Iag. Demand me nothing: what you know, you know:
From this time forth, I never will speake word.

Lod. What ? not to pray ?

Gra. Torments will ope your lips.

Oth. Well, thou dost best.

Lod. Sir,

You shall understand what hath befallne,
(Which, as I thinke, you know not) heere is a Letter
Found in the pocket of the slaine Roderigo,
And heere another, the one of them imports
The death of Cassio, to be undertooke
By Roderigo.

Oth. O Villaine !

Cassi. Most heathenish, and most grosse.

Lod. Now, heeres another discontented paper
Found in his pocket too : and this it seemes
Roderigo meant t'have sent this damned villaine :
But that (belike) Iago in the interim
Came in, and satisfi'd him.

Oth. Oh thou pernicious Caitiffe ;
How came you (Cassio) by that Handkerchiefe
That was my wives ?

Cassi. I found it in my Chamber :
And he himsefse confest it but even now,
That there he dropt it for a speciall purpose,
Which wrought to his desirc.

Oth. O foole, foole, foole !

Cassi. There is besides, in Roderigos Letter,
How he upbraipes Iago, that he made him
Brave me upon the Watch : whereon it came
That I was cast : and even but now he spake
(After long seeming dead) Iago hurt him,
Iago set him on.

Lod. You must forsake this roome, and goe with us :
Your Power, and your command is taken off,
And Cassio rules in Cyprus. For this Slave,
If there be any cunning Cruelty,
That can torment him much, and hold him long,
It shall be his. You shall close Prisoner rest,
Till that the Nature of your fault be knowne
To the Venetian State. Come, bring away.

Oth. Soft you ; a word or two before you goe :
I have done the State some service, and they knowt :
No more of that. I pray you in your Letters,
When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
Speake of me, as I am. Nothing extenuate,
Nor set downe ought in malice.
Then must you speake,
Of one that lov'd not wisely, but too well :
Of one, not easily Iealous, but being wrought,
Perplexed in the extreame : Of one, whose hand
(Like the base Indian) threw a Pearle away
Richer then all his Tribe : Of one, whose subdu'd Eyes,
Albeit unused to the melting moode,
Drop teares as fast as the Arabian Trees
Their Medicinable gumme. Set you downe this :
And say besides, that in Aleppo once,
Where a malignant, and a Turbond-Turke
Beate a Venetian, and traduc'd the State,
I tooke by th'throat the circumcised Dogge,
And smote him, thus.

Lod. Oh bloody period.

Gra. All that is spoke is marr'd.

Oth. I kist thee, ere I kill'd thee : No way but this,
Killing my selfe, to dye upon a kisse.

*Dies.
Cassio.*

Cassi. This did I feare, but thought he had no weapon:
For he was great of heart.

Lod. Oh Spartan Dogge:
More fell then Anguish, Hunger, or the Sea:
Looke on the Tragicke Loading of this bed:
This is thy worke:
The Object poysons sight,

Let it be hid. Gratiano, keepe the house,
And seize upon the Fortunes of the Moore,
For they succede on you. To you, Lord Governor,
Remaines the Censure of this hellish villaine:
The time, the place, the torture, oh inforce it:
My selfe will straight aboard, and to the State,
This heavy Act, with heavy heart relate.

Exeunt.

THE ACTORS NAMES.

FIN IS.

THE TRAGEDY OF Anthony, and Cleopatra.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Demetrius, and Philo.

Philo.

Nay, but this dotage of our Generall
Ore-floues the measure: those his goodly eyes
That o're the files and Musters of the Warre,
Have glow'd like plated Mars:

Now bend, now turne
The Office and Devotion of their view
Vpon a Tawny Front. His Captaines heart,
Which in the scuffles of great fights hath burst
The Buckles on his breast, reneges all temper,
And is become the Bellows and the Fan
To coole a Gypsies Lust.

Enter Anthony, Cleopatra, her Ladies; the Train, with Eunuchs fanning her.

Looke where they come:
Take but good note, and you shall see in him
The triple Pillar of the world transform'd
Into a Strumpets Foole. Behold and see.

Cleo. If it be Love indeed, tell me how much.

Ant. Theres beggery in the love that can be reckon'd

Cleo. Ile set a bourne how farre to be belov'd.

Ant. Then must thou needs find out new heaven, new Earth.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Newes (my good Lord) from Rome.

Ant. Rate me, the summe.

Cleo. Nay heare them Anthony.

Fulvia perchance is angry: Or who knowes,
If the scarfe-bearded Caesar have not sent
His powerfull Mandate to you. Doe this, or this;
Take in that Kingdome, and infranchise that:
Perform't, or else we damne thee,

Ant. How, my Love?

Cleo. Perchance? Nay, and most like;
You must not stay heere longer, your dismission
Is come from Caesar, therefore heare it Anthony.
Wheres Fulvias Procelle? (Caesars I would say) both?
Call in the Messengers: As I am Egypts Queene,
Thou blushest Anthony, and that blood of thine
Is Caesars homager: else so thy cheek payes shame,
When shrill-tongu'd Fulvia scolds. The Messengers.

Ant. Let Rome in Tyber melt, and the wide Arch
Of the raing'd Empire fall: Heere is my space,
Kingdomes are clay: Our dungy earth alike

Feeds Beast as Man; the Noblenesse of life
Is to doe thus: when such a mutuall paire,
And such a twaine can doo't, in which I bind,
On paine of punishment, the world to weete
We stand up Peerelesse.

Cleo. Excellent falsehood:

Why did he marry Fulvia, and not love her?
He seeme the Foole I am not. Anthony will be himselfe,

Ant. But stirr'd by Cleopatra.

Now for the love of love, and her soft houres,
Lets not confound the time with Conference harsh;
Theres not a minute of our lives should stretch
Without some pleasure now. What sport to night?

Cleo. Heare the Ambassadors.

Ant. Eyc wrangling Queene:

Whom every thing becomes, to chide, to laugh,
To weepe: whose every passion fully strives
To make it selfe (in Thee) faire, and admir'd.
No Messenger but thine, and all alone, to night
We'll wander through the streets, and note
The qualities of people. Come my Queene,
Last night you did desire it. Speake not to us.

Exeunt with the Train

Dem. Is Caesar with Anthony priz'd to flight?

Philo. Sir sometimes when he is not Anthony,
He comes too short of that great Property
Which still should goe with Anthony.

Dem. I am full sorry, that he approves the common Liar, who thus speakes of him at Rome: but I will hope of better deeds to morrow. Rest you happy. Exeunt.

Enter Enobarbus, Lamprius, a Soothsayer, Rannius, Lucilius, Charmian, Iras, Mardian the Eunuch, and Alexas.

Char. I. Alexas, sweet Alexas, most any thing Alexas, almost most absolute Alexas, wheres the Soothsayer that you prais'd so to th' Queene? Oh that I knew this Husband, which you say, must change his hornes with Gar-lands.

Alex. Soothsayer.

Sooth. Your will?

Char. Is this the Man? Is't you sir that know things?

Sooth. In Natures infinite booke of Secrecy, a little I can read.

Alex. Shew him your hand.

Enob. Bring in the Banket quickly: Wine enough,
Cleo.

Cleopatra health to drinke.

Char. Good sir, give me good Fortune.

Sooth. I make not, but foresee.

Char. Pray then, foresee me one.

Sooth. You shall be yet farre fairer then you are.

Char. He meanes in flesh.

Ir. No, you shall paint when you are old.

Char. Wrinkles forbid.

Alex. Vex not his prescience, be attentive.

Char. Hush.

Sooth. You shall be more loving, then beloved.

Char. I had rather heate my Liver with drinking.

Alex. Nay, heare him.

Char. Good now some excellent Fortune. Let mee be married to three Kings in a forenoone, and Widdow them all: Let me have a Child at fifty, to whom Herod of Iewry may doe Homage. Finde me to marry me with Octavius Caesar, and companion me with my Mistris.

Sooth. You shall out-live the Lady whom you serve.

Char. Oh excellent, I love long life better then Figs.

Sooth. You have seene and proved a fairer former fortune, then that which is to approach.

Char. Then belike my Children shall have no names: Prethee how many Boyes and Wenches must I have.

Sooth. If every of your wishes had a wombe, and foretell every wish, a Million.

Char. Out Foole, I forgive thee for a Witch.

Alex. You thinke none but your sheets are privy to your wishes.

Char. Nay come, tell Ir. hers.

Alex. We'll know all our Fortunes.

Enob. Mine, and most of our Fortunes to night, shall be drunke to bed.

Ir. Theres a Palme presages Chastity, if nothing else.

Char. E'ne as the ore-flowing Nylus presageth Famine.

Ir. Goe you wild Bedfellow, you cannot Soothsay.

Char. Nay, if an oyle Palme be not a fruitfull Prognostication, I cannot scratch mine care. Prethee tell her but a worky day Fortune.

Sooth. Your Fortunes are alike.

Ir. But how, but how, give me particulars.

Sooth. I have said.

Ir. Am I not an inch of Fortune better than she?

Char. Well, if you were but an inch of Fortune better than I: where would you choose it.

Ir. Not in my husbands Nose.

Char. Our worser thoughts heavens mend.

Alex. Come, his Fortune, his Fortune. Oh let him marry a woman that cannot go, sweet Isis, I beseech thee, and let her dye too, and give him a worse, and let worse follow worse, till the worst of all follow him laughing to his grave, fifty-fold a Cuckold. Good Isis heare me this Prayer, though thou deny me a matter of more waight: good Isis I beseech thee.

Char. Amen, deere Goddesse, heare that prayer of the people. For, as it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man loose-wiv'd, so it is a deadly sorrow, to behold a foule Knave uncuckolded: Therefore deare Isis keepe decorum, and Fortune him accordingly.

Char. Amen.

Alex. Loe now, if it lay in their hands to make me a Cuckold, they would make themselves Whores, but they'd doe't.

Enter Cleopatra.

Eno. Hush, here comes Anthony.

Char. Not he, the Queene.

Cleo. Saw you my Lord?

Enob. No Lady.

Cleo. Was he not here?

Char. No Madame.

Cleo. He was dispos'd to mirth, but on the sodaine A Roman thought hath strooke him.

Enobarbus?

Enob. Madam.

Cle. Seeke him, and bring him hither: where's Alexas?

Alex. Here at your service.

My Lord approaches.

Enter Anthony with a Messenger.

Cleo. We will not looke upon him:

Goe with us.

Exeunt.

Messen. Fulvia thy Wife,

First came into the Field.

Ant. Against my Brother Lucius.

Mess. I, but soone that Warre had end,

And the times state

Made friends of them, joynting their force 'gainst Caesar.

Whose better issue in the warre from Italy,

Vpon the first encounter drave them.

Ant. Well, what worst.

Mess. The nature of bad newes infects the Teller.

Ant. When it concernes the Foole or Coward: On Things that are past, are done, with me. Tis thus, Who tels me true, though in his Tale lye death, I heare him as he flatter'd.

Mess. Labienus (this is stiffe-newes)

Hath with his Parthian Force

Extended Asia: from Euphrates his conquering

Banner shooke, from Syria to Lydia,

And to Ionia, whilst——

Ant. Anthony thou wouldst say.

Mess. Oh my Lord.

Ant. Speake to me home, Mince not the generall tongue, name Cleopatra as she is call'd in Rome:

Raile thou in Fulvia's phrase, and taunt my faults

With such full License, as both Truth and Malice

Have power to utter. Oh then we bring forth weeds,

When our quicke windes lye still, and our illes told us

Is as our earing: fare thee well awhile.

Mess. At your Noble pleasure.

Exit Messenger.

Enter another Messenger.

Ant. From Scicion how the newes? Speake there.

1 Mess. The man from Scicion,

Is there such an one?

2. Mess. He stayes upon your will.

Ant. Let him appeare: These strong Egyptian Fetters I must breake, Or loose my selfe in dotage.

Enter another Messenger with a Letter.

What are you?

3 Mess. Fulvia thy wife is dead.

Ant. Where dyed she.

Mess. In Scicion, her length of sicknesse, With what else more serious,

Importeth thee to know, this beares,

Ant. Forebeare me

Theres a great Spirit gone, thus did I desire it:

What our contempts doe often hurle from us,

We

We wish it ours againe. The present pleasure,
By revolution lowring, does become
The opposite of it selfe: she's good being gon,
The hand could plucke her backe, that shov'd her on.
I must from this Queene breake off,
Ten thousand harmes, more than the illes I know
My idlenesse doth hatch.

Enter Enobarbus.

How now Enobarbus.

Eno. Whats your pleasure, Sir?

Anth. I must with haste from hence,

Eno. Why then we kill all our Women. We see how mortall an unkindnesse is to them, if they suffer our departure death's the word.

Ant. I must be gone.

Eno. Under a compelling an occasion, let women dye.
It were pittie to cast them away for nothing, though be-twene them and a great cause, they should be esteemed nothing. Cleopatra catching but the least noyse of this, dyes instantly: I have scene her, dye twenty times upon farre poorer moment: I do think there is mettle in death, which commits some loving acte upon her, she hath such a celerity in dying,

Ant. She is cunning past mans thought.

Eno. Alacke sir no, her passions are made of nothing but the finest part of pure love. We cannot call her winds and waters, sighes and teares: They are greater stormes and Tempests then Almanackes can report. This cannot be cunning in her; if it be, she makes a showre of Raine
as well as love.

Ant. Would I had never scene her.

Eno. Oh sir, you had then left unteene a wonderfull peece of worke, which not to have beene blest withall, would have discredited your Travaile.

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Sir.

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Fulvia?

Ant. Dead.

Eno. Why sir, give the gods a thankfull Sacrifice:
when it pleaseth their Deities to take the wife of a man from him, it shewes to man the Tailors of the earth: comforting therein, that when old Robes are worne out, there are members to make new. If there were no more Women but Fulvia, then had you indeed a cut, and the case to be lamented: This griefe is crown'd with Censolation, your old Smocke brings fourth a new Petticoate, and indeed the teares live in an Onion; that should water this sorrow.

Ant. The businesse she hath broached in the State,
Cannot endure my absence.

Eno. And the businesse you have broach'd heere cannot be without you, especially that of Cleopatras, which wholly depends on your abode.

Ant. No more like Answers:

Let our Officers

Have notice what we purpose. I shall breake
The cause of our Expedience to the Queene,
And get her love to part. For not alone
The death of Fulvia, with more vrgent touches
Doe strongly speake to us: but the Letters too
Of many our contriving friends in Rome,
Petition us at home. Sextus Pompeius
Hath given the dare to Cesar, and commands
The Empire of the Sea. Our slippery people,
Whose Love is never link'd to the deserver,

Till his deserts are past, begin to throw
Pompey the great, and all his Dignities
Vpon his Sonne, who high in Name and Power,
Higher then both in blood and life, stands up
For the maine Souldier. Whose quality going on,
The sides oth' world may danger. Much is breeding,
Which like the Courfers heire, hath yet but life,
And not a Serpents poyson. Say our pleasure,
To such whose place is under us, requires
Our quicke remove from hence.

Eno. I shall doot.

Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Alexas, and Iras.

Cleo. Where is he?

Char. I did not see him since.

Cleo. See where he is,
Who's with him, what he does:
I did not send you. If you finde him sad,
Say I am dauncing: if in Myrth, report
That I am sodaine sicke. Quickly, and returne.

Char. Madam, me thinks if you did love him deere-ly You doe not hold the method, to enforce
The like from him.

Cleo. What should I doe I doe not?

Ch. In each thing give him way, crosse him in nothing.

Cleo. Thou teachest like a foole: the way to lose him.

Char. Tempt him not so too farre. I wish forbear,
In time we hate that which we often feare.

Enter Anthony.

But heere comes Anthony.

Cleo. I am sicke, and sullen.

Ant. I am sorry to give breathing to my purpose.

Cleo. Helpe me away deere Charmian, I shall fall,
It cannot be thus long, the sides of Nature
Will not sustaine it.

Ant. Now my deereft Queene.

Cleo. Pray you stand farther from me,

Ant. Whats the matter?

Cleo. I know by that same eye theres some good newes
What sayes the married woman you may goe?
Would she had never given you leave to come,
Let her not say tis I that keepe you heere,
I have no power upon you: Hers you are.

Ant. The gods best know.

Cleo. Oh never was there Queene
So mightily betrayed: yet at the first
I saw the Treasons planted.

Ant. Cleopatra.

Cleo. Why should I thinke you can be mine, and true
(Though you swearing shake the Throaned gods)
Who have beene false to Fulvia?

Riotous madnesse,
To be entangled with those mouth-made vowes,
Which breake themselves in swearing.

Ant. Most sweet Queene.

Cleo. Nay pray you seeke no colour for your going,
But bid farewell, and goe:
When you sued staying,
Then was the time for words: No going then,
Eternity was in our Lippes, and Eyes.
Blisse in our browes bent: none our parts so poore,
But was a race of heaven. They are so still,
Or thou the greatest Souldier of the world,
Art turn'd the greater Lyar.

Ant. How now Lady?

Cleo.

Cleo. I would I had thy inches, thou should'st know
There were a heart in Egypt.

Ant. Heare me Queene:
The strong necessity of Time, commands
Our Services a while: but my full heart
Remaines in use with you. Our Italy,
Shines o're with civill Swords; Sextus Pompeius
Makes his approches to the Port of Rome,
Equality of two Domestike powers,
Breed scrupulous faction: The hated growne to strength
Are newly growne to Love: The condemn'd Pompey,
Rich in his Fathers honour, creeps apace
Into the hearts of such, as have not thrived
Vpon the present state, whose numbers threaten,
And quietnesse growne sicke of rest, would purge
By any desperate change: My more particular,
And that which most with you should safe my going,
Is Fulvia's death.

Cle. Though age from folly could not give me freedom
It does from childishnesse. Can Fulvia dye?

Ant. Shee's dead my Queene,
Looke here, and at thy Sovereign leysure reade
The Garboyles she awak'd: at the last, best,
See when, and where she dyed.

Cleo. O most false love!
Where be the sacred Viols thou shoul'dst fill
With sorrowfull water? Now I see, I see,
In Fulvia's death, how mine receiv'd shall be.

Ant. Quarrell no more, but be prepar'd to know
The purposes I beare: which are, or cease,
As you shall give th'advice. By the fire
That quickens Nylus slime, I goe from hence
Thy Souldier, Servant, making Peace or Warre,
As thou affectst.

Cleo. Cut my Lace, Charmian come,
But let it be, I am quickly ill, and well,
So Anthony loves.

Ant. My precious Queene forbear,
And give true evidence to his Love, which stands
An honourable Trial.

Cleo. So Fulvia told me.
I prythee turne aside, and weepe for her,
Then bid adiew to me, and say the teares
Belong to Egypt. Good now, play one Scene
Of excellent dissembling, and let it looke
Like perfect honour.

Ant. You'l hear my blood no more?

Cleo. You can doe better yet: but this is meetly.

Ant. Now by my Sword.

Cleo. And Target. Still he mends.
But this is not the best. Looke prythee Charmian,
How this Herculean Roman does become
The carriage of his chafe.

Ant. Ile leave you Lady.

Cleo. Courteous Lord, one word:
Sir, you and I must part, but that's not it:
Sir, you and I have lov'd, but there's not it:
That you know well, something it is I would:
Oh, my oblivion is a very Anthony.
And I am all forgotten.

Ant. But that your Royalty
Holds Idlenesse your subject, I should take you
For Idlenesse it selfe.

Cleo. 'Tis sweating labour,
To beare such Idlenesse so neare the heart
As Cleopatra this. But Sir, forgive me,

Since my becommings kill me, when they do not Eye well to you. Your Honor calls you hence.
Therefore be deafe to my unpittied Folly,
And all the Gods go with you. Vpon your Sword
Sit Law rell'd victory, and smooth successe
Be strew'd before your feete.

Ant. Let us go.

Come: Our separation so abides and flies,
That thou residing heere, goest yet with me,
And I hence fleeing, heere remaine with thee.
Away.

Exeunt.

Enter Octavius reading a Letter, Lepidus, and their Traine.

Cas. You may see Lepidus, and henceforth know,
It is not Casars Naturall vice, to hate
One great Competitor. From Alexandria
This is the newes: he fishes, drinckes, and wastes
The Lampes of night in revells: Is not more manlike
Then Cleopatra: nor the Queene of Ptolomy
More Womanly then he. Hardly gave audience
Or did vouchsafe to thinke he had Partners. You Shall finde there a man, who is th'abstract of all faults;
That all men follow.

Lep. I must not thinke
There are, evils enow to darken all his goodnesse,
His faults in him, seeme as the Spots of heaven,
More fiery by nights Blacknesse; Hereditary.
Rather then purchasse: what he cannot change,
Then what he chooses.

Cas. You are too indulgent. Lets graunt it is Amisse to tumble on the bed of Ptolomy,
To give a Kingdome for a Mirth, to sit
And keepe the turne of Tipling with a Slave,
To reele the streets at noone, and stand the Buffet
With knaves that smell of sweate: Say this becomes him
(As his compofure must be rare indeed, Whom these things cannot blemish) yet must Anthony
No way excuse his foyles, when we doe beare
So great waight in his Lightnesse. If he filld
His vacancy with his Voluptuousnesse,
Full surfets, and the drinckes of his bones,
Call on him for't. But to confound such time,
That drummes him from his sport, and speakes as lowd
As his owne State, and ours, tis to be chid:
As we rate Boyes, who being mature in knowledge,
Pawne their experience to their present pleasure,
And so rebell to judgement.

Enter a Messenger.

Lep. Heeres more newes.

Mes. Thy biddings have beene done, and every houre
Most Noble Casar, shalt thou have report
How tis abroad. Pompey is strong at Sea,
And it appeares, he is belov'd of those
That only have feard Casar: to the Ports
The discontents repaire, and mens reports
Give him much wrong'd.

Cas. I should have knowne no lesse,
It hath bin taught us from the primall state,
That he which is, was wisht, untill he were:
And the ebb'd man,
Ne're lov'd, till ne're worth love,
Comes fear'd, by being lack'd. This common body
Like to a Vagabond Flagge upon the Streame,
Goes too, and backe, lacking the varrying tyde

To

To rot it selfe with motion.

Mef. Caesar I bring thee word,
Menacrates and Menas famous Pyrates
Makes the Sea serve them, which they care and wound
With keeles of every kind. Many hot inrodes
They make in Italy, the borders Maritime
Lacke blood to thinke on't, and flesh youth revolt,
No Vessell can peepe forth, but tis as soone
Taken as seene: for Pompeyes name strikes more
Then could his Warre resisted.

Caesar. Anthony,
Leave thy lascivious Vassailes. When thou once
Wert beaten from Medena, where thou slewest
Hirfius, and Pansa Consuls, at thy heele
Did famine follow, whom thou foughtst against,
(Though daintily brought up) with patience more
Then Savages could suffer. Thou didst drinke
The stale of horses, and the gilded Puddle
Which Beasts would cough at. Thy pallat then did daine
The roughest Berry, on the rudest Hedge.
Yea, like the Stagge, when Snow the Pasture sheets,
The barks of Trees thou browsedst. On the Alpes,
It is reported thou didst eate strange flesh,
Which some did dye to looke on: And all this
(It wounds thine honor that I speake it now)
Was borne folike a Souldiour, that thy cheek
So much as lank'd not.

Lep. Tis pittie of him.

Cas. Let his shames quickly
Drive him to Rome, tis time wetwaine
Did shew our selves ith' Field, and to that end Assemble we immediate counsell, Pompey
Thrives in our Idlenesse.

Lep. To morrow Caesar,
I shall be furnisht to informe you rightly
Both what by Sea and Land I can be able
To front this present time. (well.)

Cas. Till which encounter, it is my businesse too. Fare-

Lep. Farewell my Lord, what you shall know meane
Offittres abroad, I shall beseech you Sir (time)
To let me be partaker.

Cas. Doubt not sir, I knew it for my bond. Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Mardian.

Cleo. Charmian.

Char. Madam.

Cleo. Ha, ha, give me to drinke Mandragoras.

Char. Why Madam?

Cleo. That I might sleepe out this great gap of time:
My Anthony is away.

Char. You thinke of him too much.

Cleo. O tis Treason.

Char. Madam, I trust not so.

Cleo. Thou, Eunuch Mardian?

Mar. Whats your highnesse pleasure?

Cleo. Not now to heare thee sing. I take no pleasure
In ought an Eunuch has: Tis well for thee,
That being unfeminari'd, thy freer thoughts
May not flye forth of Egypt, Hast thou Affections?

Mar. Yes gracious Madam.

Cleo. Indeed?

Mar. Not indeed Madam, for I can doe nothing
But what indeed is honest to be done:
Yet have I fierce Affections, and thinke
What Venus did with Mars.

Cleo. Oh Charmian;

Where thinkst thou he is now? Stands he, or sits he?

Or does he walke? Or is he on his Horse?

Oh happy horse to beare the weight of Anthony!
Doe bravely horse, for wot'st thou whom thou moov'st,
The demy Atlas of this Earth, the Arme
And Burgonet of man. Hes speaking now,
Or murmuring, wheres my Serpent of old Nyle,
(For so he calls me:) Now I feed my selfe
With most delicious poyson. Thinke on me
That am with Phebus amorous pinches blacke,
And wrinkled deepe in time. Broad-fronted Caesar,
When thou wast heere above the ground, I was
A morsell for a Monarke; and great Pompey
Would stand and make his eyes grow in my brow,
There would he anchor his Aspect, and dye
With looking on his life.

Enter Alexas from Caesar.

Alex. Sovereigne of Egypt, haile.

Cleo. How much unlike art thou Marke Anthony?
Yet comming from him, that great Med'cine hath
With his Tinct gilded thee.

How goes it with my brave Marke Anthony?

Alex. Last thing he did (deere Queene)
He kist the last of many doubled kisses,
This Orient Pearle. His speech stickes in my heart:

Cleo. Mine eare must plucke it thence.

Alex. Good friend, quoth he:
Say the firme Roman to great Egypt sends
This treasure of an Oyster: at whole foote
To mend the petty present, I will peece
Her opulent Throne, with Kingdomes. All the East, (Say thou) shall call her Mistris. So he nodded,
And soberly did mount an Arme-gaunt Steed,
Who neigh'd so hye, that what I would have spoke,
Was beattly dumbe by him.

Cleo. What was he sad, or merry?

Alex. Like to the time oth' yeare, betweene the extremes
Of hot and cold, he was nor sad nor merry.

Cleo. Oh well divided disposition: Note him:
Note him good Charmian, tis the man; but note him.
He was not sad, for he would shine on those
That make their looks by his. He was not merry,
Which seem'd to tell them, his remembrance lay
In Egypt with his joy, but betweene both.
Oh heavenly mingle! Bee'st thou sad, or merry,
The violence of either thee becomes,
So do's it no man else. Metst thou my Posts?

Alex. I Madam, twenty severall Messengers.
Why doe you send so thicke?

Cleo. Who's borne that day, when I forget to send to Anthony, shall dye a Begger. Inke and paper Charmi- an. Welcome my good Alexas. Did I Charmian, ever love Caesar so?

Char. Oh that brave Caesar.

Cleo. Be choak'd with such another Emphasis,
Say the brave Anthony.

Char. The valiant Caesar.

Cleo. By Isis, I will give thee bloody teeth,
If thou with Caesar Paragon againe
My man of men.

Char. By your most gracious pardon,
I sing but after you.

Cleo. My Salad dayes,
When I was greene in judgement, cold in blood,
To say, as I said then. But come, away,
Get me Inke and Paper,

He

he shall have every day severall greeting, or Ile unpeo-ple Egypt.

Exeunt.

Enter Pompey, Menecrates, and Menas in warlike manner.

Pom. If the great gods be just, they shall assist
The deeds of justest men.

Mene. Know worthy Pompey, that which they do delay, they not deny.

Pom. Whiles we are sutors to their Throne, decays
the thing we sue for.

Mene. We ignorant of our selves.
Begge often our owne harmes, which the wise Powers
Deny us for our good: so finde we profit
By loosing of our Prayers.

Pom. I shall do well:
The People love me, and the Sea is mine;
My powers are Cressent, and my Auguring hope
Says it will come to'th' full. Marke Anthony
In Egypt sits at dinner, and will make
No warres without doores. Caesar gets money where He looses hearts: Lepidus flatters both,
Of both is flatter'd: but he neither loves,
Nor either cares for him.

Mene. Caesar and Lepidus are in the field,
A mighty strength they carry.

Pom. Where have you this? Tis false.

Mene. From Silvius Sir.

Pom. He dreames: I know they are in Rome together
Looking for Anthony: but all the charmes of Love,
Salt Cleopatra soften thy wand lip,
Let witchcraft joyne with beauty, Lust with both,
Tye up the Libertine in a field of Feasts,
Keepe his Braine fuming. Epicurean Cookes,
Sharpen with cloylesse lawce his Appetite,
That sleepe and feeding may prorogue his Honour,
Even till a Lethied dulnesse—

Enter Varrus.

How now Varrus?

Var. This is most certaine, that I shall deliver:

Marke Anthony is every houre in Rome
Expected. Since he went from Egypt, 'tis
A space for farther travaile,

Pom. I could have given lesse matter
A better eare. Menas, I did not thinke
This amorous Surfetter would have donn'd his Helme
For such a petty Warre: His Souldiership
Is twice the other twaine: But let us reare
The higher our Opinion, that our stirring
Can from the lap of Egypts Widdow, plucke
The neere Lust-wearied Anthony.

Mene. I cannot hope,
Caesar and Anthony shall well greet together;
His Wife that's dead, did trespasses to Caesar,
His Brother warr'd upon him, although I thinke
Not mov'd by Anthony.

Pom. I know not Menas,
How lesser Enmities may give way to greater,
Were't not that we stand up against them all:
'Twer pregnant they should square betweene themselves,
For they have entertained cause enough
To draw their swords: but how the feare of us
May Ciment their divisions, and binde up
The petty difference, we yet not know:
Bee't as our Gods will have't; it onely stands
Our lives upon, to use our strongest hands,
Come Menas.

Exeunt.

Enter Enobarbus and Lepidus.

Lep. Good Enobarbus, 'tis a worthy deed,
And shall become you well, to intreat your Captaine
To soft and gentle speech.

Enob. I shall intreat him
To answer like himselfe: if Caesar move him,
Let Anthony looke over Caesars head,
And speake as lowd as Mars. By Iupiter,
Were I the wearer of Anthony's Beard,
I would not shave't to day.

Lep. Tis not a time for private stomacking.
Eno. Every time serves for the matter that is then borne in't.

Lep. But small to greater matters must give way.

Enop. Not if the small come first:

Lep. Your speech is passion: but pray you stirre
No Embers up. Heere comes the Noble Anthony.

Enter Anthony and Ventidius.

Eno. And yonder Caesar.

Enter Caesar, Mecenas, and Agrippa.

Ant. If we compose well-heere, to Parthia: Hearke Ventidius.

Caesar. I do not know Mecenas, aske Agrippa.

Lep. Noble Friends
That which combin'd us was most great, and let not
A leaner action rend us. What's amisse,
May it be gently heard. When we debate
Our triviall difference lowd, we do commit
Murther in healing wounds. Then Noble Partners,
The rather for I earnestly beseech,
Touch you the sowrest points with sweetest tearmes,
Nor curstnesse grow to'th' matter.

Ant. Tis spoken well:
Were we before our Armes and to fight,
I should do thus.

Flourish.

Ces. Welcome to Rome.

Ant. Thanke you.

Ces. Sit.

Ant. Sit fir.

Ces. Nay then.

Ant. I learne you take things ill, which are nor for Or being, concerne you not.

Ces. I must be laught at, if or for nothing, or a little,
Should say my selfe offended, and with you Chiefely i'th' world. More laught at, that I should Once name you derogately: when to found your name
It not concern'd me.

Ant. My being in Egypt Caesar, what was't to you?

Ces. No more then my residing heere at Rome
Might be to you in Egypt: yet if you there
Did practise on my state, your being in Egypt
Might be my question.

Ant. How intend you, practise'd?

Ces. You may be pleas'd to catch at mine intent,
By what did heere befall me. Your Wife and Brother
Made warres upon me, and their contestation
Was Theame for you, you were the word of warre.

Ant. You do mistake your businesse, my brother never Did urge me in his Act: I did inquire it,
And have my learning from some true reports
That drew their swords with you, did he not rather Discredit my authority with yours,
And make the warres alike against my stomacke,
Having alike your cause: Of this, my Letters
Before did satisfie you. If you patch a quarrell:
As matter whole you have to take it with,

It must not be with this.

Cas. You praise your selfe, by laying defects of judgement to me : but you patcht up your excuses.

Anth. Not so, not so :

I know you could not lacke, I am certaine on't.

Very necessity of this thought, that I

Your partner in the cause 'gainst which he fought,
Could not with gracefull eyes attend those Warres
Which fronted mine owne peace. As for my wife,
I would you had her Spirit, in such another,
The third oth' world is yours, which with a Snaffle,
You may pace easie, but not such a wife.

Enobar. Would we had all such wives, that the men might go to Warres with the women.

Anth. So much uncurbable, her Garboiles (Cesar)
Made out of her impatience : which not wanted
Shrodenesse of policie to : I greeving grant,
Did you too much disquiet, for that you must,
But say I could not helpe it.

Cesar. I wrote to you, when rioting in Alexandria you Did pocket up my Letters : and with taunts
Did gibe my Missive out of audience.

Ant. Sir, he fell upon me, ere admitted, then :
Three Kings I had newly feasted, and did want
Of what I was i'th' morning : but next day
I told him of my selfe, which was as much
As to have askt him pardon. Let this Fellow
Be nothing of our strife : if we contend
Out of our question wipe him.

Cesar. You have broken the Article of your oath, which you shall never have tongue to charge me with.

Lep. Soft Cesar.

Ant. No Lepidus, let him speake,
The Honour is Sacred which he talkes on now,
Supposing that I lackt it : but on Cesar,
The Article of my oath.

Cesar. To lend me Armes, and aide when I requir'd them, the which you both denied.

Anth. Neglected rather.

And then when poysoned houres had bound me up
From mine owne knowledge, as neerly as I may,
He play the penitent to you. But mine honesty,
Shall not make poore my greatnesse, nor my power
Worke without it. Truth is, that Fulvia,
To have me out of Egypt, made Warres heere,
For which my selfe, the ignorant motive, doe
So farre aske pardon, as befits mine Honour
To stoope in such a case.

Lep. Tis Nobly spoken.

Meco. If it might please you, to enforce no further
The griefes betweene ye : to forget them quite.
Were to remember, that the present neede,
Speakes to attone you.

Lep. Worthy spoken Micenas.

Enobar. Or if you borrow one anothers Love for the instant, you may when you heare no more words of Pompey returne it againe : you shall have time to wrangle in, when you have nothing else to doe.

Anth. Thou art a Souldier, onely speake no more.

Enob. That truth should be silent, I had almost forgot.

Anth. You wrong this presence, therefore speake no
more.

Enob. Go to then : your Considerate stone.

Cesar. I doe not much dislike the matter but
The manner of his speech : for't cannot be,

We shall remaine in friendship, our conditions
So differing in their acts. Yet if I knew,
What Hoope should hold us staunch from edge to edge
Ath' world : I would pursue it.

Agri. Give me leave Cesar.

Cas. Speake Agrippa.

Agri. Thou hast a Sister by thy Mothers side, 'admir'd
Octavia ? Great Marke Anthony is now a widdower.

Cas. Say not, say Agrippa ; if Cleopatra heard you, your prooffe were well deserved of rashnesse.

Anth. I am not marryed Cesar : let me heere Agrippa further speake.

Agri. To hold you in perpetuallamitie,
To make you Brothers, and to knit your hearts
With an un-slipping knot, take Anthony,
Octavia to his wife : whose beauty claimes
No worse a husband then the best of men :
Whose vertue, and whose generall graces, speake
That which none else can utter. By this marriage,
All little Ielousies which now seeme great,
And all great feares, which now import their dangers,
Would then be nothing. Truth's would be tales,
Where now halfe tales be truth's : her love to both,
Would each to other, and all loves to both,
Draw after her. Pardon what I have spoke,
For 'tis a studied, not a present thought,
By duty ruminated.

Anth. Will Cesar speake ?

Cesar. Not till he heares how Anthony is toucht,
With what is spoke already.

Anth. What power is in Agrippa,
If I would say Agrippa, be it so,
To make this good ?

Cesar. The power of Cesar,
And his power unto Octavia.

Anth. Mao I never
(To this good purpose, that so fairely shewes)
Dreame of impediment : let me have thy hand
Further this act of Grace : and from this houre,
The heart of Brothers governe in our Loves,
And sway our great Designes.

Cas. There's my hand :
A Sister I bequeath you, whome no Brother
Did ever love so deerely. Let her live
To joyne our kingdomes, and our hearts, and never Flie off our Loves againe.

Lepi. Happily, Amen.

Ant. I did not thinke to draw my Sword against Pompey
For he hath laid strange courtesies, and great
Of late upon me. I must thanke him onely,
Lest my remembrance, suffer ill report :
At heele of that desie him.

Lepi. Time cal's upon's,
Of us must Pompey presently be fought,
Or else he seekes out us.

Anth. Where lies he ?

Cas. About the Mount-Mesena.

Anth. What is his strength by land ?

Cas. Great, and encreasing :
But by Sea he is an absolute Master.

Anth. So is the Fame,
Would we had spoke together. Hast we for it,
Yet ere we put our selves in Armes, dispatch we
The businesse we have talkt of.

Cas. With most gladnesse,
And do invite you to my Sisters view,

Whither straight Ile lead you.

Anth. Let us Lepidus not lacke your company.

Lep. Nobld Anthony, not fickenesse should detaine me.

Exeunt omnes.

Manent Enobarbus, Agrippa, Meccenas.

Mec. Welcome from Egypt Sir.

Eno. Halfe the heart of Cesar, worthy Meccenas. My honourable Friend Agrippa.

Agri. Good Enobarbus.

Mec. We have cause to be glad, that matters are so well digested: you stayd well by't in Egypt.

Enob. I Sir, we did sleepe day out of countenance: and made the night light with drinking.

Mec. Eight Wilde-Boars rosted whole at a breakfast: and but twelve persons there. Is this true?

Enob. This was but as a Flye by an Eagle: we had much more monstrous matter of Feast, which worthily deserved noting.

Meccenas. She's a most triumphant Lady, if report be square to her.

Enob. When she first met Marke Anthony, she purst up his heart upon the river of Cydus.

Agri. There she appear'd indeed: or my reporter devis'd well for her.

Eno. I will tell you,
The Barge she sat in, like a burnisht Throne
Burnt on the water: the Poop was beaten Gold,
Purple the Sailes: and so perfumed that
The Windes were Love-sicke.
With them the Oares were Silver,
Which to the tune of Flutes kept stroke and made
The water which they beate, to follow faster:
As amorous of their strokes. For her owne person,
It beggerd all description, she did lye
In her Pavillion, cloth of Gold, of Tissue,
O're-picturing that Venus, where we see
The fancie out-worke Nature. On each side her,
Stood pretty Dimpled Boyes, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd Fannes whose winde did seeme,
To glove the delicate cheekes which they did coole,
And what they undid did.

Agrip. Oh rare for Anthony.

Eno. Her Gentlewomen, like the Nereides,
So many Mer-maides tended her i'th' eyes,
And made their bends adornings. At the Helme.
A seeming Mer-maide steeres: The Silken Tackles
Swell with the touches of those Flower-soft hands,
That yarely frame the office. From the Barge
A strange invisible perfume hits the sense
Of the adiacent Wharfes. The Cittie cast
Her people out upon her: and Anthony
Enthron'd i'th' Market-place, did sit alone,
Whissing to 'th' ayre: which but for vacancie,
Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too,
And made a gap in Nature.

Agrip. Rare Egyptian.

Eno. Vpon her landing, Anthony sent to her,
Invited her to Supper: she replied,
It should be better, he became her guest:
Which she entreated, our Courtous Anthony,
Whom nere the word of no woman heard speake,
Being barber'd ten times o're, goes to the Feast;
And for his ordinary, paises his heart,
For what his eyes eat onely.

Agri. Royall Wench:

She made great Cesar lay his Sword to bed,
He ploughed her, and she cropt.

Eno. I saw her once

Hop forty Paces through the publicke streete,
And having lost her breath, she spoke, and panted,
That she did make defect, perfection,
And brearhlesse power breath forth.

Mec. Now Anthony, must leave her utterly.

Eno. Never he will not:

Age cannot wither her, nor custome stale
Her infinite variety: other women cloy
The appetites they feede, but she makes hungry,
Where most she satisfies. For vildest things
Become themselves in her, that the holy Priests
Blesse her, when she is Riggish.

Mec. If Beauty, Wiledome, Modesty, can settle
The heart of Anthony: Octavia is
A blessed Lottery to him.

Agrip. Let us go. Good Enobarbus, make your selfe my guest, whilst you abide heere.

Eno. Humbly Sir I thanke you.

Exeunt.

Enter Anthony, Cesar, Octavia betweene them.

Anth. The world, and my great office, will Sometimes divide me from your bosome.

Octa. All which time, before the Gods my knee shall bowe my prayers to them for you.

Anth. Goodnight Sir. My Octavia
Read not my blemishes in the worlds report:
I have not kept my square, but that to come
Shall all be done by th' Rule: good night deere Lady:

Octa. Good night Sir.

Cesar. Goodnight.

Exit.

Enter Soothsayer.

Anth. Now firrah: you do wish your selfe in Egypt?

Sooth. Would I had never come from thence, nor you thither.

Aut. If you can, your reason?

Sooth. I see it in my motion: have it not in my tongue,
But yet hie you to Egypt againe.

Antho. Say to me, whose Fortunes shall rise higher,
Cesars or mine?

Soot. Cesars, Therefore (oh Anthony) stay not by his side
Thy Dæmon (that's thy spirit which keepes thee) is Noble, Couragious, high unmatchable,
Where Cesars is not. But neere him thy Angell Becomes a feare: as being o're-powr'd, and therefore Make space enough betwene you.

Anth. Speake this no more.

Sooth. To none but thee no more, but when to thee,
If thou dost play with him at any game,
Thou art sure to loose: And of that Naturall lucke.
He beates thee 'gainst the oddes. Thy Luster thickens,
When he shines by: I say againe, thy spirit
Is all affraid to governe thee neere him:
But he alway is Noble.

Anth. Get thee gone:

Say to Ventidius I would speake with him.
He shall to Parthia, be it art or hap,
He hath spoken true. The very Dice obey him,
And in our sports my better cunning faints,
Vnder his chance, if we draw lots, he speeds,
His Cocks do winne the Battaille, still of mine,
When it is all to naught: and his Quails ever
Beate mine (in hoopt) at odd's. I will to Egypt:

Exit.

And though I make this marriage for my peace,
I'th' East my pleasure lies. Oh come Ventidius.

Enter Ventidius.

You must to Parthia, your commissions ready :
Follow me and receive't.

Exeunt.

Enter Lepidus, Mecenas and Agrippa.

Lepidus. Trouble your selfe no farther: pray you hasten your generals after.

Agg. Sir, Marke Anthony will e'ne but kisse Octavia, and wee'll follow.

Lepi. Till I shall see you in your Souldiers dresse,
Which will become you both: Farewell,

Meca. We shall, as I conceive the journey, be at the Mount before you Lepidus.

Lepi. Your way is shorter, my purposes do draw me much about, you'll win two dayes upon me.

Both. Sir, good successe.

Lepi. Farewell.

Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras and Alexas.

Cleo. Give me some Musicke: Musicke, moody foode of us that trade in love.

Omnes. The Musicke, ho.

Enter Mardian the Eunuch.

Cleo. Let it alone, let's to Billiards: come Charmian.

Char. My arme is sore, best play with Mardian.

Cleopa. As well a woman with an Eunuch plaide, as with a woman. Come you'll play with me Sir?

Mardi. As well as I can Madam.

Cleo. And when good will is shewed,
Though't come too short

The Actor may pleade pardon. He none now,
Give me mine Angle, wee'll to'th' River, there
My Musicke playing farre off. I will betray
Tawny fine fishes, my bended hooke shall pierce
Their slimie jawes: and as I draw them up,
He thinke them every one an Anthony,
And say, ah ha; y'are caught.

Char. Twas merry when you wager'd on your Angling, when your diver did hang a salt fish on his hooke which he with fervencie drew up,

Cleo. That time? Oh times:

I laught him out of patience: and that night
I laught him into patience, and next morne,
Ere the ninth houre, I dranke him to his bed:
Then put my Tires and Mantels on him, whilst
I wore his Sword Philippan. Oh from Italie,

Enter a Messenger.

Ramme thou thy fruitfull tidings in mine eares,
That long time have bin barren.

Mes. Madam, Madam.

Cleo. Anthony's dead,

If thou say so Villaine, thou kil'st thy Mistris:
But well and free, if thou so yeild him.

There is Gold and heere
My blewest vaines to kisse: a hand that Kings
Have lipt, and trembled kissing.

Mes. First Madam, he is well.

Cleo. Why there's more Gold.

But sirrah marke, we use
To say, the dead are well: bring me to that,
The Gold I give thee, will I melt and powre
Downe thy ill uttering throate.

Mes. Good Madam heare me,

Cleo. Well, go to I will:

But there's no goodnesse in thy face, if Anthony
Be free and healthfull; so tart a favour
To trumpet such good tidings. If not well,
Thou shouldst come like a Furie crown'd with Snakes,
Not like a formall man.

Mes. Wilt please you heare me?

Cleo. I have a mind to strike thee ere thou speake'st,
Yet if thou say Anthony lives, 'tis well,
Or friends with Cesar, or not Captaine to him,
He set thee in a shower of Gold, and haile
Rich Pearles upon thee.

Mes. Madam, he's well.

Cleo. Well sayd;

Mes. And Friends with Cesar.

Cleo. Th'art an honest man.

Mes. Cesar, and he, are greater Friends then ever.

Cleo. Marke thee a Fortune from me.

Mes. But yet Madam.

Cleo. I do not like but yet, it does alay
The good precedence, he upon but yet,
But yet is as a taylor to bring forth
Some monstrous Malefactor. Pry thee Friend,
Powre out the packe of matter to mine eare,
The good and bad together: he's friends with Cesar,
In state of health thou saist, and thou saiest, free.

Mes. Free Madam? no: I made no such report,
He's bound unto Octavia.

Cleo. For what good turne?

Mes. For the best turne i'th' bed.

Cleo. I am pale Charmian.

Mes. Madam, he's married to Octavia.

Cleo. The most infectious Pestilence upon thee.

Strikes him downe.

Mes. Good Madam patience.

Cleo. What say you?

Strikes him.

Hence horrible Villaine, or He spurne thine eyes
Like balls before me: He unhaire thy head:

She hales him up and downe.

Thou shalt be whipt with Wyer, and stew'd in brine,
Smarting in lingring pickle.

Mes. Gracious Madam,

I that do bring the newes, made not the match.

Cleo. Say 'tis not so, a Province I will give thee,
And make thy Fortunes proud: the blow thou had'st
Shall make thy peace, for moving me to rage,
And I will boot thee with what guift beside Thy modesty can begge.

Mes. He's married Madam.

Cleo. Rogue, thou hast liv'd too long. Draw a knife.

Mes. Nay then He runne:

What meane you Madam, I have made no fault. Exit.

Char. Good Madam keepe your selfe within your selfe,
The man is innocent.

Cleo. Some Innocents scape not the thunderbolt:
Melt Egypt into Nyle; and kindled creatures
Turne all to Serpents. Call the slave againe,
Though I am mad, I will not byte him: Call?

Char. He is afraid to come.

Cleo. I will not hurt him,
These hands do lacke Nobility, that they strike
A meaner then my selfe: since I my selfe
Have given my selfe the cause. Come hither Sir.

Enter the Messenger againe.

Though it be honest, it is never good
To bring bad newes: give to a gracious Message

An host of tongues, but let it tydings tell
Themselves when they be felt.

Mes. I have done my duty.

Cleo. Is he married?

I cannot hate thee worser then I do,
If thou againe say yes.

Mes. He's married Madam.

Cleo. The gods confound thee,
Dost thou hold there still?

Mes. Should I lye Madam?

Cleo. Oh, I would thou didst:

So halfe my Egypt were submerg'd and made
A Cesterne for scald Snakes. Go get thee hence,
Had'st thou Narcissus in thy face, to me
Thou wouldst appeare most ugly: He is married?

Mes. I crave your highnesse pardon.

Cleo. He is married?

Mes. Take no offence, that I would not offend you;
To punish me for what you make me doe,
Seemes much unequall: he's married to Octavia.

Cleo. Oh that his fault should make a knave of thee,
That art not what thou art sure of. Get thee hence,
The Merchandize which thou hast brought from Rome
Are all to deere for me:

Lye they upon thy hand, and be undone by em.

Char. Good your highnesse patience.

Cleo. In praying Anthony, I have disprais'd Cesar.

Char. Many times Madam.

Cleo. I am paid for't now: lead me from hence,
I faint, oh Iras, Charmian: tis no matter.
Go to the fellow, good Alexas bid him
Report the feature of Octavia: her yeares,
Her inclination, let him not leave out
The colour of her haire. Bring me word quickly.
Let him for ever goe, let him not Charmian,
Though he be painted one way like a Gorgon,
The other wayes a Mars. Bid you Alexas
Bring me word, how tall she is: pittie me Charmian,
But do not speake to me. Lead me to my Chamber.

Exeunt.

Enter Pompey, at one doore with Drum and Trumpet: at another Cesar, Lepidus. Anthony, Enobarbus, Mecenas, Agrippa, Menas with Souldiers Marching.

Pom. Your Hostages I have, so have you mine:
And we shall talke before we fight.

Cesar. Most meete that first we come to words,
And therefore have we
Our written purposes before us sent,
Which if thou hast considered, let us know,
If't will tye up thy discontented Sword
And carry backe to Sicily much tall youth,
That else much perish heere.

Pom. To you all three,
The Senators alone of this great world,
Chiefe Factors for the Gods. I do not know,
Wherefore my Father should revengers want,
Having a Sonne and Friends, since Julius Cesar,
Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,
There saw you labouring for him. What was't
That mov'd pale Cassius to conspire? And what Mad the all-honor'd, honest Romane Brutus,
With the arm'd rest, Courtiers of beautilous freedome,
To drench the Capitoll, but that they would
Have one man but a man, and that is it
Hath made me rigge my Navie. At whose burthen,
The anger'd Ocean fomes, with which I meant

To scourge th'ingratitude, that despightfull Rome
Cast on my Noble Father.

Cesar. Take your time.

Ant. Thou caust not feare us Pompey with thy sailes,
Weele speake with thee at Sea. At land thou know'st
How much we do o're-count thee.

Pom. At Land indeed

Thou dost orecount me of my fathers house.
But since the Cookoo buides not for himselfe,
Remaine in't as thou maist,

Lepi. Be pleas'd to tell us;

(For this is from the present now you talke)

The offers we have sent you,

Cesar. There's the point.

Ant. Which do not be entreated to,
But waigh what it is worth embrac'd.

Cesar. And what may follow to try a larger Fortune.

Pom. You have made me offer

Of Sicily, Sardinia: and I must Rid all the Sea of Pirates. Then, to send Measures of Wheate to Rome: this greed upon,
To part with unhackt edges, and beare backe
Our Targes undinted.

Omnes. That's our offer.

Pom. Know then I came before you heere,
A man prepar'd

To take this offer. But Mark Anthony,
Put me to some impatience: though I loole
The praise of it by telling. You must know
When Cesar and your Brother were at blowes,
Your Mother came to Sicily, and did finde
Her welcome friendly.

Ant. I have heard it Pompey,
And am well studied for a liberall thankses,
Which I do owe you.

Pom. Let me have your hand:

I did not thinke Sir, to have met you heere,

Ant. The beds i'th' East are soft, and thankses to you,
That call'd me timelier then my purpose hither:
For I have gained by't.

Cesar. Since I saw you last, ther's a change upon you.

Pom. Well, I know not,

What counts harsh Fortune cast's upon my face,
But in my bosome shall she never come,
To make my heart a vassalle.

Lep. Well met heere.

Pom. I hope so Lepidus, thus we are agreed:
I crave our composition may be written
And seal'd betweene us,

Cesar. That's the next to doe.

Pom. Weele feast each other, ere we part, and lett's
Draw lots who shall begin.

Anth. That will I Pompey.

Pompey. No Anthony take the lot: but first or last, your fine Egyptian cookerie shall have the fame. I have heard that Julius Cesar, grew fat with feasting there.

Anth. You have heard much.

Pom. I have faire meaning Sir.

Ant. And faire words to them.

Pom. Then so much have I heard.

And I have heard Apollodorus carried——

Eno. No more that: he did so.

Pom. What I pray you?

Eno. A certaine Queene to Cesar in a Materice.

Pom. I know thee now, how far'st thou Souldier?

Eno. Well, and well am like to doe, for I perceive

Four Feasts are toward.

Pom. Let me shake thy hand,
I never hated thee: I have seene thee fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour.

Enob. Sir, I never lov'd you much, but I ha' prais'd ye,
When you have well deserv'd ten times as much,
As I have said you did.

Pom. Injoy thy plainnesse,
It nothing ill becomes thee:
Aboord my Gally, I invite you all.
Will you leade Lords?

All. Shew's the way, sir.

Pom. Come. Exeunt. Manent Enob & Menas

Menas. Thy Father Pompey would ne're have made this Treaty. You, and I have knowne sir.

Enob. At Sea, I thinke.

Menas. We have Sir.

Enob. You have done well by water.

Menas. And you by Land.

Enob. I will praise any man that will praise me, though it cannot be denied what I have done by Land.

Menas. Nor what I have done by water.

Enob. Yes some-thing you can deny for your owne safety: you have bin a good Theefe by Sea.

Menas. And you by Land.

Enob. There I deny my Land service: but give me your hand Menas, if our eyes had authority, here they might take two Theeves kissing

Menas. All mens faces are true, whatsoere their hands are.

Enob. But there is never a faire Woman, ha's a true
Face

Menas. No slander, they steale hearts.

Enob. We came hither to fight with you.

Menas. For my part, I am sorry it is turn'd to a Drinking. Pompey doth this day laugh away his Fortune.

Enob. If he doe, sure he cannot weep't backe againe.

Menas. Y'have said Sir, we look'd not for Marke Anthony heere, pray you, is he married to Cleopatra?

Enob. Casars Sister is call'd Octavia.

Menas. True Sir, she was the wife of Caius Marcellus.

Enob. But she is now the wife of Marcus Antonius

Menas. Pray y'e Sir.

Enob. Tis true.

Menas. Then is Cesar and he, for ever knit together

Enob. If I were bound to Divine of this unity, I wold not Prophesie so.

Menas. I thinke the policy of that purpose, made more in the Marriage then the Love of the parties.

Enob. I thinke so too. But you shall finde the band that seemes to tyeth their friendship together, will bee the very stranger of their Amity: Octavia is of a hoie, cold, and still conversation.

Menas. Who would have his wife so?

Enob. Nor hee that himselfe is not so: which is Marke Anthony:
he will to his Egyptian dish againe: then shall the sighes of Octavia blow the fire up in Cesar, and (as I said before) that which is the strength of their Amity, shall prove the immediate Author of their variance. Anthony will use his affection where it is. Hee married but his occasion heere.

Menas. And thus it may be. Come Sir, will you aboard?
I have a health for you.

Enob. I shall take it sir: we have us'd our Throats in Egypt.

Menas. Come, let's a way.

Exeunt.

Musicke playes.

Enter two or three Servants with a Banquet.

1 Heere they'l be man: some o' their Plants are ill rooted already, the least wind i'th' world will blow them downe.

2 Lepidus is high colourd.

1 They have made him drinke Almes drinke.

2 As they pinch one another by the disposition he cries out no more; reconciles them to his entreatie, and himselfe to'th' drinke.

1 But it raises the greater warre betweene him and his discretion.

2 Why this it is to have a name in great mens Fellowship: I had as live have a Reede that will doe me no service, as a Partizan I could not heave.

1 To be call'd into a huge Sphere, and not to bee seene to move i't, are the holes where eyes should bee, which pittiflly disfigure the cheekes.

A Sennet sounded.

Enter Cesar, Anthony, Pompey, Lepidus, Agrippa, Mecenas, Enobarbus, Menas, with other Capitaines.

Ant. Thus do they Sir: they take the flow o'th' Nile
By certaine scale, i'th' Pyramid: they know
By'th' height, the lownesse, or the meane: If dearth
Or Foizon follow. The higher Nilus swells,
The more it promises as it ebbs, the Seed'man
Vpon the slime and Ooze scatters his graine,
And shortly comes to Harvest.

Lep. Y'have strange Serpents there;

Anth. I Lepidus.

Lep. Your Serpent of Egypt, is bred now of your mud by the operation of the Sun: so is your Crocodile.

Ant. They are so.

Pom. Sir, and some Wine: A health to Lepidus.

Lep. I am not so well as I should be:
But he ne're out.

Enob. Not till you have slept: I feare me you'l bee i'till
then.

Lep. Nay certainly, I have heard the Ptolomies Pyramids are very goodly things: without contradiction have heard that.

Menas. Pompey, a word.

Pomp. Say in mine eare, what is't.

Menas. Forfake thy feare I do beseech thee Capitaine,
And heare me speake a word.

Pom. Forbear me till anon. Whispers in's Eare.
This Wine for Lepidus.

Lep. What manner o'thing is your Crocodile?

Ant. It is shap'd fir like it selfe, and it is as broad as it hath bredth; It is just so high as it is, and mooves with it owne organs. It lives by that which nourisheth it, and the Elements once out of it, it Transmigrates.

Lep. What colour is it of?

Ant. Of it owne colour too.

Lep. Tis a strange Serpent.

Ant. Tis so, and the teares of it are wet.

Cas. Will this description satisfie him?

Ant. With the Health that Pompey gives him, else hee is a very Epicure.

Pomp. Go hang sir, hang: tell me of that? Away:
Do as I bid you. Where's the Cup I call'd for?

Menas. If for the sake of Merit thou wilt heare me, Rise

Rise from thy stoole.

Pom. I thinke th'art mad : the matter ?

Men. I have ever held my cap off to thy Fortunes.

Pom. Thou hast serv'd me with much faith : what's else to say ? Be jolly Lords.

Anth. These Quicke-sands Lepidus, Keepe off them, for you sinke.

Men. Wilt thou be Lord of all the world ?

Pom. What saist thou ?

Men. Wilt thou be Lord of the whole world ?
That's twice.

Pom. How should that be ?

Men. But entertaine it, and though thou thinke mee poore, I am the man will give thee all the world.

Pom. Hast thou drunke well.

Men. No Pompey, I have kept me from the cup,
Thou art if thou dar'st be, the earthly Iove :
What ere the Ocean pales, or skie inclippes,
Is thine, if thou wilt ha't.

Pom. Shew me which way ?

Men. These three world-sharers, these Competitors
Are in thy vessell. Let me cut the Cable.
And when we are put off, fall to their throates :
All there is thine.

Pom. Ah, this thou shouldst have done,
And not have spoke on't. In me tis villanie,
In thee, 't had bin good service : thou must know,
Tis not my profit that does lead mine Honour :
Mine Honour is, Repent that ere thy tongue,
Hath so betraide thine act. Being done unknowne,
I should have found it afterwards well done.
But must condemne it now : desist, and drinke.

Men. For this Ile never follow
Thy paul'd Fortunes more,
Who seekes and will not take, when once tis offer'd,
Shall never finde it more.

Pom. This heaith to Lepidus.

Ant. Beare him a shore,
Ile pledge it for him Pompey,

Eno. Heere's to thee Menas.

Men. Enobarbus, welcome.

Pom. Fill till the cup be hid.

Eno. There's a strang Fellow Menas.

Men. Why ?

Eno. A beares the third part of the world man : seest
not ?

Men. The third part, then he is drunk : would it were all, that it might go on wheelles.

Eno. Drinke thou : increase the Reeles.

Men. Come.

Pom. This is not yet an Alexandrian Feast.

Ant. It ripens towards it : strike the Vesselles hoar.
Heere's to Cesar.

Cesar. I could well forbear't, its monstrous labour when I wash my braine, and it growes fouler.

Ant. Be a Child o' th' time.

Cesar. Possesse it, Ile make answer : but I had rather fast from all, foure dayes, then drinke so much in one.

Enob. Ha my brave Emperor, shall we daunce now the Egyptian Bachanals, and celebrate our drinke ?

Pom. Lets ha't good Souldier.

Ant. Come, let's all take hands,
Till that the conquering Wine hath steep't our sense,
In soft and delicate Lethe.

Eno. All take hands :

Make battery to our eares with the loud Musicke,

The while, Ile place you ; then the Boy shall sing.
The holding every man shall beate as loud.
As his strong sides can volly.

Musicke Playes. Enobarbus places them hand in hand.
The Song.

Come thou Monarch of the Vine,
Plumpie Bacchus with pinke eyne :
In thy Fattes our Cares be drown'd.
With thy Grapes our haire be crown'd.
Cup us till the world go round,
Cup us till the world go round.

Ces. What would you more ?

Pompey goodnight. Good Brother
Let me request you of our graver businesse
Frowne at this levitie. Gentle Lords let's part,
You see we have burnt our cheek. Strong Enobarbo
Is weaker then the Wine, and mine owne tongue
Spleets what it speakes : the wilde disguise hath almost Antickt us all. What needs more words ? goodnight.
Good Anthony your hand.

Pom. Ile try you on the shore.

Anth. And shall Sir, gives your hand.

Pom. Oh Anthony, you have my Fathers house.
But what, we are Friends ?
Come downe into the Boate.

Eno. Take heed you fall not Menas ; Ile not on shore,
No to my Cabin : these Drummes,
These Trumpets, Flutes : what
Let Neptune heare, we bid aloud farewell
To these great Fellowes, Sound and be hang'd, sound out.
Sound a Flourish with Drummes.

Enob. Hoo saies a there's my Cap.

Men. Hoa, Noble Captaine, come.

Exeunt.

Enter Ventidius as it were in a triumph, the dead body of Pacorus borne before him.

Ven. Now darting Parthia art thou stroke and now
Pleas'd Fortune does of Marcus Crassus death
Make me revenger. Beare the Kings Sonnes body,
Before our Army, thy Pacorus Orades,
Payes this for Marcus Crassus.

Romane. Noble Ventidius,
Whiln yet with Parthian blood thy Sword is warme,
The Fugitive Parthians follow. Spurne through Media,
Mesopotamia, and the shelters, whither
The routed flie. So thy grand Captaine Anthony Shall set thee on triumphant Chariots, and Put Garlands on thy head.

Ven. Oh Silius, Silius,
I have done enough. A lower palce, note well
May make too great an act. For learne this Silius,
Better to leave undone, then by our deed
Acquire too high a Fame, when him we serue saway.
Cesar and Anthony, have ever wonne
More in their officer, then person, Sossius
One of my place in Syria, his Lieutenant,
For quicke accumulation of renowe,
Which he archiv'd by th' minute, lost his favour.
Who does i'th' Warres more then his Captaine can,
Becomes his Captaines Captaine : and Ambition
(The Souldiers vertue) rather makes choise of losse
Then gaine, which darkens him.
I could doe more to doe Antonius good,
But 'twould offend him. And in his offence,

Should

Should my performance perish.

Rom. Thou hast Ventidius that, without the which a Souldier and his Sword grants scarce distinction: thou wilt write to Anthony.

Ven. Ile humbly signifie what in his name, That magicall word of Warre wee have effected, How with his Banners, and his well paid rankes, The nere-yet beaten Horse of Parthia, We have jaded out o'th' Field.

Rom. Where is he now?

Ven. He purposeth to Athens, whither with what hast The waight we must convey with's, will permit: We shall appeare before him. On there, passe along.

Exeunt.

Enter Agrippa at one doore, Enobarbus at another.

Agri. What are the Brothers parted?

Eno. They have dispatht with Pompey, he is gone, The other three are Sealing. Octavia weepes To part from Rome: Caesar is sad, and Lepidus Since Pompey's feast, as Menas sayes, is troubled With the Greene-Sicknesse.

Agri. Tis a Noble Lepidus.

Eno. A very fine one: oh, how he loves Caesar.

Agri. Nay but how deere he adores Mark Anthony.

Eno. Caesar? why he's the Iupiter of men.

Ant. What's Anthony, the God of Iupiter?

Eno. Spake you of Caesar? Oh! the non-pareill?

Agri. Oh Anthony, oh thou Arabian Bird!

Eno. Would you praise Caesar, say Caesar, go no further

Agri. Indeed he plied them both with excellent praises.

Eno. But he loves Caesar best, yet he loves Anthony:

Hoo, Hearts, Tongues, Figure, Scribes, Bards, Poets, cannot Thinke, speake, cast, write, sing, number: hoo. His love to Anthony. But as for Caesar, Kneele downe, kneele downe, and wonder.

Agrip. Both he loves.

Eno. They are his Shards, and he their Beetle, so: This is to horse: Adieu, Noble Agrippa.

Agri. Good Fortune worthy Souldier, and farewell.

Enter Caesar, Anthony, Lepidus, and Octavi.

Antho. No farther Sir.

Caesar. You take from me a great part of my selfe: Vie me well in't. Sister, prove such a wife As my thoughts make thee, and as my farthest Band Shall passe on thy approofe: most Noble Anthony, Let not the peece of Vertue which is set Betwixt us, as the Cymment of our love To keepe it builded, be the Ramme to batter The Fortune of it: for better might we Have lov'd without this meane, if on both parts This be not cherisht.

Ant. Make me not offended, in your distrust.

Caesar. I have said.

Ant. You shall not finde,

Though you be therein curious, the least cause For what you seeme to feare, so the gods keepe you, And make the hearts of Romanes serve your ends: We will heere part.

Caesar. Farewell my deereft Sister, fare thee well, The Elements be kind to thee, and make Thy spirits all of comfort: fare thee well.

Octa. My Noble Brother.

Anth. The Aprill's in her eyes, it is Loves spring, And these the showers to bring it on: be cheerfull.

Octa. Sir, looke well to my Husbands house: and—
Caesar. What Octavia.

Octa. Ile tell you in your eare.

Ant. Her tongue will not obey her heart, nor can Her heart informe her tongue.

The Swannes downe feather That stands upon the Swell at full of Tide: And neither way inclines.

Eno. Will Caesar weepe?

Agri. He ha's a cloud in's face.

Eno. He were the worfe for that were he a Horse, sois he being a man.

Agri. Why Enobarbus:

When Anthony found Julius Caesar dead, He cryed almost to roaring: And he wept, When at Philippi he found Brutus slaine.

Eno. That year indeed, he was troubled with a rheume, What willingly he did confound, he wail'd, Beleeve't till I weepe too.

Caesar. No sweet Octavia, You shall heare from me still: the time shall not Out-go my thinking on you.

Ant. Come Sir, come,

Ile wrastle with you in my strength of love: Looke heere I have you: thus I let you go, And give you to the gods.

Caes. Adieu, be happy.

Lep. Let all the number of the Starres give light To thy faire way.

Caesar. Farewell, farewell.

Kisses Octavia.

Ant. Farewell.

Trumpets sound.

Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleo. Where is the Fellow?

Alex. Halfe afeard to come.

Cleo. Go to, go to: Come hither Sir.

Enter the Messenger as before.

Alex. Good Majestie, Herod of Iury dare not looke upon you, but when you are well pleas'd.

Cleo. That Heroas head, Ile have: but how? When Anthony is gone, through whom I might command it: Come thou neere.

Mes. Most gracious Majesty.

Cleo. Did't thou behold Octavia?

Mes. I, dread Queene.

Cleo. Where?

Mes. Madam in Rome, I lookt her in the face: and saw her led betweene her Brother, and Marke Anthony.

Cleo. Is she as tall as me?

Mes. She is not Madam.

Cleo. Didst heere her speake?

Is she shrill tongu'd or low?

Mes. Madam, I heard her speake, she is low voic'd.

Cleo. That's not so good: he cannot like her long:

Char. Like her? Oh Isis: tis impossible.

Cleo. I thinke so Charmian: dull of tongue, & dwarfish What Majesty is in her gate, remember If ere thou look'st on Majesty.

Mes. She creepes; her motion, & her station are as one: She shewes a body, rather then a life, A Statue, then a Breather.

Cleo. Is this certaine?

Mes. Or I have no observance.

Cha. Three in Egypt cannot make better note,

Cleo. He's very knowing, I do perceiv't, There's nothing in her yet.

The Fellow ha's good judgement.

Char. Excellent.

Cleo. Guesse at her yeares, I prythee.

Mes. Madam, she was a widdow.

Cleo. Widdow? Charmian, hearke.

Mes. And I do thinke she's thirtie.

Cle. Bear'st thou her face in mind? is't long or round?

Mes. Round, even to faultinesse,

Cle. For the most part too, they are foolish that are so. Her haire what colour?

Mes. Browne Madam: and her forehead As low as she would wish it,

Cleo. There's Gold for thee, Thou must not take my former sharpenesse ill, I will employ thee backe againe: I finde thee Most fit for businesse. Go, make thee ready, Our Letters are prepar'd.

Char. A proper man.

Cleo. Indeed he is so: I repent me much That so I harried him. Why me think's by him, This Creature's no such thing.

Char. Nothing Madam.

Cle. The man hath seene some Majesty, and should know.

Char. Hath he seene Majestie? Isis else defend: and serving you so long.

Cleo I have one thing more to aske him yet good Charmian: but tis no matter, thou shalt bring him to me where I will write; all may be well enough.

Char. I warrant you Madam.

Exeunt.

Enter Anthony and Octavia.

Ant. Nay, nay Octavia, not onely that, That were excusable, that and thousands more Of semblable import, but he hath wag'd New Warres 'gainst Pompey, Made his will, and read it, To publike eare, spoke scantily of me, When perforce he could not But pay me tearmes of Honour: cold and sickly He vented then most narrow measure: lent me, When the best hint was given him: he had look't, Or did it from his teeth.

Octavi. Oh my good Lord, Beleeve not all, or if you must beleeve, Stomacke not all. A more unhappy Lady, If this division chance, ne're stood betweene Praying for both parts: The good Gods will mocke me presently, When I shall pray: oh blesse my Lord and husband, Vndo that prayer: by crying out as loud, Oh blesse my Brother. Husband winne, winne Brother, Prayes, and distroyes the prayer, no midway Twixt these extreames at all.

Ant. Gentle Octavia, Let your best love draw to that point which seekes Best to preserve it: if I loose mine Honour, I loose my selfe: better I were not yours Then yours so branchlesse. But as you requested, Your selfe shall go between's, the meane time Lady, Ile raise the preparation of a Warre Shall staine your Brother, make your soonest hast So your desires are yours.

Octa. Thanks to my Lord, The Iove of Power make me most weake, most weake, Your reconciler: Warres twixt you twaine would be, As if the world should cleave, and that slaine men Should soader up the Rift.

Anth. When it appeares to you where this begins, Turne your displeasure that way, for our faults Can never be so equall, that your love Can equally moove with them. Provide your going, Choose your owne companie, and command what cost Your heart has mind to.

Exeunt.

Enter Enobarbus, and Eros.

Eno. How now friend Eros?

Eros. There's strange Newes come Sir.

Eno. What man?

Eros. Cesar & Lepidus have made Warre upon Pompey.

Eno. This is old, what is the successe?

Eros. Cesar having made use of him in the warres gainst Pompey: presently denied him rivalitie, would not let him partake in the glory of action, and not resting here, accuses him of Letters he had formerly wrote to Pompey. Vpon his owne appeale seizes him, so the poore third is up, till death enlarge his Confiner.

Eno. Then would thou hadst a paire of Chaps no more, and throw betweene them all the food thou hast, they'le grinde the other. Where's Anthony?

Eros. He's walking in the garden thus, and spurnes The rush that lies before him. Cries Foole Lepidus, And threatens the throate of that his Officer, That mured Pompey.

Eno. Our great Navies rig'd.

Eros. For Italy and Cesar, more Domitius, My Lord desires you presently: my Newes I might have told hereafter.

Eno. T will be naught, but let it be: bring me to Anthony.

Eros. Come Sir.

Exeunt.

Enter Agrippa, Mecenas, and Cesar.

Ces. Contemning Rome he ha's done all this, & more In Alexandria: heeres the manner of it: Ith Market-place on a Tribunall silverd Cleopatra and himsele in Chaires of Gold Were publikely enthron'd: at the feet sat Cesarion whom they call my father Sonne, And all the unlawfull issue, that their lust Since then hath made betweene them. Vnto her, He gave the stablishment of Egypt, made her Of lower Syria, Cyprus, Lydia, absolute Queene.

Mec. This is the publike eye?

Cesar. Ith common shew place where they exercise, His Sonnes hither proclaimed the King of Kings, Great Media, Parthia, and Armenia He gave to Alexander. To Ptolomy he assign'd, Syria, Silicia, and Phoenicia: she In th'abiliments of the Goddesse Isis That day appeard, and oft before gave audience, As tis reported, so.

Mec. Let Rome be thus inform'd.

Agri. Who queazie with his insolence already, Will their good thoughts call from him.

Cesar. The people knowes it, And have now receiv'd his accusations.

Agri. Whom does he accuse?

Cesar. Cesar, and that having in Sicily Sextus Pompeius spoild, we had not rated him His part o'th Isle. Then does he say, he lent me Some shipping unrestord. Lastly he frets That Lepidus of the Triumvirate, should be depos'd, And being that, we detaine all his Revenue.

Agri. Sir, this should be answerd.

Cesar. Tis done already, and his Messenger gone: I have told him Lepidus was growne too cruell,

That

That his high Authority abus'd,
And did deserve his chance for what I have conquer'd,
I grant him part : but then in his Armenia,
And other of his conquer'd Kingdomes, I demand the like

Mec. Hee'l never yeeld to that.

Ces. Nor must not then be yeelded to in this.

Enter Octavia with her Train.

Ota. Haile Cesar, and my L. haile most deere Cesar.

Cesar. That ever I should call thee Cast-away.

Ota. You have not call'd me so, nor have you cause.

Ces. Why hast thou stolne upon me thus? you came not Like Cesar's Sister, The wife of Anthony;

Should have an Army for an Vsher, and
The neighes of horse to tell of her approach,
Long ere she did appeare, The trees by'th' way
Should have borne men, and expectation fainted
Longing for what it had not. Nay, the dust
Should have ascended to the Roofe of Heaven,
Rais'd by your populous Troopes : But you are come
A Market-maid to Rome, and have prevented
The ostentation of our love ; which left unshewne,
Is often left unlov'd : we should have met you
By Sea, and Land, supplying every Stage
With an augmented greeting.

Ota. Good my Lord,
To come thus was I not constrain'd, but did it
On my free-will. My Lord Marke Anthony,
Hearing that you prepar'd for Warre, acquainted
My greiving care withall : whereon I begg'd
His pardon for returne.

Ces. Which soone he granted,
Being an abstract'tweene his Lust, and him,

Ota. Do not say so, my Lord.

Ces. I have eyes upon him.
And his affaires come to me on the wind : where is he now?

Ota. My Lord, in Athens.

Ces. No my most wronged Sister, Cleopatra
Hath nodded him to her. He hath given his Empire
Up to a Whore, who now are levying
The Kings o'th' earth for Warre. He hath assembled,
Bochus the King of Lybia, Archelaus
Of Cappadocia, Philadelphos King
Of Paphlagonia : the Thracian King Adullas,
King Manchus of Arabia, King of Pont,
Hierod of Iewry, Mitridates King
Of Comageat, Polemen and Aminas.
The King of Mede, and Lycaonia,
With a more larger List of Scepters.

Ota. Aye me most wretched,
That have my heart parted betwixt two Friends,
That doe afflict each other. (breaking forth)

Ces. Welcom hither, your letters did with-holde our Till we perceiv'd both how you were wrong led,
And we in negligent danger : cheere your heart.
Be you not troubled with the time which drives
O're your content, these strong necessities,
But let determin'd things to destinie
Hold unbewail'd their way. Welcome to Rome:
Nothing more deere to me. You are abus'd
Beyond the marke of thought : and the high Gods
To doe you Iustice, make his Ministers
Of us, and those that love you. Best of comfort,
And ever welcome to us. Agrip. Welcome Lady.

Mec. Welcome deere Madam,
Each heart in Rome does love and pittie you,
Onely th' adulterous Anthony, most large

In his abominations, turnes you off,
And gives his potent Regiment to a Trull
That noyses it against us.

Ota. Is it so sir?

Ces. Most certaine : Sister welcome; pray you
Be ever knowne to patience. My deer'st Sister. Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, and Enobarbus.

Cleo. I will be even with thee : doubt it not.

Eno. But why, why, why?

Cleo. Thou hast forespoke my being in these warres,
And say'st it is not fit.

Eno. Well : is it, is it?

Cleo. If not, denounc'd against us, why should not we be there in person.

Eno. Well, I could reply : if wee should serve with Horse and Mares together, the Horse were meere ly lost :
the Mares would beare a Soldiour and his Horse.

Cleo. What is't you say?

Eno. Your present needs must puzzle Anthony,
Take from his heart, take from his Braine, from's time,
What should not then be spar'd. He is already Traduc'd for Levity, and 'tis said in Rome,
That Phoebus an Eunuch, and your Maides
Mannage this warre.

Cleo. Sinke Rome, and their tongues rot
That speake against us. A Charge we beare i'th' Warre,
And as the president of my Kingdome will Appeare there for a man. Speake not against it,
I will not stay behinde.

Enter Anthony and Camidius.

Eno. Nay I have done, here comes the Emperor.

Ant. Is it not strange Camidius,
That from Tarentum, and Brundisium,
He could so quickly cut the Ionian Sea,
And take in Tornyne. You have heard on't (Sweet?)

Cleo. Celerity is never more admir'd
Then by the negligent.

Ant. A good rebuke,
Which might have well becom'd the best of men
To taunt at slacknesse. Camidius, we,
Will fight with him by Sea

Cleo. By Sea, what else?

Cam. Why will my Lord do so?

Ant. For that he dares us to't

Eno. So hath my Lord, dar'd him to single fight,

Cam. I, and to wage this Battell at Pharsalia,
Where Cesar fought with Pompey. But these offers
Which serve not for his vantage, he shakes off,
And so should you.

Eno. Your Shippes are not well mann'd,
Your Marriners are Muliters, Reapers, people
Ingross'd by swift Impresse. In Cesar's Fleete,
Are those, that often have 'gainst Pompey fought,
Their shippes are yare, yours heavy : no disgrace
Shall fall you for refusing him at Sea,
Being prepar'd for Land.

Ant. By Sea, by Sea.

Eno. Most worthy Sir, you therein throw away
The absolute Soldier ship you have by Land
Distract your Armie, which doth most consist
Of Warre-markt-footemen, leave unexecuted
Your owne renowned knowledge, quite forgoe
The way which promises assurance, and Give up your selfe meere ly to chance and hazard,
From firme Security.

Ant. Ile fight at Sea.

Cleo.

Cleo. I have sixty Sailes, Cesar none better.

Ant. Our over-plus of shipping will we burne;
And with the rest full mann'd, from th' heart of Actium
Beate th' approaching Cesar. But if we faile,
We then can doo't at Land. Enter a Messenger.
Thy businesse?

Mes. The newes is true; my Lord, he is discried,
Cesar ha's taken Toryne.

Ant. Can he be there in person? 'Tis impossible
Strange, that his power should be so, Camidius,
Our nineteenes Legions thou shalt hold by Land,
And our twelve thousand Horse. Wee'l to our Ship,
Away my Thetis.

Enter a Souldiour.

How now worthy Souldier?

Soul. Oh Noble Emperor, do not fight by Sea,
Trust not to rotten planks: Do you misdoubt
This Sword, and these my Wounds; let th' Egyptians
And the Phœnicians go a ducking: we Have us'd to conquer standing on the earth,
And fighting foot to foot.

Ant. Well, well, away. Exeunt Ant. Cleo. & Enob.

Soul. By Hercules I thinke I am i'th' light.

Cam. Souldier thou art: but the whole action growes
Not in the power on't: so our Leaders leade
And we are Womens men.

Soul. You keepe by Land the Legions and the Horse whole, do you not?

*Ven. Marcus Octavius, Marcus Iustus,
Publicola, and Celius,* are for Sea:
But we keepe whole by Land. This speede of Cesars
Carries beyond beleefe.

Soul. While he was yet in Rome
His power went out in such distractions,
As beguilde all Spies.

Cam. Who's his Lieutenant, heare you?

Soul. They say, one Towrus.

Cam. Well, I know the man.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. The Emperor calls Camidius.

Cam. With Newes the time's with Labour,
And throwes forth each minute, some. Exeunt.

Enter Cesar with his Army, marching.

Ces. Towrus?

Tow. My Lord.

Ces. Strike not by Land.
Keepe whole, provoke not Battaille
Till we have done at Sea. Do not exceede
The Prescript of this Scroule: Our fortune lyes Vpon this iumpe. Exit.

Enter Anthony, and Enobarbus.

Ant. Set we our Squadrons on yond side o'th' Hill,
In eye of Cesars battaille, from which place
We may the number of the Ships behold,
And so proceed accordingly. Exit.

Camidius Marching with his Land Army one way over the stage, and Towrus the Lieutenant of Cesar other way:

After their going in, is heard the noise of a Sea fight.

Alarum. Enter Enobarbus and Scarnus.

Eno. Naught, naught, all naught, I can behold no longer:
Thamoniad, the Egyptian Admirall,
With all their sixty flye, and turne the Rudder:

To see't, mine eyes are blasted.

Enter Scarnus.

Scar. Gods, & Goddeses, all the whole synod of them!

Eno. What's thy passion.

Scar. The greater Cattle of the world is lost
With very ignorance. we have kist away
Kingdomes, and Provinces.

Eno. How appears the fight?

Scar. On our side like the Token'd Pestilence,
Where death is sure. You ribaudred Nagge of Egypt,
(Whom Leprosie o're) i'th' midst o'th' fight,
When vantage like a paire of Twinnes appear'd
Both of the same, or rather ours the elder;
(The Breeze upon her) like a Cow in June,
Hoists Sailes, and flyes.

Eno. That I beheld:

Mine eyes did sicken at the sight, and could not Indure a further view.

Scar. She once being looft,
The Noble ruine of her Magicke, Anthony,
Claps on his Sea-wing, and (like a doting Mallard)
Leaving the Fight in heighth, flyes after her:
I never saw an action of such shame;
Experience, Man-hood, Honor ne're before,
Did violate so it selfe.

Enob. Alacke, alacke,

Enter Camidius.

Cam. Our Fortune on the Sea is out of breath,
And sinkes most lamentably. Had our Generall
Bin what he knew himselfe, it had gone well:
Oh hee ha's given example for our flight,
Most grossely by his owne.

Enob. I, are you thereabouts? Why then goodnight in-deede.

Cam. Toward Peloponnesus are they fled.

Scar. Tis easie too,

And there I will attend what further comes.

Camid. To Cesar will I render My Legions and my horse, fixe Kings already Shew me the way of yeelding.

Eno. Ile yet follow

The wounded chance of Anthony, though my reason
Sits in the winde against me.

Enter Anthony with Attendants.

Ant. Hearke, the Land bids me tread no more upon't,
It is asham'd to beare me. Friends, come hither,
I am so lated in the world, that I
Have lost my way for ever. I have a shippe,
Laden with Gold, take that, divide it: flye,
And make your peace with Cesar.

Omnes. Fly? Not we.

Ant. I have fled my selfe, and have instructed cowards
To runne, and shew their shoulders. Friends be gone,
I have my selfe, resolv'd upon a course,
Which has no neede of you. Be gone,
My Treasure's in the Harbour. Take it: Oh,
I follow'd that I blush to looke upon,
My very haire do mutiny: for the white
Reprove the browne for rashnesse, and they them
For feare, and doting. Friends be gone, you shall Have Letters from me to some Friends, that will Sweepe your way for you. Pray you looke not sad.
Nor make replies of loathnesse, take the hint
Which my dispaire proclaimes. Let them be left
Which leaves it selfe, to Sea-side straight way:
I will possesse you of that ship and Treasure.

Leave

Leave me, I pray a little : pray you now,
Nay do to: for indeede I have lost command,
Therefore I pray you, Ile see you by and by. Sits downe.

Enter Cleopatra led by Charmian and Eros.

Eros. Nay gentle Madam, to him, comfort him.

Iras. Do most deere Queene.

Char. Doe, why, what else ?

Cleo. Let me sit downe : Oh Inno.

Ant. No, no, no, no, no.

Eros. See you heere, Sir ?

Ant. Oh fie, fie, fie.

Char. Madam.

Iras. Madam, oh good Empreffe.

Eros. Sir, sir.

Ant. Yes my Lord, yes; he at Philippi kept
His sword e'ne like a dancer, while I strooke
The leane and wrinkled Cassius, and 'twas I
That the mad Brutus ended : he alone
Dealt on Lieutenantry, and no practise had
In the brave squares of Warre : yet now ; no matter,

Cleo. Ah stand by.

Eros. The Queene my Lord, the Queene.

Iras. Go to him, Madam, speake to him,
Hee is unqualited with very shame.

Cleo. Well then, sustaine me : Oh.

Eros. Most Noble Sir arise, the Queene approaches,
Her head's declin'd, and death will seize her, but
Your comfort makes the rescue.

Ant. I have offended Reputation ;
A most unnable swerving.

Eros. Sir, the Queene.

Ant. Oh whither hast thou led me Egypt, see
How I convey my shame, out of thine eyes,
By looking backe what I have left behinde
Stroy'd in dishonor.

Cleo. Oh my Lord, my Lord;
Forgive my fearfull sayles, I little thought
You would have followed.

Ant. Egypt, thou knew'st too well,
My heart was to thy Rudder tyed by 'th' strings,
And thou should'st stowe me after, O're my spirit
The full supremacie thou knew'st, and that Thy becke, might from the bidding of the Gods Command me.

Cleo. Oh my pardon.

Ant. Now I must

To the young man send humble Treaties, dodge
And palter in the shifts of lownes, who
With halfe the bulke o'th' world plaid as I pleas'd, Making, and marring Fortunes. You did know
How much you were my Conqueror, and that My sword, made weake by my affection, would Obey it on all cause.

Cleo. Pardon, pardon.

Ant. Fall not a teare I say, one of them rates
All that is wonne and lost : Give me a kisse,
Even this repayes.

We sent our Schoole master, is a come backe ?
Love I am full of Lead : some Wine

Within there, and our Viands : Fortune knowes,
We scorne her most, when most she offers blows. Exeunt

Enter Caesar, Agrippa, and Dollabella, with others.

Ces. Let him appeare that's com for Anthony.
Kuow you him.

Dolla. Caesar, tis his Schoolemaster,
An argument that he is pluckt, when hither
He sends so poore a Pinnion of his Wing,
Which had superfluous Kings for Messengers,
Not many Moones gone by.

Enter Ambassador from Anthony.

Caesar. Approach, and speake,

Amb. Such as I am I come from Anthony :
I was of late as petty to his ends,
As is the Morne-dew on the Mertle leafe
To his grand Sea.

Ces. Bee't so, declare thine office.

Amb. Lord of his Fortunes he salutes thee, and Requires to live in Egypt, which not granted
He Lessens his requests, and to thee sues
To let him breath betweene the Heavens and Earth
A private man in Athens : this for him.

Next, Cleopatra does confesse thy greatnesse:
Submits her to thy might, and of thee craves
The Circle of the Ptolemies for her heyres,
Now hazarded to thy Gace.

Ces. For Anthony,

I have no eares to his request. The Queene,
Of Audience, nor Desire shall faile, so she
From Egypt drive her all-disgraced Friend,
Or take his life there. This if she performe,
She shall not sue unheard. So to them both.

Amb. Fortune pursue thee.

Ces. Bring him through the Bands :

To try thy Eloquence, now 'tis time, dispatch,
From Anthony winne Cleopatra, promise
And in our Name, when she requires, adde more
From thine invention, offers. Women are not
In their best Fortunes strong ; but want will periure
The ne're touch'd Vestall. Try thy cunning Thidius, Make thine owne Edict for thy paines, which we Will answer as a Law.

Thid. Caesar, i go.

Ces. Observe how Anthony becomes his flaw,
And what thou thinkest his very Action speakes
In every power that mooves.

Thid. Caesar, I shall.

Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Charmian, & Iras.

Cleo. What shall we do, Enobarbus ?

Eno. Thinke, and dye.

Cleo. Is Anthony, or we in fault for this ?

Eno. Anthony onely, that would make his will Lord of his Reason. What though you fled,
From that great face of Warre, whose severall ranges
Frighted each other ? Why should he follow ?
The itch of his Affection should not then
Have nickt his Captain-ship, at such a point,
When halfe to halfe the world oppos'd, he being
The meered question ? 'Tis a shame no lesse
Than was his losse, to course your flying Flagges,
And leave his Navy gazing.

Cleo. Prythee peace.

Enter the Ambassador, with Anthony.

Ant. Is this his answer.

Amb. I my Lord.

Ant. The Queene shall then have courtesie,
So she will yeeld us up.

Ant. He sayes so.

Ant. Let her know't. To the Boy Caesar send this grized head, and he will fill thy wishes to the brimme,
With Principalities.

Cleo. That head my Lord ?

Ant.

Ant. To him againe, tell him he weares the Rose
Of youth upon him: from which, the world should note
Something particular: His Coyne, Ships, Legions,
May be a Cowards, whose Ministers would prevaile
Vnder the service of a childe, as soone
As i'th' Command of Cesar. I dare him therefore To Lay his gay comparisons a-part
And answer me declin'd, sword against sword,
Our selves alone; Ile write it, Follow me.

Eno. Yes, like enough: hye-battell'd Cesar will Vnstate his happinesse, and be Stag'd to'th' shew Against a Sword. I see mens judgements are A parcell of their Fortunes, and things outward
Doe draw the inward quality after them
To suffer all alike, that he should dreame,
Knowing all measures, the full Cesar will Answer his emptinesse; Cesar thou hast subdude
His judgement too.

Enter a Servant.

Ser. A Messenger from Cesar.

Cleo. What no more Ceremony? See my Women,
Against the blowne Rose may they stop their nose,
That kneel'd unto the Buds. Admit him fir.

Enob. Mine honesty, and I, begin to square,
The Loyalty well held to Fooles, does make
Our Faith meere Folly: yet he that can endure
To follow with Allegiance a false Lord,
Does conquer him that did his Master conquer,
And earns a place i'th' Story.

Enter Thidias.

Cleo. Cesar's will.

Thid. Heare it apart.

Cleo. None but friends: say boldly:

Thid. So haply are they friends to Anthony.

Enob. He needs as many (fir) as Cesar has.
Or needs not us. If Cesar please, our Master
Will leape to be his friend: For as you know,
Whose he is, we are, and that is Cesar's.

Thid. So, Thus then thou most renown'd, Cesar intreats
Not to consider in what case thou standst
Further than he is Cesar.

Cleo. Goe on, right Royall.

Thid. He knowes that you embrace not Anthony
As you did love, but as you feared him.

Cleo. Oh.

Thid. The scarres upon your honour therefore he Does pitty, as constrained blemishes,
Not as deserved.

Cleo. He is a god,
And knowes what is most right. Mine honour
Was not yeilded, but conquer'd meere.

Enob. To be sure of that, I will aske Anthony.
Sir, fir, thou art to leaky
That we must leave thee thy sinking, for Thy dearest quit thee.

Exit. Enob.

Thid. Shall I say to Cesar,
What you require of him: for he partly begges
To be desir'd to give. It much would please him,
That of his fortunes you should make a staffe
To leane upon. But it would warme his spirits
To heare from me you had left Anthony,
And put your selfe under his shrowd, the vniverfall

Cleo. What's your name?

Thid. My name is Thidias.

Cleo. Most kinde Messenger,
Say to great Cesar this in disputation, (Landlord.

I kisse his conqu'ring hand: Tell him, I am prompt
To lay my Crowne at's feet, and there to kneele.
Tell him from his all-obeying breath, I heare
The doome of Egypt.

Thid. Tis your noblest course:
Wisdom and Fortune combatting together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it. Give me grace to lay
My duty on your hand.

Cleo. Your Cesar's Father oft,
(When he hath mus'd of taking kingdomes in)
Bestow'd his lips on that unworthy place,
As it rain'd kisses

Enter Anthony and Enobarbus.

Ant. Favours? By Love that thunders. What art thou

Thid. One that but performs (Fellow?)
The bidding of the fullest man, and worthiest
To have command obeyde.

Enob. You will be whipt.

Ant. Approch there: ah you Kite. Now gods & divels, Authority melts from me of late. When I cride ho,
Like Boyes unto a muffle, Kings would start forth,
And cry your will. Have you no eares?
I am Anthony yet. Take hence this Iacke and whip him.

Enter a Servant.

Enob. Tis better playing with a Lyons whelp,
Than with an old one dying.

Ant. Moone and Starres,
Whip him: wert twenty of the greatest Tributaries
That doe acknowledge Cesar, should I finde them
So sawcy with the hand of she here, whats her name
Since she was Cleopatra? Whip him Fellowes,
Till like a Boy you see him crindge his face,
And whine aloud for mercy. Take him hence.

Thid. Marke Anthony.

Ant. Tugge him away: being whipt,
Bring him againe, the Iacke of Cesar's shall Beare us an arrant to him. Exeunt with Thidias.

You were halfe blasted ere I knew you: Ha?

Have I my pillow left unprest in Rome,
Forborne the getting of a lawfull Race,
And by a Iem of Women, to be abus'd
By one that lookes on Feeders?

Cleo. Good my Lord.

Ant. You have beene a boggler ever,
But when we in our viciousness grew hard
(Oh misery ont) the wise gods feeble our eyes
In our owne filth, drop our cleere judgements, make us
Adore our errors, laugh at while we strut
To our confusion.

Cleo. Oh, ist come to this?

Ant. I found you as a Morfell, cold upon Dead Cesar's Trencher: Nay, you were a Fragment
Of Cneius Pompey, besides what hotter houres
Vnregistred in vulgar Fame, you have Luxuriously pickt out. For I am sure,
Though you can guesse what Temperance should be,
You know not what it is.

Cleo. Wherefore is this?

Ant. To let a Fellow that will take rewards,
And say, God quit you, be familiar with
My play-fellow, your hand; this Kingly Seale,
And plighter of high hearts. O that I were Vpon the Hill of Bafan, to out-roare
The horned Heard, for I have Savage cause,
And to proclaime it civilly, were like

A halter'd necke, which does the Hangman thanke,
For being yare about him. Is he whipt?

Enter a Servant with Thidias.

Ser. Scoundly my Lord.

Ant. Cryed he? and begg'd a Pardon?

Ser. He did aske favour.

Ant. If that thy father live, let him repent
Thou wast not made his daughter, and be thou sorry
To follow Caesar in his triumph, since
Thou hast been whipt. For following him, henceforth
The white hand of a Lady Feaver thee,
Shake to looke on't. Get thee backe to Caesar,
Tell him thy entertainment: looke thou say
He makes me angry with him. For he seemes
Proud and disdainfull, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was. He makes me angry,
And at this time most easie tis to doot:
When my good starres, that were my former guides
Have empty left their Orbes, and shot their Fires
Into the Abisme of Hell. If he mislike,
My speech, and what is done, tell him he has Hiparchus, my enfranchised Bondman, whom
He may at pleasure whip, or hang, or torture,
As he shall like to quit me. Vrge it thou:
Hence with thy stripes, be gone. Exit Thid.

Cleo. Have you done yet?

Ant. Alacke our Terene Moone is now Eclipt.
And it portends alone the fall of Anthony.

Cleo. I must stay his time?

Ant. To flatter Caesar, would you mingle eyes
With one that ties his poynts.

Cleo. Not know me yet?

Ant. Cold-hearted toward me?

Cleo. Ah (Deere) if I be so,
From my cold heart, let heaven ingender haile,
And poyson it in the fource, and the first stone
Drop in my necke: as it determines so
Diffolve my life, he next Caesarian smile,
Till by degrees the memory of my wombe,
Together with my brave Egyptians all,
By the discandring of this pelleted storme,
Lye gravelesse, till the Flies and Gnats of Nyle
Have buried them for prey.

Ant. I am satisfied:

Caesar sets downe in Alexandria, where
I will oppose his Fate. Our force by land,
Hath nobly held, and sever'd Navy too
Have knit againe, and Fleet, threatening most Sea-like.
Where hast thou beene my heart? Dost thou heare Lady?
If from the field I shall returne once more
To kisse these lips, I will appeare in blood,
I, and my Sword, will earne my Chronicle,
Theres hope in't yet.

Cleo. Thats my brave Lord.

Ant. I will be trebble-finewed, hearted, breath'd,
And fight maliciously: for when mine houres
Were nice and lucky, men did ranfome lives
Of me for jests: but now, Ile set my teeth,
And send to darknesse all that stop me. Come,
Lets have one other gawdy night: Call to me
All my sad Captaines, fill our Bowles once more:
Lets mocke the midnight Bell.

Cleo. It is my Birth-day,
I had thought t'have held it poore. But since my Lord
Is Anthony againe, I will be Cleopatra.

Ant. We will yet doe well.

Cleo. Call all his Noble Captaines to my Lord,

Ant. Doe so, wee'l speake to them,

And to night Ile force

The Wine peepe through their skarres.

Come on (my Queene)

Theres sap in't yet. The next time I doe fight

Ile make death love me: for I will contend

Even with his pestilent Sythe.

Exeunt.

Ensb. Now he'l out-stare the Lightning, to be furious

Is to be frighted out of feare, and in that moode

The Dove will pecke the Estridge; and I see still

A diminution in our Captaines braine,

Restores his heart; when valour prayes in reason,

It eates the Sword it fights with: I will seeke

Some way to leave him.

Exeunt.

Enter Caesar, Agrippa, and Mecenas with his Army, Caesar reading a Letter.

Cas. He cals me Boy, and chides as he had power
To beat me out of Egypt. My Messenger
He hath whipt with Rods, dares me to personall Combat.
Caesar to Anthony: let the old Russian know,
I have many other wayes to dye: meane time
Laugh at this Challenge.

Meca. Caesar must thinke,
When one so great begins to rage, he's hunted
Even to falling. Give him no breath, but now
Make boot of his distraction: Never anger
Made good guard for it selfe.

Cas. Let our best heads know,
That to morrow, the last of many Battailes
We meane to fight. Within our Files there are,
Of those that serv'd Marke Anthony but late,
Enough to fetch him in. See it done,
And feast the Army, we have store to doo't,
And they have earn'd the waste. Poore Anthony. Exeunt.

Enter Anthony and Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Charmian, Iras, Alexas, with others.

Ant. He will not fight with me, Domitian?

Enob. No?

Ant. Why should he not?

Eno. He thinks, being twenty times of better fortune,
He is twenty men to one.

Ant. To morrow Souldier,
By Sea and Land Ile fight: or I will live,
Or bathe my dying honour in the blood,
Shall make it live againe. Woo't thou fight well-

Enob. Ile strike, and cry, take all.

Ant. Well said, come on:

Call forth my household servants, lets to night

Enter three or foure Servitors.

Be bounteous at our Meale. Give me thy hand,
Thou hast been rightly honest, so hast thou,
Thou, and thou, and thou: you have serv'd me well,
And Kings have beene your fellowes.

Cleo. What meanes this?

En. Tis one of those odde tricks which sorrow shoots
Out of the mind.

Ant. And thou art honest too:
I wish I could be made so many men,
And all of you clapt up together, in
An Anthony: that I might doe you service,
So good as you have done.

Omnes.

Omnes. The gods forbid.

Ant. Well, my good Fellowes, wait on me to night :
Scant not my Cups, and make as much of me
As when mine Empire was your Fellow too,
And suffered my command.

Cleo. What does he meane ?

Eno. To make his Followers weepe.

Ant. Tend me to night ;

May be it is the period of your duty,
Haply you shall not see me more, or if,
A mangled shadow. Perchance to morrow,
You'll serve another Master. I looke on you,
As one that takes his leave. Mine honest Friends,
I turne you not away, but like a Master
Married to your good service, stay till death :
Tend me to night two houres, I aske no more,
And the gods yeeld you for't.

Enob. What meane you (sir)
To give them this discomfort ? Looke, you weepe,
And I an Ass, am Onion-ey'd ; for shame,
Transforme us not to women.

Ant. Ho, ho, ho :

Now the Witch take me, if I meant it thus,
Grace grow where those drops fall (my hearty Friends)
You take me a too dolorous a sence,
For I spake to you for your comfort, did desire you
To burne this night with Torches ; know (my hearts)
I hope well of to morrow, and will lead you,
Where rather Ile expect victorious life,
Then death, and Honour. Lets to Supper, come,
And drowne consideration. Exeunt.

Enter a company of Souldiers.

1 Sol. Brother, good night : to morrow is the day.

2 Sol. It will determine one way : Fare you well,
Heard you of nothing strange about the streets.

1 Nothing : what newes ?

2 Belike tis but a Rumour, good night to you.

1 Well sir, good night.

They meet with other Souldiers.

2 Souldiers have carefull Watch.

1 And you : Goodnight ; goodnight.

They place themselves in every corner of the Stage.

2 Here we, and if to morrow

Our Navy thrive, I have an absolute hope

Our Landmen will stand up.

1 Tis a brave Army, and full of purpose.

Musicke of the Hoboyes is under the Stage.

2 Peace, what noyse ?

1 Lift, lift.

2 Hearke.

1 Musicke i'th' Ayre,

3 Vnder the earth.

It signes well, does it not ?

3 No.

1 Peace I say : What should this meane ?

2 Tis the god Hercules, whom Anthony loved,
Now leaves him.

1 Walke, lets see if other Watchmen

Doe heare what we doe ?

2 How now Masters ?

Speake together.

Omnes. How now ? how now ? doe you heare this ?

1 Is't not strange ?

3 Doe you heare Masters ? Doe you heare ?

1 Follow the noyse so farre as we have quarter.

Lets see how it will give off.

Omnes. Content : Tis strange.

Exeunt.

Enter Anthony, and Cleopatra, with others.

Ant. Eros, mine Armour Eros.

Cleo. Sleepe a little.

Ant. No my Chucke, Eros, come mine Armour Eros.

Enter Eros.

Come good Fellow, put thine Iron on,
If Fortune be not ours to day, it is Because we brave her. Come.

Cleo. Nay, Ile helpe too, Anthony.

Whats this for ? Ah, let be, let be, thou art
The Armourer of my heart : False, false : This, this, Sooth-law Ile helpe : Thus it must be.

Ant. Well, well, we shall thrive now.

Seest thou my good Fellow. Goe, put on thy defences.

Eros. Briefly sir.

Cleo. Is not this buckled well ?

Ant. Rarely, rarely :

He that unbuckles this, till we doe please
To doft for our repose, shall heare a storme.
Thou fumblest Eros, and my Queenes a Squire
More tight at this : Dispatch. O Love,
That thou couldst see my warres to day, and knew't
The Royall Occupation, thou shouldst see
A workman in't.

Enter an armed souldier.

Good morrow to thee, welcome,
Thou lookst like him that knowes a warlike charge :
To businesse that we love, we rise betime,
And goe too't with delight.

Soul. A thousand Sir, early thought't be, have on their Riveted trim, and at the Port expect you. Showt.

Trumpets flourish.

Enter Captaines and Souldiers.

Alex. The Morne is faire : Good morrow Generall,

All. Good morrow Generall.

Ant. Tis well blowne Lad :

This morning, like the spirit of a youth
That meanes to be of note, begins betimes.
So, so : Come give me that, what ere becomes of me,
Fare thee well Dame, what ere become of mee,
This is a Souldiers kisse : rebukeable,
And worthy shamefull checke it were, to stand
On more Mechanicke Complement, Ile leave thee :
Now like a man of Steele, you that will fight,
Follow me close, Ile bring you too't : Adieu. Exeunt.

Char. Please you retyre to your Chamber ?

Cleo. Lead me :

He goes forth gallantly : that he and Cesar might Determine this great Warre in single fight ;
Then Anthony ; but now. Well on. Exeunt.

Trumpet sound. Enter Anthony and Eros.

Eros. The Gods make this a happy day to Anthony.

Ant. Would thou, and those thy scaries had once pre-
To make me fight at Land. (vaild,

Eros. Hadst thou done so,

The Kings that have revolted, and the Souldier
That has this morning left thee, would have still Followed thy heeles.

Ant. Who's gone this morning ?

Eros. Who? one ever neere thee, call for Enobarbus.

He shall not beare thee, or from Cæsars Campe,
Say I am none of thine.

Ant. What sayest thou?

Sold. Sir he is with Cæsar.

Eros. Sir, his Chests and Treasure he has not with him.

Ant. Is he gone?

Sol. Most certaine.

Ant. Goe Eros, send his Treasure after, doe it,
Detaine no jot I charge thee: write to him,
(I will subscribe) gentle adieus, and greetings:
Say, that I wish he never find more cause
To change a Master. Oh my fortunes have Corrupted honest men. Dispatch Eros.

Exit.

Enter Agrippa, Cæsar, with Enobarbus, and Dollabella.

Cæs. Goe forth Agrippa, and begin the fight:
Our will is Anthony be tooke alive:
Make it so knowne.

Agrip. Cæsar, I shall.

Cæs. The time of univerfall peace is neere,
Prove this a prosp'rous day, the three nook'd world
Shall beare the Olive freely.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Anthony is come into the field.

Cæs. Goe charge Agrippa,
Plant those that have revolted in the Van,
That Anthony may seeme to spend his Fury
Vpon himselfe.

Exeunt.

Enob. Alexas did revolt, and went to Jewry on Affaires of Anthony; there did dissuade
Great Herod to incline himselfe to Cæsar,
And leave his Master Anthony. For this paines,
Cæsar hath hang'd him: Camidius and the rest
That fell away, have entertainment, but
No honorable trust: I have done ill,
Of which I doe accuse my selfe so forely,
That I will joy no more.

Enter a Soldier of Cæsars.

Sol. Enobarbus, Anthony
Hath after thee sent all thy Treasure, with His Bounty over-plus. The Messenger
Came on my guard, and at thy Tent is now
Vnloading of his Mules.

Eno. I give it you.

Sol. Mocke not Enobarbus,
I tell you true: Best you fast the bringer
Out of the host, I must attend mine Office,
Or would have done't my selfe. Your Emperor
Continues still a love.

Exit.

Enob. I am alone the Villaine of the earth,
And feele I am so most. Oh Anthony,
Thou Mine of bounty, how wouldst thou have payed
My better service, when my turpitude
Thou dost so Crowne with Gold. This blowes my heart
If swift thought breake it not: a swifed meane
Shall out-strike thought, but thought will doo't. I feele
I fight against thee: No I will goe seeke
Some Ditch, where to dye: the foulest best fits
My latter part of life.

Exit.

Alarum, Drummes and Trumpets.

Enter Agrippa.

Agrip. Retire, we have engag'd our selves too farre:
Cæsar himselfe has worke, and our oppression
Exceeds what we expected.

Exit.

Alarums.

Enter Anthony, and Scarus wounded.

Scar. O my brave Emperor, this is fought indeed,
Had we done so at first, we had droven them home
With clowts about their head.

Fare off.

Ant. Thou bleedst apace.

Scar. I had a wound heere that was like a T,
But now tis made an H.

Ant. They doe retyre.

Scar. We'll beat em into Bench-holes, I have yet
Roome for six scotches more.

Enter Eros.

Eros. They are beaten Sir, and our advantage serves
For a faire victory.

Scar. Let us score their backes,
And snatch em up, as we take Hares behind,
Tis sport to maul a Runner.

Ant. I will reward thee
Once for thy sprightly comfort, and ten-fold
For thy good valour. Come thee on.

Scar. Ile halt after.

Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter Anthony againe in a March, Scarus, with other.

Ant. We have beate him to his Campe: Runne one Before, and let the Queen know of our guests: to morrow
Before the Sun shall see, we'll spill the blood
That has to day escap'd. I thanke you all,
For doughty handed are you and have fought
Not as you serv'd the Cause, but as't had bene
Each mans like mine: you have shewne all Hectors,
Enter the City, clip your Wives, your friends,
Tell them your feats, whilst they with joyfull teares
Wash the congelement from your wounds, and kisse
The honour'd-gashes whole.

Enter Cleopatra.

Give me thy hand,
To this great Faiery, Ile commend thy acts,
Make her thankes blesse thee. Oh thou day o'th' world,
Chaine mine arm'd necke, leape thou, Attyre and all
Through prooffe of Harnesse to my part, and there
Ride on the pants triumphing.

Cleo. Lord of Lords,
Oh infinite Vertue, comm'f't thou smiling from
The worlds great snare uncaught.

Ant. My Nightingale,
We have beate them to their Beds.
What Gyrle, though gray

Do something mingle with our yonger browne, yet ha we
A braine that nourishes our Nerves, and can Get gale for gale of youth. Behold this man,
Commend unto his Lippes thy favouring hand,
Kisse it my Warriour: He hath fought to day,
As if a god in hate of Mankind, had Destroyed in such a shape.

Cleo. Ile give thee friend
An Armour all of gold: it was a Kings.

Ant. He has deserv'd it, were it Carbunkled
Like holy Phœbus Carre. Give me thy hand,
Through Alexandria make a jolly March,
Beare our hackt Targets, like the men that owe them,
Had our great Palace the capacity
To Campe this host, we all would sup together,
And drinke Carowfes to the next dayes Fate

Which

Which promises Royall perill. Trumpeters
With brazen dinne blast you the Citties care.
Make mingle with our ratling Tabourines,
That heaven and earth may strike their sounds together,
Applauding our approach. Exeunt.

Enter a Centery, and his Company, Enobarbus follows.

Cent. If we be not reliev'd within this houre,
We must returne to'th' Court of Guard : the night
Is shiny, and they say, we shall embartaile
By'th'second houre ith'Morne.

1 Watch. This last day was a shrew'd one to's

Enob. Oh beare me witnesse night,

2 What man is this?

1 Stand close, and list him.

Enob. Be witnesse to me (O thou blessed Moone)
When men revolted shall upon Record
Beare hatefull memory : poore Enobarbus did
Before thy face repent.

Cent. Enobarbus?

2 Peace : hearke further.

Enob. Oh Sovereigne Mistris of true Melancholly,
The poysonous dampe of night dispunge upon me,
That life, a very Rebell to my will,
May hang no longer on me. Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardnesse of my fault,
Which being dryed with griefe, will breake to powder,
And finish all foule thoughts, Oh Anthony,
Nobler then my revolt is infamous,
Forgive me in thine owne particular,
But let the world ranke me in Register
A Master leaver, and a fugitive :
Oh Anthony ! Oh Anthony !

1 Lets speake to him.

Cent. Lets heare him, for the things he speakes
May concerne Cesar.

2 Lets doe so, but he sleepe.

Cent. Swoonds rather, for so bad a Prayer as his
Was never yet for sleepe.

1 Goe we to him.

2 Awake sir, awake, speake to us.

1 Heare you sir?

Cent. The hand of death hath raught him.

Heake how the Drummes demurely wake the sleepers :
Let us beare him to'th' Court of Guard : he is of note :
Our houre is fully out.

2 Come on then, he may recover yet. Exeunt.

Enter Anthony, and Scarus, with their Army.

Ant. Their preparation is to day by Sea,
We please them not by Land.

Scar. For both, my Lord.

Ant. I would they'd fight ith'Fire, or ith' Ayre, Wee'd fight there too. But this it is, our Foote
Vpon the hilles adjoyning to the Citty
Shall stay with us. Order for Sea is given,
They have put forth the haven :
Where their appointment we may best discover,
And looke on their endeavour. Exeunt.

Enter Cesar, and his Army.

Ces. But being charg'd, we will be still by Land,
Which as I tak't we shall, for his best force
Is forth to Man his Gallies. To the Vales,

And hold our best advaniage.

Exeunt.

Alarum asarre off, as at a Sea-fight.

Enter Anthony, and Scarus.

Ant. Yet they are not joyn'd :
Where yond Pine does stand, I shall discover all.
He bring thee word straight, how tis like to goe. Exit.

Scar. Swallowes have built
In Cleopatra's Sailes their nests. The Auguries
Say, they know not, they cannot tell, looke grimly,
And dare not speake their knowledge. Anthony,
Is valiant, and dejected, and by starts
His fretted Fortunes give him hope and feare
Of what he has, and has not.

Enter Anthony.

Ant. All is lost :
This fowle Egyptian hath betrayed me :
My fleete hath yeilded to the Foe, and yonder,
They cast their Caps up, and Carowse together
Like friends long lost. Triple-turn'd Whore, tis thou Hast sold me to this Novice, and my heart
Makes onely Warres on thee. Bid them all flye :
For when I am reveng'd upon my Charme,
I have done all. Bid them all flye, be gone.
Oh Sunne, thy uprise shall I see no more,
Fortune, and Anthony part heere, even heere
Doe we shake hands? All come to this? The hearts
That pannelled me at heels, to whom I gave Their wishes, doe dis' Candy, melt their sweets
On blossoming Cesar : and this Pine is barkt,
That over-topd them all. Betray'd I am.
Oh this false Soule of Egypt ! this grave Charme,
Whose eye beck'd forth my Wars, and cal'd them home :
Whose bosome was my Crownet, my chiefe end,
Like a right Gypsie, hath at fast and loose
Beguild me, to the very heart of losse.
What Eros, Eros?

Enter Cleopatra.

Ah, thou Spell ! Avaunt.

Cleo. Why is my Lord enrag'd against his Love?

Ant. Vanish, or I shall give thee thy deservng,
And blemish Cesar's Triumph. Let him take thee,
And hoist thee up to th'shoutng Plebeians,
Follow his Chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all thy Sex. Most Monster-like be shewne
For poor'st Diminutives, for Dolts, and let Patient Octavia, plough thy visage up
With her prepared nailes. Exit Cleopatra.

Tis well th'art gone,
If it be well to live. But better twere
Thou fellst into my fury, for one death
Might have prevented many. Eros, hoa?
The shirt of Nessus is upon me, teach me
Alcides, thou mine Ancestor, thy rage.
Let me lodge Licas on the hornes oth' Moone,
And with those hands that graspt the heaviest Club,
Subdue my worthiest selfe : the Witch shall dye,
To the young Roman Boy she hath sold me, and I fall
Vnder this plot : she dyes for't. Eros hoa? Exit.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, Mardian.

Cleo. Helpe me my woman : Oh he is more mad
Then Telamon for his Shield, the Boare of Theflaly
Was never so imboist.

Char. To th'Monument, there locke your selfe,
And send him word you are dead :

aa a y

The

The soule and Body rive not more in parting,
Then greatnesse going off.

Cleo. To th' Monument :

Mardian, goe tell him I have slaine my selfe :
Say, that the last I spoke was Anthony,
And word it (prethee) pittcoufly. Hence Mardian,
And bring me how he takes my death to th' Monument.
Exeunt.

Enter Anthony, and Eros.

Anth. Eros, thou yet beholdst me ?

Eros. I Noble Lord.

Ant. Sometime we see a slowd thats Dragonish,
A vapour sometime, like a Beare, or Lyon,
A toward Cittadell, a pendant Rocke,
A forked Mountaine, or blew Promontory
With Trees upon't, that nodde unto the world,
And mocke our eyes with Ayre.
Thou hast seene these signes,
They are blacke Vespers Pageants.

Eros. I my Lord:

Ant. That which is now a horse, even with a thought the Racke dislimes, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water.

Eros. It does my Lord.

Ant. My good Knave Eros, now thy Captaine is Even such a body : heere I am Anthony,
Yet cannot hold this visible shape (my Knave)
I made these warres for Egypt, and the Queene,
Whose heart I thought I had, for she had mine :
Which whilst it was mine, had annex unto't
A Million moe, (now lost :) she Eros has Packt Cards with Casars, and false plaid my Glory
Vnto an Enemies triumph.
Nay, weepe not gentle Eros, there is left us
Our selves to end our selves.

Enter Mardian.

Oh thy vilde Lady, she has rob'd me of my Sword.

Mar. No Anthony,

My Mistris lov'd thee, and her Fortunes mingled
With thine intirely.

Ant. Hence sawcy Eunuch peace, she hath betraid me
And shall dye the death.

Mar. Death of one person, can be paide but once,
And that she has discharg'd. What thou wouldst doe
Is done unto thy hand : the last she spake
Was Anthony, most Noble Anthony :
Then in the middst a tearing grone did breake
The name of Anthony : it was divided
Betweene her heart, and lips : she tendred life
Thy name so buried in her.

Ant. Dead then ?

Mar. Dead.

Ant. Vnarme Eros, the long dayes taske is done,
And we must sleepe : that thou departst hence safe
Does pay thy labour richly : goe. Exit Mardian.
Oh, plucke off,
The seven-fold shield of Ajax cannot keepe
The battery from my heart. Oh cleave my sides.
Heart, once be stronger then thy Continent,
Cracke thy fraile Case. Apace Eros, apace :
No more a Souldier : bruised peeces goe,
You have bin Nobly borne. From me awhile. Exit Eros.
I will ore-take thee Cleopatra, and Weepe for my pardon. So it must be, for now
All length is Torture : since the Torch is out,
Lye downe and stray no farther. Now all labour

Marres what it does : yea, very force entangles
It selfe with strength : Seale then and all is done.

Eros ? I come my Queene. Eros ? Say for me,
Where Soules doe couch on Flowers, we'll hand in hand,
And with our sprightly Port make the Ghostes gaze :
Dido, and her Aeneas shall want Troopes,
And all the haunt be ours. Come Eros, Eros.

Enter Eros.

Eros. What would my Lord ?

Ant. Since Cleopatra dyed,
I have liv'd in such dishonor, that the gods
Detest my basenesse. I, that with my Sword,
Quarter'd the World, and ore greene Neptunes backe
With Ships, made Citties ; condemne my selfe, to lacke
The Courage of a Woman, lesse Noble minde
Then she which by her death, our Cesar telles
I am Conqueror of my selfe. Thou art sworne Eros,
That when the exigent should come, which now
Is come indeed : When I should see behind me
Th' inevitable profection of disgrace and horror,
That on my command, thou then wouldst kill me.
Doo't, the time is come : thou strikst not me,
Tis Cesar thou defeat'st. Put colour in my cheek.

Eros. The gods with-hold me,
Shall I doe that which all the Parthian Darts, (Though Enemy) lost ayme, and could not.

Ant. Eros,

Wouldst thou be window'd in great Rome, and see
Thy Master thus with pleacht Armes, bending downe
His corrigible necke, his face subdu'de
To penetrative shame ; whilst the wheeld seate
Of fortunate Cesar drawne before him, branded
His basenesse that ensued.

Eros. I would not see't.

Ant. Come then : for with a wound I must be cur'd.
Draw that thy honest Sword which thou hast worne
Most usefull for thy Country.

Eros. Oh sir, pardon me.

Ant. When I did make thee free, sworst thou not then
To doe this when I bad thee ? Doe it at once,
Or thy precedent Services are all
But accidents unpurpos'd. Draw, and come.

Eros. Turne from me then that Noble countenance,
Wherein the worship of the whole world lyes.

Ant. Loe thee.

Eros. My sword is drawne.

Ant. Then let it doe at once
The thing why thou hast drawne it.

Eros. My deere Master,
My Captaine, and my Emperor. Let me say
Before I strike this bloody stroke, farewell.

Ant. Tis said man, and farewell.

Eros. Farewell great Chiefe. Shall I strike now ?

Ant. Now Eros.

Killes himselfe.

Eros. Why there then :

Thus I doe escape the sorrow of Anthones death.

Ant. Thrice-Nobler then my selfe,
Thou teachest me : Oh valiant Eros, what I should, and thou couldst not, my Queene and Eros
Have by their brave instruction got upon me
A Noblenesse in Record. But I will be
A Bride-groome in my death, and run into't
As to a Lovers bed. Come then, and Eros, Thy Master dyes thy Scholler : to doe thus
I learnt of thee. How, not dead ? not dead ?
The Guard, how ? oh dispatch me.

Enter

Enter a Guard.

1 Guard. Whats the noise?

Ant. I have done my worke ill friends :
Oh make an end of what I have begun.

2 The Starre is false.

1 And time is at his Period.

All. Alas, and woe.

Ant. Let him that loves me, strike me dead.

1 Not I.

2 Nor I.

3 Nor any one.

[Exeunt.]

Dece. Thy death and fortunes bid thy followers flye
This sword but shewne to Cesar with this tydings,
Shall enter me with him.

Enter Diomedes.

Dio. Wheres Anthony?

Dece. There Diomed there.

Diom. Lives he : wilt thou not answer man?

Ant. Art thou there Diomed?

Draw thy sword, and give me,
Sufficing strokes for death.

Dio. Most absolute Lord :

My Mistris Cleopatra sent me to thee.

Ant. When did shee send thee?

Diom. Now my Lord.

Ant. Where is she?

(fear)

Diom. Lockt in her Monument: she had a Propheying
Of what hath come to passe : for when she saw
(Which never shall be found) you did suspect
She had dispos'd with Cesar, and that your rage
Would not be purg'd, she sent you word she was dead :
But fearing since how it might worke, hath sent Me to proclaime the truth, and I am come
Idread, too late.

Ant. Too late good Diomed : call my Guard I prethee.

Dio. What hoa : the Emperors Guard.

The Guard, what hoa? Come, your Lord calles.

Enter 4 or 5 of the Guard of Anthony.

Ant. Beare me good Friends were Cleopatra bides,
Tis the last service that I shall command you.

1 Woe, woe are we fir you may not live to weare
All your true Followers out.

All. Most heavy day.

Ant. Nay good my fellowes, doe not please sharp fate
To grace it with your sorrowes. Bid that welcome
Which comes to punish us, and we punish it
Seeming to beare it lightly. Take me up,
I have led you oft, carry me now good friends,
And have my thanks for all. Exeunt bearing Anthony.

Enter Cleopatra, and her Maides aloft, with Charmian, and Iras.

Cleo. Oh Charmian, I will never goe from hence.

Char. Be comforted deere Madam,

Cleo. No, I will not :

All strange and terrible events are welcome,
But comforts we despise ; our size of sorrow
Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great
As that which makes it.

Enter Diomed.

How now? is he dead?

Diom. His deaths upon him, but not dead.
Looke out oth other side your Monument,
His Guard have brought him hither.

Enter Anthony, and the Guard.

Cleo. Oh Sunne,

Burne the great Sphere thou mou'st in, darkling stand
The varrying shore oth' world. O Anthony, Anthony, Anthony
Helpe Charmian, helpe Irás helpe : helpe friends
Below, lets draw him hither.

Ant. Peace,

Not Cesar's Valour hath orethrowne Anthony,
But Anthony, hath Triumpht on it selfe.

Cleo. So it should be,

That none but Anthony should conquer Anthony,
But woe tis so.

Ant. I am dying Egypt, dying : onely
I heere importune death a-while, untill
Of many thousand kisses the poore last
I lay upon thy lippes.

Cleo. I dare not Deere,
Deere my Lord pardon : I dare not,
Lest I be taken : not th' Imperious shew
Of the full-fortun'd Cesar, ever shall Be brooch'd with me, if Knife, Drugges, Serpents have Edge, sting, or operation, I am safe :
Your Wife Octavia, with her modest eyes,
And still conclusion, shall acquire no honor
Demuring upon me : but, come, come Anthony,
Helpe me my women, we must draw thee up :
Assist good friends.

Ant. Oh quicke, or I am gone,

Cleo. Heeres sport indeed :
How heavy weighes my Lord?
Our strength is all gone into heaviness;
That makes the waight. Had I great Juno's power,
The strong wing'd Mercury should fetch thee up,
And set thee by Ioves side. Yet come a little,
Wishers were ever Fooles. Oh come, come, come.

They beave Anthony aloft to Cleopatra.

And welcome, welcome. Dye when thou hast liv'd;
Quicken with kissing : had my lippes that power,
Thus would I weare them out.

All. A heavy fight.

Ant. I am dying Egypt, dying.
Give me some Wine, and let me speake a little.

Cleo. No, let me speake, and let me rayle so hye,
That the false Huswife Fortune, breake her Wheele,
Provok'd by my offence.

Ant. One word (sweet Queene)
Of Cesar seeke your honor, with your safety. Oh.

Cleo. They doe not goe together.

Ant. Gentle heare me,
None about Cesar trust, but Proculeius.

Cleo. My Resolution, and my hands, Ile trust,
None about Cesar.

Ant. The miserable change now at my end,
Lament nor sorrow at : but please your thoughts
In feeding them with those my former Fortunes
Wherein I lived. The greatest Prince oth world,
The Noblest : and doe now not basely dye,
Not Cowardly put off my Helmet to My Countryman. A Roman, by a Roman Valiantly vanquish'd. Now my spirit is going,
I can no more.

Cleo. Noblest of men, woo't dye?
Hast thou no care of me, shall I abide
In this dull world, which in thy absence is No better then a Sty? Oh see my women :
The Crowne oth earth doth melt. My Lord?
Oh wither'd is the Garland of the Warre,

The Souldiers pole is false : young Boyes and Gyrls
Are leuell now with men : The oddes is gone,
And there is nothing left remarkable
Beneath the visiting Moone.

Char. Oh quitenesse, Lady.

Iras. Shes dead too, our Sovereigne.

Char. Lady.

Iras. Madam.

Char. Oh Madam, Madam, Madam.

Iras. Royall Egypt : Empreffe.

Char. Peace, peace, Iras.

Cleo. No more but in a Woman, and commanded
By such poore passion, as the Maid that Milkes,
And does the meanest chares. It were for me,
To throw my Scepter at the injurious gods,
To tell them that this World did equall theirs,
Till they had stolne our Jewell. Alls but naught :
Patience is fottish, and impatience does
Become a Dogge thats mad : then is it sinne,
To rush into the secret house of death,
Ere death dare come to us? How doe you Women?
What, what good cheere? Why how now Charmian?
My Noble Gyrls? Ah women, women! Looke
Our Lampe is spent, its out. Good firs, take heart,
Wee'll bury him : And then, whats brave, what Noble,
Lets doo't after the high Roman fashion,
And make death proud to take us. Come, away,
This case of that huge Spirit now is cold.
Ah women, women! Come, we have no friend
But Resolution, and the brieft end.

Exeunt, bearing of Anthonies body.

Enter Caesar, Agrippa, Dolabella, Menas, with his Counsell of Warre.

Caesar. Goe to him Dolabella, bid him yeeld,
Being so frustrate, tell him,
He mockes the pawfes that he makes.

Dol. Caesar, I shall.

Enter Decretas with the sword of Anthony.

Caes. Wherefore is that? and what art thou that dar'st
Appare thus to us?

Dec. I am call'd Decretas,
Marke Anthony I serv'd, who best was worthy Best to be serv'd : whilst he stood up, and spoke
He was my Master, and I wore my life
To spend upon his haters. If thou please
To take me to thee, as I as was to him,
Ile be to Caesar: if thou pleasest not, I yeild thee up my life.

Caes. What ist thou sayst?

Dec. I say (Oh Caesar) Anthony is dead.

Caes. The breaking of so great a thing, should make
A greater cracke. The round World
Should have shooke Lyons into civill streets,
And Citizens to their dennes. The death of Anthony
Is not a single doome, in the name lay
A moiety of the world.

Dec. He is dead Caesar,
Not by a publike minister of Iustice,
Nor by a hyred Knife, but that selfe-hand
Which writ his honor in the Acts it did,
Hath with the Courage which the heart did lend it,
Splitted the heart. This is his Sword,
I robb'd his wound of it : behold it staine
With his most Noble blood.

Caes. Looke you sad friends,

The gods rebuke me, but it is a Tydings
To wash the eyes of Kings.

Dol. And strange it is,
That Nature must compell us to lament
Our most persifted deeds.

Mec. His taints and honors, way equall with him.

Dola. A Rarer spirit never Did steere humanity : but you gods will give us
Some faults to make us men. Caesar is touch'd.

Mec. When such a spacious Mirrors set before him,
He needes must see himselfe.

Caes. Oh Anthony,
I have followed thee to this, but we doe launch
Diseases in our Bodies. I must perforce
Have shewne thee such a declining day,
Or looke on thine : we could not stail together,
In the whole world. But yet let me lament
With teares as Sovereigne as the blood of hearts,
That thou my brother, my Competitor,
In top of all designe ; my Mate in Empire,
Friend and Companion in the front of Warre,
The Arme of mine owne Body, and the heart
Where mine his thoughts did kindle ; that our Starres Vnreconcilable, should divide our equalnesse to this.
Heare me good friends,
But I will tell you at some meeter Season,
The businesse of this man looks out of him,
Wee'll heare him what he sayes.

Enter an Egyptian.

Whence are you?

Egyp. A poore Egyptian yet, the Queene my Mistris
Confin'd in all, she has her Monument
Of thy intents, desires, instruction,
That she preparedly may frame her selfe
To th' way shees forc'd to.

Caes. Bid her have good heart,
She soone shall know of us, by some of ours,
How honorable, and how kindly We Determine for her. For Caesar cannot leave to be ungentle

Egyp. So the gods preserve thee. Exit.

Caes. Come hither Proculeius, Goe and say
We purpose her no shame : give her what comforts
The quality of her passion shall require ;
Left in her greatnesse, by some mortall stroke
She doe defeate us. For her life in Rome,
Would be eternall in our Triumph : goe,
And with your speediest bring us what she sayes,
And how yon find of her.

Pro. Caesar I shall. Exit Proculeius.

Caes. Gallus, goe you along : wheres Dolabella, to second Proculeius?

All. Dolabella.

Caes. Let him alone : for I remember now
How hes imployd : he shall in time be ready.
Goe with me to my Tent, where you shall see
How hardly I was drawne into this Warre,
How calme and gentle I proceeded still
In all my Writings. Goe with me, and see
What I can shew in this.

Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Mardian.

Cleo. My desolation does begin to make
A better life : Tis paltry to be Caesar :
Nor being fortune, hes but fortunes knave,
A minister of her will : and it is great

To doe that thing that ends all other deeds,
Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change;
Which sleepes, and never pallats more the dung,
The beggers Nurle, and Casars.

Enter Proculeius.

Pro. Cesar sends greeting to the Queene of Egypt,
And bids thee study on what faire demands
Thou mean'st to have him grant thee.

Cleo. Whats thy name?

Pro. My name is Proculeius.

Cleo. Anthony

Did tell me of you, bad me trust you, but I doe not greatly care to be deceiv'd
That have no use for trusting. If your Master
Would have a Queene his begger, you must tell him,
That Majesty to keepe decorum, must
No lesse begge then a Kingdome: if he please
To give me conquer'd Egypt for my Sonne,
He gives me so much of mine owne, as I
Will kneele to him with thanks.

Pro. Be of good cheere:
Y'are false into a Princely hand, feare nothing,
Make your full reference freely to my Lord,
Who is so full of Grace, that it flowes over
On all that neede. Let me report to him
Your sweet dependancy, and you shall find
A Conqueror that will pray in ayde for kindnesse,
Where he for grace is kneel'd too.

Cleo. Pray you tell him,
I am his Fortunes Vassall, and I send him
The greatnesse he has got. I hourly learne
A Doctrine of Obedience, and would gladly Looke him ith' Face.

Pro. This Ile report (deere Lady)
Have comfort, for I know your plight is pittied
Of him that caus'd it.

Char. You see how easily she may be surpriz'd:
Guard her till Cesar come.

Iras. Royall Queene.

Char. Oh Cleopatra, thou art taken Queene.

Cleo. Quicke, quicke, good hands.

Pro. Hold worthy Lady, hold:
Doe not your selfe such wrong, who are in this Reliev'd, but not betraid,

Cleo. What of death too that rids our dogs of languish?

Pro. Cleopatra, doe not abuse my Masters bounty, by Th'undoing of your selfe: Let the world see
His Noblenesse well acted, which your death
Will never let come forth.

Cleo. Where art thou death?
Come hither come; Come, come, and take a Queene Worth many Babes and Beggars.

Pro. Oh temperance Lady.

Cleo. Sir, I will eate no meate, Ile not drinke sir,
If idle talke will once be necessary
Ile not sleepe neither. This mortall house ile ruine, Doe Cesar what he can. Know sir, that I
Will not waite pinnion'd at your Masters Court,
Nor once be chastic'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octavia. Shall they hoyst me up,
And shew me to the showting Varlotry
Of censuring Rome? Rather a ditch in Egypt,
Be gentle grave unto me, rather on Nylus mudde
Lay me starke-nak'd, and let the water-Flies Blow me into abhorring; rather make
My Countries hygh pyramides my Gibbet,

And hang me up in Chaines,

Pro. You doe extend These thoughts of horror further then you shall Find cause in Cesar.

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. Proculeius,
What thou hast done, thy Master Cesar knowes,
And he hath sent for thee: as for the Queene,
Ile take her to my Guard.

Pro. So Dolabella,
It shall content me best: be gentle to her,
To Cesar I will speake, what you shall please,
If you'll imploy me to him. Exit Proculeius.

Cleo. Say, I would dye.

Dol. Most Noble Empreffe, you have heard of me.

Cleo. I cannot tell.

Dol. Assuredly you know me.

Cleo. No matter sir, what I have heard or knowle:
You laugh when Boyes or Women tell their Dreames,
Is't not your trick?

Dol. I understand not, Madam.

Cleo. I dreamt there was an Emperor Anthony.
Oh such another sleepe, that I might see
But such another man.

Dol. If it might please ye.

Cleo. His face was as the heavens, and therein stucke
A Sunne and Moone, which kept their course, and lighted
The little o'th' earth.

Dol. Most Sovereigne Creature.

Cleo. His legges bestrid the Ocean, his rear'd arme
Crested the world: his voyce was propertied
As all the tuned Spheres, and that to friends:
But when he meant to quail, and shake the Orbe,
He was as ratling Thunder. For his bounty,
There was no winter in't. An Anthony it was,
That grew the more by reaping: his delights
Were Dolphin-like, they shew'd his backe above
The Element they liv'd in; In his Livery
Walk'd Crownes and Crownets: Realmes and Islands
As plates dropt from his pocket.

Dol. Cleopatra.

Cleo. Thinke you there was, or might be such a man
As this I dreamt of?

Dol. Gentle Madam, no.

Cleo. You Lye up to the hearing of the gods:
But if there be, nor ever were one such
Its past the size of dreaming: Nature wants stufte
To vye strange formes with fancy, yet t' imagine
An Anthony were Natures peece, gainst Fancy, Condemning shadowes quite.

Dol. Heare me, good Madam:
Your losse is as your selfe, great; and you beare it
As answering to the waight, would I might never Ore-take pursu'de successe: but I doe feele
By the rebound of yours, a griefe that suites
My very heart at roote.

Cleo. I thanke you sir:
Know you what Cesar meanes to doe with me?

Dol. I am loath to tell you what, I would you knew.

Cleo. Nay pray you sir.

Dol. Though he be honorable.

Cleo. He'll leade me then in Triumph.

Dol. Madam he will, I knowt.

Enter Proculeius, Cesar, Gallus, Mecenas,
and others of his Traine.

All. Make way there, Cesar.

Cesar?

Cas. Which is the Queene of Egypt.

Dol. It is the Emperor Madam.

Cas. Arise, you shall not kneele :

I pray you rise, rise Egypt.

Cleo. Sir, the gods will have it thus,
My Master and my Lord I much obey,

Cas. Take to you no hard thoughts,
The Record of what injuries you did us,
I though written in our flesh, we shall remember
As things but done by chance.

Cleo. Sole Sir oth' world,
I cannot project mine owne cause so well
To make it cleare, but doe confesse I have Beene laden with like frailties, which before
Have often sham'd our Sex.

Cas. Cleopatra know,
We will extenuate rather then inforce :
If you apply your selfe to our intents,
Which towards you are most gentle, you shall finde
A benefit in this change, but if you seeke
To lay on me a Cruelty, by taking
Antonies course, you shall bereave you selfe
Of my good purposes, and put your children
To that destruction which Ile guard them from,
If thereon you relye. Ile take my leave.

Cleo. And may through all the world: tis yours, and we your Scutcheons, and your signes of Conquest shall Hang in what place you please. Here my good Lord.

Cas. You shall advise me in all for Cleopatra.

Cleo. This is the brieft : of Mony, Plate, and Jewels
I am posselt of, tis exactly valedwed,
Not petty things admitted. Wheres Seleucus ?

Seleu. Heere Madam.

Cleo. This is my Treasurer, let him speake (my Lord)
Vpon his perill, that I have reserv'd
To my selfe nothing. Speake the truth Seleucus.

Seleu. Madam I had rather seele my lippes,
Then to my perill speake that which is not.

Cleo. What have I kept backe?

Seleu. Enough to purchase what you have made known

Cas. Nay blush not Cleopatra, I approve
Your Wisedome in the deed.

Cleo. See Cesar : Oh behold,
How pompe is followed : Mine will now be yours,
And should we shift estates, yours would be mine,
The ingratitude of this Seleucus, does
Even make me wilde. Oh Slave, of no more trust
Then love thats hyr'd? What goest thou backe, thou shalt Goe backe I warrant thee : but Ile catch thine eyes
Though they had wings. Slave, soule-lesse, Villaine, Dog,
O rarely base !

Cas. Good Queene, let us intreat you.

Cleo. O Cesar, what a wounding shame is this,
That thou vouchsafing heere to visit me,
Doing the honor of thy Lordlinesse
To one so meeke, that mine owne Servant should Parcell the summe of my disgraces, by Addition of his Envy! Say (good Cesar)
That I some Lady-trifles have reserv'd,
Immoment toyes, things of such Dignity
As we greet moderne friends withall, and say
Some Nobler token I have kept apart
For Livia and Octavia, to induce
Their mediation, must I be unfolded
With one that I have bred : the gods ! it smites me
Beneath the fall I have. Prethce goe hence,

Cleo. kneeles.

Or I shall shew the Cynders of my spirits
Through th'Ashes of my chance : Wer't thou a man,
Thou wouldst have mercy on me.

Casa. Forbeare Seleucus.

Cleo. Be it knowne, that we the greatest are mis-thought
For things that others doe : and when we fall,
We answer others merits, in our name
Are therefore to be pittied.

Cas. Cleopatra,
Not what you have reserv'd, nor what acknowledg'd
Put we ith' Roll of Conquest : still be't yours,
Bestow it at your pleasure, and beleewe
Cesar's no Merchant, to make prize with you
Of things that Merchants sold. Therefore be cheer'd,
Make not your thoughts your prisons : No deere Queen,
For we intend so to dispoile you, as
Your selfe shall give us counsell : Feede, and sleepe :
Our care and pitty is so much upon you,
That we remaine your friend, and so adieu.

Cleo. My Master, and my Lord.

Cas. Not so : Adieu.

Exeunt Cesar, and his Train.

Cleo. He words me Gyrls, he words me,
That I should not be Noble to my selfe.
But hearke thee Charmian.

Iras. Finish good Lady, the bright day is done,
And we are for the darke.

Cleo. Hye thee againe.
I have spoke already, and it is provided,
Goe put it to the haste.

Char. Madam, I will.

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. Wheres the Queene?

Char. Behold sir.

Cleo. Dolabella.

Dol. Madam, as thereto sworne, by your command
(Which my love makes Religion to obey)
I tell you this : Cesar through Syria
Intends his journey, and within three dayes,
You with your Children will he send before,
Make your best use of this. I have perform'd
Your pleasure, and my promise.

Cleo. Dolabella, I shall remaine your debter.

Dol. I your Servant :
Adieu good Queene, I must attend on Cesar, Exit.

Cleo. Farewell, and thanks.
Now Iras, what think'st thou?
Thou, an Egyptian Puppet shalt be shewne
In Rome aswell as I : Mechanicke Slaves
With greazy Aprons, Rules, and Hammers shall Vplift us to the view. In their thicke breathes, Ranke of grosse dyet, shall we be enclowded,
And forc'd to drinke their vapour.

Iras. The gods forbid.

Cleo. Nay, tis most certaine Iras : sawcy Lictors
Will catch at us like Strumpets, and scald Rimers Ballad us out a Tune. The quicke Comedians
Extemporally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandria Revels : Anthony
Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see
Some speaking-Cleopatra-Boy my greatnesse
I'th' posture of a Whore.

Iras. O the good gods!

Cleo. Nay thats certaine.

Iras. Ile never see't; for I am sure my Nalles
Are stronger then mine eyes.

Cleo.

Cleo. Why that's the way to foole their preparation,
And conquer their most absurd intents.

Enter Charmian.

Now Charmian.

Shew me my Women like a Queene: Goe fetch
My best Attires. I am againe for Cidrus
To meet Marke Anthony. Sirra Iras, goe
(Now Noble Charmian, wee'l dispatch indeed,)
And when thou hast done this chare, Ile give thee leave
To play till Doomesday: bring our Crowne, and all.

A noyse within.

Wherefore's this noyse?

Enter a Guardsman.

Guard. Here is a rurall Fellow,
That will not be deny'd your Highnesse presence,
He brings you Figges.

Cleo. Let him come in.

Exit Guardsman.

How poore an Instrument
May doe a Noble deed: he brings me liberty:
My Resolution's plac'd, and I have nothing
Of woman in me: Now from head to foot
I am Marble constant: now the fleeting Moone
No Planet is of mine.

Enter Guardsman and Clowne.

Guard. This is the Man.

Cleo. Avoyd and leave him.

Exit Guardsman.

Hast thou the pretty worme of Nylus there,
That kills and paines not?

Clow. Truly I have him: but I would not be the partie that should desire you to touch him, for his byting is immortall: those that doe dye of it, doe seldome or never recover.

Cleo. Remember'st thou any that have dyed on't?

Clow. Very many men and women too. I heard of one of them no longer than yesterday, a very honest woman, but something given to lye, as a woman should not doe, but in the way of honesty, how she dyed of the byting of it, what paine she felt: Truly, she makes a very good report o'th' worme: but he that will beleve all that they say, shall never be saved by halfe that they doe: but this is most fallible, the Worme's an odde Worme.

Cleo. Get thee hence, farewell.

Clow. I wish you all joy of the Worme.

Cleo. Farewell.

Clow. You must thinke this (looke you) that the Worme will doe his kinde.

Cleo. I, I, fare well.

Cleo. Looke you, the Worme is not to be trusted, but in the keeping of wise people: for indeed, there is no goodnesse in the Worme.

Cleo. Take no care, it shall be heeded.

Cleo. Very good: give it nothing I pray you, for it is not worth the feeding.

Cleo. Will it eate me?

Cleo. You must not thinke I am so simple, but I know the divell himselfe will not eate a woman: I know, that a woman is a dish for the gods, if the divell dresse her not. But truly, these same whorson Divels doe the gods great harme in their women: for in every ten that they make, the divels marre five.

Cleo. Well, get thee gone, farewell.

Cleo. Yes forsooth, I wish you joy o'th' worme. Exit.

Cleo. Give me my Robe, put on my Crowne, I have Immortall longings in me. Now no more
The juyce of Egypts Grape shall moyst this lip.
Yare, yare, good Iras quicke: me thinks I heare

Anthony call: I see him rowse himselfe
To praise my Noble Act: I heare him mocke
The lucke of Cesar, which the gods give men
To excuse their after wrath. Husband, I come:
Now to that name, my courage prove my Title.
I am Fire, and Ayre; my other Elements
I give to baser life. So, have you done?
Come then, and take the last warmth of my lippes.
Farewell kinde Charmian, Iras, long farewell.
Have I the Aspicke in my lips? Doest fall?
If thou, and Nature can so gently part,
The stroke of death is as a Lovers pinch,
Which hurts, and is desir'd. Doest thou lie still?
If thus thou vanishest, thou tell'st the world,
It is not worth leave taking.

Char. Dissolve thicke Cloud, & Raine, that I may say,
The gods themselves doe weepe.

Cleo. This proves me base:

If she proves the curled Anthony,
Hee'l make demand of her, and I pend that kisse
Which is my heaven to have. Come thou mortall
With thy sharpe teeth this knot intricate, (wretch,
Of life at once untie: Poore venomous Foole,
Be angry and dispatch. Oh couldst thou speake,
That I might heare thee call great Cesar Asse, unpolicied.

Char. Oh Easterne starre.

Cleo. Peace, peace:

Doest thou not see my Baby at my breast,
That suckes the Nurse asleepe.

Char. O breake! O breake!

Cleo. As sweet as Balme, as soft as Ayre, as gentle.
O Anthony! Nay I will take thee too.

What should I stay —

Dyes.

Char. In this wilde world? So fare thee well:
Now boast thee Death, in thy possession lies
A Lasse unparell'd. Downy Windowes cloze,
And golden Phoebus never be beheld
Of eyes againe so Royall: your Crownes away,
Ile mend it, and then play —

Enter the Guard rustling in, and Dolabella.

1 Guard. Wheres the Queene?

Char. Speake softly, wake her not.

1 Cesar hath sent.

Char. Too slow a Messenger.

Oh come apace, dispatch, I partly feele thee.

1 Approach hie,

All's not well: Cesar's beguilde.

2 Theres Dolabella sent from Cesar: call him.

1 What worke is here Charmian?

Is this well done?

Char. It is well done, and fitting for a Princeesse Descended of so many Royall Kings.

Ah Souldier.

Charmian dyes.

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. How goes it here?

2 Guard. All dead.

Dol. Cesar, thy thoughts
Touch their effects in this: thy selfe art comming
To see perform'd the dreaded Act which thou
So sought'st to hinder.

Enter Cesar and all his Traine, marching.

All. A way there a way for Cesar.

Dol.

Dol. Oh Sir, you are too sure an Augurer :
That you did feare, is done.

Cesar. Bravest at the last,
She leuell'd at our purposes, and being Royall
Tooke her owne way : the manner of their deaths,
I doe not see them bleed.

Dol. Who was last with them ?

I Guard. A simple countryman, that brought her Figs:
This was his Basket.

Cas. Poyson'd then.

I Guard. Oh Cesar :

This Charmian liv'd but now, she stood and spake :
I found her trimming up the Diadem ;
On her dead Mistris, tremblingly she stood,
And on the sodaine dropt.

Cesar. Oh noble weakenesse :
If they had swallow'd poyson, twould appeare.
By externall swelling : but she looks like sleepe,
As she would catch another Anthony
In her strong toyle of Grace,

Dol. Here on her brest,
There is a vent of blood, and something blowne,
The like is on her Arme.

I Guard. This an Aspects traile
And these Fig-leaves have slime upon them such As th' Aspicke leaves upon the Caves of Nyle.

Cas. Most probable

That so she dyed : for her Physitian tels me
She hath pursu'd Conclusions infinite
Of easie wayes to dye. Take up her bed,
And beare her Women from the Monument,
She shall be buried by her Anthony.
No Grave upon the earth shall clip in it
A paire so famous : high events as these Strike those that make them : and their story is No lesse in pittie, than his glory which Brought them to be lamented. Our Army shall
In solemne shew, attend this Funerall,
And then to Rome. Come Dolabella, see
High Order, in this great Solemnity.

Exeunt omnes.

FIN IS.

THE TRAGEDY OF CYMBELINE.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter two Gentlemen.

1 Gent.

YOU doe not meet a man but frownes.
Our bloods no more obey the heavens
Then our Courtiers :
Still seeme as do's the Kings.

2 Gent. But whats the matter ?

1 His daughter, and the heire of's kingdome (whom
He purpos'd to his wives sole sonne, a Widdow
That late he married) hath referr'd her selfe
Vnto a poore, but worthy Gentleman. Shes wedded,
Her Husband banish'd; she imprison'd, all
Is outward sorrow, though I thinke the King
Be touch'd at very heart.

2 None but the King ?

1 He that hath lost her too : so is the Queene,
That most desir'd the Match. But not a Courtier,
Although they weare their faces to the bent
Of the Kings lookes, hath a heart that is not Glad at the thing they scowle at.

2 And wy for ?

1 He that hath miss'd the Princeesse, is a thing
Too bad, for bad report : and he that hath her,
(I meane, that married her, alacke good man,
And therefore banish'd) is a Creature, such,
As to seeke through the Regions of the earth
For one, he like ; there would be something failing
In him, that should compare. I doe not thinke,
So faire an Outward, and such stuffe within Endowes a man, but hee.

2 You speake him farre.

1 I doe extend him (Sir) which himselfe,
Crush him together, rather then unfold
His measure dully.

2 Whats his name and Birth ?

1 I cannot delue him to the roote : his father
Was call'd Sicilius, who did joyne his honor
Against the Romanes, with Cassibellan,
But had his Titles by Tenants, whom
He serv'd with Glory and admir'd Successe :
So gain'd the Sur-addition, Leonatus.
And had (besides this Gentleman in question)
Two other Sonnes, who in the Warres o'th'time
Dy'de with their Swords in hand. For which their father
Then old, and fond of issue, tooke such sorrow
That he quit Being ; and his gentle Lady

Bigge of this Gentleman (our Theame) deceast
As he was borne. The King he takes the Babe
To his protection, calls him Posthumus Leonatus, Breedes him, and makes him of his Bed-chamber,
Puts to him all the Learnings that histime
Could make him the receiver of, which he tooke
As we doe ayre, fast as twas ministred,
And in's Spring, became a Harvest : Liv'd in Court
(Which rare it is to doe) most prais'd, most lov'd,
A sample to the yongest : to th'more Mature,
A glasse that feared them : and to the graver,
A child that guided Dotards. To his Mistris,
(For whom he now is banish'd) her owne price
Proclaimes how she esteem'd him ; and his Vertue
By her election may be truly read, what kind of man he is.

2 I honor him, even out of your report.

But pray you tell me, is she sole child to th'King ?

1 His onely child ?

He had two Sonnes (if this be worth your hearing, Marke it) the eldest of them, at three yeeres old
I'th'swathing cloathes, the other from their Nursery
Were stolne, and to this houre, no ghesse in knowledge
Which way they went.

2 How long is this agoe ?

1 Some twenty yeeres.

2 That a Kings Children should be so convey'd,
So slackely guarded, and the search so slow
That could not trace them.

1 How soere, tis strange,
Or that the negligence may well be laugh'd at :
Yet is it true Sir.

2 I doe well beleeve you,

1 We must forbear. Heere comes the Gentleman,
The Queene, and Princeesse.

Exunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter the Queene, Posthumus, and Imogen.

Que. No, be assur'd you shall not find me (Daughter)
After the slander of most Step-Mothers, Evill-ey'd unto you. You're my Prisoner, but Your Gaior shall deliver you the keyes

b b b

That

That locke up your restraint. For you Posthumus,
So soone as I can win th'offended King,
I will be knowne your Advocate : marry yet
The fire of Rage is in him, and twere good
You lean'd unto his Sentence, with what patience
Your wisdome may informe you.

Post. Please your Highnesse,
I will from hence to day.

Que. You know the perill :
He fetch a turne about the Garden, pittying
The pangs of barr'd Affections, though the King
Hath charg'd you should not speake together. Exit.

Imo. O dissembling Curtesie ! How fine this Tyrant Cantickle where she wounds ? My deereft Husband,
I something feare my fathers wrath, but nothing (Alwayes reserv'd my holy duty) what
His rage can doe on me. You must be gone,
And I shall heere abide the hourly shot
Of angry eyes : not comforted to live,
But that there is this Jewell in the world,
That I may see againe.

Post. My Queene, my Mistris :
O Lady, weepe no more, lest I give cause
To be suspected of more tendernesse
Then doth become a man. I will remaine
The loyallst husband, that did ere plight troth.
My residence in Rome, at one Filario's,
Who, to my Father was a friend, to me
Knowne but by Letter ; thither write (my Queene)
And with mine eyes, He drinke the words you send,
Though Inke be made of Gall.

Enter Queene.

Que. Be briefe, I pray you :
If the King come, I shall incurre, I know not
How much of his displeasure : yet He move him
To walk this way : I never doe him wrong,
But he do's buy my injuries, to be friendes.
Payes deere for my offences.

Post. Should we be taking leave
As long a terme as yet we have to live,
The loathnesse to depart, would grow : Adieu.

Imo. Nay, stay a little :
Were you but riding forth to ayre your selfe,
Such parting were too petty. Look heere (Love)
This Diamond was my Mothers ; take it (Heart)
But keepe it till you wooe another Wife,
When Imogen is dead.

Post. How, how ? Another ?
You gentle gods, give me but this I have,
And seare up my embracements from a next,
With bonds of death. Remaine, remaine thou heere,
While sense can keepe it on : And sweetest, fairest,
As I (my poore selfe) did exchange for you
To your so infinite losse : so in our trilles
I still winne of you. For my sake weare this,
It is a Manacle of Love, He place it
Vnpon this fayrest Prisoner.

Imo. O the Gods !
When shall we see againe ?

Enter Cymbeline, and Lords.

Post. Alacke, the King.

Cym. Thou basest thing, avoyd hence, from my sight :
If after this command thou fraught the Court
With thy unworthinesse, thou dyest. Away,
Thou'rt poyson to my blood.

Post. The gods protect you,

And blesse the good Remainders of the Court :
I am gone.

Exit.

Imo. There cannot be a pinch in dearh
More sharpe then this is.

Cym. O disloyall thing,
That shouldst repayre my youth, thou heap'st
A yeares age on me.

Imo. I beseech you Sir,
Harme not your selfe with your vexation,
I am senselesse of your Wrath ; a Touch more rare
Subdues all pangs, all feares.

Cym. Past Grace ? Obedience ?

Imo. Past hope, and in dispaire, that way past Grace.

Cym. That mightst have had
The sole Sonne of my Queene.

Imo. O blessed, that I might not : I chose an Eagle,
And did avoyd a Puttocke.

Cym. Thou took'st a Begger, wouldst have made my Throne, a Seate for basnesse.

Imo. No, I rather added a lustre to it.

Cym. O thou vilde one !

Imo. Sir,

It is your fault that I have lov'd Posthumus :
You bred him as my Play-fellow, and he is
A man, worth any woman : Over-buys me
Almost the summe he payes.

Cym. What ? art thou mad ?

Imo. Almost Sir : heaven restore me : would I were A Neat-heards Daughter, and my Leonatus
Our Neighbour-Shepherds Sonne.

Enter Queene.

Cym. Thou foolish thing ;
They were againe together : you have done
Not after our command. Away with her.
And pen her up.

Que. Beseech your patience : Peace
Deere Lady daughter, peace. Sweet Sovereigne,
Leave us to our selves, and make your selfe some comfort
Out of your best advice.

Cym. Nay let her languish
A drop of blood a day, and being aged Dye of this Folly. Exit.

Enter Pisanio.

Que. Fye, you must give way :
Heere is your Servant. How now Sir ? What newes ?

Pis. My Lord your Sonne, drew on my Master.

Que. Hah ?
No harme I trust is done ?

Pis. There might have beene,
But that my Master rather plaid, then fought,
And had no helpe of Anger : they were parted
By Gentlemen, at hand.

Que. I am very glad on't.

Imo. Your Son's my fathers friend, he takes his part
To draw upon an Exile, O brave Sir,
I would they were in Affricke both together,
My selfe by with a Needle, that I might pricke
The goer backe. Why came you from your Master ?

Pis. On his command : he would not suffer me
To bring him to the haven : lest these Notes
Of what commands I should be subject to,
When't pleas'd you to employ me.

Que. This hath beene
Your faithfull Servant : I dare lay mine honour
He will remaine so.

Pis. I humbly thanke your highnesse.

Que.

Que. Pray walke a-while.
Imo. About some halfe houre hence,
 Pray you speake with me;
 You shall (at least) goe see my Lord aboard.
 For this time leave me.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Clotten, and two Lords.

1 Sir, I would advise you to shift a Shirt; the Violence of Action hath made you reeke as a Sacrifice: where ayre comes out, ayre comes in: There's none abroad so wholesome as that you vent.

Clot. If my Shirt were bloody, then to shift it.
 Have I hurt him?

2 No faith: not so much as his patience.

1 Hurt him? His bodie's a passable Carkasse if he be not hurt. It is a through-fare for Steele if it be not hurt.

2 His Steele was in debt, it went oth' Backe-side the Towne.

Clot. The Villaine would not stand me.

2 No, but he fled forward still, toward your face.

1 Stand you? you have Land enough of your owne: But he added to your having, gave you some ground.

2 As many Inches, as you have Oceans (Puppies.)

Clot. I would they had not come betweene us.

2 So would I, till you had measur'd how long a foole you were upon the ground.

Clot. And that she should love this fellow, and refuse me.

2 If it be a sin to make a true election, she is damn'd.

1 Sir, as I told you alwayes: her Beauty and her Braine goe not together. Shees a good signe, but I have scene small reflection of her wit.

2 She shines not upon Fooles, lest the reflection should hurt her.

Clot. Come, Ile to my Chamber: would there had beene some hurt done.

2 I wish not so, unlesse it had bin the fall of an Asse, which is no great hurt.

Clot. You'll goe with us?

1 Ile attend your Lordship.

Clot. Nay come, lets goe together.

2 Well my Lord.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Imogen, and Pisanio.

Imo. I would thou grewst unto the shores oth'haven,
 And questionedst every Saile: if he should write,
 And I not have it, twere a Paper lost
 As offer'd mercy is: What was the last
 That he spake to thee?

Pisa. It was his Queene, his Queene.

Imo. Then waw'd his Handkerchiefe?

Pisa. And kist it, Madam.

Imo. Senselesse Linnen, happier therein then I:
 And that was all?

Piso. No Madam: for so long

As he could make me with his eye, or eare,
 Distinguish him from others, he did keepe
 The Decke, with Glove, or Hat, or Handkerchife,
 Still waving, as the fits and stirres of's mind
 Could best expresse how slow his Soule say'd on,
 How swift his Ship.

Imo. Thou shouldst have made him
 As little as a Crow, or lesse, ere left
 To after-eye him.

Pisa. Madam, so I did.

Imo. I would have broke mine eye-strings;
 Crack'd them, but to looke upon him, till the diminution
 Of space, had pointed him sharpe as my Needle:
 Nay, followed him, till he had melted from
 The finalnesse of a Gnat, to ayre: and then
 Have turn'd mine eye, and wept. But good Pisanio,
 When shall we heare from him.

Pisa. Be assur'd Madam,
 With his next vantage.

Imo. I did not take my leave of him, but had Most pretty things to say: Ere I could tell him
 How I would thinke on him at certaine houres,
 Such thoughts, and such: Or I could make him sweare,
 The Shees of Italy should not betray
 Mine Interest, and his Honor: or have charg'd him
 At the sixt houre of Morne, at Noone, at Midnight,
 T'encounter me with Orifons, for then
 I am in heaven for him: Or ere I could,
 Give him that parting kisse, which I had set
 Betwixt two charming words, comes in my father,
 And like the Tyrannous breathing of the North,
 Shakes all our buddes from growing.

Enter a Lady.

Lad. The Queene (Madam)
 Desires your highnesse Company.

Imo. Those things I bid you doe, get them dispatch'd,
 I will attend the Queene.

Pisa. Madam, I shall.

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Philario, Iachimo, a Frenchman, a Dutchman, and a Spaniard.

Iach. Beleeve it Sir, I have scene him in Britaine; he was then of a Cressent note, expected to prove so worthy, as since he hath beene allowed the name of. But I could then have look'd on him, without the helpe of Admiration, though the Catalogue of his endowments had bin tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by Items.

Phil. You speake of him when he was lesse furnish'd, then now he is, with that which makes him both without, and within.

French. I have scene him France: we had very many there, could behold the Sunne, with as firme eyes as he.

Iach. This matter of marrying his King Daughter, wherein he must be weighed rather by her yalew, then his owne, words him (I doubt not) a great deale from the matter.

French. And then his banishment.

Iach. I, and the approbation of those that weepe this lamentable divorce under her colours, are wonderfully to extend him, be it but to fortifie here judgement, which else an easie battery might lay flat, for taking a Begger without lesse quality. But how comes it, he is to sojourne with you? How creepes acquaintance?

Phil. His father and I were Souldiers together, to whom I have bin often bound for no lesse then my life.

Enter Posthumus.

Heere comes the Britaine. Let him be so entertained amongst you, as suites with Gentlemen of your knowing, to a stranger of his quality. I beseech you all be better knowne to this Gentleman, whom I commend to you, as a Noble Friend of mine. How Worthy he is, I will leave to appeare hereafter, rather then story him in his owne hearing.

Fren. Sir, we have knowne together in Orleance.

Post. Since when I have bin debtor to you for courtesies, which I will be ever to pay, and yet pay still.

Fren. Sir, you ore-rate my poore kindnesse, I was glad I did attone my Countryman and you; it had beene pittie you should have beene put together, with so mortall a purpose, as then each bore, upon importance of so flight and triviall a nature.

Post. By your pardon Sir, I was then a young Traveller, rather shunn'd to goe even with what I heard, then in my every action to be guided by others experiences: but upon my mended judgement (if I offend to say it is mended) my Quarrell was not altogether flight.

French. Faith yes, to bee put to the arbitrement of Swords, and by such two, that would by all likelyhood have confounded one the other, or have false both.

Iach. Can we with manners, aske what was the difference?

Fren. Safely, I thinke, twas a contention in publicke, which may (without contradiction) suffer the report. It was much like an argument that fell out last night, where each of us fell in praise of our Country-Mistresses. This Gentleman, at that time vouching (and upon warrant of bloody affirmation) his to be more Faire, Vertuous, Wise, Chaste, Constant, Qualified, and lesse attemptible then any, the rarest of our Ladies in France.

Iach. That Lady is not now living: or this Gentlemans opinion by this worne out.

Post. She holds her Vertue still, and I my mind.

Iach. You must not so farre preferre her, fore ours of Italy.

Post. Being so farre provok'd as I was in France: I would abate her nothing, though I professe my selfe her Adorer, not her friend.

Iach. As faire, and as good: a kind of hand in hand comparifon, had beene something too faire, and too good for any Lady in Britany: if she went before others. I have seene as that Diamond of yours out-lusters many I have beheld. I could not beleieve she excelled many: but I have not seene the most pretious Diamond that is, nor you the Lady.

Post. I prais'd her, as I rated her: so doe I my Stone.

Iach. What doe you esteeme it at?

Post. More then the world enjoyes.

Iach. Either your unparagon'd Mistris is dead, or shes out-priz'd by a trifle.

Post. You are mistaken: the one may be sold or given, or if there were wealth enough for the purchases, or merite for the gift. The other is not a thing for sale, and onely the gift of the gods.

Iach. Which the gods have given you?

Post. Which by their Graces I will keepe.

Iach. You may weare her in title yours: but you know strange Fowle light upon neighbouring Ponds. Your Ring may be stolne too, so your brace of unprizeable Estimations, the one is but fraile, and the other Casual. A cunning Thiefe, or a (that way) accomplish'd Courtier, would hazzard the winning both of first and last.

Post. Your Italy, containes none so accomplish'd a Courtier to convince the honour of my Mistris: if in the holding or losse of that, you terme her fraile, I doe nothing doubt you have store of Theeves, notwithstanding I feare not my Ring.

Phil. Let us leave heere Gentlemen.

Post. Sir, with all my heart. This worthy Signior I thanke him, makes no stranger of me, we are familiar at first.

Iach. With five times so much conversation, I should get ground of your faire Mistris; make her goe backe, even to the yeilding, had I admittance, and opportunity to friend.

Post. No, no.

Iach. I dare thereupon pawne the moyty of my Estate, to your Ring, which in my opinion ore-values it something: but I make my wager rather against your Confidence, then her Reputation. And to barre your offence heerein to, I durst attempt it against any Lady in the world.

Post. You are a great deale abus'd in too bold a perswasion, and I doubt not you sustaine what y'are worthy of, by your Attempt.

Iach. Whats that?

Post. A Repulse though your Attempt (as you call it) deserve more; a punishment too.

Phi. Gentlemen, enough of this, it came in too suddenly, let it dye as it was borne, and I pray you be better acquainted.

Iach. Would I had put my Estate, and my Neighbors on th'approbation of what I have spoke.

Post. What Lady would you chuse to assaile?

Iach. Yours, whom in constancy you thinke stands so safe. I will lay you ten thousands Duckets to your Ring, that commend me to the Court where your Lady is, with no more advantage then the opportunity of a second conference, and I will bring from thence, that honor of hers, which you imagine so reserv'd.

Posthumus. I will wage against your Gold, Gold to it: My Ring I hold deere as my finger, tis part of it.

Iach. You are a friend, and therein the wiser: if you buy Ladies flesh at a Million a Dram, you cannot preserve it from tainting; but I see you have some Religion in you, that you feare.

Post. This is but a custome in your tongue: you beare a graver purpose I hope.

Iach. I am the Master of my speeches, and I would under-goe what spoken, I sweare.

Posthumus. Will you? I shall but lend my Diamond till your returne: let there be Covenants drawne between's. My Mistris exceeds in goodnesse, the hugenesse of your unworthy thinking. I dare you to this match: heres my Ring.

Phil. I will have it no lay.

Iach. By the gods it is one: if I bring you no sufficient testimony that I have enjoy'd the deereft bodily part of your Mistris: my ten thousand Duckets are yours
so

so is your Diamond too : if I come off, and leave her in such honor as you have trust in : She your Jewell, this your Jewell, and my Gold are yours : provided I have your commendation, for my more entertainment.

Post. I embrace these Conditions, let us have Articles betwixt us : onely thus farre you shall answer, if you make your voyage upon her, and give me directly to understand, you have prevayl'd, I am no further your Enemy, she is not worth our debate. If she remaine unse-duc'd, you not making it appeare otherwise : for your ill opinion, and th'assault you have made to her chastity, you shall answer me with your Sword.

Iach. Your hand, a Covenant : we will have these things set downe by lawfull Counsell, and straight away for Britaine, lest the Bargain should catch cold, and sterve : I will fetch my Gold, and have our two Wagers recorded.

Post. Agreed.

French. Will this hold, thinke you.

Phil. Signior Iachimo will not from it.

Pray let us follow em.

Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Queene, Ladies, and Cornelius.

Quee. Whiles yet the dewe's on ground
Gather those Flowers,
Make haste. Who has the note of them ?

Lad. I Madam.

Quee. Dispatch.

Exeunt Ladies.

Now Master Doctor, have you brought those drugges :

Cor. Pleaseth your highnesse, I : here they are, Madam :
But I beseech your Grace, without offence
(My Conscience bids me aske) wherefore you have Commanded of me these most poysonous Compounds,
Which are the moovers of a languishing death :
But though slow, deadly.

Quee. I wonder, Doctor,
Thou ask'st me such a Question ; have I not beene
Thy Pupill long ? hast thou not learn'd me how To make Perfumes ? Distill ? Preserve ? Yea so,
That our great King himselfe doth woe me oft
For my Confections ? having thus farre proceeded,
(Vnlesse thou think'st me divellish) ist not meete
That I did amplifie my judgement in Other Conclusions ? I will try the forces
Of these thy Compounds, on such Creatures as We count not worth the hanging (but none humane)
To try the vigour of them, and apply
Allayments to their Act, and by them gather
Their severall vertues, and effects.

Corn. Your highnesse
Shall from this practise, but make hard your heart :
Besides, the seeing these effects will be
Both noysome and infectious.

Quee. O content thee.

Enter Pisanio.

Heere comes a flattering Rascall, upon him
Will I first worke : Hes for his Master,
And enemy to my Sonne. How now Pisanio ?
Doctor, your service for this time is ended,
Take your owne way.

Cor. I doe suspect you, Madam,
But you shall doe no harme.

Quee. Hearke thee a word.

Cor. I doe not like her. She doth thinke she has Strange ling'ring poysons : I doe know her spirit,
And will not trust one of her malice, with
A drugge of such damn'd Nature : Those she has,
Will stupifie and dull the Sense a while,
Which first (perchance) she'll prove on Cats and Dogs,
Then afterward up higher : but there is
No danger in what shew of death it makes,
More then the locking up the Spirits a time,
To be more fresh, reviving. She is fool'd
With a most false effect : and I the truer,
So to be false with her.

Quee. No further service, Doctor,
Vntill I send for thee.

Cor. I humbly take my leave.

Exit.

Quee. Weepes she still (saist thou ?)

Dost thou thinke in time

She will not quench, and let instructions enter
Where Folly now possesses ? Doe thou worke :
When thou shalt bring me word she loves my Sonne,
Ile tell thee on the instant, thou art then
As great as is thy Master : Greater, for His Fortunes all lye speechlesse, and his name
Is at last gaspe. Returne he cannot, nor Continue where he is : To shift his being,
Is to exchange one misery with another,
And every day that comes, comes to decay
A dayes worke in him. What shalt thou expect
To be depend on a thing that leanes ?
Who cannot be new built, nor has no friends
So much, as but to prop him ? Thou tak'st up
Thou knowst not what : But take it for thy labour,
It is a thing I make, which hath the King
Five times redem'd from death. I doe not know
What is more Cordiall. Nay I prethee take it,
It is an earnest of a farther good
That I meane to thee. Tell thy Mistris how
The case stands with her : doo't, as from thy selfe :
Thinke what a chance thou changeest on, but thinke
Thou hast thy Mistris still, too boote, my Sonne.
Who shall take notice of thee. Ile move the King
To any shape of thy Preferment, such
As thou'lt desire : and then my selfe, I chiefly,
That set thee on to this desert, am bound
To loade thy merit richly. Call my women. Exit Pisanio
Thinke on my words. A slye, and constant knave,
Not to be shak'd : the Agent for his Master,
And the Remembrancer of her, to hold
The hand fast to her Lord. I have given him that,
Which if he take, shall quite unpeople her
Of Leidgers for her Sweet : and which she after,
Except she bend her humor, shall be assur'd
To taste of too.

Enter Pisanio, and Ladies.

So, so : Well done, well done :
The Violets, Cowslippes, and the Prime-Roses
Beare to my Closet : Fare thee well, Pisanio, Thinke on my words. Exit Queene, and Ladies.

Pisa. And shall doe :
But when to my good Lord, I prove untrue,
Ile choake my selfe : theres all Ile doe for you.

Exit.
Scena

Scena Septima.

Enter Imogen alone.

Imo. A Father cruell, and a Stepdame false,
A foolish Suitor to a Wedded Lady,
That hath her Husband banish'd : O, that Husband,
My supreme Crowne of griefe, and those repeated
Vexations of it. Had I bin Theefe-Itolne,
As my two Brothers, happy ; but most miserable
Is the desire thats glorious. Blessed be those
How meane so ere, that have their honest wills,
Which seasons comfort. Who may this be ? Fye.

Enter Pisanio, and Iachimo.

Pisa. Madam, a Noble Gentleman of Rome,
Comes from my Lord with Letters.

Iach. Change you, Madam !
The Worthy Leonatus is in safety,
And greets your Highnesse deerely.

Imo. Thankes good Sir,
You're kindly welcome.

Iach. All of her, that is out of doore, most rich :
If she be furnish'd with a mind so rare,
She is alone th' Arabian-Bird ; and I
Have lost the wager. Boldnesse be my Friend :
Arme me Audacity from head to foote,
Or like the Parthian I shall flying fight,
Rather directly flye.

Imogen reads.

He is one of the Noblest nore, to whose kindnesse I am most infinitely tyed. Reflect upon him accordingly, as you value your trust.

Leonatus.

So farre I reade aloud,
But even the very middle of my heart
Is warm'd by th'rest, and take it thankfully.
You are as welcome (worthy Sir) as I
Have words to bid you, and shall finde it so
In all that I can doe.

Iach. Thankes fairest Lady :
What are men mad ? Hath Nature given them eyes
To see this valuted Arch, and the rich Crop
Of Sea, and Land, which can distinguish twixt
The fiery Orbes above, and the twinn'd Stones
Vpon the number'd Beach, and can we not Partition make with Spectales so pretious
Twixt faire, and foule ?

Imo. What makes your admiration ?

Iach. It cannot be ith'eye : for Apes, and Monkeyes Twixt two such Shes, would chatter this way, and Contemne with mowes the other. Nor ith judgement :
For Idiots in this case of fauour, would
Be wisely definit : Nor ith Appetite.
Sluttery to such neate Excellence, oppos'd
Should make desire vomit emptinesse,
Not so allur'd to feed.

Imo. What is the matter trow ?

Iach. The Cloyed will :
That satiate yet unsatisf'd desire, that Tub
Both fill'd and running : Ravening first the Lambe,
Longs after for the Garbage.

Imo. What, deere Sir,
Thus rap's you ? Are you well ?

Iach. Thankes Madam, well : Beseech you Sir, Desire my Mans abode, where I did leave him :
Hes strange and peevishi.

Pisa. I was going Sir,
To give him welcome.

Imo. Continues well my Lord ?
His health beseech you ?

Iach. Well, Madam.

Imo. Is he dispos'd to mirth ? I hope he is.

Iach. Exceeding pleasant : none a stranger there,
So merry, and so gamefome : he is calld
The Britaine Reveller.

Imo. When he was heere
He did incline to sadnesse, and oft times
Not knowing why.

Iach. I never saw him sad.

There is a Frenchman his Companion, one
An eminent Monsieur, that it seemes much loves
A Gallian-Girle at home. He furnaces
The thicke sides from him ; whiles the iolly Britaine,
(Your Lord I meane) laughes froms free lungs : cries oh,
Can my sides hold, to thinke that man who knowes
By History, Report, or his owne proote
What woman is, yea what she cannot choose
But must be : wills free houres languish,
For assured bondage ?

Imo. Will my Lord say so ?

Iach. I Madam, with his eyes in flood with laughter,
It is a Recreation to be by
And heare him mocke the Frenchman :
But heavn's know some men are much too blame.

Imo. Not he I hope.

Iach. Not he :

But yet heavens bounty towards him, might
Be us'd more thankfully. In himselfe tis much ;
In you which I account his beyond all Talents.
Whilist I am bound to wonder, I am bound
To pittie too.

Imo. What doe you pittie Sir ?

Iach. Two Creatures heartily.

Imo. Am I one Sir ?

You looke on me : what wracke discernes you in me
Deserves your pittie ?

Iach. Lamentable : what
To hide me from the radiant Sun, and solace Ith Dungeon by a Snuffe ?

Imo. I pray you Sir,
Deliver with more opennesse your answers
To my demands. Why doe you pittie me ?

Iach. That others doe
(I was about to say) enjoy your —— but
It is an office of the gods to venge it,
Not mine to speake out.

Imo. You doe seeme to know
Something of me, or what concernes me ; pray you
Since doubting things goe ill, often hurts more
Then to be sure they doe. For Certainties
Either are past remedies ; or timely knowing,
The remedy then borne. Discover to me
What both you spur and stop.

Iach. Had I this cheek
To bathe my lips upon : this hand, whose touch,
(Whose every touch) would force the feelers soule
To thoath of Loyalty. This object, which Takes prisoner the wild motion of mine eye,
Fixing it onely heere, should I (damnd then)

Slaver

Slaver with lippes as common as the staires
That mount the Capitoll: Ioyne gripes, with hands Made hard with houely falshood (falshood as
With labour:) then by peeping in an eye
Base and illustrious as the smoaky light
Thats fed with stinking Tallow: it were fit
That all the plagues of hell should at one time
Encounter such revolt.

Imo. My Lord, I feare
Has forgot Brittain.

Iach. And himsele, not I
Inclin'd to this intelligence, pronounce
The Beggery of his change: but tis your Graces
That from my mutest Conscience, to my tongue,
Charmes this report out.

Imo. Let me heare no more.

Iach. O deer est Soule: your Cause doth strike my heart
With pittie, that doth make me sicke. A Lady
So faire, and fasten'd to an Empery
Would make the greatst King double, to be partner'd
With Tomboyes hyr'd, with that selfe-exhibition
Which your owne Coffers yeeld: with diseas'd ventures
That play with all infirmities for Gold,
Which rottenesse can lend Nature. Such boyl'd stuffe
As well might poyson Poyson. Be reveng'd,
Or she that bore you, was no Queene, and you
Recoyle from your great Stocke.

Imo. Reveng'd:

How should I be reveng'd? if this be true,
(As I have such a heart, that both mine eares Must not in haste abuse) if it be true,
How should I be reveng'd?

Iach. Should he make me
Live like Diana's Priest, betwixt cold sheets;
Whiles he is valting variable Ramps
In your despight, upon your purse: revenge it.
I dedicate my selfe to your sweet pleasure,
More Noble then that runagate to your bed,
And will continue fast to your Affection,
Stillclose, as sure.

Imo. What hoa, Pisanio?

Iach. Let me my service tender on your lippes.

Imo. Away, I doe condemne mine eares, that have So long attended thee. If thou wert honourable Thou wouldst have told this tale for Vertue, not
For such an end thou seek'st, as base, as strange:
Thou wrongst a Gentleman, who is as farre
From thy report, as thou from honor: and Solicitst heere a Lady, that disdaines
Thee, and the Divell alike. What hoa, Pisanio?
The King my father shall be made acquainted
Of thy Assault: if he shall thinke it fit,
A sawcy Stranger in his Court, to Mart
As in a Romish Stew, and to expound
His beastly minde to us; he hath a Courte
He little cares for, and a Daughter, whom
He not respects at all. What hoa, Pisanio?

Iach. O happy Leonatus I may say,
The credit that thy Lady hath of thee
Deserves thy trust, and thy most perfect goodnesse
Her assur'd credit, Blessed live you long,
A Lady to the worthiest Sir, that ever
Country call'd his; and you his Mistris, onely
For the most worthiest fit. Give me your pardon.
I have spoke this to know if your Affiance
Were deeply rooted, and shall make your Lord,

That which he is, new ore; and he is one
The truest manner'd: such a holy Witch,
That he enchants Societies into him:
Halfe all mens hearts are his.

Imo. You make amends.

Iach. He fits amongst men, like a descended god:
He hath a kinde of honor sets him off,
More then a mortall seeming. Be not angry
(Most mighty Princeesse) that I have adventur'd
To try your taking of a false report, which hath Honour'd with confirmation your great Iudgement,
In the election of a Sir, so rare.
Which you know, cannot erre. The love I beare him,
Made me to fan you thus, but the gods made you (Vnlike all others) chaffelesse. Pray your pardon.

Imo. Alls well Sir:

Take my powre ith' Court for yours:

Iach. My humble thanks: I had almost forgot
T'intreat your Grace, but in a small request,
And yet of moment too, for it concernes,
Your Lord, my selfe, and other Noble friends
Are partners in the businesse.

Imo. Pray what ist?

Iach. Some dozen Romanies of us, and your Lord
(The best feather of our wing) have mingled summes
To buy a Present for the Emperor:
Which I (the factor for the rest) have done
In France: tis Plate of rare device, and Jewels
Of rich, and exquisite forme, their valewes great,
And I am something curious, being strange,
To have them in safe stowage: May it please you
To take them in protection.

Imo. Willingly:

And pawne mine honor for their safety, since
My Lord hath interest in them, I will kepe them
In my Bed chamber:

Iach. They are in a Trunke
Attended by my men: I will make bold
To send them to you, onely for this night:
I must aboard to morrow,

Imo. One, no.

Iach. Yes I beseech: or I shall short my word:
By length'ning my returne. From Gallia,
I crost the Seas on purpose, and on promise
To see your Grace.

Imo. I thanke you for your paines:
But not away to morrow.

Iach. O I must Madam.
Therefore I shall beseech you, if you please
To greet your Lord with writing, doo't to night,
I have out-stood my time, which is materiall
To th'tender of our Present.

Imo. I will write:
Send your Trunke to me, it shall safe be kept,
And truly yeilded you: you're very welcome. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Clotten, and the two Lords.

Clot. Was there ever man had such lucke? when I kist the Iacke upon an up-cast, to be hit away? I had a hundred pound on't; and then a whorson Iacke-an-Apes, must

must take me up for swearing, as if I borrowed mine oathes of him, and might not spend them at my pleasure.

1 What got he by that? you have broke his pate with your Bowle.

2 If his wit had bin like him that broke it: it would have run all out.

Clot. When a Gentleman is dispos'd to sweare: it is not for any standers by to curtall his oathes. Ha?

2 No my Lord; nor crop the eares of them.

Clot. Whorson dog: I give him satisfaction? would he had bin one of my Ranke.

2 To have smell'd like a Foole.

Clot. I am not vext more at any thing tin th'earth: a pox on't. I had rather not be so Noble as I am: they dare not fight with me, because of the Queene my Mother: every Iacke-Slave hath his belly full of fighting, and I must goe up and downe like a Cocke, that no body can match.

2 You are Cocke and Capon too, and you crow Cocke, with your combe on.

Clot. Sayest thou?

2 It is not fit you Lordship should undertake every Companion, that you give offence to.

Clot. No, I know that: but it is fit I should commit offence to my inferiors.

2 I, it is fit for your Lordship onely.

Clot. Why so I say.

1 Did you heare of a Stranger thats come to Court to night?

Clot. A Stranger, and I not know on't?

2 Hes a strange fellow himsele, and knowes it not.

1 Theres an Italian come, and tis though one of Leonatus friendes.

Clot. Leonatus? A banisht Rascall; and he's another. whatsoever he be. Who told you of this Stranger?

1 One of your Lordships Pages.

Clot. Is it fit I went to looke upon him? Is there no derogation in't?

2 You cannot derogate my Lord.

Clot. Not easily I thinke.

2 You are a Foole granted; therefore your Issues being foolish doe not derogate.

Clot. Come, Ile goe see this Italian: what I have lost to day at Bowles, Ile winne to night of him. Come: go.

2 Ile attend your Lordship.

That such a crafty Divell as is his Mother Should yeild the world this Ass: a woman, that Beares all downe with her Braine, and this her Sonne, Cannot take two from twenty for his heart, And leave eightene. Alas poore Princeesse, Thou divine Imogen, what thou endur'st, Betwixt a Father by thy Step-dame govern'd, A Mother hourly coynning plots: A Wooer, More hatefull then the foule expulsion is Of thy deere husband, Then that horrid Act Of the divorce, he'd make the heavens hold firme The walls of thy deere honor. Keepe unshak'd That Temple thy faire mind, that thou maiest stand T'enjoy thy banish'd Lord: and this great Land. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Imogen, in her Bed, and a Lady.

Imo. Whos there? My woman: Helena?

La. Please you Madam.

Imo. What houre is it?

Lad. Almost midnight, Madam.

Imo. I have read three houres then:

Mine eyes are weake,

Fold downe the leafe where I have left: to bed.

Take not away the Taper, leave it burning:

And if thou canst awake by foure o'th' clocke,

I prethee call me: Sleepe hath seiz'd me wholly.

To your protection I commend me, gods,

From Fayries, and the Tempters of the night,

Guard me beseech yce.

Sleeper.

Iachimo from the Truncke.

Iach. The Crickets sing, and mans ore-labor'd sence,

Repaires it selfe by rest: Our Tarquinius thus

Did softly presse the Rushes, ere he waken'd

The Chastity he wounded. Cytherea;

How bravely thou becomst thy Bed; fresh Lilly,

And whiter then the Sheets: that I might touch,

But kisse, one kisse. Rubies unparagon'd,

How deerely they do't: Tis her breathing that

Perfumes the Chamber thus: the flame oth' Taper

Bowes toward her, and would under-peepe her lids.

To see th'inclosed Lights, now Canopied

Vnder the windowes, White and Azure lac'd

With Blew of heavens owne tinct, But my designs.

To note the Chamber, I will write all downe,

Such, and such pictures: There the window, such

Th'adornement of her Bed; the Arras, Figures,

Why such, and such: and the Contents oth' Story.

Ah, but so the naturall notes about her Body,

Above ten thousand meaner Moveables

Would testifie, t'enrich mine Inventory.

O sleepe, thou Ape of death, lye dull upon her,

And be her Sence but as a Monument,

Thus in a Chappell lying. Come off, come off;

As slippery as the Gordian-knot was hard.

Tis mine, and this will witnesse outwardly,

As strongly as the Conscience do's within:

To th'madding of her Lord. On her left brest

A mole Cinque-spotted: Like the Crimson drops

P'th bottome of a Cowslippe. Heeres a Voucher,

Stronger then ever Law could make: this Secret

Will force him think, I have pick'd the locke, and t'ane

The treasure of her honor. No more: to what end?

Why should I write this downe, thats riveted,

Screw'd to my memory. She hath bin reading late,

The Tale of Terens, heere the leaues turn'd downe

Where Philomela gave up. I have enough,

To th' Truncke againe, and shut the spring of it.

Swift, swift, you Dragons of the night, that dawning

May beare the Ravens eye: I lodge in feare,

Though this a heavenly Angell: hell is heere.

Clocke Strikes,

One, two, three: time, time.

Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Clotten, and Lords.

1 Your Lordship is the most patient man in losse, the most coldest that turn'd up Ace.

Clot. It would make any man cold to loose.

1 But not every man patient after the noble temper of your Lordship; You are most hot, and furious when you winne.

Clot.

Winning will put any man into courage : if I could get this foolish Imogen, I should have Gold enough : its almost morning, is't not ?

1 Day, my Lord,

Clot. I would this Musicke would come : I am advised to give her Musicke a mornings, they say it will penetrate.

Enter Musicians.

Come on, tune : if you can penetrate here with your fingering, so we'll try with tongue too : if none will doe, let her remaine : but Ile never give o're. First, a very excellent good conceited thing ; after a wonderfull sweet aire, with admirable rich words to it, and then let her confider.

Song.

Hearke, hearke, the Larke at Heavens gate sings,

and Phoebus gins arise,

His Steeds to water at those Springs

on chalic'd Flowers that lyes :

And winking Mary-buds begin to ope their Golden eyes

With every thing that pretty is, my Lady sweet arise :

Arise, arise.

So, get you gone : if this penetrate, I will confider your Musicke the better : if it do not, it is a voyce in her eares which Horfe-haires, and Calves-guts, nor the voyce of unpaved Eunuch to boot, can never amend.

Enter Cymbeline, and Queene.

2 Heere comes the King.

Clot. I am glad I was up so late, for thats the reason I was up so earely : he cannot choose but take this Service I have done, fatherly. Good morrow to your Majesty, and to my gracious Mother.

Cym. Attend you here the doore of our stern daughter Will she not forth ?

Clot. I have assail'd her with Musickes, but she vouchsafes no notice.

Cym. The Exile of her Minion is too new. She hath not yet forgot him, some more time must weare the print of his remembrance out, And then she's yours.

Que. You are most bound to'th' King, Who lets goe by no vantages, that may Preferre you to his daughter : Frame your selfe To orderly folicits, and be friended With aptnesse of the season : make denials Encrease your Services : so seeme, as if You were inspir'd to doe those duties which You tender to her : that you in all obey her, Save when command to your dismission tends, And therein you are senselesse.

Clot. Senselesse ? Not so.

Mef. So like you (Sir) Ambassadors fr from Rome ; The one is Caius Lucius.

Cym. A worthy Fellow, Albeit he comes on angry purpose now ; But that's no fault of his : we must receive him According to the honor of his Sender, And towards himselfe, his goodnesse fore-spent on us We must extend our notice : Our deere Sonne, When you have given good morning to your Mistris, Attend the Queene, and us, we shall have need T'employ you towards this Romane. Come our Queene.

Exeunt.

Clot. If she be up, Ile speake with her : if not, Let her lye still, and dreame : by your leave hoa, I know her women are about her : what

If I doe line one of their hands, tis gold Which buyes admittance (oft it doth) yea and makes Dianna's Rangers false themselves, yeeld up Their Deere to'th' stand o'th Stealer : and tis gold Which makes the True-man kill'd, and saves the Theefe : Nay, sometime hangs both Theefe, and True-man : what Can it not doe, and undoo ? I will make One of her women Lawyer to me, for I yet not understand the case my selfe. By your leave.

Knockes.

Enter a Lady.

Lad. Who's there that knockes ?

Clot. A Gentleman.

Lad. No more.

Clot. Yes, and a Gentlewomans Sonne.

Lad. Thats more

Then some whose Taylors are as deere as yours, Can justly boast of : whats your Lordships pleasure ?

Clot. Your Ladies person, is she ready ?

Lad. I, to keepe her Chamber.

Clot. There is gold for you, Sell me your good report.

Lad. How my good name ? or to report of you What I shall thinke is good. The Princeesse.

Enter Imogen.

Clot. Good morrow fairest, Sister your sweet hand.

Imo. Good morrow Sir, you lay out too much paines For purchasing but trouble : the thanks I give, Is telling you that I am poore of thanks, And scarce can spare them.

Clot. Still I sweare I love you.

Imo. If you but said so, twere as deepe with me : If you sweare still, your recompence is still That I regard it not.

Clot. This is no answer.

Imo. But that you shall not say, I yeeld being silent, I would not speake. I pray you spare me, faith I shall unfold equall discourtesie To your best kindnesse : one of your great knowing Should learne (being taught) forbearance.

Clot. To leave you in your madnesse, twere my sinne, I will not.

Imo. Fooles are not mad folkes.

Clot. Doe you call me foole ?

Imo. As I am mad I doe :

If you'll be patient, Ile no more be mad, That cures us both. I am much sorry (Sir) You put me to forget a Ladies manners By being so verball : and learne now, for all, That I which know my heart, doe heere pronounce By th'very truth of it, I care not for you, And am so neere the lacke of Charity To accuse my selfe, I hate you : which I had : ather You felt, then make't my boast.

Clot. You sinne against Obedience, which you owe your father, for The Contract you pretend with that base Wretch, One, bred of Almshouses, and foster'd with cold dishes With scraps oth' Court : It is no Contract, none ; And though it be allowed in meaner parties (Yet who then he more meane) to knit their soules (On whom there is no more dependancy But Brats and Beggerie) in selfe-figur'd knot, Yet you are curb'd from that enlargement, by

The consequence oth' Crowne, and must not foyle
The precious note of it ; with a base Slave,
A Hilding for a Livory, a Squires Cloth,
A Pantler ; not so eminent.

Imo. Prophane Fellow :

Wert thou the Sonne of Jupiter, and no more,
But what thou art besides : thou wer't too base,
To be his Groome : thou wer't dignified enough
Even to the point of Envy, Iftwere made
Comparative for your Vertues, to be stil'd
The under Hangman of his Kingdome ; and hated
For being prefer'd so well.

Clot. The South-Fog rot him.

Imo. He never can meete more mischance, then come
To be but nam'd of thee. His meanest Garment
That ever hath but clipt his body, is dearer
In my respect, then all the haire above thee,
Were they all made such men : How now Pisanio?

Enter Pisanio.

Clot. His Garment ? Now the divell.

Imo. To Dorothy my woman hye thee presently.

Clot. His Garment ?

Imo. I am sprighted with a Foole,
Frighted, and angred worse : Goe bid my woman
Search for a Jewell, that too casually
Hath left mine Arme : it was thy Masters. Shrew me
If I would lose it for a Revenew,
Of any Kings in Europe. I doe thinke,
I saw't this morning : Confident I am,
Last night twas on mine Arme : I kifs'd it,
I hope it be not gone, to tell my Lord
That I kisse aught but him.

Pisa. Twill not be lost.

Imo. I hope so : goe and search.

Clot. You have abus'd me :

His meanest Garment ?

Imo. I, I said so Sir,

If you will make't an Action, call witnesse to't.

Clot. I will enforme your Father.

Imo. Your Mother too :

Shes my good Lady ; and will conceive, I hope
But the worst of me. So I leave your Sir,
To'th'worst of discontent.

Clot. He bereveng'd :

His meanest Garment ? Well.

Exit.

Exit.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Posthumus, and Philario.

Post. Feare it not Sir : I would I were so sure
To winne the King, as I am bold, her honour
Will remaine hers.

Phil. What meanes doe you make to him ?

Post. Not any : but abide the change of Time,
Quake in the pretent winters state, and wish
That warmer dayes would come : In these fear'd hopes
I barely gratifie your love ; they fayling
I must dye much your debtor.

Phil. Your very goodnesse, and your company,
Ore payes all I can doe. By this your King,
Hath heard of Great Augustus : Caius Lucius,
Will do's Commission throughly. And I thinke

Hee'le grant the Tribute : send th' Arrerages,
Or looke upon our Romanes, whose remembrance
Is yet fresh in their griefe.

Post. I doe beleeve

(Statist though I am none, nor like to be)
That this will prove a Warre ; and you shall heare
The Legion now in Gallia, sooner landed
In our not-fearing-Britaine, then have tydings
Of any penny Tribute paid. Our Countrymen
Are men more order'd then when Iulius Caesar
Smil'd at their lacke of skill, but found their courage
Worthy his frowning at. Their discipline,
(Now mingled with their courages) will make knowne
To their Approvers, they are People, such
That mend upon the world. Enter Iachimo.

Phil. See Iachimo.

Post. The swiftest harts, have posted you by land ;
And Windes of all the Corners kifs'd your Sailes.
To make your vessell nimble.

Phil. Welcome Sir.

Post. I hope the brievenesse of your answer, made
The speedinesse of your returne.

Iach. Your Lady,

Is one of the feyrest that I have look'd upon

Post. And therewithall the best, or let her beauty
Looke thorough a Casement to allure false hearts,
And be false with them.

Iach. Heere are Letters for you.

Post. Their tenure good I trust.

Iach. Tis very like.

Post. Was Caius Lucius in the Britaine Court,
When you were there ?

Iach. He was expected then,
But not approach'd.

Post. All is well yet,
Sparkles this Stone as it was wont, or is't not Too dull for your good wearing ?

Iach. If I have lost it,
I should have lost the worth of it in Gold,
Ile make a journey twice as farre, t'enjoy
A second night of such sweet shortnesse, which Was mine in Britaine, for the Ring is wonne.

Post. The Stones too hard to come by.

Iach. Not a whit,

Your Lady being so easie.

Post. Make not Sir,
Your losse, your Sport : I hope you know that we Must not continue friends.

Iach. Good Sir, we must
If you keepe Covenant : had I not brought
The knowledge of your Mistris home, I grant
We were to question farther ; but I now
Professe my selfe the winner of her honor,
Together with your Ring ; and not the wronger
Of her, or you, having proceeded but
By both your willes,

Post. If you can mak't apparant
That you have tasted her in Bed ; my hand,
And Ring is yours. If not, the foule opinion
You had of her pure honor ; gaines, or looses,
Your Sword, or mine, or Masterlesse leave both
To who shall finde them.

Iach. Sir, my Circumstances
Being so nere the truth, as I will make them,
Must first induce you to beleve : whose strength
I will confirme with oath, which I doubt not

You'll

You'll give me leave to spare, when you shall finde
You neede it not.

Post. Proceed.

Iach. First, her Bed-chamber (Where I confesse I slept not, but professe
Had that was well worth watching) it was hang'd
With Tapistry of Silke, and Silver, the Story
Proud Cleopatra, when she met her Roman,
And Cidrus swell'd above the Bankes, or for
The presse of Boates, or Pride: A peece of Worke
So bravely done, so rich, that it did strive
In Workmanship, and Value, which I wonder'd
Could be so rarely, and exactly wrought
Since the true life on't was——

Post. This is true:

And this you might have heard of heere, by me,
Or by some other.

Iach. More particulars
Must justifie my knowledge.

Post. So they must,
Or doe your Honour injury.

Iach. The Chimney
Is South the Chamber, and the Chimney-peece
Chaste Dian, bathing: never saw I figures
So likely to report themselves; the Cutter
Was as another Nature dumbe, out-went her,
Motion, and Breath left out.

Post. This is a thing
Which you might from Relation likewise reape,
Being, as it is, much spoke of.

Iach. The Roofe o'th' Chamber,
With golden Cherubins is fretted. Her Andirons
(I had forgot them) were two winking Cupids
Of Silver, each on one foote standing, nicely
Depending on their Brands.

Post. This is her honor:
Let it be granted you have seene all this (and praise
Be given to your remembrance) the description
Of what is in her Chamber, nothing saves
The wager you have laid.

Iach. Then if you can
Be pale, I begge but leave to ayre this Jewell: See,
And now tis up againe: it must be married
To that your Diamond, Ile keepe them.

Post. love——
Once more let me behold it: Is it that
Which I left with her?

Iach. Sir (I thanke her) that
She stript it from her Arme: I see her yet
Her pretty Action, did out-sell her glist,
And yet enrich'd it too: she gave it me,
And said, she priz'd it once.

Post. May be, she pluck'd it off
To send it me

Iach. She writes so to you? doth she?

Post. O no, no, no, tis true. Heere, take this too,
It is a Basiliske unto mine eye,
Killes me to looke on't: Let there be no Honor,
Where there is beauty: Truth, where semblance: Love,
Where theres another man. The Vowes of Women,
Of no more bondage be, to where they are made,
Then they are to their Vertues, which is nothing:
O, above measure false.

Phil. Have patience Sir,
And take your Ring againe, tis not yet wonne;
It may be probable she lost it: or

Who knowes if one of her women, being corrupted
Hath stolne it from her.

Post. Very true,

And so I hope he came by't: backe my Ring,
Render to me some corporall signe about her
More evident then this: for this wat stole.

Iach. By Iupiter, I had it from her Arme.

Post. Hearke you, he sweares: by Iupiter he sweares.
Tis true, nay keepe the Ring; tis true: I am sure
She would not loose it: her Attendants are
All sworne, and honorable: they induc'd to steale it?
And by a Stranger? No, he hath enjoy'd her,
The Cognisance of her incontinency
Is this: she hath bought the name of Whore, thus deerely
There, take thy hyre, and all the fiends of hell
Divide themselves betweene you.

Phil. Sir, be patient:

This is not strong enough to be beleev'd
Of one perswaded well of.

Post. Never talke on't:
She hath bin colted by him.

Iach. If you seeke
For further satisfying; under her Breast
(Worthy her pressing) lyes a Mole, right proud
Of that most delicate Lodging. By my life
I kist it, and it gave me present hunger
To feede againe, though full. You doe remember
This staine upon her?

Post. I, and it doth confirme
Another staine, as bigge as Hell can hold,
Were there no more but it.

Iach. Will you heare more?

Post. Spare your Arithmeticke,
Never count the Turnes: Once, and a Million.

Iach. Ile be sworne.

Post. No swearing:
If you will sweare you have not done't, you lye,
And I will kill thee if thou dost deny
Thou'lt made me Cuckold.

Iach. Ile deny nothing.

Post. O that I had her heere, to teare her Limb-meale;
I will goe there and doo't, ith' Court, before
Her father. Ile doe something. Exit.

Phil. Quite betides.

The government of Patience. You have wonne:
Lets follow him, and pervert the present wrath
He hath against himselfe.

Iach. With all my heart. Exeunt.

Enter Posthumus.

Post. Is there no way for Men to be, but Women
Must be halfe-workers? We are all Bastards,
And that most venerable man, which I
Dih call my father, was, I know not where
When I was stamp't. Some Coyner with his Toolles
Made me a counterfeit: yet my Mother seem'd
The Dian of that time: so doth my Wife
The Non-pareill of this Oh Vengeance, Vengeance!
Me of my lawfull pleasure she restrain'd,
And pray'd me oft forbearance: did it with
A pudency so Rosie, the sweet view on't
Might well have warm'd old Saturne;
That I thought her
As Chaste, as un-Sunn'd Snow. Oh, all the divels!
This yellow Iachimo in an houre, was't not?

Or

Or lesse; at first? Perchance he spoke not, but Like a full Acorn'd Boare, a Iarinen on,
 Cry'de oh, and mounted, found no opposition
 But what he look'd for, should oppose, and she Should from encounter guard. Could I find out
 The Womans part in me, for theres no motion
 That tends to vice in man, but I affirme
 It is the Womans part: be it Lying, note it,
 The womans: Flattering, hers: deceiving, hers:
 Lust, and ranke thoughts, hers, hers: Revenges hers:
 Ambitions, Covetings, change of Prides, Disdaine,
 Nice-longing, Slanders, Mutability:
 All faults that may be named, nay, that Hell knowes,
 Why hers, in part, or all: but rather all. For even to Vice
 They are not constant, but are changing still;
 One Vice, but of a minute old, for one
 Not halfe so old as that. He write against them,
 Detest them, curse them: yet tis greater Skill
 In a true Hate, to pray they have their will:
 The very Divels cannot plague them better.

Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter in State, Cymbeline, Queen, Clotten, and Lords at one doore, and at another, Caius, Lucius,
 and Attendants.

Cym. Now say, what would Augustus Caesar with us?

Luc. When Iulius Caesar (whose remembrance yet
 Lives in mens eyes, and will to Eares and Tongues
 Be Theame, and hearing ever (was in this Britaine,
 And Conquer'd it, Cassibelan thine Vnkle
 (Famous in Casars praytes, no whit lesse
 Then in his Feats deserving it) for him,
 And his Succession, granted Rome a Tribute,
 Yeerely three thousand pounds; which (by thee) lately
 Is left untender'd.

Que. And to kill the mervaille,
 Shall be so ever.

Clot. There be many Casars,
 Ere such another Iulius: Britaine's a world
 By it selfe, and we will nothing pay
 For wearing our owne Noses.

Que. That opportunity
 Which then they had to take from's, to resume
 We have againe. Remember Sir, my Liege,
 The Kings your Ancestors, together with
 The Naturall bravery of your Isle, which stands
 As Neptunes Parke, ribb'd, and pal'd in
 With Oakes unskaleable, and roaring Waters,
 With Sands that will not beare your Enemies Boates
 But sucke them up to th' Top-mast. A kind of Conquest
 Casars made heere, but made not heere his bragge
 Of Came, and Saw, and Overcome: with shame
 (The first that ever touch'd him) he was carried
 From off our Coast, twice beaten? and his Shipping
 (Poore ignorant Baubles) on our terrible Seas
 Like Egge-shells, mov'd upon their Surges crack'd
 As easily gainst our Rockes. For joy whereof,
 The fam'd Cassibelan, who was once at point
 (Oh giglet Fortune) to master Casars Sword,
 Made Luds-Towne with rejoycing-Fires bright,

And Brittaines strut with Courage.

Clot. Come, theres no more Tribute to be paid? our Kingdome is stronger then it was at that time: and (as I said) there is no more such Casars, other of them may have crook'd Noses, but to owe such straite Armes, none.

Cym. Son, let your Mother end.

Clot. We have yet many among us, can gripe as hard as Cassibelan. I doe not say I am ore: but I have a hand.
 Why Tribute? Why should we pay Tribute? If Caesar can hideth Sun from us with a Blanket, or put the Moone in his pocker, we will pay him Tribute for light: else Sir, no more Tribute, pray you now.

Cym. You must know,

Till the injurious Romans, did extort
 This Tribute from us, we were free. Casars Ambition,
 Which swell'd so much, that it did almost stretch
 The sides o' th' World, against all colour heere,
 Did put the yoaake upon's: which to shake off
 Becomes a warlike people, whom we reckon
 Our selves to be, we doe. Say then to Caesar,
 Our Ancestor was that Mulmutius, which Ordain'd our Lawes, whose use the Sword of Caesar
 Hath too much mangled: whose repayre, and franchise,
 Shall (by the power we hold) be our good deed,
 Tho Rome be therfore angry. Mulmutius made our lawes
 Who was the first of Britaine, which did put His browes within a golden Crowne, and call'd Himselfe a King.

Luc. I am sorry Cymbeline,
 That I am to pronounce Augustus Caesar
 (Caesar, that hath more Kings his Servants, then Thy selfe Domesticke Officers) thine Enemy?
 Receive it from methen. Warre, and Confusion
 In Caesar's name pronounce I'gainst thee: Looke
 For fury, not to be resisted. Thus decide,
 I thanke thee for my selfe.

Cym. Thou art welcome Caius,
 Thy Caesar Knighted me; my youth I spent
 Much under him: of him, I gather'd Honour,
 Which he, to seeke of me againe, perforce,
 Behoooves me keepe at utterance. I am perfect,
 That the Pannonians and Dalmatians, for Their Liberties are now in Armes: a President
 Which not to reade, would shew the Britaines cold:
 So Caesar shall not find them.

Luc. Let prooffe speake.

Clot. His Majehy biddes you welcome. Make pastime with us a day, or two, or longer: if you seeke us afterwards in other tearmes, you shall finde us in our Saltwater-Girdle: if you beare us out of it, it is yours: if you fall in the adventure, our Crowes shall fare the better for you: and theres an end.

Luc. So sir.

Cym. I know your Masters pleasure, and he mine:
 All the Remaine, is welcome.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Pisania reading of a Letter.

Pis. How? of Adultery? Wherefore write you not What Monsters her accuse? Leonatus:
 Oh Master, what a strange infection

Is

Is false into thy care? What false Italian,
(As poisonous tongu'd, as handed) hath prevail'd
On thy too ready hearing? Disloyall? No.
She's punish'd for her Truth; and undergoes
More Goddesse-like, then Wife-like; such Assaults
As would take in some Vertue. Oh my Master,
Thy mind to her, is now as lowe, as were Thy Fortunes. How? That I should murder her,
Vpon the Love, and Truth, and Vowes; which I
Have made to thy command? I her? Her blood?
If it be so, to doe good service, never Let me be counted serviceable. How looke I,
That I should seeme to lacke humanitie,
So much as this Fact comes to? Doo't: The Letter.
That I have sent her, by her owne command,
Shall give thee opportunitie. Oh damn'd paper,
Blacke as the Inke that's on thee: seaselesse bauble,
Art thou a Fædarie for this act; and look'st
So virgin-like without? Loe here she comes.

Enter Imogen.

I am ignorant in what I am commanded.

Imo. How now Pisanio?

Pis. Madam, heere is a Letter from my Lord.

Imo. Who! thy Lord? That is my Lord Leonatus?

Oh, learn'd indeed were that Astronomer
That knew the Starres, as I his Characters,
Heel'd lay the Future open. You good Gods,
Let what is heere contain'd, relish of Love,
Of my Lords health: of his content: yet not
That we two are a sunder, let that grieve him;
Some griefes are medicinable, that is one of them,
For it doth physicke Love, of his content,
All but in that. Good Wax, thy leave: blest be
You Bees that make these Lockes of counsaile: Lovers,
And men in dangerous Bondes pray not alike.
Though Forfeytours you cast in prison, yet
You claspe young Cupids Tables: good Newes Gods.

Justice, and your Fathers wrath (should hee take mee in his Dominion) could not be so cruell to me, as you, (oh the desert of creatures) would even renew me with your eyes. Take notice that I am in Cambria at Milford-Haven: what your owne Love, will out of this advise you, follow. So he wishes you all happinesse, that remanies loyall to his Vow, and your encounsing in Love.

Leonatus Posthumus.

Oh for a Horse with wings: Hear'st thou Pisanio?
He is at Milford-Haven: Read, and tell me
How farre tis thither. If one of meane affaires
May plod it in a weeke, why may not I
Glide thither in a day? Then true Pisanio.
Who long'st like me, to see thy Lord; who long'st
(Oh let me bate) but not like me: yet long'st
But in a fainter kinde. Oh not like me:
For mine's beyond, beyond: say, and speake thicke (Loves Counsaile should fill the bores of hearing, To'th' smothering of the Sense) how farre it is
To this same blessed Milford. And by'th' way Tell me how Wales was made so happy, as T'inherite such a Haven. But first of all,
How we may steale from hence: and for the gap
That we shall make in Time, from our hence-going,
And our returne, to excuse: but first, how get hence.
Why should excuse be borne or ere begot?
Weele talke of that heereafter. Prythee speake,
How many score of Miles may we well ride

Twixt houre, and houre?

Pis. One score twixt Sun, and Sun,
Madam's enough for you: and too much too.

Imo. Why, one that rode to's Execution Man,
Could never go so slow: I have heard of Riding wagers,
Where Horses have bin nimbler then the Sands
That run i'th' Clocks behalfe. But this is Foolrie, Go, bid my Woman faine a Sicknesse, say
She'll home to her Father, and provide me presently
A Riding Suit: No costlier then would fit
A Franklins Huswife.

Pis. Madam, you're best consider.

Imo. I see before me (Man) nor heere, nor heere,
Nor what ensues but have a Fog in them
That I cannot looke through. Away, I prythee,
Do as I bid thee: There's no more to say:
Accessible is none but Milford way.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Bel. A goodly day, not to keepe house with such,
Whose Rooofs as low as ours: Sleepe Boyes, this gate
Instructs you how to adore the Heavens; and bowes you
To a mornings holy office. The Gates of Monarches
Are Arch'd so high, that Giants may jet through
And keepe their impious Turbands on, without Good morrow to the Sun. Haile thou faire Heaven,
We house i'th' Rocke, yet use thee not so hardly
As prouder livers do.

Guid. Haile Heaven.

Arvir. Haile Heaven.

Bela. Now for our Mountaine sport, up to yond hill
Your legges are young: Ile tread these Flats. Consider,
When you above perceive me like a Crow,
That it is Place, which lessen's and sets off
And you may then revolve what Tales I have told you,
Of Courts of Princes; of the Trickes in Warre.
This service, is not Service; so being done,
But being so allowed. To apprehend thus,
Drawes us a profit from all things we see:
And often to our comfort, shall we finde
The sharded-Beetle, in a safer hold
Then is the full-wing'd Eagle. Oh this life,
Is Nobler, then attending for a checke:
Richer, then doing nothidg for a Babe:
Prouder, then rustling in unpayd-for Silke:
Such gaine the Cap of him, that makes him fine,
Yet keepe his Booke uncross'd, no life to ours.

Gui. Out of your prooffe you speak: we poore unfledg'd
Have never wing'd from view o'th' nest; nor know not What Ayre's from home. Hap'ly this life is best,
(If quiet life be best) sweeter to you
That have a sharper knowne. Well corresponding With your stiffe Age; but unto us, it is
A Cell of Ignorance: travailing abed,
A Prison or a Debtor, that not dares
To stride a limit.

Arvi. What should we speake of
When we are old as you? When we shall heare
The Raine and winde beate darke December? How
In this our pinching Cave, shall we discourse

The freezing houres away? We have seene nothing:
We are beastly; subtle as the Fox for prey,
Like warlike as the Wolfe, for what we eate:
Our Valour is to chace what flies: Our Cage
We make a Quire, as doth the prison'd Bird,
And sing our Bondage freely.

Bel. How you speake?

Did you but know the Citties Vsuries,
And felt them knowingly: the Art o'th' Court,
As hard to leave, as keepe: whose top to climbe
Is certaine falling: or so slipp'ry, that
The feare's as bad as falling. The toyle o'th' Warre,
A paine that onely seemes to seeke our danger
I'th' name of Fame, and Honour, which dyes i'th' search,
And hath as oft a fland'rous Epitaph,
As Record of faire Act. Nay, many times
Doth ill deserve by doing well: what's worse
Must curt'sie at the Censure. Oh Boyes, this Storie
The world may reade in me: My bodie's mark'd
With Roman Swords; and my report, was once
First, with the best of Note. Cymbeline lov'd me,
And when a Souldier was the Theame, my name
Was not farre off: then was I as a Tree
Whose boughes did bend with fruit. But in one night,
A Storme, or Robbery (call it what you will)
Shooke downe my mellow hangings: nay my Leaves,
And left me bare to weather.

Gwi. Vncertaine favour.

Bel. My fault being nothing (as I have told you oft)
But that two Villaines, whose false Oathes prevail'd
Before my perfect Honor, swore to Cymbeline,
I was Confederate with the Romanes: to Followed my Banishment, and thistwenty yeeres,
This Rocke, and these Demesnes, have bene my World,
Where I have liv'd at honest freedome, payed
More pious debts to Heaven, then in all
The fore-end of my time. But, up to'th' Mountaines,
This is not Hunters Language; he that strikes
The Venison first, shall be the Lord o'th' Feast,
To him the other two shall minister,
And we will feare no poyson, which attends
In place of greater State:
He meete you in the Valleyes.

Exeunt.

How hard it is to hide the sparkes of Nature?
These Boyes know little they are Sonnes to'th' King,
Nor Cymbeline dreames that they are alive.
They thinke they are mine,
And though train'd up thus meanely
I'th' Cave, whereon the Bow their thoughts do hit,
The Roofes of Palaces, and Nature prompts them
In simple and low things, to Prince it, much
Beyond the tricke of others. This Paladour,
The heyre of Cymbeline and Britaine, whom
The King his Father call'd Guiderius. Iove,
When on my three-foot stoole I sit, and tell
The warlike feats I have done, his spirits flye out
Into my story: say thus mine Enemie fell,
And thus I set my foote on's necke, even then
The Princely blood flowes in his Cheeke, he sweats,
Straines his young Nerves, and puts himselfe in posture
That acts my words. The younger Brother Cadwall,
Once Arviragus, in as like a figure
Strikes life into my speech, and shewes much more
His owne conceyuing. Hearke, the Game is row's'd, Oh Cymbeline. Heaven and my Conscience knowes
Thou did'st unjustly banish me: whereon

At three, and two yeeres old, I stole these Babes, Thinking to barre thee of Succession, as Thou rests me of my Lands. Euriphile,
Thou was't their Nurse, they took thee for their mother
And every day do honor to her grave:
My selfe Belarius, that am Morgan call'd
They take for Naturall Father. The Game is up. Exit.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Pisanio and Imogen.

Imo. Thou told'st me when we came frō horse, the place
Was neere at hand: Ne're longd my Mother so
To see me first, as I have now: Pisanio, Man:
Where is Posthumus? What is in thy mind
That makes thee stare thus? Wherefore breakes that sigh
From th'inward of thee? One, One, but painted thus
Would be interpreted a thing preplex'd
Beyond selfe-explication. Put thy selfe
Into a haviour of lesse feare, ere wildnesse
Vanquish my stayder Senses. What's the matter?
Why tender'st thou that Paper to me, with A looke untender? Is't be Summer Newes
Smile too't before: if Winterly, thou need'st
But keepe that count'nance still. My Husbands hand?
That Drug-damn'd Italy, hath out-craftied him,
And hee's at some hard point. Speake man, thy Tongue
May take off some extremitie, which to reade
Would be even mortall to me.

Pis. Please you reade,
And you shall finde me (wretched man) a thing
The most disdain'd of Fortune.

Imogen reads.

TH<sup>E</sup> Mistis (Pisanio) hath playde the Strumpet in my Bed: the Testimonies whereof, lyes bleeding in me. I speak not out of weak Surmises, but from prooffe as strong as my griefe, and as certaine as I expect my Revenge. That part, thou (Pisanio) must acte for me, if thy faith be not tainted with the breach of hers; let this owne hands take away her life: I shall give thee opportunity at Milford Haven. She hath my Letter for the purpose; where, if thou feare to strike, and to make mee certaine it is done, thou art the Pander to her dishonour, and equally to me: dishonour.

Pis. What shall I need to draw my Sword, the Paper
Hath cut her throat already? No, tis slander,
Whose edge is sharper then the Sword, whose tongue
Out-venomes all the Wormes of Nyle, whose breath
Rides on the posting windes, and doth belye
All corners of the World. Kings, Queenes, and States, Maides, Matrons, nay the Secrets of the Grave
This viperous slander enters. What cheere Madam?

Imo. False to his Bed? What is it to be false?
To lye in watch there, and to thinke on him?
To weepe twixt clock and clock? If sleep charge Nature,
To breake it with a fearefull dreame of him.
And cry my selfe awake? That's false to's bed? Is it?

Pisa. Alas good Lady.

Imo. I false? Thy Conscience witness: Iachimo,
Thou did'st accuse him of Incontinencie,
Thou then look'd'st like a Villaine: now, me thinkes

Thy

Thy favours good enough. Some Iay of Italy
(Whose mother was her painting) hath betraid him :
Poore I am stale, a Garment out of fashion,
And for I am richer then to hang by th' walles;
I must be ript : To peeces with me : Oh !
Mens Vowes are womens Traitors. All good seeming
By thy revolt (oh Husband) shall be thought
Put on for Villainy; not borne where't growes,
But worne a baite for Ladies.

Pis. Good Madam, heare me.

Imo. True honest men being heard, like false Aeneas,
Were in his time thought false : and Synons weeping
Did scandall many a holy teare : tooky pittie
From most true wretchednesse. So thou, Posthumus
Wilt lay the leven to all proper men ;
Goodly, and gallant, shall be false and periur'd
From thy great faile : Come Fellow, be thou honest,
Do thou thy Masters bidding. When thou seest him,
A little witness my obedience. Look
I draw the Sword my selfe, take it and hit
The innocent Mansion of my Love (my Heart :)
Feare not, tis empty of all things, but Griefe :
Thy Master is not there, who was indeede
The riches of it. Do his bidding, strike,
Thou mayst be valiant in a better cause ;
But now thou seem'st a Coward.

Pis. Hence vile Instrument,
Thou shalt not damne my hand.

Imo. Why, I must dye:
And if I do not by thy hand, thou art
No Servant of thy Masters. Against Selfe-slaughter,
There is a prohibition so Divine,
That cravens my weake hand : Come, heere's my heart :
So methings a-foot : Soft, soft, wee'l no defence,
Obedient as the Scabbard. What is heere,
The Scriptures of the Loyall Leonatus,
All turn'd to Heresie? Away, away
Corrupters of my Faith, you shall no more
Be Stomachers to my heart : thus may poore Fooles
Beleeve false Teachers : Though those that are betraid
Do fee the Treason sharply, yet the Traitor
Stands in worse case of woe. And thou Posthumus,
That didd'st set up my disobedience 'gainst the King
My Father, and makes me put into contempt the suites
Of Princely Fellowes, shalt hereafter finde
It is no act of common passage, but
A straine of Rarenesse : and I grieve my selfe,
To thinke, when thou shalt be disedg'd by her,
That now thou tyrest on, how thy memory
Will then be pang'd by me. Prythee dispatch,
The Lambe entreats the Butcher. Wher's thy knife?
Thou art to slow to do thy Masters bidding
When I desire it too.

Pis. Oh gracious Lady :
Since I receiv'd command to do this businesse,
I have not slept one winke.

Imo. Doo't, and to bed then.

Pis. Ile wake mine eye-balles first.

Imo. Wherefore then
Didd'st undertake it? Why hast thou abus'd
So many Miles, with a pretence? This place?
Mine Action? and thine owne? Our Horses labour?
The time inviting thee? The perturb'd Court
For my being absent; whereunto I never Purpose returne. Why hast thou gone so farre
To be un-bent? when thou hast tane thy stand,

Th' elected Deere before thee?

Pis. But to win time
To loose so bad employment, in the which I have consider'd of a course : good Lady
Heare me with patience.

Imo. Talke thy Tongue weary, speake :
I have heard I am a Strumpet, and mine eare
Therein false strooke, can take no greater wound,
Nor tent, to bottome that. But speake.

Pis. Then Madam,
I thought you would not backe againe.

Imo. Most like,
Bringing me heere to kill me.

Pis. Not so neither :
But if I were as wise, as honest, then
My purpose would prove well : it cannot be,
But that my Master is abus'd. Some Villaine,
I, and singular in his Art, hath done you both
This curld injurie.

Imo. Some Roman Curtezan?

Pis. No, on my life :
Ile give but notice you are dead, and send him
Some bloody signe of it. For tis commanded
I should do so : you shall be mist at Court,
And that will well confirme it,

Imo. Why good Fellow,
What shall I do the while? Where bidst? How live?
Or in my life, what comfort, when I am
Dead to my Husband?

Pis. If you'l backe to th' Court.

Imo. No Court, no Father: nor no more adoe
With that harsh, noble, simple nothing;
That Clotten, whose Love-suite hath bene tome
As fearefull as a Siege.

Pis. If not at Court,
Then not in Britaine must you bide.

Imo. Where then?
Hath Britaine all the Sunne that shines? Day? Night?
Are they not but in Britaine? I th' worlds Volume
Our Britaine seemes as of it, but not in't:
In a great Poole a Swannes-nest; prythee thinke
There's livers out of Britaine.

Pis. I am most glad
You thinke of other Place : Th' Ambassador,
Lucius the Romane comes to Milford-Haven
To morrow. Now, if you could weare a minde
Darke, as your Fortune is, and but disguise
That which t'appeare it selfe, must not yet be,
But by selfe-danger, you should tread a course
Pretty, and full of view : yea, happily, neere
The residence of Posthumus; so nie (at last)
That though his Actions were not visible, yet
Report should render him houely to your eare,
As truly as he moves.

Imo. Oh for such meanes,
Though perill to my modestie, not death on't
I would adventure.

Pis. Well then, heere's the point :
You must forget to be a Woman : change
Command, into obedience. Feare and Nicenesse
(The Handmaides of all Women, or more truly Woman it pretty selfe) into a waggish courage,
Ready in gybes, quicke-answer'd, sawcie, and
As quarrellous as the Weazell : Nay, you must Forget that rarest Treasure of your Cheeke, Exposing it (but oh the harder heart,

Alacke no remedy) to the greedy touch
Of common-kissing Tis: and forgot
Your labourfome and dainty Trimmes, wherein
You made great Imo angry.

Imo. Nay be breefe:
I see into thy end, and am almost
A man already.

Pis. First, make your selfe but like one,
Fore-thinking this. I have already fit
(Tis in my Cloake-bagge) Doublet, Hat, Hose, all
That answer to them: Would you in their serving,
(And with what imitation you can borrow
From youth of such a season) fore Noble Lucius
Present your selfe, desire his service: tell him
Wherein you're happy, which will make him know,
If that his head have eare in Musicke, doubtlesse
With joy he will embrace you: for hee's Honourable,
And doubling that, most holy. Your meanes abroad:
You have me rich, and I will never faile
Beginning, nor supplyment.

Imo. Thou art all the comfort
The Gods will diet me with. Prythee away,
There's more to be consider'd: but wee'l even
All that good time will give us. This attempt,
I am Souldier too, and will abide it with A Princes Courage. Away, I prythee.

Pis. Well Madam, we must take a short farewell, Lest being mist, I be suspected of
Your carriage from the Court. My Noble Mistris, Heere is a boxe, I had it from the Queene,
What's in't is precious: If you are sicke at Sea,
Or Stomacke-quallm'd at Land, a Dramme of this Will drive away distemper. To some shade,
And fit you to your Manhood: may the Gods
Direct you to the best.

Imo. Amen: I thanke thee,

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Cymbeline, Queene, Cloten, Lucius, and Lords.

Cym. Thus farre, and to farewell.

Luc. Thanks, Royall Sir:
My Emperor hath wrote, I must from hence,
And am right sorry, that I must report ye
My Masters Enemy.

Cym. Our Subjects (Sir)
Will not endure his yoke; and for our selfe
To shew lesse Sovereignty then they, must needs
Apppeare un-Kinglike.

Luc. So Sir: I desire of you
A Conduct over Land, to Milford-Haven.
Madam, all joy befall your Grace, and you.

Cym. My Lords, you are appointed for that Office:
The due of Honour, in no point omit:
So farewell Noble Lucius.

Luc. Your hand, my Lord.

Clot. Receive it friendly: but from this time forth
I weare it as your Enemy.

Luc. Sir, the Event
Is yet to name the winner. Fare you well.

Cym. Leave not the worthy Lucius, good my Lords Till he have crost Severn. Happines. Exit Lucius, &c.

Qu. He goes hence frowning: but it honours us
That we have given him cause.

Clot. Tis all the better,
Your Valiant Britaines have their wishes in it.

Cym. Lucius hath writ already to the Emperor
How it goes heere. It fits us therefore ripely
Our Chariots, and our Horsemen be in readinesse:
The Powers that he already hath in Gallia
Will soone be drawne to head, from whence he moves
His warre for Britaine.

Qu. Tis not sleepy businesse,
But must be look'd to speedily, and strongly.

Cym. Our expectation that it should be thus Hath made us forward. But my gentle Queene,
Where is our Daughter? She hath not appear'd
Before the Roman, nor to us hath tender'd
The duty of the day. She looks as like
A thing more made of malice, then of duty,
We have noted it. Call her before us, for
We have beene too light in sufferance.

Qu. Royall Sir,
Since the exile of Posthumus, most retyr'd
Hath her life bin: the Cure whereof my Lord,
Tis time must doe. Beseech your Majesty,
Forbeare sharpe speeches to her. Shee's a Lady
So tender of rebukes, that words are strokes,
And strokes death to her.

Enter a Messenger.

Cym. Where is she Sir? How Can her contempt be answer'd?

Mes. Please you Sir,
Her Chambers are all lock'd, and there's no answer
That will be given to'th' lowd of noise, we make,

Qu. My Lord, when last I went to visit her,
She pray'd me to excuse her keeping close,
Whereto constrain'd by her infirmities,
She should that duty leave unpaide to you
Which daily she was bound to proffer: this
She wish'd me to make knowne: but our great Court
Made me too blame in memory.

Cym. Her doores lock'd?
Not scene of late? Grant Heavens, that which I Feare, prove false. Exit.

Qu. Sonne, I say, follow the King.

Clot. That man of her's, Pisano, her old Servant
I have not seene these two dayes. Exit.

Qu. Go, looke after:
Pisano, thou that stand'st so for Posthumus
He hath a Drugg of mine: I pray, his absence
Proceed by swallowing that. For he believes
It is a thing most precious. But for her,
Where is she gone? Haply dispaire hath seiz'd her:
Or wing'd with fervour of her love, she's flowne
To her desired Posthumus: gone she is,
To death, or to dishonor, and my end
Can make good vse of either. Shee beeing downe,
I haue the placing of the Brittish Crowne.

Enter Cloten.

How now my Sonne?

Clot. 'Tis certaine she is fled:
Go in and cheere the King, he rages, none
Dare come about him.

Qu. All the better: may
This night fore-stall him of the comming day. Exit Qu.
Clot. I loue and hate her: for she's Faire and Royall,
And that she hath all courtly parts more exquisite

Then

Then Lady, Ladies, Woman, from every one
The best she hath, and she of all compounded
Out-selles them all. I love her therefore, but Disdaining me, and throwing Favours on
The low Posthumus, slanders so her judgement,
That what's selfe rare, is choak'd: and in that point
I wil conclude to hate her, nay indeede,
To be reveng'd upon her. For, when Fooles shall

Enter Pisanio.

Who is heere? What, are you packing sirrah?
Come hither: Ah you precious Pander, Villaine,
Where is thy Lady? In a word, or else
Thou art straightway with the Fiends.

Pis. Oh, good my Lord.

Clot. Where is thy Lady? Or, by Iupiter,
I will not ask againe. Close Villaine,
He have this sectet from thy heart, or rip
Thy heart to finde it. Is she with Posthumus?
From whose so many waights of basenesse, cannot
A dram of worth be drawne.

Pis. Alas, my Lord,

How can she be with him? When was she mis'd?
He is in Rome.

Clot. Where is she Sir? Come neerer:
No farther halting: satisfie me home,
What is become of her:

Pis. Oh, my all-worthy Lord.

Clot. All-worthy Villaine,
Discover where thy Mistris is, at once,
At the next word: no more of worthy Lord:
Speake, or thy silence on the instant, is Thy condemnation and thy death

Pis. Then sir:

This Paper is the history of my knowledge
Touching her flight.

Clot. Let's see; I will pursue her
Even to Augustus Throne.

Pis. Or this, or perish.
She's farr enough, and what he learns by this,
May prove his travell, not her danger.

Clot. Humh.

Pis. He write to my Lord she is dead: Oh Imogen,
Safe mayst thou wander, safe returne agen.

Clot. Sirra, is this Letter true?

Pis. Sir, as I thinke

Clot. It is Posthumus hand, I know't. Sirrah, if thou would'st not be a Villaine, but do me true service: undergo those Employments wherein I should have cause to use thee with a serious industry, that is, what villainy soere I bid thee doe to performe it, directly and truly, I would thinke thee an honest man: thou should'st neither want my meanes for thy releefe, nor my voyce for thy prefer-
ment,

Pis. Well, my good Lord.

Clot. Wilt thou serve mee? For since patiently and constantly thou hast stucke to the bare Fortune of that Begger Posthumus; thou canst not in the course of gratitude, but be a diligent follower of mine. Wilt thou serve mee?

Pis. Sir I will.

Clot. Give me thy hand, heere's my purse. Hast any of thy late Masters Garments in thy possession?

Pisan. I have (my Lord) at my Lodging, the same Suite he wore, when he tooke leave of my Ladie and Mistresse.

Clot. The first service thou dost mee, fetch that Suite hither, let it be thy first service, go.

Pis. I shall my Lord.

Exeunt,

Clot. Meet thee at Milford-Haven: (Iforgot to aske him one thing, He remember't anon: ) even there, thou villaine Posthumus will I kill thee. I would these Garments were come. She said upon a time (the bitternesse of it, I now belch from my heart) that she held the very Garment of Posthumus, in more respect, then my Noble and naturall person; together with the adornement of my Qualities. With that Suite upon my backe will I ravish her: first kill him, and in her eyes: there shall she see my valour, which will then be a torment to her contempt.
He on the Ground, my speech of insultment ended on his dead bodie, and when my lust hath dined (which, as I say, to vex her, I will execute in the Cloathes that she so prais'd:) to the Court He knock her backe, foot her home againe. She hath dispis'd mee rejoicingly, and He be merry in my Revenge:

Enter Pisanio.

Be those the Garments?

Pis. I, my Noble Lord.

Clot. How long is't since she went to Milford-Haven?

Pis. She can scarce be there yet,

Clot. Bring this Apparrell to my Chamber, that is the second thing that I have commanded thee. The third is, that thou wilt be a voluntary Mute to my designe. Be but dutious, and true preferment shall tender it selfe to thee. My Revenge is now at Milford, would I had wings to follow it. Come and be true.

Exit.

Pis. Thou bid'st me to my losse: for true to thee,
Were to prove false, which I will never be
To him that is most true. To Milford go,
And finde not her, whom thou pursuest. Flow, flow
You Heavenly blessings on her: This Fooles speede Becroft with slownesse; Labour be his meede. Exit.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Imogen alone.

Ima. I see a mans life is a tedious one,
I have tyr'd my selfe: and for two nights together
Have made the gound my bed. I should be sicke,
But that my resolution helps me: Milford,
When from the Mountaine top Pisanio shew'd thee,
Thou was't within a kenne. Oh love, I thinke
Foundations flye the wretched: such I meane,
Where they should be releev'd. Two beggers told me,
I could not misse my way. Will poore Folkes lye
That have afflictions on them, knowing tis
A punishment, or Triall? Yes; no wonder,
When Rich-ones scarce tell true. To lapse in fulnesse
Is sorer, then to lye for Neede: and Falshood
Is worse in Kings, then Beggers, My deere Lord,
Thou art one o'th false Ones: now I thinke on thee,
My hunger's gone; but even before, I was
At point to sinke, for Food. But what is this?
Heere is a path to't: tis some savage hold:
I were best not call; I dare not call: yet Famine
Ere cleane it o're-throw Nature, make it valiant.
Plentie and peace breedes Cowards, Hardnesse ever
Of Hardin esse is Mother. Hoa? who's heere?
If any thing that's civill, speake; if savage,

Take, or lend. Hoa? No answer? Then Ile enter,
Best draw my Sword; and if mine Eenemy
But feare the Sword like me, heell scarcely looke on't.
Such a Foe, good Heavens. Exit.

Scena Septima.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Bel. You Pelidore have prov'd best Woodman, and Are Master of the feast: Cadwall, and I
Will play the Cooke, and Servant, tis our match:
The sweat of industry would dry, and dye
But for the end it workes to. Come, our stomackes
Will make whats homely, savoury; Wearinesse
Can snore upon the Flint, when resty Sloth
Findes the Downe-pillow hard. Now peace be heere, Poore house, that keepst thy selfe.

Gui. I am throughly weary.

Arvi. I am weake with toyle, yet strong in appetite.

Gui. There is cold meat ith' Cave, we'll brouz on that Whilst what we have killd, be Cook'd.

Bel. Stay, come not in:
But that it eates our victualles, I should thinke
Heere were a Faiery.

Gui. Whats the matter, Sir?

Bel. By Iupiter an Angell: or if not,
An earthly Paragon. Behold Divinenesse
No elder then a Boy.

Enter Imogen.

Imo. Good master harme me not:
Before I enter'd heere, I call'd, and thought
To have begg'd, or bought, what I have took: good troth
I have stolne nought, nor would not, though I had found
Gold strew'd ith' Floore. Heere's money for my Meate,
I would have left it on the Boord, so soone
As I had made my Meale: and parted
With Pray'rs for the Provider.

Gui. Money? Youth.

Arvi. All gold and Silver rather turne doe durt,
As tis no better reckon'd, but of those
Who worship durty gods.

Imo. I see your angry:
Know, if you kill me for my fault, I should Have dyed, had I not made it.

Bel. Whether bound?

Imo. To Milford haven.

Bel. Whats your name?

Imo. Fidele Sir; I have a Kinsman, who Is bound for Italy: he embark'd at Milford,
To whom being going, almost spent with hunger,
I am false in this offence.

Bel. Prethee (faire youth)
Thinke us no Churles: nor measure our good mindes
By this rude place we live in. Well encounter'd,
Tis almost night, you shall have better cheere
Ere you depart; and thanks to stay, and eate it:
Boyes, bid him welcome.

Gui. Were you a woman, youth,
I should wooe hard, but be your Groome in honesty:
I bid for you, as I doe buy.

Arvi. Ile make't my comfort
He is a man, Ile love him as my Brother:
And such a welcome as Ild give to him

(After long absence) such is yours. Most welcome:
Be sprightly, for you fall amongst friends.

Imo. Amongst friends.

If Brothers: would it had bin so, that they Had bin my fathers Sonnes, then had my prize
Bin lesse, and so more equall ballasting
To thee Posthumus.

Bel. He wrings at some distresse.

Gui. Would I could free't.

Arvi. Or I, what ere it be,

What paine it cost, what danger: gods!

Bel. Hearke Boyes.

Imo. Great men

That had a Court no bigger then this Cave,
That did attend themselves, and had the vertue
Which their owne Conscience seal'd them: laying by
That nothing-guift of differing Multitudes
Could not out-peece these twaine. Pardon me gods,
Ild change my sexe to be Companion with them,
Since Leonatus false.

Bel. It shall be so:

Boyes we'll goe dresse our Hunt. Faire you come in;
Discourse is heavy, fasting: when we have sup'd
Weell mannerly demand thee of thy Story.
So farre as thou wilt speake it,

Gui. Pray draw neere.

Arvi. The Night toth' Owle,
And Morne toth' Larke lesse welcome.

Imo. Thankes Sir.

Arvi. I pray draw neere.

Exeunt.

Scena Octava.

Enter two Roman Senators, and Tribunes.

1 Sen. This is the tenor of the Emperors Writ;
That since the common men are now in Action
Gainst the Pannonians, and Dalmatians,
And that the Legions now in Gallia, are Full weake to undertake our Warres against
The false-off Britaine, that we doe incite
The Gentry to this businesse. He creates
Lucius Pro-Consull: and to you the Tribunes
For this immediate Levy, he commands
His absolute Commission. Long live Caesar.

Tri. Is Lucius Generall of the Forces?

2 Sen. I.

Tri. Remaining now in Gallia?

1 Sen. With these Legions
Which I have spoke of, whereunto your levy
Must be suppliant: the words of your Commission
Will tye you to the Numbers and the time
Of their dispatch.

Tri. We will discharge our duty.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Clotzen alone.

Clot. I am neere to th' place where they should meet, if Pisanio have mapp'd it truly. How fit his Garments serve me? Why should his Mistris who was made by him
that that made the Taylor, not be fit too? The rather (saving reverence of the Word) for tis said a Womans fitnessse comes by fits: therein I must play the Workeman, I dare speake it to my selfe, for it is not Vainglory for a man, and his Glasse, to confer in his owne Chamber; I meane, the Lines of my body are as well drawne as his; no lesse young, more strong, not beneath him in Fortunes, beyond him in the advantage of the time, above him in Birth, alike conversant in generall services, and more remarkable in single oppositions; yet this imperseverant Thing loves him in my despight. What Mortality is? Posthumus, thy head (which now is growing upon thy shoulders) shall within this houre be off, thy Mistris enforced, thy Garments cut to peeces before thy face: and all this done, spurne her home to her Father, who may (happily) be a little angry for my so rough vlsage: but my Mother having power of his testinesse, shall turne all into my commendations. My horse is tyed up safe, out Sword, and to a fore purpose: Fortune put them into my hand: This is the very description of their meeting place and the fellow dares not deceive me. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, Arviragus, and Imogen from the Cave.

Bel. You are not well: Remaine heere in the Cave, We'll come to you after hunting.

Arvi. Brother, stay here: Are we not brothers?

Imo. So man and man should be, But Clay and Clay, differs in dignity, Whose dust is both alike. I am very sicke,

Gui. Goe you to hunting, Ile abide with him.

Imo. So sicke I am not, yet I am not well: But not so Cittizen a wanton, as To seeme to dye, ere sicke: So please you, leave me, Sticke to your Iournall course: the breach of Cuitome, Is breach of all. I am ill, but your being by me Cannot amend me. Society, is no comfort To one not sociable: I am not very sicke. Since I can reason of it: pray you trust me heere, Ile rob none but my selfe, and let me dye Stealing so poorly.

Gui. I love thee: I have spoke it, How much the quantity, the waight as much, As I doe love my father.

Bel. What? how? how?

Arvi. If it be sinne to say so (Sir) I yoake me In my good Brothers fault: I know not why I love this youth, and I have heard you say, Loves reasons without reason. The beere at doore, And a demand who ist shall dye, Ild say My father, not this youth.

Bel. Oh noble straine!

O worthinesse of Nature, breed of greatnesse I
"Cowards father Cowards, and Base things Syre Bace:
"Nature hath Meale, and Bran; Contempt, and Grace.
Ime not their father, yet who this should be,
Doth myracle it selfe, lov'd before me,
Tis the ninth houre oth Morne.

Arvi. Brother, farewell.

Imo. I wish ye sport.

Arvi. You health. — So please you Sir.

Imo. These are kind Creatures.

Gods, what lyes I have heard:
Our Courtiers say, alls savage, but at Court:
Experience, oh thou disprov'st Report.
Th'emperious Seas breed Monsters; for the Dish,
Poore Tributary Rivers, as sweet fish:
I am sicke still, heart-sicke: Pisanio,
Ile now taste of thy Drugge.

Gui. I could not stirre him:
He said he was gentle, but unfortunate;
Dishonestly afflicted, but yet honest.

Arvi. Thus did he answer me: yet said heereafter,
I might know more.

Bel. To th' field, to th' field:
We'll leave you for this time, goe in, and rest.

Arvi. We'll not be long away.

Bel. Pray be not sicke,
For you must be our hufwife.

Imo. Well, or ill,
I am bound to you.

Exit.

Bel. And shalt be ever.
This youth, how ere distrest, appeares he hath had Good Ancestors.

Arvi. How Angeil-like he sings?

Gui. But his neate Cookery?

Arvi. He cut our Rootes in Characters,
And sawc't our Brothes, as Imo had bin sicke,
And he her Dieter.

Arvi. Nobly he yoakes
A smiling, with a sigh: as if the sigh
Was that it was, for not being such a Smile:
The Smile, mocking the Sigh, that it would flye,
From so divine a Temple, to commix
With windes, that Saylor's raile at.

Gui. I doe note,
That griefe and patience rooted in them both,
Mingle their spurres together,

Arvi. Grow patient,
And let the stinking- Elder (Griefe) untwine
His perishing roote, with the encreasing Vine.

Bel. It is great morning. Come away: Who's there?

Enter Cloten.

Clot. I cannot finde those Runagates, that Villaine Hath mock'd me. I am faint.

Bel. Those Runagates?
Meanes he not us? I partly know him, tis
Clotten, the Sonne oth' Queene. I feare some Ambush:
I saw him not these many yeares, and yet
I know tis he: we are held as Out-lawes; hence.

Gui. He is but one: you, and my brother search
What Companies are neere: pray you away,
Let me alone with him.

Clot. Soft, what are you
That flye me thus? Sonne villaine-Mountainers?
I have heard of such. What Slave art thou?

Gui. A thing.
More slavish did I ne're, then answering
A Slave without a knocke.

Clot. Thou art a Robber,
A Law-breaker, a Villaine: yeeld thee Theefe.

Gui. To whom? to thee? What art thou? Have not I
An arme as bigge as thine? a heart, as bigge:
Thy words I grant are bigger: for I weare not My Dagger in my mouth. Say what thou art:

Why

Why I should yeeld to thee ?

Clor. Thou Villaine base,
Know'st me not by my Cloathes ?

Gwi. No, nor thy Taylor, Rascall,
Who is thy Grandfather : He made those cloathes,
Which (as it seemes) make thee.

Clor. Thou precious Varlet:
My Taylor made them not.

Gwi. Hence then, and thanke
The man that gave them thee. Thou art some Foole,
I am loath to beat thee.

Clor. Thou injurious Theefe,
Heare but my name, and tremble.

Gwi. What's thy name ?

Clor. Cloten, thou Villaine.

Gwi. Cloten, thou double Villaine be thy name,
I cannot tremble at it, were it Toad, or Adder, Spider,
Twould move me sooner.

Clor. To thy further feare,
Nay, to thy meere Confusion, thou shalt know
I am Sonne to th' Queene.

Gwi. I am sorry for't : not seeming
So worthy as thy Birth.

Clor. Art not afraid ?

Gwi. Those that I reverence, those I feare : the Wife:
At Fooles I laugh : not feare them.

Clor. Dye the death :
When I have slaine thee with my proper hand,
Ile follow those that even now fled hence :
And on the Gates of Luds-Towne set your heads :
Yeeld Rusticke Mountaineer. Fight and Exennt.

Enter Belarius and Arviragus.

Bel. No Companie's abroad ?

Arvi. None in the world : you did mistake him sure.

Bel. I cannot tell : Long is it since I saw him,
But Time hath nothing blurr'd those lines of Favour
Which then he wore : the snatches in his voyce,
And burst of speaking were as his : I am absolute
Twas very Cloten.

Arvi. In this place we left them ;
I wish my Brother make good time with him,
You say he is so fell.

Bel. Being scarce made up,
I meane to man ; he had not apprehension
Of roaring terrors : For defect of judgement
Is oft the cause of Feare.

Enter Guiderius.

But see thy Brother.

Gwi. This Cloten was a Foole, an empty purse,
There was no money in't : Not Hercules
Could have knock'd out his Braines, for he had none :
Yet I not doing this, the Foole had borne
My head, as I do his.

Bel. What hast thou done ?

Gwi. I am perfect what ; cut off one Clotens head,
Sonne to the Queene (after his owne report)
Who call'd me Traitor, Mountaineer, and swore
With his owne single hand hee'd take us in,
Displace our heads, where (thanks the gods) they grow
And set them on Luds-Towne.

Bel. We are all undone.

Gwi. Why, worthy Father, what have we to loose,
But that he swore to take, our Lives ? the Law
Protects not us, then why should we be tender,
To let an arrogant peece of flesh threat us ?
Play Iudge, and Executioner, all himselfe ?

For we do feare no Law. What company
Discover you abroad ?

Bel. No single soule

Can we set eye on : but in all safe reason
He must have some Ateendants. Though his Honor
Was nothing but mutation, I, and that
From one bad thing to worse : Not Frenzie,
Not absolute madnesse could so farre have rav'd
To bring him heere alone although perhaps
It may be heard at Court, that such as we Cave heere, hunt heere, are Out-lawes, and in time
May make some stronger head, the which he hearing,
(As it is like him) might breake out, and sweare
Hee'd fetch us in, yet is't not probable
To come alone, either he so undertaking,
Or they so suffering : then on good ground we feare,
If we do feare this body hath a taile
More perillous then the head.

Arvi. Let Ord'nance

Come as the Gods fore-say't : howsoere,
My Brother hath done well.

Bel. I had no minde

To hunt this day : The Boy Fideles sicknesse
Did make my way long forth.

Gwi. With his owne Sword,
Which he did wave against my throat, I have tane
His head from him : Ile throw't into the Creeke
Behinde our Rocke, and let it to the Sea,
And tell the Fishes, hee's the Queenes Sonne, Cloten, That's all I reake. Exit.

Bel. I feare twill be reveng'd :
Would (Polidore) thou had'st not done't : though valour
Becomes thee well enough.

Arvi. Would I had done't :
So the Revenge alone pursu'd me : Polidore
I love thee brotherly, but envy much
Thou hast robb'd me of this deed : I would Revenges
That possible strength might meet, wold seeke us through
And put us to our answer.

Bel. Well, tis done :

Wee'l hunt no more to day, nor seeke for danger
Where there's no profit. I prythee to our Rocke,
You and Fidele play the Cookes : Ile stay
Till hasty Polidore returne, and bring him
To dinner presently.

Arvi. Pore sicke Fidele.

Ile willingly to him, to gaine his colour,
I'd let a parish of such Clotens blood,
And praise my selfe for charity, Exit.

Bel. Oh thou Goddesse,
Thou divine Nature ; thy selfe thou blazon'st
In these two Princely Boyes : they are as gentle
As Zephires blowing below the Violet,
Not wagging his sweet head ; and yet, as rough
(Their Royall blood enclaf'd) as the rud'st winde,
That by the top doth take the Mountaine Pine,
And make him stoope to th' Vaile. Tis wonder
That an invisible instinct should frame them
To Royalty unlearn'd, Honor untaught,
Civility not seene from other : valour
That wildly growes in them : but yeelds a crop
As if it had beene sow'd : yet still it's strange
What Clotens being heere tous portends,
Or what his death will bring us.

Enter Guiderius.

Gwi. Where's my Brother ?

I have sent Clotens Clot-pole downe the streame;
In Embassie to his Mother; his Bodie's hoastage
For his returne. Solemn Musicke.

Bel. My ingenuous Instrument,
(Hearke Polidore) it sounds: but what occasion
Hath Cadwall now to give it motion? Hearke.

Gui. Is he at home?

Bel. He went hence even now.

Gui. What does he meane?
Since death of my dear'st Mother
It did not speake before. All solemne things Should answer solemne Accidents. The matter?
Triumphes for nothing, and lamenting Toyes,
Is jollity for Apes, and greefe for Boyes.
Is Cadwall mad?

Enter Arviragus, with Imogen dead, bearing her in his Armes.

Bel. Looke, heere he comes,
And brings the dire occasion in his Armes,
Of what we blame him for.

Arvi. The Bird is dead
That we have made so much on. I had rather Have skipt from sixtene yeares of Age, to sixty:
To have turn'd my leaping time into a Crutch,
Then have seene this.

Gui. Oh sweetest, fairest Lilly:
My Brother weares thee not the one halfe so well,
As when thou grew'st thy selfe.

Bel. Oh melancholly,
Who ever yet could found thy bottome? Finde
The Ooze, to shew that Coast thy sluggish care
Might easiest harbour in. Thou blessed thing.
Iove knowes what man thou might'st have made: but I,
Thou dyed'st a most rare Boy, of Melancolly.
How found you him?

Arvi. Starke, as you see:
Thus smiling as some Fly had tickled slumber,
Not as deaths dart being laugh'd at: his right Checke
Reposing on a Cushion.

Gui. Where?

Arvi. O'th' floore:
His armes thus leagu'd, I thought he slept, and put
My clowted Brogues from off my feet, whose rudenesse
Answer'd my steps too lowd.

Gui. Why he but sleepes:
If he be gone, hee'l make his Grave a Bed:
With Female Faeries will his Tombe be haunted,
And Wormes will not come to thee.

Arvi. With fayrest Flowers
Whil'st Sommer lasts, and I live heere, Fidele,
Hee sweeten thy sad grave: thou shalt not lacke
The Flower that's like thy face. Pale-Primrose, nor
The azur'd Hare-bell, like thy Veines: no nor
The leafe of Eglantine, whom not to slander.
Out-sweetned not thy breath: the Raddocke would
With Charitable bill (Oh bill fore shaming
Those rich-left-heyres, that let their Fathers lye
Without a Monument) bring thee all this,
Yea, and furr'd Mossie besides. When Flowres are none
To winter-ground thy Coarse——

Gui. Prythee have done,
And do not play in Wench-like words with that
Which is so serious. Let us bury him,
And not protract with admiration, what
Is now due debt. To'th' grave.

Arvi. Say, where shall'st lay him?

Gui. By good Euriphile, our Mother.

Arvi. Bee't so:

And let us (Polidore) though now our voyces
Have got the mannish cracke, sing him to'th' ground
As once to our Mother: use like note, and words,
Save that Euriphile, must be Fidele.

Gui. Cadwall,
I cannot sing: He weepe, and word it with thee;
For Nores of sorrow, out of tune, are worle
Then Priests, and Vanes that lye.

Arvi. Wee'l speake it then.

Bel. Great greefes I see med'cine the lesse, For Cloten
Is quite forgot. He was a Queenes Sonne, Boyes,
And though he came our Enemy, remember
He was paid for that: though meane, and mighty rotting
Together have one dust, yet Reverence
(That Angell of the world) doth make distinction
Of place twixt high and low. Our Foe was Princely,
And though you tooke his life, as being our Foe,
Yet bury him, as a Prince.

Gui. Pray thee fetch him hither,
Thersites body is as good as Ajax,
When neyther are are alive.

Arvi. If you'l go fetch him,
Wee'l say our Song the whil'st: Brother begin.

Gui. Nay Cadwall, we must lay his head to th' East,
My Father hath a reason for't.

Arvi. Tis true.

Gui. Come on then, and remove him.

Arvi. So, begin.

SONG.

Guid. Feare no more the heate o'th' Sun,
Nor the furious Winters rages,
Thou thy worldly taske hast done,
Home art gon, and tane thy wages.
Golden Lads, and Girles all must,
As Chimney-Sweepers come to dust.

Arvi. Feare no more the frowne o'th' Great,
Thou art past the Tirants stroake,
Care no more to cloath and eate,
To thee the Reede is as the Oake:
The Scepter, Learning, Physicke must,
All follow this and come to dust.

Guid. Feare no more the Lightning flash.

Arvi. Nor th' all-dreaded Thunderstone.

Gui. Feare no slander, Censure rash.

Arvi. Thou hast finish'd loy and mone.

Both. All Lovers young, all Lovers must,
Consigne to thee and come to dust.

Guid. No Exorciser harme thee,

Arvi. Nor no witch-craft charme thee.

Guid. Ghost unlaid forbear thee.

Arvi. Nothing ill come neere thee.

Both. Quiet consummation have,
And renowned be thy grave.

Enter Belarius with the body of Cloten,

Gui. We have done our obtequies:
Comelay him downe.

Bel. Heere's a few Flowres, but about midnight more:
The hearbes that have on them cold dew o'th' night
Are strewings fit't for Graues: upon their Faces.
You were as Flowres, now wither'd: even so
These Herbelets shall, which we upon you strew.
Come on away, apart upon our knees:
The ground that gave them first, ha's them againe:
Their pleasures here are past, so are their paine.

*Exeunt
Imogen*

Imogen awakes.

Yes Sir, to Milford-Haven, which is the way?
 I thanke you: by yond bush? pray how farre thither?
 'Ods pittikins: can it be fixe mile yet?
 I have gone all night: 'Faith, Ile lye downe, and sleepe.
 But soft: no Bedfellow? Oh Gods, and Goddesses!
 These Flowers are like the pleasures of the World;
 This bloody man the care on't. I hope I dreame:
 For so I thought I was a Cave-keeper,
 And Cooke to honest Creatures. But tis not so:
 Twas but a bolt of nothing, shot at nothing,
 Which the Braine makes of Fumes. Our very eyes,
 Are sometimes like our Iudgements, blinde. Good faith
 I tremble still with feare: but if there be Yet left in heaven, as small a drop of pittie
 As a Wrenseye; fear'd Gods, apart of it.
 The Dreame's heere still: even when I wake it is Without me, as within me: not imagin'd, felt:
 A headlesse man? The Garments of Posthumus?
 I know the shape of's Legge: this is his Hand:
 His Foote Mercuriall: his martiall Thigh
 The bawnes of Hercules: but his Ioviall face——
 Murther in heaven? How? 'tis gone, Pisanio,
 All Curses madded Hecuba gave the Greekes,
 And mine to boot, be darted on thee: thou
 Conspir'd with that Irregulous divell Cloten,
 Hath heere cut off my Lord. To write, and read,
 Be henceforth treacherous. Damn'd Pisanio
 Hath with his forged Letters (damn'd Pisanio)
 From this most bravest vessel of the world,
 Strooke the maine top! Oh Posthumus, alas,
 Where is thy head? where's that? Aye me! wher's that
Pisanio might have kill'd thee at the heart,
 And left this head on. How should this be, Pisanio?
 Tis he, and Cloten: Malice, and Lucre in them
 Have laid this Woe heere. Oh tis pregnant, pregnant!
 The Drugges he gave me, which he said was precious
 And Cordiall to me, have I not found it
 Murd'rous to'th' Senses? That confirms it home:
 This is Pisanio's deede, and Cloten: Oh!
 Give colour to my pale cheekes with thy blood,
 That we the horridier may seeme to those
 Which chace to finde us, Oh, my Lord! my Lord!

Enter Lucius, Captaines, and a Soothsayer.

Cap. To them, the Legions garrison'd in Gallia
 After your will, have crost the Sea, attending
 You heere at Milford-Haven, with you Shippes:
 They are in readinesse.

Luc. But what from Rome?

Cap. The Senate hath stirr'd up the Confiners,
 And Gentlemen of Italy, most willing Spirits,
 That promise Noble Service: and they come
 Vnder the Conduct of bold Iachimo,
Syenna's Brother.

Luc. When expect you them?

Cap. With the next benefit o'th' winde.

Luc. This forwardnesse

Makes our hopes faire. Command our present numbers
 Be mustered, bid the Captaines looke too't. Now Sir,
 What have you dream'd of late of this warres purpose?

Sooth. Last night the very Gods shew'd me a vision
 (I feast, and pray'd for their Intelligence) thus:
 I saw Ioves Bird, the Roman Eagle wing'd
 From the spungy South, to this part of the West,
 There vanish'd in the Sun-beames, which portends
 (Vnlesse my Sinnes abuse my Divination)

Successe to th' Roman hoast.

Luc. Dreame often so,
 And never false. Soft hoa, what trunke is heere?
 Without his top? The ruine speakes, that sometime
 It was a worthy building. How? a Page?
 Or dead, or sleeping on him? But dead rather:
 For Nature doth abhorre to make his bed
 With the defunct, or sleepe upon the dead.
 Let's see the Boyes face.

Cap. Hee's alive my Lord,

Luc. Hee'l then instruct us of his body: Young one,
 Informe us of thy Fortunes, for it seemes
 They crave to be demanded: who is this Thou mak'st thy bloody Pillow? Or who was he
 That (otherwise then noble Nature did)
 Hath alter'd that good picture? What's thy interest
 In this sad wracke? How cam't? Who is't?
 What art thou?

Imo. I am nothing: or if not,
 Nothing to be were better: This was my Master,
 A very valiant Britaine, and a good,
 That here by Mountainers lyes slaine: Alas,
 There are no more such Masters: I may wander
 From East to Occident, cry out for Service,
 Try many, all good: serve truly: never Finde such another Master.

Luc. Lacke, good youth:
 Thou mov'st no lesse with thy complaining, then
 Thy Master in bleeding: say his name, good Friend,
Imo. Richard du Champ: If I doe lye, and doe
 No harme by it, though the Gods heare, I hope
 They'l pardon it. Say you Sir?

Luc. Thy name?

Imo. Fidele Sir.

Luc. Thou doo'st approve thy selfe the very same:
 Thy name well fits thy Faith; thy Faith, thy Name:
 Wilt take thy chance with me? I will not say
 Thou shalt be so well master'd, but be sure
 No lesse belou'd The Romane Emperors Letters
 Sent by a Consull to me, should no sooner
 Then thine owne worth preferre thee: Go with me.

Imo. Ile follow Sir. But first, an't please the Gods,
 Ile hide my Master from the flies as deepe
 As these poore Pickaxes can digge: and when
 With wild wood-leaves & weeds, I ha' strew'd his grave
 And on it said a Century of prayers,
 (Such as I can) twice o're, Ile weepe, and fighe,
 And leaving so his service, follow you,
 So please you entertaine me.

Luc. I good youth,
 And rather Father thee, then Master thee: My Friends,
 The Boy hath taught us manly duties: Let us
 Find out the prettiest Dazied-Plot we can,
 And make him with our Pikes and Partizans
 A Grave: Come, Arme him: Boy he is preferr'd
 By thee, to us, and he shall be interr'd
 As Souldiers can. Be cheereful wipe thine eyes,
 Some falles are meanes the happier to arise. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Cymbeline, Lords, and Pisanio.

Cym. Againe: and bring me word how tis with her,
 A Feavour with the absence of her Sonne;

A madnesse, of which her life's in danger : Heavens;
How deeply you at once do touch me. Imogen,
The great part of my comfort, gone : My Queene
Vpon a desperate bed, and in a time
When fearefull Warres point at me : Her Sonne gone,
So needfull for his present ? It strikes me, me, past
The hope of comfort. But for thee, Fellow,
Who needs must know of her departure, and Dost seeme so ignorant, wee'l enforce it from thee
By a sharpe Torture.

Pis. Sir my life is yours,
I humbly set it at your will : But for my Mistris,
I nothing know where she remains: why gone,
Nor when she purposes returne. Beseech your Highnes,
Hold me your loyall Servant.

Lord. Good my Liege,
The day that she was missing, he was heere ;
I dare be bound hee's true, and shall performe
All parts of his subjection loyally. For Cloten,
There wants no diligence in seeking him,
And will no doubt be found.

Cym. The time is troublesome :
Wee'l slip yon for a season, but with jelousie
Do's yet depend.

Lord. So please your Majesty,
The Romane Legions all from Gallia drawne,
Are landed on your Coast, with supply
Of Romane Gentlemen, by the Senate sent.

Cym. Now for the Counsaile of my Son and Queene,
I am amaz'd with matter.

Lord. Good my Liege,
Your preparation can affront no lesse (ready :
Then what you heare of. Come more, for more you're
The want is, but to put these powers in motion,
That long to move.

Cym. I thanke you : lets withdraw
And meete the Time, as it seekes us, We feare not What can from Italy annoy us, but We greeve at chances heere. Away. Exeunt.

Pis. I heard no Letter from my Master, since
I wrote him Imogen was flaine. Tis strange :
Nor heare I from my Mistris, who did promise
To yeeld me often tydings. Neither know I
What is betide to Cloten, but remaine
Perplext in all. The Heavens still must worke :
Wherein I am false, I am honest : not true, to be true.
These present warres shall finde I love my Country,
Even to the note o'th' King, or Ile fall in them :
All other doubts, by time let them be cleer'd,
Fortune brings in some Boats, that are not steer'd. Exit

Scena Quarta.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, & Arviragus.

Gui. The noyse is round about us.

Bel. Let us from it.

Arvi. What pleasure Sir, finde we in life, to locke it
From Action, and Adventure?

Gui. Nay, what hope
Have we in hiding us ? This way the Romaines
Must, or for Britaines slay us or receive us
For barbarous and unnaturall Revolts
During their use, and slay us after.

Bel. Sonnes,
Wee'l higher to the Mountaines, there secure us
To the Kings party there's no going : newnesse
Of Clotens death (we being not knowne, not muster'd Among the Bands) may drive us to a render Where we have liv'd; and so extort froms that
Which we have done, whose answer would be death
Drawne on his Torture.

Gui. This is (Sir) a doubt in such a time, nothing becomming you,
Nor satisfying us.

Arvi. It is not likely,
That when they heare their Roman horses neigh,
Behold their quarter'd Fires; have both their eyes
And eares so cloyd importantly as now,
That they will waste their time upon our note,
To know from whence we are.

Bel. Oh, I am knowne
Of many in the Army : Many yeeres
(Though Cloten then but young) you see, not wore him
From my remembrance. And besides, the King
Hath not deserv'd my Service, nor your Loves,
Who finde in my Exile, the want of Breeding;
The certainty of this hard life, aye hopelesse
To have the courtesie your Cradle promis'd,
But to be still hot Summers Tanlings, and
The shrinking Slaves of Winter.

Gui. Then be so,
Better to cease to be. Pray Sir, to'th Army :
I, and my Brother are not knowne; your selfe
So out of thought, and thereto so ore-growne,
Cannot be questiond.

Arvi. By this Sunne that shines
Ile thither : what thing is it, that I never Did see man dye, scarce ever look'd on blood,
But that of Coward Hares, hot Goats, and Venison ?
Never bestrid a Horse save one, that had
A Rider like my selfe, who ne're wore Rowell,
Nor Iron on his heele ? I am asham'd
To looke upon the holy Sunne, to have
The benefit of his blest Beames, remaining
So long a poore unknowne.

Gui. By heavens Ile go,
If you will blesse me Sir, and give me leave,
Ile take the better care : but but if you will not,
The hazard therefore due fall on me, by
The hands of Romanes.

Arvi. So say I, Amen.

Bel. No reason I (since of your lives you set
So slight a valuation) should referue
My crack'd one to more care. Have with you Boyes:
If in your Country warres you chance to dye,
That is my Bed too (Lads) and there Ile lye.
Lead, lead; the time seemes long, their blood thinks scorn
Till it flye out, and shew them Princes borne. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Posthumus alone.

Post. Yea bloody cloth, Ile keep thee : for I am wisht
Thou shouldst be colour'd thus. You married ones,
If each of you should take this course, how many Must murder Wives much better then themselves

For

For wrying but a little? Oh Pisano,
 Every good Servant do's not all Commands:
 No Bond, but to doe just ones. Gods, if you Should have tane vengeance on my faults, I never Had liv'd to put on this: so had you saved
 The noble Imogen to repent, and strooke
 Me (wretch) more worth your Vengeance. But alacke,
 You snatch from hence for little faults; that's love
 To have them fall no more: you some permit
 To second illes with illes, each Elder worle,
 And make them dread it, to the doers thrift.
 But Imogen is your owne, do your best willes,
 And make me blest to obey. I am brought hither
 Amongst Italian Gentry, and to fight Against my Ladies Kingdome: Tis enough
 That (Britaine) I have kill'd thy Mistris. Peace.
 He give no wound to thee: therefore good Heavens,
 Heare patiently my purpose. He disrobe me
 Of these Italian weedes, and suite my selfe
 As do's a Britaine Peasant: so He fight
 Against the part I come with: so He dye
 For thee (O Imogen) even for whom my life
 Is every breath, a death: and thus unknowne,
 Pittied, nor hated, to the face of perill
 My selfe He dedicate. Let me make men know
 More valour in me, then my habits show.
 Gods, put the strength o'th Exoni in me:
 To shame the guize o'th world, I will begin,
 The fashion lesse without, and more within. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Lucius, Iachimo, and the Roman Army at one doore: and the Britaine Army at another: Leonatus Posthumus following like a poore Souldier. They march over, and goe out. Then enter againe in Skirmish Iachimo and Posthumus: he vanquisheth and disarmeth Iachimo, and then leaves him.

Iac. The heaviness and guilt within my bosome,
 Takes off my manhood: I have belyed a Lady,
 The Princess of this Country: and the ayre on't
 Revengingly enfeebles me, or could this Carle,
 A very drudge of Natures, have subdu'd me
 In my profession? Knighthood, and Honors borne
 (As I weare mine) are titles but of scorn.
 If that thy Gentry (Britaine) go before
 This Lowt, as he exceeds our Lords, the oddes
 Is, that we scarce are men, and you are Gods. Exit.

The Battaille continues, the Britaines flye, Cymbeline is taken: Then enter to his rescue, Bellarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Bel. Stand, stand, we have the advantage of the ground,
 The Lane is guarded: Nothing rowts us, but
 The villany of our feares.

Gui. Arvi. Stand, stand and fight.

Enter Posthumus, and secouds the Britaines. They rescue Cymbeline, and Exeunt.

Then enter Lucius, Iachimo, and Imogen.

Luc. Away boy from the Troopes, and save thy selfe:
 For friends kill friends, and the disorder's such

As warre were hood-wink'd.
Iac. Tis their fresh supplies.
Luc. It is a day turn'd strangely: or betimes
 Let's re. inforce, or fly. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Posthumus, and a Britaine Lord.

Lor. Canst thou from where they made the stand?
Post. I did.

Though you it seemes come from the Fliers?

Lo. I did.

Post. No blame be to you Sir, for all was lost,
 But that the Heavens fought: the King himselfe
 Of his wings destitute, the Army broken,
 And but the backes of Britaines leene: all flying
 Through a straight Lane, the Enemy full-hearted,
 Lolling the Tongue with slaught'ring: having worke
 More plentifull, then I ooles to doo't: stroke downe
 Some mortally, some slightly touch'd, some falling
 Meerely through feare, that the strait passe was damnd
 With deadmen, hurt or kinde, and Cowards living
 To dye with length'ned shame.

Lo. Where was this Lane?

Post. Close by the battell, ditch'd, & wall'd with turph,
 Which gave advantage to an ancient Soldiour
 (An honest one I warrant) who deseru'd
 So long a breeding, as his white beard came to,
 In doing this fur's Country. Athwart the Lane,
 He, with two striplings (Lads more like to run
 The Country bafe, then to commit such slaughter,
 With faces fit for Maskes; or rather fayrer
 Then those for preservation cas'd, or shame)
 Made good the passage, cryed to those that fled,
 Our Britaines hearts dye flying, nor our men,
 To darkenesse fleete soules that flye backwards; stand,
 Or we are Romanes, and will give you that Like beafts, which you shun beastly, and may save
 But to looke backe in frowne: Stand, stand. These three, Threethousand confident, in act as many:
 For three performers are the File, when all
 The rest do nothing. With this word stand, stand, Accommodated by the Place; more Charming
 With their owne Noblenesse, which could have turn'd
 A Distaffe, to a Lance, guilded pale lookes;
 Part shame, part spirit renew'd, that some turn'd coward
 But by example (Oh a sinne in Warre, Damnd in the first beginners) gan to looke
 The way that they did, and to grin like Lyons
 Vpon the Pikes o'th Hunters. Then beganne
 A stoppish Chafer; a Retyre: Anon
 A Rowl confusion thicke: forthwith they flye
 Chickens, the way which they stopt Eagles: Slaves
 The strides the Victors made: and now our Cowards
 Like Fragments in hard Voyages became
 The life o'th need: having found the backe doore open
 Of the unguarded hearts: heavens, how they wound,
 Some slaine before, some dying, some their Friends
 Ore-borne i'th former wave, ten chac'd by one,
 Are now each one the slaughter-man of twenty:
 Those that would dye, or ere resist, are growne
 The mortall bugs o'th Field.

Lor:

Lord. This was strange chance :
A narrow Lane, an old man, and two Boyes.

Post. Nay, doe not wonder at it : you are made
Rather to wonder at the things you heare,
Then to worke any. Will you Rime upon't,
And vent it for a Mock'ry ? here is one :
"Two Boyes, an Oldman (twice a Boy) a Lane, Preserv'd the Britaines, was the Romanesbane."

Lord. Nay, be not angry Sir.

Post. Lacke, to what end ?
Who dares not stand his Foe, ile be his friend :
For if he'll doe, as he is made to doe,
I know he'll quickly flye my friendship too.
You have put me into Rime.

Lord. Farewell, you're angry.

Exit.

Post. Still going ? This is a Lord : Oh Noble misery
To be ith' field, and aske what newes of me :
To day, how many would have given their honors
To have sav'd their Carcasses ? Tooke heele to doo't,
And yet dyed too. I, in mine owne woe charm'd,
Could not find death, where I did heare him groane,
Nor feele him where he strooke. Being an ugly Monster
Tis strange he hides him in fresh Cups, soft Beds, Sweet words ; or hath moe ministers then we
That draw his knives i'th' War. Well I will finde him :
For being now a Favourer to the Britaine,
No more a Britaine, I have resum'd againe
The part I came in. Fight I will no more,
But yeeld me to the veriest Hind, that shall Once touch my shoulder. Great the slaughter is Heere made by'th'Romane ; great the answer be Britaines must take. For me, my Ransomes death,
On eyther side I come to spend my breath ;
Which neither heere Ile keepe, nor beare agen,
But end it by some meanes for Imogen.

Enter two Captaines, and Souldiers.

1 Great Iupiter be prais'd, Lucius is taken,
Tis thought the old man, and his sonnes, were Angels.

2 There was a fourth man, in a silly habit,
That gave th'Affront with them.

1 So tis reported :

But none of em can be found. Stand, who's there ?

Post. A Roman,

Who had not now beene drooping heere, if seconds
Had answer'd him.

2 Lay hands on him : a Dogge,
Alegge of Rome shall not retorne to tell
What Crowes have peckt them here, he brags his service
As if he were of note : bring him to th'King.

Enter Cymbeline, Belarius, Guiderius, Arviragus, Pisanio, and Romane Captives. The Captaines present Posthumus to Cymbeline, who delivers him over to a Gaoler.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Posthumus, and Gaoler.

Gao. You shall not now be stolne,
You have lockes upon you :
So graze, as you finde Pasture.

2 Gao. I, or a stomacke.

Post. Most welcome bondage : for thou art a way
(I thinke) to liberty : yet am I better
Then one thats sicke o'th'Gowt, since he had rather

Groane so in perpetuity, then be cur'd
By'th'fure Physitian, Death ; who is the key T'unbarre these Lockes. My conscience, thou art fetter'd
More then my shanks, and wrists ; you good gods give me
The penitent instrument to picke that Bolt,
Then free for ever. Ist enough I am sorry ?
So Children temporall fathers doe appeale ;
Gods are more full of mercy. Must I repent,
I cannot doe it better then in Gyves,
Desir'd, more then constrain'd, to satisfie
If of my freedome tis the maine part, take
No stricter render of me, then my All.
I know you are more clement then viid men,
Who of their broken Debtors take a third,
A fixt, a tenth, letting them thrive againe
On their abatement : thats not my desire.
For Imogen deere life, take mine, and though
Tis not to deere, yet tis a life, you coyn'd it,
Tweene man, and man, they waigh not every stampe :
Thou light, take Peeeces for the figures sake,
(You rather) mine being yours : and so great Powres,
If you will take this Audit, take this life,
And cancell those cold Bonds. Oh Imogen,
Ile speake to thee in silence.

Solemne Musicke. Enter (as in an Apparition) Sicilius Leonatus, Father to Posthumus, an old man, attyred like a warrior, leading in his hand an ancient Matron (his wife, and Mother to Posthumus) with Musicke before them. Then after other Musicke, follows the two young Leonati (Brothers to Posthumus) with wounds as they dyed in the warres, They circle Posthumus round as he lyes sleeping.

Sicil. No more thou Thunder-Master shew thy spight, on Mortall flies :
With Mars fall out, with Iuno chide, that thy Adulteries
Rates, and Revenges.

Hath my poore Boy done ought but well,
whose face I never saw :

Idy'de whilst in the Wombe he staide, attending Natures Law.

Whose Father then (as men report, thou Orphanes Father art)
Thou shouldst have bin, and sheeld ed him, from this earth-vexing smart.

Moth. Lucina lent not me her ayde,
but tooke me in my Throwes,
That from me was Posthumus ript, came crying mongst his Foes.

A thing of pitty.

Sici. Great Nature like his Ancestry, moulded the stuffe so faire :
That he deserv'd the praise oth' World,
as great Sicilius heyre.

1 Bro. When once he was mature for man, in Britaine where was he
That could stand up his parallell ?
or fruitfull object be ?

Ineye of Imogen, that best could deeme his dignity.

Moth. With Marriage wherefore was he mockt to be exil'd, and throwne
From Leonati Seate, and cast from her his deereft one :

Sweet Imogen ?

Sici. Why did you suffer Iachimo, slight thing of Italy,

d d d

To

To taint his nobler hart and braine, with needlesse jealousy
And to become the gecke and scorne oth'others villany?

2 Bro. For this, from stiller Seats we came,

our Parents, and us twaine,
That striking in our Countries cause,
fell bravely, and were slaine,

Our Fealty, and Tenants right, with honor to maintaine,

1 Bro. Like hardiment Posthumus hath to Cymbeline perform'd: (journ'd

Then Jupiter, thou King of gods, why hast thou thus ad-
The Graces for her Merits due, being all to dolours turn'd?

Sici. Thy Christall window ope; looke out no longer exercise

Vpon a valiant Race, thy harsh, and potent injuries:

Morb. Since (Jupiter) our Son is good, take off his miseries.

Sici. Peepe through thy Marble Mansion, helpe, or we poore Ghosts will cry

To th' shining Synod of the rest, against thy Deity,

Bro. Helpe (Jupiter) or we appeale, and from thy justice flye.

Jupiter descends in Thunder and Lightning, sitting upon an Eagle; he throwes a Thunder-bolt. The Ghosts fall on their knees.

Imp. No more you petty Spirits of Region low
Offend our hearing: hush. How dare you Ghostes
Actuse the Thunderer, whose Bolt (you know)
Sky-planted, batters all rebelling Coasts.
Poore shadowes of Elizium, hence, and rest
Vpon your never-withering bankes of Flowres.
Be not with mortall accidents oppress'd,
No care of yours it is, you know tis ours.

Whom best I love, I crosse: to make my guift
The more delay'd, delighted. Be content,
Your low-laid Sonne, our godhead will uplift:
His comforts thrive, his Trialls well are spent:
Our Ioviall Starre reign'd at his Birth, and in Our Temple was he married: Rife, and fade,
He shall be Lord of Lady Imogen,

And happier much by his Affliction made
This Tablet lay upon his brest, wherein
Our pleasure, his full Fortune, doth confine,
And so away: no farther with your dinne
Expresse Impatience, lest you stirre up mine:
Mount Eagle, to my Palace Christalline. Ascends.

Sici. He came in Thunder, his Celestiall breath
Was sulphurous to smell: the holy Eagle
Stoop'd, as to foote us: his Ascension is More sweet then our blest fields: his Royall Bird
Prunes the immortall wing, and cloyes his Beake,
As when his god is pleas'd.

All. Thankes Jupiter.

Sici. The Marble Pavement clozes. he is enter'd
His radiant Roofe: Away, and to be blest
Let us with care performe his great behest. Vanish.

Post. Sleepe, thou hast bin a Grandfire, and begot
A Father to me: and thou hast created
A Mother, and two brothers. But (oh scorne)
Gone, they went hence so soone as they were borne;
And so I am awake. Poore Wretches, that depend
On Greatnesse, Favour; Dreame as I have done,
Wake, and find nothing. But (alas) I swerve:
Many Dreame not to find, neither deserve,
And yet are steep'd in Favours; so am I
That have this Golden chance, and know not why:
What Fayeries haunt this ground? a booke? Oh rare one,

Be not, as is our fangled world, a Garment
Nobler then that it covers. Let thy effects
So follow, to be most unlike our Courtiers,
As good, as promise.

Reader.

V Hen as a Lyons whelp, shall to himselfe unknown without seeking find, and be embrac'd by a peece of tender Ayre: And when from a stately Cedar shall be lopt branches, which being dead many yeeres, shall after revive, be joynted to the old Stocke, and freshly grow, then shall Posthumus end his miseries, Britaine be fortunate, and flourish in Peace and Plenty.

Tis still a Dreame: or else such stuffe as Madmen
Tongue, and braine not: either both, or nothing,
Or senselesse speaking, or a speaking such
As sense cannot untye. Be what it is,
The Action of my life is like it, which Ile keepe
If but for sympathy.

Enter Gaoler.

Gao. Come Sir, are you ready for death?

Post. Over-roasted rather: ready long agoe.

Gao. Hanging is the word, Sir, if you be ready for that, you are well Cook'd.

Post. So if I prove a good repast to the Spectators, the dish payes the shot.

Gao. A heavy reckoning for you Sir: but the comfort is you shall be called to no more payments, feare no more Taverne Bills, which are often the sadnesse of parting, as the procuring of mirth: you come in faint for want of meate, depart reeling with too much drinke: sorry that you have payed too much, and sorry that you are payed too much: Purse and Braine, both empty: the braine the heavier, for being too light; the Purse too light, being drawne of heavinesse. Oh, of this contradiction you shall now be quit: Oh the charity of a penny Cord, it summes up thousands in a trice: you have no true Debitor, and Creditor but it: of what's past, is: and to come, the discharge: your necke (Sir) is Pen, Booke, and Counters: so the Acquittance followes.

Post. I am merrier to dye, then thou art to live.

Gao. Indeed Sir, he that sleepe, feels not the Tooth-Ache: but a man that were to sleepe your sleepe, and a Hangman to helpe him to bed, I thinke he would change places with his Officer: for looke you Sir, you know not which way you shall goe

Post. Yes indeed doe I, fellow.

Gao. Your death has eyes ins head then: I have not seene him so pictur'd: you must either be directed by some that take upon them to know, or to take upon your selfe that which I am sure you doe not know: or lump the after-enquiry on your owne perill: and how you shall speed in your journies end, I thinke you'll never returne to tell one.

Post. I tell thee, Fellow, there are none want eyes, to direct them the way I am going, but such as winke, and will not use them.

Gao. What an infinite mocke is this, that a man should have the best use of eyes, to see the way of blindness: I am sure hanging's the way of winking.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Knocke off his Manacles, bring your Prisoner to the King.

Post. Thou bringst good newes, I am call'd to be made free.

Gao. Ile be hang'd then.

Post. Thou shalt be then freer then a Gaoler; no bolts for for the dead.

Gao. Vnlesse a man would marry a Gallowes, and beget yong Gibbets, I never saw one so prone: yet on my Conscience, there are verier Knaves desire to live, for all he be a Roman; and there be some of them too that dye against their willes: so should I, if I were one. I would we were all of one minde, and one minde good: O there were desolation of Gaolers and Galowies: I speake against my present profit, but my wish hath a preferment int.

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Cymbeline, Bellarius, Guiderius, Arvi-ragus, Pisanio, and Lords.

Cym. Stand by my side you, whom the Gods have made Preservers of my Throne: woe is my heart,
That the poore Souldier that so richly fought,
Whose ragges, sham'd gilded Armes, whose naked brest
Stept before Targes of prooffe, cannot be found:
He shall be happy that can finde him, if
Our Grace can make him so.

Bel. I never saw
Such Noble fury in so poore a Thing;
Such precious deeds, in one that promist nought
But beggery, and poore looks.

Cym. No tydings of him?

Pisa. He hath bin search'd among the dead, and living,
But no trace of him.

Cym. To my griefe, I am
The heyre of his Reward, which I will adde
To you (the Liver, heart, and Braine of Britaine)
By whom (I grant) she lives. Tis now the time
To aske of whence you are. Report it.

Bel. Sir,
In Cambria are we borne, and Gentlemen:
Further to boast, were neither true, nor modest,
Vnlesse I adde, we are honest.

Cym. Bow your knees:
Arise my Knights oth' Battell, I create you
Companions to our person, and will fit you
With Dignities becomming your estates.

Enter Cornelius and Ladies.

There's businesse in these faces: why so sadly
Greet your our Victory? you looke like Romanes,
And not oth' Court of Britaine.

Corn. Hayle great King,
To sowre your happinesse, I must report
The Queene is dead.

Cym. Whom worse then a Physitian
Would this report become; but I consider,
By Med'cine life may be prolong'd, yet death
Will seize the Doctor too. How ended she?

Cor. With horror, madly dying, like her life,
Which (being cruell to the world) concluded
Most cruell to her selfe. What she confest,
I will report, so please you. These her Women
Can trip me, if I erre, who with wet cheekes
Were present when she finish'd.

Cym. Prethee say.

Corn. First, she confest she never lov'd you: onely
Affected Greatnesse got by you: not you:
Married your Royalty, was wife to your place:

Abhor'd your person.

Cym. She alone knew this:

And but she spoke it dying, I would not Beleeve her lips in opening it. Proceed.

Corn. Your daughter, whom she bore in hand to love
With such integrity, she did confesse
Was as a Scorpion to her sight, whose life
(But that her sight prevented it) she had Tane off by poyson.

Cym. O most delicate fiend!

Who ist can reade a Woman? is there more?

Corn. More Sir, and worse. She did confesse she had
For you a mortall Minerall, which being tooke,
Should by the minute feede on life, and lingring,
By inches waste you. In which time, she purpos'd
By watching, weeping, tendance, kissing, to Orecome you with her shew: yes and in time
(When she had fitted you with her craft, to worke
Her Sonne into th' adoption of the Crowne:
But fayling of her end by his strange absence,
Grew shamelesse desperate, open'd (in despight
Of heaven, and Men) her purposes: repented
The evils she hatch'd, were not effected: so Dispayring, dyed.

Cym. Heard you all this, her Women?

Lad. We did, so please your highnesse.

Cym. Mine eyes

Were not in fault, for she was beautifull:
Mine eares that heare her flattery, nor my heart.
That thought her like her seeming. It had beene vicious
To have mistrusted her: yet (Oh my Daughter)
That it was folly in me, thou mayst say,
And prove it in thy feeling. Heaven mend all.

Enter Lucius, Iachimo, and other Roman prisoners, Leonatus behind, and Imogen.

Thou comm'st not Caius now for Tribute, that
The Britaines have rac'd out, though with the losse
Of many a bold one: whose Kinsmen have made suite
That their good soules may be appeas'd, with slaughter
Of you their Captives, which our selfe have granted,
So thinke of your estate.

Luc. Consider sir, the chance of Warre, the day
Was yours by accident: had it gone with us,
We should not when the blood was cool, have threatned
Our Prisoners with the Sword. But since the gods
Will I ave it thus, that nothing but our lives
May be call'd ranfome, let it come: suffice it,
A Roman, with a Romans heart can suffer:
Augustus lives to thinke on't: and so much
For my peculiar care. This one thing onely
I will entreate, my Boy (a Britaine borne)
Let him be ranfom'd: Never Master had
A Page so kinde, so dutious, diligent,
So tender over his occasions, true,
So feate, so Nurse-like: let his vertue joyne
With my request, which Ile make bold, your highnesse
Cannot deny: he hath done no Britaine harme,
Though he have serv'd a Roman. Save him (Sir)
And spare no blood beside.

Cym. I have surely scene him:
His favour is familiar to me: Boy,
Thou hast look'd thy selfe into my grace,
And art mine owne. I know not why, wherefore,
To say, live boy: nere thanke thy Master, live;
And aske of Cymbeline what Boone thou wilt,
Fitting my bounty, and thy state, Ile give it:

d d d 2

Yes,

Yea, though thou doe demand a Prisoner,
The Noblest tane.

Imo. I humbly thanke your Highnesse.

Luc. I doe not bid thee begge my life, good Lad,
And yet I know thou wilt.

Imo. No, no, alacke,
Theres other worke in hand : I see a thing
Bitter to me, as death : your life, good Master,
Must shuffle for it selfe.

Luc. The Boy disdaines me,
He leaves me, scornes me : briefly dye their joyes,
That place them on the truth of Gyrls, and Boyes.
Why stands he so perplex ?

Cym. What wouldst thou Boy ?
I love thee more, and more : thinke more and more
Whats best to aske. Knowst him thou look'st on ? speake
Wilt have him live ? Is he thy Kin ? thy friend ?

Imo. He is a Romane, no more kin to me,
Then I to your highnesse, who being borne your vassaile
Am something neerer.

Cym. Wherefore ey'st him so ?

Imo. Ile tell you (Sir) in private, if you please
To give me hearing.

Cym. I, with all my heart,
And lend my best attention. Whats thy name ?

Imo. Fidele Sir.

Cym. Thou'rt my good youth, my Page,
Ile be thy Master : walke with me : speake freely.

Bel. Is not this Boy reviu'd from death ?

Arvi. One sand another
Not more resemles that sweet Rosie Lad :
Who dyed, and was Fidele : what thinke you ?

Gai. The same dead thing alive.

Bel. Peace, peace, see further ; he eyes us not, forbear,
Creatures may be alike : were't he, I am sure
He would have spoke to us.

Gai. But we see him dead.

Bel. Be silent : lets see further.

Pisa. It is my Mistris :
Since she is living, let the time run on,
To good, or bad.

Cym. Come, stand thou by our side.
Make thy demand alowd. Sir, step you forth,
Give answer to this boy, and doe it freely,
Or by our Greatnesse, and the grace of it
(Which is our honor) bitter torture shall Winnow the truth from falshood. One speake to him.

Imo. My boone is, that this Gentleman may tender
Of whom he had this Ring.

Post. Whats that to him :

Cym. That Diamond upon your finger, say
How came it yours ?

Iach. Thou'lt torture me to leave unspoken, that Which to be spoke, wou'd torture thee.

Cym. How ? me ?

Iach. I am glad to be constrain'd to vtter that Which torments me to conceale. By Villany
I got this Ring : twas Leonatus lewell,
Whom thou didst banish : and which more may grieve
As it doth me : a Nobler Sir nere liv'd (thee,
Twixt sky and ground. Wilt thou heare more my Lord ?

Cym. All thrt belongs to this.

Iach. That Paragon, thy daughter,
For whom my heart drops blood, and my false spirits
Quaile to remeber. Give me leave, I faint.

Cym. My Daught ? what of her ? Renew thy strength

I had rather thou shouldst live, while Nature will,
Then dye ere I heare more : strive man, and speake.

Iach. Vpon a time, unhappy was the clocke
That strooke the houre : it was in Rome, accurst
The Mansion where : twas at a feast, oh would
Our Viands had bin poyson'd (or at least
Those which I heav'd to head :) the good Posthumus, (What should I say ? he was too good to be Where ill men were, and was the best of all Amongst the rarest of good ones) sitting sadly,
Hearing us praise our Loves of Italy
For beauty, that made barren the swell'd beast
Of him that best could speake : for Feature, laming
The Shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Minerva,
Postures, beyond briefe Nature. For Condition,
A shop of all the qualities, that man
Loves woman for, besides that hooke of Wiving,
Fairnesse, which strikes the eye.

Cym. I stand on fire. Come to the matter.

Iach. All too soone I shall,
Vnlesse thou wouldst greeve quickly. This Posthumus,
Most like a Noble Lord, in love, and one
That had a Royall Lover, tooke his hint,
And (not dispraising whom we prais'd, therein
He was as calme as vertue) he began
His Mistris picture, which by his tongue, being made,
And then a mind put int, either our bragges
Were crak'd of Kitchin-Trulles, or his description
Prov'd us unspeaking fottes.

Cym. Nay, nay, to'th'purpose.

Iach. Your daughters Chastity, (there it begins)
He spake of her, as Dian had hot dreames,
And she alone were cold : Whereat, I wretch
Made scruple of his praise, and wag'd with him
Peeces of gold, gainst this, which then he wore Vpon his honor'd finger) to attaine
In suite the place ofs bed, and winne this Ring
By hers, and mine Adultury : he (true Knight)
No lesser of her honor confident
Then I did truly finde her, stakes this Ring,
And would so, had it beene a Carbuncle
Of Phœbus Wheele ; and might so safely, had it
Bin all the worth ofs Carre. Away to Britaine
Poste I in this designe : Well may you (Sir)
Remember me at Court, where I was taught
Of your chaste Daughter, the wide difference
Twixt Amorous, and Villanous. Being thus quench'd
Of hope, not longing ; mine Italian braine,
Gan in your duller Britaine operate
Most vildly : for my vantage excellent.
And to be briefe, my practise so prevayl'd
That I returnd with simular prooffe enough,
To make the Noble Leonatus mad,
By wounding his beleife in her Renowne,
With Tokens thus, and thus ; averring notes
Of Chamber hanging, Pictures this her Bracelet
(Oh cunning how I got it) nay some markes
Of secret on her person, that he could not
But thinke her bond of Chastity quite crackd,
I having tane the forfeit. Whereupon,
Me thinkes I see him now.

Post. I, so thou dost,

Italian fiend. Aye me, most credulous foole,
Egregious murtherer, Theefe, any thing
Thats due to all the Villaines past, in being
To come. Oh give me Cord, or knife, or poyson,

Some

Some upright Iusticer. Thou King, send out
For Torturers ingenious : it is I
That all th'abhorred things oth'earth amend
By being worse then they. I am Posthumus,
That kill'd thy Daughter : Villaine-like, I lye,
That cau's'd a lesser villaine then my selfe,
A sacrilegious. Theefe to doo't. The Temple
Of Vertue was she : yea, and she her selfe.
Spet, and throw stones, cast myre upon me, set
The dogges oth'street to bay me : every villaine
Be call'd Posthumus Leonatus, and
Be villany lesse then twas. Oh Imogen !
My Queene, my life, my wife : oh Imogen,
Imogen, Imogen.

Imo. Peace my Lord, heare, heare.

Post. Shalls have a play of this ?

Thou scornfull Page, there lye thy part,

Pisa. Oh Gentleman, helpe,
Mine and your Mistris : Oh my Lord Posthumus,
You ne're killd Imogen till now : helpe, helpe,
Mine honor'd Lady.

Cym. Does the world goe round ?

Post. How comes these staggers on me ?

Pisa. Wake my Mistais.

Cym. If this be so, the gods doe meane to strike me
To death, with mortall joy.

Pisa. How fares my Mistris.

Imo. Oh get thee from my sight,
Thou gavst me poyson : dangerous Fellow hence,
Breath not where Princes are.

Cym. The tune of Imogen.

Pisa. Lady, the gods throw stones of sulphure on me, if
That box I gave you, was not thought by me
A precious thing, I had it from the Queene.

Cym. New matter still.

Imo. It poyson'd me.

Corn. Oh gods !

I left out one thing which the Queene confest,
Which must approve thee honest. If Pisanio
Have (said she) given his Mistris that Confection
Which I gave him for Cordiall, she is serv'd,
As I would serve a Rat.

Cym. Whats this, Cornelius ?

Corn. The Queene (Sir) very oft importun'd me
To temper poysons for her, still pretending
The satisfaction of her knowledge, onely
In killing Creatures vilde, as Cats and Dogges
Of no esteeme, I dreading, that her purpose
Was of more danger, did compound for her
A certaine stuffe, which being tane, would seize
The present power of life, but in short time,
All Offices of Nature, should againe
Doe their due Functions. Have you tane of it ?

Imo. Most like I did, for I was dead.

Bel. My Boyes, there was our error.

Gui. This is sure Fidele.

Imo. Why did you throw your wedded Lady fro you?
Thinke that you are upon a Rocke, and now
Throw me againe.

Post. Hang there like fruite, my soule,
Till the Tree dye.

Cym. How now, my flesh ? My child ?
What, mak'st thou me a dullard in this Act ?
Wilt thou not speake to me ?

Imo. Your blessing Sir.

Bel. Though you did love this youth, I blame ye not,

You had a motive fore.

Cym. My teares that fall
Prove holy-water on thee ; Imogen,
Thy Mothers dead.

Imo. I am sorry for't my Lord.

Cym. Oh, she was naught ; and long of her it was
That we meet heere so strangely : but her Sonne
Is gone, we know not how, nor where.

Pisa. My Lord,
Now feare is from me, Ile speake troth. Lord Clotten
Vpon my Ladies missing, came to me
With his Sword drawne, foam'd at the mouth, and swore
If I discover'd not which way she was gone,
It was my instant death. By accident,
I had a feigned Letter of my Masters
Then in my pocket, which directed him
To seeke her on the Mountaines neere to Milford,
Where in a frenzy, in my Masters Garments
(Which he inforc'd from me) away he postes
With unchaste purpose, and with oath to violate
My Ladies honor, what became of him,
I further know not.

Gui. Let me end the Story : I slew him there.

Cym. Marry, the gods forefend.
I would not thy good deeds, should from my lips
Plucke a hard sentence : Prethee valiant youth
Deny't againe.

Gui. I have spoke it, and I did it.

Cym. He was a Prince.

Gui. A most incivill one. The wrongs he did me
Were nothing Prince-like ; for he did provoke me
With Language that would make me spurne the Sea,
If it could so roare to me. I cut off's head,
And am right glad he is not standing here
To tell this tale of mine,

Cym. I am sorry for thee :
By thine owne tongue thou art condemn'd, and must Endure our Law : Thou'rt dead.

Imo. That headlesse man I thought had bin my Lord

Cym. Bind the Offender,
And take him from our presence,

Bel. Stay, Sir King.
This man is better then the man he slew,
As well descended as thy selfe, and hath
More of thee merited, then a Band of Clotens
Had ever scarre for. Let his Armes alone,
They were not borne for bondage.

Cym. Why old Souldier :
Wilt thou undoe the worth thou art unpayd for
By tasting of onr wrath ? how of descent
As good as we ?

Arvi. In that he spake too farre.

Cym. And thou shalt dye for't.

Bel. We will dye all three,
But I will prove that two on's are as good
As I have given out him. My Sonnes, I must
For mine owne part, unfold a dangerous speech,
Though haply well for you.

Arvi. Your dangers ours.

Gui. And our good his.

Bel. Have at it then, by leave Thou hadst (great King) a Subject, who Was call'd Belarius.

Cym. What of him ? he is a banish'd Traitor.

Bel. He it is, that hath Assum'd this age : indeed a banish'd man,

I know not how, a Traitor.

Cym. Take him hence,
The whole world shall not save him.

Bel. Not too hot;
First pay me for the Nurfing of thy Sonnes,
And let it be confisgate all, to soone
As I have receiv'd it.

Cym. Nurfing of my Sonnes?

Bel. I am too blunt, and sawcy : heeres my knee :
Ere I arise, I will preferre my Sonnes,
Then spare not the old Father. Mighty Sir,
These two young Gentlemen that call me father,
And thinke they are my Sonnes, are none of mine,
They are the yssue of your Loynes, my Liege,
And blood off your begetting.

Cym. How? my issue.

Bel. So sure as you, your fathers : I (old Morgan)
Am that Belarius, whom you sometime banish'd :
Your pleasure was my neere offence, my punishment
It selfe, and all my Treason that I suffer'd,
Was all the harme I did. These gentle Princes
(For such, and so they are) these twenty yeeres
Have I train'd up; those Arts they have, as I Could put into them. My breeding was (Sir)
As your Highnesse knowes, Their Nurse Euriphile
(Whom for the Theft I wedded) stole these Children
Vpon my Banishment : I moov'd her too't,
Having receiv'd the punishment before
For that which I did then. Beaten for Loyalty, Excited me to Treason. Their deere losse,
The more of you twas felt, the more it shap'd
Vnto my end of stealing them. But gracious Sir,
Heere are your Sonnes againe; and I must loose
Two of the sweetest Companions in the World.
The benediction of these covering heavens
Fall on their heads like dew, for they are worthy
To in-lay heaven with Starres.

Cym. Thou weepst, and speakst :
The Service that you three have done, is more
Vnlike, then this thou tellst. I lost my children,
If these be they, I know not how to wish
A payre of worthier Sonnes.

Bel. Be pleas'd a while :
This Gentleman, whom I call Polidore,
Most worthy Prince, as yours, is true Gniderius :
This Gentleman, my Cadwal, Arviragus.
Your younger Princely Son, he Sir, was lapt
In a most curious Mantle, wrought by th' hand
Of his Queene Mother, which for more probation
I can with ease produce,

Cym. Gniderius had
Vpon his necke a Mole, a sanguine Starre,
It was a marke of wonder.

Bel. This is he,
Who hath upon him still that naturall stampe :
It was wise Natures end, in the donation
To be his evidence now.

Cym. Oh, what am I
A Mother to the byrth of three? Nere Mother
Rejoyc'd deliverance more; Blest, pray you be,
That after this strange starting from your Orbes,
You may reigne in them now: Oh Imogen,
Thou hast lost by this a Kingdome.

Imo. No, my Lord :
I have got two Worlds by't. Oh my gentle Brothers,
Have we thus met? Oh never say heereafter

But I am truest speaker. You calld me Brother
When I was but your Sister : I you Brother,
When we were so indeed.

Cym. Did you ere meete?

Arvi. I my good Lord.

Gwi. And at first meeting lov'd,
Continu'd so, untill we thought he dyed.

Corn. By the Queenes Dramme she swallow'd.

Cym. O rare instinct!

When shall I heare all through? This fierce abridgement, Hath to it Circumstantiall branches, which Distinction should be rich in. Where? how liv'd you?
And when came you to serve our Romane Captive?
How parted with your Brother? How first met them?
Why fled you from the Court? And whether these?
And your three motives to the Battaille? with
I know not how much more should be demanded,
And all the other by-dependances
From chance to chance? But nor the time, nor place
Will serve our long Interrogatories. See,
Posthumus Anchors upon Imogen;
And she (like harmelesse Lightning) throwes her eye
On him : her brothers, Me : her Master hitting Each object with a Ioy : the Counter-change
Is severally in all. Lets quite this gronnd,
And smoake the Temple with our Sacrifices.
Thou art my Brother, so we'll hold thee ever.

Imo. You are my Mother too, and did releeve me :
To see this gracious season.

Cym. All ore-joy'd
Save these in bonds, let them be joyfull too,
For they shall taste our Comfort.

Imo. My good Master, I will yet doe you service.

Luc. Happy be you.

Cym. The forlorne Souldier, that so Nobly fought
He would have well becom'd this place, and grac'd
The thankings of a King.

Post. I am Sir
The souldier that did company these three
In poore beseeching : twas a fitment for
The purpose I then follow'd. That I was he,
Speake Iachimo, I had you downe, and might Have made your finish.

Iach. I am downe againe :
But now my heavy Conscience sinkes my knee,
As then your force did. Take that life, beseech you,
Which I so often owe : but your Ring first,
And heere the Bracelet of the truest Princeesse
That ever swore her faith.

Post. Kneele not to me :
The powre that I have on you, is to spare you :
The malice towards you, to forgive you. Live
And deale with others better.

Cym. Nobly doom'd :
We'll learne our Freeness of a Sonne-in-Law :
Pardons the word to all.

Arvi. You holpe us Sir,
As you did meane indeed to be our Brother,
Ioy'd are we, that you are.

Post. Your Servant, Princes. Good my Lord of Rome
Call forth your Sooth-sayer : As I slept, me thought Great Jupiter upon his Eagle back'd
Appear'd to me, with other sprightly shewes
Of mine owne Kindred. When I wak'd, I found
This Labell on my bosome ; whose containing Is so from sense in hardnesse, that I can Make no Collection of it. Let him shew

His skill in the construction.

Luc. Philarmonus.

Sooth. Heere, my good Lord.

Luc. Read, and declare the meaning.

Reader.

VV Hen as a Lyons whelp, shall to himselfe unknown
without seeking find, and be embrac'd by a peece tender Ayre: and when from a stately Cedar shall be lopt branches, which being dead many yeares, shall after revive, be joynted to the old Stocke, and freshly grow, then shall Posthumus end his miseries, Britaine be fortunate, and flourish in Peace and Plenty.

Thou Leonatus art the Lyons Whelp,
The fit and apt Construction of thy name
Being Leonatus, doth import so much:
The peece of tender Ayre, thy vertuous daughter,
Which we call Mollis Aer, and Mollis Aer
We terme it Mulier: which Mulier I divine
Is this most constant Wife, who even now
Answering the Letter of the Oracle,
Vnknowne to you unsought, were clipt about
With this most tender Aire.

Cym. This hath some seeming.

Sooth. The lofty Cedar, Royall Cymbeline
Personates thee: And thy lopt Branches, point
Thy two Sonnes forth: who by Belarius stolne
For many yeares thought dead, are now reviv'd
To the Majesticke Cedar joynd; whose issue

Promises Britaine, Peace and Plenty

Cym. Well,

My Peace we will begin: And Caesar Lucius,
Although the Victor, we submit to Caesar,
And to the Romane Empire; promising
To pay our wonted Tribute, from the which
We were dissuaded by our wicked Queene,
Whom heavens in justice both on her, and hers,
Have laid most heavy hand.

Sooth. The fingers of the Powres above, doe tune
The harmony of this Peace: the Vision
Which I made knowne to Lucius ere the stroke
Of yet this scarce-cold-Battaile, at this instant
Is full accomplish'd. For the Romane Eagle
From South to West, on wing soaring aloft
Lessen'd her selfe, and in the Beames oth' Sun
So vanish'd; which fore-shew'd our Princely Eagle
Th' Imperiall Caesar, should againe unite
His favour, with the Radiant Cymbeline,
Which shines here in the West.

Cym. Laud we the gods,
And let our crooked Smoakes climbe to their Nostrils
From our blest Altars. Publish wethis peace
To all our Subjects. Set we forward: let
A Roman, and a Brittish Ensigne wave
Friendly together; so through Luds-Towne march,
And in the Temple of great Jupiter
Our Peace we'll ratifie: Seale it with feasts.
Set on there: Never was a Warre did cease
(Ere bloody hands were wash'd) with such a Peace.

Exeunt.

FINIS.
